

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

3 1761 00787727 7

THE INSTITUTIO ORATORIA OF
QUINTILIAN

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

H. E. BUTLER, M.A.,

PROFESSOR OF LATIN IN LONDON UNIVERSITY

IN FOUR VOLUMES

I

LONDON : WILLIAM HEINEMANN
NEW YORK : G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

MCMXXXIII

First printed 1921

Reprinted 1933

Printed in Great Britain

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
LETTER TO HIS PUBLISHER, TRYPHO	2
BOOK I	4
Preface.—Ch. 1: Elementary Education.—Ch. 2: The merits of public and private education compared.—Ch. 3: General reflections on the capacity and treatment of pupils.—Ch. 4: Grammar.—Ch. 5: Correctness; barbarisms; pronunciation: the aspirate; accents; solecisms; words, foreign, compound, metaphorical, new, etc.—Ch. 6: Language; analogy; etymology; old words; authority; usage.—Ch. 7: Orthography; difference between spelling and pronunciation.—Ch. 8: Reading; authors to be read; methods of teaching; value of history.—Ch. 9: Composition.—Ch. 10: Other studies necessary to rhetoric; music, geometry, astronomy.—Ch. 11: Instruction to be derived from the stage; delivery; gesture; recitation; gymnastic.—Ch. 12: Boys capable of studying a number of subjects at once.
BOOK II	203
Ch. 1: Rhetoric not begun early enough; relations between rhetor and grammaticus.—Ch. 2: Choice of a teacher; mutual duties of teacher and pupil.—Ch. 3: Necessity of avoiding inferior teachers.—Ch. 4: Elementary rhetorical exercises; narratives; proof and refutation; panegyric and denunciation; commonplaces; theses; reasons; preparations for pleadings; praise and blame of particular laws; fictitious declamations.—Ch. 6: Assistance to be given to pupils.—Ch. 7: Declamation.—Ch. 8:

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

Different methods required for different pupils.—
 Ch. 9: Pupils to regard teachers as in loco parentis.
 Ch. 10: Themes for declamation; criticism of existing practice.—Ch. 11: Criticism of those who think instruction in rhetoric unnecessary; necessity of thoroughness of method.—Ch. 12: Merits and defects of untrained speakers.—Ch. 13: No rigid rules possible; necessity of adaptability; value of rules.—Ch. 14: The term rhetoric or oratory; heads under which it is to be considered.
 Ch. 15: What is oratory? Various definitions; Quintilian's definition.—Ch. 16: Oratory denounced by some because of its capacity for harm; its excellences and value.—Ch. 17: Oratory an art; critics of this view; critics of its morality; relation to truth.—Ch. 18: Arts or sciences of three kinds; rhetoric a practical art or science, though partaking of the nature of theoretic and productive arts.—Ch. 19: Nature and art.—Ch. 20: Is rhetoric a virtue?—Ch. 21: The subject of rhetoric; Quintilian's view; criticism thereof; relation between oratory and philosophy; range of the orator's knowledge.

BOOK III 369

Ch. 1: Apology for dryness and detail of the more technical portion of the work; writers on rhetoric; Greeks; Romans.—Ch. 2: Origin of oratory.
 —Ch. 3: Divisions of the art; their order; their nature.—Ch. 4: Are there three sorts of oratory or more? Various views.—Ch. 5: Distinction between things and words; questions; definition of a cause.—Ch. 6: The status or basis of a cause; a highly technical chapter.—Ch. 7: Panegyric.— Ch. 8: Deliberative oratory.—Ch. 9: Forensic oratory; the parts of a forensic speech.—Ch. 10: A cause may turn on one controversial point or more; nature of the cause to be first determined.
 —Ch. 11: Next points to be determined; the question, the mode of defence, the point for decision, the foundation of the case; various views.

INTRODUCTION

LIFE OF QUINTILIAN

MARCUS FABIVS QVINTILIANVS was, like Seneca, of Spanish origin, being born about 35 A.D. at Calagurris. His father was a rhetorician of some note who practised with success at Rome. It is not surprising therefore to find that the young Quintilian was sent to Rome for his education. Among his teachers were the famous grammaticus Remmius Palaemon, and the no less distinguished rhetorician Domitius Afer. On completing his education he seems to have returned to his native land to teach rhetoric there, for we next hear of him as being brought to Rome in 68 A.D. by Galba, then governor of Hispania Tarraconensis. At Rome he met with great success as a teacher and was the first rhetorician to set up a genuine public school and to receive a salary from the State. He continued to teach for twenty years and had among his pupils the younger Pliny and the two sons of Domitilla, the sister of Domitian. He was also a successful pleader in the courts as we gather from more than one passage in his works. Late in life he married and had two sons. But both wife and children predeceased him.

INTRODUCTION

He died full of honour, the possessor of wide lands and consular rank. The date of his death is unknown, but it was before 100 A.D. He left behind him a treatise "On the causes of the decadence of Roman oratory" (De causis corruptae eloquentiae), the present work, and a speech in defence of a certain Naevius Arpinianus, who was accused of murdering his wife. These are the only works known to have been actually published by him, though others of his speeches had been taken down in shorthand and circulated against his will, while an excess of zeal on the part of his pupils resulted in the unauthorised publication of two series of lecture notes. The present work alone survives. The declamations which have come down to us under his name are spurious. Of his character the Institutio Oratoria gives us the pleasantest impression. Humane, kindly and of a deeply affectionate nature, gifted with a robust common sense and sound literary judgment, he may well have been the ideal schoolmaster. The fulsome references to Domitian are the only blemishes which mar this otherwise pleasing impression. And even here we must remember his great debt to the Flavian house and the genuine difficulty for a man in his position of avoiding the official style in speaking of the emperor.

As a stylist, though he is often difficult owing to compression and the epigrammatic turn which he gives his phrases, he is never affected or extravagant. He is still under the influence of the sound traditions of the Ciceronian age, and his Latin is silver-gilt rather than silver. His Institutio Oratoria, despite the fact that much of it is highly technical, has still much that is of interest to-day, even for those who care little for the history of rhetoric. Notably in the first book his precepts as regards education have lasting value: they may not be strikingly original, but they are sound, humane and admirably put. In the more technical portions of his work he is unequal; the reader feels that he cares but little about the minute pedantries of rhetorical technique, and that he lacks method in his presentation of the varying views held by his predecessors. But once he is free of such minor details and touches on themes of real practical interest, he is a changed man. He is at times really eloquent, and always vigorous and sound, while throughout the whole work he keeps the same high ideal unswervingly before him.

viii

INTRODUCTION

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EDITIONS

- Ed. princeps, Campano, Rome, 1470.
Gronov, Leyden, 1665.
Gibson, Oxford, 1693.
Obrecht, Strassburg, 1698.
Burmann, Leyden, 1720.
Capperonnier, Paris, 1725.
Gesner, Göttingen, 1738.
Spalding, Leipzig, 1798-1816, with supplementary volume of notes by Zumpt, 1829, and another by Bonnell, 1834.

TEXTS

- Zumpt, Leipzig, 1831.
Bonnell, Teubner texts, 1854.
Halm, Leipzig, 1868.
Meister, Leipzig, 1886-7.
Radermacher, Teubner texts, 1907 (Bks. 1-6).

EDITIONS OF SINGLE BOOKS

- Bk. 1, Fierville, Paris, 1890.
Bk. 10, Peterson, Oxford, 1891.
Bk. 10 and 12, Frieze, New York.

Of the above the commentary of Spalding and the texts of Halm, Meister and Radermacher are by far the most important. Peterson's edition of Bk. 10 contains an admirable introduction dealing with the life of Quintilian, his gifts as a critic, his style and language and the MSS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

In connection with the history of rhetorical theory and practice at Rome, the following works are of special importance:—

Cicero, de Oratore (Ed. Wilkins, Oxford, 1892).

Cicero, Orator (Ed. Sandys, Cambridge, 1889).

Cicero, Brutus (Ed. Kellogg, Boston, 1889).

Tacitus, Dialogus de claris oratoribus (Ed. Peterson, Oxford, 1893).

For the history of Latin rhetoric and education the following works may be consulted:—

Norden, Die Antike Kunstprosa, Leipzig, 1898.

Volkman, Die Rhetorik der Griechen und Römer, Leipzig, 1885.

Marquardt, Das Privatleben der Römer, pp. 80-126, ed. 2, Leipzig, 1886.

Wilkins, Roman Education, Cambridge, 1905.

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF QUINTILIAN

Guthrie, London, 1805.

Watson, in Bohn's series, reprinted 1903.

THE MANUSCRIPTS

The MSS. of the Institutio Oratoria fall into three groups:—

(1) The Codex Ambrosianus (E 153), an eleventh-century MS. now at Milan. Chs. IX. iv. 135 to XII. xi. 22 are missing.

(2) The Codex Bernensis (351) of the 10th century.

The Codex Bambergensis (M. 4, 14) of the 10th century.

The Codex Nostradamensis (Paris, Lat. 18527) of the 10th (?) century.

This group has the following lacunae: I. to i. 7; v. xiv. 12 to VIII. iii. 64; VIII. vi. 17 to 67; IX. iii. 2 to x. i. 107; XI. i. 71 to ii. 23; XII. x. 43 to end. The gaps are to be supplied from the Codex Bambergensis, in which they have been filled in by a later hand from a MS. resembling the Ambrosianus.

(3) A number of late MSS. of the 15th century of the usual type.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Occasional assistance may be obtained from the Ars Rhetorica of Julius Victor (Halm, Rhet. Lat. minores, II. pp. 373 sqq.), which is based on Quintilian and often transcribes whole passages: the Rhetorical treatise attributed to Cassiodorus (Halm, op. cit. p. 501) is also sometimes useful.

The text in this volume is that of Halm, with a few slight alterations in reading, and a considerable number in punctuation. The first family is indicated by A in critical notes, the second by B. Where particular MSS. are mentioned they are indicated by their name

SIGLA

A = Codex Ambrosianus I, 11th century.

B = Agreement of Codex Bernensis, Bambergensis and Nostradamensis, 10th century.

G = Codex Bambergensis in those passages where gaps have been supplied by a later 11th-century hand.

QUINTILIAN
BOOK I

M. FABIVS QVINTILIANVS TRYPHONI SVO SALVTEM

EFFLAGITASTI cotidiano convicio, ut libros, quos ad Marcellum meum de Institutione oratoria scripseram iam emittere inciperem. Nam ipse eos nondum opinabar satis maturuisse, quibus componendis, ut scis, paulo plus quam biennium tot alioqui negotiis districtus impendi; quod tempus non tam stilo quam inquisitioni instituti operis prope infiniti et legendis 2 auctoribus, qui sunt innumerabiles, datum est. Usus deinde Horatii consilio, qui in arte poëtica suadet, ne praecepitetur editio nonumque prematur in annum, dabam iis otium, ut, refrigerato inventionis amore, diligentius repetitos tanquam lector perpenderem.
3 Sed si tanto opere efflagitantur quam tu adfirmas, permittamus vela ventis et oram solventibus bene precemur. Multum autem in tua quoque fide ac diligentia positum est, ut in manus hominum quam emendatissimi veniant.

MARCUS FABIUS QUINTILIANUS TO HIS FRIEND TRYPHO, GREETING

You have daily importuned me with the request that I should at length take steps to publish the book on the Education of an Orator which I dedicated to my friend Marcellus. For my own view was that it was not yet ripe for publication. As you know I have spent little more than two years on its composition, during which time moreover I have been distracted by a multitude of other affairs. These two years have been devoted not so much to actual writing as to the research demanded by a task to which practically no limits can be set and to the reading of innumerable authors. Further, following the precept of Horace who in his Art of Poetry deprecates hasty publication and urges the would-be author

“To withhold

His work till nine long years have passed away,” I proposed to give them time, in order that the ardour of creation might cool and that I might revise them with all the consideration of a dispassionate reader. But if there is such a demand for their publication as you assert, why then let us spread our canvas to the gale and offer up a fervent prayer to heaven as we put out to sea. But remember I rely on your loyal care to see that they reach the public in as correct a form as possible.

M. FABII QUINTILIANI INSTITUTIONIS ORATORIAE

LIBER I

PROOEMIUM

Post impetratam studiis meis quietem, quae per viginti annos erudiendis iuvenibus impenderam, cum a me quidam familiariter postularent, ut aliquid de ratione dicendi componerem, diu sum equidem reluctatus, quod auctores utriusque linguae clarissimos non ignorabam multa, quae ad hoc opus pertinerent, 2 diligentissime scripta posteris reliquisse. Sed qua ego ex causa faciliorem mihi veniam meae deprecationis arbitrabar fore, hac accendebantur illi magis, quod inter diversas opiniones priorum et quasdam etiam inter se contrarias difficilis esset electio; ut mihi si non inveniendi nova at certe iudicandi de veteribus iniungere laborem non iniuste viderentur. 3 Quamvis autem non tam me vinceret praestandi,

THE INSTITUTIO ORATORIA OF QUINTILIAN

BOOK I

PREFACE

HAVING at length, after twenty years devoted to the training of the young, obtained leisure for study, I was asked by certain of my friends to write something on the art of speaking. For a long time I resisted their entreaties, since I was well aware that some of the most distinguished Greek and Roman writers had bequeathed to posterity a number of works dealing with this subject, to the composition of which they had devoted the utmost care. This ² seemed to me to be an admirable excuse for my refusal, but served merely to increase their enthusiasm. They urged that previous writers on the subject had expressed different and at times contradictory opinions, between which it was very difficult to choose. They thought therefore that they were justified in imposing on me the task, if not of discovering original views, at least of passing definite judgment on those expressed by my predecessors. I was moved to comply not so much because I ³ felt confidence that I was equal to the task, as quod exigebatur, fiducia quam negandi verecundia, latius se tamen aperiende materia plus quam imponebatur oneris sponte suscepti, simul ut pleniore obsequio demererer amantissimos mei, simul ne vulgarem viam ingressus alienis demum vestigiis insisterem.

QUINTILIAN

4 Nam ceteri fere, qui artem orandi litteris tradiderunt, ita sunt exorsi, quasi perfectis omni alio genere doctrinae summam in eloquentia manum imponent, sive contemnentes tanquam parva, quae prius discimus, studia, sive non ad suum pertinere officium opinati, quando divisae professionum vices essent, seu, quod proximum vero, nullam ingenii sperantes gratiam circa res etiamsi necessarias procul tamen ab ostentatione positas; ut operum fastigia spectantur,

5 latent fundamenta. Ego, cum existimem nihil arti oratoriae alienum, sine quo fieri non posse oratorem fatendum est, nec ad ullius rei summam nisi praecedentibus initiis perveniri, ad minora illa, sed quae si negligas, non sit maioribus locus, demittere me non recusabo; nec aliter, quam si mihi tradatur educandus orator, studia eius formare ab infantia incipiam.

because I had a certain compunction about refusing. The subject proved more extensive than I had first imagined ; but finally I volunteered to shoulder a task which was on a far larger scale than that which I was originally asked to undertake. I wished on the one hand to oblige my very good friends beyond their requests, and on the other to avoid the beaten track and the necessity of treading where others had gone before. For almost all others who have 4 written on the art of oratory have started with the assumption that their readers were perfect in all other branches of education and that their own task was merely to put the finishing touches to their rhetorical training ; this is due to the fact that they either despised the preliminary stages of education or thought that they were not their concern, since the duties of the different branches of education are distinct one from another, or else, and this is nearer the truth, because they had no hope of making a remunerative display of their talent in dealing with subjects, which, although necessary, are far from being showy : just as in architecture it is the superstructure and not the foundations which attracts the eye. I on the other hand hold that the 5 art of oratory includes all that is essential for the training of an orator, and that it is impossible to reach the summit in any subject unless we have first passed through all the elementary stages. I shall not therefore refuse to stoop to the consideration of those minor details, neglect of which may result in there being no opportunity for more important things, and propose to mould the studies of my orator from infancy, on the assumption that his whole education has been entrusted to my charge. This work I dedicate 6

QUINTILIAN

6 Quod opus, Marcelle Victori, tibi dicamus; quem, cum amicissimum nobis tum eximio litterarum amore flagrantem, non propter haec modo (quamquam sint magna) dignissimum hoc mutuae inter nos caritatis pignore iudicabamus; sed quod erudiendo Getae tuo, cuius prima aetas manifestum iam ingenii lumen ostendit, non inutiles fore libri videbantur, quos ab ipsis dicendi velut incunabulis, per omnes, quae modo aliquid oratori futuro conferant, artis ad sum-

7 mam eius operis perducere destinabamus; atque eo magis, quod duo iam sub nomine meo libri ferebantur artis rhetoricae neque editi a me neque in hoc comparati. Namque alterum sermonem per biduum habitum pueri, quibus id praestabatur, exeeperant; alterum pluribus sane diebus, quantum notando consequi potuerant, interceptum boni iuvenes, sed nimium amantes mei, temerario editionis honore

8 vulgaverant. Quare in his quoque libris erunt eadem aliqua, multa mutata, plurima adiecta, omnia vero compositiora et, quantum nos poterimus, elaborata.

9 Oratorem autem instituimus illum perfectum, qui esse nisi vir bonus non potest; ideoque non dicendi modo eximiam in eo facultatem sed omnes animi

8

BOOK I. PR. 6-9

to you, Mareellus Victorius. You have been the truest of friends to me and you have shown a passionate enthusiasm for literature. But good as these reasons are, they are not the only reasons that lead me to regard you as especially worthy of such a pledge of our mutual affection. There is also the consideration that this book should prove of service in the education of your son Geta, who, young though he is, already shows clear promise of real talent. It has been my design to lead my reader from the very cradle of speech through all the stages of education which can be of any service to our budding orator till we have reached the very summit of the art. I 7 have been all the more desirous of so doing because two books on the art of rhetoric are at present circulating under my name, although never published by me or composed for such a purpose. One is a two days' lecture which was taken down by the boys who were my audience. The other consists of such notes as my good pupils succeeded in taking down from a course of lectures on a somewhat more extensive scale: I appreciate their kindness, but they showed an excess of enthusiasm and a certain lack of discretion in doing my utterances the honour of publication. Consequently in the present work 8 although some passages remain the same, you will find many alterations and still more additions, while the whole theme will be treated with greater system and with as great perfection as lies within my power.

My aim, then, is the education of the perfect 9 orator. The first essential for such an one is that he should be a good man, and consequently we demand of him not merely the possession of exceptional

QUINTILIAN

10 virtutes exigimus. Neque enim hoc concesserim, rationem rectae honestaeque vitae (ut quidam pu-taverunt) ad philosophos relegandam, cum vir ille vere civilis et publicarum privatarumque rerum administrationi accommodatus, qui regere consiliis urbes, fundare legibus, emendare iudiciis possit, 11 non alius sit profecto quam orator. Quare, tametsi me fateor usurum quibusdam, quae philosophorum libris continentur, tamen ea iure vereque contenderim esse operis nostri propriaeque ad artem 12 oratoriam pertinere. An, si frequentissime de iustitia, fortitudine, temperantia ceterisque simili-bus disserendum est, adeo ut vix ulla possit causa reperiri in quam non aliqua ex his incidat quaestio, eaeque omnia inventione atque elocutione sunt ex-plicanda, dubitabitur, ubicunque vis ingenii et copia dicendi postulatur, ibi partes oratoris esse prae-13 cipuas? Fueruntque haec, ut Cicero apertissime colligit, quemadmodum iuncta natura sic officio quoque copulata, ut iidem sapientes atque elo-quentes haberentur. Scidit deinde se studium, atque inertia factum est, ut artes esse plures vide-rentur. Nam ut primum lingua esse coepit in quaestu institutumque eloquentiae bonis male uti, curam

¹ de Or. iii. 15.

gifts of speech, but of all the excellences of character as well. For I will not admit that the principles of 10 upright and honourable living should, as some have held, be regarded as the peculiar concern of philosophy. The man who can really play his part as a citizen and is capable of meeting the demands both of public and private business, the man who can guide a state by his counsels, give it a firm basis by his legislation and purge its vices by his decisions as a judge, is assuredly no other than the orator of our quest. Wherefore, although I admit I shall make 11 use of certain of the principles laid down in philosophical textbooks, I would insist that such principles have a just claim to form part of the subject-matter of this work and do actually belong to the art of oratory. I shall frequently be compelled to speak of 12 such virtues as courage, justice, self-control: in fact scarcely a case comes up in which some one of these virtues is not involved; every one of them requires illustration and consequently makes a demand on the imagination and eloquence of the pleader. I ask you then, can there be any doubt that, wherever imaginative power and amplitude of diction are required, the orator has a specially important part to play? These two branches of knowledge were, as 13 Cicero has clearly shown,¹ so closely united, not merely in theory but in practice, that the same men were regarded as uniting the qualifications of orator and philosopher. Subsequently this single branch of study split up into its component parts, and thanks to the indolence of its professors was regarded as consisting of several distinct subjects.
 As soon as speaking became a means of livelihood and the practice of making an evil use of the

QUINTILIAN

14 morum, qui disertis habebantur, reliquerunt. Ea vero destituta infirmioribus ingenis velut praedae fuit. Inde quidam, contempto bene dicendi labore, ad formandos animos statuendasque vitae leges regressi partem quidem potiore, si dividi posset, retinuerunt; nomen tamen sibi insolentissimum arrogaverunt, ut soli studiosi sapientiae vocarentur, quod neque summi imperatores neque in consiliis rerum maximarum ac totius administratione rei publicae clarissime versati sibi unquam vindicare sunt ausi. Facere enim optima quam promittere 15 maluerunt. Ac veterum quidem sapientiae professorum multos et honesta praecepisse et, ut praeceperint, etiam vixisse, facile concesserim; nostris vero temporibus sub hoc nomine maxima in plerisque vitia latuerunt. Non enim virtute ac studiis, ut haberentur philosophi, laborabant, sed vultum et tristitiam et dissentientem a ceteris habitum pes-16 simis moribus praetendebant. Haec autem, quae velut propria philosophiae asseruntur, passim tractamus omnes. Quis enim non de iusto, aequo ac bono, modo non et vir pessimus, loquitur? quis non etiam rusticorum aliqua de causis naturalibus quaerit? nam verborum proprietas ac differentia omnibus, qui sermonem curae habent, debet esse blessings of eloquence came into vogue, those who had a reputation for eloquence ceased to study moral philosophy, and ethics, thus abandoned by the orators, became the prey of weaker intellects. As a consequence certain persons, disdain- 14 ing the toil of learning to speak well, returned to the task of forming character and establishing rules of life and kept to themselves what is, if we must make a division, the better part of philosophy, but presumptuously laid claim to the sole possession of the title of philosopher, a distinction which neither the greatest generals nor the most famous statesmen and administrators have ever dared to claim for themselves. For they preferred the performance to the promise of great deeds. I am ready to admit that 15 many of the old philosophers inculcated the most excellent principles and practised what they preached. But in our own day the name of philosopher has too often been the mask for the worst vices. For their attempt has not been to win the name of philosopher by virtue and the earnest search for wisdom; instead they have sought to disguise the depravity of their characters by the assumption of a stern and austere mien accompanied by the wearing of a garb differing from that of their fellow men. Now as a matter of fact we all of us frequently 16 handle those themes which philosophy claims for its own. Who, short of being an utter villain, does not speak of justice, equity and virtue? Who (and even common country-folk are no exception) does not make some inquiry into the causes of natural phenomena? As for the special uses and distinctions of words, they should be a subject of study common to all who give any thought to the meaning of language.

QUINTILIAN

17 communis. Sed ea et sciet optime et eloquetur orator; qui si fuisset aliquando perfectus, non a philosophorum scholis virtutis praecepta peterentur. Nunc necesse est ad eos aliquando auctores recurrere, qui desertam, ut dixi, partem oratoriae artis, meliorem praesertim, occupaverunt, et velut nostrum repositum; non ut nos illorum utamur inventis, sed 18 ut illos alienis usos esse doceamus. Sit igitur orator vir talis, qualis vere sapiens appellari possit; nec moribus modo perfectus (nam id mea quidem opinione, quanquam sunt qui dissentiant, satis non est) sed etiam scientia et omni facultate dicendi, 19 qualis fortasse nemo adhuc fuerit; sed non ideo minus nobis ad summa tendendum est; quod fecerunt plerique veterum, qui, etsi nondum quemquam sapientem repertum putabant, praecepta tamen
20 sapientiae tradiderunt. Nam est certe aliquid consummata eloquentia, neque ad eam pervenire natura humani ingenii prohibet. Quod si non contingat, altius tamen ibunt, qui ad summa nitentur, quam qui, praesumpta desperatione quo velint evadendi, protinus circa ima substiterint.

21 Quo magis impetranda erit venia, si ne miuora quidem illa, verum operi, quod instituimus, necessaria praeteribo. Nam liber primus ea, quae sunt

But it is surely the orator who will have the greatest 17 mastery of all such departments of knowledge and the greatest power to express it in words. And if ever he had reached perfection, there would be no need to go to the schools of philosophy for the precepts of virtue. As things stand, it is occasionally necessary to have recourse to those authors who have, as I said above, usurped the better part of the art of oratory after its desertion by the orators and to demand back what is ours by right, not with a view to appropriating their discoveries, but to show them that they have appropriated what in truth belonged to others. Let our ideal orator then be such as to 18 have a genuine title to the name of philosopher: it is not sufficient that he should be blameless in point of character (for I cannot agree with those who hold this opinion): he must also be a thorough master of the science and the art of speaking, to an extent that perhaps no orator has yet attained. Still we 19 must none the less follow the ideal, as was done by not a few of the ancients, who, though they refused to admit that the perfect sage had yet been found, none the less handed down precepts of wisdom for the use of posterity. Perfect eloquence is assuredly 20 a reality, which is not beyond the reach of human intellect. Even if we fail to reach it, those whose aspirations are highest, will attain to greater heights than those who abandon themselves to premature despair of ever reaching the goal and halt at the very foot of the ascent.

I have therefore all the juster claim to indulgence, 21 if I refuse to pass by those minor details which are none the less essential to my task. My first book will be concerned with the education preliminary to

QUINTILIAN

ante officium rhetoris, continebit. Secundo prima apud rhetorem elementa et quae de ipsa rhetorices 22 substantia quaeruntur tractabimus. Quinque de-inceps inventioni (nam huic et dispositio subiun-gitur), quattuor elocutioni, in cuius partem memoria ac pronuntiatio veniunt, dabuntur. Unus accedet, in quo nobis orator ipse informandus est, ubi,¹ qui mores eius, quae in suscipiendis, discendis, agendis causis ratio, quod eloquentiae genus, quis agendi debeat esse finis, quae post finem studia, quantum 23 nostra valebit infirmitas, disseremus. His omnibus admiscebitur, ut quisque locus postulabit, docendi ratio, quae non eorum modo scientia, quibus solis quidam nomen artis dederunt, studiosos instruat et (ut sic dixerim) ius ipsum rhetorices interpretetur, sed alere facundiam, vires augere eloquentiae possit.
24 Nam plerumque nuda illae artes nimia subtilitatis adfectatione frangunt atque concidunt quidquid est in oratione generosius, et omnem sucum ingenii bibunt et ossa detegunt: quae ut esse et adstringi nervis suis debent, sic corpore operienda sunt.
25 Ideoque nos non particulam illam, sicut plerique, sed quidquid utile ad instituendum oratorem putabamus, in hos duodecim libros contulimus breviter

¹ ubi . . . disseremus, Spalding : ut . . . disseramus, MSS.

the duties of the teacher of rhetoric. My second will deal with the rudiments of the schools of rhetoric and with problems connected with the essence of rhetoric itself. The next five will be concerned 22 with Invention, in which I include Arrangement. The four following will be assigned to Eloquence, under which head I include Memory and Delivery. Finally there will be one book in which our complete orator will be delineated; as far as my feeble powers permit, I shall discuss his character, the rules which should guide him in undertaking, studying and pleading cases, the style of his eloquence, the time at which he should cease to plead cases and the studies to which he should devote himself after such cessation. In the course of these 23 discussions I shall deal in its proper place with the method of teaching by which students will acquire not merely a knowledge of those things to which the name of art is restricted by certain theorists, and will not only come to understand the laws of rhetoric, but will acquire that which will increase their powers of speech and nourish their eloquence. For as a rule the result of the dry text- 24 books on the art of rhetoric is that by straining after excessive subtlety they impair and cripple all the nobler elements of style, exhaust the life-blood of the imagination and leave but the bare bones, which, while it is right and necessary that they should exist and be bound each to each by their respective ligaments, require a covering of flesh as well. I shall therefore avoid the precedent set 25 by the majority and shall not restrict myself to this narrow conception of my theme, but shall include in my twelve books a brief demonstration of everything omnia demonstraturi. Nam si quantum de quaque re dici potest persequamur, finis operis non reperitur.

QUINTILIAN

- 26 Illud tamen in primis testandum est, nihil praecepta atque artes valere nisi adiuvante natura. Quapropter ei, cui deerit ingenium, non magis haec scripta sint quam de agrorum cultu sterilibus terris.
- 27 Sunt et alia ingenita cuique adiumenta, vox, latus patiens laboris, valetudo, constantia, decor; quae si modica obtigerunt, possunt ratione ampliari, sed nonnunquam ita desunt, ut bona etiam ingenii studiique corrumpant; sicut et haec ipsa sine doctore perito, studio pertinaci, scribendi, legendi, dicendi multa et continua exercitatione per se nihil prosunt.

I. Igitur nato filio pater spem de illo primum quam optimam capiat, ita diligentior a principiis fiet. Falsa enim est querela, paucissimis hominibus vim percipiendi, quae tradantur, esse concessam, plerosque vero laborem ac tempora tarditate ingenii perdere. Nam contra plures reperias et faciles in excogitando et ad discendum promptos. Quippe id est homini naturale; ac sicut aves ad volatum, equi ad cursum, ad saevitiam ferae gignuntur; ita which may seem likely to contribute to the education of an orator. For if I were to attempt to say all that might be said on each subject, the book would never be finished.

18

There is however one point which I must emphasise before I begin, which is this. Without natural gifts technical rules are useless. Consequently the student who is devoid of talent will derive no more profit from this work than barren soil from a treatise on agriculture. There are, it is true, other natural aids, such as the possession of a good voice and robust lungs, sound health, powers of endurance and grace, and if these are possessed only to a moderate extent, they may be improved by methodical training. In some cases, however, these gifts are lacking to such an extent that their absence is fatal to all such advantages as talent and study can confer, while, similarly, they are of no profit in themselves unless cultivated by skilful teaching, persistent study and continuous and extensive practice in writing, reading and speaking.

I would, therefore, have a father conceive the highest hopes of his son from the moment of his birth. If he does so, he will be more careful about the groundwork of his education. For there is absolutely no foundation for the complaint that but few men have the power to take in the knowledge that is imparted to them, and that the majority are so slow of understanding that education is a waste of time and labour. On the contrary you will find that most are quick to reason and ready to learn. Reasoning comes as naturally to man as flying to birds, speed to horses and ferocity to beasts of prey :

QUINTILIAN

nobis propria est mentis agitatio atque sollertia, 2 unde origo animi caelestis creditur. Hebetes vero et indociles non magis secundum naturam homines eduntur quam prodigiosa corpora et monstris insignia, sed hi pauci admodum fuerunt. Argu-mentum quod in pueris elucet spes plurimorum, quae cum emoritur aetate, manifestum est, non naturam defecisse sed curam. Praestat tamen in-3 genio alius alium. Concedo; sed plus efficiet aut minus; nemo reperitur, qui sit studio nihil consecutus. Hoc qui perviderit, protinus ut erit parens factus, aerem quam maxime curam spei futuri oratoris impendat.

4 Ante omnia ne sit vitiosus sermo nutricibus, quas si fieri posset sapientes Chrysippus optavit, certe quantum res pateretur optimas eligi voluit. Et morum quidem in his haud dubie prior ratio est, 5 recte tamen etiam loquantur. Has primum audiet puer, harum verba effingere imitando conabitur. Et natura tenacissimi sumus eorum, quae rudibus animis percepimus; ut sapor, quo nova imbuas, durat, nec lanarum colores, quibus simplex ille candor mutatus est, elui possunt. Et haec ipsa magis pertinaciter haerent, quo deteriora sunt. Nam bona facile mutantur in peius; num quando in bonum verteris our minds are endowed by nature with such activity and sagacity that the soul is believed to proceed from heaven. Those who are dull and unteachable 2 are as abnormal as prodigious births and monstrosities, and are but few in number. A proof of what I say is to be found in the fact that boys commonly show promise of many accomplishments, and when such promise dies away as they grow up, this is plainly due not to the failure of natural gifts, but to lack of the requisite care. But, it will be urged, there are degrees of talent. Undoubtedly, I reply, 3 and there will be a corresponding variation in actual accomplishment: but that there are any who gain nothing from education, I absolutely deny. The man who shares this conviction, must, as soon as he becomes a father, devote the utmost care to fostering the promise shown by the son whom he destines to become an orator.

Above all see that the child's nurse speaks 4 correctly. The ideal, according to Chrysippus, would be that she should be a philosopher: failing that he desired that the best should be chosen, as far as possible. No doubt the most important point is that they should be of good character: but they should speak correctly as well. It is the nurse that 5 the child first hears, and her words that he will first attempt to imitate. And we are by nature most tenacious of childish impressions, just as the flavour first absorbed by vessels when new persists, and the colour imparted by dyes to the primitive whiteness of wool is indelible. Further it is the worst impressions that are most durable. For, while what is good readily deteriorates, you will never turn vice vitia? Non assuescat ergo, ne dum infans quidem est, sermoni qui dediscendus sit.

QUINTILIAN

- 6 In parentibus vero quam plurimum esse eruditionis optaverim, nec de patribus tantum loquor. Nam Gracchorum eloquentiae multum contulisse accepimus Corneliam matrem, cuius doctissimus sermo in posteros quoque est epistolis traditus: et Laelia C. filia reddidisse in loquendo paternam elegantiam dicitur, et Hortensiae Q. filiae oratio apud Triumviros habita legitur non tantum in sexus honorem.
- 7 Nec tamen ii, quibus discere ipsis non contigit, minorem curam docendi liberos habeant; sed sint propter hoc ipsum ad cetera magis diligentes.
- 8 De pueris, inter quos educabitur ille huic spei destinatus, idem quod de nutricibus dictum sit. De paedagogis hoc amplius, ut aut sint eruditi plene, quam primam esse curam velim, aut se non esse eruditos sciant. Nihil est peius iis, qui paulum aliquid ultra primas litteras progressi falsam sibi scientiae persuasionem induerunt. Nam et cedere praecipendi partibus indignantur et velut iure quodam potestatis, quo fere hoc hominum genus intumescit, imperiosi atque interim saevientes stul-into virtue. Do not therefore allow the boy to become accustomed even in infancy to a style of speech which he will subsequently have to unlearn.

¹ There is no translation for paedagogus, the slave-tutor. "Tutor," "guardian," "governor," and similar terms are all misleading. He had the general supervision of the boy, escorted him to school and elsewhere, and saw that he did not get into mischief, but did not, as a rule, direct his studies.

As regards parents, I should like to see them as highly educated as possible, and I do not restrict this remark to fathers alone. We are told that the eloquence of the Græchi owed much to their mother Cornelia, whose letters even to-day testify to the cultivation of her style. Laelia, the daughter of Gaius Laelius, is said to have reproduced the elegance of her father's language in her own speech, while the oration delivered before the triumvirs by Hortensia, the daughter of Quintus Hortensius, is still read and not merely as a compliment to her sex. And even those who have not had the fortune to receive a good education should not for that reason devote less care to their son's education; but should on the contrary show all the greater diligence in other matters where they can be of service to their children.

As regards the boys in whose company our budding orator is to be brought up, I would repeat what I have said about nurses. As regards his paedagogi,¹ I would urge that they should have had a thorough education, or if they have not, that they should be aware of the fact. There are none worse than those, who as soon as they have progressed beyond a knowledge of the alphabet delude themselves into the belief that they are the possessors of real knowledge. For they disdain to stoop to the drudgery of teaching, and conceiving that they have acquired a certain title to authority—a frequent source of vanity in such persons—become imperious or even brutal in instilling a thorough dose of their

QUINTILIAN

- 9 titiam suam perdocent. Nec minus error eorum nocet moribus; siquidem Leonides Alexandri paedagogus, ut a Babylonio Diogene traditur, quibusdam eum vitiis imbuat, quae robustum quoque et iam maximum regem ab illa institutione puerili sunt persecuta.
- 10 Si cui multa videor exigere, cogitet oratorem institui, rem arduam, etiam cum ei formando nihil defuerit; praeterea plura ac difficiliora superesse. Nam et studio perpetuo et praestantissimis praecep-
- 11 toribus et plurimis disciplinis opus est. Quapropter praecipienda sunt optima; quae si quis gravabitur, non rationi defuerint sed homini. Si tamen non continget, quales maxime velim nutrices, pueros, paedagogos habere, at unus certe sit assiduus loquendi non imperitus, qui, si qua erunt ab his praesente alumno dicta vitiose, corrigat protinus nec insidere illi sinat; dum tamen intelligatur, id, quod prius dixi, bonum esse, hoc remedium.
- 12 A sermone Graeco puerum incipere malo, quia Latinum, qui pluribus in usu est, vel nobis nolentibus perbibet, simul quia disciplinis quoque Graecis prius instituendus est, unde et nostrae fluxerunt.

own folly. Their misconduct is no less prejudicial 9 to morals. We are, for instance, told by Diogenes of Babylon, that Leonides, Alexander's paedagogus, infected his pupil with certain faults, which as a result of his education as a boy clung to him even in his maturer years when he had become the greatest of kings.

If any of my readers regards me as somewhat 10 exacting in my demands, I would ask him to reflect that it is no easy task to create an orator, even though his education be carried out under the most favourable circumstances, and that further and greater difficulties are still before us. For continuous application, the very best of teachers and a variety of exercises are necessary. Therefore the 11 rules which we lay down for the education of our pupil must be of the best. If anyone refuses to be guided by them, the fault will lie not with the method, but with the individual. Still if it should prove impossible to secure the ideal nurse, the ideal companions, or the ideal paedagogus, I would insist that there should be one person at any rate attached to the boy who has some knowledge of speaking and who will, if any incorrect expression should be used by nurse or paedagogus in the presence of the child under their charge, at once correct the error and prevent its becoming a habit. But it must be clearly understood that this is only a remedy, and that the ideal course is that indicated above.

I prefer that a boy should begin with Greek, 12 because Latin, being in general use, will be picked up by him whether we will or no; while the fact that Latin learning is derived from Greek is a further reason for his being first instructed in the

QUINTILIAN

- 13 Non tamen hoc adeo superstitiose fieri velim, ut diu tantum Graece loquatur aut discat, sicut plerisque moris est. Hoc enim accidunt et oris plurima vitia in peregrinum sonum corrupti et sermonis; cui cum Graecae figurae assidua consuetudine haeserunt, in diversa quoque loquendi ratione pertinacissime
- 14 durant. Non longe itaque Latina subsequi debent et cito pariter ire. Ita fiet, ut, cum aequali cura linguam utramque tueri coeperimus, neutra alteri officiat.
- 15 Quidam litteris instituendos, qui minores septem annis essent, non putaverunt, quod illa primum aetas et intellectum disciplinarum capere et laborem pati posset. In qua sententia Hesiodum esse plurimi tradunt qui ante grammaticum Aristophanem fuerunt; nam is primus ὑποθήκας, in quo libro scriptum
- 16 hoc invenitur, negavit esse huius poëtae. Sed alii quoque auctores, inter quos Eratosthenes, idem praeceperunt. Melius autem, qui nullum tempus vacare cura volunt, ut Chrysippus. Nam is, quamvis nutricibus triennium dederit, tamen ab illis quoque iam formandam quam optimis institutis mentem
- 17 infantium indicat. Cur autem non pertineat ad litteras aetas, quae ad mores iam pertinet? Neque ignoro, toto illo, de quo loquor, tempore vix tantum effici, quantum conferre unus postea possit annus;

¹ Admonitions, a lost didactic poem. Aristophanes of Byzantium, 257-180 B.C., the famous Alexandrian critic.

latter. I do not however desire that this principle 13 should be so superstitiously observed that he should for long speak and learn only Greek, as is done in the majority of cases. Such a course gives rise to many faults of language and accent; the latter tends to acquire a foreign intonation, while the former through force of habit becomes impregnated with Greek idioms, which persist with extreme obstinaey even when we are speaking another tongue. The 14 study of Latin ought therefore to follow at no great distance and in a short time proceed side by side with Greek. The result will be that, as soon as we begin to give equal attention to both languages, neither will prove a hindrance to the other.

Some hold that boys should not be taught to 15 read till they are seven years old, that being the earliest age at which they can derive profit from instruction and endure the strain of learning. Most of them attribute this view to Hesiod, at least such as lived before the time of Aristophanes the grammarian, who was the first to deny that the Hypo- pothecae,¹ in which this opinion is expressed, was the work of that poet. But other authorities, among 16 them Eratosthenes, give the same advice. Those however who hold that a child's mind should not be allowed to lie fallow for a moment are wiser.
 Chrysippus, for instance, though he gives the nurses a three years' reign, still holds the formation of the child's mind on the best principles to be a part of their duties. Why, again, since children are 17 capable of moral training, should they not be capable of literary education? I am well aware that during the whole period of which I am speaking we can expect scarcely the same amount of progress

QUINTILIAN

- sed tamen mihi, qui dissenserunt, videntur non tam discentibus in hac parte quam docentibus peperisse.
- 18 Quid melius alioqui facient, ex quo loqui poterunt? Faciant enim aliquid necesse est. Aut cur hoc, quantulumcunque est, usque ad septem annos lucrum fastidiamus? Nam certe quamlibet parvum sit, quod contulerit aetas prior, maiora tamen aliqua discet puer ipso illo anno, quo minora didicisset.
- 19 Hoc per singulos prorogatum in summam proficit, et quantum in infantia praesumptum est temporis, adolescentiae acquiritur. Idem etiam de sequentibus annis praeceptum sit, ne, quod cuique disendum est, sero discere incipiat. Non ergo perdamus primum statim tempus, atque eo minus, quod initia litterarum sola memoria constant, quae non modo iam est in parvis sed tum etiam tenacissima est.
- 20 Nec sum adeo aetatum imprudens, ut instandum protinus teneris acerbe putem exigendamque plane operam. Nam id in primis cavere oportebit, ne studia, qui amare nondum potest, oderit et amaritudinem semel perceptam etiam ultra rudes annos reformidet. Lusus hic sit; et rogetur et laudetur et numquam non fecisse se gaudeat, aliquando ipso nolente doceatur alius, cui invidet; contendat that one year will effect afterwards. Still those who disagree with me seem in taking this line to spare the teacher rather than the pupil. What better 18 occupation can a child have so soon as he is able to speak? And he must be kept occupied somehow or other. Or why should we despise the profit to be derived before the age of seven, small though it be? For though the knowledge absorbed in the previous years may be but little, yet the boy will be learning something more advanced during that year, in which he would otherwise have been occupied with something more elementary. Such progress each suc- 19 cessive year increases the total, and the time gained during childhood is clear profit to the period of youth. Further as regards the years which follow I must emphasise the importance of learning what has to be learnt in good time. Let us not therefore waste the earliest years: there is all the less excuse for this, since the elements of literary training are solely a question of memory, which not only exists even in small children, but is specially retentive at that age.

I am not however so blind to differences of age 20 as to think that the very young should be forced on prematurely or given real work to do. Above all things we must take care that the child, who is not yet old enough to love his studies, does not come to hate them and dread the bitterness which he has once tasted, even when the years of infancy are left behind. His studies must be made an amusement: he must be questioned and praised and taught to rejoice when he has done well; sometimes too, when he refuses instruction, it should be given to some other to excite his envy, at times also he interim et saepius vincere se putet ; praemiis etiam, quae capit illa aetas, evocetur.

QUINTILIAN

21 Parva docemus oratorem instituendum professi, sed est sua etiam studiis infantia ; et ut corporum mox fortissimorum educatio a lacte cunisque initium ducit, ita futurus eloquentissimus edidit aliquando vagitum et loqui primum incerta voce temptavit et haesit circa formas litterarum. Nec si quid
22 discere satis non est, ideo nec necesse est. Quodsi nemo reprehendit patrem, qui haec non negligenda in suo filio putet, cur improbetur, si quis ea, quae domi suae recte faceret, in publicum promit ? Atque eo magis, quod minora etiam facilius minores percipiunt, et ut corpora ad quosdam membrorum flexus formari nisi tenera non possunt, sic animos 23 quoque ad pleraque duriores robur ipsum facit. An Philippus Macedonum rex Alexandro filio suo prima litterarum elementa tradi ab Aristotele, summo eius aetatis philosopho, voluisset, aut ille suscepisset hoc officium, si non studiorum initia et a perfectissimo quoque optime tractari et pertinere ad summam must be engaged in competition and should be allowed to believe himself successful more often than not, while he should be encouraged to do his best by such rewards as may appeal to his tender years.

These instructions may seem but trivialities in 21 view of the fact that I am professing to describe the education of an orator. But studies, like men, have their infancy, and as the training of the body which is destined to grow to the fulness of strength begins while the child is in his cradle and at his mother's breast, so even the man who is destined to rise to the heights of eloquence was once a squalling babe, tried to speak in stammering accents and was puzzled by the shapes of letters. Nor does the fact that capacity for learning is inadequate, prove that it is not necessary to learn anything. No 22 one blames a father because he thinks that such details should on no account be neglected in the case of his own son. Why then should he be criticised who sets down for the benefit of the public what he would be right to put into practice in his own house? There is this further reason why he should not be blamed. Small children are better adapted for taking in small things, and just as the body can only be trained to certain flexions of the limbs while it is young and supple, so the acquisition of strength makes the mind offer greater resistance to the acquisition of most subjects of knowledge. Would Philip of Macedon have wished that his son 23
 Alexander should be taught the rudiments of letters by Aristotle, the greatest philosopher of that age, or would the latter have undertaken the task, if he had not thought that even the earliest instruction is best given by the most perfect teacher and has real

QUINTILIAN

24 credidisset? Fingamus igitur Alexandrum dari nobis impositum gremio, dignum tanta cura infantem (quanquam suus cuique dignus est): pudeatne me in ipsis statim elementis etiam brevia docendi monstrare compendia?

Neque enim mihi illud saltem placet, quod fieri in plurimis video, ut litterarum nomina et contextum
25 prius quam formas parvuli discant. Obstat hoc agnitioni earum non intendentibus mox animum ad ipsos ductus, dum antecedentem memoriam sequuntur. Quae causa est praecipientibus, ut etiam, cum satis adfixisse eas pueris recto illo quo primum seribi solent contextu videntur, retro agant rursus et varia permutatione turbent, donec litteras qui instituuntur facie norint non ordine. Quapropter 26 edocebuntur. Sed quod in litteris obest, in syllabis non nocebit. Non excludo autem, id quod est inventum¹ irritandae ad discendum infantiae gratia eburneas etiam litterarum formas in lusum offerre; vel si quid aliud, quo magis illa aetas gaudeat, inveniri potest, quod tractare, intueri, nominare iucundum sit.

27 Cum vero iam ductus sequi coeperit, non inutile erit eas tabellae quam optime insculpi, ut per illos

¹ inventum, Heindorf: notum, MSS.

reference to the whole of education? Let us assume 24 therefore that Alexander has been confided to our charge and that the infant placed in our lap deserves no less attention than he—though for that matter every man's child deserves equal attention. Would you be ashamed even in teaching him the alphabet to point out some brief rules for his education?

At any rate I am not satisfied with the course (which I note is usually adopted) of teaching small children the names and order of the letters before their shapes. Such a practice makes them slow 25 to recognise the letters, since they do not pay attention to their actual shape, preferring to be guided by what they have already learned by rote. It is for this reason that teachers, when they think they have sufficiently familiarised their young pupils with the letters written in their usual order, reverse that order or rearrange it in every kind of combination, until they learn to know the letters from their appearance and not from the order in which they occur. It will be best therefore for children to begin by learning their appearance and names just as they do with men.
 The method, however, to which we have objected in 26 teaching the alphabet, is unobjectionable when applied to syllables. I quite approve on the other hand of a practice which has been devised to stimulate children to learn by giving them ivory letters to play with, as I do of anything else that may be discovered to delight the very young, the sight, handling and naming of which is a pleasure.

As soon as the child has begun to know the 27 shapes of the various letters, it will be no bad thing to have them cut as accurately as possible upon a

QUINTILIAN

velut sulcos ducatur stilus. Nam neque errabit, quemadmodum in ceris (continebitur enim utrinque marginibus neque extra praescriptum egredi poterit) et celerius ac saepius sequendo certa vestigia firmabit articulos, neque egebit adiutorio manum suam 28 manu superimposita regentis. Non est aliena res, quae fere ab honestis negligi solet, cura bene ac velociter scribendi. Nam cum sit in studiis praecipuum, quoque solo verus ille profectus et altis radicibus nixus paretur, scribere ipsum, tardior stilus cogitationem moratur, rudis et confusus intellectu caret; unde sequitur alter dictandi, quae trans-29 ferenda sunt, labor. Quare cum semper et ubique tum praecipue in epistolis secretis et familiaribus delectabit ne hoc quidem neglectum reliquisse.

30 Syllabis nullum compendium est; perdiscendae omnes nec, ut fit plerumque, difficillima quaeque earum differenda, ut in nominibus scribendis depre-31 hendantur. Quin immo ne primae quidem memoriae temere credendum; repetere et diu inculcare fuerit utilius, et in lectione quoque non properare ad continuandam eam vel accelerandam, nisi cum inoffensa atque indubitata litterarum inter se coniunctio suppeditare sine ulla cogitandi saltem mora poterit.

board, so that the pen may be guided along the grooves. Thus mistakes such as occur with wax tablets will be rendered impossible; for the pen will be confined between the edges of the letters and will be prevented from going astray. Further by increasing the frequency and speed with which they follow these fixed outlines we shall give steadiness to the fingers, and there will be no need to guide the child's hand with our own. The art of 28 writing well and quickly is not unimportant for our purpose, though it is generally disregarded by persons of quality. Writing is of the utmost importance in the study which we have under consideration and by its means alone can true and deeply rooted proficiency be obtained. But a sluggish pen delays our thoughts, while an unformed and illiterate hand cannot be deciphered, a circumstance which necessitates another wearisome task, namely the dictation of what we have written to a copyist. We shall 29 therefore at all times and in all places, and above all when we are writing private letters to our friends, find a gratification in the thought that we have not neglected even this accomplishment.

As regards syllables, no short cut is possible: they 30 must all be learnt, and there is no good in putting off learning the most difficult; this is the general practice, but the sole result is bad spelling. Further 31 we must beware of placing a blind confidence in a child's memory. It is better to repeat syllables and impress them on the memory and, when he is reading, not to press him to read continuously or with greater speed, unless indeed the clear and obvious sequence of letters can suggest itself without its being necessary for the child to stop to think.

QUINTILIAN

Tunc ipsis syllabis verba complecti et his sermonem 32 connectere incipiat. Incredibile est, quantum morae lectioni festinatione adiiciatur. Hinc enim accidit dubitatio, intermissio, repetitio plus quam possunt audentibus, deinde, cum errarunt, etiam iis quae iam 33 sciunt diffidentibus. Certa sit ergo in primis lectio, deinde coniuncta et diu lentior, donec exercitatione 34 contingat emendata velocitas. Nam prospicere in dextrum (quod omnes praecipiant) et providere, non rationis modo sed usus quoque est; quoniam se-quentia intuenti priora dicenda sunt, et, quod diffi-cillimum est, dividenda intentio animi, ut aliud voce aliud oculis agatur. Illud non poenitebit curasse, cum scribere nomina puer (quemadmodum moris est) coeperit, ne hanc operam in vocabulis 35 vulgaribus et forte occurrentibus perdat. Protinus enim potest interpretationem linguae secretioris, quas Graeci γλώσσας vocant, dum aliud agitur, ediscere et inter prima elementa consequi rem postea proprium tempus desideraturam. Et quoniam circa res adhuc tenues moramur, ii quoque versus, qui ad imitationem scribendi proponuntur, non otiosas velim sententias habeant sed honestum ali-36 quid monentes. Prosequitur haec memoria in senectutem et impressa animo rudi usque ad mores proficiet. Etiam dicta clarorum virorum et electos

The syllables once learnt, let him begin to construct words with them and sentences with the words. You will hardly believe how much reading is delayed 32 by undue haste. If the child attempts more than his powers allow, the inevitable result is hesitation, interruption and repetition, and the mistakes which he makes merely lead him to lose confidence in what he already knows. Reading must therefore first be 33 sure, then connected, while it must be kept slow for a considerable time, until practice brings speed unaccompanied by error. For to look to the right, 34 which is regularly taught, and to look ahead depends not so much on precept as on practice; since it is necessary to keep the eyes on what follows while reading out what precedes, with the resulting difficulty that the attention of the mind must be divided, the eyes and voice being differently engaged. It will be found worth while, when the boy begins to write out words in accordance with the usual practice, to see that he does not waste his labour in writing out common words of everyday occurrence. He can readily learn the explanations 35 or glosses, as the Greeks call them, of the more obscure words by the way and, while he is still engaged on the first rudiments, acquire what would otherwise demand special time to be devoted to it. And as we are still discussing minor details, I would urge that the lines, which he is set to copy, should not express thoughts of no significance, but convey some sound moral lesson. He will remember such 36 aphorisms even when he is an old man, and the impression made upon his unformed mind will contribute to the formation of his character. He may also be entertained by learning the sayings of famous men

QUINTILIAN

ex poetis maxime (namque eorum cognitio parvis gratior est) locos ediscere inter lusum licet. Nam et maxime necessaria est oratori (sicut suo loco dicam) memoria, et ea praecipue firmatur atque aliter exercitatione, et in his, de quibus nunc loquimur, aetatibus, quae nihildum ipsae generare ex se queunt, prope sola est, quae iuvari cura do-37 centium possit. Non alienum fuerit exigere ab his aetatibus, quo sit absolutius os et expressior sermo, ut nomina quaedam versusque adfectatae difficultatis ex pluribus et asperrime coëuntibus inter se syllabis catenatos et velut confragosos quam citatissime volvant; χαλινοὶ Graece vocantur. Res modica dictu, qua tamen omissa multa linguae vitia, nisi primis eximuntur annis, inemendabili in posterum pravitate durantur.

II. Sed nobis iam paulatim aderescere puer et exire de gremio et discere serio incipiat. Hoc igitur potissimum loco tractanda quaestio est, utiliusne sit domi atque intra privatos parietes studentem continere an frequentiae scholarum et velut publicis and above all selections from the poets, poetry being more attractive to children. For memory is most necessary to an orator, as I shall point out in its proper place, and there is nothing like practice for strengthening and developing it. And at the tender age of which we are now speaking, when originality is impossible, memory is almost the only faculty which can be developed by the teacher. It will be worth 37 while, by way of improving the child's pronunciation and distinctness of utterance, to make him rattle off a selection of names and lines of studied difficulty: they should be formed of a number of syllables which go ill together and should be harsh and rugged in sound: the Greeks call them "gags." This sounds a trifling matter, but its omission will result in numerous faults of pronunciation, which, unless removed in early years, will become a perverse and incurable habit and persist through life.
2 praecceptoribus tradere. Quod quidem cum iis, a quibus clarissimarum civitatum mores sunt instituti, tum eminentissimis auctoribus video placuisse. Non est tamen dissimulandum, esse nonnullos, qui ab hoc prope publico more privata quadam persuasione dissentiant. Hi duas praecipue rationes sequi videntur: unam, quod moribus magis consulant fugiendo turbam hominum eius aetatis, quae sit ad

II. But the time has come for the boy to grow up little by little, to leave the nursery and tackle his studies in good earnest. This therefore is the place to discuss the question as to whether it is better to have him educated privately at home or hand him over to some large school and those whom I may call public instructors. The latter course has, I 2 know, won the approval of most eminent authorities and of those who have formed the national character of the most famous states. It would, however, be folly to shut our eyes to the fact that there are some who disagree with this preference for public education owing to a certain prejudice in favour of private tuition. These persons seem to be guided in the main by two principles. In the interests of morality they would avoid the society of a number of human vitia maxime prona, unde causas turpium factorum saepe extitisse utinam falso iactaretur; alteram, quod, quisquis futurus est ille praeceptor, liberalius tempora sua impensurus uni videtur, quam si eadem 3 in plures partiatur. Prior causa prorsus gravis. Nam si studiis quidem scholas prodesse, moribus autem nocere constaret, potior mihi ratio vivendi honeste quam vel optime dicendi videretur. Sed mea quidem sententia iuncta ista atque indiscreta sunt. Neque enim esse oratorem nisi bonum virum iudico, et fieri etiamsi potest nolo. De hac re igitur prius.

QUINTILIAN

4 Corrumpi mores in scholis putant; nam et corrumpuntur interim, sed domi quoque, et sunt multa eius rei exempla tam hercule quam conservatae sanctissime utrobique opinionis. Natura cuiusque totum curaque distat. Da mentem ad peiora facilem, da negligentiam formandi custodiendique in aetate prima pudoris: non minorem flagitiis occasionem secreta praebuerint. Nam et potest turpis esse domesticus ille praeceptor, nec tutior inter servos malos quam ingenuos parum modestos con-
5 versatio est. At si bona ipsius indoles, si non caeca ac sopita parentum socordia est, et praeceptorem eligere sanctissimum quemque (cuius rei praecipua

beings at an age that is specially liable to acquire serious faults: I only wish I could deny the truth of the view that such education has often been the cause of the most discreditable actions. Secondly they hold that whoever is to be the boy's teacher, he will devote his time more generously to one pupil than if he has to divide it among several. The first 3 reason certainly deserves serious consideration. If it were proved that schools, while advantageous to study, are prejudicial to morality, I should give my vote for virtuous living in preference to even supreme excellence of speaking. But in my opinion the two are inseparable. I hold that no one can be a true orator unless he is also a good man and, even if he could be, I would not have it so. I will therefore deal with this point first.

It is held that schools corrupt the morals. It is 4 true that this is sometimes the case. But morals may be corrupted at home as well. There are numerous instances of both, as there are also of the preservation of a good reputation under either circumstance. The nature of the individual boy and the care devoted to his education make all the difference. Given a natural bent toward evil or negligence in developing and watching over modest behaviour in early years, privacy will provide equal opportunity for sin. The teacher employed at home may be of bad character, and there is just as much danger in associating with bad slaves as there is with immodest companions of good birth. On the 5 other hand if the natural bent be towards virtue, and parents are not afflicted with a blind and torpid indifference, it is possible to choose a teacher of the highest character (and those who are wise will make prudentibus cura est) et disciplinam, quae maxime severa fuerit, licet, et nihilominus amicum gravem virum aut fidelem libertum lateri filii sui adiungere, cuius assiduus comitatus etiam illos meliores faciat, qui timebantur.

QUINTILIAN

- 6 Facile erat huius metus remedium. Utinam liberorum nostrorum mores non ipsi perderemus. Infantiam statim deliciis solvimus. Mollis illa educatio, quam indulgentiam vocamus, nervos omnes mentis et corporis frangit. Quid non adultus concupiscet, qui in purpuris repit? Nondum prima verba exprimit, iam coccum intelligit, iam conchylium poscit. Ante palatum eorum quam os
- 7 instituimus. In lecticis crescunt; si terram attingerint, e manibus utrinque sustinentium pendent. Gaudemus, si quid licentius dixerint: verba ne Alexandrinis quidem permittenda deliciis risu et osculo excipimus. Nec mirum: nos docuimus, ex
- 8 nobis audiunt. Nostras amicas, nostros concubinos vident, omne convivium obscenis canticis strepit, pudenda dictu spectantur. Fit ex his consuetudo, inde natura. Discunt haec miseri, antequam sciant vitia esse; inde soluti ac fluentes non accipiunt ex scholis mala ista sed in scholas adferunt.
- 9 Verum in studiis magis vacabit unus uni. Ante omnia nihil prohibet esse illum nescio quem unum this their first object), to adopt a method of education of the strictest kind and at the same time to attach some respectable man or faithful freedman to their son as his friend and guardian, that his un-failing companionship may improve the character even of those who gave rise to apprehension.

Yet how easy were the remedy for such fears. 6
 Would that we did not too often ruin our children's character ourselves! We spoil them from the cradle. That soft upbringing, which we call kindness, saps all the sinews both of mind and body. If the child crawls on purple, what will he not desire when he comes to manhood? Before he can talk he can distinguish scarlet and cries for the very best brand of purple. We train their palates before we 7 teach their lips to speak. They grow up in litters: if they set foot to earth, they are supported by the hands of attendants on either side. We rejoice if they say something over-free, and words which we should not tolerate from the lips even of an Alexandrian page are greeted with laughter and a kiss. We have no right to be surprised. It was we that 8 taught them: they hear us use such words, they see our mistresses and minions; every dinner party is loud with foul songs, and things are presented to their eyes of which we should blush to speak. Hence springs habit, and habit in time becomes second nature. The poor children learn these things before they know them to be wrong. They become luxurious and effeminate, and far from acquiring such vices at schools, introduce them themselves.

I now turn to the objection that one master can 9 give more attention to one pupil. In the first place there is nothing to prevent the principle of "one

QUINTILIAN

- etiam eum eo, qui in scholis eruditur. Sed etiamsi iungi utrumque non posset, lumen tamen illud conventus honestissimi tenebris ac solitudini praetulissem. Nam optinus quisque praeceptor frequentia 10 gaudet ac maiore se theatro dignum putat. At fere minores ex conscientia suae infirmitatis haerere singulis et officio fungi quodammodo paedagogorum non indignantur.
- 11 Sed praestat alicui vel gratia vel pecunia vel amicitia, ut doctissimum atque incomparabilem magistrum domi habeat: num tamen ille totum in uno diem consumpturus est? aut potest esse ulla tam perpetua discantis intentio, quae non ut visus oculorum obtutu continuo fatigetur? cum praesertim multo plus secreti temporis studia
12 desiderent. Neque enim scribenti, ediscenti, cogitanti praeceptor adsistit, quorum aliquid agentibus cuiuscunque interventus impedimento est. Lectio quoque non omnis nec semper praeeunte vel interpretante eget. Quando enim tot auctorum notitia contingeret? Modicum ergo tempus est, quo in totum diem velut opus ordinetur, ideoque per plures ire possunt etiam quae singulis 13 tradenda sunt. Pleraque vero hanc condicionem habent, ut eadem voce ad omnes simul perferantur. Taceo de partitionibus et declamationibus rhetorum, teacher, one boy" being combined with school education. And even if such a combination should prove impossible, I should still prefer the broad daylight of a respectable school to the solitude and obscurity of a private education. For all the best teachers pride themselves on having a large number of pupils and think themselves worthy of a bigger audience. On the other hand in the case of inferior teachers a consciousness of their own defects not seldom reconciles them to being attached to a single pupil and playing the part—for it amounts to little more—of a mere paedagogus. 10

But let us assume that influence, money or friendship succeed in securing a paragon of learning to teach the boy at home. Will he be able to devote the whole day to one pupil? Or can we demand such continuous attention on the part of the learner? The mind is as easily tired as the eye, if given no relaxation. Moreover by far the larger proportion of the learner's time ought to be devoted to private study. The teacher does not stand over him while he is writing or thinking or learning by heart. While he is so occupied the intervention of anyone, be he who he may, is a hindrance. Further, not all reading requires to be first read aloud or interpreted by a master. If it did, how would the boy ever become acquainted with all the authors required of him? A small time only is required to give purpose and direction to the day's work, and consequently individual instruction can be given to more than one pupil. There are moreover a large number of subjects in which it is desirable that instruction should be given to all the pupils simultaneously. I say nothing of the analyses and declamations of 11 12 13

QUINTILIAN

quibus certe quantuscunque numerus adhibeatur, 14 tamen unusquisque totum feret. Non enim vox illa praeceptoris ut cena minus pluribus sufficit, sed ut sol universis idem lucis calorisque largitur. Gram-maticus quoque si de loquendi ratione disserat, si quaestiones explicet, historias exponat, poëmata 15 enarret, tot illa discunt quot audient. At enim emendationi praelectionique numerus obstat. Sit incommodum, (nam quid fere undique placet?) mox illud comparabimus commodis.

Nec ego tamen eo mitti puerum volo, ubi negli-gatur. Sed neque praeceptor bonus maiore se turba, quam ut sustinere eam possit, oneraverit; et in primis ea habenda cura est, ut is omni modo fiat nobis familiariter amicus, nec officium in docendo spectet 16 sed adfectum. Ita nunquam erimus in turba. Nec sane quisquam litteris saltem leviter imbutus eum, in quo studium ingeniumque perspexerit, non in suam quoque gloriam peculiariter fovebit. Sed ut fugiendae sint magnae scholae (cui ne ipsi quidem rei adsentior, si ad aliquem merito concurritur), non tamen hoc eo valet, ut fugiendae sint omnino scholae. Aliud est enim vitare eas, aliud eligere.
17 Et si refutavimus quae contra dicuntur, iam

the professors of rhetoric : in such cases there is no limit to the number of the audience, as each individual pupil will in any case receive full value. The voice of a lecturer is not like a dinner which 14 will only suffice for a limited number ; it is like the sun which distributes the same quantity of light and heat to all of us. So too with the teacher of literature. Whether he speak of style or expound disputed passages, explain stories or paraphrase poems, everyone who hears him will profit by his teaching. But, it will be urged, a large class is 15 unsuitable for the correction of faults or for explanation. It may be inconvenient : one cannot hope for absolute perfection ; but I shall shortly contrast the inconvenience with the obvious advantages.

Still I do not wish a boy to be sent where he will be neglected. But a good teacher will not burden himself with a larger number of pupils than he can manage, and it is further of the very first importance that he should be on friendly and intimate terms with us and make his teaching not a duty but a labour of love. Then there will never be any question of being swamped by the number of our fellow-learners. Moreover any teacher who has 16 the least tincture of literary culture will devote special attention to any boy who shows signs of industry and talent ; for such a pupil will redound to his own credit. But even if large schools are to be avoided, a proposition from which I must dissent if the size be due to the excellence of the teacher, it does not follow that all schools are to be avoided. It is one thing to avoid them, another to select the best.

Having refuted these objections, let me now 17

QUINTILIAN

18 explicemus, quid ipsi sequamur. Ante omnia futurus orator, cui in maxima celebritate et in media rei publicae luce vivendum est, adsuescat iam a tenero non reformidare homines neque illa solitaria et velut umbratica vita pallescere. Excitanda mens et adtollenda semper est, quae in eiusmodi secretis aut languescit et quendam velut in opaco situ ducit, aut contra tumescit inani persuasione; necesse est enim nimium tribuat sibi, qui se nemini com-19 parat. Deinde cum proferenda sunt studia, caligat in sole et omnia nova offendit, ut qui solus didicerit 20 quod inter multos faciendum est. Mitto amicitias, quae ad senectutem usque firmissime durant religiosa quadam necessitudine imbutae. Neque enim est sanctius sacris iisdem quam studiis initiari. Sensum ipsum, qui communis dicitur, ubi discet, cum se a congressu, qui non hominibus solum sed mutis 21 quoque animalibus naturalis est, segregarit? Adde quod domi ea sola discere potest, quae ipsi praeci-pientur, in schola etiam quae aliis. Audiet multa cotidie probari, multa corrigi; proderit alicuius obiurgata desidia, proderit laudata industria, ex-22 citabitur laude aemulatio, turpe ducet cedere pari, explain my own views. It is above all things necessary 18 that our future orator, who will have to live in the utmost publicity and in the broad daylight of public life, should become accustomed from his childhood to move in society without fear and habituated to a life far removed from that of the pale student, the solitary and recluse. His mind requires constant stimulus and excitement, whereas retirement such as has just been mentioned induces languor and the mind becomes mildewed like things that are left in the dark, or else flies to the opposite extreme and becomes puffed up with empty conceit ; for he who has no standard of comparison by which to judge his own powers will necessarily rate them too high. Again when the fruits of his study have 19 to be displayed to the public gaze, our recluse is blinded by the sun's glare, and finds everything new and unfamiliar, for though he has learnt what is required to be done in public, his learning is but the theory of a hermit. I say nothing of friendships 20 which endure unbroken to old age having acquired the binding force of a sacred duty : for initiation in the same studies has all the sanctity of initiation in the same mysteries of religion. And where shall he acquire that instinct which we call common feeling, if he secludes himself from that intercourse which is natural not merely to mankind but even to dumb animals ? Further, at home he can only learn 21 what is taught to himself, while at school he will learn what is taught others as well. He will hear many merits praised and many faults corrected every day : he will derive equal profit from hearing the indolence of a comrade rebuked or his industry commended. Such praise will incite him to emu- 22

QUINTILIAN

pulehrum superasse maiores. Accendant omnia haec animos, et licet ipsa vitium sit ambitio, frequen-23 ter tamen causa virtutum est. Non inutilem scio servatum esse a praeceptoribus meis morem, qui, cum pueros in classes distribuerant, ordinem dicendi secundum vires ingenii dabant; et ita superiore loco quisque declamabat, ut praecedere profectu videbatur.
24 Huius rei iudicia praebebantur; ea nobis ingens palma, ducere vero classem multo pulcherrimum.
Nec de hoc semel decretum erat; tricesimus dies reddebat victo certaminis potestatem. Ita nec superior successu curam remittebat et dolor victum 25 ad depellendam ignominiam concitabat. Id nobis aeriores ad studia dicendi faces subdidisse quam ex-hortationem docentium, paedagogorum custodiam, vota parentum, quantum animi mei coniectura colli-26 gere possum, contenderim. Sed sicut firmiores in litteris profectus alit aemulatio, ita incipientibus atque adhuc teneris condiscipulorum quam praeceptoris iucundior hoc ipso quod facilior imitatio est. Vix enim se prima elementa ad spem tollere effringendae, quam summam putant, eloquentiae audebunt; prox-ima amplectentur magis, ut vites arboribus applicitae inferiores prius apprehendendo ramos in cacumina lation, he will think it a disgrace to be outdone by his contemporaries and a distinction to surpass his seniors. All such incentives provide a valuable stimulus, and though ambition may be a fault in itself, it is often the mother of virtues. I remember 23 that my own masters had a practice which was not without advantages. Having distributed the boys in classes, they made the order in which they were to speak depend on their ability, so that the boy who had made most progress in his studies had the privilege of declaiming first. The performances 24 on these occasions were criticised. To win commendation was a tremendous honour, but the prize most eagerly coveted was to be the leader of the class. Such a position was not permanent. Once a month the defeated competitors were given a fresh opportunity of competing for the prize. Consequently success did not lead the victor to relax his efforts, while the vexation caused by defeat served as an incentive to wipe out the disgrace. I will 25 venture to assert that to the best of my memory this practice did more to kindle our oratorical ambitions than all the exhortations of our instructors, the watchfulness of our paedagogi and the prayers of our parents. Further while emulation promotes 26 progress in the more advanced pupils, beginners who are still of tender years derive greater pleasure from imitating their comrades than their masters, just because it is easier. For children still in the elementary stages of education can scarce dare hope to reach that complete eloquence which they understand to be their goal: their ambition will not soar so high, but they will imitate the vine which has to grasp the lower branches of the tree on which it is

QUINTILIAN

27 evadunt. Quod adeo verum est, ut ipsius etiam magistri, si tamen ambitiosis utilia praeferet, hoc opus sit, eum adhuc rudia tractabit ingenia, non statim onerare infirmitatem discantium, sed temperare vires suas et ad intellectum audientis
28 descendere. Nam ut vaseula oris angusti superfusam humoris copiam respuunt, sensim autem influentibus vel etiam instillatis complentur, sic animi puerorum quantum excipere possint videndum est. Nam maiora intellectu velut parum apertos 29 ad percipiendum animos non subibunt. Utile igitur habere, quos imitari primum, mox vincere velis. Ita paulatim et superiorum spes erit. His adiicio, praeceptores ipsos non idem mentis ac spiritus in dicendo posse concipere singulis tantum praesentibus quod illa celebritate audientium instinctos.

30 Maxima enim pars eloquentiae constat animo. Hunc adfici, hunc concipere imagines rerum et transformari quodammodo ad naturam eorum, de quibus loquimur, necesse est. Is porro, quo generosior celsiorque est, hoc maioribus velut organis commovetur; ideoque et laude crescit et impetu augetur 31 et aliquid magnum agere gaudet. Est quaedam tacita dedignatio, vim dicendi tantis comparatam trained before it can reach the topmost boughs. So 27 true is this that it is the master's duty as well, if he is engaged on the task of training unformed minds and prefers practical utility to a more ambitious programme, not to burden his pupils at once with tasks to which their strength is unequal, but to curb his energies and refrain from talking over the heads of his audience. Vessels with narrow mouths will 28 not receive liquids if too much be poured into them at a time, but are easily filled if the liquid is admitted in a gentle stream or, it may be, drop by drop; similarly you must consider how much a child's mind is capable of receiving: the things which are beyond their grasp will not enter their minds, which have not opened out sufficiently to take them in. It is a good thing therefore that a 29 boy should have companions whom he will desire first to imitate and then to surpass: thus he will be led to aspire to higher achievement. I would add that the instructors themselves cannot develop the same intelligence and energy before a single listener as they can when inspired by the presence of a numerous audience.

For eloquence depends in the main on the state 30 of the mind, which must be moved, conceive images and adapt itself to suit the nature of the subject which is the theme of speech. Further the loftier and the more elevated the mind, the more powerful will be the forces which move it: consequently praise gives it growth and effort increase, and the thought that it is doing something great fills it with joy. The duty of stooping to expend that power of 31 speaking which has been acquired at the cost of such effort upon an audience of one gives rise to a silent laboribus ad unum auditorem demittere: pudet supra modum sermonis attolli. Et sane concipita quis mente vel declamantis habitum vel orantis vocem, incessum, pronuntiationem, illum denique animi et corporis motum, sudorem, ut alia praeteream, et fatigationem, audiente uno: nonne quiddam pati furori simile videatur? Non esset in rebus humanis eloquentia, si tantum cum singulis loqueremur.

- III. Tradito sibi puero docendi peritus ingenium eius in primis naturamque perspiciet. Ingenii signum in parvis praecipuum memoria est. Eius duplex virtus, facile percipere et fideliter continere. Proximum imitatio; nam id quoque est docilis naturae, sic tamen, ut ea quae discit effingat, non habitum forte et ingressum et si quid in peius notabile est.
- 2 Non dabit mihi spem bonae indolis, qui hoc imitandi studio petet, ut rideatur. Nam probus quoque in primis erit ille vere ingeniosus; alioqui non peius duxerim tardi esse ingenii quam mali. Probus autem ab illo segni et iacente plurimum aberit.
- 3 Hic meus quae tradentur non difficulter accipiet, quaedam etiam interrogabit, sequetur tamen magis quam praecurret. Illud ingeniorum velut praecox genus non temere unquam pervenit ad frugem.
- 4 Hi sunt, qui parva facile faciunt et audacia proveci, feeling of disdain, and the teacher is ashamed to raise his voice above the ordinary conversational level. Imagine the air of a declaimer, or the voice of an orator, his gait, his delivery, the movements of his body, the emotions of his mind, and, to go no further, the fatigue of his exertions, all for the sake of one listener! Would he not seem little less than a lunatic? No, there would be no such thing as eloquence, if we spoke only with one person at a time.

III. The skilful teacher will make it his first care, as soon as a boy is entrusted to him, to ascertain his ability and character. The surest indication in a child is his power of memory. The characteristics of a good memory are twofold: it must be quick to take in and faithful to retain impressions of what it receives. The indication of next importance is the power of imitation: for this is a sign that the child is teachable: but he must imitate merely what he is taught, and must not, for example, mimic someone's gait or bearing or defects. For I have no hope that a child will turn out well who loves imitation merely for the purpose of raising a laugh. He who is really gifted will also above all else be good. For the rest, I regard slowness of intellect as preferable to actual badness. But a good boy will be quite unlike the dullard and the sloth. My ideal pupil will absorb instruction with ease and will even ask some questions; but he will follow rather than anticipate his teacher. Precocious intellects rarely produce sound fruit. By the precocious I mean those who perform small tasks with ease and, thus emboldened, proceed to display all their little accomplishments quidquid illud possunt, statim ostendunt. Possunt autem id demum, quod in proximo est; verba continuant, haec vultu interrito, nulla tardati verecundia proferunt. Non multum praestant sed 5 cito. Non subest vera vis nec penitus immissis radicibus nititur; ut, quae summo solo sparsa sunt semina, celerius se effundunt, et imitatae spicas herbulae inanibus aristis ante messem flavescunt. Placent haec annis comparata; deinde stat profectus, admiratio decrescit.

QUINTILIAN

6 Haec cum animadverterit, perspiciat deinceps, quonam modo tractandus sit discentis animus. Sunt quidam, nisi institeris, remissi, quidam imperia indignantur, quosdam continet metus, quosdam debilitat, alios continuatio extundit, in aliis plus impetus facit. Mihi ille detur puer, quem laus excitet, quem gloria iuuet, qui victus fleat. Hic erit alendus ambitu, hunc mordebit obiurgatio, hunc honor excitabit, in hoc desidiam nunquam verebor.

8 Danda est tamen omnibus aliqua remissio; non solum quia nulla res est, quae perferre possit continuum laborem, atque ea quoque, quae sensu et anima carent, ut servare vim suam possint, velut quiete alterna retenduntur; sed quod studium dis-
9 cendi voluntate, quae cogi non potest, constat. Itaque

without being asked : but their accomplishments are only of the most obvious kind : they string words together and trot them out boldly and undeterred by the slightest sense of modesty. Their actual achievement is small, but what they can do they perform with ease. They have no real power and what they have 5 is but of shallow growth : it is as when we cast seed on the surface of the soil : it springs up too rapidly, the blade apes the loaded ear, and yellows ere harvest time, but bears no grain. Such tricks please us when we contrast them with the performer's age, but progress soon stops and our admiration withers away.

Such indications once noted, the teacher must next 6 consider what treatment is to be applied to the mind of his pupil. There are some boys who are slack, unless pressed on ; others again are impatient of control : some are amenable to fear, while others are paralysed by it : in some cases the mind requires continued application to form it, in others this result is best obtained by rapid concentration. Give me the boy who is spurred on by praise, delighted by success and ready to weep over failure. Such an 7 one must be encouraged by appeals to his ambition ; rebuke will bite him to the quick ; honour will be a spur, and there is no fear of his proving indolent.

Still, all our pupils will require some relaxation, 8 not merely because there is nothing in this world that can stand continued strain and even unthinking and inanimate objects are unable to maintain their strength, unless given intervals of rest, but because study depends on the good will of the student, a quality that cannot be secured by compulsion. Consequently if restored and refreshed by a holiday 9

QUINTILIAN

et virium plus adferunt ad discendum renovati ac recentes et acriorem animum, qui fere necessitatibus 10 repugnat. Nec me offenderit lusus in pueris; est et hoc signum alacritatis; neque illum tristem semperque demissum sperare possim erectae circa studia mentis fore, cum in hoc quoque maxime 11 naturali aetatibus illis impetu iaceat. Modus tamen sit remissionibus, ne aut odium studiorum faciant negatae aut otii consuetudinem nimiae. Sunt etiam nonnulli acuendis puerorum ingeniis non inutiles lusus, cum positis invicem cuiusque generis 12 quaestiunculis aemulantur. Mores quoque se inter ludendum simplicius detegunt; modo nulla videatur aetas tam infirma, quae non protinus quid rectum pravumque sit discat, tum vel maxime formanda, cum simulandi nescia est et praecipientibus faecillime cedit. Frangas enim citius quam corrigas, quae in 13 pravum induruerunt. Protinus ergo, ne quid cupide, ne quid improbe, ne quid impotenter faciat, monendus est puer; habendumque in animo semper illud Vergilianum:

Adeo in teneris consuescere multum est.

Caedi vero discentes, quamlibet et receptum sit et Chrysippus non improbet, minime velim. Primum, 14 quia deforme atque servile est et certe, (quod conthey will bring greater energy to their learning and approach their work with greater spirit of a kind that will not submit to be driven. I approve of play 10 in the young; it is a sign of a lively disposition; nor will you ever lead me to believe that a boy who is gloomy and in a continual state of depression is ever likely to show alertness of mind in his work, lacking as he does the impulse most natural to boys of his age. Such relaxation must not however be un- 11 limited: otherwise the refusal to give a holiday will make boys hate their work, while excessive indulgence will accustom them to idleness. There are moreover certain games which have an educational value for boys, as for instance when they compete in posing each other with all kinds of questions which they ask turn and turn about. Games 12 too reveal character in the most natural way, at least that is so if the teacher will bear in mind that there is no child so young as to be unable to learn to distinguish between right and wrong, and that the character is best moulded, when it is still guiltless of deceit and most susceptible to instruction: for once a bad habit has become engrained, it is easier to break than bend. There must be no 13 delay, then, in warning a boy that his actions must be unselfish, honest, self-controlled, and we must never forget the words of Virgil,

“So strong is custom formed in early years.”¹

I disapprove of flogging, although it is the regular custom and meets with the acquiescence of Chrysippus, because in the first place it is a disgraceful form of punishment and fit only for slaves, and is in 14

¹ Georg. ii. 272.

QUINTILIAN

venit, si aetatem mutes), iniuria est; deinde, quod, si cui tam est mens illiberalis, ut obiurgatione non corrigatur, is etiam ad plagas ut pessima quaeque mancipia durabitur: postremo, quod ne opus erit quidem hac castigatione, si assiduis studiorum 15 exactor astiterit. Nunc fere negligentia paedagogorum sic emendari videtur, ut pueri non facere, quae recta sunt, cogantur sed cur non fecerint puniantur. Denique cum parvulum verberibus coegeris, quid iuveni facias, cui nec adhiberi potest 16 hic metus et maiora discenda sunt? Adde, quod multa vapulantibus dictu deformia et mox verecundiae futura saepe dolore vel metu acciderunt, qui pudor frangit animum et abiicit atque ipsius
17 lucis fugam et taedium dictat. Iam si minor in eligendis custodum vel praeceptorum moribus fuit cura, pudet dicere, in quae probra nefandi homines isto caedendi iure abutantur, quam det aliis quoque nonnunquam occasionem hic miserorum metus. Non morabor in parte hac; nimium est quod intelligitur. Quare hoc dixisse satis est; in aetatem infirmam et iniuriae obnoxiam nemini debet nimium licere.
18 Nunc quibus instituendus sit artibus, qui sic formabitur, ut fieri possit orator, et quae in quaque aetate inchoanda, dicere ingrediar.

IV. Primus in eo, qui scribendi legendique any case an insult, as you will realise if you imagine its infliction at a later age. Secondly if a boy is so insensible to instruction that reproof is useless, he will, like the worst type of slave, merely become hardened to blows. Finally there will be absolutely no need of such punishment if the master is a thorough disciplinarian. As it is, we try to make amends for 15 the negligence of the boy's paedagogus, not by forcing him to do what is right, but by punishing him for not doing what is right. And though you may compel a child with blows, what are you to do with him when he is a young man no longer amenable to such threats and confronted with tasks of far greater difficulty? Moreover when children 16 are beaten, pain or fear frequently have results of which it is not pleasant to speak and which are likely subsequently to be a source of shame, a shame which unnerves and depresses the mind and leads the child to shun and loathe the light. Further if in- 17 adequate care is taken in the choices of respectable governors and instructors, I blush to mention the shameful abuse which scoundrels sometimes make of their right to administer corporal punishment or the opportunity not infrequently offered to others by the fear thus caused in the victims. I will not linger on this subject; it is more than enough if I have made my meaning clear. I will content myself with saying that children are helpless and easily victimised, and that therefore no one should be given unlimited power over them. I will now proceed to 18 describe the subjects in which the boy must be trained, if he is to become an orator, and to indicate the age at which each should be commenced.

IV. As soon as the boy has learned to read and adeptus erit facultatem, grammatici est locus. Nec refert, de Graeco an de Latino loquar, quanquam 2 Graecum esse priorem placet. Utrique eadem via est. Haec igitur professio, cum brevissime in duas partes dividatur, recte loquendi scientiam et poetarum enarrationem, plus habet in recessu quam

QUINTILIAN

3 fronte promittit. Nam et scribendi ratio coniuncta cum loquendo est, et enarrationem praecedat emendata lectio, et mixtum his omnibus iudicium est; quo quidem ita severe sunt usi veteres grammatici, ut non versus modo censoria quadam virgula notare et libros, qui falso viderentur inscripti, tanquam subditos summovere familia permiserint sibi, sed auctores alios in ordinem redegerint, alios
4 omnino exemerint numero. Nec poetas legisse satis est: excutiendum omne scriptorum genus non propter historias modo sed verba, quae frequenter ius ab auctoribus sumunt. Tum neque citra musicen grammaticae potest esse perfecta, cum ei de metris rhythmicisque dicendum sit, nec, si rationem siderum ignoret, poetas intelligat, qui (ut alia omittam) totiens ortu occasuque signorum in declarandis temporibus utantur; nec ignara philosophiae, cum propter plurimos in omnibus fere carminibus locos ex intima naturalium quaestionum subtilitate repetitos, tum vel propter Empedoclea in Graecis, Varronem ac Lucretium in Latinis, qui

¹ grammaticus is the teacher of literature and languages; at times it is necessary to restrict its meaning to "grammar."

write without difficulty, it is the turn for the teacher¹ of literature. My words apply equally to Greek and Latin masters, though I prefer that a start should be made with a Greek: in either case the method² is the same. This profession may be most briefly considered under two heads, the art of speaking correctly and the interpretation of the poets; but there is more beneath the surface than meets the eye. For the art of writing is combined with that of³ speaking, and correct reading precedes interpretation, while in each of these cases criticism has its work to perform. The old school of teachers indeed carried their criticism so far that they were not content with obelising lines or rejecting books whose titles they regarded as spurious, as though they were expelling a supposititious child from the family circle, but also drew up a canon of authors, from which some were omitted altogether. Nor is it⁴ sufficient to have read the poets only; every kind of writer must be carefully studied, not merely for the subject matter, but for the vocabulary; for words often acquire authority from their use by a particular author. Nor can such training be regarded as complete if it stop short of music, for the teacher of literature has to speak of metre and rhythm: nor again if he be ignorant of astronomy, can he understand the poets; for they, to mention no further points, frequently give their indications of time by reference to the rising and setting of the stars. Ignorance of philosophy is an equal drawback, since there are numerous passages in almost every poem based on the most intricate questions of natural philosophy, while among the Greeks we have Empedocles and among our own poets Varro and Lucretius, all of

QUINTILIAN

5 praecepta sapientiae versibus tradiderunt. Eloquentia quoque non mediocri est opus, ut de una-quaque earum, quas demonstravimus, rerum dicat proprie et copiose. Quo minus sunt ferendi, qui hanc artem ut tenuem atque ieiunam cavillantur, quae nisi oratoris futuri fundamenta fideliter iecit, quidquid superstruxeris, corruet; necessaria pueris, iucunda senibus, dulcis secretorum comes et quae vel sola in omni studiorum genere plus habeat operis quam ostentationis.

6 Ne quis igitur tanquam parva fastidiat gram-matices elementa, non quia magnae sit operae consonantes a vocalibus discernere ipsasque eas in semivocalium numerum mutarumque partiri, sed quia interiora velut sacri huius adenitibus apparebit multa rerum subtilitas, quae non modo acuere ingenia puerilia sed exercere altissimam quoque 7 eruditionem ac scientiam possit. An cuiuslibet auris est exigere litterarum sonos? non hercule magis quam nervorum. At grammatici saltem omnes in hanc descendent rerum tenuitatem, desintne aliquae nobis necessariae litterarum, non cum Graeca scribimus (tum enim ab iisdem duas 8 mutuamur) sed propriae, in Latinis, ut in his seruus et vulgus Aeolicum digammon desideratur, et

¹ Y and Z.

whom have expounded their philosophies in verse. No small powers of eloquence also are required to enable the teacher to speak appropriately and fluently on the various points which have just been mentioned. For this reason those who criticise the art of teaching literature as trivial and lacking in substance put themselves out of court. Unless the foundations of oratory are well and truly laid by the teaching of literature, the superstructure will collapse. The study of literature is a necessity for boys and the delight of old age, the sweet companion of our privacy and the sole branch of study which has more solid substance than display.

The elementary stages of the teaching of literature must not therefore be despised as trivial. It is of course an easy task to point out the difference between vowels and consonants, and to subdivide the latter into semivowels and mutes. But as the pupil gradually approaches the inner shrine of the sacred place, he will come to realise the intricacy of the subject, an intricacy calculated not merely to sharpen the wits of a boy, but to exercise even the most profound knowledge and erudition. It is not every ear that can appreciate the correct sound of the different letters. It is fully as hard as to distinguish the different notes in music. But all teachers of literature will condescend to such minutiae: they will discuss for instance whether certain necessary letters are absent from the alphabet, not indeed when we are writing Greek words (for then we borrow two letters¹ from them), but in the case of genuine Latin words: for example in words such as seruus and uulgus we feel the lack of the Aeolic digamma; there is also a sound intermediate between medius est quidam V et I litterae sonus ; non enim sic optimum dicimus ut opimum, et in here neque E 9 plane neque I auditur ; an rursus aliae redundant, praeter notam aspirationis, (quae si necessaria est, etiam contrariam sibi poscit) ut K, quae et ipsa quorundam nominum nota est, et Q, cuius similis effectu specieque, nisi quod paulum a nostris obli-quatur, Coppa apud Graecos nunc tantum in numero manet, et nostrarum ultima, qua tam carere po-10 tuimus quam ψ non quacrimus? Atque etiam in ipsis vocalibus grammatici est videre, an aliquas pro consonantibus usus acceperit, quia iam sicut etiam scribitur et uos ut tuos.¹ At quae ut vocales iunguntur aut unam longam faciunt, ut veteres scrip-serunt qui geminatione earum velut apice utebantur, aut duas ; nisi quis putat etiam ex tribus vocalibus syllabam fieri, si non aliquae officio consonantium 11 fungantur. Quaeret hoc etiam, quomodo duabus demum vocalibus in se ipsas coeundi natura sit, cum consonantium nulla nisi alteram frangat. Atqui littera I sibi insidit, coniicit enim est ab illo iacit, et V, quomodo nunc scribitur uulgus et seruus. Sciat etiam Ciceroni placuisse *aiio Maiiam*que geminata I scribere ; quod si est, etiam iungetur ut consonans.

QUINTILIAN

¹ etiam . . . uos . . . tuos, Ritschl: tam . . . quos . . . cos, MSS.

¹ K = Kaeso, Kalendae, Karthago, Kaput, Kalumnia, etc. The q-sound can be expressed by c. Koppa (Ϟ) as a numeral = 90.

u and i, for we do not pronounce optimum as we do optimum, while in here the sound is neither exactly e or i. Again there is the question whether certain letters 9 are not superfluous, not to mention the mark of the aspirate, to which, if it is required at all, there should be a corresponding symbol to indicate the opposite: for instance k, which is also used as an abbreviation for certain nouns, and q, which, though slanted slightly more by us, resembles both in sound and shape the Greek koppa, now used by the Greeks solely as a numerical sign¹: there is also x, the last letter of our own alphabet, which we could dispense with as easily as with psi. Again the teacher of 10 literature will have to determine whether certain vowels have not been consonantalised. For instance iam and etiam are both spelt with an i, uos and tuos both with a u. Vowels, however, when joined as vowels, either make one long vowel (compare the obsolete method of indicating a long vowel by doubling it as the equivalent of the circumflex), or a diphthong, though some hold that even three vowels can form a single syllable; this however is only possible if one or more assume the role of consonants. He will also inquire why it is that 11 there are two vowels which may be repeated, while a consonant can only be followed and modified by a different consonant.² But i can follow i (for coniicit is derived from *iacit*³): so too does u, witness the modern spelling of seruus and uulgus. He should also know that Cicero preferred to write aiio and Maiiam with a double i; in that case one

² The two vowels are i and u. A consonant cannot be duplicated within one syllable.

³ The derivation is mentioned to show that two i's, not one, are found in the second syllable of coniicit.

QUINTILIAN

- 12 Quare discat puer, quid in litteris proprium, quid commune, quae cum quibus cognatio; nec miretur, cur ex scanno fiat scabillum aut a pinno (quod est acutum) securis utrinque habens aciem bipennis; ne illorum sequatur errorem, qui, quia a pennis duabus hoc esse nomen existimant, pennas avium dici volunt.
- 13 Neque has modo noverit mutationes, quas adferunt declinatio aut praepositio, ut secat secuit, cadit excidit, caedit excidit, culcat exculcat (et fit a lavando lotus et inde rursus inlotus et mille talia), sed quae rectis quoque casibus aetate transierunt. Nam ut Valesii Fusii in Valerios Furiosque venerunt: ita arbos, labos, vapos etiam et clamos ac lases fuerunt.
- 14 Atque haec ipsa S littera ab his nominibus exclusa in quibusdam ipsa alteri successit, nam meritare atque pultare dicebant, quin fordeum faedosque pro aspiratione F velut simili littera utentes; nam contra Graeci aspirare F ut ϕ solent, ut pro Fundanio Cicero testem, qui primam eius litteram dicere non
- 15 possit, irridet. Sed B quoque in locum aliarum dedimus aliquando, unde Burrus et Bruges et Belena. Nec non eadem fecit ex duello bellum, unde Duelios
- 16 quidam dicere Belios ausi. Quid stlocum stlitesque? Quid T litterae cum D quaedam cognatio? Quare of them is consonantalised. A boy therefore must 12 learn both the peculiarities and the common characteristics of letters and must know how they are related to each other. Nor must he be surprised that scabillum is formed from scamnus or that a double-edged axe should be called bipennis from pinnus, "sharp": for I would not have him fall into the same error as those who, supposing this word to be derived from bis and pennae, think that it is a metaphor from the wings of birds.

¹ i.e. of laris. ² For mersare and pulsare.

³ i.e. Pyrrus, Phryges, Helena.

He must not be content with knowing only those 13 changes introduced by conjugation and prefixes, such as secat secuit, cadit excidit, caedit excidit, calcat exculcat, to which might be added lotus from lauare and again inlotus with a thousand others. He must learn as well the changes that time has brought about even in nominatives. For just as names like Valesius and Fusius have become Valerius and Furius, so arbos, labos, vapos and even clamos and *lases*¹ were the original forms. And this same letter s, 14 which has disappeared from these words, has itself in some cases taken the place of another letter. For our ancestors used to say mertare and pullare.² They also said fordeum and faedi, using f instead of the aspirate as being a kindred letter. For the Greeks unlike us aspirate f like their own phi, as Cicero bears witness in the pro Fundanio, where he laughs at a witness who is unable to pronounce the first letter of that name. In some cases again we have substi- 15 tuted b for other letters, as with Burrus, Bruges, and Belena.³ The same letter too has turned duellum into bellum, and as a result some have ventured to call the Duelii Belii. What of stlocus and stlites? 16 What of the connexion between t and d, a connexion

QUINTILIAN

minus mirum, si in vetustis operibus urbis nostrae et celebribus templis legantur Alexanter et Cassantra. Quid O atque V permutatae invicem, ut Hecoba et notrix, Culcides et Pulixena scriberentur, ac, ne in Graecis id tantum notetur, dederont ac probaveront? Sic Ὀδυσσεύς, quem Ὑλυσσέα fecerant Aeolis, ad 17 Uliren deductus est. Quid? non E quoque I loeo fuit? Menerva et leber et magester et Diove Victore non Diovi Victori? Sed mihi locum signare satis est, non enim doceo, sed admoneo docturos. Inde in syllabas cura transibit, de quibus in orthographia pauca adnotabo.

Tum videbit, ad quem hoc pertinet, quot et quae partes orationis; quanquam de numero parum 18 convenit. Veteres enim, quorum fuerunt Aristoteles quoque atque Theodectes, verba modo et nomina et convictiones tradiderunt; videlicet quod in verbis vim sermonis, in nominibus materiam (quia alterum est quod loquimur, alterum de quo loquimur), in convictionibus autem complexus eorum esse iudicaverunt: quas coniunctiones a plerisque dici scio, sed haec videtur ex συνδέσμῳ magis propria trans-19 latio. Paulatim a philosophis ac maxime Stoicis auctus est numerus, ac primum convictionibus articuli adiecti, post praepositiones, nominibus ap-

which makes it less surprising that on some of the older buildings of Rome and certain famous temples we should find the names Alexanter and Cassantra? What again of the interchange of o and u, of which examples may be found in Hecoba, notrix, Culcides and Pulixena, or to take purely Latin words dederont and probaueront? So too Odysseus, which the Aeolian dialect turned into Ulysses, has been transformed by us into Ulixes. Similarly e in 17 certain cases held the place that is now occupied by i, as in Menerua, leber, magester, and Dioue victore in place of Dioui victori. It is sufficient for me to give a mere indication as regards these points, for I am not teaching, but merely advising those who have got to teach. The next subject to which attention must be given is that of syllables, of which I will speak briefly, when I come to deal with orthography.

Following this the teacher concerned will note the number and nature of the parts of speech, although there is some dispute as to their number. Earlier writers, among them Aristotle himself and 18 Theodectes, hold that there are but three, verbs, nouns and convinctions. Their view was that the force of language resided in the verbs, and the matter in the nouns (for the one is what we speak, the other that which we speak about), while the duty of the convinctions was to provide a link between the nouns and the verbs. I know that conjunction is the term in general use. But convinction seems to me to be the more accurate translation of the Greek συνδεσμός. Gradually the number was 19 increased by the philosophers, more especially by the Stoics: articles were first added to the convinctions, then prepositions: to nouns appellations were pellatio, deinde pronomen, deinde mixtum verbo participium, ipsis verbis adverbia. Noster sermo articulos non desiderat, ideoque in alias partes 20 orationis sparguntur. Sed accedit superioribus interiectio. Alii tamen ex idoneis dumtaxat auctoribus octo partes secuti sunt ut Aristarchus et aetate nostra Palaemon, qui vocabulum sive appellationem nomini subiecerunt tanquam speciem eius. At ii, qui aliud nomen aliud vocabulum faciunt, novem. Nihilominus fuerunt, qui ipsum adhuc vocabulum ab appellatione deducerent, ut esset vocabulum corpus visu tactuque manifestum, domus, lectus, appellatio, cui vel alterum deesset vel utrumque, ventus, caelum, deus, virtus. Adiciebant et asseverationem ut cheu, et tractationem ut fasciatim; quae 21 mihi non approbantur. Vocabulum an appellatio dicenda sit προσηγορία et subiicienda nomini necne, quia parvi refert, liberum opinaturis relinquo.

QUINTILIAN

22 Nomina declinare et verba in primis pueri sciant, neque enim aliter pervenire ad intellectum sequentium possunt; quod etiam monere supervacuum erat, nisi ambitiosa festinatione plerique a posterioribus inciperent et, dum ostentare discipulos circa added, then the pronoun and finally the participle, which holds a middle position between the verb and the noun. To the verb itself was added the adverb. Our own language dispenses with the articles, which are therefore distributed among the other parts of speech. But interjections must be added to those already mentioned. Others however follow good authority in asserting that there are eight parts of speech. Among these I may mention Aristarchus and in our own day Palaemon, who classified the vocable or appellation as a species of the genus noun. Those on the other hand who distinguish between the noun and the vocable, make nine parts of speech. But yet again there are some who differentiate between the vocable and the appellation, saying that the vocable indicates concrete objects which can be seen and touched, such as a "house" or "bed," while an appellation is something imperceptible either to sight or touch or to both, such as the "wind," "heaven," or "virtue." They added also the asseveration, such as "alas" and the *derivative*¹ such as fasciatim. But of these classifications I do not approve. Whether we should translate προσηγορία by vocable or appellation, and whether it should be regarded as a species of noun, I leave to the decision of such as desire to express their opinion: it is a matter of no importance.

¹ Generally interpreted collective; but see Colson, Class. Quart. x. 1, p. 17; fasciatim = in bundles (from fascis).

Boys should begin by learning to decline nouns and conjugate verbs: otherwise they will never be able to understand the next subject of study. This admonition would be superfluous but for the fact that most teachers, misled by a desire to show rapid progress, begin with what should really come at the end: their passion for displaying their pupils' talents

QUINTILIAN

23 speciosiora malunt, compendio morarentur. Atqui si quis et didicerit satis et (quod non minus deesse interim solet) voluerit docere quae didicit, non erit contentus tradere in nominibus tria genera et quae 24 sunt duobus omnibusve communia. Nec statim diligentem putabo, qui promiscua, quae ἐπίκοινα dicuntur, ostenderit, in quibus sexus uterque per alterum apparet; aut quae feminina positione mares aut neutrali feminas significant, qualia sunt Murena 25 et Glycerium. Scrutabitur ille praeceptor acer atque subtilis origines nominum, quae ex habitu corporis Rufos Longosque fecerunt; ubi erit aliud secretius, Sullae, Burri, Galbae, Plauti, Pausae, Scauri taliaque; et ex casu nascentium; hic Agrippa et Opiter et Cordus et Postumus erunt; et ex iis, quae post natos eveniunt, unde Vopiscus. Iam Cottae, Scipiones, 26 Laenates, Serani sunt ex variis causis. Gentes quo-que ac loca et alia multa reperias inter nominum causas. In servis iam intercidit illud genus, quod ducebatur a domino, unde Marcipores Publiporesque.
 Quaerat etiam, sitne apud Graecos vis quaedam

¹ Sulla = ? spindleshanks (surula). Burrus = red. Galba = caterpillar. Plantus = flat-footed. Pansa = splay-footed. Scaurus = with swollen ankles. Agrippa = born feet foremost. Opiter = one whose father died while his grandfather still lived. Cordus = late-born. Postumus = last-born, or born after the father's death. Vopiscus = a twin born alive in connexion with the more imposing aspects of their work serves but to delay progress and their short cut to knowledge merely lengthens the journey. And yet a teacher who has acquired 23 sufficient knowledge himself and is ready to teach what he has learned—and such readiness is all too rare—will not be content with stating that nouns have three genders or with mentioning those which are common to two or all three together. Nor 24 again shall I be in a hurry to regard it as a proof of real diligence, if he points out that there are irregular nouns of the kind called epicene by the Greeks, in which one gender implies both, or which in spite of being feminine or neuter in form indicate males or females respectively, as for instance Muraena and Glycerium. A really keen and intelligent teacher 25 will inquire into the origin of names derived from physical characteristics, such as Rufus or Longus, whenever their meaning is obscure, as in the case of Sulla, Burrus, Galba, Plautus, Pansa, Scaurus and the like; of names derived from accidents of birth such as Agrippa, Opiter, Cordus and Postumus, and again of names given after birth such as Fopiscus. Then there are names such as Cotta, Scipio, Laenas or Seranus,¹ which originated in various ways. It will also be found 26 that names are frequently derived from races, places and many other causes. Further there are obsolete slave-names such as Marcipor or *Publipor*² derived from the names of their owners. The teacher must also inquire whether there is not room for a sixth after the premature birth and death of the other. Scipio = staff. Laenas from lacna (cloak). Seranus = the sower. Cotta uncertain.

² i.e. Marcipuer, Publipuer.

QUINTILIAN

sexti casus et apud nos quoque septimi. Nam cum dico hasta percussi, non utor ablativi natura; nec, si 27 idem Graece dicam, dativi. Sed in verbis quoque quis est adeo imperitus, ut ignoret genera et qualitates et personas et numeros? Litterarii paene ista sunt ludi et trivialis scientiae. Iam quosdam illa turbabunt, quae declinationibus non tenentur. Nam et quaedam participia an verba an appellationes sint, dubitari potest, quia aliud alio loco valent, ut 28 lectum et sapiens et quaedam verba appellationibus similia, ut fraudator, nutritor. Iam itur in antiquam silvam nonne propriae eniusdam rationis est? nam quod initium eius invenias? cui simile pletur. Accipinus aliter, ut panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi, aliter ut totis usque adeo turbatur agris. Est etiam quidam tertius modus, ut urbs habitatur, unde 29 et campus curritur, mare navigatur. Pransus quoque ac potus diversum valet quam indicat. Quid? quod multa verba non totum declinationis ordinem ferunt?
 Quaedam etiam mutantur ut fero in praeterito, quaedam tertiae demum personae figura dicuntur ut

¹ lectum may be acc. of lectus, "bed," or supine or past part. pass. of legere, "to read"; sapiens may be pres. part. of sapere, "to know," or an adj. = "wise"; fraudator and nutritor are 2nd and 3rd pers. sing. fut. imper. pass. of fraudo and nutrio.

² Aen. vi. 179: "They go into the ancient wood."

case in Greek and a seventh in Latin. For when I say "wounded by a spear," the case is not a true ablative in Latin nor a true dative in Greek. Again 27 if we turn to verbs, who is so ill-educated as not to be familiar with their various kinds and qualities, their different persons and numbers. Such subjects belong to the elementary school and the rudiments of knowledge. Some, however, will find points undetermined by inflexion somewhat perplexing. For there are certain participles, about which there may be doubts as to whether they are really nouns or verbs, since their meaning varies with their use, as for example lectum and sapiens, while there are other verbs which resemble nouns, 28 such as fraudator and nutritor.¹ Again *itur in antiquam silvam*² is a peculiar usage. For there is no subject to serve as a starting point: fletur is a similar example. The passive may be used in different ways as for instance in

*panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi*³ and in

totis usque adeo turbatur agris.⁴

Yet a third usage is found in nrbs habitatnr, whence we get phrases such as campus curritnr and mare navigatnr. Pransus and *potus*⁵ have a meaning which does 29 not correspond to their form. And what of those verbs which are only partially conjugated? Some (as for instance fero) even suffer an entire change in the perfect. Others are used only in the third

³ Aen. x. 1: "Meanwhile the house of almighty Olympus is opened."

⁴ Ecl. i. 11: "There is such confusion in all the fields."

⁵ "Having dined," "having drunk." Active in sense, passive in form.

QUINTILIAN

licet, piget, quaedam simile quiddam patiuntur vocabulis quae in adverbium transeunt? Nam ut noctu et diu ita dictu factuque. Sunt enim haec quoque verba participialia quidem, non tamen qualia dicto factoque.

V. Iam cum omnis oratio tris habeat virtutes, ut emendata, ut dilucida, ut ornata sit (quia dicere apte, quod est praecipuum, plerique ornatui subiiciunt), totidem vitia, quae sunt supra dictis contraria, emendate loquendi regulam, quae grammatices prior pars est, examinet. Haec exigitur verbis aut singulis aut pluribus. Verba nunc generaliter accipi volo, nam duplex eorum intellectus est; alter, qui omnia per quae sermo nectitur significat, ut apud Horatium: verbaque provisam rem non invita sequentur; alter, in quo est una pars orationis, lego, scribo. Quam vitantes ambiguitatem quidam dicere maluerunt voces, locutiones, dictiones.
3 Singula sunt aut nostra aut peregrina, aut simplicia aut composita, aut propria aut translata, aut usitata aut ficta.

Uni verbo vitium saepius quam virtus inest. Licet enim dicamus aliquod proprium, speciosum, sublime: nihil tamen horum nisi in complexu loquendi serieque contingit; laudamus enim verba 4 rebus bene accommodata. Sola est, quae notari person, such as licet and piget, while some resemble nouns tending to acquire an adverbial meaning; for we say dictu and *factu*¹ as we say noctu and diu, since these words are participial though quite different from dicto and facto.

V. Style has three kinds of excellence, correctness, lucidity and elegance (for many include the all-important quality of appropriateness under the heading of elegance). Its faults are likewise threefold, namely the opposites of these excellences. The teacher of literature therefore must study the rules for correctness of speech, these constituting the first part of his art. The observance of these rules 2 is concerned with either one or more words. I must now be understood to use verbum in its most general sense. It has of course two meanings; the one covers all the parts of which language is composed, as in the line of Horace :

“Once supply the thought,
And words will follow swift as soon as sought” ;²

the other restricts it to a part of speech such as lego and scribo. To avoid this ambiguity, some authorities prefer the terms voces, locutiones, dictiones. Individual words will either be native or imported, 3 simple or compound, literal or metaphorical, in current use or newly-coined.

A single word is more likely to be faulty than to possess any intrinsic merit. For though we may speak of a word as appropriate, distinguished or sublime, it can possess none of these properties save in relation to connected and consecutive speech; since when we praise words, we do so because they suit the matter. There is only one excellence that 4

¹ Supines.

² Ars Poetica, 311.

QUINTILIAN

possit velut vocalitas, quae εὐφωνία dicitur; cuius in eo delectus est, ut inter duo, quae idem significant ac tantundem valent, quod melius sonet malis.

- 5 Prima barbarismi ac soloecismi foeditas absit. Sed quia interim excusantur haec vitia aut consuetudine aut auctoritate aut vetustate aut denique vicinitate virtutum (nam saepe a figuris ea separare difficile est), ne qua tam lubrica observatio fallat, acriter se in illud tenue discrimen grammaticus intendat, de quo nos latius ibi loquemur, ubi de figuris orationis
- 6 tractandum erit. Interim vitium, quod fit in singulis verbis, sit barbarismus. Occurrat mihi forsitan aliquis, quid hic promisso tanti operis dignum? aut quis hoc nescit, alios barbarismos scribendo fieri alios loquendo;—quia, quod male scribitur, male etiam dici necesse est; quae vitiose dixeris, non utique et scripto peccant—illud prius adiectione, detractone, immutatione, transmutatione, hoc secundum divisione, complexione, aspiratione, sono
- 7 contineri? Sed ut parva sint haec, pueri docentur adhuc, et grammaticos officii sui commonemus. Ex quibus si quis erit plane impolitus et vestibulum modo artis huius ingressus, intra haec, quae pro-

¹ cp. § 40.

can be isolated for consideration, namely euphony, the Greek term for our uocalitas: that is to say that, when we are confronted with making a choice between two exact synonyms, we must select that which sounds best.

In the first place barbarisms and solecisms must not 5 be allowed to intrude their offensive presence. These blemishes are however pardoned at times, because we have become accustomed to them or because they have age or authority in their favour or are near akin to positive excellences, since it is often difficult to distinguish such blemishes from figures of speech.¹ The teacher therefore, that such slippery customers may not elude detection, must seek to acquire a delicate discrimination; but of this I will speak later when I come to discuss figures of speech. For the present 6
 I will define barbarism as an offence occurring in connexion with single words. Some of my readers may object that such a topic is beneath the dignity of so ambitious a work. But who does not know that some barbarisms occur in writing, others in speaking? For although what is incorrect in writing will also be incorrect in speech, the converse is not necessarily true, inasmuch as mistakes in writing are caused by addition or omission, substitution or transposition, while mistakes in speaking are due to separation or combination of syllables, to aspiration or other errors of sound. Trivial as these 7 points may seem, our boys are still at school and I am reminding their instructors of their duty. And if one of our teachers is lacking in education and has done no more than set foot in the outer courts of his art, he will have to confine himself to the rules published in the elementary text-books: the fitentium commentariolis vulgata sunt, consistet, doctiores multa adiicient, vel hoc primum, quod 8 barbarismum pluribus modis accipimus. Unum gente, quale est, si quis Afrum vel Hispanum Latinae orationi nomen inserat, ut ferrum, quo rotae vinciuntur, dici solet cantus, quanquam eo tanquam recepto utitur Persius; sicut Catullus plexenum circa Padum invenit, et in oratione Labieni (sive illa Cornelii Galli est) in Pollionem casamo adsectator e Gallia ductum est; nam mas-trucam, quod Sardum est, irridens Cicero ex in-

QUINTILIAN

9 dustria dixit. Alterum genus barbarismi accipimus, quod fit animi natura, ut is, a quo insolenter quid aut minaciter aut crudeliter dictum sit, barbare
10 locutus existimatur. Tertium est illud vitium barbarismi, cuius exempla vulgo sunt plurima, sibi etiam quisque fingere potest, ut verbo, cui libebit, adiiciat litteram syllabamve vel detrahat, aut aliam pro alia
11 aut eandem alio quam rectum est loco ponat. Sed quidam fere in iactationem eruditionis sumere illa ex poetis solent et auctores quos praelegunt criminantur. Scire autem debet puer, haec apud scriptores carminum aut venia digna aut etiam laude duci, 12 potiusque illa docendi erunt minus vulgata. Nam duos in uno nomine faciebat barbarismos Tunga Placentinus (si reprehendenti Hortensio credimus) preculam pro pergula dicens, et immutatione cum c pro g uteretur, et transmutatione cum r praeponeret e antecedenti. At in eiusdem vitii gemina-

more learned teacher on the other hand will be in a position to go much further: first of all, for example, he will point out that there are many different kinds of barbarism. One kind is due to race, such as the insertion of a Spanish or African term; for instance the iron tire of a wheel is called cantus,¹ though Persius uses it as established in the Latin language; Catullus picked up *plexenum*² (a box) in the valley of the Po, while the author of the in Pollionem, be he Labienus or Cornelius Gallus, imported casamo from Gaul in the sense of "follower." As for mastruca,³ which is Sardinian for a "rough coat," it is introduced by Cicero merely as an object of derision. Another kind of barbarism proceeds from the speaker's temper: for instance, we regard it as barbarous if a speaker use cruel or brutal language. A third and very common kind, of which anyone may fashion examples for himself, consists in the addition or omission of a letter or syllable, or in the substitution of one for another or in placing one where it has no right to be. Some teachers however, to display their learning, are in the habit of picking out examples of barbarism from the poets and attacking the authors whom they are expounding for using such words. A boy should however realize that in poets such peculiarities are pardonable or even praiseworthy, and should therefore be taught less common instances. For Tinga of Placentia, if we may believe Hortensius who takes him to task for it, committed two barbarisms in one word by saying precula for pergula: that is to say he substituted c for g, and transposed r and e. On the other hand

¹ Pers. v. 71. Usually, though wrongly, spelt canthus.

² Cat. xevii. 6.

³ In Or. pro Scauro.

QUINTILIAN

tione *Mettocoque Fufetioeo*¹ dicens Ennius poetico 13 iure defenditur. Sed in prosa quoque est quaedam iam recepta immutatio. Nam Cicero Canopitarum exercitum dicit, ipsi Canobon vocant; et Trasum- mennum pro Tarsumenno multi auctores, etiamsi est in eo transmutatio, vindicaverunt. Similiter alia; nam sive est adsentior, Sisenna dixit adsentio multique et hunc et analogian secuti, sive illud verum 14 est, haec quoque pars consensu defenditur. At ille pexus pinguisque doctor aut illic detractionem aut hic adiectionem putabit. Quid quod quaedam, quae singula procul dubio vitiosa sunt, iuncta sine repre-15 hensione dicuntur? Nam et dua et tre [et pondo] diversorum generum sunt barbarismi; at duapondo et trepondo usque ad nostram aetatem ab omnibus 16 dictum est, et recte dici Messala confirmat. Absurdum forsitan videatur dicere, barbarismum, quod est unius verbi vitium, fieri per numeros aut genera sicut soloeccismum: scala tamen et scopa contraque hordeu et mulsa, licet litterarum mutationem, detrac-tionem, adiectionem habeant, non alio vitiosa sunt, quam quod pluralia singulariter et singularia plu-

¹ Mettocoque Fufetioeo, Skutsch: mettioeo et furetioeo, A,
the other MSS. giving similar corruptions.

¹ The barbarism lies in the use of the old Greek termination -oco in the genitive.

² Two and three pounds in weight.

when Ennius writes Meltoeque Fufetioeo,¹ where the barbarism is twice repeated, he is defended on the plea of poetic licence. Substitution is however 13 sometimes admitted even in prose, as for instance when Cicero speaks of the army of Canopus which is locally styled Canobus, while the number of authors who have been guilty of transposition in writing Trasumennus for Tarsumennus has succeeded in standardising the error. Similar instances may be quoted. If adsentior be regarded as the correct form, we must remember that Sisenna said adsentio, and that many have followed him on the ground of analogy: on the other hand, if adsentio is the correct form, we must remember that adsentior has the support of current usage. And yet our fat fool, the fashionable 14 schoolmaster, will regard one of these forms as an example of omission or the other as an instance of addition. Again there are words which when used separately are undoubtedly incorrect, but when used in conjunction excite no unfavourable comment. For instance dua and tre are barbarisms 15 and differ in gender, but the words duapondo and *trepondo*² have persisted in common parlance down to our own day, and Messala shows that the practice is correct. It may perhaps seem absurd to 16 say that a barbarism, which is an error in a single word, may be made, like a solecism, by errors in connexion with number or gender. But take on the one hand scala (stairs) and scopa (which literally means a twig, but is used in the sense of broom) and on the other hand hordea (barley) and mulsa (mead): here we have substitution, omission and addition of letters, but the blemish consists in the former case merely in the use of singular for plural,

QUINTILIAN

raliter efferuntur; et gladia qui dixerunt, genere 17 exciderunt. Sed hoc quoque notare contentus sum, ne arti culpa quorundam pervicacium perplexae videar et ipse quaestionem addidisse.

Plus exigunt subtilitatis quae accidunt in dicendo vitia, quia exempla eorum tradi scripto non possunt, nisi cum in versus inciderunt, ut divisio Europæi Asiæi, et ei contrarium vitium, quod συναίρεσις et συναλοιφήν Graeci vocant, nos complexionem dicamus, qualis est apud P. Varronem tum te flagranti 18 deiectum fulmine Phaethon. Nam si esset prosa oratio, easdem litteras enuntiare veris syllabis licebat. Praeterea quae fiunt spatio, sive cum syl-laba correpta producitur, ut Italiam futo profugus, seu longa corripitur, ut unius ob noxam et furias, extra carmen non deprehendas; sed nec in carmine 19 vitia dicenda sunt. Illa vero non nisi aure exiguntur, quae fiunt per sonos; quanquam per aspirationem, sive adiicitur vitiose sive detrahitur, apud nos potest quaeri an in scripto sit vitium, si h littera est, non nota. Cuius quidem ratio mutata 20 cum temporibus est saepius. Parcissime ea veteres usi etiam in vocalibus, cum aedos ircosque dicebant; diu deinde servatum, ne consonantibus aspirarent,

¹ The archaic genitive as used by epic poets.

² Phæthon for Phaëthon. ³ Aen. i. 6. ⁴ Aen. i. 45.

in the latter of plural for singular. Those on the other hand who have used the word gladia are guilty of a mistake in gender. I merely mention these as instances: I do not wish anyone to think that I have added a fresh problem to a subject into which the obstinacy of pedants has already introduced confusion. 17

The faults which arise in the course of actual speaking require greater penetration on the part of the critic, since it is impossible to cite examples from writing, except in cases where they occur in poetry, as when the diphthong is divided into two syllables in Europai and *Asiai*¹; or when the opposite fault occurs, called synaeresis or synaloephe by the Greeks and complexio by ourselves: as an example I may quote the line of Publius Varro:

*tum te flugranti deiectum fulmine Phaethon.*²

If this were prose, it would be possible to give the letters their true syllabic value. I may mention as further anomalies peculiar to poetry the lengthening of a short syllable as in Italiam fato profugus,³ or the shortening of a long such as unius ob noxam et furias; ⁴ but in poetry we cannot label these as actual faults. Errors in sound on the other hand can be detected by the ear alone; although in Latin, as regards the addition or omission of the aspirate, the question may be raised whether this is an error when it occurs in writing; for there is some doubt whether h is a letter or merely a breathing, practice having frequently varied in different ages. Older authors used it but rarely even before vowels, saying aedus or ircus, while its conjunction with consonants was for a long time avoided, as in words such as 19 20

QUINTILIAN

ut in Graccis et in trumpis; erupit brevi tempore nimius usus, ut choronae, chenturiones, praechones adhuc quibusdam in inscriptionibus maneat, qua 21 de re Catulli nobile epigramma est. Inde durat ad nos usque vehementer et comprehendere et mih, nam mehe quoque pro me apud antiquos tragœdiarum praecipue scriptores in veteribus libris invenimus.

22 Adhuc difficilior observatio est per tenores (quos quidem ab antiquis dictos tonores comperi videlicet declinato a Graecis verbo, qui τόνους dicunt), vel accentus, quas Graeci προσῳδίαις vocant, cum acuta et gravis alia pro alia ponuntur, ut in hoc Camillus, 23 si acuitur prima: aut gravis pro flexa, ut Cethegus, et hic prima acuta (nam sic media mutatur); aut flexa pro gravi, ut *Appi*¹ circumducta sequenti, quam 24 flectentes dupliciter peccant. Sed id saepius in Graecis nominibus accidit, ut Alrei, quem nobis iuvenibus doctissimi senes acuta prima dicere solebant, ut necessario secunda gravis esset, item Nerei Tereique. Haec de accentibus tradita.

¹ aut Appi, Spabling: aut apice, A: ut, B.

¹ Cat. lxxxi.

² The Roman accent was a stress, while the Greek was a pitch accent, though by the Christian era tending to change into stress. Roman grammarians borrow the Greek terminology and speak of accents in terms of pitch. The explanation of this is probably that the Roman stress accent was Graccus or triumpus. Then for a short time it broke out into excessive use, witness such spelling as chorona, chenturia or praecho, which may still be read in certain inscriptions: the well-known epigram of Catullus¹ will be remembered in this connexion. The spellings 21 vehementer, comprehendere and mihi have lasted to our own day: and among early writers, especially of tragedy, we actually find mehe for me in the older MSS.

It is still more difficult to detect errors of tenor or 22 tone (I note that old writers spell the word tonor, as derived from the Greek τόνος), or of accent, styled prosody by the Greeks, such as the substitution of the acute accent for the grave or the grave for the acute: such an example would be the placing of the acute accent on the first syllable of Camillus, or the 23 substitution of the grave for the circumflex in Cethégus, an error which results in the alteration of the quantity of the middle syllable, since it means making the first syllable acute; or again the substitution of the circumflex for the grave on the second syllable of Appi, where the contraction of two syllables into one circumflexed syllable involves a double error. This, however, occurs far more fre- 24 quently in Greek words such as Atrei, which in our young days was pronounced by the most learned of our elders with an acute accent on the first syllable, necessitating a grave accent on the second; the same remark applies to Nerei and Terei. Such has been the tradition as regards accents.² accompanied by an elevation of the pitch. Here the acute accent certainly implies stress; the grave implies a drop in pitch and the absence of stress. The circumflex means that the voice rises slightly and then falls slightly, but implies stress. See Lindsay, Latin Language, pp. 148-153.

QUINTILIAN

25 Ceterum scio iam quosdam eruditos, nonnullos etiam grammaticos sic docere ac loqui, ut propter quaedam vocum discrimina verbum interim acuto 26 sono finiant, ut in illis quae circum littora, circum piscosos scopulos, ne, si gravem posuerint secundam, circus dici videatur non circuitus. Itemque cum quale interrogantes gravi, comparantes acuto tenore concludunt; quod tamen in adverbiiis fere solis ac pronomiibus vindicant, in ceteris veterem legem 27 sequuntur. Mihi videtur condicionem mutare, quod his locis verba coniungimus. Nam cum dico circum littora, tanquam unum enuntio dissimulata distinctione, itaque tanquam in una voce una est acuta, quod idem accidit in illo Troiae qui primus ab oris.
 28 Evenit, ut metri quoque condicio mutet accentum, ut Pecudes pictaeque volucres; nam volucres media acuta legam, quia, etsi natura brevis, tamen positione longa est, ne faciat iambum, quem non recipit 29 versus herous. Separata vero haec a praecepto non recedent, aut si consuetudo vicerit, vetus lex

¹ Aen. iv. 254.

² i.e. that circum is the acc. of circus, and not the adverb indicating circuit.

³ Aen. i. 1: qui coalesces with primus, ab with oris.

⁴ Georg. iii. 243.

Still I am well aware that certain learned men 25 and some professed teachers of literature, to ensure that certain words may be kept distinct, sometimes place an acute accent on the last syllable, both when they are teaching and in ordinary speech: as, for instance, in the following passage:

*quae circum litora, circum piscosos scopulos,*¹

where they make the last syllable of circum acute on 26 the ground that, if that syllable were given the grave accent, it might be thought that they meant circus not circuitus.² Similarly when quae is interrogative, they give the final syllable a grave accent, but when using it in a comparison, make it acute. This practice, however, they restrict almost entirely to adverbs and pronouns; in other cases they follow the old usage. Personally I think that in such phrases 27 as these the circumstances are almost entirely altered by the fact that we join two words together. For when I say circum litora I pronounce the phrase as one word, concealing the fact that it is composed of two, consequently it contains but one acute accent, as though it were a single word. The same thing occurs in the phrase Troiae qui primus ab oris.³ 28 It sometimes happens that the accent is altered by the metre as in *pecudes pictaeque volucres*⁴; for I shall read volucres with the acute on the middle syllable, because, although that syllable is short by nature, it is long by position: else the last two syllables would form an iambus, which its position in the hexameter does not allow. But these same words, 29 if separated, will form no exception to the rule: or if the custom under discussion prevails, the old law

QUINTILIAN

sermonis abolebitur; cuius difficilior apud Graecos observatio est, quia plura illis loquendi genera, quas διαλέκτους vocant, et quod alia vitiosum interim alia rectum est; apud nos vero brevissima ratio.

30 Namque in omni voce acuta intra numerum trium syllabarum continetur, sive eae sunt in verbo solae sive ultimae, et in iis aut proxima extremae aut ab ea tertia. Trium porro, de quibus loquor, media longa aut acuta aut flexa erit; eodem loco brevis utique gravem habebit sonum, ideoque positam ante

31 se id est ab ultima tertiam acuet. Est autem in omni voce utique acuta sed nunquam plus una nec unquam ultima ideoque in dissyllabis prior. Praeterea nunquam in eadem flexa et acuta, quoniam est in flexa et acuta, itaque neutra claudet vocem Latinam. Ea vero, quae sunt syllabae unius, erunt acuta aut flexa, ne sit aliqua

32 vox sine acuta. Et illa per sonos accidunt, quae demonstrari scripto non possunt, vitia oris et linguae: ιωτακισμοὺς et λαμβδακισμοὺς et ισχνότητας et πλατειασμοὺς feliciores fingendis nominibus Graeci vocant, sicut κοιλοστομίαν, cum vox quasi in recessu

33 oris auditur. Sunt etiam proprii quidam et inenarrabiles soni, quibus nonnunquam nationes reprehendimus. Remotis igitur omnibus, de quibus supra

¹ Iotacism = doubling the i sound, c.g. Troiia for Troia; lambdacism = doubling the l.

of the language will disappear. (This law is more difficult for the Greeks to observe, because they have several dialects, as they call them, and what is wrong in one may be right in another.) But with us the rule is simplicity itself. For in every word 30 the acute accent is restricted to three syllables, whether these be the only syllables in the word or the three last, and will fall either on the penultimate or the antepenultimate. The middle of the three syllables of which I speak will be acute or circumflexed, if long, while if it be short, it will have a grave accent and the acute will be thrown back to the preceding syllable, that is to say the antepenultimate. Every word has an acute accent, but 31 never more than one. Further the acute never falls on the last syllable and therefore in dissyllabic words marks the first syllable. Moreover the acute accent and the circumflex are never found in one and the same word, since the circumflex itself contains an acute accent. Neither the circumflex nor the acute, therefore, will ever be found in the last syllable of a Latin word, with this exception, that monosyllables must either be acute or circumflexed; otherwise we should find words without an acute accent at all. There are also faults of sound, which we cannot reproduce in writing, as they spring from defects of the voice and tongue. The Greeks who are happier in inventing names than we are call them iotacisms, lambdacisms,¹ ἰσχνότητες (attenuations) and πλατειασμοί (broadenings); they also use the term κοιλοστομία, when the voice seems to proceed from the depths of the mouth. There are also certain peculiar and 33 indescribable sounds for which we sometimes take whole nations to fault. To sum up then, if all the faults of which we have just spoken be avoided, dixi, vitium erit illa quae vocatur ὀρθοέπεια, id est emendata cum suavitate vocum explanatio: nam sic accipi potest recta.

QUINTILIAN

- 34 Cetera vitia omnia ex pluribus vocibus sunt, quorum est soloecismus, quanquam circa hoc quoque disputatum est. Nam etiam qui complexu orationis accidere eum confitentur, quia tamen unius emendatione verbi corrigi possit, in verbo esse vitium non in 35 sermone contendunt; cum, sive amarae corticis seu medio cortice per genus facit soloecismum (quorum neutrum quidem reprehendo, cum sit utriusque Vergilius auctor; sed fingamus utrumlibet non recte dictum), mutatio vocis alterius, in qua vitium erat, rectam loquendi rationem sit redditura, ut amari corticis fiat vel media cortice. Quod manifestae calumniae est; neutrum enim vitiosum est separatim, sed compositione peccatur, quae iam sermonis 36 est. Illud eruditius quaeritur, an in singulis quoque verbis possit fieri soloecismus, uti si unum quis ad se vocans dicat venite, aut si plures a se dimittens ita loquatur abi aut discede. Nec non cum responsum ab interrogante dissentit, ut si dicenti Quem video? ita occurras Ego. In gestu etiam nonnulli putant idem vitium inesse, cum aliud voce aliud nutu vel 37 manu demonstratur. Huic opinioni neque omnino

¹ Ecl. vi. 62.

² Georg. ii. 74.

we shall be in possession of the Greek ὀρθοέπεια, that is to say, an exact and pleasing articulation; for that is what we mean when we speak of correct pronunciation.

All other faults in speaking are concerned with 34 more words than one; among this class of faults is the solecism, although there have been controversies about this as well. For even those who acknowledge that it occurs in connected speech, argue that, since it can be corrected by the alteration of one word, the fault lies in the word and not in the phrase or sentence. For example whether *amarae corticis*¹ or 35 *medio cortice*² contains a solecism in gender (and personally I object to neither, as Vergil is the author of both; however, for the sake of argument let us assume that one of the two is incorrect), still whichever phrase is incorrect, it can be set right by the alteration of the word in which the fault lies: that is to say we can emend either to amari corticis or media cortice. But it is obvious that these critics misrepresent the case. For neither word is faulty in itself; the error arises from its association with another word. The fault therefore lies in the phrase. Those who raise the question as to whether 36 a solecism can arise in a single word show greater intelligence. Is it for instance a solecism if a man when calling a single person to him says venite, or in dismissing several persons says abi or discede? Or again if the answer does not correspond to the question: suppose, for example, when someone said to you "Whom do I see?", you were to reply "I." Some too think it a solecism if the spoken word is contradicted by the motion of hand or head. I do 37 not entirely concur with this view nor yet do I

QUINTILIAN

accedo neque plane dissentio. Nam id fateor accidere voce una non tamen aliter, quam si sit aliquid, quod vim alterius vocis obtineat, ad quod vox illa referatur, ut soloecismus ex complexu fiat eorum, quibus res significantur et voluntas osten-38 ditur. Atque ut omnem effugiam cavillationem, sit aliquando in uno verbo nunquam in solo verbo.
 Per quot autem et per quas accidat species, non satis convenit. Qui plenissime, quadripertitam volunt esse rationem nec aliam quam barbarismi, ut fiat adiectione nam enim, de susum, in Alexandriam; 39 detractio ambulo viam, Aegypto venio, ne hoc fecit; transmutatione, qua ordo turbatur, quoque ego, enim hoc voluit, autem non habuit. Ex quo genere an sit igitur initio sermonis positum, dubitari potest, quia maximos auctores in diversa fuisse opinione video, cum apud alios sit etiam frequens, apud alios 40 nunquam reperiatur. Haec tria genera quidam deducunt a soloecismo, et adiectionis vitium πλεονα- σμόν, detractio ἔλλειψιν, inversionis ἀναστροφὴν vocant, quae si in speciem soloecismi cadat, ὑπερβατὸν 41 quoque eodem appellari modo posse. Immutatio sine controversia est, cum aliud pro alio ponitur.
 Id per omnes orationis partes deprehendimus, fre-quentissime in verbo, quia plurima huic accidunt;

¹ i.e. nam cannot be coupled with enim; de being a preposition cannot govern an adverb ("from above"); in is not required with Alexandriam, which is the name of a wholly dissent. I admit that a solecism may occur in a single word, but with this proviso: there must be something else equivalent to another word, to which the word, in which the error lies, can be referred, so that the solecism arises from the faulty connexion of those symbols by which facts are expressed and purpose indicated. To avoid all sus- 38 picion of quibbling, I will say that a solecism may occur in one word, but never in a word in isolation. There is, however, some controversy as to the number and nature of the different kinds of solecism. Those who have dealt with the subject most fully make a fourfold division, identical with that which is made in the case of barbarisms: solecisms are brought about by addition, for instance in phrases such as nam enim, de susum, in Alexandriam; by 39 omission, in phrases such as ambulo viam, Aegypto venio, or ne hoc fecit: and by transposition as in quoque ego, enim hoc voluit, autem non habuit.¹ Under this last head comes the question whether igitur can be placed first in a sentence: for I note that authors of the first rank disagree on this point, some of them frequently placing it in that position, others never. Some distinguish these three classes of 40 error from the solecism, styling addition a pleonasm, omission an ellipse, and transposition anastrophe: and they assert that if anastrophe is a solecism, hyperbaton might also be so called. About substitution, that is 41 when one word is used instead of another, there is no dispute. It is an error which we may detect in connexion with all the parts of speech, but most frequently in the verb, because it has greater variety town. Quoque, enim and autem cannot come first in a sentence Ambulo per viam, ab Aegypto venio, ne hoc quidem f. cit would be the correct Latin.

QUINTILIAN

ideoque in eo fiunt soloecismi per genera, tempora, personas, modos, sive cui status eos dici seu qualitates placet, vel sex vel, ut alii volunt, octo;—nam totidem vitiorum erunt formae, in quot species eorum quidque, de quibus supra dictum est, diviseris—

12 praeterea numeros, in quibus nos singularem ac pluralem habemus Graeci et δὐϊκόρ. Quanquam fuerunt, qui nobis quoque adicerent dualem scripsere, legere; quod evitandae asperitatis gratia mollitum est, ut apud veteres pro male mereris, male merere. Ideoque quod vocant dualem, in illo solo genere consistit, cum apud Graecos et in verbi tota fere ratione et in nominibus deprehendatur, et sic quoque raris-

43 simus eius sit usus, apud nostrorum vero neminem haec observatio reperitur, quin e contrario devenere locos et conticuere omnes et consedere duces aperte nos doceant, nihil horum ad duos pertinere; dixere quoque, quamquam id Antonius Rufus ex diverso ponit exemplum, de pluribus patronis praeco pro-

44 nuntiet. Quid? non Livius circa initia statim primi libri, Tenuere, inquit, arcem Sabini? et mox, in adversum Romani subiere? Sed quem potius ego quam M. Tullium sequar? qui in Oratore, Non

¹ Aen. i. 369: "They came to the places."

² Aen. ii. 1: "All were silent."

³ Ovid, Mét. xiii. 4: "The chiefs sat them down."

⁴ Dixere, "they have spoken," was said when the advocates had finished their pleading.

than any other : consequently in connexion with the verb we get solecisms of gender, tense, person and mood (or "states" or "qualities" if you prefer either of these terms), be these types of error six in number, as some assert, or eight as is insisted by others (for the number of the forms of solecism will depend on the number of subdivisions which you assign to the parts of speech of which we have just spoken). Further there are solecisms of number ; now Latin 42 has two numbers, singular and plural, while Greek possesses a third, namely the dual. There have however been some who have given us a dual as well in words such as scripsere and legere, in which as a matter of fact the final syllable has been softened to avoid harshness, just as in old writers we find male merere for male mereris. Consequently what they assert to be a dual is concerned solely with this one class of termination, whereas in Greek it is found throughout the whole structure of the verb and in nouns as well, though even then it is but rarely used. But we find not a trace of such a 43 usage in any Latin author. On the contrary phrases such as devenere locos,¹ conticuere omnes,² and *consedere duces*³ clearly prove that they have nothing to do with the dual. Moreover direre,⁴ although Antonius Rufus cites it as proof to the contrary, is often used by the usher in the courts to denote more than two advocates. Again, does not 44 Livy near the beginning of his first book write *tenuere arcem Sabini*⁵ and later in adversum Romani subiere ? But I can produce still better authority. For Cicero in his Orator says, "I have no objection

⁵ Liv. I. xii.: "The Sabines held the citadel." "The Romans marched up the slope against them."

QUINTILIAN

reprehendo, inquit, scripsere; scripserunt esse verius 45 sentio. Similiter in vocabulis et nominibus fit soloe-cismus genere, numero, proprie autem casibus, quidquid horum alteri succedet. Huic parti subiun-gatur licet per comparationes et superlationes, itemque in quibus patrium pro possessivo dicitur vel 46 contra. Nam vitium, quod fit per quantitatem ut magnum peculiolum, erunt qui soloeccismum putent quia pro nomine integro positum sit deminutum.
 Ego dubito, an id improprium potius appellem, significatione enim deerrat; soloeccismi porro vitium non 47 est in sensu sed in complexu. In participio per genus et casum, ut in vocabulo, per tempora, ut in verbo, per numerum, ut in utroque, peccatur. Pronomen quoque genus, numerum, casus habet, quae 48 omnia recipiunt huiusmodi errorem. Fiunt soloecismi et quidem plurimi per partes orationis; sed id tradere satis non est, ne ita demum vitium esse credat puer, si pro alia ponatur alia, ut verbum, ubi nomen esse debuerit, vel adverbium, ubi pronomen, 49 et similia. Nam sunt quaedam cognata, ut dicunt, id est eiusdem generis, in quibus, qui alia specie quam oportet utetur, non minus quam ipso genere 50 permutato deliquerit. Nam et an et aut coniuctiones sunt, male tamen interrogas, hic aut ille sit;

¹ Orat. xlvii. 157.

² Lit. "A great little fortune."

³ e.g. intus for intro, the genus being adverbs of place.

to the form scripsere, though I regard scripserunt as the more correct." ¹ Similarly in vocables and 45 nouns solecisms occur in connexion with gender, number and more especially case, by substitution of one for another. To these may be added solecisms in the use of comparatives and superlatives, or the employment of patronymics instead of possessives and vice versa. As for solecisms connected 46 with expressions of quantity, there are some who will regard phrases such as magnum peculiolum ² as a solecism, because the diminutive is used instead of the ordinary noun, which implies no diminution. I think I should call it a misuse of the diminutive rather than a solecism; for it is an error of sense, whereas solecisms are not errors of sense, but rather faulty combinations of words. As regards participles, 47 solecisms occur in case and gender as with nouns, in tense as with verbs, and in number as in both.
The pronoun admits of solecisms in gender, number and case. Solecisms also occur with great fre- 48 quency in connexion with parts of speech: but a bare statement on this point is not sufficient, as it may lead a boy to think that such error consists only in the substitution of one part of speech for another, as for instance if a verb is placed where we require a noun, or an adverb takes the place of a pronoun and so on. For there are 49 some nouns which are cognate, that is to say of the same genus, and he who uses the wrong species ³ in connexion with one of these will be guilty of the same offence as if he were to change the genus.
Thus an and aut are conjunctions, but it would be 50 bad Latin to say in a question hic aut ille sit ⁴; ne and ⁴ For hic an ille sit?

QUINTILIAN

et ne ac non adverbia; qui tamen dicat pro illo "ne feceris" "non feceris," in idem incidat vitium, quia alterum negandi est alterum vetandi. Hoc amplius intro et intus loci adverbia, eo tamen intus et intro 51 sum soloecismi sunt. Eadem in diversitate pronominum, interiectionum, praepositionum accident; est etiam soloecismus in oratione comprehensionis unius sequentium ac priorum inter se inconueniens 52 positio. Quaedam tamen et faciem soloecismi habent et dici vitiosa non possunt, ut tragoedia Thyestes et ludi Floralia ac Megalensia, quanquam haec sequenti tempore intereiderunt nunquam aliter a veteribus dicta. Schemata igitur nominabuntur, frequentiora quidem apud poetas sed oratoribus 53 quoque permissa. Verum schema fere habebit aliquam rationem, ut docebimus eo, quem paulo ante promisimus, loco. Sed id quoque, quod schema vocatur, si ab aliquo per imprudentiam 54 factum erit, soloecismi vitio non carebit. In eadem specie sunt sed schemate earent, ut supra dixi, nomina feminina, quibus mares utuntur, et neutralia, quibus feminae. Haec de soloecismo. Neque enim artem grammaticam componere aggressi sumus, sed cum in ordinem incurreret, inhonoratam transire nolimus.
55 Hoc amplius, ut institutum ordinem sequar, verba

¹ The meaning of this passage is uncertain, but the solecism in question is probably an anacoluthon.

non are adverbs : but he who says non feceris in lieu of ne feceris, is guilty of a similar mistake, since one negative denies, while the other forbids. Further intro and intus are adverbs of place, but eo intus and intro sum are solecisms. Similar errors may be 51 committed in connexion with the various kinds of pronouns, interjections and prepositions. It is also a *solecism*¹ if there is a disagreement between what precedes and what follows within the limits of a single clause. Some phrases have all the appearance 52 of a solecism and yet cannot be called faulty ; take for instance phrases such as tragoedia Thyestes or ludi Floralia and *Megalensia*² : although these are never found in later times, they are the rule in ancient writers. We will therefore style them figures and, though their use is more frequent in poets, will not deny their employment even to orators. Figures 53 however will generally have some justification, as I shall show in a later portion of this work, which I promised you a little while back.³ I must however point out that a figure, if used unwittingly, will be a solecism. In the same class, though they 54 cannot be called figures, come errors such as the use of masculine names with a female termination and feminine names with a neuter termination. I have said enough about solecisms ; for I did not set out to write a treatise on grammar, but was unwilling to slight the science by passing it by without salutation, when it met me in the course of my journey.

I therefore resume the path which I prescribed 55 for myself and point out that words are either

² Where strict grammar would require tragoedia Thyestis, ludi Florales, Megalenses. The normal usage would be simply to say Thyestes, Floralia, Megalensia.

³ I. iv. 24. The promise is fulfilled in Book IX.

QUINTILIAN

aut Latina aut peregrina sunt. Peregrina porro ex omnibus prope dixerim gentibus ut homines, ut instituta etiam multa venerunt. Taceo de Tuscis et Sabinis et Praenestinis quoque; nam ut eorum sermone utentem Vettium Lucilius insectatur, quemadmodum Pollio reprehendit in Livio Patavinitatem, licet omnia Italica pro Romanis habeam. Plurima Gallica evaluerunt ut raeda ac petorritum, quorum altero tamen Cicero altero Horatius utitur. Et mappam circo quoque usitatum nomen Poeni sibi vindicant, et gurdos, quos pro stolidis accipit vulgus, ex Hispania duxisse originem audivi. Sed haec divisio mea ad Graecum sermonem praecipue pertinet, nam et maxima ex parte Romanus inde conversus est et confessis quoque Graecis utimur verbis, ubi nostra desunt, sicut illi a nobis nonnunquam mutuantur. Inde illa quaestio exoritur, an eadem ratione per casus duci externa qua nostra conveniat. Ac si reperias grammaticum veterum amatorem, neget quidquam ex Latina ratione mutandum, quia, cum sit apud nos casus ablativus, quem illi non habent, parum conveniat uno casu nostro quinque Graecis uti; quin etiam laudet virtutem eorum, qui potentiores facere linguam Latinam studebant, nec alienis egere institutis fatebantur. Inde Castorem media syllaba producta pronuntiarunt, quia hoc omnibus nostris nominibus accidebat, quorum prima native or foreign. Foreign words, like our population and our institutions, have come to us from practically every nation upon earth. I pass by words of Tuscan, Sabine and Praenestine origin; for though Lucilius attacks Vettius for using them, and Pollio reproves Livy for his lapses into the dialect of Padua, I may be allowed to regard all such words as of native origin. Many Gallic words have become current coin, such as raeda (chariot) and petorritum (four-wheeled wagon) of which Cicero uses the former and Horace the latter. Mappa (napkin) again, a word familiar in connexion with the circus, is claimed by the Carthaginians, while I have heard that gurđus, which is colloquially used in the sense of "stupid," is derived from Spain. But this distinction between native and foreign words has reference chiefly to Greek. For Latin is largely derived from that language, and we use words which are admittedly Greek to express things for which we have no Latin equivalent. Similarly they at times borrow words from us. In this connexion the problem arises whether foreign words should be declined according to their language or our own. If you come across an archaistic grammarian, he will insist on absolute conformity to Latin practice, because, since we have an ablative and the Greeks have not, it would be absurd in declining a word to use five Greek cases and one Latin. He will also praise the patriotism of those who aimed at strengthening the Latin language and asserted that we had no need of foreign practices. They, therefore, pronounced Castorem with the second syllable long to bring it into conformity with all those Latin nouns which have the same termination in the nominative as positio in easdem quas Castor litteras exit; et ut Palaemo ac Telamo et Plato (nam sic eum Cicero quoque appellat) dicerentur, retinuerunt, quia Latinum, quod o et n litteris finiretur, non reperie-61 bant. Ne in a quidem atque s litteras exire temere masculina Graeca nomina recto casu patiebantur, ideoque et apud Caesium legimus Pelia cincinnatus et apud Messalam bene fecit Euthia et apud Ciceronem Hermagora, ne miremur, quod ab antiquorum pleris-62 que Aenea ut Anchisa sit dictus. Nam si ut Maccenus, Sufenas, Asprenas dicerentur, genitivo casu non e littera, sed tis syllaba terminarentur. Inde Olympo et tyranno acutam syllabam mediam dederunt, quia duabus longis insequentibus primam brevem acui 63 noster sermo non patitur. Sic genitivus Ulixi et Achilli fecit, sic alia plurima. Nunc recentiores instituerunt Graecis nominibus Graecas declinationes potius dare, quod tamen ipsum non semper fieri potest. Mihi autem placet Latinam rationem sequi, quousque patitur decor. Neque enim iam Calyp- sonem dixerim ut Iunonem, quanquam secutus antiquos, 64 C. Caesar utitur hac ratione declinandi. Sed auctoritatem consuetudo superavit. In ceteris, quae poterunt utroque modo non indecenter efferri, qui Graecam figuram sequi malet, non Latine quidem sed tamen citra reprehensionem loquetur.

QUINTILIAN

 65 Simples voces prima positione id est natura sua

Castor. They also insisted on the forms Palaemo, Telamo, and Plato (the last being adopted by Cicero), because they could not find any Latin nouns ending in -on. They were reluctant even to permit 61 masculine Greek nouns to end in -as in the nominative case, and consequently in Caelius we find Pelia cincinnatus and in Messala bene fecit Euthia, and in Cicero Hermagora.¹ So we need not be surprised that the majority of early writers said Aenea and Anchisa. For, it was urged, if such words are spelt 62 like Maecenas, Sufenas and Asprenas, the genitive should terminate in -tis not in -e. On the same principle they placed an acute accent on the middle syllable of Olympus and tyrannus, because Latin does not allow an acute accent on the first syllable if it is short and is followed by two long syllables. So too 63 we get the Latinised genitives Ulixi and Achilli together with many other analogous forms. More recent scholars have instituted the practice of giving Greek nouns their Greek declension, although this is not always possible. Personally I prefer to follow the Latin method, so far as grace of diction will permit. For I should not like to say Calypsonem on the analogy of Iunonem, although Gaius Caesar in deference to antiquity does adopt this way of declining it. Current practice has however prevailed over his authority. In 64 other words which can be declined in either way without impropriety, those who prefer it can employ the Greek form: they will not be speaking Latin, but will not on the other hand deserve censure.

Simple words are what they are in the nominative, that is, their essential nature. Compound 65

¹ This form does not actually occur in Cicero, MSS. evidently wrongly giving Hermagoras.

QUINTILIAN

constant, compositae aut praepositionibus subiunguntur ut innocens (dum ne pugnantibus inter se duabus, quale est imperterritus; alioqui possunt aliquando continuari duae ut incompositus, reconditus et quo Cicero utitur subabsurdum), aut e duobus quasi 66 eorporibus coalescunt, ut maleficus. Nam ex tribus nostrae utique linguae non concesserim; quamvis capis Cicero dicat compositum esse ex cape si vis, et inveniantur qui Lupercalia aequae tres partes orationis 67 esse contendunt, quasi luere per caprum; nam Solitaurlia iam persuasum est esse Suovetaurlia, et sane ita se habet sacrum, quale apud Homerum quoque est. Sed haec non tam ex tribus quam ex particulis trium coeunt. Ceterum etiam ex praepositione et duobus vocabulis dure videtur struxisse Pacuvius 68 Nerei repandirostrum, incurvicervicum pecus. Iunguntur autem aut ex duobus Latinis integris ut superfui, subterfugi (quanquam ex integris an composita sint quaeritur), aut ex integro et corrupto ut

¹ Quintilian regards the negative in as a preposition. His objection to imperterritus (which is used by Vergil) seems to lie in the fact that while interritus is a natural way of expressing "unterrified," it is unreasonable to negative per-territus, which means "thoroughly terrified." The presence of the intensifying per conflicts with the force of the negative in. ² Orat. xlv. 154.

³ As in Od. xi. 130. The word means sacrifices of a pig, sheep and bull.

words are formed by the prefix of a preposition as in innocens, though care must be taken that two conflicting prepositions are not prefixed as in *imperterritus*¹: if this be avoided they may in certain cases have a double prefix as in incompositus or reconditus or the Ciceronian subabsurdum. They may also be formed by what I might term the combination of two independent units, as in maleficus. For I will not admit that the combination of three 66 is possible at any rate in Latin, although Cicero asserts that *capsis*² is compounded of cape si vis, and there are to be found scholars who contend that Lupercalia likewise is a compound of three parts of speech, namely luere per caprum. As for Solitaurilia 67 it is by now universally believed to stand for Suovetaurilia, a derivation which corresponds to the actual sacrifice, which has its counterpart in Homer³ as well. But these compounds are formed not so much from three words as from the fragments of three. On the other hand Pacuvius seems to have formed compounds of a preposition and two vocables (i.e. nouns) as in

Nerei repandirostrum incurvicervicum pecus :

“The flock

Of Nereus snout-uplifted, neck-inarched” :

the effect is unpleasing. Compounds are however 68 formed from two complete Latin words, as for instance superfui and subterfugi; though in this case there is some question as to whether the words from which they are formed are complete.⁴ They may also be formed of one complete and one incomplete

⁴ i.e. if both elements are complete in themselves is the word a true compound?

QUINTILIAN

- malevolus*, aut ex corrupto et integro ut noctivagus, aut ex duobus corruptis ut pedisecus,¹ aut ex nostro et peregrino ut bielinium, aut contra ut epitogium et Anticato, aliquando et ex duobus peregrinis ut epiraedium. Nam cum sit praepositio Graeca, raeda Gallienum: neque Graecus tamen neque Gallus utitur composito; Romani suum ex alieno utroque fecerunt.
- 69 Frequenter autem praepositiones quoque compositio ista corrumpit: inde abstulit, aufugit, amisit, cum praepositio sit ab sola; et coit, cum sit praepositio
- 70 con; sic ignari et erepublica et similia. Sed res tota magis Graecos decet, nobis minus succedit, nec id fieri natura puto, sed alienis favemus; ideoque cum κρυπάρχηνα mirati simus, incurvicervicum vix a risu defendimus.
- 71 Propria sunt verba, cum id significant, in quod primo denominata sunt; translata, cum alium natura intellectum alium loco praebent. Usitatis tutius utimur, nova non sine quodam periculo fingimus. Nam si recepta sunt, modicam laudem adferunt
- 72 orationi, repudiata etiam in iocos exeunt. Audendum tamen; namque, ut Cicero ait, etiam quae primo dura visa sunt, usu molliuntur. Sed minime nobis concessa est ὀνοματοποιία; quis enim ferat, si word, as in the case of malevolus, or of one incomplete and one complete, such as noctivagus, or of two incomplete words as in pedisecus (footman), or from one Latin and one foreign word as in biclinium (a dining-couch for two), or in the reverse order as in epitogium (an upper garment) or Anticato, and sometimes even from two foreign words as in epiraedium (a thong attaching the horse to the raeda). For in this last case the preposition is Greek, while raeda is Gallic, while the compound is employed neither by Greek nor Gaul, but has been appropriated by Rome from the two foreign tongues. In 69 the case of prepositions they are frequently changed by the act of compounding: as a result we get abstulit, aufugit, amisit, though the preposition is ab, and coit, though the preposition is con. The same is true of ignavus and er. publica.¹ But compounds are 70 better suited to Greek than to Latin, though I do not think that this is due to the nature of our language: the reason rather is that we have a preference for foreign goods, and therefore receive κρυταύχην with applause, whereas we can scarce defend incurvicervicus from derisive laughter.

¹ Sometimes written as one word.

² de Nat. d. orum, I. xxxiv. 95.

Words are proper when they bear their original 71 meaning; metaphorical, when they are used in a sense different from their natural meaning. Current words are safest to use: there is a spice of danger in coining new. For if they are adopted, our style wins but small glory from them; while if they are rejected, they become a subject for jest. Still we 72 must make the venture; for as Cicero² says, use softens even these words which at first seemed harsh. On the other hand the power of onomatopocia is denied us. Who would tolerate an attempt to imitate quid simile illis merito laudatis λέγξε βίος et σίζειν ὀφθαλμός fingere audeamus? Nam ne balare quidem aut hinnire fortiter diceremus, nisi iudicio vetustatis niterentur.

QUINTILIAN

VI. Est etiam sua loquentibus observatio, sua scribentibus. Sermo constat ratione vel vetustate, auctoritate, consuetudine. Rationem praestat praecipue analogia, nonnunquam et etymologia. Vetera maiestas quaedam et, ut sic dixerim, religio com-
 2 mendat. Auctoritas ab oratoribus vel historicis peti solet; nam poetas metri necessitas excusat, nisi si quando nihil impediante in utroque modulatione pedum alterum malunt, qualia sunt, imo de stirpe recisum, et aëriae quo conguessere palumbes et silice in nuda et similia; cum summorum in eloquentia virorum iudicium pro ratione, et velut error honestus
 3 est magnos duces sequentibus. ¹ Consuetudo vero certissima loquendi magistra, utendumque plane sermone ut nummo, cui publica forma est. Omnia tamen haec exigunt aere iudicium, analogia praecipue, quam proxime ex Graeco transferentes in 4 Latinum proportionem vocaverunt. Eius haec vis est, ut id quod dubium est ad aliquid simile, de quo non quaeritur, referat et incerta certis probet. Quod efficitur duplici via: comparatione similium in extremis maxime syllabis, propter quod ea quae phrases like the much praised λίγξεν βίος,¹ "the bow twanged," and σίζεν ὀφθαλμός,² "the eye hissed"? We should even feel some qualms about using balare "to baa," and hinnire, "to whinny," if we had not the sanction of antiquity to support us.

¹ Homer, Il. iv. 125.

² Od. ix. 394.

³ Aen. xii. 208: "cut away from the lowest root." Ecl. iii. 69: "where airy doves have made their nest." Ecl. i. 15: "on the naked rock." Stirps, palumbes and silex are usually masculine.

VI. There are special rules which must be observed both by speakers and writers. Language is based on reason, antiquity, authority and usage. Reason finds its chief support in analogy and sometimes in etymology. As for antiquity, it is commended to us by the possession of a certain majesty, I might almost say sanctity. Authority as a rule we 2 derive from orators and historians. For poets, owing to the necessities of metre, are allowed a certain licence except in cases where they deliberately choose one of two expressions, when both are metrically possible, as for instance in imo de stirpe recisum and aeriae quo congersere palumbes or *silice in nuda*³ and the like. The judgment of a supreme orator is placed on the same level as reason, and even error brings no disgrace, if it result from treading in the footsteps of such distinguished guides. Usage 3 however is the surest pilot in speaking, and we should treat language as currency minted with the public stamp. But in all these cases we have need of a critical judgment, especially as regards analogy (a Greek term for which a Latin equivalent has been found in proportion). The essence of analogy 4 is the testing of all subjects of doubt by the application of some standard of comparison about which there is no question, the proof that is to say of the uncertain by reference to the certain. This can be done in two different ways: by comparing similar words, paying special attention to their final syllables sunt e singulis negantur debere rationem, et demi-5 nutione. Comparatio in nominibus aut genus deprehendit aut declinationem; genus, ut si quaeratur, fiouis masculinum sit an femininum, simile illi sit panis; declinationem, ut si veniat in dubium, hac domu dicendum sit an hac domo et domuum an 6 domorum: similia sint [domus] anus, manus. Deminutio genus modo detegit, et, ne ab eodem exemplo recedam, fiuem masculinum esse funiculus ostendit.

QUINTILIAN

 7 Eadem in verbis quoque ratio comparationis, ut, si quis antiquos secutus fervere brevi media syllaba dicat, deprehendatur vitiose loqui, quod omnia, quae e et o litteris fatendi modo terminantur, eadem, si infinitis e litteram media syllaba acceperunt, utique productam habent: prandeo pendeo spondeo, prandere
 8 pendere spondere. At quae o solam habent, dummodo per eandem litteram in infinito exeant, brevia fiunt: lego dico curro, legere dicere currere; etiamsi est apud Lucilium Fervit aqua et fervet, fervit nunc, fervet ad 9 annum. Sed, pace dicere hominis eruditissimi liceat, si fervit putat illi simile currit et legit, fervo dicetur ut lego et curro, quod nobis inauditum est. Sed non est haec vera comparatio; nam fervit est illi simile

¹ sc. because two monosyllables, unless identical, cannot have the same final syllable. ² In Book IX.

(hence monosyllables are asserted to lie outside the domain of *analogy*¹) and by the study of diminutives. Comparison of nouns will reveal either their gender 5 or their declension: in the first case, supposing the question is raised as to whether funis be masculine or feminine, panis will supply a standard of comparison: in the second case, supposing we are in doubt as to whether we should say hac domu or hac domo, domuum or domorum, the standard of comparison will be found in words such as anus or manus. Diminutives 6 merely reveal the gender: for instance, to return to a word previously used as an illustration, funiculus proves that funis is masculine. The same standard 7 may be applied in the case of verbs. For instance if it should be asserted that the middle syllable of fervere is short, we can prove this to be an error, because all verbs which in the indicative terminate in -eo, make the middle syllable of the infinitive long, if that syllable contain an e: take as examples such verbs as prandeo, pendeo, spondeo with infinitives prandēre, pendēre, spondēre. Those verbs, however, 8 which terminate in -o alone, if they form the infinitive in e, have the e short; compare lego, dico, curro, with the infinitives, legēre, dicēre, currēre. I admit that in Lucilius we find—fervit aqua et fervet: fervit nunc fervet ad annum. 2

“The water boils and boil it will; it boils and for a year will boil.”

But with all due respect to so learned a man, if he regards fervit as on the same footing as currit and legit, we shall say fervo as we say lego and curro: 9 but such a form has never yet come to my ears. But this is not a true comparison: for fervit re-

QUINTILIAN

- servit*, quam proportionem sequenti dicere necesse est
- 10 fervire ut servire. Prima quoque aliquando positio ex obliquis invenitur, ut memoria repeto convictos a me, qui reprehenderant, quod hoc verbo usus essem, pepigi; nam id quidem dixisse summos auctores confitebantur, rationem tamen negabant permittere, quia prima positio paciscor, cum haberet naturam patiendi, faceret tempore praeterito paclus sum.
- 11 Nos praeter auctoritatem oratorum atque historicorum analogia quoque dictum hoc tuebamur. Nam cum legeremus in XII tabulis ni ita pacunt, inveniebamus simile huic cadunt, inde prima positio, etiamsi vetustate exoleverat, apparebat paco ut cado, unde
- 12 non erat dubium sic pepigi nos dicere ut cecidit. Sed meminerimus non per omnia duci analogiae posse rationem, cum et sibi ipsa plurimis in locis repugnet. Quaedam sine dubio conantur eruditi defendere, ut, cum deprehensum est, lepus et lupus similia positione quantum casibus numerisque dissentiant: ista respondent non esse paria, quia lepus epicoenon sit, lupus masculinum; quanquam Varro in eo libro, quo initia Romanae urbis enarrat, lupum feminam dicit
- 13 Ennium Pictoremque Fabium secutus. Illi autem iidem, cum interrogantur, cur aper apri et pater patris faciat, illud nomen positum, hoc ad aliquid esse contendunt. Praeterea quoniam utrumque a Graeco sembles servit, and on this analogy we should say servire like servire. It is also possible in certain 10 cases to discover the present indicative of a verb from the study of its other tenses. I remember, for instance, refuting certain scholars who criticised me for using the word pepigi: for, although they admitted that it had been used by some of the best authors, they asserted that it was an irrational form because the present indicative paciscor, being passive in form, made pactus sum as its perfect. I in addition 11 to quoting the authority of orators and historians maintained that I was also supported by analogy.

 For when I found ni ita pacunt in the Twelve Tables,
 I noted that cadunt provided a parallel: it was clear therefore that the present indicative, though now obsolete, was paco on the analogy of cado, and it was further obvious that we say pepigi for just the same reason that we say cecidi. But we must 12 remember that analogy cannot be universally applied, as it is often inconsistent with itself. It is true indeed that scholars have attempted to justify certain apparent anomalies: for example, when it is noted to what an extent lepus and lupus, which resemble each other closely in the nominative, differ in the plural and in the other cases, they reply that they are not true parallels, since lepus is epicene, while lupus is masculine, although Varro in the book in which he narrates the origins of Rome, writes lupus femina, following the precedent of Ennius and Fabius Pictor. The same scholars, however, when 13 asked why aper became apri in the genitive, but pater patris, asserted that aper was an absolute, pater a relative noun. Further since both words derive from the Greek, they took refuge in the fact

QUINTILIAN

- ductum sit, ad eam rationem recurrunt, ut πατρός 14 patris, κάπρον apri faciat. Illa tamen quomodo effugient, ut, nomina quamvis feminina singulari nominativo us litteris finita nunquam genitivo casu ris syllaba terminentur, faciat tamen Venus Veneris?
 item cum es litteris finita per varios exeant genitivos, nunquam tamen eadem ris syllaba terminatos, Ceres 15 cogat dici Cereris? Quid vero? quod tota positionis eiusdem in diversos flexus eunt? cum Alba faciat Albanos et Albenses, volo volui et volavi. Nam prae-terito quidem tempore varie formari verba prima persona o littera terminata, ipsa analogia confiteatur; siquidem facit cado cecidi, spondeo sponondi, pingo pinxi, 16 lego legi, pono posui, frango fregi, laudo laudavi. Non enim, cum primum fingerentur homines, analogia demissa caelo formam loquendi dedit, sed inventa est postquam loquebantur, et notatum in sermone quid quomodo caderet. Itaque non ratione nititur sed exemplo, nec lex est loquendi sed observatio, ut ipsam analogiam nulla res alia fecerit quam consuetudo.
 17 Inhaerent tamen ei quidam molestissima diligentiae perversitate, ut audaciter potius dicant quam audacter, licet omnes oratores aliud sequantur, et emicavit non emicuit et conire non coire. His permittamus et audivisse et scivisse et tribunale et faciliter dicere;
frugalis quoque sit apud illos non frugi, nam quo alio 18 modo fiet frugalitas? Idem centum milia nummum et idem Deum ostendant duplices quoque solœcismos

¹ i.e. nummum and deum should, strictly speaking, be accus. singular.

that πατρός provides a parallel to patris and κάπρου to apri. But how will they evade the difficulty 14 that feminine nouns whose nominative singular ends in -us never make the genitive end in -ris, and yet the genitive of Venus is Veneris: again nouns ending in -es have various genitive terminations, but never end in -ris, but yet we have no choice but to make the genitive of Ceres Cereri? Again what of those words which, although identical 15 in the form of the nominative or present indicative, develop the utmost variety in their inflections. Thus from Alba we get both Albanus and Albensis, from volo both volui and volavi. Analogy itself admits that verbs whose present indicative ends in -o have a great variety of perfect formations, as for instance cado cecidi, spondeo sponendi, pingo pinxi, lego legi, pono posui, frango fregi, laudo laudavi. For 16 analogy was not sent down from heaven at the creation of mankind to frame the rules of language, but was discovered after they began to speak and to note the terminations of words used in speech. It is therefore based not on reason but on example, nor is it a law of language, but rather a practice which is observed, being in fact the offspring of usage. Some scholars, however, are so perverse and 17 obstinate in their passion for analogy, that they say audaciter in preference to audacter, the form preferred by all orators, and emicavit for emicuit, and conire for coire. We may permit them to say audivisse, scivisse, tribunale and faciliter, nor will we deprive them of frugalis as an alternative for frugi: for from what else can frugalitas be formed? They may 18 also be allowed to point out that phrases such as centum milia nummum and *fidem deum*¹ involve a esse, quando et easum mutant et numerum; nesciebamus enim ac non consuetudini et decori serviebamus, sicut in plurimis, quae M. Tullius in Oratore 19 divine ut omnia exequitur. Sed Augustus quoque in epistulis ad C. Caesarem scriptis emendat, quod is calidum dicere quam caldum malit, non quia id non sit Latinum sed quia sit odiosum et, ut ipse Graeco 20 verbo significavit, περίεργον. Atqui hanc quidam ὀρθοέπειαν solam putant, quam ego minime excludo. Quid enim tam necessarium quam recta locutio? Immo inhaerendum ei iudico, quoad licet, diu etiam mutantibus repugnandum; sed abolita atque abrogata 21 iactantiae. Multum enim litteratus, qui sine aspiratione et producta secunda syllaba salutarit (avere est enim) et calefacere dixerit potius, quam quod dicimus, et conservavisse, his adiciat face et dice et similia.

QUINTILIAN

 22 Recta est haec via; quis negat? sed adiacet et mollior et magis trita. Ego tamen non alio magis angor, quam quod obliquis casibus ducti etiam primas sibi positiones non invenire sed mutare permittunt: ut cum ebur et robur, ita dicta ac scripta summis auctoribus, in o litteram secundae syllabae transferunt, quia sit roboris et eboris, sulpur autem et guttur u litteram in genitivo servant; ideoque iecur 23 etiam et femur controversiam fecerunt. Quod non

¹ xlvi. 155.

² For havē, calfacere, conservasse.

double solecism, since they change both case and number. Of course we were in blank ignorance of the fact and were not simply conforming to usage and the demands of elegance, as in the numerous cases, with which Cicero deals magnificently, as always, in his Orator.¹ Augustus again in his letters 19 to Gaius Caesar corrects him for preferring calidus to caldus, not on the ground that the former is not Latin, but because it is displeasing and as he himself puts it in Greek περίεργον (affected). Some hold 20 that this is just a question of ὀρθοέπεια or correctness of speech, a subject to which I am far from being indifferent. For what can be more necessary than that we should speak correctly? Nay, I even think that, as far as possible, we should cling to correct forms and resist all tendencies to change. But to attempt to retain forms long obsolete and extinct is sheer impertinence and ostentatious pedantry. I would suggest that the ripe scholar, who says "ave" 21 without the aspirate and with a long e (for it comes from avēre), and uses calefacere and conservavisse in preference to the usual forms,² should also add face, dice and the like to his vocabulary. His way is the 22 right way. Who doubts it? But there is an easier and more frequented path close by. There is, however, nothing which annoys me more than their habit not merely of inferring the nominative from the oblique cases, but of actually altering it. For instance in ebur and robur, the forms regularly used both in writing and speech by the best authors, these gentlemen change their second syllable to o, because their genitives are roboris and eboris, and because sulpur and guttur keep the u in the genitive. So too femur and iecur give rise to similar controversy.

QUINTILIAN

minus est licentiosum, quam si sulpuri et gutturi subiicerent in genitivo litteram o mediam, quia esset eboris et roboris; sicut Antonius Gniphio, qui robur quidem et ebur atque etiam marmur fatetur esse, verum fieri vult ex his robura, ebura, marmura.

24 Quodsi animadverterent litterarum adfinitatem, scirent sic ab eo, quod est robur, roboris fieri, quomodo ab eo, quod est miles limes, militis limitis, iudex vindex, iudicis vindicis, et quae supra iam attigi.

25 Quid vero quod, ut dicebam, similes positiones in longe diversas figuras per obliquos casus exeunt, ut virgo Iuno, fusus lusus, cuspis puppis et mille alia? cum illud etiam accidat, ut quaedam pluraliter non dicantur, quaedam contra singulari numero, quaedam casibus careant, quaedam a primis statim positionibus

26 tota mutantur, ut Iuppiter. Quod verbis etiam accidit ut illi fero, cuius praeteritum perfectum et ulterius non invenitur. Nec plurimum refert, nulla haec an praedura sint. Nam quid progenies genitivo singulari, quid plurali spes faciet? Quomodo autem quire et ruere vel in praeterita patiendi modo vel in 27 participia transibunt? Quid de aliis dicam, eum senatus senati an senatus faciat, incertum sit? Quare mihi non invenuste dici videtur, aliud esse Latine aliud grammaticae loqui. Ac de analogia nimium.

28 Etymologia, quae verborum originem inquirat, a

Their proceedings are just as arbitrary as if they 23 were to substitute an o in the genitives of sulpur and guttur on the analogy of eboris and roboris.
 Thus Antonius Gniphio while admitting robur, ebur and even marmur to be correct, would have their plurals to be ebura, robura and marmura. If they 24 would only pay attention to the affinities existing between letters, they would realize that robur makes its genitive roboris in precisely the same way that limes, miles, iudex and uindex make their genitives militis, limitis, iudicis and uindicis, not to mention other words to which I have already referred. Do not nouns 25 which are similar in the nominative show, as I have already observed, quite different terminations in the oblique cases? Compare uirgo and Iuno, lusus and fusus, cuspis and puppis and a thousand others.
 Again some nouns are not used in the plural, while others are not used in the singular, some are inde-clinable, while others, like Jupiter, in the oblique cases entirely abandon the form of the nominative. 26
 The same is true of verbs: for instance fero disappears in the perfect and subsequent tenses. Nor does it matter greatly whether such forms are non-existent or too harsh to use. For what is the genitive singular of progenies or the genitive plural of spes?
 Or how will quire and ruere form a perfect passive or passive participles. Why should I mention other 27 words when it is even doubtful whether the genitive of senatus is senati or senatus? In view of what I have said, it seems to me that the remark, that it is one thing to speak Latin and another to speak grammar, was far from unhappy. So much for analogy, of which I have said more than enough.

Etymology inquires into the origin of words, and 28

QUINTILIAN

Cicerone dicta est notatio, quia nomen eius apud Aristotelem invenitur σίμβολον, quod est nota; nam verbum ex verbo ductum, id est veriloquium, ipse Cicero, qui finxit, reformidat. Sunt qui vim potius 29 intuiti originationem vocent. Haec habet aliquando usum necessarium, quotiens interpretatione res, de qua quaeritur, eget, ut M. Caelius se esse hominem frugi vult probare, non quia abstinens sit (nam id ne ementiri quidem poterat), sed quia utilis multis, id est fructuosus, unde sit ducta frugalitas. Ideoque in definitionibus assignatur etymologiae 30 locus. Nonnunquam etiam barbara ab emendatis conatur discernere, ut cum, Triquetram dici Siciliam an Triquedram, meridiem an medidiem oporteat quae-31 ritur, aliaque quae consuetudini serviunt. Continet autem in se multam eruditionem, sive ex Graecis orta tractemus, quae sunt plurima, praecipueque Aeolica ratione (cui est sermo noster simillimus) declinata, sive ex historiarum veterum notitia nomina hominum, locorum, gentium, urbium requiramus, unde Bruti, Publicolae, Pythici? cur Latium, Italia, Beneventum? quae Capitolium et collem Quirinalem et Argiletum appellandi ratio?
 32 Iam illa minora, in quibus maxime studiosi eius

¹ Top. viii. 35.

² περὶ ἔρμ. 2.

³ For derivations see Index of Names at end.

was called notation by Cicero,¹ on the ground that the term used by Aristotle² is σύμβολον, which may be translated by nota. A literal rendering of ἐτυμολογία would be ueriloquium, a form which even Cicero, its inventor, shrinks from using. Some again, with an eye to the meaning of the word, call it origination. Etymology is sometimes of the utmost use, when- 29 ever the word under discussion needs interpretation. For instance Marcus Caelius wishes to prove that he is homo frugi, not because he is abstemious (for he could not even pretend to be that), but because he is useful to many, that is fructuosus, from which frugalitas is derived. Consequently we find room for etymology when we are concerned with definitions. Sometimes again this science attempts to 30 distinguish between correct forms and barbarisms, as for instance when we are discussing whether we should call Sicily Triquetra or Triquedra, or say meridies or medidies, not to mention other words which depend on current usage. Such a science 31 demands profound erudition, whether we are dealing with the large number of words which are derived from the Greek, more especially those inflected according to the practice of the Aeolic dialect, the form of Greek which most nearly resembles Latin; or are using ancient historians as a basis for inquiry into the origin of names of men, places, nations and cities. For instance what is the origin of names such as Brutus, Publicola, or Pythicus? Why do we speak of Latium, Italia or Beneventum? What is the reason for employing such names as Capitolium, collis Quirinalis or Argiletum?³

I now turn to minor points concerning which 32 enthusiasts for etymology give themselves an

QUINTILIAN

rei fatigantur, qui verba paulum declinata varie et multipliciter ad veritatem reducunt aut correptis aut porrectis, aut adiectis aut detractis, aut permutatis litteris syllabisve. Inde pravis ingeniis ad foedissima usque ludibria labuntur. Sit enim Consul a consulendo vel a iudicando; nam et hoc consulere veteres vocaverunt, unde adhuc remanet illud rogat boni 33 consulas, id est bonum iudices. Senatui nomen dederit aetas (nam iidem Patres sunt), et rex rector et alia plurima indubitata; nec abnuerim tegulae regulaeque et similium his rationem. Iam sit et classis a calando et lepus levipes et vulpes volipes:
 34 etiamne a contrariis aliqua sinemus trahi, ut lucus, quia umbra opacus parum luceat, et lulus, quia sit longissime a lusu, et Ditis, quia minime dives? etiamne hominem appellari, quia sit humo natus (quasi vero non omnibus animalibus eadem origo, aut illi primi mortales ante nomen imposuerint terrae quam 35 sibi), et verba ab aere verberato? Pergamus: sic perveniemus eo usque, ut stella luminis stilla credatur, infinity of trouble, restoring to their true form words which have become slightly altered: the methods which they employ are varied and manifold: they shorten them or lengthen them, add, remove, or interchange letters and syllables as the case may be. As a result perverseness of judgment leads to the most hideous absurdities. I am ready to admit that consul may be derived from consulere in the sense of consulting or judging; for the ancients used consulere in the latter sense, and it still survives in the phrase rogat boni consulas, that is bonum iudices, "judge fit." Again senatus may well be derived from old age (for the senators are called "the fathers"): I concur in the derivations assigned to rex rector to say nothing of many other words where there can be no doubt, and do not refuse to accept those suggested for tegula, regula and the like: let classis be from calare (call out, summon), lepus be a contraction of levipes and vulpes of volipes. But are we also to admit the derivation of certain words from their opposites, and accept lucus a non lucendo, since a grove is dark with shade, ludus in the sense of school as being so called because it is quite the reverse of "play" and Dis, Ditis from diues, because Pluto is far from being rich? Are we to assent to the view that homo is derived from humus, because man sprang from the earth, as though all other living things had not the same origin or as if primitive man gave the earth a name before giving one to himself? Or again can verbum be derived from aer verberatus, "beaten air"? Let us go a little further and we shall find that stella is believed to be stilla luminis "a drop of light," a derivation whose author is so famous in literature that it would cuius etymologiae auctorem clarum sane in litteris nominari in ea parte, qua a me reprehenditur, inhu-36 manum est. Qui vero talia libris complexi sunt, nomina sua ipsi inscripserunt; ingenioseque visus est Gavius caelibes dicere veluti caelites, quod onere gravissimo vacent, idque Graeco argumento iuvat, ἠϊθέους enim eadem de causa dici affirmat. Nee ei cedit Modestus inventione, nam, quia Caelo Saturnus genitalia absciderit, hoc nomine appellatos, qui uxore careant, ait; Aelius pituitam, quia petat vitam.

 37 Sed cui non post Varronem sit venia, qui agrum, quia in eo agatur aliquid, et graculos, quia gregatim volent, dictos Ciceroni persuadere voluit (ad eum enim scribit), cum alterum ex Graeco sit manifestum duci, 38 alterum ex vocibus avium? Sed hoc tanti fuit vertere, ut merula, quia sola volat, quasi mera volans nominaretur. Quidam non dubitaverunt etymologiae subiicere omnem nominis causam: ut ex habitu, quemadmodum dixi, Longos et Rufos, ex sono strepere, murmurare; etiam derivata, ut a velocitate dicitur velox, et composita pluraque his similia, quae sine dubio aliunde originem ducunt, sed arte non

¹ de Lingua Lat. v. 34 and 76.

² The above makes Quintilian derive velox from velocitas, as Varro (L.L. viii. 15) derives prudens from prudencia. Those who regard this as incredible must with Colson transpose ut . . . velox to follow Rufos making Velox a cognomen, or with Meister read velo for velocitate, or velo citato (Colson).

be unkind to mention his name in connexion with a point where he comes in for censure. But those 36 who collected such derivations in book form, put their names on the title page; and Gavius thought himself a perfect genius when he identified caelibes, "bachelors," with caelites, "gods," on the ground that they are free from a heavy load of care, and supported this opinion by a Greek analogy: for he asserted that $\eta\theta\epsilon\omicron\iota$, "young men," had a precisely similar origin. Modestus is not his inferior in inventive power: for he asserts that caelibes, that is to say unmarried men, are so called because Saturn cut off the genital organs of Caelus. Aelius asserts that pituita, "phlegm," is so called quia petat uitam, because it attacks life. But we may pardon anyone 37 after the example set by Varro.¹ For he tried to persuade Cicero, to whom he dedicated his work, that a field was called ager because something is done in it (agitur), and jackdaws graculos because they fly in flocks (gregatim), in spite of the obvious fact that the first word is derived from the Greek, the latter from the cry of the bird in question. But Varro had such a passion for derivations that he 38 derived the name merula "a blackbird" from mera uolans on the ground that it flies alone! Some scholars do not hesitate to have recourse to etymology for the origin of every word, deriving names such as Rufus or Longus from the appearance of their possessor, verbs such as strepere or murmurare from the sounds which they represent, and even extending this practice to certain derivatives, making uelox for instance find its origin in uelocitas,² as well as to compounds and the like: now although such words doubtless have an origin, no special science is egent, cuius in hoc opere non est usus nisi in dubiis.

QUINTILIAN

39 Verba a vetustate repetita non solum magnos assertores habent sed etiam adferunt orationi maiestatem aliquam non sine delectatione; nam et auctoritatem antiquitatis habent et, quia intermissa
40 sunt, gratiam novitati similem parant. Sed opus est modo, ut neque crebra sint haec neque manifesta, quia nihil est odiosius adfectatione, nec utique ab ultimis et iam oblitteratis repetita temporibus, qualia sunt topper et antegerio et exanclare et prosapia et Saliorum carmina vix sacerdotibus suis satis
41 intellecta. Sed illa mutari vetat religio et consecratis utendum est; oratio vero, cuius summa virtus est perspicuitas, quam sit vitiosa, si egeat interprete? Ergo, ut novorum optima erunt maxime vetera, ita veterum maxime nova.

42 Similis circa auctoritatem ratio. Nam etiamsi potest videri nihil peccare, qui utitur iis verbis, quae summi auctores tradiderunt, multum tamen refert non solum, quid dixerint, sed etiam quid persuaserint. Neque enim tuburchinabundum et lurchinabundum iam in nobis quisquam ferat, licet Cato sit auctor, nec hos lodices, quanquam id Pollioni placet, nec gladiola, atqui Messala dixit, nec par-

required to detect it, since it is only doubtful cases that demand the intervention of the etymologist.

Archaic words not only enjoy the patronage of 39 distinguished authors, but also give style a certain majesty and charm. For they have the authority of age behind them, and for the very reason that they have fallen into desuetude, produce an attractive effect not unlike that of novelty. But such words 40 must be used sparingly and must not thrust themselves upon our notice, since there is nothing more tiresome than affectation, nor above all must they be drawn from remote and forgotten ages: I refer to words such as topper, "quite," anteperio, "exceedingly," exanclare, "to exhaust," prosapia, "a race" and the language of the Salian Hymns now scarcely understood by its own priests. Religion, it is true, 41 forbids us to alter the words of these hymns and we must treat them as sacred things. But what a faulty thing is speech, whose prime virtue is clearness, if it requires an interpreter to make its meaning plain! Consequently in the case of old words the best will be those that are newest, just as in the case of new words the best will be the oldest.

The same arguments apply to authority. For 42 although the use of words transmitted to us by the best authors may seem to preclude the possibility of error, it is important to notice not merely what they said, but what words they succeeded in sanctioning. For no one to-day would introduce words such as tuburchinabundus, "voracious," or lurchinabundus, "guzzling," although they have the authority of Cato; nor make lodices, "blankets," masculine, though Pollio preferred that gender; nor say gladiola, "small swords," though Messala used this plural, ricidatum, quod in Caelio vix tolerabile videtur, nec collos mihi Calvus persuaserit; quae nec ipsi iam dicerent.

QUINTILIAN

- 43 Superest igitur consuetudo; nam fuerit paene ridiculum malle sermonem, quo locuti sint homines, quam quo loquantur. Et sane quid est aliud vetus sermo quam vetus loquendi consuetudo? Sed huic ipsi necessarium est iudicium, constituendumque in primis id ipsum quid sit, quod consuetudinem
- 44 vocemus. Quae si ex eo, quod plures faciunt, nomen accipiat, periculosissimum dabit praeceptum, non orationi modo sed (quod maius est) vitae. Unde enim tantum boni, ut pluribus quae recta sunt placeant? Igitur ut velli et comam in gradus frangere et in balneis perpotare, quamlibet haec invaserint civitatem, non erit consuetudo, quia nihil horum caret reprehensione; at lavamur et tondemur et convivimus ex consuetudine: sic in nor parricidatus for parricide, a form which can scarcely be tolerated even in Caelius, nor will Calvus persuade me to speak of collos, "necks." Indeed, were these authors alive to-day, they would never use such words.
- 45 regula sermonis accipiendum erit. Nam, ut transcam, quemadmodum vulgo imperiti loquantur, tota saepe theatra et omnem circi turbam exclamasse barbare scimus. Ergo consuetudinem sermonis vocabo consensum eruditorum, sicut vivendi consensum bonorum.

Usage remains to be discussed. For it would be almost laughable to prefer the language of the past to that of the present day, and what is ancient speech but ancient usage of speaking? But even here the critical faculty is necessary, and we must make up our minds what we mean by usage. If it be defined merely as the practice of the majority, we shall have a very dangerous rule affecting not merely style but life as well, a far more serious matter. For where is so much good to be found that what is right should please the majority? The practices of depilation, of dressing the hair in tiers, or of drinking to excess at the baths, although they may have thrust their way into society, cannot claim the support of usage, since there is something to blame in all of them (although we have usage on our side when we bathe or have our hair cut or take our meals together). So too in speech we must not accept as a rule of language words and phrases that have become a vicious habit with a number of persons. To say nothing of the language of the uneducated, we are all of us well aware that whole theatres and the entire crowd of spectators will often commit barbarisms in the cries which they utter as one man. I will therefore define usage in speech as the agreed practice of educated men, just as where our way of life is concerned I should define it as the agreed practice of all good men.

QUINTILIAN

VII. Nunc, quoniam diximus, quae sit loquendi regula, dicendum, quae scribentibus custodienda, quod Graeci ὀρθογραφίαν vocant; hoc nos recte scribendi scientiam nominemus. Cuius ars non in hoc posita est, ut noverimus, quibus quaeque syllaba litteris constet (nam id quidem infra grammatici officium est), sed totam, ut mea fert opinio, subtilitatem in 2 dubiis habet. Ut longis syllabis omnibus apponere apicem ineptissimum est, quia plurimae natura ipsa verbi quod scribitur patent, sed interim necessarium, cum eadem littera alium atque alium intellectum, prout correpta vel producta est, facit; ut malus arborem significat an hominem non bonum apice
3 distinguitur, palus aliud priore syllaba longa aliud sequenti significat, et cum eadem littera nominativo casu brevis, ablativo longa est, utrum sequamur,
4 plerumque hac nota monendi sumus. Similiter putaverunt illa quoque servanda discrimina, ut ex praepositionem, si verbum sequeretur specto, adiecta secundae syllabae s littera, si pecto, remota scribere-
5 mus. Illa quoque servata est a multis differentia, ut ad, cum esset praepositio, d litteram, cum autem coniunctio, t acciperet, itemque cum, si tempus significaret, per qu, si comitem, per c ac duas sequentes
6 scriberetur. Frigidiora his alia, ut quidquid c quartam haberet, ne interrogare bis videremur; et

VII. Having stated the rules which we must follow in speaking, I will now proceed to lay down the rules which must be observed when we write. Such rules are called orthography by the Greeks; let us style it the science of writing correctly. This science does not consist merely in the knowledge of the letters composing each syllable (such a study is beneath the dignity of a teacher of grammar), but, in my opinion, develops all its subtlety in connexion with doubtful points. For instance, while it is absurd to place a circumflex over all long syllables since the quantity of most syllables is obvious from the very nature of the word which is written, it is all the same occasionally necessary, since the same letter involves a different meaning according as it is long or short. For example we determine whether malus is to mean an "apple tree" or a "bad man" by the use of the circumflex; palus means a "stake," if the first syllable is long, a "marsh," if it be short; again when the same letter is short in the nominative and long in the ablative, we generally require the circumflex to make it clear which quantity to understand. Similarly it has been held that we should observe distinctions such as the following: if the preposition ex is compounded with specto, there will be an s in the second syllable, while there will be no s if it is compounded with pecto. Again the following distinction has frequently been observed: ad is spelt with a d when it is a preposition, but with a t when it is a conjunction, while cum is spelt quum when it denotes time, but cum when it denotes accompaniment. Still more pedantic are the practices of making the fourth letter of quidquid a c to avoid the appearance of repeating a question, and of writing quotidie non cotidie, ut sit quot diebus. Verum haec iam etiam inter ipsas ineptias evanuerunt.

QUINTILIAN

7 Quaeri solet, in scribendo praepositiones sonum quem iunctae efficiunt, an quem separatae, observare conveniat: ut, cum dico optinuit (secundam enim b 8 litteram ratio poscit, aures magis audiunt p) et immunis, illud enim, quod veritas exigit, sequentis
9 syllabae sono victum m gemina commutatur. Est et in dividendis verbis observatio, mediam litteram consonantem priori an sequenti syllabae adiungas: haruspex enim, quia pars eius posterior a spectando est, s litteram tertiae dabit; abstemius, quia ex abstinentia temeti composita vox est, primae re-
10 linquet. Nam k quidem in nullis verbis utendum puto, nisi quae significat, etiam ut sola ponatur. Hoc eo non omisi, quod quidam eam, quotiens a sequatur, necessariam credunt, cum sit c littera, quae ad omnes voeales vim suam perferat.

11 Verum orthographia quoque consuetudini servit, ideoque saepe mutata est. Nam illa vetustissima transeo tempora, quibus et pauciores litterae nec similes his nostris earum formae fuerunt et vis quoque diversa, sicut apud Graecos o litterae, quae interim longa ac brevis ut apud nos, interim pro

¹ K may stand for Kalendae, Kaeso, Karthago, Kalumnia, Kaput.

² The original alphabet consisted of twenty-one letters, and was increased to twenty-three by the addition of y and z. quotidie instead of cotidie to show that it stands for quot diebus. But such practices have disappeared into the limbo of absurdities.

It is often debated whether in our spelling of 7 prepositions we should be guided by their sound when compounded, or separate. For instance when I say optinuit, logic demands that the second letter should be a b, while to the ear the sound is rather that of p: or again take the case of immunis: 8 the letter n, which is required by strict adherence to fact, is forced by the sound of the m which follows to change into another m. We must also note when 9 analysing compound words, whether the middle consonant adheres to the preceding syllable or to that which follows. For example since the latter part of haruspex is from spectare, the s must be assigned to the third syllable. In abstemius on the other hand it will go with the first syllable since the word is derived from abstinentia temeti, "abstention from wine." As for k my view is that it should not 10 be used at all except in such words as may be indicated by the letter standing alone as an abbreviation.¹ I mention the fact because some hold that k should be used whenever the next letter is an a, despite the existence of the letter c which maintains its force in conjunction with all the vowels.

Orthography, however, is also the servant of usage 11 and therefore undergoes frequent change. I make no mention of the earliest times when our alphabet contained fewer letters² and their shapes differed from those which we now use, while their values also were different. For instance in Greek the letter o was sometimes long and short, as it is with us, and again was sometimes used to express the syllable

QUINTILIAN

- 12 syllaba quam nomine suo exprimit posita est; uta Latinis veteribus d plurimis in verbis adiectam ultimam, quod manifestum est etiam ex columna rostrata, quae est Duilio in foro posita; interim g quoque, ut in pulvinari Solis, qui colitur iuxta aedem
- 13 Quirini, vesperug, quod vesperuginem accipimus. De mutatione etiam litterarum, de qua supra dixi, nihil repetere hic necesse est, fortasse enim scribe-
- 14 bant etiam loquebantur. Semivocales geminare diu non fuit usitatissimi moris, atque e contrario usque ad Accium et ultra porrectas syllabas geminis, ut
- 15 dixi, vocalibus scripserunt. Diutius duravit, ut e et i iungendis eadem ratione qua Graeci ei uterentur; ea casibus numerisque discreta est, ut Lucilius praecipit: Iam puerei venire, e postremum facito atque i, Ut pueri plures fiant; ac deinceps idem: Mendaci
- 16 furique addes e, cum dare furi Iusseris. Quod quidem cum supervacuum est, quia i tam longae quam brevis naturam habet, tum incommodum aliquando. Nam in iis, quae proximam ubi ultima litteram e habebunt et i longa terminabuntur, illam rationem sequentes utemur e gemina, qualia sunt haec aurei, argentei et
- 17 his similia. Idque iis praecipue, qui ad lectionem instituentur, etiam impedimento erit; sicut in

¹ i. e. the interjection O!

² The ablative originally terminated in d; e.g. pugnandod, marid, navalcd, praedad, etc., on the base of the column of Duilius.

³ l. iv. 12 17.

⁴ e.g. iusi was written for iussi.

which is identical with its name.¹ And in Latin 12 ancient writers ended a number of words with d, as may be seen on the column adorned with the beaks of ships, which was set up in the forum in honour of Duilius.² Sometimes again they gave words a final g, as we may still see in the shrine of the Sun, close to the temple of Quirinus, where we find the word uesperug, which we write uesperugo (evening star). I have already spoken of the interchange 13 of letters³ and need not repeat my remarks here:
 perhaps their pronunciation corresponded with their spelling. For a long time the doubling of semi- 14 vowels was avoided,⁴ while down to the time of Accius and beyond, long syllables were indicated by repetition of the vowel. The practice of joining e 15 and i as in the Greek diphthong $\epsilon\iota$ lasted longer: it served to distinguish cases and numbers, for which we may compare the instructions of Lucilius:

The boys are come: why then, their names must end

With e and i to make them more than one;
 and later—

If to a thief and liar (mendaci furique) you would give,

In e and i your thief must terminate.

But this addition of e is quite superfluous, since i 16 can be long no less than short: it is also at times inconvenient. For in those words which end in i and have e as their last letter but one, we shall on this principle have to write e twice: I refer to words such as aurei or argentei and the like. Now such a 17 practice will be an actual hindrance to those who are learning to read. This difficulty occurs in Greek as

QUINTILIAN

Graecis accidit adiectione i litterae, quam non solum dativis casibus in parte ultima ascribunt sed qui-busdam etiam interponunt, ut in ΔΗΙΣΤΗΙ, quia etymologia ex divisione in tris syllabas facta desideret 18 eam litteram. Ae syllabam, cuius secundam nunc e litteram ponimus, varie per a et i efferebant; quidam semper ut Graeci, quidam singulariter tantum, eum in dativum vel genitivum casum incidissent, unde pictai vestis et aquai Vergilius amantissimus vetustatis 19 carminibus inseruit. In iisdem plurali numero e utebantur, hi Syllae, Galbae. Est in hac quoque parte Lucilii praeceptum, quod quia pluribus expli-eatur versibus, si quis parum credet, apud ipsum in 20 nono requirat. Quid quod Ciceronis temporibus paulumque infra, fere quotiens s littera media vocalium longarum vel subiecta longis esset, geminabatur, ut caussae, cassus, divissiones? quomodo et ipsum et Vergilium quoque scripsisse manus eorum 21 docent. Atqui paulum superiores etiam illud, quod nos gemina dicimus iussi, una dixerunt. Iam optimus maximus, ut mediam i litteram, quae veteribus u fuerat, acciperent, Gai primum Caesaris inscriptione 22 traditur factum. Here nunc e littera terminamus, at veterum comicorum adhuc libris invenio Heri ad me
venit; quod idem in epistolis Augusti, quas sua manu 23 scripsit aut emendavit, deprehenditur. Quid? non Cato Censorius dicam et faciam dicem et faciem scrip-

¹ The noun being formed from ληίζω. ΔΗΙΣΤΗΙ in the text is dative after in. The trisyllable to which Q. refers is the nominative. ² Aen. ix. 26 and vii. 464.

well in connexion with the addition of an iota, which is employed not merely in the termination of the dative, but is sometimes found in the middle of words as in λήστης, for the reason that the analysis applied by etymology shows the word to be a trisyllable¹ and requires the addition of that letter. The diphthong ae now written with an e, was pronounced in old days as ai; some wrote ai in all cases, as in Greek, others confined its use to the dative and genitive singular; whence it comes that Vergil,² always a passionate lover of antiquity, inserted pictai uestis and aquai in his poems. But in the plural they used e and wrote Syllae, Galbae. Lucilius has given instructions on this point also; his instructions occupy quite a number of verses, for which the incredulous may consult his ninth book. Again in Cicero's days and a little later, it was the almost universal practice to write a double s, whenever that letter occurred between two long vowels or after a long vowel, as for example in caussae, cassus, diuisiones. That he and Vergil both used this spelling is shown by their own autograph manuscripts. And yet at a slightly earlier date iussi which we write with a double s was spelt with only one. Further optimus maximus, which older writers spelt with a u, appear for the first time with an i (such at any rate is the tradition) in an inscription of Gaius Caesar.³ We now write here, but I still find in manuscripts of the old comic poets phrases such as heri ad me uenit,⁴ and the same spelling is found in letters of Augustus written or corrected by his own hand. Again did not Cato the censor spell dicam and faciam as dicem

³ Caligula, the first of the Caesars to adopt this title.

⁴ Ter. Phorm. 36.

QUINTILIAN

- sit, eundemque in ceteris, quae similiter cadunt, modum tenuit, quod et ex veteribus eius libris manifestum est et a Messala in libro de s littera positum?
- 24 Sibe et quase scriptum in multorum libris est, sed an hoc voluerint auctores, nescio; T. Livium ita his usum ex Pediano comperi, qui et ipse eum sequen-
- 25 batur; haec nos i littera finimus. Quid dicam vortices et vorsus ceteraque ad eundem modum, quae primus Scipio Africanus in e litteram secundam
- 26 vertisse dicitur? Nostri praeceptores seruum ceruumque u et o litteris scripserunt, quia subiecta sibi vocalis in unum sonum coalescere et confundi nequiret; nunc u gemina scribuntur ea ratione, quam reddidi; neutro sane modo vox, quam sentimus, efficitur. Nec inutiliter Claudius Aeolicam
- 27 illam ad hos usus litteram adiecerat. Illud nunc melius, quod cui tribus, quas praeposui, litteris enotamus; in quo pueris nobis ad pinguem sane sonum qu et oi utebantur, tantum ut ab illo qui distingueretur.
- 28 Quid? quae scribuntur aliter quam enuntiantur? Nam et Gaius C littera significatur, quae inversa mulierem declarat; quia tam Gaias esse vocitatas quam Gaios etiam ex nuptialibus sacris apparet.
- 29 Nec Gnaeus eam litteram in praenomine nota accipit, quae sonat; et columnam et consules exempta n littera and faciem and observe the same practice in words of similar termination? This is clear from old manuscripts of his works and is recorded by Messala in his treatise on the letter s. Sibe and quase are found 24 in many books, but I cannot say whether the authors wished them to be spelt thus: I learn from Pedianus that Livy, whose precedent he himself adopted, used this spelling: to-day we make these words end with an i. What shall I say of uortices, 25 uorsus and the like, which Scipio Africanus is said to have been the first to spell with an e? My own 26 teachers spelt seruus and ceruus with a uo, in order that the repetition of the vowel might not lead to the coalescence and confusion of the two sounds: to-day however we write these words with a double u on the principle which I have already stated: neither spelling however exactly expresses the pronunciation. It was not without reason that Claudius introduced the Aeolic digamma to represent this sound.¹ It is a distinct improvement that to-day we 27 spell cui as I have written it: when I was a boy it used to be spelt quoi, giving it a very full sound, merely to distinguish it from qui.

¹ cp. I. iv. 8.

² The bride used the formula ubi tu Gaius, ibi ego Gaia.

Again, what of words whose spelling is at variance 28 with their pronunciation? For instance C is used as an abbreviation for Gaius, and when inverted stands for a woman, for as we know from the words of the marriage service women used to be called Gaiae, just as men were called Gaii.² Gnaeus too in the 29 abbreviation indicating the praenomen is spelt in a manner which does not agree with its pronunciation. We also find *columna*³ and consul spelt without an n, ³ columa is mentioned by the grammarian Pompeius as a barbarism in the fifth century. cp. dimin. columella. Consul is abbreviated cos.

QUINTILIAN

legimus; et Subura, cum tribus litteris notatur, c tertiam ostendit. Multa sunt generis huius; sed haec quoque vereor ne modum tam parvae quaestionis excesserint.

30 Iudicium autem suum grammaticus interponat his omnibus; nam hoc valere plurimum debet. Ego (nisi quod consuetudo obtinuerit) sic scribendum 31 quidque iudico, quomodo sonat. Hic enim est usus litterarum, ut custodiant voces et velut depositum reddant legentibus, itaque id exprimere debent quod 32 dicturi sumus. Hae fere sunt emendate loquendi scribendique partes; duas reliquas significanter ornateque dicendi non equidem grammaticis aufero, sed cum mihi officia rhetoris supersint, maiori operi reservo.

33 Redit autem illa cogitatio, quosdam fore, qui haec quae diximus parva nimium et impedimenta quoque maius aliquid agentibus putent. Nec ipse ad extremam usque anxietatem et ineptas cavillationes descendendum atque iis ingenia concidi et comminui 34 credo. Sed nihil ex grammaticae nocuerit, nisi quod supervacuum est. An ideo minor est M. Tullius orator, quod idem artis huius diligentissimus fuit et in filio (ut epistolis apparet) recte loquendi asper quoque exactor? aut vim C. Caesaris fregerunt editi 35 de analogia libri? aut ideo minus Messala nitidus,

¹ The original name was Sucusa.

while Subura when indicated by three letters is spelt Suc.¹ I could quote many other examples of this, but I fear that I have already said too much on so trivial a theme.

On all such subjects the teacher must use his own 30 judgment; for in such matters it should be the supreme authority. For my own part, I think that, within the limits prescribed by usage, words should be spelt as they are pronounced. For the use of 31 letters is to preserve the sound of words and to deliver them to readers as a sacred trust: consequently they ought to represent the pronunciation which we are to use. These are the more important 32 points in connexion with writing and speaking correctly. I do not go so far as to deny to the teacher of literature all part in the two remaining departments of speaking and writing with elegance and significance, but I reserve these for a more important portion of this work, as I have still to deal with the duties of the teacher of rhetoric.

I am however haunted by the thought that some 33 readers will regard what I have said as trivial details which are only likely to prove a hindrance to those who are intent upon a greater task; and I myself do not think that we should go so far as to lose our sleep of nights or quibble like fools over such minutiae; for such studies make mincemeat of the mind. But it is only the superfluities of grammar 34 that do any harm. I ask you, is Cicero a less great orator for having given this science his diligent attention or for having, as his letters show, demanded rigid correctness of speech from his son? Or was the vigour of Gaius Caesar's eloquence impaired by the publication of a treatise on Analogy? Or the polish 35 quia quosdam totos libellos non verbis modo singulis sed etiam litteris dedit? Non obstant hae disciplinae per illas euntibus sed circa illas haerentibus.

QUINTILIAN

VIII. Superest lectio, in qua puer ut sciat, ubi suspendere spiritum debeat, quo loco versum distinguere, ubi claudatur sensus, unde incipiat, quando attollenda vel summittenda sit vox, quo quidque flexu, quid lentius, celerius, concitatus, lenius dicendum, 2 demonstrari nisi in opere ipso non potest. Unum est igitur, quod in hac parte praecipiam: ut omnia ista facere possit, intelligat. Sit autem in primis lectio virilis et cum suavitate quadam gravis et non quidem prosae similis, quia et carmen est et se poetae canere testantur; non tamen in canticum dissoluta nec plasmate (ut nunc a plerisque fit) effeminata; de quo genere optime C. Caesarem praetextatum adhuc accepimus dixisse: Si cantas, 3 male cantas; si legis, cantas. Nec prosopopoeias, ut quibusdam placet, ad comicum morem pronuntiari velim; esse tamen flexum quendam, quo distinguantur ab iis, in quibus poeta persona sua utetur. 4 Cetera admonitione magna egent, in primis, ut tenerae mentes tracturaeque altius, quidquid rudibus of Messala dimmed by the fact that he devoted whole books to the discussion not merely of single words, but of single letters? Such studies do no harm to those who but pass through them: it is only the pedantic stickler who suffers.

VIII. Reading remains for consideration. In this connexion there is much that can only be taught in actual practice, as for instance when the boy should take breath, at what point he should introduce a pause into a line, where the sense ends or begins, when the voice should be raised or lowered, what modulation should be given to each phrase, and when he should increase or slacken speed, or speak with greater or less energy. In ² this portion of my work I will give but one golden rule: to do all these things, he must understand what he reads. But above all his reading must be manly, combining dignity and charm; it must be different from the reading of prose, for poetry is song and poets claim to be singers. But this fact does not justify degeneration into sing-song or the effeminate modulations now in vogue: there is an excellent saying on this point attributed to Gaius Caesar while he was still a boy: "If you are singing, you sing badly: if you are reading, you sing." Again I do not, like some teachers, wish character ³ as revealed by speeches to be indicated as it is by the comic actor, though I think that there should be some modulation of the voice to distinguish such passages from those where the poet is speaking in person. There are other points where there is much ⁴ need of instruction: above all, unformed minds which are liable to be all the more deeply impressed by what they learn in their days of childish ignorance, must learn not merely what is eloquent ; it is even more important that they should study what is morally excellent.

It is therefore an admirable practice which now 5 prevails, to begin by reading HOMER and Vergil, although the intelligence needs to be further developed for the full appreciation of their merits : but there is plenty of time for that since the boy will read them more than once. In the meantime let his mind be lifted by the sublimity of heroic verse, inspired by the greatness of its theme and imbued with the loftiest sentiments. The reading of tragedy 6 also is useful, and lyric poets will provide nourishment for the mind, provided not merely the authors be carefully selected, but also the passages from their works which are to be read. For the Greek lyric poets are often licentious and even in Horace there are passages which I should be unwilling to explain to a class. Elegiacs, however, more especially erotic elegy, and hendecasyllables, which are merely sections of Sotadean verse¹ (concerning which latter I need give no admonitions), should be entirely banished, if possible ; if not absolutely banished, they should be reserved for pupils of a less impressionable age. As to comedy, whose contribution to eloquence may be of 7 no small importance, since it is concerned with every kind of character and emotion, I will shortly point out in its due place² what use can in my opinion be made of it in the education of boys. As soon as we have no fear of contaminating their morals, it should take its place among the subjects which it is specially desirable to read. I speak of Menander, though I would not exclude others. For Latin 8 authors will also be of some service. But the ingenium dant atque animum augeant, praelegenda ; ceteris, quae ad eruditionem modo pertinent, longa aetas spatium dabit. Multum autem veteres etiam Latini conferunt, (quanquam plerique plus ingenio quam arte valuerunt) in primis copiam verborum, quorum in tragoediis gravitas, in comoediis elegantia 9 et quidam velut ἀττικισμός inveniri potest. Oeconomia quoque in iis diligentior quam in plerisque novorum erit, qui omnium operum solam virtutem sententias putaverunt. Sanctitas certe et, ut sic dicam, virilitas ab iis petenda est, quando nos in omnia deliciarum vitia dicendi quoque ratione de-10 fluximus. Denique credamus summis oratoribus, qui veterum poemata vel ad fidem causarum vel ad ornamentum eloquentiae adsumunt. Nam prae-11 cipue quidem apud Ciceronem frequenter tamen apud Asinium etiam et ceteros, qui sunt proximi, videmus Enni, Acci, Pacuvi, Lucili, Terenti, Caecili et aliorum inseri versus summa non eruditionis modo gratia sed etiam incunditatis, cum poeticis voluptatibus aures a 12 forensi asperitate respirent. Quibus accedit non mediocris utilitas, cum sententiis eorum velut quibusdam testimoniis quae proposuere confirmant. Verum priora illa ad pueros magis, haec sequentia ad robusti-subjects selected for lectures to boys should be those which will enlarge the mind and provide the greatest nourishment to the intellect. Life is quite long enough for the subsequent study of those other subjects which are concerned with matters of interest solely to learned men. But even the old Latin poets may be of great value, in spite of the fact that their strength lies in their natural talent rather than in their art: above all they will contribute richness of vocabulary: for the vocabulary of the tragedians is full of dignity, while in that of the comedians there is a certain elegance and Attic grace. They 9 are, too, more careful about dramatic structure than the majority of moderns, who regard epigram as the sole merit of every kind of literary work. For purity at any rate and manliness, if I may say so, we must certainly go to these writers, since to-day even our style of speaking is infected with all the faults of modern decadence. Finally we may derive 10 confidence from the practice of the greatest orators of drawing upon the early poets to support their arguments or adorn their eloquence. For we find, 11 more especially in the pages of Cicero, but frequently in Asinius and other orators of that period, quotations from Ennius, Accius, Pacuvius, Lucilius, Terence, Caecilius and others, inserted not merely to show the speaker's learning, but to please his hearers as well, since the charms of poetry provide a pleasant relief from the severity of forensic eloquence. Such quotations have the additional advantage of 12 helping the speaker's case, for the orator makes use of the sentiments expressed by the poet as evidence in support of his own statements. But while my earlier remarks have special application to the education of boys, those which I have just made ores pertinebunt, eum grammatices amor et usus lectionis non scholarum temporibus, sed vitae spatio terminentur.

QUINTILIAN

QUINTILIAN

- 13 In praelegendo grammaticus et illa quidem minora praestare debet, ut partes orationis reddi sibi soluto versu desideret et pedum proprietates, quae adeo debent esse notae in carminibus, ut etiam in oratoria compositione desiderentur. Deprehendat, quae barbara, quae impropria, quae contra leges loquendi 14 sint posita; non ut ex iis utique improbentur poetae (quibus, quia plerumque servire metro coguntur, adeo ignoscitur, ut vitia ipsa aliis in carmine appellationibus nominentur; metaplasmos enim et schematismos et schemata, ut dixi, vocamus, et laudem virtutis necessitati damus), sed ut com-
15 moneat artificialium et memoriam agitet. Id quoque inter prima rudimenta non inutile demonstrare, quot quaeque verba modis intelligenda sint. Circa glossemata etiam, id est voces minus usitatas, non 16 ultima eius professionis diligentia est. Enimvero iam maiore cura doceat tropos omnes, quibus praecipue non poema modo sed etiam oratio ornatur; schemata utraque, id est figuras, quaeque λέξεις quaeque διαρρίαι vocantur, quorum ego sicut tro-

¹ The formation of cases of nouns and tenses of verbs from a non-existent nom. or pres.: or more generally any change in the forms of a word.

² schematismus and schemata both seem to mean the same, sc. figures. ³ See Book VIII. chap. vi.

apply rather to persons of riper years; for the love of letters and the value of reading are not confined to one's schooldays, but end only with life.

In lecturing the teacher of literature must give 13 attention to minor points as well: he will ask his class after analysing a verse to give him the parts of speech and the peculiar features of the feet which it contains: these latter should be so familiar in poetry as to make their presence desired even in the prose of oratory. He will point out what words are barbarous, what improperly used, and what are contrary to the laws of language. He will not do 14 this by way of censuring the poets for such peculiarities, for poets are usually the servants of their metres and are allowed such licence that faults are given other names when they occur in poetry: for we style them metaplasms,¹ schematismus and schemata,² as I have said, and make a virtue of necessity. Their aim will rather be to familiarise the pupil with the artifices of style and to stimulate his memory. Further in the elementary stages of such 15 instruction it will not be unprofitable to show the different meanings which may be given to each word. With regard to glossemata, that is to say words not in common use, the teacher must exercise no ordinary diligence, while still greater care is required in 16 teaching all the tropes³ which are employed for the adornment more especially of poetry, but of oratory as well, and in making his class acquainted with the two sorts of schemata or figures known as figures of speech and figures of thought.⁴ I shall however post-

⁴ See Book IX. chaps. i. and ii. A trope is an expression used in a sense which it cannot strictly bear. A figure is a form of speech differing from the ordinary method of expression; see IX. i. 4.

QUINTILIAN

porum tractatum in eum locum differo, quo mihi de 17 ornatu orationis dicendum erit. Praecipue vero illa infigat animis, quae in oeconomia virtus, quae in decore rerum, quid personae cuique convenerit, quid in sensibus laudandum, quid in verbis, ubi copia probabilis, ubi modus.

18 His accedet enarratio historiarum, diligens quidem illa non tamen usque ad supervacuum laborem occupata. Nam receptas aut certe claris auctoribus memoratas exposuisse satis est. Persequi quidem, quid quis unquam vel contemptissimorum hominum dixerit, aut nimiae miseriae aut inanis iactantiae est et detinet atque obruit ingenia melius aliis vacatura.
19 Nam qui omnes etiam indignas lectione scidas excutit, anilibus quoque fabulis accommodare operam potest. Atqui pleni sunt huiusmodi impedimentis grammaticorum commentarii, vix ipsis qui compo-20 suerunt satis noti. Nam Didymo, quo nemo plura scripsit, accidisse compertum est, ut, cum historiae cuidam tanquam vanae repugnaret, ipsius proferretur 21 liber, qui eam continebat. Quod evenit praecipue in fabulosis usque ad deridicula quaedam, quaedam etiam pudenda; unde improbissimo cuique pleraque fingendi licentia est, adeo ut de libris totis et auctopone discussion of tropes and figures till I come to deal with the various ornaments of style. Above 17 all he will impress upon their minds the value of proper arrangement, and of graceful treatment of the matter in hand: he will show what is appropriate to the various characters, what is praiseworthy in the thoughts or words, where copious diction is to be commended and where restraint.

In addition to this he will explain the various 18 stories that occur: this must be done with care, but should not be encumbered with superfluous detail. For it is sufficient to set forth the version which is generally received or at any rate rests upon good authority. But to ferret out everything that has ever been said on the subject even by the most worthless of writers is a sign of tiresome pedantry or empty ostentation, and results in delaying and swamping the mind when it would be better employed on other themes. The man who pores 19 over every page even though it be wholly unworthy of reading, is capable of devoting his attention to the investigation of old wives' tales. And yet the commentaries of teachers of literature are full of such encumbrances to learning and strangely unfamiliar to their own authors. It is, for instance, 20 recorded that Didymus, who was unsurpassed for the number of books which he wrote, on one occasion objected to some story as being absurd, whereupon one of his own books was produced which contained the story in question. Such abuses occur chiefly in 21 connexion with fabulous stories and are sometimes carried to ludicrous or even scandalous extremes: for in such cases the more unscrupulous commentator has such full scope for invention, that he can tell lies ribus, ut succurrit, mentiantur tuto, quia inveniri qui nunquam fuere non possunt: nam in notioribus frequentissime deprehenduntur a curiosis. Ex quo mihi inter virtutes grammatici habebitur aliqua nescire.

QUINTILIAN

IX. Et finitae quidem sunt partes duae, quas haec professio pollicetur, id est ratio loquendi et enarratio auctorum, quarum illam methodicen hanc historicen vocant. Adiciamus tamen eorum curae quaedam dicendi primordia, quibus aetates nondum rhetorem
2 capientes instituant. Igitur Aesopi fabellas, quae fabulis nutricularum proxime succedunt, narrare sermone puro et nihil se supra modum extollente, deinde eandem gracilitatem stilo exigere condiscant; versus primo solvere, mox mutatis verbis interpretari, tum paraphrasi audacius vertere, qua et breviate quaedam et exornare salvo modo poetae sensu
3 permittitur. Quod opus etiam consummatis professoribus difficile qui commode tractaverit, cuicumque discendo sufficet. Sententiae quoque et chriae et ethologiae subiectis dictorum rationibus apud grammaticos scribantur, quia initium ex lectione ducunt; quorum omnium similis est ratio, forma diversa, quia sententia universalis est vox, ethologia to his heart's content about whole books and authors without fear of detection: for what never existed can obviously never be found, whereas if the subject is familiar the careful investigator will often detect the fraud. Consequently I shall count it a merit in a teacher of literature that there should be some things which he does not know.

¹ The meaning of ethologia is doubtful, but probably means a simple character-sketch of some famous man.

IX. I have now finished with two of the departments, with which teachers of literature profess to deal, namely the art of speaking correctly and the interpretation of authors; the former they call methodicē, the latter historicē. We must however add to their activities instruction in certain rudiments of oratory for the benefit of those who are not yet ripe for the schools of rhetoric. Their pupils should learn to paraphrase Aesop's fables, the natural successors of the fairy stories of the nursery, in simple and restrained language and subsequently to set down this paraphrase in writing with the same simplicity of style: they should begin by analysing each verse, then give its meaning in different language, and finally proceed to a freer paraphrase in which they will be permitted now to abridge and now to embellish the original, so far as this may be done without losing the poet's meaning. This is no easy task even for the expert instructor, and the pupil who handles it successfully will be capable of learning everything. He should also be set to write aphorisms, moral essays (chriæ) and delineations of character (ethologiae),¹ of which the teacher will first give the general scheme, since such themes will be drawn from their reading. In all of these exercises the general idea is the same, but the form differs: aphorisms are general propositions, while ethologiae

QUINTILIAN

- 4 personis continetur. Chriarum plura genera traduntur: unum simile sententiae, quod est positum in voce simplici, Dixit ille, aut, Dicere solebat; alterum, quod est in respondendo, Interrogatus ille, vel, cum hoc ei dictum esset, respondit; tertium huic non dissimile, cum quis dixisset aliquid, vel fecisset.
- 5 Etiam in ipsorum factis esse chriam putant, ut Crates, cum indoctum puerum vidisset, paedagogum eius percussit; et aliud paene par ei, quod tamen eodem nomine appellare non audent sed dicunt χρειῶδες, ut Milo, quem vitulum assueverat ferre, taurum ferebat. In his omnibus et declinatio per eosdem ducitur casus, et tam factorum quam dictorum ratio est.
- 6 Narratiunculas a poetis celebratas notitiae causa non eloquentiae tractandas puto. Cetera maioris operis ac spiritus Latini rhetores relinquendo necessaria grammaticis fecerunt; Graeci magis operum suorum et onera et modum norunt.

X. Haec de Grammaticae, quam brevissime potui, non ut omnia dicerem sectatus, quod infinitum erat, sed ut maxime necessaria; nunc de ceteris artibus, quibus instituendos, priusquam rhetori tradantur, ¹ The sense is not clear: it appears to refer to the stereotyped form in which the chria was couched.

are concerned with persons. Of moral essays there 4 are various forms: some are akin to aphorisms and commence with a simple statement "he said" or "he used to say": others give the answer to a question and begin "on being asked" or "in answer to this he replied," while a third and not dissimilar type begins, "when someone has said or done something." Some hold that a moral essay may take some action 5 as its text; take for example the statement "Crates on seeing an ill-educated boy, beat his paedagogus," or a very similar example which they do not venture actually to propose as a theme for a moral essay, but content themselves with saying that it is of the nature of such a theme, namely "Milo, having accustomed himself to carrying a calf every day, ended by carrying it when grown to a bull." All these instances are couched in the same grammatical form¹ and deeds no less than sayings may be presented for treatment. Short stories from the 6 poets should in my opinion be handled not with a view to style but as a means of increasing knowledge. Other more serious and ambitious tasks have been also imposed on teachers of literature by the fact that Latin rhetoricians will have nothing to do with them: Greek rhetoricians have a better comprehension of the extent and nature of the tasks placed on their shoulders.

X. I have made my remarks on this stage of education as brief as possible, making no attempt to say everything, (for the theme is infinite), but confining myself to the most necessary points. I will now proceed briefly to discuss the remaining arts in which I think boys ought to be instructed before being handed over to the teacher of rhetoric: for it

QUINTILIAN

pueros existimo, strictim subiungam, ut efficiatur orbis ille doctrinae, quem Graeci ἐγκύκλιον παιδείαν vocant.

- 2 Nam iisdem fere annis aliarum quoque disciplinarum studia ingredienda sunt, quae, quia et ipsae artes sunt et esse perfectae sine orandi scientia possunt nec rursus ad efficiendum oratorem satis valent solae, an sint huic operi necessariae quae-
- 3 ritur. Nam quid, inquit, ad agendam causam dicendamve sententiam pertinet, scire, quemadmodum data linea constitui triangula aequis lateribus possint? Aut quo melius vel defendet reum vel reget consilia, qui citharae sonos nominibus et spatiis
- 4 distinxerit? Enumerent etiam fortasse multos quamlibet utiles foro, qui nec geometren audierint nec musicos nisi haec communi voluptate aurium intelligant. Quibus ego primum hoc respondeo, quod M. Cicero scripto ad Brutum libro frequentius testatur, non eum a nobis institui oratorem, qui sit aut fuerit, sed imaginem quandam concepisse nos
- 5 animo perfecti illius et nulla parte cessantis. Nam et sapientem formantes eum, qui sit futurus consummatus undique et, ut dicunt, mortalis quidam deus, non modo cognitione caelestium vel mortalium putant instruendum, sed per quaedam parva sane, si ipsa demum aestimes, ducunt sicut exquisitas interim ambiguitates; non quia ceratinae aut croco-

is by such studies that the course of education described by the Greeks as ἐγκύκλιος παιδεία or general education will be brought to its full completion.

For there are other subjects of education which 2 must be studied simultaneously with literature. These being independent studies are capable of completion without a knowledge of oratory, while on the other hand they cannot by themselves produce an orator. The question has consequently been raised as to whether they are necessary for this purpose. What, say some, has the knowledge of the way to 3 describe an equilateral triangle on a given straight line got to do with pleading in the law-courts or speaking in the senate? Will an acquaintance with the names and intervals of the notes of the lyre help an orator to defend a criminal or direct the policy of his country? They will perhaps produce a long 4 list of orators who are most effective in the courts but have never sat under a geometrician and whose understanding of music is confined to the pleasure which their ears, like those of other men, derive from it. To such critics I reply, and Cicero frequently makes the same remark in his Orator, that I am not describing any orator who actually exists or has existed, but have in my mind's eye an ideal orator, perfect down to the smallest detail. For when the 5 philosophers describe the ideal sage who is to be consummate in all knowledge and a very god incarnate, as they say, they would have him receive instruction not merely in the knowledge of things human and divine, but would also lead him through a course of subjects, which in themselves are comparatively trivial, as for instance the elaborate subtleties of formal logic: not that acquaintance

QUINTILIAN

dilinae possint facere sapientem, sed quia illum ne 6 in minimis quidem oporteat falli. Similiter oratorem, qui debet esse sapiens, non geometres faciet aut musicus quaeque his alia subiungam, sed hae quoque artes, ut sit consummatus, iuvabunt. Nisi forte antidotos quidem atque alia, quae oculis aut vulneribus medentur, ex multis atque interim con-trariis quoque inter se effectibus componi videmus, quorum ex diversis fit una illa mixtura, quae nulli earum similis est, ex quibus constat, sed proprias vires 7 ex omnibus sumit; et muta animalia mellis illum inimitabilem humanae rationi saporem vario florum ac sucorum genere perficiunt: nos mirabimur, si oratio, qua nihil praestantius homini dedit provi-dentia, pluribus artibus egeat, quae, etiam cum se non ostendunt in dicendo nec proferunt, vim tamen occultam suggerunt et tacitae quoque sentiuntur?
8 “Fuit aliquis sine iis disertus”: sed ego oratorem volo. “Non multum adiiciunt”: sed aequae non erit totum, cui vel parva deerunt; et optimum quidem hoc esse conveniet; cuius etiamsi in arduo spes est, nos tamen praecipiamus omnia, ut saltem plura fiant. Sed cur deficiat animus? Natura enim perfectum oratorem esse non prohibet, turpiterque desperatur quidquid fieri potest.

¹ You have what you have not lost: you have not lost horns: therefore you have horns.

² A crocodile, having seized a woman's son, said that he would restore him, if she would tell him the truth. She replied, “You will not restore him.” Was it the crocodile's duty to give him up?

with the so called "horn"¹ or "crocodile"² problems can make a man wise, but because it is important that he should never trip even in the smallest trifles. So too the teacher of geometry, 6 music or other subjects which I would class with these, will not be able to create the perfect orator (who like the philosopher ought to be a wise man), but none the less these arts will assist in his perfection. I may draw a parallel from the use of antidotes and other remedies applied to the eyes or to wounds. We know that these are composed of ingredients which produce many and sometimes contrary effects, but mixed together they make a single compound resembling no one of its component parts, but deriving its peculiar properties from all: so too dumb 7 insects produce honey, whose taste is beyond the skill of man to imitate, from different kinds of flowers and juices. Shall we marvel then, if oratory, the highest gift of providence to man, needs the assistance of many arts, which, although they do not reveal or intrude themselves in actual speaking, supply hidden forces and make their silent presence felt? "But" 8 it will be urged "men have proved fluent without their aid." Granted, but I am in quest of an orator. "Their contribution is but small." Yes, but we shall never attain completeness, if minor details be lacking. And it will be agreed that though our ideal of perfection may dwell on a height that is hard to gain, it is our duty to teach all we know, that achievement may at least come somewhat nearer the goal. But why should our courage fail? The perfect orator is not contrary to the laws of nature, and it is cowardly to despair of anything that is within the bounds of possibility.

QUINTILIAN

9 Atque ego vel iudicio veterum poteram esse contentus. Nam quis ignorat musicen (ut de hae primum loquar) tantum iam illis antiquis temporibus non studii modo verum etiam venerationis habuisse, ut iidem musici et vates et sapientes iudicarentur (mittam alios) Orphens et Linus; quorum utrumque dis genitum, alterum vero, quia rudes quoque atque agrestes animos admiratione mulceret, non feras modo sed saxa etiam silvasque duxisse posteritatis
10 memoriae traditum est. Itaque et Timagenes auctor est, omnium in litteris studiorum antiquissimam musicen extitisse, et testimonio sunt clarissimi poetae, apud quos inter regalia convivia laudes heroum ac deorum ad citharam canebantur. Iopas vero ille Vergilii nonne canit errantem lunam solisque labores et cetera? Quibus certe palam confirmat auctor eminentissimus, musicen cum divinarum
11 etiam rerum cognitione esse coniunctam. Quod si datur, erit etiam oratori necessaria, siquidem (ut diximus) haec quoque pars, quae ab oratoribus relicta a philosophis est occupata, nostri operis fuit, ac sine omnium talium scientia non potest esse perfecta 12 eloquentia. Atque claros nomine sapientiae viros, nemo dubitaverit, studiosos musices fuisse, cum Pythagoras atque eum secuti acceptam sine dubio antiquitus opinionem vulgaverint, mundum ipsum ratione esse compositum, quam postea sit lyra

¹ Aen. i. 742.

For myself I should be ready to accept the verdict 9 of antiquity. Who is ignorant of the fact that music, of which I will speak first, was in ancient times the object not merely of intense study but of veneration : in fact Orpheus and Linus, to mention no others, were regarded as uniting the roles of musician, poet and philosopher. Both were of divine origin, while the former, because by the marvel of his music he soothed the savage breast, is recorded to have drawn after him not merely beasts of the wild, but rocks and trees. So too Timagenes 10 asserts that music is the oldest of the arts related to literature, a statement which is confirmed by the testimony of the greatest of poets in whose songs we read that the praise of heroes and of gods were sung to the music of the lyre at the feasts of kings. Does not Iopas, the Vergilian bard, sing

“The wandering moon and labours of the Sun”¹ and the like? whereby the supreme poet manifests most clearly that music is united with the knowledge even of things divine. If this be admit- 11 ted, music will be a necessity even for an orator, since those fields of knowledge, which were annexed by philosophy on their abandonment by oratory, once were ours and without the knowledge of all such things there can be no perfect eloquence.

There can in any case be no doubt that some of 12 those men whose wisdom is a household word have been earnest students of music : Pythagoras for instance and his followers popularised the belief, which they no doubt had received from earlier teachers, that the universe is constructed on the same principles which were afterwards imitated in

QUINTILIAN

- imitata, nec illa modo contenti dissimilium concordia, quam vocant ὄρμωρίαν, sonum quoque iis 13 motibus dederint. Nam Plato, cum in aliis qui-busdam tum praecipue in Timaeo, ne intelligi quidem nisi ab iis, qui hanc quoque partem disciplinae diligenter perceperint, potest. De philo-sophis loquor, quorum fons ipse Socrates iam senex 14 institui lyra non erubescerat? Duces maximos et fidibus et tibiis cecinisse traditum et exercitus Lacedaemoniorum musicis accensos modis. Quid autem aliud in nostris legionibus cornua ac tubae faciunt? quorum concentus quanto est vehementior, tantum Romana in bellis gloria ceteris praestat.
 15 Non igitur frustra Plato civili viro, quem πολιτικὸν vocat, necessariam musicen credidit. Et eius sectae, quae aliis severissima aliis asperrima videtur, principes in hac fuere sententia, ut existimarent sapientium aliquos nonnullam operam his studiis accommodaturos. Et Lyeurgus, durissimarum Lacedaemoniis legum auctor, musices disciplinam pro-16 bavit. Atque eam natura ipsa videtur ad tolerandos facilius labores velut muneri nobis dedisse, si quidem et remigem cantus hortatur; nec solum in iis operibus, in quibus plurimum conatus praecedente aliqua incunda voce conspirat, sed etiam singulorum fati-gatio quamlibet se rudi modulatione solatur.
 17 Laudem adhuc dicere artis pulcherrimae videor,

¹ The music of the spheres: cp. the vision of Er in Plato (Rep. 10) and the Somnium Scipionis of Cicero. The sounds produced by the heavenly bodies correspond to the notes of the heptachord.

the construction of the lyre, and not content merely with emphasising that concord of discordant elements which they style harmony attributed a sound to the motions of the celestial bodies.¹ As for Plato, there are certain passages in his works, more especially in the Timaeus,² which are quite unintelligible to those who have not studied the theory of music. But why speak only of the philosophers, whose master, Socrates, did not blush to receive instruction in playing the lyre even when far advanced in years? It is recorded that the greatest generals played on the lyre and the pipe, and that the armies of Sparta were fired to martial ardour by the strains of music. And what else is the function of the horns and trumpets attached to our legions? The louder the concert of their notes, the greater is the glorious supremacy of our arms over all the nations of the earth. It was not therefore without reason that Plato regarded the knowledge of music as necessary to his ideal statesman or politician, as he calls him; while the leaders even of that school, which in other respects is the strictest and most severe of all schools of philosophy,³ held that the wise man might well devote some of his attention to such studies. Lycurgus himself, the founder of the stern laws of Sparta, approved of the training supplied by music. Indeed nature itself seems to have given music as a boon to men to lighten the strain of labour: even the rower in the galleys is cheered to effort by song. Nor is this function of music confined to cases where the efforts of a number are given union by the sound of some sweet voice that sets the tune, but even solitary workers find solace at their toil in artless song. So far I have attempted merely to sound the praises of the noblest ² Tim. p. 47.³ sc. the Stoics.

QUINTILIAN

nondum eam tamen oratori coniungere. Transeamus igitur id quoque, quod grammaticæ quondam ac musicæ iunctæ fuerunt; siquidem Archytas atque Euenus etiam subiectam grammaticen musicæ putaverunt, et eosdem utriusque rei præceptores fuisse cum Sophron ostendit, mimorum quidem scriptor sed quem Plato adeo probavit, ut suppositos capiti 18 libros eius, cum moreretur, habuisse credatur, tum Eupolis, apud quem Prodamus et musicen et litteras docet, et Maricas, qui est Hyperbolus, nihil se ex musicæ scire nisi litteras confitetur. Aristophanes quoque non uno libro sic institui pueros antiquitus solitos esse demonstrat, et apud Menandrum in Hypobolimæo senex, qui reposcenti filium patri velut rationem impendiorum, quæ in educationem contulerit, exponens, psaltis se et geometris multa 19 dicit dedisse. Unde etiam ille mos, ut in conviviis post cenam circumferretur lyra; cuius cum se imperitum Themistocles confessus esset, ut verbis 20 Ciceronis utar, est habitus indoctior. Sed veterum quoque Romanorum epulis fides ac tibia adhibere moris fuit. Versus quoque Saliorum habent carmen. Quæ cum omnia sint a Numa rege instituta, faciunt manifestum, ne illis quidem, qui rudes ac bellicosi videntur, cura musicæ, quantum illa recipiebat ætas, 21 defuisse. Denique in proverbium usque Græcorum

¹ Knights, 188.

² Tusc. Disp. i. ii. 4.

of arts without bringing it into connexion with the education of an orator. I will therefore pass by the fact that the art of letters and that of music were once united: indeed Arehytas and Euenus held that the former was subordinate to the latter, while we know that the same instructors were employed for the teaching of both from Sophron, a writer of farces, it is true, but so highly esteemed by Plato, that he is believed to have had Sophron's works under his pillow on his deathbed: the same fact is 18 proved by the case of Eupolis, who makes Prodamus teach both music and literature, and whose Marieas, who was none other than Hyperbolus in disguise, asserts that he knows nothing of music but letters. Aristophanes¹ again in more than one of his plays shows that boys were trained in music from remote antiquity, while in the Hypobolimaecus of Menander an old man, when a father claims his son from him, gives an account of all expenses incurred on behalf of the boy's education and states that he has paid out large sums to musicians and geometrieians. From the importance thus given to music also origi- 19 nated the custom of taking a lyre round the company after dinner, and when on such an occasion Themistocles confessed that he could not play, his education was (to quote the words of Cicero) "regarded as imperfect."² Even at the banquets of our own forefathers 20 it was the custom to introduce the pipe and lyre, and even the hymn of the Salii has its tune. These practices were instituted by King Numa and clearly prove that not even those whom we regard as rude warriors, neglected the study of music, at least in so far as the resources of that age allowed. Finally 21 there was actually a proverb among the Greeks,

QUINTILIAN

celebratum est, indoctos a Musis atque a Gratiis 22 abesse. Verum quid ex ea proprie petat futurus orator, disseramus.

Numeros musicae duplices habet in vocibus et in corpore, utriusque enim rei aptus quidam modus desideratur. Vocis rationem Aristoxenus musicus dividit in ῥυθμὸν et μέλος, quorum alterum modulatione, alterum canore ac sonis constat. Num igitur non haec omnia oratori necessaria? quorum unum ad gestum, alterum ad collocationem verborum, tertium ad flexus vocis, qui sunt in agendo quoque 23 plurimi, pertinet: nisi forte in carminibus tantum et in canticis exigitur structura quaedam et inoffensa copulatio vocum, in agendo supervacua est; aut non compositio et sonus in oratione quoque varie pro
24 rerum modo adhibetur sicut in musicae. Namque et voce et modulatione grandia elate, iucunda dulciter, moderata leniter canit, totaque arte consentit cum 25 eorum quae dicuntur affectibus. Atqui in orando quoque intentio vocis, remissio, flexus pertinet ad movendos audientium affectus, aliaque et collocationis et vocis (ut eodem utar verbo) modulatione concitationem iudicis, alia misericordiam petimus: cum etiam organis, quibus sermo exprimi non potest, 26 adfici animos in diversum habitum sentiamus. Cor-

¹ Music includes dancing.

that the uneducated were far from the company of the Muses and Graces. But let us discuss the advantages which our future orator may reasonably expect to derive from the study of Music. 22

Music has two modes of expression in the voice and in the body;¹ for both voice and body require to be controlled by appropriate rules. Aristoxenus divides music, in so far as it concerns the voice, into rhythm and melody, the one consisting in measure, the latter in sound and song. Now I ask you whether it is not absolutely necessary for the orator to be acquainted with all these methods of expression which are concerned firstly with gesture, secondly with the arrangement of words and thirdly with the inflexions of the voice, of which a great variety are required in pleading. Otherwise we must assume that structure and the euphonious combination of sounds are necessary only for poetry, lyric and otherwise, but superfluous in pleading, or that unlike music, oratory has no interest in the variation of arrangement and sound to suit the demands of the case. But eloquence does vary both tone and rhythm, 23 expressing sublime thoughts with elevation, pleasing thoughts with sweetness, and ordinary with gentle utterance, and in every expression of its art is in sympathy with the emotions of which it is the mouth-piece. It is by the raising, lowering or inflexion of the voice that the orator stirs the emotions of his hearers, and the measure, if I may repeat the term, of voice or phrase differs according as we wish to rouse the indignation or the pity of the judge. For, as we know, different emotions are roused even by the various musical instruments, which are incapable of reproducing speech. Further the 26

QUINTILIAN

poris quoque aptus et decens motus, qui dicitur εἰρηθμία, et est necessarius nec aliunde peti potest; in quo pars actionis non minima consistit, qua de 27 re sepositus nobis est locus. Age, non habebit imprimis curam vocis orator? Quid tam musices proprium? Sed ne haec quidem praesumenda pars est. Uno interim contenti simus exemplo C.
Gracchi, praecipui suorum temporum oratoris, cui contionanti consistens post eum musicus fistula, quam τοράπιον vocant, modos, quibus deberet intendi, 28 monstrabat. Haec ei cura inter turbidissimas actiones vel terrenti optimates vel iam timenti fuit.
Libet propter quosdam imperitiores etiam crassiore, ut vocant, Musa dubitationem huius utilitatis 29 eximere. Nam poetas certe legendos oratori futuro concesserint: num igitur hi sine musice? ac si quis tam caecus animi est, ut de aliis dubitet, illos certe, qui carmina ad lyram composuerunt. Haec diutius forent dicenda, si hoc studium velut novum praeci-30 perem. Cum vero antiquitus usque a Chirone atque Achille ad nostra tempora apud omnes, qui modo legitimam disciplinam non sint perosi, duraverit,

¹ Book XI. chap. iii.

motion of the body must be suitable and becoming, or as the Greeks call it eurythmic, and this can only be secured by the study of music. This is a most important department of eloquence, and will receive separate treatment in this work.¹ To proceed, an orator will assuredly pay special attention to his voice, and what is so specially the concern of music as this? Here too I must not anticipate a later section of this work, and will content myself by citing the example of Gaius Gracchus, the leading orator of his age, who during his speeches had a musician standing behind him with a pitchpipe, or tonarion as the Greeks call it, whose duty it was to give him the tones in which his voice was to be pitched. Such was the attention which he paid to this point even in the midst of his most turbulent speeches, when he was terrifying the patrician party and even when he had begun to fear their power. I should like for the benefit of the uninstructed, those "creatures of the heavier Muse," as the saying is, to remove all doubts as to the value of music. They will at any rate admit that the poets should be read by our future orator. But can they be read without some knowledge of music? Or if any of my critics be so blind as to have some doubts about other forms of poetry, can the lyric poets at any rate be read without such knowledge? If there were anything novel in my insistence on the study of music, I should have to treat the matter at greater length. But in view of the fact that the study of music has, from those remote times when Chiron taught Achilles down to our own day, continued to be studied by all except those who have a hatred for any regular course of study, it

QUINTILIAN

non est committendum, ut illa dubia faciam defensi-31 onis sollicitudine. Quamvis autem satis iam ex ipsis, quibus sum modo usus, exemplis credam esse manifestum, quae mihi et quatenus musice placeat, apertius tamen profitendum puto, non hanc a me praecipui, quae nunc in scenis effeminata et impudicis modis fracta non ex parte minima, si quid in nobis virilis roboris manebat, excidit, sed qua laudes fortium canebantur, quaque ipsi fortes canebant; nec psalteria et spadicæ, etiam virginibus probis recusanda, sed cognitionem rationis, quae ad mo-vandos leniendosque adfectus plurimum valet.
32 Nam et Pythagoran accepimus concitatos ad vim pudicæ domui adferendam iuvenes, iussa mutare in spondeum modos tibicina, composuisse; et Chry-sippus etiam nutricum illi, quae adhibetur infantibus, 33 adlectationi suum quoddam carmen assignat. Est etiam non inerudite ad declamandum ficta materia, in qua ponitur tibicen, qui sacrificanti Phrygium cecinerat, acto illo in insaniam et per praecipitia delato accusari, quod causa mortis extiterit; quae si dici debet ab oratore nec dici citra scientiam would be a mistake to seem to cast any doubt upon its value by showing an excessive zeal in its defence. It will, however, I think be sufficiently clear from the examples I have already quoted, what I regard as the value and the sphere of music in the training of an orator. Still I think I ought to be more emphatic than I have been in stating that the music which I desire to see taught is not our modern music, which has been emasculated by the lascivious melodies of our effeminate stage and has to no small extent destroyed such manly vigour as we still possessed. No, I refer to the music of old which was employed to sing the praises of brave men and was sung by the brave themselves. I will have none of your psalteries and viols, that are unfit even for the use of a modest girl. Give me the knowledge of the principles of music, which have power to excite or assuage the emotions of mankind. We are told that Pythagoras on one occasion, when some young men were led astray by their passions to commit an outrage on a respectable family, calmed them by ordering the piper to change her strain to a spondaic measure, while Chrysippus selects a special tune to be used by nurses to entice their little charges to sleep. Further I may point out that among the fictitious themes employed in declamation is one, doing no little credit to its author's learning, in which it is supposed that a piper is accused of manslaughter because he had played a tune in the Phrygian mode as an accompaniment to a sacrifice, with the result that the person officiating went mad and flung himself over a precipice. If an orator is expected to declaim on such a theme as this, which cannot possibly be handled without some knowledge musicæ potest, quomodo non hanc quoque artem necessariam esse operi nostro vel iniqui consentient?

QUINTILIAN

34 In geometria partem fatentur esse utilem teneris aetatibus. Agitari namque animos et acui ingenia et celeritatem percipiendi venire inde concedunt, sed prodesse eam non ut ceteras artes, eum perceptæ sint, sed cum discatur, existimant: ea vulgaris 35 opinio est. Nec sine causa summi viri etiam impensam huic scientiæ operam dederunt. Nam cum sit geometria divisa in numeros atque formas, numerorum quidem notitia non oratori modo, sed cuicumque saltem primis litteris erudito necessaria est. In causis vero vel frequentissime versari solet; in quibus actor, non dico, si circa summas trepidat, sed si digitorum saltem incerto aut indecoro gestu
36 a computatione dissentit, iudicatur indoctus. Illa vero linearis ratio et ipsa quidem cadit frequenter in causas (nam de terminis mensurisque sunt lites), sed habet maiorem quandam aliam cum arte oratoria 37 cognationem. Iam primum ordo est geometriæ necessarius; nonne et eloquentiæ? Ex prioribus geometria probat insequentia, ex certis incerta; nonne id in dicendo facimus? Quid? illa propositarum quaestionum conclusio non fere tota constat of music, how can my critics for all their prejudice fail to agree that music is a necessary element in the education of an orator?

¹ Geometry here includes all mathematics.

² There was a separate symbol for each number, depending on the hand used and the position of the fingers. See Class. Review, 1911, p. 72.

As regards geometry,¹ it is granted that portions of 34 this science are of value for the instruction of children :
 for admittedly it exercises their minds, sharpens their wits and generates quickness of perception.
 But it is considered that the value of geometry resides in the process of learning, and not as with other sciences in the knowledge thus acquired.
 Such is the general opinion. But it is not without 35 good reason that some of the greatest men have devoted special attention to this science. Geometry has two divisions; one is concerned with numbers, the other with figures. Now knowledge of the former is a necessity not merely to the orator, but to any one who has had even an elementary education.
 Such knowledge is frequently required in actual cases, in which a speaker is regarded as deficient in education, I will not say if he hesitates in making a calculation, but even if he contradicts the calculation which he states in words by making an uncertain or inappropriate gesture with his fingers.² Again linear geometry is frequently required in 36 cases, as in lawsuits about boundaries and measurements. But geometry and oratory are related in a yet more important way than this. In the first 37 place logical development is one of the necessities of geometry. And is it not equally a necessity for oratory? Geometry arrives at its conclusions from definite premises, and by arguing from what is certain proves what was previously uncertain. Is not this just what we do in speaking? Again are not the problems of geometry almost entirely solved by the syllogismis? Propter quod plures invenias, qui dialecticae similem quam qui rhetoricae fateantur hanc artem. Verum et orator etiamsi raro non 38 tamen nunquam probabit dialectice. Nam et syllogismo, si res poseet, utetur et certe enthymemate, qui rhetoricus est syllogismus. Denique probationum quae sunt potentissimae γραμμικαὶ ἀποδείξεις vulgo dicuntur: quid autem magis oratio quam 39 probationem petit? Falsa quoque veris similia geometrica ratione apprehendit. Fit hoc et in numeris per quasdam, quas ψευδογραφίας vocant, quibus pueri ludere solebamus. Sed alia maiora sunt. Nam quis non ita proponenti credat?

QUINTILIAN

 “Quorum locorum extremae lineae eandem mensuram colligunt, eorum spatium quoque, quod iis lineis 40 continetur, par sit necesse est.” At id falsum est.
 Nam plurimum refert, cuius sit formae ille circuitus; reprehensive a geometris sunt historici, qui magnitudinem insularum satis significari navigationis ambitu crediderunt. Nam ut quaeque forma per-41 fectissima ita capacissima est. Ideoque illa circum-currens linea si efficiet orbem, quae forma est in planis maxime perfecta, amplius spatium complectetur quam si quadratum paribus oris efficiat, rursus quadrata triangulis, triangula ipsa plus aequis lateri-42 bus quam inaequalibus. Sed alia forsitan obscuriora;

¹ See v. xiv. 1 for an example from the Pro Ligario.
 “The cause was then doubtful, as there were arguments on both sides. Now, however, we must regard that cause as the better, to which the gods have given their approval.”

syllogistic method, a fact which makes the majority assert that geometry bears a closer resemblance to logic than to rhetoric? But even the orator will sometimes, though rarely, prove his point by formal logic. For, if necessary, he will use the syllogism, 38 and he will certainly make use of the enthymeme which is a rhetorical form of syllogism.¹ Further the most absolute form of proof is that which is generally known as linear demonstration. And what is the aim of oratory if not proof? Again oratory 39 sometimes detects falsehoods closely resembling the truth by the use of geometrical methods. An example of this may be found in connexion with numbers in the so-called pseudographs, a favourite amusement in our boyhood.² But there are more important points to be considered. Who is there who would not accept the following proposition?
 "When the lines bounding two figures are equal in length, the areas contained within those lines are equal." But this is false, for everything depends on 40 the shape of the figure formed by these lines, and historians have been taken to task by geometers for believing the time taken to circumnavigate an island to be a sufficient indication of its size. For the space enclosed is in proportion to the perfection of the figure. Consequently if the bounding line 41 to which we have referred form a circle, the most perfect of all plane figures, it will contain a greater space than if the same length of line took the form of a square, while a square contains a greater space than a triangle having the same total perimeter, and an equilateral triangle than a scalene triangle. But 42 there are other points which perhaps present greater

² It is not known to what Quintilian refers.

QUINTILIAN

nos facillimum etiam imperitis sequamur experimentum. Iugeri mensuram ducentos et quadraginta longitudinis pedes esse dimidioque in latitudinem patere, non fere quisquam est qui ignoret, et qui sit circuitus et quantum campi claudat, colligere expeditum. At centeni et octogeni in quamque partem pedes idem spatium extremitatis sed multo amplius clausae quattuor lineis areae faciunt. Id si computare quem piget, brevioribus numeris idem discat. Nam deni in quadram pedes, quadraginta per oram, intra centum erunt. At si quini deni per latera, quini in fronte sint, ex illo, quod amplectuntur, quartam deducunt eodem circumduetu. Si vero porrecti utrinque undeviceni singulis distent, non plures intus quadratos habebunt, quam per quot longitudo ducetur; quae circumibit autem linea, eiusdem spatii erit, cuius ea quae centum continet. Ita quidquid formae quadrati detraxeris, amplitudini quoque peribit. Ergo etiam id fieri potest, ut maiore circuitu minor loci amplitudo claudatur. Haec in planis. Nam in collibus vallibusque etiam imperito patet plus soli esse quam caeli. Quid quod se eadem geometria tollit ad rationem usque mundi? in qua, cum siderum certos constitutosque cursus numeris docet, discimus nihil esse inordinatum atque fortuitum; quod ipsum nonnunquam pertinere ad oratorem potest. An vero, enim Pericles difficulty. I will take an example which is easy even for those who have no knowledge of geometry. There is scarcely anyone who does not know that the Roman acre is 240 feet long and 120 feet broad, and its total perimeter and the area enclosed can easily be calculated. But a square of 180 feet 43 gives the same perimeter, yet contains a much larger area within its four sides. If the calculation prove irksome to any of my readers, he can learn the same truth by employing smaller numbers. Take a ten foot square: its perimeter is forty feet and it contains 100 square feet. But if the dimensions be fifteen feet by five, while the perimeter is the same, the area enclosed is less by a quarter. On the other 44 hand if we draw a parallelogram measuring nineteen feet by one, the number of square feet enclosed will be no greater than the number of linear feet making the actual length of the parallelogram, though the perimeter will be exactly as that of the figure which encloses an area of 100 square feet. Consequently the area enclosed by four lines will decrease in proportion as we depart from the form of a square. It further 45 follows that it is perfectly possible for the space enclosed to be less, though the perimeter be greater. This applies to plane figures only: for even one who is no mathematician can see that, when we have to consider hills or valleys, the extent of ground enclosed is greater than the sky over it. But geometry soars 46 still higher to the consideration of the system of the universe: for by its calculations it demonstrates the fixed and ordained courses of the stars, and thereby we acquire the knowledge that all things are ruled by order and destiny, a consideration which may at times be of value to an orator. When 47

QUINTILIAN

Athenienses solis obscuracione territos redditus eius rei causis metu liberavit, aut cum Sulpicius ille Gallus in exercitu L. Paulli de lunae defectione disseruit, ne velut prodigio divinitus facto militum animi terrentur, non videtur usus esse oratoris officio? Quod si Nicias in Sicilia scisset, non eodem confusus metu pulcherrimum Atheniensium exercitum perdidisset; sicut Dion, cum ad destruendam Dionysii tyrannidem venit, non est tali casu deteritus. Sint extra licet usus bellici, transeamusque, quod Archimedes unus obsidionem Syracusarum in longius traxit. Illud utique iam proprium ad efficiendum quod intendimus, plurimas quaestiones, quibus difficilior alia ratione explicatio est, ut de ratione dividendi, de sectione in infinitum, de celeritate augenda, linearibus illis probationibus solvi solere; ut, si est oratori (quod proximus demonstrabit liber) de omnibus rebus dicendum, nullo modo sine geometria esse possit orator.

XI. Dandum aliquid comoedo quoque, dum catus, qua pronuntiandi scientiam futurus orator desiderat. Non enim puerum, quem in hoc instituimus, aut femineae vocis exilitate frangi volo aut seniliter tremere. Nec vitia ebrietatis effingat

¹ Quintilian is perhaps referring to the measurement of the area of an irregular figure by dividing it into a number of small equal and regular figures the size of which was calculable.

Pericles dispelled the panic caused at Athens by the eclipse of the sun by explaining the causes of the phenomenon, or Sulpicius Gallus discoursed on the eclipse of the moon to the army of Lucius Paulus to prevent the soldiers being seized with terror at what they regarded as a portent sent by heaven, did not they discharge the function of an orator? If Nicias 48 had known this when he commanded in Sicily, he would not have shared the terror of his men nor lost the finest army that Athens ever placed in the field. Dion for instance when he came to Syracuse to overthrow the tyranny of Dionysius, was not frightened away by the occurrence of a similar phenomenon. However we are not concerned with the uses of geometry in war and need not dwell upon the fact that Archimedes singlehanded succeeded in appreciably prolonging the resistance of Syracuse when it was besieged. It will suffice for our purpose that 49 there are a number of problems which it is difficult to solve in any other way, which are as a rule solved by these linear demonstrations, such as the method of division, section to infinity,¹ and the ratio of increase in velocity. From this we may conclude that, if as we shall show in the next book an orator has to speak on every kind of subject, he can under no circumstances dispense with a knowledge of geometry.

XI. The comic actor will also claim a certain amount of our attention, but only in so far as our future orator must be a master of the art of delivery. For I do not of course wish the boy, whom we are training to this end, to talk with the shrillness of a woman or in the tremulous accents of old age. Nor 2 for that matter must he ape the vices of the

QUINTILIAN

neque servili vernilitate imbuatur nec amoris, avaritiae, metus discat adfectum; quae neque oratori sunt necessaria et mentem, praecipue in aetate prima 3 teneram adhuc et rudem, inficiunt. Nam frequens imitatio transit in mores. Ne gestus quidem omnis ac motus a comoedis petendus est. Quanquam enim utrumque eorum ad quendam modum praestare debet orator, plurimum tamen aberit a scenico, nec vultu nec manu nec excursionibus nimius. Nam si qua in his ars est dicentium, ea prima est, ne ars esse videatur.

4 Quod est igitur huius doctoris officium? In primis vitia si qua sunt oris emendet, ut expressa sint verba, ut suis quaeque litterae sonis enuntientur. Quarundam enim vel exilitate vel pinguitudine nimia laboramus, quasdam velut aciores parum efficimus et aliis non dissimilibus sed quasi hebetioribus per drunkard, or copy the cringing manners of a slave, or learn to express the emotions of love, avarice or fear. Such accomplishments are not necessary to an orator and corrupt the mind, especially while it is still pliable and unformed. For repeated imitation passes into habit. Nor yet again must we adopt all the gestures and movements of the actor. Within certain limits the orator must be a master of both, but he must rigorously avoid staginess and all extravagance of facial expression, gesture and gait. For if an orator does command a certain art in such matters, its highest expression will be in the concealment of its existence.
5 mutamus. Quippe et Rho litterae, qua Demosthenes quoque laboravit, Labda succedit (quarum vis est apud nos quoque); et cum c ac similiter g non 6 evaluerunt, in t ac d molliuntur. Ne illas quidem circa s litteram delicias hic magister feret, nec verba in faucibus patietur audiri nec oris inanitate resonare

¹ The mis-spelling of flagro as fraglo exemplifies the confusion to which Quintilian refers. A similar, though correct, substitution is found in lavacrum for lavaclum, etc. See Lindsay, Lat. Langu., pp. 92 ff.

What then is the duty of the teacher whom we have borrowed from the stage? In the first place he must correct all faults of pronunciation, and see that the utterance is distinct, and that each letter has its proper sound. There is an unfortunate tendency in the case of some letters to pronounce them either too thinly or too fully, while some we find too harsh and fail to pronounce sufficiently, substituting others whose sound is similar but somewhat duller. For instance, lambda is substituted for rho, a letter which was always a stumbling-block to Demosthenes; our l and r have of course the same value.¹ Similarly when c and g are not given their full value, they are softened into t and d. Again our teacher must not tolerate the affected pronunciation of *s*² with which we are painfully familiar, nor suffer words to be uttered from the depths of the throat or ² Quintilian perhaps alludes to the habit of prefixing i to initial st, sp, sc found in inscriptions of the later Empire. See Lindsay, op. cit. p. 102.

QUINTILIAN

nec, quod minime sermoni puro conveniat, simplicem voeis naturam pleniore quodam sono circumliniri, 7 quod Graeci καταπεπλασμένοι dicunt. Sic appellatur cantus tiliarum, quae praeclusis quibus elarescunt foraminibus, recto modo exitu graviolem spiritum 8 reddunt. Curabit etiam, ne extremae syllabae in-tercidant, ut par sibi sermo sit, ut, quotiens excla-mandum erit, lateris conatus sit ille non capitis, ut gestus ad vocem, vultus ad gestum accommodetur.
9 Observandum erit etiam, ut recta sit facies dicentis, ne labra distorqueantur, ne immodicus hiatus rictum discindat, ne supinus vultus, ne deiectioni in terram oculi, ne inclinata utrolibet cervix. Nam frons pluri-10 bus generibus peccat. Vidi multos, quorum super-cilia ad singulos voeis conatus adlevarentur, aliorum constricta, aliorum etiam dissidentia, cum alterum in verticem tenderent, altero paene oculus ipse preme-11 retur. Infinitum autem, ut mox dicemus, in his quoque rebus momentum est; et nihil potest placere quod non deceat.

12 Debet etiam docere comoedus, quomodo narrandum, qua sit auctoritate suadendum, qua concitatione consurgat ira, qui flexus deceat miserationem. Quod ita optime faciet, si certos ex comoediis elegerit rolled out hollow-mouthed, or permit the natural sound of the voice to be over-laid with a fuller sound, a fault fatal to purity of speech; the Greeks give this peculiarity the name καταπεπλασμένον (plastered over), a term applied to the 7 tone produced by a pipe, when the stops which produce the treble notes are closed, and a bass note is produced through the main aperture only. He 8 will also see that final syllables are not clipped, that the quality of speech is continuously maintained, that when the voice is raised, the strain falls upon the lungs and not the mouth, and that gesture and voice are mutually appropriate. He will also insist 9 that the speaker faces his audience, that the lips are not distorted nor the jaws parted to a grin, that the face is not thrown back, nor the eyes fixed on the ground, nor the neck slanted to left or right. For there are a variety of faults of facial expression. I have seen many, who raised their brows whenever 10 the voice was called upon for an effort, others who wore a perpetual frown, and yet others who could not keep their eyebrows level, but raised one towards the top of the head and depressed the other till it almost closed the eye. These are 11 details, but as I shall shortly show, they are of enormous importance, for nothing that is unbecoming can have a pleasing effect.

Our actor will also be required to show how a 12 narrative should be delivered, and to indicate the authoritative tone that should be given to advice, the excitement which should mark the rise of anger, and the change of tone that is characteristic of pathos. The best method of so doing is to select special passages from comedy appropriate for the locos et ad hoc maxime idoneos, id est, actionibus 13 similes. Idem autem non ad pronuntiandum modo utilissimi verum ad augendam quoque eloquentiam 14 maxime accommodati erunt. Et haec, dum infirma aetas maiora non capiet; eeterum, eum legere orationes oportebit, eum virtutes earum iam sentiet, tum mihi diligens aliquis ac peritus adsistat, neque solum lectionem formet, verum ediscere etiam electa ex iis cogat et ea dicere stantem clare et quemad-modum agere oportebit, ut protinus pronuntiationem, vocem, memoriam exerceat.

QUINTILIAN

15 Ne illos quidem reprehendendos puto, qui paulum etiam palaestricis vacaverunt. Non de his loquor, quibus pars vitae in oleo, pars in vino consumitur, qui corporum cura mentem obruerunt (hos enim abesse ab eo quem instituimus quam longissime 16 velim); sed nomen est idem iis, a quibus gestus motusque formantur, ut recta sint brachia, ne in-doctae rusticae manus, ne status indecorus, ne qua in proferendis pedibus inscitia, ne caput oculique ab 17 alia corporis inclinatione dissideant. Nam neque haec esse in parte pronuntiationis negaverit quisquam, neque ipsam pronuntiationem ab oratore secernet, et certe, quod facere oporteat, non indig-nandum est discere, cum praesertim haec chironomia, quae est, ut nomine ipso declaratur, lex gestus, et ab illis temporibus heroicis orta sit et a summis purpose, that is to say, resembling the speeches of a pleader. These are not only most useful in train- 13 ing the delivery, but are admirably adapted to increase a speaker's eloquence. These are the 14 methods to be employed while the pupil is too young to take in more advanced instruction; but when the time has come for him to read speeches, and as soon as he begins to appreciate their merits, he should have a careful and efficient teacher at his side not merely to form his style of reading aloud, but to make him learn select passages by heart and declaim them standing in the manner which actual pleading would require: thus he will simultaneously train delivery, voice and memory.

I will not blame even those who give a certain 15 amount of time to the teacher of gymnastics. I am not speaking of those, who spend part of their life in rubbing themselves with oil and part in wine-bibbing, and kill the mind by over-attention to the body: indeed, I would have such as these kept as far as possible from the boy whom we are training. But we give the same name to those who 16 form gesture and motion so that the arms may be extended in the proper manner, the management of the hands free from all trace of rusticity and inelegance, the attitude becoming, the movements of the feet appropriate and the motions of the head and eyes in keeping with the poise of the body. No 17 one will deny that such details form a part of the art of delivery, nor divorce delivery from oratory; and there can be no justification for disdaining to learn what has got to be done, especially as chironomy, which, as the name shows, is the law of gesture, originated in heroic times and met with the

QUINTILIAN

Graeciae viris atque ipso etiam Socrate probata, a Platone quoque in parte civilium posita virtutum et a Chrysippo in praeceptis de liberorum educatione 18 compositis non omitta. Nam Laedaemonios quidem etiam saltationem quandam tanquam ad bella quoque utilem habuisse inter exercitationes accepimus. Neque id veteribus Romanis dedecori fuit; argumentum est sacerdotum nomine ac religione durans ad hoc tempus saltatio, et illa in tertio Cicronis de Oratore libro verba Crassi, quibus praecipit, ut orator utatur laterum inclinatione forti ac virili, non a scena et histrionibus sed ab armis aut etiam a palaestra; cuius disciplinae usus in nostram usque aetatem sine re-
19 prehensione descendit. A me tamen nec ultra pueriles annos retinebitur nec in his ipsis diu. Neque enim gestum oratoris componi ad similitudinem saltationis volo, sed subesse aliquid ex hac exercitatione puerili, unde nos non id agentes furtim decor ille discantibus traditus prosequatur.

XII. Quaeri solet, an, etiamsi discenda sint haec, eodem tempore tamen tradi omnia et percipi possint. Negant enim quidam, quia confundatur animus ac fatigetur tot disciplinis in diversum tendentibus, ad quas nec mens nec corpus nec dies ipse sufficiat, et approval of the greatest Greeks, not excepting^{app} Socrates himself, while it was placed by Plato among the virtues of a citizen and included by Chrysippus in his instructions relative to the education of children. We are told that the Spartans even 18 regarded a certain form of dance as a useful element in military training. Nor again did the ancient Romans consider such a practice as disgraceful: this is clear from the fact that priestly and ritual dances have survived to the present day, while Cicero in the third book of his *de Oratore*¹ quotes the words of Crassus, in which he lays down the principle that the orator "should learn to move his body in a bold and manly fashion derived not from actors or the stage, but from martial and even from gymnastic exercises." And such a method of training has persisted uncensured to our own time. In my 19 opinion, however, such training should not extend beyond the years of boyhood, and even boys should not devote too much time to it. For I do not wish the gestures of oratory to be modelled on those of the dance. But I do desire that such boyish exercises should continue to exert a certain influence, and that something of the grace which we acquired as learners should attend us in after life without our being conscious of the fact.

¹ lix. 220.

XII. The question is not infrequently asked, as to whether, admitting that these things ought to be learned, it is possible for all of them to be taught and taken in simultaneously. There are some who say that this is impossible on the ground that the mind is confused and tired by application to so many studies of different tendencies: neither the intelligence nor the physique of our pupils, nor

QUINTILIAN

- 2 Græce maxime patiatur hoc ætas robustior, pueriles annos onerari non oporteat. Sed non satis perspicunt, quantum natura humani ingenii valeat; quæ ita est agilis ac velox, sic in omnem partem, ut ita dixerim, spectat, ut ne possit quidem aliquid agere tantum unum, in plura vero non eodem die modo, sed eodem temporis momento vim suam intendat.
- 3 An vero citharoedi non simul et memoriae et sono vocis et plurimis flexibus serviunt, cum interim alios nervos dextra percurrunt, alios laeva trahunt, continent, præbent, ne pes quidem otiosus certam legem temporum servat, et hæc pariter omnia?
- 4 Quid? nos agendi subita necessitate deprehensi nonne alia dicimus, alia providemus, cum pariter inventio rerum, electio verborum, compositio, gestus, pronuntiatio, vultus, motus desiderentur? Quæ si velut sub uno conatu tam diversa parent simul, cur non pluribus curis horas partiamur? cum præsertim reficiat animos ac reparet varietas ipsa, contraque sit aliquanto difficilium in labore uno perseverare. Ideo et stilus lectione requiescit, et ipsius lectionis
- 5 taedium vicibus levatur. Quamlibet multa egerimus, quodam tamen modo recentes sumus ad id quod incipimus. Quis non obtundi potest, si per totum diem cuiuscunque artis unum magistrum ferat? Mutatione recreabitur sicut in cibis, quorum diversithe time at our disposal are sufficient, they say, and even though older boys may be strong enough, it is a sin to put such a burden on the shoulders of childhood. These critics show an insufficient appre- 2 ciation of the capacities of the human mind, which is so swift and nimble and versatile, that it cannot be restricted to doing one thing only, but insists on devoting its attention to several different subjects not merely in one day, but actually at one and the same time. Do not harpists simultaneously exert 3 the memory and pay attention to the tone and inflexions of the voice, while the right hand runs over certain strings and the left plucks, stops or releases others, and even the foot is employed in beating time, all these actions being performed at the same moment? Again, do not we ourselves, 4 when unexpectedly called upon to plead, speak while we are thinking what we are to say next, invention of argument, choice of words, rhythm, gesture, delivery, facial expression and movement all being required simultaneously? If all these things can be done with one effort in spite of their diversity, why should we not divide our hours among different branches of study? We must remember that variety serves to refresh and restore the mind, and that it is really considerably harder to work at one subject without intermission. Consequently we should give the pen a rest by turning to read, and relieve the tedium of reading by changes of subject. However manifold our activities, in a certain sense 5 we come fresh to each new subject. Who can maintain his attention, if he has to listen for a whole day to one teacher harping on the same subject, be it what it may? Change of studies is

QUINTILIAN

tate reficitur stomachus et pluribus minore fastidio 6 alitur. Aut dicant isti mihi, quae sit alia ratio discendi. Grammatico soli deserviamus, deinde geometrae tantum, omittamus interim quod didici-mus? mox transeamus ad musicum, excidant priora?
et cum Latinis studebimus litteris, non respiciamus ad Graecas, et, ut semel finiam, nihil faciamus nisi 7 novissimum? Cur non idem suademus agricolis, ne arva simul et vineta et oleas et arbustum colant, ne pratis et pecoribus et hortis et alvearibus avibusque accommodent curam? Cur ipsi aliquid forensibus negotiis, aliquid desideriis amicorum, aliquid rationibus domesticis, aliquid curae corporis, nonnihil voluptatibus cotidie damus? quarum nos una res quaelibet nihil intermittentes fatigaret. Adeo facilius est multa facere quam diu.

8 Illud quidem minime verendum est, ne laborem studiorum pueri difficiliter tolerant, neque enim ulla aetas minus fatigatur. Mirum sit forsitan, sed ex-9 perimentisprehendas. Nam et dociliora sunt ingenia, priusquam obdurerunt. Id vel hoc argumento patet, quod intra biennium, quam verba recte formare potuerunt, quamvis nullo instante, omnia fere loquuntur; at noviciis nostris per quot annos like change of foods: the stomach is refreshed by their variety and derives greater nourishment from variety of viands. If my critics disagree, let them 6 provide me with an alternative method. Are we first to deliver ourselves up to the sole service of the teacher of literature, and then similarly to the teacher of geometry, neglecting under the latter what was taught us by the former? And then are we to go on to the musician, forgetting all that we learned before? And when we study Latin literature, are we to do so to the exclusion of Greek? In fine, to have done with the matter once and for all, are we to do nothing except that which last comes to our hand? On this principle, why not advise 7 farmers not to cultivate corn, vines, olives and orchard trees at the same time? or from devoting themselves simultaneously to pastures, cattle, gardens, bees and poultry? Why do we ourselves daily allot some of our time to the business of the courts, some to the demands of our friends, some to our domestic affairs, some to the exercise of the body, and some even to our pleasures? Any one of these occupations, if pursued without interruption, would fatigue us. So much easier is it to do many things than to do one thing for a long time continuously.

We need have no fear at any rate that boys will 8 find their work too exhausting: there is no age more capable of enduring fatigue. The fact may be surprising, but it can be proved by experiment. For the mind is all the easier to teach before it is set. This 9 may be clearly proved by the fact that within two years after a child has begun to form words correctly, he can speak practically all without any pressure from outside. On the other hand how many years

QUINTILIAN

sermo Latinus repugnat. Magis scias, si quem iam robustum instituere litteris coeperis, non sine causa dici παιδομαθείς eos, qui in sua quidque arte optime 10 faciant. Et patientior est laboris natura pueris quam iuuenibus. Videlicet, ut corpora infantium nec casus, quo in terram totiens deferuntur, tam graviter adfligit nec illa per manus et genua reptatio nec post breve tempus continui lusus et totius diei discursus, quia pondus illis abest nec sese ipsi gravant: sic animi quoque, credo, quia minore conatu moventur nec suo nisu studiis insistunt, sed 11 formandos se tantummodo praestant, non similiter fatigantur. Praeterea secundum aliam aetatis illius facilitatem velut simplicius docentes sequuntur nec quae iam egerint metiuntur. Abest illis adhuc etiam laboris iudicium. Porro, ut frequenter experti sumus, minus adficit sensus fatigatio quam cogitatio.
12 Sed ne temporis quidem unquam plus erit, quia his aetatibus omnis in audiendo profectus est. Cum ad stilum secedet, cum generabit ipse aliquid atque componet, tum inchoare haec studia vel non vacabit 13 vel non libebit. Ergo cum grammaticus totum occupare diem non possit nec debeat, ne discantis animum taedio avertat, quibus potius studiis haec 14 temporum velut subsiciva donabimus? Nam nec ego consumi studentem in his artibus volo, nec it takes for our newly-imported slaves to become familiar with the Latin language. Try to teach an adult to read and you will soon appreciate the force of the saying applied to those who do everything connected with their art with the utmost skill "he started young!" Moreover boys stand the strain of work better than young men. Just as small children suffer less damage from their frequent falls, from their crawling on hands and knees and, a little later, from their incessant play and their running about from morn till eve, because they are so light in weight and have so little to carry, even so their minds are less susceptible of fatigue, because their activity calls for less effort and application to study demands no exertion of their own, since they are merely so much plastic material to be moulded by the teacher. And further owing to the general pliability of childhood, they follow their instructors with greater simplicity and without attempting to measure their own progress: for as yet they do not even appreciate the nature of their work. Finally, as I have often noticed, the senses are less affected by mere hard work than they are by hard thinking.

Moreover there will never be more time for such studies, since at this age all progress is made through listening to the teacher. Later when the boy has to write by himself, or to produce and compose something out of his own head, he will neither have the time nor the inclination for the exercises which we have been discussing. Since, then, the teacher of literature neither can nor ought to occupy the whole day, for fear of giving his pupil a distaste for work, what are the studies to which the spare time should preferably be devoted? For I do not wish the student to wear

QUINTILIAN

- moduletur aut ¹musicis notis cantica excipiat, nec utique ad minutissima usque geometriae opera descendat, non comoedum in pronuntiando nec saltatorem in gestu facio; quae si omnia exigerem, suppeditabat tamen tempus. Longa est enim, quae discit, aetas, et ego non de tardis ingeniis loquor.
- 15 Denique cur in his omnibus, quae discenda oratori futuro puto, eminuit Plato? qui non contentus disciplinis, quas praestare poterant Athenae, non Pythagoreorum, ad quos in Italiam navigaverat, Aegypti quoque sacerdotes adiit atque eorum arcana perdidicit.
- 16 Difficultatis patrocinia praeteximus segnitiae. Neque enim nobis operis amor est, nec, quia sit honesta ac rerum pulcherrima eloquentia, petitur ipsa, sed ad venalem usum et sordidum lucrum
- 17 accingimur. Dicant sine his in foro multi et adquirent, dum sit locupletior aliquis sordidae mercis negotiator et plus voci suae debeat praeco. Nec velim quidem lectorem dari mihi quid studia
- 18 referant computaturum. Qui vero imaginem ipsam eloquentiae divina quadam mente conceperit, quique illam (ut ait non ignobilis tragicus) reginam rerum orationem ponet ante oculos, fructumque non ex stipe advocationum sed ex animo suo et contempla-

¹ Pacuvius (Ribbeck, 177).

himself out in such pursuits: I would not have him sing or learn to read music or dive deep into the minuter details of geometry, nor need he be a finished actor in his delivery or a dancer in his gesture: if I did demand all these accomplishments, there would yet be time for them; the period allotted to education is long, and I am not speaking of duller wits. Why did Plato bear away the palm in all these branches of knowledge which in my opinion the future orator should learn? I answer, because he was not merely content with the teaching which Athens was able to provide or even with that of the Pythagoreans whom he visited in Italy, but even approached the priests of Egypt and made himself thoroughly acquainted with all their secret lore. 15

The plea of the difficulty of the subject is put forward merely to cloak our indolence, because we do not love the work that lies before us nor seek to win eloquence for our own because it is a noble art and the fairest thing in all the world, but gird up our loins for mercenary ends and for the winning of filthy lucre. Without such accomplishments many may speak in the courts and make an income; but it is my prayer that every dealer in the vilest merchandise may be richer than they and that the public crier may find his voice a more lucrative possession. And I trust that there is not one even among my readers who would think of calculating the monetary value of such studies. But he that has enough of the divine spark to conceive the ideal eloquence, he who, as the great tragic poet¹ says, regards "oratory" as "the queen of all the world" and seeks not the transitory gains of advocacy, but those stable and lasting rewards which his own soul and knowledge and 17 18

QUINTILIAN

tionem ac scientiam petet perpetuum illum ne fortunae subiectum, facile persuadebit sibi, ut tempora, quae spectaculis, campo, tesseris, otiosis denique sermonibus, ne dicam somno et conviviorum mora conteruntur, geometrae potius ac musico impendat, quanto plus delectationis habiturus quam ex illis 19 ineruditis voluptatibus. Dedit enim hoc providentia hominibus munus, ut honesta magis iuvarent. Sed nos haec ipsa dulcedo longius duxit. Haec enim ergo de studiis, quibus, antequam maiora capiat, puer instituendus est; proximus liber velut novum sumet exordium et ad rhetoris officia transibit.

contemplation can give, he will easily persuade himself to spend his time not, like so many, in the theatre or in the Campus Martius, in dicing or in idle talk, to say naught of the hours that are wasted in sleep or long drawn banqueting, but in listening rather to the geometrician and the teacher of music. For by this he will win a richer harvest of delight than can ever be gathered from the pleasures of the ignorant, since among the many gifts of providence to man not the least is this that the highest pleasure is the child of virtue. But the attractions of my theme 19 have led me to say overmuch. Enough of those studies in which a boy must be instructed, while he is yet too young to proceed to greater things! My next book will start afresh and will pass to the consideration of the duties of the teacher of rhetoric.

BOOK II

LIBER II

I. TENUIT consuetudo, quae cotidie magis invalescit, ut praeceptoribus eloquentiae, Latinis quidem semper sed etiam Graecis interim, discipuli serius quam ratio postulat, traderentur. Eius rei duplex causa est, quod et rhetores utique nostri suas partes omiserunt et grammatici alienas occupaverunt.

2 Nam et illi declamare modo et scientiam declamandi ac facultatem tradere officii sui ducunt, idque intra deliberativas iudicialesque materias (nam cetera ut professione sua minora despiciunt), et hi non satis credunt excepisse, quae relicta erant, (quo nomine gratia quoque iis habenda est), sed ad prosopopoeias usque ac suasorias, in quibus onus dicendi vel

3 maximum est, irrumpunt. Hinc ergo accedit, ut, quae alterius artis prima erant opera, facta sint alterius novissima, et aetas altioribus iam disciplinis debita in schola minore subsidat ac rhetoricen apud grammaticos exerceat. Ita, quod est maxime ridiculum, non ante ad declamandi magistrum mittendus videtur puer quam declamare sciat.

¹ suasoriae are declamations on deliberative themes (c.g. Hannibal deliberates whether he should cross the Alps).

BOOK II

I. THE custom has prevailed and is daily growing commoner of sending boys to the schools of rhetoric much later than is reasonable: this is always the case as regards Latin rhetoric and occasionally applies to Greek as well. The reason for this is twofold: the rhetoricians, more especially our own, have abandoned certain of their duties and the teachers of literature have undertaken tasks which rightly belong to others. For the rhetorician con- 2 siders that his duty is merely to declaim and give instruction in the theory and practice of declamation and confines his activities to deliberative and judicial themes, regarding all others as beneath the dignity of his profession; while the teacher of literature is not satisfied to take what is left him (and we owe him a debt of gratitude for this), but even presumes to handle declamations in character and deliberative themes,¹ tasks which impose the very heaviest burden on the speaker. Consequently subjects which once 3 formed the first stages of rhetoric have come to form the final stages of a literary education, and boys who are ripe for more advanced study are kept back in the inferior school and practise rhetoric under the direction of teachers of literature. Thus we get the absurd result that a boy is not regarded as fit to go on to the schools of declamation till he knows how to declaim.

QUINTILIAN

4 Nos suum cuique professioni modum demus. Et grammaticae (quam in Latinum transferentes litteraturam vocaverunt) fines suos norit, praesertim tantum ab hac appellationis suae paupertate, intra quam primi illi constitere, provecta; nam tenuis a fonte assumptis historicorum criticorumque viribus pleno iam satis alveo fluit, cum praeter rationem recte loquendi non parum alioqui copiosam prope omnium maximarum artium scientiam amplexa sit;

5 et rhetorice, cui nomen vis eloquendi dedit, officia sua non detrectet nec occupari gaudeat pertinentem ad se laborem, quae, dum opere eedit, iam paene

6 possessione depulsa est. Neque infitiabor, aliquem ex his, qui grammaticen profiteantur, eo usque scientiae progredi posse, ut ad hanc quoque tradenda sufficiat; sed cum id aget, rhetoris officio fungetur non suo.

7 Nos porro quaerimus, quando iis, quae rhetorice praecipit, percipiendis puer maturus esse videatur. In quo quidem non id est aestimandum, cuius quisque sit aetatis, sed quantum in studiis iam effecerit. Et ne diutius disseram, quando sit rhetori tradendus,

8 sic optime fini credo; cum poterit. Sed hoc ipsum ex superiore pendet quaestione. Nam si grammatices munus usque ad suasorias prorogatur, tardius

The two professions must each be assigned their 4 proper sphere. Grammaticæ, which we translate as the science of letters, must learn to know its own limits, especially as it has encroached so far beyond the boundaries to which its unpretentious name should restrict it and to which its earlier professors actually confined themselves. Springing from a tiny fountain-head, it has gathered strength from the historians and critics and has swollen to the dimensions of a brimming river, since, not content with the theory of correct speech, no inconsiderable subject, it has usurped the study of practically all the highest departments of knowledge. On the other hand 5 rhetoric, which derives its name from the power of eloquence, must not shirk its peculiar duties nor rejoice to see its own burdens shouldered by others.
 For the neglect of these is little less than a surrender of its birthright. I will of course admit that there 6 may be a few professors of literature who have acquired sufficient knowledge to be able to teach rhetoric as well ; but when they do so, they are performing the duties of the rhetorician, not their own.

A further point into which we must enquire con- 7 cerns the age at which a boy may be considered sufficiently advanced to profit by the instructions of the rhetorician. In this connexion we must consider not the boy's actual age, but the progress he has made in his studies. To put it briefly, I hold that the best answer to the question "When should a boy be sent to the school of rhetoric?" is this,
 "When he is fit." But this question is really depen- 8 dent on that previously raised. For if the duties of the teacher of literature are prolonged to include instruction in deliberative declamation, this will

QUINTILIAN

rhetore opus est. At si rhetor prima officia operis sui non recusat, a narrationibus statim et laudandi 9 vituperandique opusculis cura eius desideratur. An ignoramus antiquis hoc fuisse ad augendam eloquentiam genus exercitationis, ut theses dicerent et communes locos et cetera citra complexum rerum personarumque, quibus verae fictaeque controversiae continentur? Ex quo palam est, quam turpiter deserat eam partem rhetorices institutio, quam et 10 primam habuit et diu solam. Quid autem est ex iis, de quibus supra dixi, quod non eum in alia, quae sunt propria rhetorum, tum certe in illud iudiciale causae genus incidat? An non in foro narrandum 11 est? qua in parte nescio an sit vel plurimum. Non laus ac vituperatio certaminibus illis frequenter inseritur? Non communes loci, sive qui sunt in vitia directi, quales legimus a Cicerone compositos, seu quibus quaestiones generaliter tractantur, quales sunt editi a Quinto quoque Hortensio: ut, Silne parvis argumentis credendum, et pro testibus et in 12 testes, in mediis litium medullis versantur? Arma sunt haec quodammodo praeparanda semper, ut iis, cum res poseet, utare. Quae qui pertinere ad ora-

¹ communes loci = passages dealing with some general principle or theme. For theses see II. iv. 24.

² controversiae are declamations on controversial or judicial themes. A general rule or law is stated: then a special case, which has to be solved in accordance with the law. An abbreviated controversia is to be found in I. x. 33, and they occur frequently hereafter (cp. esp. III. vi. 96).

postpone the need for the rhetorician. On the other hand if the rhetorician does not refuse to undertake the first duties of his task, his instruction will be required from the moment the boy begins to compose narratives and his first attempts at passages of praise or denunciation. We know that the orators of earlier days improved their eloquence by declaiming themes and common-places¹ and other forms of rhetorical exercises not involving particular circumstances or persons such as provide the material for real or imaginary causes.² From this we can clearly see what a scandalous dereliction of duty it is for the schools of rhetoric to abandon this department of their work, which was not merely its first, but for a long time its sole task. What is there in those exercises of which I have just spoken that does not involve matters which are the special concern of rhetoric and further are typical of actual legal cases? Have we not to narrate facts in the law-courts? Indeed I am not sure that this is not the most important department of rhetoric in actual practice. Are not eulogy and denunciation frequently introduced in the course of the contests of the courts? Are not common-places frequently inserted in the very heart of lawsuits, whether, like those which we find in the works of Cicero, they are directed against vice, or, like those published by Quintus Hortensius, deal with questions of general interest such as "whether small points of argument should carry weight," or are employed to defend or impugn the credibility of witnesses? These are weapons which we should always have stored in our armoury ready for immediate use as occasion may demand. The critic who denies that tionem non putabit, is ne statuum quidem inchoari eredet, cum eius membra fundentur. Neque hanc (ut aliqui putabunt) festinationem meam sic quisquam calumniatur, tanquam eum, qui sit rhetori traditus, abducendum protinus a grammaticis putem.

QUINTILIAN

13 Dabuntur et illis tum quoque tempora sua, neque erit verendum, ne binis praeceptoribus oneretur puer. Non enim crescet sed dividetur, qui sub uno miscbatur, labor, et erit sui quisque operis magister utilior; quod adhuc obtinent Graeci, a Latinis omis- sum est, et fieri videtur excusate, quia sunt qui labori isti successerint.

II. Ergo cum ad eas in studiis vires pervenerit puer, ut, quae prima esse praecepta rhetorum diximus, mente consequi possit, tradendus eius artis magistris erit; quorum in primis inspicere mores
2 oportebit. Quod ego non idcirco potissimum in hac parte tractare sum aggressus, quia non in ceteris quoque doctoribus idem hoc examinandum quam diligentissime putem, sicut testatus sum libro priore; sed quod magis necessariam eius rei mentionem
3 facit aetas ipsa discentium. Nam et adulti fere pueri ad hos praeceptores transferuntur et apud eos iuvenes etiam facti perseverant; ideoque maior such matters concern an orator is one who will refuse to believe that a statue is being begun when its limbs are actually being cast. Some will think that I am in too great a hurry, but let no one accuse me of thinking that the pupil who has been entrusted to the rhetorician should forthwith be withdrawn from the teacher of literature. The latter will still have certain hours allotted him, and there is no reason to fear that a boy will be overloaded by receiving instruction from two different masters. It will not mean any increase of work, but merely the division among two masters of the studies which were previously indiscriminately combined under one: and the efficiency of either teacher will be increased. This method is still in vogue among the Greeks, but has been abandoned by us, not perhaps without some excuse, as there were others ready to step into the rhetorician's shoes. 13

II. As soon therefore as a boy has made sufficient progress in his studies to be able to follow what I have styled the first stage of instruction in rhetoric, he should be placed under a rhetorician. Our first task must be to enquire whether the teacher is of good character. The reason which leads me to deal with this subject in this portion of my work is not that I regard character as a matter of indifference where other teachers are concerned, (I have already shown how important I think it in the preceding book), but that the age to which the pupil has now attained makes the mention of this point especially necessary. For as a rule boys are on the verge of manhood when transferred to the teacher of rhetoric and continue with him even when they are young men: consequently we must spare no effort to secure 2

QUINTILIAN

adhibenda tum cura est, ut et teneriores annos ab iniuria sanctitas docentis custodiat et ferociores a 4 licentia gravitas deterreat. Neque vero sat est summam praestare abtinentiam, nisi disciplinae severitate convenientium quoque ad se mores astrinxerit.

5 Sumat igitur ante omnia parentis erga discipulos suos animum, ac succedere se in eorum locum, a quibus sibi liberi tradantur, existimet. Ipse nec habeat vitia nec ferat. Non austeritas eius tristes, non dissoluta sit comitas, ne inde odium hinc contemptus oriatur. Plurimus ei de honesto ac bono sermo sit; nam quo saepius monuerit, hoc rarius castigabit. Minime iracundus, nec tamen eorum, quae emendanda erunt, dissimulator, simplex in docendo, patiens laboris, assiduus potius quam
6 immodicus. Interrogantibus libenter respondeat, non interrogantes percontetur ultro. In laudandis discipulorum dictionibus nec malignus nec effusus, quia res altera taedium laboris, altera securitatem
7 parit. In emendando, quae corrigenda erunt, non acerbus minimeque contumeliosus; nam id quidem multos a proposito studendi fugat, quod quidam sic 8 obiurgant quasi oderint. Ipse aliquid immo multa cotidie dicat, quae secum auditores referant. Licet enim satis exemplorum ad imitandum ex lectione that the purity of the teacher's character should preserve those of tenderer years from corruption, while its authority should keep the bolder spirits from breaking out into licence. Nor is it sufficient 4 that he should merely set an example of the highest personal self-control ; he must also be able to govern the behaviour of his pupils by the strictness of his discipline.

Let him therefore adopt a parental attitude to his 5 pupils, and regard himself as the representative of those who have committed their children to his charge. Let him be free from vice himself and refuse to tolerate it in others. Let him be strict but not austere, genial but not too familiar : for austerity will make him unpopular, while familiarity breeds contempt. Let his discourse continually turn on what is good and honourable ; the more he admonishes, the less he will have to punish. He must control his temper without however shutting his eyes to faults requiring correction : his instruction must be free from affectation, his industry great, his demands 6 on his class continuous, but not extravagant. He must be ready to answer questions and to put them unasked to those who sit silent. In praising the recitations of his pupils he must be neither grudging nor over-generous : the former quality will give them a distaste for work, while the latter will produce a complacent self-satisfaction. In correcting 7 faults he must avoid sarcasm and above all abuse : for teachers whose rebukes seem to imply positive dislike discourage industry. He should declaim 8 daily himself and, what is more, without stint, that his class may take his utterances home with them. For however many models for imitation he may suppeditet, tamen viva illa, ut dicitur, vox alit plenius praecipueque eius praeceptoris, quem discipuli, si modo recte sunt instituti, et amant et verentur. Vix autem dici potest, quanto libentius imitemur eos, quibus favemus.

QUINTILIAN

9 Minime vero permittenda pueris, ut fit apud plerosque, adsurgendi exultandique in laudando licentia; quin etiam iuvenum modicum esse, cum audient, testimonium debet. Ita fiet, ut ex iudicio praeceptoris discipulus pendeat, atque id se dixisse 10 recte, quod ab eo probabitur, credat. Illa vero vitiosissima, quae iam humanitas vocatur, invicem qualiacunque laudandi, cum est indecora et theatralis et severe institutis scholis aliena, tum studiorum perniciosissima hostis. Supervacua enim videntur cura ac labor, parata, quidquid effuderint, 11 laude. Vultum igitur praeceptoris intueri tam, qui audiunt, debent, quam ipse qui dicit; ita enim probanda atque improbanda discernet, si stilo facultas 12 continget, auditione iudicium. At nunc praeconi atque succineti ad omnem clausulam non exsurgunt modo verum etiam excurrunt et cum indecora exultatione conclamant. Id mutuum est et ibi declamationis give them from the authors they are reading, it will still be found that fuller nourishment is provided by the living voice, as we call it, more especially when it proceeds from the teacher himself, who, if his pupils are rightly instructed, should be the object of their affection and respect. And it is scarcely possible to say how much more readily we imitate those whom we like.

I strongly disapprove of the prevailing practice of 9 allowing boys to stand up or leap from the seats in the expression of their applause. Young men, even when they are listening to others, should be temperate in manifesting their approval. If this be insisted upon, the pupil will depend on his instructor's verdict and will take his approval as a guarantee that he has spoken well. The worst 10 form of politeness, as it has come to be called, is that of mutual and indiscriminate applause, a practice which is unseemly, theatrical and unworthy of a decently disciplined school, in addition to being the worst foe to genuine study. For if every effusion is greeted with a storm of ready-made applause, care and industry come to be regarded as superfluous.
 The audience no less than the speaker should there- 11 fore keep their eyes fixed on their teacher's face, since thus they will learn to distinguish between what is praiseworthy and what is not: for just as writing gives facility, so listening begets the critical faculty. But in the schools of to-day we see boys 12 stooping forward ready to spring to their feet: at the close of each period they not merely rise, but rush forward with shouts of unseemly enthusiasm.
 Such compliments are mutual and the success of a declamation consists in this kind of applause. The

QUINTILIAN

- fortuna. Hinc tumor et vana de se persuasio usque adeo, ut illo condiscipulorum tumultu inflati, si parum a praeceptore laudentur, ipsi de illo male sentiant.
- 13 Sed se quoque praeceptores intente ac modeste audiri velint; non enim iudicio discipulorum dicere debet magister sed discipulus magistri. Quin, si fieri potest, intendendus animus in hoc quoque, ut perspiciat, quae quisque et quomodo laudet, et placere, quae bene dicet, non suo magis quam eorum nomine delectetur, qui recte iudicabunt.
- 14 Pueros adolescentibus permixtos sedere, non placet mihi. Nam etiamsi vir talis, qualem esse oportet studiis moribusque praepositum, modestam habere potest etiam iuventutem, tamen vel infirmitas a robustioribus separanda est, et carendum non solum crimine turpitudinis verum etiam suspicione.
- 15 Haec notanda breviter existimavi; nam ut absit ab ultimis vitiis ipse ac schola, ne praecipendum quidem credo. Ac si quis est, qui flagitia manifesta in eligendo filii praeceptore non vitet, iam hinc sciat cetera quoque, quae ad utilitatem iuventutis componere conamur, esse sibi haec parte ommissa supervacua.

III. Ne illorum quidem persuasio silentio transeresult is vanity and empty self-sufficiency, carried to such an extent that, intoxicated by the wild enthusiasm of their fellow-pupils, they conceive a spite against their master, if his praise does not come up to their expectation. But teachers must also insist 13 on receiving an attentive and quiet hearing from the class when they themselves declaim. For the master should not speak to suit his pupil's standard, but they should speak to suit his. Further he should, if possible, keep his eyes open to note the points which each boy praises and observe the manner in which he expresses his approval, and should rejoice that his words give pleasure not only for his own sake, but for that of those who show sound judgment in their appreciation.

I do not approve of boys sitting mixed with young 14 men. For even if the teacher be such an one as we should desire to see in charge of the morals and studies of the young, and can keep his youthful pupils under proper control, it is none the less desirable to keep the weaker members separate from the more mature, and to avoid not only the actual charge of corruption but the merest suspicion of it. I have thought it worth while to put my views on 15 this subject quite briefly. For I do not think it necessary even to warn the teacher that both he and his school must be free from the grosser vices. And should there be any father who does not trouble to choose a teacher for his son who is free from the obvious taint of immorality, he may rest assured that all the other precepts, which I am attempting to lay down for the benefit of our youth, will be absolutely useless to him, if he neglects this.

III. I do not think that I should pass by in silence

QUINTILIAN

unda est, qui, etiam cum idoneos rhetori pueros putaverunt, non tamen continuo tradendos eminentissimo credunt, sed apud minores aliquamdiu detinent, tanquam instituendis artibus magis sit apta mediocritas praeceptoris, cum ad intellectum atque ad imitationem facilius tum ad suscipiendas
2 elementorum molestias minus superba. Qua in re mihi non arbitror diu laborandum, ut ostendam, quanto sit melius optimis imbui, quanta in eluendis quae semel insederint vitiis difficultas consequatur, cum geminatum onus succedentes premat et quidem
3 dedocendi gravius ac prius quam docendi. Propter quod Timotheum clarum in arte tiliarum ferunt duplices ab iis, quos alius instituisset, solitum exigere mercedes, quam si rudes traderentur. Error tamen est in re duplex: unus, quod interim sufficere illos minores existimant, et bono sane stomacho contenti
4 sunt; quae quanquam est ipsa reprehensione digna securitas, tamen esset utenque tolerabilis, si eiusmodi praeceptores minus docerent non peius; alter ille etiam frequentior, quod eos, qui ampliorem dicendi facultatem sint consecuti, non putant ad minora descendere, idque interim fieri, quia fastidiant praestare hanc inferioribus curam, interim
5 quia omnino non possint. Ego porro eum qui nolit even the opinion of those who, even when they regard boys as ripe for the rhetorician, still do not think that they should at once be placed under the most eminent teacher available, but prefer to keep them for a while under inferior masters, on the ground that in the elementary stages a mediocre instructor is easier to understand and to imitate, and less reluctant to undertake the tiresome task of teaching the rudiments as being beneath his notice. I do not think that I need waste much time in pointing out how much better it is to absorb the best possible principles, or how hard it is to get rid of faults which have once become engrained ; for it places a double burden on the shoulders of the later teacher and the preliminary task of unteaching is harder than that of teaching. It is for this reason that the famous piper Timotheus is said to have demanded from those who had previously been under another master a fee double the amount which he charged for those who came to him untaught. The mistake to which I am referring is, however, twofold. First they regard these inferior teachers as adequate for the time being and are content with their instruction because they have a stomach that will swallow anything : this indifference, though blameworthy in itself, would yet be tolerable, if the teaching provided by these persons were merely less in quantity and not inferior in quality as well. Secondly, and this is a still commoner delusion, they think that those who are blest with greater gifts of speaking will not condescend to the more elementary details, and that consequently they sometimes disdain to give attention to such inferior subjects of study and sometimes are incapable of so doing. For my part I regard the in numero praecipientium non habeo, posse autem maxime, si velit, optimum quemque contendo; primum, quod eum, qui eloquentia ceteris praestet, illa quoque, per quae ad eloquentiam pervenitur, 6 diligentissime percepisse credibile est; deinde, quia plurimum in praecipiendo valet ratio, quae doctissimo cuique plenissima est; postremo, quia nemo sic in maioribus eminet, ut eum minora deficiant. Nisi forte Iovem quidem Phidias optime fecit, illa autem, quae in ornamentum operis eius accedunt, alius melius elaborasset, aut orator loqui nesciet aut leviores morbos curare non poterit praestantissimus medicus.

QUINTILIAN

7 Quid ergo? non est quaedam eloquentia maior quam ut eam intellectu consequi puerilis infirmitas possit? Ego vero confiteor: sed hunc disertum praeceptorem prudentem quoque et non ignarum docendi esse oportebit summittentem se ad mensuram discentis; ut velocissimus quoque, si forte iter cum parvulo faciat, det manum et gradum suum minuat nec procedat ultra quam comes possit. 8 Quid? si plerumque accidit ut faciliora sint ad intelligendum et lucidiora multo, quae a doctissimo quoque dicuntur? Nam et prima est eloquentiae virtus perspicuitas, et quo quis ingenio minus valet, hoc se magis attollere et dilatare conatur, ut statura breves in digitos eriguntur teacher who is unwilling to attend to such details as being unworthy of the name of teacher: and as for the question of capacity, I maintain that it is the most capable man who, given the will, is able to do this with most efficiency. For in the first place it is a reasonable inference that a man blest with abnormal powers of eloquence will have made careful note of the various steps by which eloquence is attained, and in the second place the reasoning faculty, which is specially developed in learned men, is all-important in teaching, while finally no one is eminent in the greater things of his art if he be lacking in the lesser. Unless indeed we are asked to believe that while Phidias modelled his Jupiter to perfection, the decorative details of the statue would have been better executed by another artist, or that an orator does not know how to speak, or a distinguished physician is incapable of treating minor ailments.

“Yes” it may be answered “but surely you do not deny that there is a type of eloquence that is too great to be comprehended by undeveloped boys?” Of course there is. But this eloquent teacher whom they fling in my face must be a sensible man with a good knowledge of teaching and must be prepared to stoop to his pupil’s level, just as a rapid walker, if walking with a small child, will give him his hand and lessen his own speed and avoid advancing at a pace beyond the powers of his little companion. Again it frequently happens that the more learned the teacher, the more lucid and intelligible is his instruction. For clearness is the first virtue of eloquence, and the less talented a man is, the more he will strive to exalt and dilate himself, just as short men tend to walk on tip-toe and weak

QUINTILIAN

9 et plura infirmi minantur. Nam tumidos et corruptos et tinnulos et quocunque alio cacozeliae genere peccantes certum habeo non virium sed infirmitatis vitio laborare, ut corpora non robore sed valetudine inflantur et recto itinere lassii plerumque devertunt. Erit ergo etiam obscurior, quo quisque deterior.

10 Non excidit mihi, scripsisse me in libro priore, cum potio-rem in scholis eruditionem esse quam domi dicerem, libentius se prima studia tenerosque profectus ad imitationem condiscipulorum, quae facili-er esset, erigere; quod a quibusdam sic accipi potest, tanquam haec, quam nunc tueor, sententia priori 11 diversa sit. Id a me procul aberit; namque ea causa vel maxima est, cur optimo cuique praeceptoris sit tradendus puer, quod apud eum discipuli quoque melius instituti aut dicent, quod inutile non sit imitari, aut si quid erraverint, statim corrigentur; at indoctus ille etiam probabit fortasse vitiosa et placere 12 audientibus iudicio suo coget. Sit ergo tam eloquentia quam moribus praestantissimus, qui ad Phoenicis Homericis exemplum dicere ac facere doceat.

men to use threats. As for those whose style is 9 inflated or vicious, and whose language reveals a passion for high-sounding words or labours under any other form of affectation, in my opinion they suffer not from excess of strength but of weakness, like bodies swollen not with the plumpness of health but with disease, or like men who weary of the direct road betake them to bypaths. Consequently the worse a teacher is, the harder he will be to understand.

I have not forgotten that I stated in the preced- 10 ing book, when I urged that school was preferable to home education, that pupils at the commencement of their studies, when progress is as yet but in the bud, are more disposed to imitate their schoolfellows than their masters, since such imitation comes more easily to them. Some of my readers may think that the view which I am now maintaining is inconsistent with my previous statement. But I 11 am far from being inconsistent: for my previous assertion affords the strongest reason for selecting the very best teachers for our boys; since pupils of a first rate master, having received a better training, will when they speak say something that may be worthy of imitation, while if they commit some mistake, they will be promptly corrected. But the incompetent teacher on the other hand is quite likely to give his approval to faulty work and by the judgment which he expresses to force approval on the audience. The teacher should therefore be 12 as distinguished for his eloquence as for his good character, and like Phoenix in the Iliad be able to teach his pupil both how to behave and how to speak.

QUINTILIAN

IV. Hinc iam, quas primas in docendo partes rhetorum putem, tradere incipiam, dilata parumper illa quae sola vulgo vocatur arte rhetorica. Ae mihi opportunus maxime videtur ingressus ab eo, cuius aliquid simile apud grammaticos puer didicerit.

- 2 Et quia narrationum, excepta qua in causis utimur, tres accepimus species, fabulam, quae versatur in tragoediis atque carminibus, non a veritate modo sed etiam a forma veritatis remota; argumentum, quod falsum sed vero simile comediae fingunt; historiam, in qua est gestae rei expositio; grammaticis autem poeticas dedimus: apud rhetorem initium sit his-
- 3 torica, tanto robustior quanto verior. Sed narrandi quidem quae nobis optima ratio videatur, tum demonstrabimus, cum de iudiciali parte dicemus. Interim admonere illud satis est, ut sit ea neque arida prorsus atque iciuna, (nam quid opus erat tantum studiis laboris impendere, si res nudas atque inornatas indicare satis videretur?) neque rursus sinuosa et arcessitis descriptionibus, in quas plerique imitatione poeticae licentiae ducuntur, lasciviat.
- 4 Vitium utrumque, peius tamen illud, quod ex inopia

¹ With special reference to the element of the miraculous, Ovid's Metamorphoses would give a good example.

² Book IV. chap. ii.

IV. I shall now proceed to indicate what I think should be the first subjects in which the rhetorician should give instruction, and shall postpone for a time our consideration of the art of rhetoric in the narrow sense in which that term is popularly used. For in my opinion it is most desirable that we should commence with something resembling the subjects already acquired under the teacher of literature.

Now there are three forms of narrative, without ² counting the type used in actual legal cases. First there is the fictitious narrative as we get it in tragedies and poems, which is not merely not true but has little resemblance to truth.¹ Secondly, there is the realistic narrative as presented by comedies, which, though not true, has yet a certain verisimilitude. Thirdly there is the historical narrative, which is an exposition of actual fact. Poetic narratives are the property of the teacher of literature. The rhetorician therefore should begin with the historical narrative, whose force is in proportion to its truth. I will, however, postpone my demonstration ³ of what I regard as the best method of narration till I come to deal with narration as required in the courts.² In the meantime, it will be sufficient to urge that it should be neither dry nor jejune (for why spend so much labour over our studies if a bald and naked statement of fact is regarded as sufficiently expressive?); nor on the other hand must it be tortuous or revel in elaborate descriptions, such as those in which so many are led to indulge by a misguided imitation of poetic licence. Both ⁴ these extremes are faults; but that which springs from poverty of wit is worse than that which is due quam quod ex copia venit. Nam in pueris oratio perfecta nec exigi nec sperari potest; melior autem indoles laeta generosique conatus et vel plura iusto 5 concipiens interim spiritus. Nec unquam me in his discentis annis offendat, si quid superfuerit. Quin ipsis quoque doctoribus hoc esse curae velim, ut teneras adhuc mentes more nutricum mollius alant et satiari velut quodam iucundioris disciplinae lacte patiantur. Erit illud plenius interim corpus, quod

QUINTILIAN

6 mox adulta aetas astringat. Hinc spes roboris. Maciem namque et infirmitatem in posterum minari solet protinus omnibus membris expressus infans. Audeat haec aetas plura et inueniat et inventis gaudeat, sint licet illa non satis sicca interim ac severa. Facile remedium est ubertati; sterilia nullo
7 labore vincuntur. Illa mihi in pueris natura minimum spei dederit, in qua ingenium iudicio praesumitur. Materiam esse primum volo vel abundantiore atque ultra quam oporteat fusam. Multum inde decoquent anni, multum ratio limabit, aliquid velut usu ipso deteretur, sit modo unde excidi possit et quod exseulpi; erit autem, si non ab initio tenuem nimium laminam duxerimus et quam caelatura altior
8 rumpat. Quod me de his aetatibus sentire minus to imaginative excess. For we cannot demand or expect a perfect style from boys. But there is greater promise in a certain luxuriance of mind, in ambitious effort and an ardour that leads at times to ideas bordering on the extravagant. I have no objection to a little exuberance in the young learner. Nay, I would urge teachers too like nurses to be careful to provide softer food for still undeveloped minds and to suffer them to take their fill of the milk of the more attractive studies. For the time being the body may be somewhat plump, but maturer years will reduce it to a sparer habit. Such plumpness gives hope of strength; a child fully formed in every limb is likely to grow up a puny weakling. The young should be more daring and inventive and should rejoice in their inventions, even though correctness and severity are still to be acquired. Exuberance is easily remedied, but barrenness is incurable, be your efforts what they may. To my mind the boy who gives least promise is one in whom the critical faculty develops in advance of the imagination. I like to see the firstfruits of the mind copious to excess and almost extravagant in their profusion. The years as they pass will skim off much of the froth, reason will file away many excrescences, and something too will be removed by what I may perhaps call the wear and tear of life, so long as there is sufficient material to admit of cutting and chiselling away. And there will be sufficient, if only we do not draw the plate too thin to begin with, so that it runs the risk of being broken if the graver cut too deep. Those of my readers who know their Cicero will not be surprised mirabitur, qui apud Ciceronem legerit: Volo enim se efferat in adolescente fecunditas.

QUINTILIAN

Quapropter in primis evitandus et in pueris praecipue magister aridus, non minus quam teneris adhuc plantis siccum et sine humore ullo solum.

9 Inde fiunt humiles statim et velut terram spectantes, qui nihil supra cotidianum sermonem attollere audeant. Macies illis pro sanitate et iudicii loco infirmitas est, et dum satis putant vitio carere, in id ipsum incidunt vitium, quod virtutibus earent. Quare mihi ne maturitas quidem ipsa festinet, nec musta in lacu statim austera sint; sic et annos ferent et vetustate proficient.

10 Ne illud quidem quod admoneamus indignum est, ingenia puerorum nimia interim emendationis severitate deficere; nam et desperant et dolent et novissime oderunt et, quod maxime nocet, dum
11 omnia timent, nihil conantur. Quod etiam rusticis notum est, qui frondibus teneris non putant adhibendam esse falcem, quia reformidare ferrum viden-
12 tur et nondum cicatricem pati posse. Iucundus ergo tum maxime debet esse praeceptor, ut remedia, quae alioqui natura sunt aspera, molli manu leniantur; laudare aliqua, ferre quaedam, mutare etiam, reddita cur id fiat ratione, illuminare interponendo

¹ de Or. II, xxi. 88.

² ep. Verg. G. II. 369, ant. reformidant ferrum.

that I take this view : for does he not say " I would have the youthful mind run riot in the luxuriance of its growth " ? ¹

We must, therefore, take especial care, above all where boys are concerned, to avoid a dry teacher, even as we avoid a dry and arid soil for plants that are still young and tender. For with ⁹ such a teacher their growth is stunted and their eyes are turned earthwards, and they are afraid to rise above the level of daily speech. Their leanness is regarded as a sign of health and their weakness as a sign of sound judgment, and while they are content that their work should be devoid of faults they fall into the fault of being devoid of merit. So let not the ripeness of vintage come too soon nor the must turn harsh while yet in the vat ; thus it will last for years and mellow with age.

It is worth while too to warn the teacher that ¹⁰ undue severity in correcting faults is liable at times to discourage a boy's mind from effort. He loses hope and gives way to vexation, then last of all comes to hate his work and fearing everything attempts nothing. This phenomenon is familiar to ¹¹ farmers, who hold that the pruning-hook should not be applied while the leaves are yet young, for they seem to " shrink from the steel " ² and to be unable as yet to endure a scar. The instructor therefore ¹² should be as kindly as possible at this stage ; remedies, which are harsh by nature, must be applied with a gentle hand : some portions of the work must be praised, others tolerated and others altered : the reason for the alterations should however be given, and in some cases the master will illumine an obscure passage by inserting something of his own.

QUINTILIAN

aliquid sui. Nonnunquam hoc quoque erit utile, ipsum totas dictare materias, quas et imitetur puer 13 et interim tanquam suas auct. At si tam negligens ei stilus fuerit, ut emendationem non recipiat; expertus sum prodesse, quotiens eandem materiam rursus a me tractatam scribere de integro iuberem; posse enim adhuc eum melius, quatenus nullo magis
14 studia quam spe gaudent. Aliter autem alia aetas emendanda est, et pro modo virium et exigendum et corrigendum opus. Solebam ego dicere pueris aliquid ausis licentius aut lactius, laudare illud me adhuc, venturum tempus, quo idem non permitterem; ita et ingenio gaudebant et iudicio non fallebantur.

15 Sed ut eo revertar, unde sum digressus: narrationes stilo componi quanta maxima possit adhibita diligentia volo. Nam ut primo, cum sermo instituitur, dicere quae audierint utile est pueris ad loquendi facultatem, ideoque et retro agere expositionem et a media in utramque partem discurrere sane merito cogantur, sed ad gremium praeceptoris, et dum aliud¹ non possunt et dum res ac verba connectere incipiunt, ut protinus memoriam firment: ita cum iam formam rectae atque emendatae ora-

¹ aliud, added by Ed. Gryphiana.

Occasionally again the teacher will find it useful to dictate whole themes himself that the boy may imitate them and for the time being love them as if they were his own. But if a boy's composition is so careless as not to admit of correction, I have found it useful to give a fresh exposition of the theme and to tell him to write it again, pointing out that he was capable of doing better: for there is nothing like hope for making study a pleasure. Different ages however demand different methods: the task set and the standard of correction must be proportioned to the pupil's strength. When boys ventured on something that was too daring or exuberant, I used to say to them that I approved of it for the moment, but that the time would come when I should no longer tolerate such a style. The result was that the consciousness of ability filled them with pleasure, without blinding their judgment.

However, to return to the point from which I had digressed. Written narratives should be composed with the utmost care. It is useful at first, when a child has just begun to speak, to make him repeat what he has heard with a view to improving his powers of speech; and for the same purpose, and with good reason, I would make him tell his story from the end back to the beginning or start in the middle and go backwards or forwards, but only so long as he is at his teacher's knee and while he is incapable of greater effort and is beginning to connect words and things, thereby strengthening the memory. Even so when he is beginning to understand the nature of correct and accurate speech, extempore effusions, improvised without waiting for thought to supply the matter or a moment's

QUINTILIAN

- tionis accipient, extemporalis garrulitas nec expectata cogitatio et vix surgendi mora circulatoriae 16 vere iactationis est. Hinc parentium imperitorum inane gaudium, ipsis vero contemptus operis et in- verecunda frons et consuetudo pessime dicendi et malorum exercitatio et, quae magnos quoque pro-17 innascitur. Erit suum parandae facilitati tempus, nec a nobis negligenter locus iste transibitur. Interim satis est, si puer omni cura et summo, quantum illa aetas capit, labore aliquid probabile scripserit; in hoc assuescat, huius sibi rei naturam faciat. Ille demum in id, quod quaerimus, aut ei proximum poterit evadere, qui ante discet recte dicere quam cito.
- 18 Narrationibus non inutiliter subiungitur opus destruendi confirmandique eas, quod ἀνασκευή et κατασκευή vocatur. Id porro non tantum in fabulosis et carmine traditis fieri potest, verum etiam in ipsis annalium monumentis; ut, si quaeratur, an sit credibile super caput Valeri pugnantis sedisse corvum, qui os oculosque hostis Galli rostro atque alis everberaret, sit in utramque partem ingens ad dicendum 19 materia; aut de serpente, quo Scipio traditur genitus, et lupa Romuli et Egeria Numae. Nam Graecis historiis plerumque poeticae similis licentia est.

¹ See Aul. Gell. vii. i.

hesitation before rising to the feet, must not be permitted: they proceed from a passion for display that would do credit to a common mountebank. Such 16 proceedings fill ignorant parents with senseless pride, while the boys themselves lose all respect for their work, adopt a conceited bearing, and acquire the habit of speaking in the worst style and actually practising their faults, while they develop an arrogant conviction of their own talents which often proves fatal 17 even to the most genuine proficiency. There will be a special time for acquiring fluency of speech and I shall not pass the subject by unnoticed. For the meantime it will suffice if a boy, by dint of taking pains and working as hard as his age will permit, manages to produce something worthy of approval. Let him get used to this until it becomes a second nature. It is only he who learns to speak correctly before he can speak with rapidity who will reach the heights that are our goal or the levels immediately below them.

To narratives is annexed the task of refuting and 18 confirming them, styled anaskeue and kataskeue, from which no little advantage may be derived. This may be done not merely in connexion with fiction and stories transmitted by the poets, but with the actual records of history as well. For instance we may discuss the credibility of the story that a raven settled on the head of Valerius in the midst of a combat and with its wings and beak struck the eyes of the Gaul who was his adversary, and a quantity of arguments may be produced on either side: or we may discuss 19 the tradition that Scipio¹ was begotten by a serpent, or that Romulus was suckled by the she-wolf, or the story of Numa and Egeria. As regards Greek history, it allows itself something very like poetic

QUINTILIAN

Saepe etiam quaeri solet de tempore, de loco quo gesta res dicitur, nonnunquam de persona quoque; sicut Livius frequentissime dubitat, et alii ab aliis historici dissentiunt.

- 20 Inde paulatim ad maiora tendere incipiet, laudare claros viros et vituperare improbos, quod non simplicis utilitatis opus est. Namque et ingenium exercetur multiplici variaque materia, et animus contemplatione recti pravique formatur, et multa inde cognitio rerum venit exemplisque, quae sunt in 21 omni genere causarum potentissima, iam tum instruit, cum res poseet, usurum. Hinc illa quoque exercitatio subit comparationis, uter melior uterve deterior; quae quanquam versatur in ratione simili, tamen et duplicat materiam et virtutum vitiorumque non tantum naturam, sed etiam modum tractat. Verum de ordine laudis contraque, quoniam tertia haec rhetorices pars est, praecipimus suo tempore.
- 22 Communes loci (de iis loquor, quibus citra personas in ipsa vitia moris est perorare, ut in adulterum, aleatorem, petulantem) ex mediis sunt iudiciis et, si reum adicias, accusationes; quanquam hi quoque ab illo generali tractatu ad quasdam deduci species solent, ut si ponatur adulter caecus, aleator pauper, petulans senex. Habent autem licence. Again the time and place of some particular occurrence and sometimes even the persons concerned often provide matter for discussion : Livy for instance is frequently in doubt as to what actually occurred and historians often disagree.

¹ Book III. chap. vii.

From this our pupil will begin to proceed to more important themes, such as the praise of famous men and the denunciation of the wicked. Such tasks are profitable in more than one respect. The mind is exercised by the variety and multiplicity of the subject matter, while the character is moulded by the contemplation of virtue and vice. Further wide knowledge of facts is thus acquired, from which examples may be drawn if circumstances so demand, such illustrations being of the utmost value in every kind of case. It is but a step from this to practice in the comparison of the respective merits of two characters. This is of course a very similar theme to the preceding, but involves a duplication of the subject matter and deals not merely with the nature of virtues and vices, but with their degree as well. But the method to be followed in panegyric and invective will be dealt with in its proper place, as it forms the third department of rhetoric.¹

As to commonplaces (I refer to those in which we denounce vices themselves such as adultery, gambling or profligacy without attacking particular persons), they come straight from the courts and, if we add the name of the defendant, amount to actual accusations. As a rule, however, the general character of a commonplace is usually given a special turn : for instance we make our adulterer blind, our gambler poor and our profligate far advanced in years. Sometimes too they entail

QUINTILIAN

- 23 nonnunquam etiam defensionem. Nam et pro luxuria et pro amore dicimus, et leno interim parasitusque defenditur sic, ut non homini patrocinemur, sed crimini.
- 24 Theses autem, quae sumuntur ex rerum comparatione, ut rusticane vita an urbana potior, iurisperiti an militaris viri laus maior, mire sunt ad exercitationem dicendi speciosae atque uberes, quae vel ad suadendi officium vel etiam ad iudiciorum disceptationem iuvant plurimum. Nam posterior ex praedictis locus in causa Murenæ copiosissime a Cicerone
- 25 tractatur. Sunt et illae paene totae ad deliberativum pertinentes genus, ducendane uxor, petendine sint magistratus. Namque et haec personis modo adiectis suasoriae erunt.
- 26 Solebant praeceptores mei neque inutili et nobis etiam iucundo genere exercitationis praeparare nos coniecturalibus causis, cum quaerere atque exsequi iuberent, Cur armata apud Lacedaemonios Venus, et Quid ita crederetur Cupido puer atque volucer et sagittis ac face armatus, et similia, in quibus scrutabamur voluntatem, cuius in controversiis frequens quaestio est, quod genus chriae videri potest.
- 27 Nam locos quidem, quales sunt de testibus, sem-

¹ Pro Mur. ix. 21 sqq.

² The reason according to Lactantius (Inst. Div. i. 20) was the bravery of the Spartan women in one of the Messenian wars.

defence: for we may speak on behalf of luxury or love, while a pimp or a parasite may be defended in such a way that we appear as counsel not for the character itself, but to rebut some specific charge that is brought against him. 23

Theses on the other hand are concerned with the comparison of things and involve questions such as "Which is preferable, town or country life?" or "Which deserves the greatest praise, the lawyer or the soldier?" These provide the most attractive and copious practice in the art of speaking, and are most useful whether we have an eye to the duties of deliberative oratory or the arguments of the courts. For instance Cicero in his *pro Murena*¹ deals very fully with the second of the two problems mentioned above. Other theses too belong entirely to the deliberative class of oratory, as for instance the questions as to "Whether marriage is desirable" or "Whether a public career is a proper object of ambition." Put such discussions into the mouths of specific persons and they become deliberative declamations at once. 24 25

My own teachers used to prepare us for conjectural cases by a form of exercise which was at once useful and attractive: they made us discuss and develop questions such as "Why in Sparta is Venus represented as wearing armour?"² or "Why is Cupid believed to be a winged boy armed with arrows and a torch?" and the like. In these exercises our aim was to discover the intention implied, a question which frequently occurs in controversial declamations. Such themes may perhaps be regarded as a kind of chria or moral essay. 26

That certain topics such as the question as to 27

QUINTILIAN

perne his credendum, et de argumentis, an habenda etiam parvis fides, adeo manifestum est ad forenses actiones pertinere, ut quidam neque ignobiles in officiis civilibus scriptos eos memoriaeque diligentissime mandatos in promptu habuerint, ut quotiens esset occasio, extemporales eorum dictiones his velut 28 emblematis exornarentur. Quo quidem (neque enim eius rei iudicium differre sustineo) summam videbantur mihi infirmitatem de se confiteri. Nam quid ii possint in causis, quarum varia et nova semper est facies, proprium invenire? quomodo propositis ex parte adversa respondere, altercationibus velociter occurrere, testem rogare? qui etiam in iis, quae sunt communia et in plurimis causis tractantur, vulgatissimos sensus verbis nisi tanto ante praeparatis 29 prosequi nequeant. Necesse vero iis, eum eadem iudiciis pluribus dicunt, aut fastidium moveant velut frigidi et repositi cibi, aut pudorem deprehensa totiens audientium memoria infelix supellex, quae sicut apud pauperes ambitiosos pluribus et diversis 30 officiis conteratur: eum eo quidem quod vix ullus est tam communis locus, qui possit cohaerere cum causa nisi aliquo propriae quaestionis vinculo copu-whether we should always believe a witness or whether we should rely on circumstantial evidence, are part and parcel of actual forensic pleading is so obvious that certain speakers, men too who have held civil office with no small distinction, have written out passages dealing with such themes, committed them to memory and kept them ready for immediate use, with a view to employing them when occasion arose as a species of ornament to be inserted into their extempore speeches. This practice— 28 for I am not going to postpone expressing my judgment on it—I used to regard a confession of extreme weakness. For how can such men find appropriate arguments in the course of actual cases which continually present new and different features? How can they answer the points that their opponents may bring up? how deal a rapid counterstroke in debate or cross-examine a witness? if, even in those matters which are of common occurrence and crop up in the majority of cases, they cannot give expression to the most familiar thoughts except in words prepared so far in advance. And when they produce 29 the same passage in a number of different cases, they must come to loathe it like food that has grown cold or stale, and they can hardly avoid a feeling of shame at displaying this miserable piece of furniture to an audience whose memory must have detected it so many times already: like the furniture of the ostentatious poor, it is sure to shew signs of wear through being used for such a variety of different purposes. Also it must be remembered that there 30 is hardly a single commonplace of such universal application that it will fit any actual case, unless some special link is provided to connect it with

QUINTILIAN

latus; appareat alioqui non tam insertum quam 31 adplicitum, vel quod dissimilis est ceteris vel quod plerumque adsumi etiam parum apte solet, non quia desideratur sed quia paratus est: ut quidam sententiaram gratia verbosissimos locos arcessunt, cum 32 ex locis debeat nasci sententia. Ita sunt autem speciosa haec et utilia, si oriuntur ex causa; ceterum quamlibet pulchra elocutio, nisi ad victoriam tendit, utique supervacua, sed interim etiam contraria est.
Verum hactenus evagari satis fuerit.

33 Legum laus ac vituperatio iam maiores ac prope summis operibus suffecturas vires desiderant; quae quidem suasoriis an controversiis magis accommodata sit exercitatio, consuetudine et iure civitatum differt. Apud Graecos enim lator earum ad iudicem vocabatur, Romanis pro contione suadere ac dissuadere moris fuit. Utroque autem modo pauca de his et fere certa dicuntur. Nam et genera sunt tria, 34 sacri, publici, privati iuris. Quae divisio ad laudem magis spectat, si quis eam per gradus augeat, quod lex, quod publica, quod ad religionem deum comparata sit. Ea quidem, de quibus quaeri solet,

¹ i.e. a court of nomothetae appointed by the Athenian assembly, who examined the provisions of the proposed law.

the subject: otherwise it will seem to have been tacked on to the speech, not interwoven in its texture, either because it is out of keeping with the circumstances or like most of its kind is inappropriately employed not because it is wanted, but because it is ready for use. Some speakers, for example, introduce the most long-winded commonplaces just for the sake of the sentiments they contain, whereas rightly the sentiments should spring from the context. Such disquisitions are at once ornamental and useful, only if they arise from the nature of the case. But the most finished eloquence, unless it tend to the winning of the case, is to say the least superfluous and may even defeat its own purpose. However I must bring this digression to a close.

The praise or denunciation of laws requires greater powers; indeed they should almost be equal to the most serious tasks of rhetoric. The answer to the question as to whether this exercise is more nearly related to deliberative or controversial oratory depends on custom and law and consequently varies in different states. Among the Greeks the proposer of a law was called upon to set forth his case before a judge,¹ while in Rome it was the custom to urge the acceptance or rejection of a law before the public assembly. But in any case the arguments advanced in such cases are few in number and of a definite type. For there are only three kinds of law, sacred, public and private. This division is of rhetorical value chiefly when a law is to be praised. For example the orator may advance from praise to praise by a series of gradations, praising an enactment first because it is law, secondly because it is public, and, finally, designed for the support of religion. As regards the questions

QUINTILIAN

35 communia omnibus. Aut enim de iure dubitari potest eius, qui rogat, ut de P. Clodi, qui non rite creatus tribunus arguebatur; aut de ipsius rogationis, quod est varium, sive non trino forte nundino promulgata sive non idoneo die, sive contra intercessionem vel auspicia aliudve quid, quod legitimis 36 tium legum repugnare. Sed haec ad illas primas exercitationes non pertinent; nam sunt hae citra complexum personarum, temporum, causarum. Reliqua eadem fere vero fictoque huiusmodi certamine 37 tractantur. Nam vitium aut in verbis aut in rebus est. In verbis quaeritur, an satis significent, an sit in iis aliquid ambiguum; in rebus, an lex sibi ipsa consentiat, an in praeteritum ferri debeat, an in singulos homines. Maxime vero commune est
38 quaerere, an sit honesta, an utilis. Nec ignoro, plures fieri a plerisque partes; sed nos iustum, piium, religiosum, ceteraque his similia honesto complectimur. Iusti tamen species non simpliciter excuti solent. Aut enim de re ipsa quaeritur, ut dignane

¹ Clodius was a patrician and got himself made a plebeian by adoption to enable him to hold the tribunate. The question of the legality of this procedure is discussed by Cicero in the de Domo, 13-17.

² Lit. within the space of three market-days. nundinum = 9 days, the second market-day being the ninth, and forming the last day of the first nundinum and the first of which generally arise, they are common to all cases. Doubts may be raised as to whether the mover is 35 legally in a position to propose a law, as happened in the case of Publius Clodius, whose appointment as tribune of the plebs was alleged to be unconstitutional.¹ Or the legality of the proposal itself may be impugned in various ways; it may for instance be urged that the law was not promulgated within seventeen² days, or was proposed, or is being proposed on an improper day, or in defiance of the tribunicial veto or the auspices or any other legal obstacle, or again that it is contrary to some existing law. But such points are not suitable to 36 elementary rhetorical exercises, which are not concerned with persons, times or particular cases. Other subjects, whether the dispute be real or fictitious, are generally treated on the following lines. The fault must lie either in the words or the 37 matter. As regards the words, the question will be whether they are sufficiently clear or contain some ambiguity, and as regards the matter whether the law is consistent with itself or should be retrospective or apply to special individuals. The point however which is most commonly raised is the question whether the law is right or expedient. I 38 am well aware that many rhetoricians introduce a number of sub-divisions in connexion with this latter enquiry. I however include under the term right all such qualities as justice, piety and religion. Justice is however usually discussed under various aspects. A question may be raised about the acts with which the law is concerned, as to whether they

the second. Similarly the third market-day is the last day of the second nundinum and the first of the third.

- poena vel praemio sit, aut de modo praemii poenaeve, qui tam maior quam minor culpari potest.
- 39 Utilitas quoque interim natura discernitur, interim tempore. Quaedam an obtineri possint, ambigi solet. Ne illud quidem ignorare oportet, leges aliquando totas, aliquando ex parte reprehendi solere, cum exemplum rei utriusque nobis claris orationibus
- 40 praebeatur. Nee me fallit, eas quoque leges esse, quae non in perpetuum rogentur, sed de honoribus aut imperiis, qualis Manilia fuit, de qua Ciceronis oratio est. Sed de his nihil hoc loco praecipitur potest; constant enim propria rerum, de quibus agitur, non communi qualitate.
- 41 His fere veteres facultatem dicendi exercuerunt assumpta tamen a dialecticis argumentandi ratione.
 Nam fictas ad imitationem fori consiliorumque materias apud Graecos dicere circa Demetrium
- 42 Phalerea institutum fere constat. An ab ipso id genus exercitationis sit inventum, ut alio quoque libro sum confessus, parum comperi; sed ne ii quidem, qui hoc fortissime adfirmant, ullo satis idoneo auctore nituntur. Latinos vero dicendi praeceptores extremis L. Crassi temporibus coepisse

¹ The lex Manilia proposed to give Pompey the command against Mithridates.

² Probably the lost treatise on "The causes of the decline of oratory" (De causis corruptae eloquentiae).

deserve punishment or reward or as to the degree of punishment or reward that should be assigned, since excess in either direction is open to criticism. Again expediency is sometimes determined by the nature of things, sometimes by the circumstances of the time. Another common subject of controversy is whether a law can be enforced, while one must not shut one's eyes to the fact that exception is sometimes taken to laws in their entirety, but sometimes only in part, examples of both forms of criticism being found in famous speeches. I am well aware, too, that there are laws which are not proposed with a view to perpetuity, but are concerned with temporary honours or commands, such as the lex Manilia which is the subject of one of Cicero's speeches. This however is not the place for instructions on this topic, since they depend on the special circumstances of the matters under discussion, not on their general characteristics.

Such were the subjects on which the ancients as a rule exercised their powers of speaking, though they called in the assistance of the logicians as well to teach them the theory of argument. For it is generally agreed that the declamation of fictitious themes in imitation of the questions that arise in the lawcourts or deliberative assemblies came into vogue among the Greeks about the time of Demetrius of Phalerum. Whether this type of exercise was actually invented by him I have failed to discover, as I have acknowledged in another work.² But not even those who most strongly assert his claim to be the inventor, can produce any adequate authority in support of their opinion. As regards Latin teachers of rhetoric, of whom Plotius was the

QUINTILIAN

Cicero auctor est; quorum insignis maxime Plotius fuit.

V. Sed de ratione declamandi post paulum. Interim, quia prima rhetorices rudimenta tractamus, non omittendum videtur id quoque, ut moneam, quantum sit collaturus ad profectum discentium rhetor, si, quemadmodum a grammaticis exigitur poetarum enarratio, ita ipse quoque historiae atque etiam magis orationum lectione susceptos a se discipulos instruxerit; quod nos in paucis, quorum id aetas exigebat et parentes utile esse crediderant, 2 servavimus. Ceterum sentientibus iam tum optima duae res impedimento fuerunt, quod et longa consuetudo aliter docendi fecerat legem, et robusti fere iuvenes nec hunc laborem desiderantes exemplum 3 nostrum sequebantur. Nec tamen, etiamsi quid novi vel sero invenissem, praecipere in posterum puderet. Nunc vero scio id fieri apud Graecos sed magis per adiutores, quia non videntur tempora suffectura, si legentibus singulis praecire semper ipsi 4 velint. Et hercule praelectio, quae in hoc adhibetur, ut facile atque distincte pueri scripta oculis sequantur, etiam illa, quae vim eniusque verbi, si quod minus usitatum incidat, docet, multum infra 5 rhetoris officium existimanda est. At demonstrare virtutes vel, si quando ita incidat, vitia, id pro-most famous, Cicero¹ informs us that they came into existence towards the end of the age of Crassus.

¹ See Cic. de Or. iii. 24. 93.

V. I will speak of the theory of declamation a little later. In the mean time, as we are discussing the elementary stages of a rhetorical education, I think I should not fail to point out how greatly the rhetorician will contribute to his pupils' progress, if he imitates the teacher of literature whose duty it is to expound the poets, and gives the pupils whom he has undertaken to train, instruction in the reading of history and still more of the orators. I myself have adopted this practice for the benefit of a few pupils of suitable age whose parents thought it would be useful. But though my intentions were 2 excellent, I found that there were two serious obstacles to success: long custom had established a different method of teaching, and my pupils were for the most part full-grown youths who did not require this form of teaching, but were taking my work as their model. However, the fact that I 3 have been somewhat late in making the discovery is not a reason why I should be ashamed to recommend it to those who come after me. I now know that this form of teaching is practised by the Greeks, but is generally entrusted to assistants, as the professors themselves consider that they have no time to give individual instruction to each pupil as he reads. And I admit that the form of lecture which this 4 requires, designed as it is to make boys follow the written word with ease and accuracy, and even that which aims at teaching the meaning of any rare words that may occur, are to be regarded as quite below the dignity of the teacher of rhetoric. On 5 the other hand it is emphatically part of his pro-

QUINTILIAN

fessionis eius atque promissi, quo se magistrum eloquentiae pollicetur, maxime proprium est, eo quidem validius, quod non utique hunc laborem docentium postulo, ut ad gremium revocatis cuius 6 quisque eorum velit libri lectione deserviant. Nam mihi cum facilius tum etiam multo videtur magis utile, facto silentio unum aliquem (quod ipsum imperari per vices optimum est) constituere lectorem, ut protinus pronuntiationi quoque assuescant; tum
7 exposita causa, in quam scripta legetur oratio, (nam sic clarius quae dicentur intelligi poterunt) nihil otiosum pati, quodque in inventione quodque in elocutione adnotandum erit, quae in prooemio conciliandi iudicis ratio, quae narrandi lux, brevitatis, fides, quod aliquando consilium et quam occulta
8 calliditas (namque ea sola in hoc ars est, quae intelligi nisi ab artifice non possit); quanta deinceps in dividendo prudentia, quam subtilis et crebra argumentatio, quibus viribus inspiret, qua iucunditate permulceat, quanta in maledictis asperitas, in iocis urbanitas, ut denique dominetur in adfectibus fession and the undertaking which he makes in offering himself as a teacher of eloquence, to point out the merits of authors or, for that matter, any faults that may occur: and this is all the more the case, as I am not asking teachers to undertake the task of recalling their pupils to stand at their knee once more and of assisting them in the reading of whatever book they may select. It seems to me at once 6 an easier and more profitable method to call for silence and choose some one pupil—and it will be best to select them by turns—to read aloud, in order that they may at the same time learn the correct method of elocution. The case with which 7 the speech selected for reading is concerned should then be explained, for if this be done they will have a clearer understanding of what is to be read. When the reading is commenced, no important point should be allowed to pass unnoticed either as regards the resourcefulness or the style shown in the treatment of the subject: the teacher must point out how the orator seeks to win the favour of the judge in his exordium, what clearness, brevity and sincerity, and at times what shrewd design and well-concealed artifice is shown in the statement of facts. For the only true art in pleading is that 8 which can only be understood by one who is a master of the art himself. The teacher will proceed further to demonstrate what skill is shown in the division into heads, how subtle and frequent are the thrusts of argument, what vigour marks the stirring and what charm the soothing passage, how fierce is the invective and how full of wit the jests, and in conclusion how the orator establishes his sway over the emotions of his audience, forces his way

QUINTILIAN

- atque in pectora irrumpat animunque iudicium 9 similem iis, quae dicit, efficiat. Tum in ratione eloquendi, quod verbum proprium, ornatum, sublime ;
ubi amplificatio laudanda, quae virtus ei contraria, quid speciose translatum, quae figura verborum, quae levis et quadrata sed virilis tamen compositio.
- 10 Ne id quidem inutile, etiam corruptas aliquando et vitiosas orationes, quas tamen plerique iudiciorum pravitate mirantur, legi palam ostendique in his,
quam multa impropria, obscura, tumida, humilia, sordida, lasciva, effeminata sint ; quae non laudantur modo a plerisque, sed, quod est peius, propter hoc 11 ipsum, quod sunt prava, laudantur. Nam sermo rectus et secundum naturam enuntiatus nihil habere ex ingenio videtur ; illa vero, quae utcumque deflexa sunt, tanquam exquisitiora miramur ; non aliter quam distortis et quocumque modo prodigiosis cor-poribus apud quosdam maius est pretium quam iis, quae nihil ex communi habitu boni perdidit.
- 12 Atque etiam qui specie capiuntur, vulsis levatisque et inustas comas acie comentibus et non suo colore nitidis plus esse formae putant, quam possit tribuere incorrupta natura, ut pulchritudo corporis venire videatur ex malis morum.
- 13 Neque solum haec ipse debet docere praeceptor into their very hearts and brings the feelings of the jury into perfect sympathy with all his words. Finally as regards the style, he will emphasise the appropriateness, elegance or sublimity of particular words, will indicate where the amplification of the theme is deserving of praise and where there is virtue in a diminuendo; and will call attention to brilliant metaphors, figures of speech and passages combining smoothness and polish with a general impression of manly vigour.

It will even at times be of value to read speeches which are corrupt and faulty in style, but still meet with general admiration thanks to the perversity of modern tastes, and to point out how many expressions in them are inappropriate, obscure, high-flown, grovelling, mean, extravagant or effeminate, although they are not merely praised by the majority of critics, but, worse still, praised just because they are bad. For we have come to regard direct and natural speech as incompatible with genius, while all that is in any way abnormal is admired as exquisite. Similarly we see that some people place a higher value on figures which are in any way monstrous or distorted than they do on those who have not lost any of the advantages of the normal form of man. There are even some who are captivated by the shams of artifice and think that there is more beauty in those who pluck out superfluous hair or use depilatories, who dress their locks by scorching them with the curling iron and glow with a complexion that is not their own, than can ever be conferred by nature pure and simple, so that it really seems as if physical beauty depended entirely on moral hideousness.

It will, however, be the duty of the rhetorician

QUINTILIAN

sed frequenter interrogare et indicium discipulorum experiri. Sic audientibus securitas aberit nec quae dicentur superfluent aures, simulque ad id perducentur, quod ex hoc quaeritur, ut inveniant ipsi et intelligant. Nam quid aliud agimus docendo eos, 14 quam ne semper docendi sint? Hoc diligentiae genus ausim dicere plus collaturum discentibus quam omnes omnium artes, quae iuvant sine dubio multum; sed latiore quadam comprehensione per omnes quidem species rerum cotidie paene nascentium 15 ire qui possunt? Sicut de re militari, quanquam sunt tradita quaedam praecepta communia, magis tamen proderit scire, qua ducum quisque ratione, in quali re, tempore, loco sit sapienter usus aut contra. Nam in omnibus fere minus valent 16 praecepta quam experimenta. An vero declamabit quidem praeceptor, ut sit exemplo suis auditoribus; non plus contulerint lecti Cicero aut Demosthenes?
Corrigetur palam, si quid in declamando discipulus erraverit; non potentius erit emendare orationem, quin immo etiam iucundius? Aliena enim vitia 17 reprehendi quisque mavult quam sua. Nec deerant plura, quae dicerem; sed neminem haec utilitas not merely to teach these things, but to ask frequent questions as well, and test the critical powers of his class. This will prevent his audience from becoming inattentive and will secure that his words do not fall on deaf ears. At the same time the class will be led to find out things for themselves and to use their intelligence, which is after all the chief aim of this method of training. For what else is our object in teaching, save that our pupils should not always require to be taught? I will venture to say that this particular form of exercise, if diligently pursued, will teach learners more than all the text-books of all the rhetoricians: these are no doubt of very considerable use, but being somewhat general in their scope, it is quite impossible for them to deal with all the special cases that are of almost daily occurrence. The art of war will provide a parallel: it is no doubt based on certain general principles, but it will none the less be far more useful to know the methods employed, whether wisely or the reverse, by individual generals under varying circumstances and conditions of time and place. For there are no subjects in which, as a rule, practice is not more valuable than precept. Is a teacher to declaim to provide a model for his audience, and will not more profit be derived from the reading of Cicero or Demosthenes? Is a pupil to be publicly corrected if he makes a mistake in declaiming, and will it not be more useful, and more agreeable too, to correct some actual speech? For everyone has a preference for hearing the faults of others censured rather than his own. I might say more on the subject. But every one can see the advantages of this method. Would that the reluctance to put it into practice fugit, atque utinam tam non pigeat facere istud quam non displicebit.

QUINTILIAN

- 18 Quod si potuerit obtineri, non ita difficilis supererit quaestio, qui legendi sint incipientibus. Nam quidam illos minores, quia facilius intellectus videbatur, probaverunt; alii floridius genus, ut ad alenda primarum aetatum ingenia magis accommodatum.
- 19 Ego optimos quidem et statim et semper sed tamen eorum candidissimum quemque et maxime expositum velim, ut Livium a pueris magis quam Sallustium, etsi hic historiae maior est auctor, ad quem
- 20 tamen intelligendum iam profectu opus sit. Cicero, ut mihi quidem videtur, et iucundus incipientibus quoque et apertus est satis, nec prodesse tantum sed etiam amari potest, tum (quemadmodum Livius praecipit) ut quisque erit Ciceroni simillimus.
- 21 Duo autem genera maxime cavenda pueris puto: unum, ne quis eos antiquitatis nimis admirator in Gracchorum Catonisque et aliorum similium lectione durescere velit; fient enim horridi atque ieiuni; nam neque vim eorum adhuc intellectu consequentur et elocutione, quae tum sine dubio erat optima, sed nostris temporibus aliena est, contenti, quod est were not as great as the pleasure that would undoubtedly be derived from so doing!

This method once adopted, we are faced by the comparatively easy question as to what authors should be selected for our reading. Some have recommended authors of inferior merit on the ground that they were easier to understand. Others on the contrary would select the more florid school of writers on the ground that they are likely to provide the nourishment best suited to the minds of the young. For my part I would have them read the best authors from the very beginning and never leave them, choosing those, however, who are simplest and most intelligible. For instance, when prescribing for boys, I should give Livy the preference over Sallust; for, although the latter is the greater historian, one requires to be well-advanced in one's studies to appreciate him properly. Cicero, in my opinion, provides pleasant reading for beginners and is sufficiently easy to understand: it is possible not only to learn much from him, but to come to love him. After Cicero I should, following the advice of Livy, place such authors as most nearly resemble him.

There are two faults of taste against which boys should be guarded with the utmost care. Firstly no teacher suffering from an excessive admiration of antiquity, should be allowed to cramp their minds by the study of Cato and the Gracchi and other similar authors. For such reading will give them a harsh and bloodless style, since they will as yet be unable to understand the force and vigour of these authors, and contenting themselves with a style which doubtless was admirable in its day, but is quite unsuitable to ours, will come to think (and

QUINTILIAN

pessimum, similes sibi magnis viris videbuntur 22 Alterum, quod huic diversum est, ne recentis huius lasciviae flosculis capti voluptate prava deleniantur, ut praedulce illud genus et puerilibus ingeniis hoc 23 gratius, quo propius est, adamant. Firmis autem iudiciis iamque extra periculum positis suaserim et antiquos legere, ex quibus si assumatur solida ac virilis ingenii vis, deterseo rudis saeculi squalore, tum noster hic cultus clarius enitescet, et novos, quibus 24 et ipsis multa virtus adest. Neque enim nos tardi-tatis natura damnavit, sed dicendi mutavimus genus et ultra nobis quam oportebat indulsumus; ita non tam ingenio illi nos superarunt quam proposito.
Multa ergo licebit eligere; sed curandum erit, ne 25 iis, quibus permixta sunt, inquinentur. Quosdam vero etiam, quos totos imitari oporteat, et fuisse nuper et nunc esse, quidni libenter non modo con-26 cesserim, verum etiam contenderim? Sed hi qui sint, non cuiuscunque est pronuntiare. Tutius circa prios vel erratur, ideoque hanc novorum distuli lectionem, ne imitatio iudicium antecederet.

nothing could be more fatal) that they really resemble great men. Secondly the opposite extreme must 22 be equally avoided: they must not be permitted to fall victims to the pernicious allurements of the precious blooms produced by our modern euphuists, thus acquiring a passion for the luscious sweetness of such authors, whose charm is all the more attractive to boyish intellects because it is so easy of achievement. Once, however, the judgment is 23 formed and out of danger of perversion, I should strongly recommend the reading of ancient authors, since if, after clearing away all the uncouthness of those rude ages, we succeed in absorbing the robust vigour and virility of their native genius, our more finished style will shine with an added grace: I also approve the study of the moderns at this stage, since even they have many merits. For nature has not doomed us to be dullards, 24 but we have altered our style of oratory and indulged our caprices over much. It is in their ideals rather than their talents that the ancients show themselves our superiors. It will therefore be possible to select much that is valuable from modern writers, but we must take care that the precious metal is not debased by the dross with which it is so closely intermingled. Further I would not 25 merely gladly admit, but would even contend that we have recently had and still have certain authors who deserve imitation in their entirety. But it is 26 not for everyone to decide who these writers are. Error in the choice of earlier authors is attended with less danger, and I have therefore postponed the study of the moderns, for fear that we should imitate them before we are qualified to judge of their merits.

QUINTILIAN

VI. Fuit etiam in hoc diversum praecipientium propositum, quod eorum quidam materias, quas discipulis ad dicendum dabant, non contenti divisione dirigere latius dicendo prosequerentur, nec solum
2 probationibus implebant sed etiam adfectibus. Alii, cum primas modo lineas duxissent, post declamationes, quid omisisset quisque, tractabant; quosdam vero locos non minore cura, quam cum ad dicendum ipsi surgerent, excolebant. Utile utrumque, et ideo neutrum ab altero separo; sed si facere tantum alterum necesse sit, plus proderit demonstrasse rectam protinus viam quam revocare ab errore iam
3 lapsos: primum quia emendationem auribus modo accipiunt, divisionem vero ad cogitationem etiam et stilum perferunt; deinde quod libentius praecipientem audiunt quam reprehendentem. Si qui vero paulo sunt vivaciores, in his praesertim moribus, etiam irascuntur admonitioni et taciti repugnant.
4 Neque ideo tamen minus vitia aperte coarguenda sunt. Habenda enim ratio ceterorum, qui recta esse, quae praeceptor non emendaverit, credent. Utraque autem ratio miscenda est et ita tractanda,
5 ut ipsae res postulabunt. Namque incipientibus

VI. I come now to another point in which the practice of teachers has differed. Some have not been content with giving directions as to the arrangement of the subjects set them as themes for declamation, but have developed them at some length themselves, supplying not merely the proofs, but the lines upon which the emotional passages should proceed. Others have merely suggested a bare outline, and then when the declamations were over, have indicated the points missed by each speaker and worked up certain passages with no less care than they would have used, had they been going to stand up to speak themselves. Both practices have their advantages, and therefore I will not give either the pre-eminence. But if we must choose one of the two, it will be found more profitable to point out the right road at the outset, and not merely to recall the pupil from his error when he has already gone astray, since in the first place the correction is only received by the ear, whereas when he is given a sketch of the various heads of the declamation, he has to take them down and think about them: secondly instruction is always more readily received than reproof. Indeed those of our pupils who have a lively disposition are liable in the present condition of manners to lose their temper when admonished and to offer silent resistance. That, however, is no reason for refraining from the public correction of faults; for we must take the rest of the class into account, who will believe that whatever has not been corrected by the master is right. The two methods should be employed conjointly and in such a way as circumstances may demand. Beginners must be given a subject

QUINTILIAN

danda erit velut praeformata materia secundum cuiusque vires; at cum satis composuisse sese ad exemplum videbuntur, brevia quaedam demonstranda vestigia, quae persecuti iam suis viribus sine admini-6 culo progredi possint. Nonnunquam credi sibi ipsos oportebit, ne mala consuetudine semper alienum laborem sequendi nihil per se conari et quaerere sciant. Quodsi satis prudenter dicenda viderint, iam prope consummata fuerit praecipientis opera; at si quid erraverint adhuc, erunt ad ducem redu-
7 cendi. Cui rei simile quiddam facientes aves cernimus, quae teneris infirmisque fetibus cibos ore suo collatos partiuntur; at cum visi sunt adulti, paulum egredi nidis et circumvolare sedem illam praecedentes ipsae docent, tum expertas vires libero caelo suaeque ipsorum fiduciae permittunt.

VII. Illud ex consuetudine mutandum prorsus existimo in iis, de quibus nunc disserimus, aetatibus, ne omnia quae scripserint ediscant et certa, ut moris est, die dicant; quod quidem maxime patres exigunt atque ita demum studere liberos suos, si quam frequentissime declamaverint, credunt, cum profectus sketched out ready for treatment and suitable to their respective powers. But when they show that they have formed themselves sufficiently closely on the models placed before them, it will be sufficient to give them a few brief hints for their guidance and to allow them to advance trusting in their own strength and without external support. Sometimes 6 they should be left entirely to their own devices, that they may not be spoilt by the bad habit of always relying on another's efforts, and so prove incapable of effort and originality. But as soon as they seem to have acquired a sound conception of what they ought to say, the teacher's work will be near completion: if they still make some mistakes, they must be brought back under his guidance. We 7 may draw a lesson from the birds of the air, whom we see distributing the food which they have collected in their bills among their weak and helpless nestlings; but as soon as they are fledged, we see them teaching their young to leave the nest and fly round about it, themselves leading the way; finally, when they have proved their strength, they are given the freedom of the open sky and left to trust in themselves.

VII. There is one practice at present in vogue for boys of the age under discussion, which ought in my opinion undoubtedly to be changed. They should not be forced to commit all their own compositions to memory and to deliver them on an appointed day, as is at present the custom. This practice is especially popular with the boys' fathers, who think that their sons are not really studying unless they declaim on every possible occasion, although as a matter of fact progress depends

QUINTILIAN

2 praecipue diligentia constet. Nam ut scribere pueros plurimumque esse in hoc opere plane velim, sic ediscere electos ex orationibus vel historiis aliove quo genere dignorum ea cura voluminum locos, multo
3 magis suadeam. Nam et exercebitur acrius memoria aliena complectendo quam sua; et qui erunt in difficiliore huius laboris genere versati, sine molestia quae ipsi composuerint iam familiaria animo suo adfigent, et adsuescent optimis semperque habebunt intra se, quod imitentur; et iam non sentientes formam orationis illam, quam mente penitus acce-
4 perint, expriment. Abundabunt autem copia verborum optimorum et compositione et figuris iam non quaesitis sed sponte et ex reposito velut thesauro se offerentibus. Accedit his et iucunda in sermone bene a quoque dictorum relatio et in causis utilis. Nam et plus auctoritatis adferunt ea, quae non praesentis gratia litis sunt comparata, et laudem saepe 5 maiorem quam si nostra sint conciliant. Aliquando tamen permittendum quae ipsi scripserint dicere, ut laboris sui fructum etiam ex illa quae maxime petitur laude plurimum capiant. Verum id quoque tum fieri mainly on industry. For though I strongly ap- 2 prove of boys writing compositions and would have them spend as much time as possible over such tasks, I had much rather that for the purpose of learning by heart passages should be selected from the orators or historians or any other works that may be deserving of such attention. For it is a 3 better exercise for the memory to learn the words of others than it is to learn one's own, and those who have practised this far harder task will find no difficulty in committing to memory their own compositions with which they are already familiar.

Further they will form an intimate acquaintance with the best writings, will carry their models with them and unconsciously reproduce the style of the speech which has been impressed upon the memory. They will have a plentiful and choice 4 vocabulary and a command of artistic structure and a supply of figures which will not have to be hunted for, but will offer themselves spontaneously from the treasure-house, if I may so call it, in which they are stored. In addition they will be in the agreeable position of being able to quote the happy sayings of the various authors, a power which they will find most useful in the courts. For phrases which have not been coined merely to suit the circumstances of the lawsuit of the moment carry greater weight and often win greater praise than if they were our own. I 5 would however allow boys occasionally to declaim their own compositions that they may reap the reward of their labours in the applause of a large audience, that most coveted of all prizes. But this should not be permitted until they have produced

QUINTILIAN

oportebit, cum aliquid commodius elimaverint, ut eo velut praemio studii sui donentur ac se meruisse ut dicent gaudeant.

VIII. Virtus praeceptoris haberi solet nec immerito diligenter in iis, quos erudiendos susceperit, notare discrimina ingeniorum et, quo quemque natura maxime ferat, scire. Nam est in hoc incredibilis quaedam varietas nec pauciores animorum paene
2 quam corporum formae. Quod intelligi etiam ex ipsis oratoribus potest, qui tantum inter se distant genere dicendi, ut nemo sit alteri similis, quamvis plurimi se ad eorum quos probabant imitationem
3 composuerint. Utile deinde plerisque visum est ita quemque instituere, ut propria naturae bona doctrina foverent et in id potissimum ingenia, quo tenderent, adiuventur; ut si quis palaestrae peritus, cum in aliquod plenum pueris gymnasium venerit, expertus eorum omni modo corpus animumque discernat, cui
4 quisque certamini praeparandus sit, ita praeceptorem eloquentiae, cum sagaciter fuerit intuitus, cuius ingenium presso limatoque genere dicendi, cuius acri, gravi, dulci, aspero, nitido, urbano maxime gaudeat, ita se commodaturum singulis, ut in eo,
5 quo quisque eminet, provehatur; quod et adiuta cura natura magis evalescat, et qui in diversa ducatur neque in iis, quibus minus aptus est, satis possit efficere et ea, in quae natus videtur, deserendo faciat
6 infirmiora. Quod mihi (libera enim vel contra re-something more finished than usual : they will thus be rewarded for their industry and rejoice in the thought that the privilege accorded them is the recompense of merit.

VIII. It is generally and not unreasonably regarded as the sign of a good teacher that he should be able to differentiate between the abilities of his respective pupils and to know their natural bent. The gifts of nature are infinite in their variety, and mind differs from mind almost as much as body from body. This 2 is clear from a consideration of the orators themselves, who differ in style to such an extent that no one is like another, in spite of the fact that numbers have modelled their style on that of their favorite authors. Many again think it useful to direct their 3 instruction to the fostering of natural advantages and to guide the talents of their pupils along the lines which they instinctively tend to follow. Just as an expert gymnast, when he enters a gymnasium full of boys, after testing body and mind in every way, is able to decide for what class of athletic contest they should be trained, even so, they say, a teacher of 4 oratory after careful observation of a boy's stylistic preferences, be they for terseness and polish, energy, dignity, charm, roughness, brilliance or wit, will so adapt his instructions to individual needs that each pupil will be pushed forward in the sphere for which his talents seem specially to design him ; for nature, 5 when cultivated, goes from strength to strength, while he who runs counter to her bent is ineffective in those branches of the art for which he is less suited and weakens the talents which he seemed born to employ. Now, since the critic who is 6 guided by his reason is free to dissent even from ceptas persuasiones rationem sequenti sententia est) in parte verum videtur. Nam proprietates ingenio-7 rum dispicere prorsus necessarium est. In his quoque certum studiorum facere delectum nemo dissuaserit.

QUINTILIAN

Namque erit alius historiae magis idoneus, alius compositus ad carmen, alius utilis studio iuris, ut nonnulli rus fortasse mittendi. Sic discernet haec dicendi magister, quomodo palaesticus ille cursorem faciet aut pugilem aut luctatorem aliudve quid ex iis, quae 8 sunt sacrorum certaminum. Verum ei, qui foro destinabitur, non in unam partem aliquam sed in omnia, quae sunt eius operis, etiam si qua difficiliora discenti videbuntur, elaborandum est. Nam et omnino supervacua erat doctrina, si natura suffi-9 ceret. An si quis ingenio corruptus ac tumidus, ut plerique sunt, inciderit, in hoc eum ire patiemur? aridum atque ieiunum non alemus et quasi vestitiemus? Nam si quaedam detrudere necessarium 10 est, cur non sit adiicere concessum? Neque ego contra naturam pugno. Non enim deserendum id bonum, si quod ingenitum est, existimo, sed augen-11 dum addendumque quod cessat. An vero clarissi-mus ille praeceptor Isocrates, quem non magis libri bene dixisse quam discipuli bene doctuisse testantur, received opinions, I must insist that to my thinking this view is only partially true. It is undoubtedly necessary to note the individual gifts of each boy, and no one would ever convince me that it is not desirable to differentiate courses of study with this in view. One boy will be better adapted for the study of history, another for poetry, another for law, while some perhaps had better be packed off to the country. The teacher of rhetoric will distinguish such special aptitudes, just as our gymnast will turn one pupil into a runner, another into a boxer or wrestler or an expert at some other of the athletic accomplishments for which prizes are awarded at the sacred games. But on the other hand, he who is destined for the bar must study not one department merely, but must perfect himself in all the accomplishments which his profession demands, even though some of them may seem too hard for him when he approaches them as a learner. For if natural talent alone were sufficient, education might be dispensed with. Suppose we are given a pupil who, like so many, is of depraved tastes and swollen with his own conceit; shall we suffer him to go his own sweet way? If a boy's disposition is naturally dry and jejune, ought we not to feed it up or at any rate clothe it in fairer apparel? For, if in some cases it is necessary to remove certain qualities, surely there are others where we may be permitted to add what is lacking. Not that I would set myself against the will of nature. No innate good quality should be neglected, but defects must be made good and weaknesses made strong. When Isocrates, the prince of instructors, whose works proclaim his eloquence no less than his pupils testify to his excellence as a cum de Ephoro atque Theopompo sic iudicaret, ut alteri frenis alteri calcaribus opus esse diceret, aut in illo lentiore tarditatem aut in illo paene praecipiti concitationem adiuvandam docendo existimavit, eum alterum alterius natura miscendum arbitraretur?

QUINTILIAN

- 12 Imbecillis tamen ingeniis sane sic obsequendum sit, ut tantum in id, quo vocat natura, ducantur; ita enim, quod solum possunt, melius efficient. Si vero liberalior materia contigerit et in qua merito ad spem oratoris simus aggressi, nulla dicendi virtus
- 13 omittenda est. Nam licet sit aliquam in partem pronior, ut necesse est, ceteris tamen non repugnabit, atque ea cura paria faciet iis, in quibus eminebat; sicut ille (ne ab eodem exemplo recedamus) exercendi corpora peritus, non, si docendum pancratias-ten susceperit, pugno ferire vel calce tantum aut nexus modo atque in iis certos aliquos docebit, sed omnia quae sunt eius certaminis. Erit qui ex his aliqua non possit: in id maxime quod poterit in-
- 14 cumbet. Nam sunt haec duo vitanda prorsus: unum ne temptes quod effici non possit, alterum ne ab eo, quod quis optime facit, in aliud, ad quod minus est idoneus, transferas. At si fuerit qui teacher, gave his opinion of Ephorus and Theopompus to the effect that the former needed the spur and the latter the curb, what was his meaning? Surely not that the sluggish temperament of the one and the headlong ardour of the other alike required modification by instruction, but rather that each would gain from an admixture of the qualities of the other.

¹ The pancratation was a mixture of wrestling and boxing.

In the case of weaker understandings however some 12 concession must be made and they should be directed merely to follow the call of their nature, since thus they will be more effective in doing the only thing that lies in their power. But if we are fortunate enough to meet with richer material, such as justifies us in the hope of producing a real orator, we must leave no oratorical virtue uncared for. For though he 13 will necessarily have a natural bent for some special department of oratory, he will not feel repelled by the others, and by sheer application will develop his other qualities until they equal those in which he naturally excels. The skilled gymnast will once again provide us with a parallel: if he undertakes to train a pancratiast,¹ he will not merely teach him how to use his fists or his heels, nor will he restrict his instructions to the holds in wrestling, giving special attention to certain tricks of this kind, but will train him in every department of the science. Some will no doubt be incapable of attaining proficiency in certain exercises; these must specialise on those which lie within their powers. For there are two things which he must be most 14 careful to avoid: first, he must not attempt the impossible, secondly he must not switch off his pupil from what he can do well to exercises for which he is less well suited. But if his pupil is like the famous docebitur ille, quem adolescentes senem vidimus, Nicostratus, omnibus in eo docendi partibus similiter utetur, efficietque illum, qualis hic fuit, luctando pugnandoque, quorum utroque certamine iisdem 15 diebus coronabatur, invictum. Et quanto id magis oratoris futuri magistro providendum erit? Non enim satis est dicere presse tantum aut subtiliter aut aspere, non magis quam phonaseo acutis tantum aut mediis aut gravibus sonis aut horum etiam particulis excellere. Nam sicut cithara ita oratio perfecta non est, nisi ab imo ad summum omnibus intenta nervis consentiat.

QUINTILIAN

IX. Plura de officio docentium locutus discipulos id unum interim moneo, ut praeceptores suos non minus quam ipsa studia ament, et parentes esse non 2 quidem corporum sed mentium credant. Multum haec pietas conferet studio; nam ita et libenter audient et dictis credent et esse similes concupiscent, in ipsos denique coetus scholarum laeti alacresque convenient, emendati non irascuntur, laudati gaude-
3 bunt, ut sint carissimi, studio merentur. Nam ut illorum officium est docere, sic horum praebere se dociles; alioqui neutrum sine altero sufficit. Et sicut hominis ortus ex utroque gignentium confertur, et frustra sparseris semina, nisi illa praemollitus foverit sulus: ita eloquentia coalescere

Nicostratus, whom we saw when he was old and we were boys, he will train him equally in every department of the science and will make him a champion both in boxing and wrestling, like Nicostratus himself who won the prize for both contests within a few days of each other. And how much more important is the employment of such methods where our future orator is concerned! It is not enough to be able to speak with terseness, subtlety or vehemence, any more than it would be for a singing master to excel in the upper, middle or lower register only, or in particular sections of these registers alone. Eloquence is like a harp and will never reach perfection, unless all its strings be taut and in tune. 15

IX. Though I have spoken in some detail of the duties of the teacher, I shall for the moment confine my advice to the learners to one solitary admonition, that they should love their masters not less than their studies, and should regard them as the parents not indeed of their bodies but of their minds. Such attachments are of invaluable assistance to study. For under their influence they find it a pleasure to listen to their teachers, believe what they say and long to be like them, come cheerfully and gladly to school, are not angry when corrected, rejoice when praised, and seek to win their master's affection by the devotion with which they pursue their studies. For as it is the duty of the master to teach, so it is the duty of the pupil to show himself teachable. The two obligations are mutually indispensable. And just as it takes two parents to produce a human being, and as the seed is scattered in vain, if the ground is hard and there is no furrow to receive it and bring it to growth, even so eloquence can never come to 3

QUINTILIAN

nequit nisi sociata tradentis accipientisque concordia.

X. In his primis operibus, quae non ipsa parva sunt sed maiorum quasi membra atque partes, bene instituto atque exercitato iam fere tempus appetet aggrediendi suasorias iudicialesque materias; quarum antequam viam ingredior, pauca mihi de ipsa ratione declamandi dicenda sunt, quae quidem ut ex omnibus novissime inventa ita multo est utilissima. Nam et euncta illa, de quibus diximus, in se fere continet, et veritati proximam imaginem reddit, ideoque ita est celebrata, ut plerisque videretur ad formandam eloquentiam vel sola sufficere. Neque enim virtus ulla perpetuae duntaxat orationis reperiri potest, quae non sit cum hac dicendi meditatione communis. Eo quidem res ista culpa docentium receidit, ut inter praecipuas quae corrumpent eloquentiam causas licentia atque inscitia declamantium fuerit. Sed eo, quod natura bonum est, bene uti licet. Sint ergo et ipsae materiae, quae fingentur, quam simillimae veritatis, et declamatio, in quantum maxime potest, imitetur eas actiones, in quarum exercitationem reperta est. Nam magos et pestilentiam et responsa et saeviores tragicis novercas aliaque magis adhuc fabulosa frustra inter sponsiones et interdicta quae-

¹ sponsio (= a wager) was a form of lawsuit in which the litigant promised to pay a certain sum of money if he lost his case. The interdict was an order issued by the praetor maturity, unless teacher and taught are in perfect sympathy.

X. These elementary stages are in themselves no small undertaking, but they are merely members and portions of the greater whole; when therefore the pupil has been thoroughly instructed and exercised in these departments, the time will as a rule have come for him to attempt deliberative and forensic themes. But before I begin to discuss these, I must say a few words on the theory of declamation, which is at once the most recent and most useful of rhetorical exercises. For it includes 2 practically all the exercises of which we have been speaking and is in close touch with reality. As a result it has acquired such a vogue that many think that it is the sole training necessary to the formation of an orator, since there is no excellence in a formal speech which is not also to be found in this type of rhetorical exercise. On the other hand the actual 3 practice of declamation has degenerated to such an extent owing to the fault of our teachers, that it has come to be one of the chief causes of the corruption of modern oratory; such is the extravagance and ignorance of our declaimers. But it is possible to make a sound use of anything that is naturally sound. The subjects chosen for themes should, therefore, be 4 as true to life as possible, and the actual declamation should, as far as may be, be modelled on the pleadings for which it was devised as a training. For we 5 shall hunt in vain among *sponsions*¹ and interdicts for magicians and plagues and oracles and step-mothers more cruel than any in tragedy, and other commanding or prohibiting certain action. It occurred chiefly in disputes about property.

QUINTILIAN

remus. Quid ergo? Nunquam haec supra fidem et poetica, ut vere dixerim, themata iuvenibus tractare permittamus, ut exspatiantur et gaudeant materia et 6 quasi in corpus eant? Erit optimum; sed certe sint grandia et tumida, non stulta etiam et acrioribus oculis intuenti ridicula: ut, si iam cedendum est, impleat se declamator aliquando, dum sciat, ut quadrupedes, cum viridi pabulo distentae sunt, sanguinis detractioe curantur et sic ad cibos viribus conservandis idoneos redeunt, ita sibi quoque tenuandas adipos, et quidquid humoris corrupti contraxerit, emittendum, si esse sanus ac robustus volet.
7 Alioqui tumor ille inanis primo cuiusque veri operis conatu deprehendetur. Totum autem declamandi opus qui diversum omni modo a forensibus causis existimant, ii profecto ne rationem quidem, qua ista
8 exercitatio inventa sit, pervident. Nam si foro non praeparat, aut scenicae ostentationi aut furiosae vociferationi simillimum est. Quid enim attinet iudicem praeparare, qui nullus est; narrare, quod omnes sciant falsum; probationes adhibere causae, de qua nemo sit pronuntiaturus? Et haec quidem otiosa tantum; adfeci vero et ira vel luctu permovere, cuius est ludibrii, nisi quibusdam pugnae simulaeris ad

¹ The themes of the controversiae often turned on the supernatural and on crimes and incidents such as rarely or never occur in actual life.

subjects still more unreal than these.¹ What then? are we never to permit young men to handle unreal or, to be more accurate, poetie themes that they may run riot and exult in their strength and display their full stature? It were best to prohibit them absolutely. 6
 But at any rate the themes, however swelling and magnificent, should not be such as to seem foolish and laughable to the eye of an intelligent observer. Consequently, if we must make some concession, let us allow the declaimer to gorge himself occasionally, as long as he realises that his case will be like that of cattle that have blown themselves out with a surfeit of green food: they are cured of their disorder by blood-letting and then put back to food such as will maintain their strength; similarly the declaimer must be rid of his superfluous fat, and his corrupt humours must be discharged, if he wants to be strong and healthy. Otherwise, the first time he 7 makes any serious effort, his swollen emptiness will stand revealed. Those, however, who hold that declamation has absolutely nothing in common with pleading in the courts, are clearly quite unaware of the reasons which gave rise to this type of exercise. For if declamation is not a preparation for the actual 8 work of the courts, it can only be compared to the rant of an actor or the raving of a lunatic. For what is the use of attempting to conciliate a non-existent judge, or of stating a case which all know to be false, or of trying to prove a point on which judgment will never be passed? Such waste of effort is, however, a comparative trifle. But what can be more ludicrous than to work oneself into a passion and to attempt to excite the anger or grief of our hearers, unless we are preparing ourselves by verum discrimen aciemque iustam consuescimus?

QUINTILIAN

9 Nihil ergo inter forense genus dicendi atque hoc declamatorium intererit? Si profectus gratia dicimus, nihil. Utinamque adiici ad consuetudinem posset, ut nominibus uteremur, et perplexae magis et longioris aliquando actus controversiae finge-rentur, et verba in usu cotidiano posita minus timeremus, et iocos inserere moris esset; quae nos, quamlibet per alia in scholis exercitati simus, tirones 10 in foro inveniunt. Si vero in ostentationem comparetur declamatio, sane paulum aliquid inclinare 11 ad voluptatem audientium debemus. Nam et in iis actionibus, quae in aliqua sine dubio veritate ver-santur, sed sunt ad popularem aptatae delectationem, quales legimus panegyricos, totumque hoc demon-strativum genus, permittitur adhibere plus cultus omnemque artem, quae latere plerumque in iudiciis 12 nibus in hoc advocatis. Quare declamatio, quoniam est iudiciorum consiliorumque imago, similis esse debet veritati; quoniam autem aliquid in se habet 13 ἐπιδεικτικόν, nonnihil sibi nitoris assumere. Quod faciunt actores comici, qui neque ita prorsus, ut nos vulgo loquimur, pronuntiant, quod esset sine arte, such mimic combats for the actual strife and the pitched battles of the law-courts? Is there then no difference between our declamations and genuine forensic oratory? I can only reply, that if we speak with a desire for improvement, there will be no difference. I wish indeed that certain additions could be made to the existing practice; that we made use of names, that our fictitious debates dealt with more complicated cases and sometimes took longer to deliver, that we were less afraid of words drawn from everyday speech and that we were in the habit of seasoning our words with jests. For as regards all these points, we are mere novices when we come to actual pleading, however elaborate the training that the schools have given us on other points. And even if display is the object of declamation, surely we ought to unbend a little for the entertainment of our audience. For even in those speeches which, although undoubtedly to some extent concerned with the truth, are designed to charm the multitude (such for instance as panegyrics and the oratory of display in all its branches), it is permissible to be more ornate and not merely to disclose all the resources of our art, which in cases of law should as a rule be concealed, but actually to flaunt them before those who have been summoned to hear us. Declamation therefore should resemble the truth, since it is modelled on forensic and deliberative oratory. On the other hand it also involves an element of display, and should in consequence assume a certain air of elegance. In this connexion I may cite the practice of comic actors, whose delivery is not exactly that of common speech, since that would be inartistic, but is on the other hand not neque procul tamen a natura recedunt, quo vitio periret imitatio; sed morem communis huius ser-14 monis decore quodam scenico exornant. Sic quoque aliqua nos incommoda ex iis, quas finxerimus, materiis consequentur, in eo praecipue, quod multa in iis relinquuntur incerta, quae sumimus ut videtur, aetates, facultates, liberi, parentes, urbium ipsarum vires, 15 iura, mores, alia his similia; quin aliquando etiam argumentum ex ipsis positionum vitiis ducimus. Sed haec suo quaeque loco. Quamvis enim omne propositum operis a nobis destinati eo spectet, ut orator instituat, tamen, ne quid studiosi requirant, etiam si quid erit, quod ad scholas proprie pertineat, in transitu non omittemus.

QUINTILIAN

XI. Iam hinc ergo nobis inchoanda est ea pars artis, ex qua capere initium solent, qui priora omiserunt; quanquam video quosdam in ipso statim limine obstaturos mihi, qui nihil egere huiusmodi praeceptis eloquentiam putent, sed natura sua et vulgari modo et scholarum exercitatione contenti rideant etiam diligentiam nostram exemplo magni quoque nominis professorum, quorum aliquis, ut opinor, interrogatus, quid esset σχῆμα et νόημα, nescire se quidem sed, si far removed from the accents of nature, for, if it were, their mimicry would be a failure: what they do therefore is to exalt the simplicity of ordinary speech by a touch of stage decoration. So too we shall 14 have to put up with certain inconveniences arising from the nature of our fictitious themes; such drawbacks occur more especially in connexion with those numerous details which are left uncertain and which we presume to suit our purpose, such as the ages of our characters, their wealth, their families, or the strength, laws and manners of the cities where our scenes are laid, and the like. Sometimes we even 15 draw arguments from the actual flaws of the assumptions involved by the theme. But each of these points shall be dealt with in its proper place. For although the whole purpose of this work is the formation of an orator, I have no intention of passing over anything that has a genuine connexion with the practice of the schools, for fear that students may complain of the omission.

XI. I have now arrived at the point when I must begin to deal with that portion of the art at which those who have omitted the preceding stages generally commence. I can see, however, that certain critics will attempt to obstruct my path at the very outset: for they will urge that eloquence can dispense with rules of this kind and, in smug satisfaction with themselves and the ordinary methods and exercises of the schools, will laugh at me for my pains; in which they will be only following the example of certain professors of no small reputation. One of these gentlemen, I believe, when asked to define a figure and a thought, replied that he did not know what they were, but that, if they had anything ad rem pertineret, esse in sua declamatione respon-2 dit. Alius percontanti, Theodoreus an Apollodoreus esset? Ego, inquit, parmularius sum. Nec sane potuit urbanus ex confessione inscitiae suae elabi.

QUINTILIAN

Porro hi, quia et beneficio ingenii praestantes sunt habiti et multa etiam memoria digna exclamaverunt, 3 plurimos habent similes negligentiae suae, paucissimos naturae. Igitur impetu dicere se et viribus uti gloriantur; neque enim opus esse probatione aut dispositione in rebus fictis, sed, cuius rei gratia plenum sit auditorium, sententiis grandibus, quarum 4 optima quaeque a periculo petatur. Quin etiam in cogitando, nulla ratione adhibita aut tectum intuentes magnum aliquid, quod ultro se offerat, pluribus saepe diebus expectant, aut murmure incerto velut classico instincti concitatissimum corporis motum non enuntiandis sed quaerendis verbis 5 accommodant. Nonnulli certa sibi initia, priusquam sensum invenerint, destinant, quibus aliquid diserti subiungendum sit, eaque diu secum ipsi clareque meditati desperata conectendi facultate deserunt et

¹ i.e. I care naught for your rival schools of rhetoric. I give all my favour to the men armed with the buckler (the gladiators known as Thracæ). Such contests of the amphitheatre interest me far more than the contests between rival schools of rhetoric.

to do with the subject, they would be found in his declamation. Another when asked whether he was a follower of Theodorus or Apollodorus, replied, "Oh! as for me, I am all for the Thracians."¹ To do him justice, he could hardly have found a neater way to avoid confessing his ignorance. These persons, just because, thanks to their natural gifts, they are regarded as brilliant performers and have, as a matter of fact, uttered much that deserves to be remembered, think that, while most men share their careless habits, few come near them for talent. Consequently they make it their boast that they speak on impulse and owe their success to their native powers; they further assert that there is no need of proof or careful marshalling of facts when we are speaking on fictitious themes, but only of some of those sounding epigrams, the expectation of which has filled the lecture-room; and these they say are best improvised on the spur of the moment. Further, owing to their contempt for method, when they are meditating on some future effusion, they spend whole days looking at the ceiling in the hope that some magnificent inspiration may occur to them, or rock their bodies to and fro, booming inarticulately as if they had a trumpet inside them and adapting their agitated movements, not to the delivery of the words, but to their pursuit. Some again settle on certain definite openings long before they have thought what they are going to say, with a view to using them as pegs for subsequent snatches of eloquence, and then after practising their delivery first in silent thought and then aloud for hours together, in utter desperation of providing any connecting links, abandon them and

QUINTILIAN

ad alia deinceps atque inde alia non minus communia 6 ac nota devertunt. Qui plurimum videntur habere rationis, non in causas tamen laborem suum sed in locos intendunt, atque in iis non corpori prospiciunt sed abrupta quaedam, ut forte ad manum venero, 7 iaculantur. Unde fit, ut dissoluta et ex diversis congesta oratio cohaerere non possit similisque sit commentariis puerorum, in quos ea, quae aliis declamantibus laudata sunt, regerunt. Magnas tamen sententias et res bonas, ita enim gloriari solent, elidunt; nam et barbari et servi; et si hoc sat est, nulla est ratio dicendi.

XII. Ne hoc quidem negaverim, sequi plerumque hanc opinionem, ut fortius dicere videantur indocti; primum vitio male iudicantium, qui maiorem habere vim credunt ea, quae non habent artem, ut effringere quam aperire, rumpere quam solvere, trahere quam 2 ducere putant robustius. Nam et gladiator, qui armorum inscius in rixam ruit, et luctator, qui totius corporis nisu in id, quod semel invasit, incumbit, fortior ab his vocatur; cum interim et hic frequenter suis viribus ipse prosternitur, et illum vehementis take refuge in one formula after another, each no less hackneyed and familiar than the last. The least unreasonable of them devote their attention not to the actual cases, but to their purple patches, in the composition of which they pay no attention to the subject-matter, but fire off a series of isolated thoughts just as they happen to come to hand. The result is a speech which, being composed of disconnected passages having nothing in common with each other, must necessarily lack cohesion and can only be compared to a schoolboy's notebook, in which he jots down any passages from the declamations of others that have come in for a word of praise. None the less they do occasionally strike out some good things and some fine epigrams, such as they make their boast. Why not? slaves and barbarians sometimes achieve the same effects, and if we are to be satisfied with this sort of thing, then good-bye to any theory of oratory. 6 7

XII. I must, however, admit that the general opinion is that the untrained speaker is usually the more vigorous. This opinion is due primarily to the erroneous judgment of faulty critics, who think that true vigour is all the greater for its lack of art, regarding it as a special proof of strength to force what might be opened, to break what might be untied and to drag what might be led. Even a gladiator who plunges into the fight with no skill at arms to help him, and a wrestler who puts forth the whole strength of his body the moment he has got a hold, is acclaimed by them for his outstanding vigour, although it is of frequent occurrence in such cases for the latter to be overthrown by his own strength and for the former to find the fury of his 2

3 impetus excipit adversarii mollis articulus. Sed sunt in hac parte, quae imperitos etiam naturaliter fallant; nam et divisio, cum plurimum valeat in causis, speciem virium minuit, et rudia politis maiora 4 et sparsa compositis numerosiora creduntur. Est praeterea quaedam virtutum vitiorumque vicinia, qua maledicus pro libero, temerarius pro forti, effusus pro copioso accipitur. Maledicit autem ineruditus apertius et saepius vel cum periculo suscepti litiga-5 toris, frequenter etiam suo. Adfert et ista res opinionem, quia libentissime homines audiunt ea, quae dicere ipsi noluisent. Illud quoque alterum quod est in elocutione ipsa periculum minus vitat conaturque perdit, unde evenit nonnunquam, ut aliquid grande inveniat qui semper quaerit quod nimium est; verum id et raro provenit, et cetera vitia non pensat.

6 Propter hoc quoque interdum videntur indocti copiam habere maiorem, quod dicunt omnia; doctis est et electio et modus. His accedit, quod a cura docendi quod intenderunt recedunt. Itaque illud quaestionum et argumentorum apud corrupta iudicia onslaught parried by his adversary with a supple turn of the wrist. But there are many details in this 3 department of our art which the unskilled critic will never notice. For instance, careful division under heads, although of the utmost importance in actual cases, makes the outward show of strength seem less than the reality; the unhewn block is larger than the polished marble, and things when scattered seem more numerous than when placed together.

 There is moreover a sort of resemblance between 4 certain merits and certain defects: abuse passes for freedom of speech, rashness for courage, prodigality for abundance. But the untrained advocate will abuse too openly and too often, even though by so doing he imperils the success of the case which he has undertaken and not seldom his own personal safety as well. But even such violence will win 5 men's good opinion, since they are only too pleased to hear another say things which nothing would have induced them to utter themselves. Such speakers are also less careful to avoid that other peril, the pitfall of style, and are so reckless in their efforts that sometimes in their passion for extravagance they light upon some really striking expression. But such success is rare and does not compensate for their other defects.

For the same reason the uninstructed sometimes 6 appear to have a richer flow of language, because they say everything that can be said, while the learned exercise discrimination and self-restraint.
 To this must be added the fact that such persons take no trouble to prove their contentions, and consequently steer clear of the chilly reception given in our decadent law-courts to arguments and frigus evitant nihilque aliud, quam quod vel pravis voluptatibus aures assistentium permulceat, quaerunt.

QUINTILIAN

7 Sententiae quoque ipsae, quas solas petunt, magis eminent, cum omnia circa illas sordida et abiecta sunt; ut lumina non inter umbras, quemadmodum Cicero dicit, sed plane in tenebris clariora sunt. Itaque ingeniosi vocentur, ut libet, dum tamen con-
8 stet contumeliose sic laudari disertum. Nihilominus confitendum est etiam detrahere doctrinam aliquid, ut limam rudibus et cotes hebetibus et vino vetustatem, sed vitia detrahit, atque eo solo minus est, quod litterae perpolierunt, quo melius.

9 Verum hi pronuntiatione quoque famam dicendi fortius quaerunt. Nam et clamant ubique et omnia levata, ut ipsi vocant, manu emugiunt, multo discursu, anhelitu, iactatione gestus, motu capitis
10 furentes. Iam collidere manus, terrae pedem incutere, femur, pectus, frontem caedere, mire ad pullatum circulum facit; cum ille eruditus, ut in oratione multa summittere, variare, disponere, ita etiam in pronuntiando suum cuique eorum, quae questions and seek only for such themes as may beguile the ears of the public even at the cost of appealing to the most perverted tastes. Again, 7 their epigrams, the sole objects of their quest, seem all the more striking because of the dreariness and squalor of their context, since flashes are more clearly seen against a background, not of mere "shade," as Cicero¹ says, but of pitchy darkness. Well, let the world credit them with as much genius as it pleases, so long as it is admitted that such praise is an insult to any man of real eloquence. None the less it must be confessed that learning 8 does take something from oratory, just as the file takes something from rough surfaces or the whetstone from blunt edges or age from wine; it takes away defects, and if the results produced after subjection to the polish of literary study are less, they are less only because they are better.

¹ de Or. III. xxvi. 101.

² pullatus = wearing dark clothes, i. e. the common people, as opposed to the upper classes wearing the white or purple-bordered toga.

But these creatures have another weapon in their 9 armoury: they seek to obtain the reputation of speaking with greater vigour than the trained orator by means of their delivery. For they shout on all and every occasion and bellow their every utterance "with uplifted hand," to use their own phrase, dashing this way and that, panting, gesticulating wildly and wagging their heads with all the frenzy of a lunatic. Smite your hands together, stamp 10 the ground, slap your thigh, your breast, your forehead, and you will go straight to the heart of the dingier members of your audience.² But the educated speaker, just as he knows how to moderate his style, and to impart variety and artistic form to his speech, is an equal adept in the matter of delivery and will suit his action to the tone of each dicet, colori accommodare actum sciat, et, si quid sit perpetua observatione dignum, modestus et esse et 11 videri malit. At illi hanc vim appellant, quae est potius violentia; cum interim non actores modo aliquos invenias sed, quod est turpius, praeceptores etiam, qui brevem dicendi exercitationem consecuti ommissa ratione ut tulit impetus, passim tumultuentur eosque, qui plus honoris litteris tribuerunt, ineptos et icuios et trepidos et infirmos, ut quodque verbum 12 contumeliosissimum occurrit, appellent. Verum illis quidem gratulemur sine labore, sine ratione, sine disciplina disertis; nos, quando et praecipendi munus iam pridem deprecari sumus et in foro quo-que dicendi, quia honestissimum finem putabamus desinere dum desideraremur, inquirendo scribendoque talia consolemur otium nostrum, quae futura usui bonae mentis iuvenibus arbitramur, nobis certe sunt voluptati.

XIII. Nemo autem a me exigat id praeceptorum genus, quod est a plerisque scriptoribus artium tra-ditum, ut quasi quasdam leges immutabili necessitate constrictas studiosis dicendi feram: utique prooemium et id quale, proxima huic narratio, quae lex deinde narrandi, propositio post hanc vel, ut quibusdam placuit, excursio, tum certus ordo quaestionum ceteraque, quae, velut si aliter facere fas non sit, portion of his utterances, while, if he has any one canon for universal observance, it is that he should both possess the reality and present the appearance of self-control. But the ranters confer the title of 11 force on that which is really violence. You may also occasionally find not merely pleaders, but, what is far more shameful, teachers as well, who, after a brief training in the art of speaking, throw method to the winds and, yielding to the impulse of the moment, run riot in every direction, abusing those who hold literature in higher respect as fools without life, courage or vigour, and calling them the first and worst name that occurs to them. Still let 12 me congratulate these gentlemen on attaining eloquence without industry, method or study. As for myself I have long since retired from the task of teaching in the schools and of speaking in the courts, thinking it the most honourable conclusion to retire while my services were still in request, and all I ask is to be allowed to console my leisure by making such researches and composing such instructions as will, I hope, prove useful to young men of ability, and are, at any rate, a pleasure to myself.

XIII. Let no one however demand from me a rigid code of rules such as most authors of textbooks have laid down, or ask me to impose on students of rhetoric a system of laws immutable as fate, a system in which injunctions as to the exordium and its nature lead the way; then come the statement of facts and the laws to be observed in this connexion: next the proposition or, as some prefer, the digression, followed by prescriptions as to the order in which the various questions should be discussed, with all the other rules, which some speakers follow as though they had no

QUINTILIAN

2 quidam tanquam iussi sequuntur. Erat enim rhetorice res prorsus facilis ac parva, si uno et brevi praescripto contineretur; sed mutantur pleraque causis, temporibus, occasione, necessitate. Atque ideo res in oratore praecipua consilium est, quia
3 varie et ad rerum momenta convertitur. Quid si enim praecipias imperatori, quotiens aciem instruat, deringat frontem, cornua utrinque promoveat, equites pro cornibus locet? erit haec quidem rectissima fortasse ratio, quotiens licebit; sed mutabitur natura loci, si mons occurret, si flumen obstabit, collibus,
4 silvis, asperitate alia prohibebitur; mutabit hostium genus, mutabit praesentis condicio discriminis; nunc acie directa nunc cuneis, nunc auxiliis nunc legione pugnabitur, nonnunquam terga etiam dedisse simul
5 lata fuga proderit. Ita prooemium necessarium an supervacuum, breve an longius, ad iudicem omni sermone directo an aliquando averso per aliquam figuram dicendum sit, constricta an latius fusa narratio, continua an divisa, recta an ordine permutato, causae docebunt. Itemque de quaestionum ordine, ¹ i.e. by the figure known as apostrophe, in which the orator diverts his speech from the judge to some other person: see IX. ii. 38.

choice but to regard them as orders and as if it were a crime to take any other line. If the whole of rhetoric could be thus embodied in one compact code, it would be an easy task of little compass: but most rules are liable to be altered by the nature of the case, circumstances of time and place, and by hard necessity itself. Consequently the all-important gift for an orator is a wise adaptability since he is called upon to meet the most varied emergencies. What if you should instruct a general, as often as he marshals his troops for battle, to draw up his front in line, advance his wings to left and right, and station his cavalry to protect his flank? This will perhaps be the best plan, if circumstances allow. But it may have to be modified owing to the nature of the ground, if, for instance, he is confronted by a mountain, if a river bars his advance, or his movements are hampered by hills, woods or broken country. Or again it may be modified by the character of the enemy or the nature of the crisis by which he is faced. On one occasion he will fight in line, on another in column, on one he will use his auxiliary troops, on another his legionaries; while occasionally a feint of flight may win the day. So, too, with the rules of oratory. Is the exordium necessary or superfluous? should it be long or short addressed entirely to the judge or sometimes directed to some other quarter by the employment of some figure of speech? Should the statement of facts be concise or developed at some length? continuous or divided into sections? and should it follow the actual or an artificial order of events? The orator will find the answers to all these questions in the circumstances of the case. So, too, with the order in which questions should be discussed,

QUINTILIAN

6 cum in eadem controversia aliud alii parti prius quaeri frequenter expediat. Neque enim rogationi-bus plebisve scitis sancta sunt ista praecepta, sed 7 hoc quidquid est utilitas excogitavit. Non negabo autem sic utile esse plerumque, alioqui nec scriberem; verum, si eadem illa nobis aliud suadebit utilitas, hanc relictis magistrorum auctoritatibus sequemur.

8 Equidem id maxime praecipiam ac repetens iterumque iterumque monebo: res duas in omni actu spectet orator, quid deceat et quid expediat. Expedit autem saepe mutare ex illo constituto traditoque ordine aliqua et interim decet, ut in statuis atque picturis videmus variari habitus, vultus, status. Nam 9 recti quidem corporis vel minima gratia est; nempe enim adversa sit facies et demissa brachia et iuncti pedes et a summis ad ima rigens opus. Flexus ille et, ut sic dixerim, motus dat actum quendam et adfectum. Ideo nec ad unum modum formatae 10 manus et in vultu mille species. Cum habent quaedam et impetum, sedent alia vel incumbunt; nuda haec, illa velata sunt, quaedam mixta ex utroque. Quid tam distortum et elaboratum quam est ille discobolos Myronis? Si quis tamen, Verg. Aen. iii. 436.

since in any given debate it may often suit one party 6 best that such and such a question come up first, while their opponents would be best suited by another.
 For these rules have not the formal authority of laws or decrees of the plebs, but are, with all they contain, the children of expediency. I will not deny that it 7 is generally expedient to conform to such rules, otherwise I should not be writing now; but if our friend expediency suggests some other course to us, why, we shall disregard the authority of the professors and follow her.

For my part above all things 8

“This I enjoin and urge and urge anew”¹ that in all his pleadings the orator should keep two things constantly in view, what is becoming and what is expedient. But it is often expedient and occasionally becoming to make some modification in the time-honoured order. We see the same thing in pictures and statues. Dress, expression and attitude are frequently varied. The body when held bolt 9 upright has but little grace, for the face looks straight forward, the arms hang by the side, the feet are joined and the whole figure is stiff from top to toe.

 But that curve, I might almost call it motion, with which we are so familiar, gives an impression of action and animation. So, too, the hands will not always be represented in the same position, and the variety given to the expression will be infinite. Some figures 10 are represented as running or rushing forward, others sit or recline, some are nude, others clothed, while some again are half-dressed, half-naked. Where can we find a more violent and elaborate attitude than that of the Discobolus of Myron? Yet the critic who ut parum rectum, improbet opus, nonne ab intellectu artis abfuerit, in qua vel praecipue laudabilis est ipsa illa novitas ac difficultas?

QUINTILIAN

11 Quam quidem gratiam et delectationem adferunt figurae, quaeque in sensibus quaeque in verbis sunt; mutant enim aliquid a recto atque hanc prae se virtutem ferunt, quod a consuetudine vulgari recesserunt.

12 Habet in pictura speciem tota facies; Apelles tamen imaginem Antigoni latere tantum altero ostendit, ut amissi oculi deformitas lateret. Quid? non in oratione operienda sunt quaedam, sive ostendi non debent sive exprimi pro dignitate non

13 possunt? Ut fecit Timanthes, opinor, Cythnius in ea tabula, qua Coloten Teium vicit. Nam cum in Iphigeniae immolatione pinxisset tristem Calchante[m], tristiorem Ulixen, addidisset Menelao, quem summum poterat ars efficere, maerorem, consumptis adfectibus, non reperiens, quo digne modo patris vultum posset exprimere, velavit eius caput et suo

14 cuique animo dedit aestimandum. Nonne huic simile est illud Sallustianum, Nam de Carthagine tacere satius puto quam parum dicere? Propter quae mihi semper moris fuit, quam minime alligare me ad praecepta, quae καθολικά vocitant, id est (ut dicamus quomodo possumus) universalialia vel perpetualialia. Raro enim reperitur hoc genus, ut non labefactari parte

¹ Jug. xix.

disapproved of the figure because it was not upright, would merely show his utter failure to understand the sculptor's art, in which the very novelty and difficulty of execution is what most deserves our praise. A similar impression of grace and charm is produced by rhetorical figures, whether they be figures of thought or figures of speech. For they involve a certain departure from the straight line and have the merit of variation from the ordinary usage. In a picture the full face is most attractive. But Apelles painted Antigonus in profile, to conceal the blemish caused by the loss of one eye. So, too, in speaking, there are certain things which have to be concealed, either because they ought not to be disclosed or because they cannot be expressed as they deserve. Timanthes, who was, I think, a native of Cythnus, provides an example of this in the picture with which he won the victory over Colotes of Teos. It represented the sacrifice of Iphigenia, and the artist had depicted an expression of grief on the face of Calchas and of still greater grief on that of Ulysses, while he had given Menelaus an agony of sorrow beyond which his art could not go. Having exhausted his powers of emotional expression he was at a loss to portray the father's face as it deserved, and solved the problem by veiling his head and leaving his sorrow to the imagination of the spectator. Sallust¹ did something similar when he wrote "I think it better to say nothing of Carthage rather than say too little." It has always, therefore, been my custom not to tie myself down to universal or general rules (this being the nearest equivalent I can find for the Greek catholic rules). For rules are rarely of such a kind that their validity cannot be shaken and overthrown in some aliqua et subrui possit. Sed de his plenius suo quidque loco tractabimus. Interim nolo se iuvenes satis instructos, si quem ex his, qui breves plerumque circumferuntur, artis libellum edidicerint, et velut decretis technicorum tutos putent. Multo labore, assiduo studio, varia exercitatione, plurimis experi-16 constat ars dicendi. Sed adiuvatur his quoque, si tamen rectam viam, non unam orbitam monstrent;

 a qua declinare qui crediderit nefas, patiatur necesse est illam per funes ingredientium tarditatem. Itaque et stratum militari labore iter saepe deserimus com-pendio ducti; et, si rectum limitem rupti torrentibus pontes inciderint, circumire cogemur, et, si ianua 17 tenebitur incendio, per parietem exibimus. Late fusum opus est et multiplex et prope cotidie novum, et de quo nunquam dicta erunt omnia. Quae sint tamen tradita, quid ex his optimum, et si qua mutari, adici, detrahi melius videbitur, dicere experiar.

XIV. Rhetoricen in Latinum transferentes tum oratoriam, tum oratricem nominaverunt. Quos equi-dem non fraudaverim debita laude, quod copiam Romani sermonis augere temptarint. Sed non omnia particular or other. But I must reserve each of these 15 points for fuller treatment in its proper place. For the present I will only say that I do not want young men to think their education complete when they have mastered one of the small text-books of which so many are in circulation, or to ascribe a talismanic value to the arbitrary decrees of theorists. The art of speaking can only be attained by hard work and assiduity of study, by a variety of exercises and repeated trial, the highest prudence and unfailing quickness of judgement. But rules are helpful all the 16 same so long as they indicate the direct road and do not restrict us absolutely to the ruts made by others.

 For he who thinks it an unpardonable sin to leave the old, old track, must be content to move at much the same speed as a tight-rope walker. Thus, for example, we often leave a paved military road to take a short cut or, finding that the direct route is impossible owing to floods having broken down the bridges, are forced to make a circuit, while if our house is on fire and flames bar the way to the front door, we make our escape by breaking through a party wall. The 17 orator's task covers a large ground, is extremely varied and develops some new aspect almost every day, so that the last word on the subject will never have been said. I shall however try to set forth the traditional rules and to point out their best features, mentioning the changes, additions and subtractions which seem desirable.

XIV. Rhetoric is a Greek term which has been translated into Latin by oratoria or oratrix. I would not for the world deprive the translators of the praise which is their due for attempting to increase the vocabulary of our native tongue; but translations

QUINTILIAN

- nos ducentes ex Graeco sequuntur sicut ne illos quidem, quotiens utique suis verbis signare nostra 2 voluerunt. Et haec interpretatio non minus dura est quam illa Plauti essentia atque quæentia, sed ne propria quidem; nam oratoria sic effertur ut elocutoria, oratrix ut elocutrix; illa autem de qua loquimur rhetorice talis est qualis eloquentia, nec dubie apud Graecos quoque duplicem intellectum habet.
- 3 Namque uno modo fit appositum ars rhetorica ut navis piratica, altero nomen rei, qualis est philosophia, amicitia. Nos ipsam nunc volumus significare substantiam ut grammaticæ litteratura est, non litteratrix quemadmodum oratrix, nec litteratoria quemadmodum oratoria; verum id in rhetorice non 4 fit. Ne pugnemus igitur, cum praesertim plurimis alioqui Graecis sit utendum. Nam certe et philosophos et musicos et geometras dicam, nec vim adferam nominibus his indecora in Latinum sermonem mutatione. Denique cum M. Tullius etiam in ipsis librorum, quos hac de re primum scripserat, titulis Graeco nomine utatur, profecto non est verendum, ne temere videamur oratori maximo de nomine artis suae credidisse.
- 5 Igitur rhetorice (iam enim sine metu cavillationis utemur hac appellatione) sic, ut opinor, optime dividetur, ut de arte, de artifice, de opere dicamus. Ars erit, quæ disciplina percipi debet; ea est bene from Greek into Latin are not always satisfactory, just as the attempt to represent Latin words in a Greek dress is sometimes equally unsuccessful. And the translations in question are fully as 2 harsh as the essentia and *queenlia*¹ of Plautus,² and have not even the merit of being exact. For oratoria is formed like elocutoria and oratrix like elocutrix, whereas the rhetoric with which we are concerned is rather to be identified with eloquentia, and the word is undoubtedly used in two 3 senses by the Greeks. In the one case it is an adjective i.e. ars rhetorica, the rhetorical art, like piracy in the phrase navis piratica, in the other it is a noun like philosophy or friendship. It is as a substantive that we require it here; now the correct translation of the Greek grammatice is litteratura not litteratrix or litteratoria, which would be the forms analogous to oratrix and oratoria. But in the case of “rhetoric” there is no similar Latin equivalent. It is 4 best therefore not to quarrel about it, more especially as we have to use Greek terms in many other cases. For I may at least use the words philosophus, musicus and geometres without outraging them by changing them into clumsy Latin equivalents. Finally, since Cicero gave a Greek title³ to the earlier works which he wrote on this subject, I may without fear of rashness accept the great orator as sufficient authority for the name of the art which he professed.

¹ sc. essence and possibility. ² A Stoic. cp. x. i. 124.

³ See § 6 of next chapter.

To resume, then, rhetoric (for I shall now use the 5 name without fear of captious criticism) is in my opinion best treated under the three following heads, the art, the artist and the work. The art is that which we should acquire by study, and is the art of dicendi scientia. Artifex est, qui percepit hanc artem, id est, orator, cuius est summa bene dicere; opus, quod efficitur ab artifice, id est, bona oratio. Haec omnia rursus diducuntur in species; sed illa sequentia suo loco, nunc quae de prima parte tractanda sunt, ordiar.

QUINTILIAN

XV. Ante omnia, quid sit rhetorice. Quae finitur quidem varie, sed quaestionem habet duplicem, aut enim de qualitate ipsius rei aut de comprehensione verborum dissensio est. Prima atque praecipua opinionum circa hoc differentia, quod alii malos quoque viros posse oratores dici putant; alii, quorum nos sententiae accedimus, nomen hoc artemque, de qua loquimur, bonis demum tribui volunt.

2 Eorum autem, qui dicendi facultatem a maiore ac magis expetenda vitae laude secernunt, quidam rhetorice vim tantum, quidam scientiam sed non virtutem, quidam usum, quidam artem quidem sed a scientia et virtute diiunctam, quidam etiam pravitatem quandam artis, id est κακοτεχνίαν, nominaverunt.

3 Hi fere aut in persuadendo aut in dicendo apte ad persuadendum positum orandi munus sunt arbitrati. Id enim fieri potest ab eo quoque, qui vir bonus non sit. Est igitur frequentissimus finis, rhetorice esse vim persuadendi. Quod ego vim appello, plerique potestatem, nonnulli facultatem vocant; quae res ne quid adferat ambiguitatis, rim

4 dico δύναμιν. Haec opinio originem ab Isocrate (si speaking well. The artist is he who has acquired the art, that is to say, he is the orator whose task it is to speak well. The work is the achievement of the artist, namely good speaking. Each of these three general divisions is in its turn divided into species. Of the two latter divisions I shall speak in their proper place. For the present I shall proceed to a discussion of the first.

XV. The first question which confronts us is "What is rhetoric?" Many definitions have been given; but the problem is really twofold. For the dispute turns either on the quality of the thing itself or on the meaning of the words in which it is defined. The first and chief disagreement on the subject is found in the fact that some think that even bad men may be called orators, while others, of whom I am one, restrict the name of orator and the art itself to those who are good. Of those who 2 divorce eloquence from that yet fairer and more desirable title to renown, a virtuous life, some call rhetoric merely a power, some a science, but not a virtue, some a practice, some an art, though they will not allow the art to have anything in common with science or virtue, while some again call it a perversion of art or κακοτεχνία. These persons have as a 3 rule held that the task of oratory lies in persuasion or speaking in a persuasive manner: for this is within the power of a bad man no less than a good. Hence we get the common definition of rhetoric as the power of persuading. What I call a power, many call a capacity, and some a faculty. In order therefore that there may be no misunderstanding I will say that by power I mean δύναμις. This view 4 is derived from Isocrates, if indeed the treatise on tamen revera Ars, quae circumfertur, eius est) duxit. Qui, cum longe sit a voluntate infamantium oratoris officia, finem artis temere comprehendit, dicens esse rhetoricen persuadendi opificem, id est πειθοῦς δημιουργόν; neque enim mihi permiserim eadem uti declinatione, qua Emnius M. Cethegum Suadæ 5 medullam vocat. Apud Platonem quoque Gorgias in libro, qui nomine eius inscriptus est, idem fere dicit; sed hanc Plato illius opinionem vult accipi non suam. Cicero pluribus locis scripsit, officium oratoris esse 6 dicere apposite ad persuadendum. In rhetoricis etiam, quos sine dubio ipse non probat, finem facit persuadere. Verum et pecunia persuadet et gratia et auctoritas dicentis et dignitas, postremo aspectus etiam ipse sine voce, quo vel recordatio meritorum cuiusque vel facies aliqua miserabilis vel formae 7 pulchritudo sententiam dicat. Nam et Manium Aquilium defendens Antonius, cum scissa veste eicatricee, quas is pro patria pectore adverso suscepisset, ostendit, non orationis habuit fiduciam sed oculis populi Romani vim attulit, quem illo ipso aspectu maxime motum in hoc, ut absolveret reum, 8 creditum est. Servium quidem Galbam miseratione sola, qua non suos modo liberos parvulos in contione

QUINTILIAN

¹ This treatise is lost. It may have been the work of the younger Isocrates.

² Ann. ix. 309 (Vahlen). The derivative to which he objects is the rare word suada. ³ Gorg. 453 A.

⁴ de Inv. i. v. 6, de Or. i. xxxi. 138.

rhetoric¹ which circulates under his name is really from his hand. He, although far from agreeing with those whose aim is to disparage the duties of an orator, somewhat rashly defined rhetoric as πειθοῦς δημιουργός, the "worker of persuasion": for I cannot bring myself to use the peculiar derivative which Ennius² applies to Marcus Cethegus in the phrase suadae medulla, the "marrow of persuasion." Again Gorgias,³ in the dialogue of Plato that takes 5 its title from his name, says practically the same thing, but Plato intends it to be taken as the opinion of Gorgias, not as his own. Cicero⁴ in more than one passage defined the duty of an orator as "speaking in a persuasive manner." In his *Rhetorica*⁵ too, 6 a work which it is clear gave him no satisfaction, he makes the end to be persuasion. But many other things have the power of persuasion, such as money, influence, the authority and rank of the speaker, or even some sight unsupported by language, when for instance the place of words is supplied by the memory of some individual's great deeds, by his lamentable appearance or the beauty of his person. Thus when Antonius in the course of his defence of 7 Manius Aquilius tore open his client's robe and revealed the honourable scars which he had acquired while facing his country's foes, he relied no longer on the power of his eloquence, but appealed directly to the eyes of the Roman people. And it is believed that they were so profoundly moved by the sight as to acquit the accused. Again there is a speech of 8 Cato, to mention no other records, which informs us that Servius Galba escaped condemnation solely by ⁵ cp. 111. i. 20 and Cic. de Or. 1. ii. 5. The work in question is better known as the de Inventione.

QUINTILIAN

produxerat, sed Galli etiam Sulpicii filium suis ipse manibus circumtulera, elapsum esse, cum aliorum 9 monumentis tum Catonis oratione testatum est. Et Phrynen non Hyperidis actione, quanquam admirabili, sed conspectu corporis, quod illa speciosissimum alioqui diducta nudaverat tunica, putant periculo liberatam. Quae si omnia persuadent, non est hic, 10 de quo locuti sumus, idoneus finis. Ideoque diligentiores sibi sunt visi, qui, cum de rhetorice idem sentirent, existimaverunt eam vim dicendo persua-dendi. Quem finem Gorgias in eodem, de quo supra diximus, libro, velut coactus a Socrate facit; a quo non dissentit Theodectes, sive ipsius id opus est, quod de rhetorice nomine eius inscribitur, sive, ut creditum est, Aristotelis, in quo est, finem esse rhetorices ducere homines dicendo in id, quod actor 11 velit. Sed ne hoc quidem satis est comprehensum; persuadent enim dicendo vel ducunt in id quod volunt alii quoque, ut meretrices, adulatores, corruptores. At contra non persuadet semper orator; ut interim non sit proprius hic finis eius, interim sit communis cum iis, qui ab oratore procul absunt.
12 Atqui non multum ab hoc fine abest Apollodorus, dicens iudicialis orationis primum et super omnia esse persuadere iudici et sententiam eius ducere in

¹ Gorg. p. 452 E.

the pity which he aroused not only by producing his own young children before the assembly, but by carrying round in his arms the son of Sulpicius Gallus. So also according to general opinion Phryne was saved not by the eloquence of Hyperides, admirable as it was, but by the sight of her exquisite body, which she further revealed by drawing aside her tunic. And if all these have power to persuade, the end of oratory, which we are discussing, cannot adequately be defined as persuasion. Consequently those who, although holding the same general view of rhetoric, have regarded it as the power of persuasion by speaking, pride themselves on their greater exactness of language. This definition is given by Gorgias, in the dialogue¹ mentioned above, under compulsion from the inexorable logic of Socrates. Theodectes agrees with him, whether the treatise on rhetoric which has come down to us under his name is really by him or, as is generally believed, by Aristotle. In that work the end of rhetoric is defined as the leading of men by the power of speech to the conclusion desired by the orator. But even this definition is not sufficiently comprehensive, since others besides orators persuade by speaking or lead others to the conclusion desired, as for example harlots, flatterers and seducers. On the other hand the orator is not always engaged on persuasion, so that sometimes persuasion is not his special object, while sometimes it is shared by others who are far removed from being orators. And yet Apollodorus is not very far off this definition when he asserts that the first and all-important task of forensic oratory is to persuade the judge and lead his mind to the conclusions desired by the speaker. For id, quod velit; nam et ipse oratorem fortunae sub-licit, ut, si non persuaserit, nomen suum retinere 13 non possit. Quidam recesserunt ab eventu, sicut Aristoteles dicit: rhetorice est vis inveniendi omnia in oratione persuasibilia. Qui finis et illud vitium, de quo supra diximus, habet et insuper quod nihil nisi inventionem complectitur, quae sine elocutione non 14 est oratio. Hermagorae, qui finem eius esse ait per-suasibiliter dicere, et aliis, qui eandem sententiam non iisdem tantum verbis explicant ac finem esse demonstrant dicere quae oporteat omnia ad persuadendum, satis responsum est, cum persuadere non 15 tantum oratoris esse convicimus. Addita sunt his alia varie. Quidam enim circa res omnes, quidam circa civiles modo versari rhetoricen putaverunt; quorum verius utrum sit, in eo loco, qui huius quae-16 stionis proprius est, dicam. Omnia subiecisse oratori videtur Aristoteles, cum dixit vim esse videndi, quid in quaque re possit esse persuasibile. Et Patrocles,¹ qui non quidem adiecit in quaque re, sed nihil excipiendo idem ostendit; vim enim vocat inveniendi, quod sit in oratione persuasibile; qui fines et ipsi solam complectuntur inventionem. Quod vitium fugiens Theodorus vim putat inveniendi et eloquendi cum 17 ornatu credibilia in omni oratione. Sed cum eodem

QUINTILIAN

¹ Iatrocles, B. Iatrocles, Radermacher.

¹ Rhet. i. 2.

even Apollodorus makes the orator the sport of fortune by refusing him leave to retain his title if he fails to persuade. Some on the other hand pay no 13 attention to results, as for example Aristotle,¹ who says "rhetoric is the power of discovering all means of persuading by speech." This definition has not merely the fault already mentioned, but the additional defect of including merely the power of invention, which without style cannot possibly constitute oratory. Hermagoras, who asserts that its end is to 14 speak persuasively, and others who express the same opinion, though in different words, and inform us that the end is to say everything which ought to be said with a view to persuasion, have been sufficiently answered above, when I proved that persuasion was not the privilege of the orator alone. Various additions 15 have been made to these definitions. For some hold that rhetoric is concerned with everything, while some restrict its activity to politics. The question as to which of these views is the nearer to the truth shall be discussed later in its appropriate place. Aris- 16 totle seems to have implied that the sphere of the orator was all-inclusive when he defined rhetoric as the power to detect every element in any given subject which might conduce to persuasion; so too does Patrocles who omits the words in any given subject, but since he excludes nothing, shows that his view is identical. For he defines rhetoric as the power to discover whatever is persuasive in speech. These definitions like that quoted above include no more than the power of invention alone. Theodorus avoids this fault and holds that it is the power to discover and to utter forth in elegant language whatever is credible in every subject of oratory. But, while others besides 17

QUINTILIAN

modo credibilia quo persuasibilia etiam non orator inveniatur, adiiciendo in omni oratione magis quam superiores concedit scelera quoque suadentibus pul-18 cherrimae rei nomen. Gorgias apud Platonem suadendum se artificem in iudiciis et aliis coetibus esse ait, de iniustis quoque et iniustis tractare; cui Socrates 19 persuadendum, non docendum concedit facultatem. Qui vero non omnia subiiciebant oratori, sollicitius ac verbosius, ut necesse erat, adhibuerunt discrimina; quorum fuit Ariston, Critolai Peripatetici discipulus, cuius hic finis est, scientia videndi et agendi in quae- stionibus civilibus per orationem popularis persuasionis.
 20 Hic scientiam, quia Peripateticus est, non, ut Stoici, virtutis loco ponit; popularem autem comprehendendo persuasionem etiam contumeliosus est adversus artem orandi, quam nihil putat doctis per-suasuram. Illud de omnibus, qui circa civiles demum quaestiones oratorem iudicant versari, dictum sit, excludi ab his plurima oratoris officia, illam certe laudativam totam, quae est rhetorices pars tertia.
 21 Cautius Theodorus Gadarensis, ut iam ad eos veniamus, qui artem quidem esse eam sed non virtutem putaverunt. Ita enim dicit (ut ipsis eorum verbis utar, qui haec ex Graeco transtulerunt), Ars inventrix et iudicatrix et nuntiatrix decenti ornatu secundum mensionem eius, quod in quoque potest sumi persuasibile, in 22 materia civili. Itemque Cornelius Celsus, qui finem

¹ Gorg. 454 B.

orators may discover what is credible as well as persuasive, by adding the words in every subject he, to a greater extent than the others, concedes the fairest name in all the world to those who use their gifts as an incitement to crime. Plato makes Gorgias¹ say that he is a master of persuasion in the law-courts and other assemblies, and that his themes are justice and injustice, while in reply Socrates allows him the power of persuading, but not of teaching. Those who refused to make the sphere of oratory all-inclusive, have been obliged to make somewhat forced and long-winded distinctions: among these I may mention Ariston, the pupil of the Peripatetic Critolaus, who produced the following definition, "Rhetoric is the science of seeing and uttering what ought to be said on political questions in language that is likely to prove persuasive to the people." Being a Peripatetic he regards it as a science, not, like the Stoics, as a virtue, while in adding the words "likely to prove persuasive to the people" he inflicts a positive insult on oratory, in implying that it is not likely to persuade the learned. The same criticism will apply to all those who restrict oratory to political questions, for they exclude thereby a large number of the duties of an orator, as for example panegyric, the third department of oratory, which is entirely ignored. Turning to those who regard rhetoric as an art, but not as a virtue, we find that Theodorus of Gadara is more cautious. For he says (I quote the words of his translators), "rhetoric is the art which discovers and judges and expresses, with an elegance duly proportioned to the importance of all such elements of persuasion as may exist in any subject in the field of politics." Similarly Cornelius Celsus defines the end of rhetoric as rhetorices ait dicere persuasibiliter in dubia civili materia. Quibus sunt non dissimiles, qui ab aliis traduntur; qualis est ille, Vis videndi et eloquendi de rebus civilibus subiectis sibi cum quadam persuasione et quodam corporis habitu et eorum, quae dicet, prouuntia- 23 tione. Mille alia, sed aut eadem aut ex eisdem composita; quibus item, cum de materia rhetorices dicendum erit, respondebimus. Quidam eam neque vim neque scientiam neque artem putaverunt, sed Critolaus usum dicendi (nam hoc τριβή significat), 24 Athenaeus fallendi artem. Plerique autem, dum pauca ex Gorgia Platonis a prioribus imperite excerpta legere contenti neque hoc totum neque alia eius volumina evolvunt, in maximum errorem inciderunt, creduntque eum in hac esse opinione, ut rhetorice non artem sed peritiam quandam gratiae 25 ac voluptatis existimet; et alio loco civilitatis particulae simulacrum et quartam partem adulationis, quod duas partes civilitatis corpori adsignet, medicinam et quam interpretantur exercitricem, duas animo, legalem atque iustitiam; adulationem autem medicinae vocet cocorum artificium, exercitricis mangonum, qui colorem fucis et verum robur inani sagina mentiantur, legalis cavillatricem, iustitiae 26 rhetorice. Quae omnia sunt quidem scripta in hoc libro dictaque a Socrate, cuius persona videtur Plato

QUINTILIAN

¹ Gorg. 462 c.

² ib. 463 d.

³ ib. 464 b.

⁴ ib. 464 b-465 e.

to speak persuasively on any doubtful subject within the field of politics. Similar definitions are given by others, such for instance as the following:—“rhetoric is the power of judging and holding forth on such political subjects as come before it with a certain persuasiveness, a certain action of the body and delivery of the words.” There are countless other definitions, 23 either identical with this or composed of the same elements, which I shall deal with when I come to the questions concerned with the subject matter of rhetoric. Some regard it as neither a power, a science or an art; Critolaus calls it the practice of speaking (for this is the meaning of τριβή), Athenaeus styles it the art of deceiving, while the 24 majority, content with reading a few passages from the Gorgias of Plato, unskilfully excerpted by earlier writers, refrain from studying that dialogue and the remainder of Plato’s writings, and thereby fall into serious error. For they believe that in Plato’s view rhetoric was not an art, but a certain adroitness in the production of delight and gratification,¹ or with reference to another passage the 25 *shadow of a small part of politics*² and the fourth department of flattery. For Plato assigns³ two departments of politics to the body, namely medicine and gymnastic, and two to the soul, namely law and justice, while he styles the art of cookery⁴ a form of flattery of medicine, the art of the slave-dealer a flattery of gymnastic, for they produce a false complexion by the use of paint and a false robustness by puffing them out with fat: sophistry he calls a dishonest counterfeit of legal science, and rhetoric of justice. All these statements occur in the Gorgias and 26 are uttered by Socrates who appears to be the mouth-

QUINTILIAN

significare quid sentiat; sed alii sunt eius sermones ad coarguendos, qui contra disputant, compositi, quos ἔλεγκτικοί vocant, alii ad praecipendum, qui δογμα-27 τικοί appellantur. Socrates autem seu Plato eam quidem, quae tum exercebatur, rhetoricen talem putat, nam et dicit his verbis τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον, ὃν ἡμεῖς πολιτεύεσθε, veram autem et honestam intelligit. Itaque disputatio illa contra Gorgian ita clauditur, οὔκουν ἀνάγκη τὸν ῥητορικὸν δίκαιον εἶναι, τὸν δὲ δίκαιον 28 βούλεσθαι δίκαια πράττειν; Ad quod ille quidem conticescit, sed sermonem suscipit Polus iuvenili calore inconsideratior, contra quem illa de simulaero et adulatione dicuntur. Tum Callicles adhuc concitatior, qui tamen ad hanc perducitur clausulam, τὸν μέλλοντα ὀρθῶς ῥητορικὸν ἔσσεσθαι, δίκαιον ἄνδρα δεῖ εἶναι καὶ ἐπιστήμονα τῶν δικαίων; ut appareat, Platoni non rhetoricen videri malum, sed eam veram nisi iusto ac 29 bono non contingere. Adhuc autem in Phaedro manifestius facit, hanc artem consummari citra iustitiae quoque scientiam non posse; cui opinioni nos quoque accedimus. An aliter defensionem Socratis et eorum, qui pro patria ceciderant, laudem 30 scripsisset? quae certe sunt oratoris opera. Sed in illud hominum genus, quod facilitate dicendi male utebatur, invectus est. Nam et Socrates inhonestam

¹ 500 c.

² 460 c.

³ 508 c.

⁴ 261 A-273 E.

⁵ Mencæxenus.

piece of the views held by Plato. But some of his dialogues were composed merely to refute his opponents and are styled refutative, while others are for the purpose of teaching and are called doctrinal. Now it is only rhetoric as practised in their own day 27 that is condemned by Plato or Socrates, for he speaks of it as "the manner in which you engage in public affairs"¹: rhetoric in itself he regards as a genuine and honourable thing, and consequently the controversy with Gorgias ends with the words, "The rhetorician therefore must be just and the just man desirous to do what is just."² To this Gorgias 28 makes no reply, but the argument is taken up by Polus, a hot-headed and headstrong young fellow, and it is to him that Socrates makes his remarks about "shadows" and "forms of flattery." Then Callicles,³ who is even more hot-headed, intervenes, but is reduced to the conclusion that "he who would truly be a rhetorician ought to be just and possess a knowledge of justice." It is clear therefore that Plato does not regard rhetoric as an evil, but holds that true rhetoric is impossible for any save a just and good man. In the *Phaedrus*⁴ he makes it even 29 clearer that the complete attainment of this art is impossible without the knowledge of justice, an opinion in which I heartily concur. Had this not been his view, would he have ever written the Apology of Socrates or the Funeral Oration⁵ in praise of those who had died in battle for their country, both of them works falling within the sphere of oratory. It was against the class of men 30 who employed their glibness of speech for evil purposes that he directed his denunciations. Similarly Socrates thought it incompatible with his honour to

QUINTILIAN

- sibi credidit orationem, quam ei Lysias reo composuerat; et tum maxime scribere litigatoribus, quae illi pro se ipsi dicerent, erat moris, atque ita iuri, quo non licebat pro altero agere, fraus adhibebatur.
- 31 Doctores quoque eius artis parum idonei Platoni videbantur, qui rhetoricen a iustitia separarent et veris credibilia praeferrent; nam id quoque dicit in
- 32 Phaedro. Consensusse autem illis superioribus videri potest etiam Cornelius Celsus, cuius haec verba sunt: Orator simile tantum veri petit. Deinde paulo post: Non enim bona conscientia sed victoria litigantis est praemium. Quae si vera essent, pessimorum hominum foret, haec tam perniciose nocentissimis moribus dare instrumenta et nequitiam praeceptis adiuvere. Sed illi rationem opinionis suae viderint.
- 33 Nos autem ingressi formare perfectum oratorem, quem in primis esse virum bonum volumus, ad eos qui de hoc opere melius sentiunt, revertamur. Rhetoricen autem quidam eandem civilitatem esse iudicaverunt; Cicero scientiae civilis partem vocat (civilis autem scientia idem quod sapientia est); quidam
- 34 eandem philosophiam, quorum est Isocrates. Huic eius substantiae maxime conveniet finitio, rhetoricen esse bene dicendi scientiam. Nam et orationis omnes virtutes semel complectitur et protinus etiam mores oratoris, cum bene dicere non possit nisi bonus.
- 35 Idem valet Chrysippi finis ille ductus a Cleanthe

¹ 267 A, with special reference to Tisias and Gorgias.

² de Inv. 1. v. 6.

make use of the speech which Lysias composed for his defence, although it was the usual practice in those days to write speeches for the parties concerned to speak in the courts on their own behalf, a device designed to circumvent the law which forbade the employment of advocates. Further the teachers of rhetoric were regarded by Plato as quite unsuited to their professed task. For they divorced rhetoric from justice and preferred plausibility to truth, as he states in the Phaedrus.¹ Cornelius Celsus seems to have agreed with these early rhetoricians, for he writes "The orator only aims at the semblance of truth," and again a little later "The reward of the party to a suit is not a good conscience, but victory." If this were true, only the worst of men would place such dangerous weapons at the disposal of criminals or employ the precepts of their art for the assistance of wickedness. However I will leave those who maintain these views to consider what ground they have for so doing.

For my part, I have undertaken the task of moulding the ideal orator, and as my first desire is that he should be a good man, I will return to those who have sounder opinions on the subject. Some however identify rhetoric with politics, Cicero² calls it a department of the science of politics (and science of politics and philosophy are identical terms), while others again call it a branch of philosophy, among them Isocrates. The definition which best suits its real character is that which makes rhetoric the science of speaking well. For this definition includes all the virtues of oratory and the character of the orator as well, since no man can speak well who is not good himself. The definition given by Chrysippus, who scientia recte dicendi. Sunt plures eiusdem, sed ad alias quaestiones magis pertinent. Idem sentit et finis hoc modo comprehensus, persuadere quod 36 oporteat, nisi quod artem ad exitum alligat. At bene Areus dicere secundum virtutem orationis. Excludunt a rhetorice malos et illi, qui scientiam civilium officiorum eam putaverunt, si scientiam virtutem iudicant; sed anguste intra civiles quaestiones coercent. Albutius, non obscurus professor atque auctor, scientiam bene dicendi esse consentit, sed exceptionibus peccat adiciendo circa civiles quaestiones et credibiliter; quarum utrique iam respon-37 sum est. Probabilis et illi voluntatis, qui recte sentire et dicere rhetorices putaverunt.

QUINTILIAN

Hi sunt fere fines maxime illustres et de quibus praecipue disputatur. Nam omnes quidem persequi neque attinet neque possum, cum pravum quoddam, ut arbitror, studium circa scriptores artium extiterit, nihil eisdem verbis, quae prior aliquis occupasset, 38 finiendi, quae ambitio procul aberit a me. Dicam enim non utique quae invenero sed quae placebunt, sicut hoc, rhetorice esse bene dicendi scientiam; derived it from Cleanthes, to the effect that it is the science of speaking rightly, amounts to the same thing. The same philosopher also gives other definitions, but they concern problems of a different character from that on which we are now engaged. Another definition defines oratory as the power of persuading men to do what ought to be done, and yields practically the same sense save that it limits the art to the result which it produces. Areus again defines it well as speaking according to the excellence of speech. Those who regard it as the science of political obligations, also exclude men of bad character from the title of orator, if by science they mean virtue, but restrict it over-much by confining it to political problems. Albutius, a distinguished author and professor of rhetoric, agrees that rhetoric is the science of speaking well, but makes a mistake in imposing restrictions by the addition of the words on political questions and with credibility; with both of these restrictions I have already dealt. Finally those critics who hold that the aim of rhetoric is to think and speak rightly, were on the correct track. 36 37

These are practically all the most celebrated and most discussed definitions of rhetoric. It would be both irrelevant and beyond my power to deal with all. For I strongly disapprove of the custom which has come to prevail among writers of text-books of refusing to define anything in the same terms as have been employed by some previous writer. I will have nothing to do with such ostentation. What I say will not necessarily be my own invention, but it will be what I believe to be the right view, as for instance that oratory is the science of speaking well. For when the most satisfactory definition has been 38 cum reperto quod est optimum, qui quaerit aliud, peius velit.

His approbatis, simul manifestum est illud quoque, quem finem vel quid summum et ultimum habeat rhetorice, quod τέλος dicitur, ad quod omnis ars tendit; nam si est ipsa bene dicendi scientia, finis eius et summum est bene dicere.

XVI. Sequitur quaestio, an utilis rhetorice. Nam quidam vehementer in eam inveli solent, et, quod sit indignissimum, in accusationem orationis utuntur
 2 orandi viribus: eloquentiam esse, quae poenis eripiat scelestos, cuius fraude damnentur interim boni, consilia ducantur in peius, nec seditioes modo turbacque populares sed bella etiam inexpiabilia excitentur; cuius denique tum maximus sit usus, eum pro falsis
 3 contra veritatem valet. Nam et Socrati obiiciunt eomici docere eum, quomodo peiorem causam meliorem faciat, et contra Tisian et Gorgian similia dicit
 4 polliceri Plato. Et his adiiciunt exempla Graecorum Romanorumque et enumerant, qui perniciosi non singulis tantum sed rebus etiam publicis usi eloquentia turbaverint civitatum status vel everterint, eoque et Lacedaemoniorum civitate expulsam et Athenis quoque, ubi actor movere adfectus vetabatur, 5 velut recisam orandi potestatem. Quo quidem modo nec duces erunt utiles nec magistratus nec medicina found, he who seeks another, is merely looking for a worse one.

Thus much being admitted we are now in a position to see clearly what is the end, the highest aim, the ultimate goal of rhetoric, that τέλος in fact which every art must possess. For if rhetoric is the science of speaking well, its end and highest aim is to speak well.

XVI. There follows the question as to whether rhetoric is useful. Some are in the habit of denouncing it most violently and of shamelessly employing the powers of oratory to accuse oratory itself. "It is eloquence" they say "that snatches 2 criminals from the penalties of the law, eloquence that from time to time secures the condemnation of the innocent and leads deliberation astray, eloquence that stirs up not merely sedition and popular tumult, but wars beyond all expiation, and that is most effective when it makes falsehood prevail over the truth." The comic poets even accuse 3 Socrates of teaching how to make the worse cause seem the better, while Plato says that Gorgias and Tisias made similar professions. And to these they 4 add further examples drawn from the history of Rome and Greece, enumerating all those who used their pernicious eloquence not merely against individuals but against whole states and threw an ordered commonwealth into a state of turmoil or even brought it to utter ruin; and they point out that for this very reason rhetoric was banished from Sparta, while its powers were cut down at Athens itself by the fact that an orator was forbidden to stir the passions of his audience. On the showing of these critics not only 5 orators but generals, magistrates, medicine and philo-

QUINTILIAN

- nec denique ipsa sapientia. Nam et dux Flaminius et Gracchi, Saturnini, Glaucia magistratus, et in medicis venena et in his, qui philosophorum nomine male utuntur, gravissima nonnunquam flagitia 6 deprehensa sunt. Cibos aspernemur; attulerunt saepe valetudinis causas. Nunquam tecta subeamus; super habitantes aliquando procumbunt. Non fabricetur militi gladius; potest uti eodem ferro latro. Quis nescit, ignes, aquas, sine quibus nulla sit vita, et (ne terrenis immorer) solem lunamque, praecipua siderum, aliquando et nocere?
- 7 Num igitur negabitur deformem Pyrrhi pacem caecus ille Appius dicendi viribus diremisse? aut non divina M. Tulli eloquentia et contra leges agrarias popularis fuit et Catilinae fregit audaciam et supplicationes, qui maximus honor victoribus bello 8 ducibus datur, in toga meruit? Nonne perterritos militum animos frequenter a metu revocat oratio et tot pugnandi pericula ineuntibus laudem vita potior-rem esse persuadet? Neque vero me Lacedaemonii atque Athenienses magis moverint quam populus Romanus, apud quem summa semper oratoribus 9 dignitas fuit. Equidem nec urbium conditores reor aliter effecturos fuisse ut vaga illa multitudo coiret in populos, nisi docta voce commota; nec legum reperto- res sine summa vi orandi consecutos, ut se sophy itself will all be useless. For Flaminius was a general, while men such as the Gracchi, Saturninus and Glaucia were magistrates. Doctors have been caught using poisons, and those who falsely assume the name of philosopher have occasionally been detected in the gravest crimes. Let us give up eating, it 6 often makes us ill; let us never go inside houses, for sometimes they collapse on their occupants; let never a sword be forged for a soldier, since it might be used by a robber. And who does not realise that fire and water, both necessities of life, and, to leave mere earthly things, even the sun and moon, the greatest of the heavenly bodies, are occasionally capable of doing harm.

¹ i.e. though denouncing laws which would naturally be popular.

On the other hand will it be denied that it was 7 by his gift of speech that Appius the Blind broke off the dishonourable peace which was on the point of being concluded with Pyrrhus? Did not the divine eloquence of Cicero win popular applause even when he denounced the Agrarian laws,¹ did it not crush the audacious plots of Catiline and win, while he still wore the garb of civil life, the highest honour that can be conferred on a victorious general, a public thanksgiving to heaven? Has not oratory 8 often revived the courage of a panic-stricken army and persuaded the soldier faced by all the perils of war that glory is a fairer thing than life itself? Nor shall the history of Sparta and Athens move me more than that of the Roman people, who have always held the orator in highest honour. Never in 9 my opinion would the founders of cities have induced their unsettled multitudes to form communities had they not moved them by the magic of their eloquence: never without the highest gifts of oratory

QUINTILIAN

- 10 ipsi homines ad servitatem iuris astringerent. Quin ipsa vitae praecepta, etiamsi natura sunt honesta, plus tamen ad formandas mentes valent, quotiens pulchritudinem rerum claritas orationis illuminat. Quare, etiamsi in utramque partem valent arma facundiae, non est tamen aequum id haberi malum, quo bene uti licet.
- 11 Verum haec apud eos forsitan quaerantur, qui summam rhetorices ad persuadendi vim rettulerunt. Si vero est bene dicendi scientia, quem nos finem sequimur, ut sit orator in primis vir bonus, utilem
- 12 certe esse eam confitendum est. Et hercule deus ille princeps, parens rerum fabricatorque mundi, nullo magis hominem separavit a ceteris, quae quidem mortalia essent, animalibus, quam dicendi
- 13 facultate. Nam corpora quidem magnitudine, viribus, firmitate, patientia, velocitate praestantiora in illis mutis videmus, eadem minus egere acquisitae extrinsecus opis. Nam et ingredi citius et pasci et tranare aquas citra docentem natura ipsa sciunt. Et
- 14 pleraque contra frigus ex suo corpore vestiuntur, et arma iis ingenita quaedam et ex obvio fere victus, circa quae omnia multus hominibus labor est. Rationem igitur nobis praecipuam dedit eiusque nos
- 15 socios esse cum dis immortalibus voluit. Sed ipsa ratio neque tam nos iuvaret neque tam esset in nobis manifesta, nisi, quae concepissemus mente, promere etiam loquendo possemus, quod magis deesse ceteris would the great legislators have constrained mankind to submit themselves to the yoke of law. Nay, even the principles which should guide our life, however fair they may be by nature, yet have greater power to mould the mind to virtue, when the beauty of things is illumined by the splendour of eloquence. Wherefore, although the weapons of oratory may be used either for good or ill, it is unfair to regard that as an evil which can be employed for good.

These problems, however, may be left to those who hold that rhetoric is the power to persuade. If our definition of rhetoric as the science of speaking well implies that an orator must be a good man, there can be no doubt about its usefulness. And in truth that god, who was in the beginning, the father of all things and the architect of the universe, distinguished man from all other living creatures that are subject to death, by nothing more than this, that he gave him the gift of speech. For as regards physical bulk, strength, robustness, endurance or speed, man is surpassed in certain cases by dumb beasts, who also are far more independent of external assistance. They know by instinct without need of any teacher how to move rapidly, to feed themselves and swim. Many too have their bodies clothed against cold, possess natural weapons and have not to search for their food, whereas in all these respects man's life is full of toil. Reason then was the greatest gift of the Almighty, who willed that we should share its possession with the immortal gods. But reason by itself would help us but little and would be far less evident in us, had we not the power to express our thoughts in speech; for it is the lack of this power rather than thought animalibus quam intellectum et cogitationem quan-16 dam videmus. Nam et mollire cubilia et nidos texere et educare fetus et excludere, quin etiam reponere in hiemem alimenta, opera quaedam nobis inimitabilia (qualia sunt cerarum ac mellis) efficere, nonnullius fortasse rationis est; sed quia carent sermone, quae id faciunt, muta atque irrationalia 17 vocantur. Denique homines, quibus negata vox est, quantulum adiuvat animus ille caelestis? Quare si nihil a dis oratione melius accepimus, quid tam dignum cultu ac labore ducamus, aut in quo malimus praestare hominibus, quam quo ipsi homines ceteris 18 animalibus praestant, eo quidem magis, quod nulla in arte plenius labor gratiam refert? Id adeo manifestum erit, si cogitaverimus, unde et quo usque iam profecta sit orandi facultas; et adhuc augeri potest.

QUINTILIAN

19 Nam ut omittam, defendere amicos, regere consiliis senatum, populum, exercitum in quae velit ducere, quam sit utile conveniatque bono viro, nonne pulchrum vel hoc ipsum est, ex communi intellectu verbisque, quibus utuntur omnes, tantum adsequi laudis et gloriae, ut non loqui et orare sed, quod Pericli contigit, fulgurare ac tonare videaris?

XVII. Finis non erit, si exspatiari in parte hac et

¹ cp. Aristoph. Ach. 530: "Then in his wrath Pericles the Olympian lightened and thundered and threw all Greece into confusion."

and understanding, which they do to a certain extent possess, that is the great defect in other living things. The construction of a soft lair, the weaving of nests, the hatching and rearing of their young, and even the storing up of food for the coming winter, together with certain other achievements which we cannot imitate, such as the making of honey and wax, all these perhaps indicate the possession of a certain degree of reason; but since the creatures that do these things lack the gift of speech they are called dumb and unreasoning beasts. Finally, how little the heavenly boon of reason avails those who are born dumb. If therefore we have received no fairer gift from heaven than speech, what shall we regard as so worthy of laborious cultivation, or in what should we sooner desire to excel our fellow-men, than that in which mankind excels all other living things? And we should be all the more eager to do so, since there is no art which yields a more grateful recompense for the labour bestowed upon it. This will be abundantly clear if we consider the origins of oratory and the progress it has made; and it is capable of advancing still further. I will not stop to point out how useful and how becoming a task it is for a good man to defend his friends, to guide the senate by his counsels, and to lead peoples or armies to follow his bidding; I merely ask, is it not a noble thing, by employing the understanding which is common to mankind and the words that are used by all, to win such honour and glory that you seem not to speak or plead, but rather, as was said of Pericles, to thunder and lighten? ¹

XVII. However, if I were to indulge my own inclinations in expatiating on this subject, I should go indulgere voluptati velim. Transeamus igitur ad eam quaestionem, quae sequitur, an rhetorice ars 2 sit. Quod quidem adeo ex iis, qui praecepta dicendi tradiderunt, nemo dubitavit, ut etiam ipsis librorum titulis testatum sit, scriptos eos de arte rhetorica; Cicero vero eam, quae rhetorice vocetur, esse artificiosam eloquentiam dicat. Quod non oratores tantum vindicarunt, ut studiis aliquid suis praesti-tisse videantur, sed cum iis philosophi et Stoici et 3 Peripatetici plerique consentiunt. Ac me dubitasse confiteor, an hanc partem quaestionis tractandam putarem; nam quis est adeo non ab eruditione modo sed a sensu remotus hominis, ut fabricandi quidem et texendi et e luto vasa duceendi artem putet, rhe-toricem autem, maximum ac pulcherrimum, ut supra diximus, opus, in tam sublime fastigium existimet 4 sine arte venisse? Equidem illos, qui contra disputaverunt, non tam id sensisse quod dicerent, quam exercere ingenia materiae difficultate credo voluisse, sicut Polyeraten, cum Busirim laudaret et Clytaem-nestram; quanquam is, quod his dissimile non est, composuisse orationem, quae est habita contra Socraten, dicitur.

5 Quidam naturalem esse rhetoricem volunt et tamen adiuvari exercitatione non diffitentur, ut in libris Ciceronis de Oratore dicit Antonius, observationem 6 quandam esse non artem. Quod non ideo, ut pro vero accipiamus, est positum, sed ut Antoni persona

¹ de Inv. l. v. 6. The titles in question are such as Ars rhetorica, Ars Hermagorae, etc.

on for ever. Let us therefore pass to the next question and consider whether rhetoric is an art. No one of those who have laid down rules for oratory has ever doubted that it is an art. It is clear even from the titles of their books that their theme is the art of rhetoric, while Cicero¹ defines rhetoric as artistic eloquence. And it is not merely the orators who have claimed this distinction for their studies with a view to giving them an additional title to respect, but the Stoic and Peripatetic philosophers for the most part agree with them. Indeed I will confess that I had doubts as to whether I should discuss this portion of my inquiry, for there is no one, I will not say so unlearned, but so devoid of ordinary sense, as to hold that building, weaving or moulding vessels from clay are arts, and at the same time to consider that rhetoric, which, as I have already said, is the noblest and most sublime of tasks, has reached such a lofty eminence without the assistance of art. For my own part I think that those who have argued against this view did not realise what they were saying, but merely desired to exercise their wits by the selection of a difficult theme, like Polycrates, when he praised Busiris and Clytemnestra; I may add that he is credited with a not dissimilar performance, namely the composition of a speech which was delivered against Socrates.

Some would have it that rhetoric is a natural gift though they admit that it can be developed by practice. So Antonius in the *de Oratore*² of Cicero styles it a knack derived from experience, but denies that it is an art: this statement is however not intended to be accepted by us as the actual truth, but is inserted to make ² ii. lvii. 232.

QUINTILIAN

servetur, qui dissimulator artis fuit. Hanc autem opinionem habuisse Lysias videtur. Cuius sententiae talis defensio est, quod indocti et barbari et servi, pro se eum loquuntur, aliquid dicant simile principio, narrent, probent, refutent, et (quod vim habeat 7 epilogi) deprecentur. Deinde adiiciunt illas verborum cavillationes, nihil, quod ex arte fiat, ante artem fuisse; atqui dixisse homines pro se et in alios semper, doctores artis sero et circa Tisian et Coraca primum repertos, orationem igitur ante artem fuisse
8 eoque artem non esse. Nos porro, quando coeperit huius rei doctrina, non laboramus exquirere, quamquam apud Homerum et praeceptorem Phoenicem cum agendi tum etiam loquendi et oratores plures et omne in tribus ducibus orationis genus et certamina quoque proposita eloquentiae inter iuvenes invenimus, quin in caelatura clipei Achillis et lites sunt et 9 actores. Illud enim admonere satis est, omnia, quae ars consummaverit, a natura initia duxisse. Aut tollatur medicina, quae ex observatione salubrium atque iis contrariorum reperta est, et, ut quibusdam placet, tota constat experimentis; nam et vulnus deligavit aliquis, antequam haec ars esset, et febrem quiete et abstinentia, non quia rationem videbat, sed

¹ Il. ix. 432.

² i.e. the copious style by Nestor, the plain by Menelaus, the intermediate by Ulysses.

³ Il. xv. 284.

⁴ Il. xviii. 497 sqq.

Antonius speak in character, since he was in the habit of concealing his art. Still Lysias is said to have maintained this same view, which is defended on the ground that uneducated persons, barbarians and slaves, when speaking on their own behalf, say something that resembles an exordium, state the facts of the case, prove, refute and plead for mercy just as an orator does in his peroration. To this is added 7 the quibble that nothing that is based on art can have existed before the art in question, whereas men have always from time immemorial spoken in their own defence or in denunciation of others: the teaching of rhetoric as an art was, they say, a later invention dating from about the time of Tisias and Corax: oratory therefore existed before art and consequently cannot be an art. For my part I am not 8 concerned with the date when oratory began to be taught. Even in Homer we find Phoenix¹ as an instructor not only of conduct but of speaking, while a number of orators are mentioned, the various styles are represented by the speeches of three of the chiefs² and the young men are set to contend among themselves in contests of eloquence:³ moreover law-suits and pleaders are represented in the engravings on the shield of Achilles.⁴ It is sufficient to call 9 attention to the fact that everything which art has brought to perfection originated in nature. Otherwise we might deny the title of art to medicine, which was discovered from the observation of sickness and health, and according to some is entirely based upon experiment: wounds were bound up long before medicine developed into an art, and fevers were reduced by rest and abstention from food, long before the reason for such treatment was 10 quia id valetudo ipsa cogebat, mitigavit. Nec fabrica sit ars; casas enim primi illi sine arte fecerunt; nec musica; cantatur ac saltatur per omnes gentes aliquo modo. Ita si rhetorice vocari debet sermo quicun-11 que, fuisse eam, antequam esset ars, confitebor; si vero non quisquis loquitur, orator est, et tunc non tanquam oratores loquebantur, necesse est, oratorem factum arte nec ante artem fuisse fateantur. Quo illud quoque excluditur, quod dicunt, non esse artis id, quod faciat qui non didicerit, dicere autem 12 homines et qui non didicerint. Ad cuius rei confirmationem adferunt, Demaden remigem, et Aeschinen hypocriten oratores fuisse. Falso; nam neque orator esse, qui non didicit, potest, et hos sero potius quam nunquam didicisse quis dixerit, quanquam Aeschines ab initio sit versatus in litteris, quas pater eius etiam docebat, Demaden neque non didicisse certum sit, et continua dicendi exercitatio potuerit tantum, quantuscumque postea fuit, fecisse; nam id 13 potentissimum discendi genus est. Sed et praestantiorem, si didicisset, futurum fuisse dicere licet; neque enim orationes scribere est ausus, ut eum 14 multum valuisse in dicendo sciamus. Aristoteles, ut solet, quaerendi gratia quaedam subtilitatis suae

¹ A lost treatise, named after Gryllus, the son of Xenophon.

known, simply because the state of the patient's health left no choice. So too building should not be styled an art; for primitive man built himself a hut without the assistance of art. Music by the same reasoning is not an art; for every race indulges in some kind of singing and dancing. If therefore any kind of speech is to be called eloquence, I will admit that it existed before it was an art. If on the other hand not every man that speaks is an orator and primitive man did not speak like an orator, my opponents must needs acknowledge that oratory is the product of art and did not exist before it. This conclusion also rules out their argument that men speak who have never learnt how to speak, and that which a man does untaught can have no connexion with art. In support of this contention they adduce the fact that Demades was a waterman and Aeschines an actor, but both were orators. Their reasoning is false. For no man can be an orator untaught and it would be truer to say that these orators learned oratory late in life than that they never learned at all; although as a matter of fact Aeschines had an acquaintance with literature from childhood since his father was a teacher of literature, while as regards Demades, it is quite uncertain that he never studied rhetoric and in any case continuous practice in speaking was sufficient to bring him to such proficiency as he attained: for experience is the best of all schools. On the other hand it may fairly be asserted that he would have achieved greater distinction, if he had received instruction: for although he delivered his speeches with great effect, he never ventured to write them for others. Aristotle, it is true, in his *Gryllus*¹ produces some tentative arguments to argumenta excogitavit in Gryllo; sed idem et de arte rhetorica tris libros scripsit, et in eorum primo non artem solum eam fatetur, sed ei particulam 15 civilitatis sicut dialectices adsignat. Multa Critolaus contra, multa Rhodius Athenodorus. Agnon quidem detraxit sibi inscriptione ipsa fidem, qua rhetorices accusationem professus est. Nam de Epicuro, qui disciplinas omnes fugit, nihil miror.

QUINTILIAN

16 Hi complura dicunt sed ex paucis locis ducta; itaque potentissimis eorum breviter occurram, ne in 17 infinitum quaestio evadat. Prima iis argumentatio ex materia est. Omnes enim artes aiunt habere materiam, quod est verum; rhetorices nullam esse propriam, quod esse falsum in sequentibus probabo.

18 Altera est calumnia nullam artem falsis assentiri opinionibus, quia constitui sine perceptione non possit, quae semper vera sit; rhetorice assentiri falsis, 19 non esse igitur artem. Ego rhetorice nonnunquam dicere falsa pro veris confitebor, sed non ideo in falsa quoque esse opinione concedam, quia longe diversum est, ipsi quid videri et, ut alii videatur, efficere. Nam et imperator falsis utitur saepe, ut Hannibal, cum inclusus a Fabio, sarmentis circum cornua boum the contrary, which are marked by characteristic ingenuity. On the other hand he also wrote three books on the art of rhetoric, in the first of which he not merely admits that rhetoric is an art, but treats it as a department of politics and also of logic. Critolaus and Athenodorus of Rhodes have 15 produced many arguments against this view, while Agnon renders himself suspect by the very title of his book in which he proclaims that he is going to indict rhetoric. As to the statements of Epicurus on this subject, they cause me no surprise, for he is the foe of all systematic training.

33²

These gentlemen talk a great deal, but the 16 arguments on which they base their statements are few. I will therefore select the most important of them and will deal with them briefly, to prevent the discussion lasting to all eternity. Their first con- 17 tention is based on the subject-matter; for they assert that all arts have their own subject-matter (which is true) and go on to say that rhetoric has none, which I shall show in what follows to be false. Another slander is to the effect that no art will 18 acquiesce in false opinions: since an art must be based on direct perception, which is always true: now, say they, rhetoric does give its assent to false conclusions and is therefore not an art. I will admit 19 that rhetoric sometimes substitutes falsehood for truth, but I will not allow that it does so because its opinions are false, since there is all the difference between holding a certain opinion oneself and persuading someone else to adopt an opinion. For instance a general frequently makes use of falsehood: Hannibal when hemmed in by Fabius persuaded his enemy that he was in retreat by deligatis incensisque, per noctem in adversos montes agens armenta speciem hosti abeuntis exercitus dedit, sed illum fefellit, ipse, quid verum esset, non igno-20 ravit. Nec vero Theopompus Laedaemonius, cum permutato cum uxore habitu e custodia ut mulier evasit, falsam de se opinionem habuit, sed custodibus praebuit. Item orator, cum falso utitur pro vero, scit esse falsum coque se pro vero uti; non ergo 21 falsam habet ipse opinionem, sed fallit alium. Nec Cicero, cum se tenebras offudisse iudicibus in causa Cluenti gloriatus est, nihil ipse vidit. Et pictor, cum vi artis suae efficit, ut quaedam eminere in opere, quaedam recessisse credamus, ipse ea plana 22 esse non nescit. Aiunt etiam omnes artes habere finem aliquem propositum, ad quem tendant; hunc modo nullum esse in rhetorice, modo non praestari eum, qui promittatur. Mentiuntur: nos enim esse 23 finem iam ostendimus, et quis esset diximus. Et praestabit hunc semper orator, semper enim bene dicet. Firmum autem hoc, quod opponitur, adversus eos fortasse sit, qui persuadere finem putaverunt.

QUINTILIAN

Noster orator arsque a nobis finita non sunt posita in eventu. Tendit quidem ad victoriam qui dicit; sed cum bene dixit, etiamsi non vineat, id quod arte con-24 tinetur effecit. Nam et gubernator vult salva nave

¹ See Livy, XXII. xvi.

² Probably a king of Sparta, 770-720 B.C.

tying brushwood to the horns of oxen, setting fire to them by night and driving the herds across the mountains opposite.¹ But though he deceived Fabius, he himself was fully aware of the truth. Again when the Spartan Theopompus changed 20 clothes with his wife and escaped from custody disguised as a woman, he deceived his guards, but was not for a moment deceived as to his own identity.² Similarly an orator, when he substitutes falsehood for the truth, is aware of the falsehood and of the fact that he is substituting it for the truth. He therefore deceives others, but not himself. When Cicero boasted that he had thrown 21 dust in the eyes of the jury in the case of Cluentius, he was far from being blinded himself. And when a painter by his artistic skill makes us believe that certain objects project from the picture, while others are withdrawn into the background, he knows perfectly well that they are really all in the same plane. My opponents further assert that every 22 art has some definite goal towards which it directs its efforts, but that rhetoric as a rule has no such goal, while at other times it professes to have an aim, but fails to perform its promise. They lie: I have already shown that rhetoric has a definite purpose and have explained what it is. And, what is more, the orator 23 will always make good his professions in this respect, for he will always speak well. On the other hand this criticism may perhaps hold good as against those who think persuasion the end of oratory. But our orator and his art, as we define it, are independent of results. The speaker aims at victory, it is true, but if he speaks well, he has lived up to the ideals of his art, even if he is defeated. Similarly a pilot will desire 24

QUINTILIAN

in portum pervenire; si tamen tempestate fuerit abreptus, non ideo minus erit gubernator dieetque 25 notum illud, Dum clarum rectum tenuam. Et medicus sanitatem aegri petit; si tamen aut valetudinis vi aut intemperantia aegri aliove quo casu summa non contingit, dum ipse omnia secundum rationem fecerit, medicinae fine non exidet. Ita oratori bene dixisse finis est. Nam est ars ea, ut post paulum clarius 26 ostendemus, in actu posita non in effectu. Ita falsum erit illud quoque, quod dicitur, artes scire quando sint finem consecutae, rhetorieen nescire. Nam se quisque bene dicere intelligit. Uti etiam vitiis rhetorieen, quod ars nulla faciat, eriminantur, quia et 27 falsum dicat et adfectus moveat. Quorum neutrum est turpe, cum ex bona ratione proficiscitur, ideoque nec vitium. Nam et mendacium dicere etiam sapienti aliquando concessum est, et adfectus, si aliter ad aequitatem perducere index non poterit, necessario 28 movebit orator. Imperiti enim indicant et qui frequenter in hoc ipsum fallendi sint, ne errent. Nam, si mihi sapientes iudices dentur, sapientium contiones atque omne consilium, nihil invidia valeat, nihil gratia, nihil opinio praesumpta falsique testes: perquam sit exiguus eloquentiae locus et prope in sola 29 delectatione ponatur. Sin et audientium mobiles

¹ Ennius, Ann. 483 (Vahlen).

to bring his ship safe to harbour; but if he is swept out of his course by a storm, he will not for that reason cease to be a pilot, but will say in the well-known words of the old poet¹ "Still let me steer straight on!" So too the doctor seeks to heal the sick; but if the violence of the disease or the refusal of the patient to obey his regimen or any other circumstance prevent his achieving his purpose, he will not have fallen short of the ideals of his art, provided he has done everything according to reason. So too the orator's purpose is fulfilled if he has spoken well. For the art of rhetoric, as I shall show later, is realised in action, not in the result obtained. From this it follows that there is no truth in yet another argument which contends that arts know when they have attained their end, whereas rhetoric does not. For every speaker is aware when he is speaking well. These critics also charge rhetoric with doing what no art does, namely making use of vices to serve its ends, since it speaks the thing that is not and excites the passions. But there is no disgrace in doing either of these things, as long as the motive be good: consequently there is nothing vicious in such action. Even a philosopher is at times permitted to tell a lie, while the orator must needs excite the passions, if that be the only way by which he can lead the judge to do justice. For judges are not always enlightened and often have to be tricked to prevent them falling into error. Give me philosophers as judges, pack senates and assemblies with philosophers, and you will destroy the power of hatred, influence, prejudice and false witness; consequently there will be very little scope for eloquence whose value will lie almost entirely in its power to charm. But if, as is animi et tot malis obnoxia veritas, arte pugnandum est et adhibenda quae prosunt. Neque enim, qui recta via depulsus est, reduci ad eam nisi alio flexu potest.

- 30 Plurima vero ex eo contra rhetoricen cavillatio est, quod ex utraque causae parte dicatur. Inde haec: nullam esse artem contrariam sibi, rhetoricen esse contrariam sibi; nullam artem destruere quod effecerit, accidere hoc rhetorices operi; item aut dicenda eam docere aut non dicenda; ita vel per hoc non esse artem, quod non dicenda praecipiat, vel per hoc, quod, cum dicenda praeceperit, etiam contraria his
- 31 doceat. Quae omnia apparet de ea rhetorice dici, quae sit a bono viro atque ab ipsa virtute seiuncta; alioqui ubi iniusta causa est, ibi rhetorice non est, adeo ut vix admirabili quodam casu possit accidere, ut ex utraque parte orator, id est vir bonus, dicat.
- 32 Tamen quoniam hoc quoque in rerum naturam cadit, ut duos sapientes aliquando iustae causae in diversum trahant, (quando etiam pugnatueros eos inter se, si ratio ita duxerit, credunt) respondebo propositis, atque ita quidem, ut appareat, haec adversus eos quoque frustra excogitata, qui malis moribus nomen
- 33 oratoris indulgent. Nam rhetorice non est contraria the case, our hearers are fickle of mind, and truth is exposed to a host of perils, we must call in art to aid us in the fight and employ such means as will help our case. He who has been driven from the right road cannot be brought back to it save by a fresh détour.

The point, however, that gives rise to the greatest 30 number of these captious accusations against rhetoric, is found in the allegation that orators speak indifferently on either side of a case. From which they draw the following arguments: no art is self-contradictory, but rhetoric does contradict itself; no art tries to demolish what itself has built, but this does happen in the operations of rhetoric; or again:—rhetoric teaches either what ought to be said or what ought not to be said; consequently it is not an art because it teaches what ought not to be said, or because, while it teaches what ought to be said, it also teaches precisely the opposite. Now it is obvious 31 that all such charges are brought against that type of rhetoric with which neither good men nor virtue herself will have anything to do; since if a case be based on injustice, rhetoric has no place therein and consequently it can scarcely happen even under the most exceptional circumstances that an orator, that is to say, a good man, will speak indifferently on either side. Still it is in the nature of things conceivable 32 that just causes may lead two wise men to take different sides, since it is held that wise men may fight among themselves, provided that they do so at the bidding of reason. I will therefore reply to their criticisms in such a way that it will be clear that these arguments have no force even against those who concede the name of orator to persons of bad character. For rhetoric is not self-contradictory. The conflict is 33

QUINTILIAN

sibi. Causa enim cum causa, non illa secum ipsa componitur. Nec, si pugnent inter se, qui idem didicerunt, ideo ars, quae utrique tradita est, non erit; alioqui nec armorum, quia saepe gladiatores sub 34 eodem magistro eruditi inter se componuntur; nec gubernandi, quia navalibus proeliis gubernator est gubernatori adversus; nec imperatoria, quia imperator cum imperatore contendit. Item non evertit opus rhetorice, quod efficit. Neque enim positum a se argumentum solvit orator sed ne rhetorice quidem, quia apud eos, qui in persuadendo finem putant, aut si quis (ut dixi) casus duos inter se bonos viros composuerit, verisimilia quaerentur; non autem, si quid est altero credibilius, id ei contrarium est, 35 quod fuit credibile. Nam ut candido candidius et dulci dulcius non est adversum, ita nec probabili probabilius. Neque praecipit unquam non dicenda nec dicendis contraria, sed quae in quaque causa 36 dicenda sunt. Non semper autem ei, etiamsi frequentissime, tuenda veritas erit; sed aliquando exigit communis utilitas, ut etiam falsa defendat.

Ponuntur haec quoque in secundo Ciceronis de Oratore libro contradictiones: artem earum rerum esse, quae sciantur; oratoris omnem actionem opinione, non scientia contineri, quia et apud eos dicat, qui between case and case, not between rhetoric and itself. And even if persons who have learned the same thing fight one another, that does not prove that what they have learned is not an art. Were that so, there could be no art of arms, since gladiators trained under the same master are often matched against each other; nor would the pilot's art exist, 34 because in sea-fights pilots may be found on different sides; nor yet could there be an art of generalship, since general is pitted against general. In the same way rhetoric does not undo its own work. For the orator does not refute his own arguments, nor does rhetoric even do so, because those who regard persuasion as its end, or the two good men whom chance has matched against one another seek merely for probabilities: and the fact that one thing is more credible than another, does not involve contradiction between the two. There is no absolute antagonism between 35 the probable and the more probable, just as there is none between that which is white and that which is whiter, or between that which is sweet and that which is sweeter. Nor does rhetoric ever teach that which ought not to be said, or that which is contrary to what ought to be said, but solely what ought to be said in each individual case. But though the orator 36 will as a rule maintain what is true, this will not always be the case: there are occasions when the public interest demands that he should defend what is untrue.

¹ II. vii. 30.

The following objections are also put forward in the second book of Cicero's *de Oratore*¹:—"Art deals with things that are known. But the pleading of an orator is based entirely on opinion, not on knowledge, because he speaks to an audience who do not know,

QUINTILIAN

37 nesciant, et ipse dicat aliquando, quod nesciat. Ex his alterum, id est, an sciat iudex, de quo dicatur, nihil ad oratoris artem; alteri respondendum, Ars earum verum est, quae sciuntur. Rhetorice ars est bene 38 dicendi, bene autem dicere scit orator. Sed nescit, an verum sit quod dicit. Ne hi quidem, qui ignem aut aquam aut quattuor elementa aut corpora inseea-bilia esse, ex quibus res omnes initium duxerint, tradunt, nec qui intervalla siderum et mensuras solis ac terrae colligunt; disciplinam tamen suam artem vocant. Quodsi ratio efficit, ut haec non opinari sed propter vim probationum scire videantur, eadem 39 ratio idem praestare oratori potest. Sed an causa vera sit, nescit. Ne medicus quidem, an dolorem capitis habeat, qui hoc se pati dicet; curabit tamen, tanquam id verum sit, et erit ars medicina. Quid quod rhetorice non utique propositum habet semper vera dicendi, sed semper verisimilia? scit autem esse 40 verisimilia quae dicit. Adiciunt his, qui contra sen-tiunt, quod saepe, quae in aliis litibus impugnarunt actores causarum, eadem in aliis defendant. Quod non artis sed hominis est vitium. Haec sunt praeci-pua, quae contra rhetoricen dicantur; alia et minora et tamen ex his fontibus derivata.

and sometimes himself states things of which he has no actual knowledge." Now one of these points, 37 namely whether the judges have knowledge of what is being said to them, has nothing to do with the art of oratory. The other statement, that art is concerned with things that are known, does however require an answer. Rhetoric is the art of speaking well and the orator knows how to speak well. "But," it is urged, 38 "he does not know whether what he says is true." Neither do they, who assert that all things derive their origin from fire or water or the four elements or indivisible atoms; nor they who calculate the distances of the stars or the size of the earth and sun. And yet all these call the subject which they teach an art. But if reason makes them seem not merely to hold opinions but, thanks to the cogency of the proofs adduced, to have actual knowledge, reason will do the same service to the orator. "But," they say, 39 "he does not know whether the cause which he has undertaken is true." But not even a doctor can tell whether a patient who claims to be suffering from a headache, really is so suffering: but he will treat him on the assumption that his statement is true, and medicine will still be an art. Again what of the fact that rhetoric does not always aim at telling the truth, but always at stating what is probable? The answer is that the orator knows that what he states is no more than probable. My opponents further object 40 that advocates often defend in one case what they have attacked in another. This is not the fault of the art, but of the man. Such are the main points that are urged against rhetoric; there are others as well, but they are of minor importance and drawn from the same sources.

QUINTILIAN

41 Confirmatur autem esse artem eam breviter. Nam sive, ut Cleanthes voluit, ars est potestas via, id est ordine, efficiens, esse certe viam atque ordinem in bene dicendo nemo dubitaverit; sive ille ab omnibus fere probatus finis observatur, artem constare ex perceptionibus consentientibus et coexercitatis ad finem utilem vitae, iam ostendemus nihil non horum in 42 rhetorice inesse. Quid quod et inspectione et exercitatione ut artes ceterae constat? Nec potest ars non esse, si est ars dialectice, quod fere constat, cum ab ea specie magis quam genere differat. Sed nec illa omittenda sunt, qua in re alius se inartificialiter alius artificialiter gerat, in ea esse artem, et in eo quod, qui didicerit, melius faciat quam qui non didi-43 cerit, esse artem. Atqui non solum doctus indoctum, sed etiam doctior doctum in rhetorices opere superabit, neque essent aliter eius tam multa praecepta tamque magni, qui docerent; idque cum omnibus confitendum est, tum nobis praecipue, qui rationem dicendi a bono viro non separamus.

XVIII. Cum sint autem artium aliae positae in inspectione, id est cognitione et aestimatione rerum,

¹ Fr. 790.

² i.e. since our ideals are so high.

That rhetoric is an art may, however, be proved in 41 a very few words. For if Cleanthes'¹ definition be accepted that "Art is a power reaching its ends by a definite path, that is, by ordered methods," no one can doubt that there is such method and order in good speaking: while if, on the other hand, we accept the definition which meets with almost universal approval that art consists in perceptions agreeing and cooperating to the achievement of some useful end, we shall be able to show that rhetoric lacks none of these characteristics. Again it is scarcely necessary 42 for me to point out that like other arts it is based on examination and practice. And if logic is an art, as is generally agreed, rhetoric must also be an art, since it differs from logic in species rather than in genus.
 Nor must I omit to point out that where it is possible in any given subject for one man to act without art and another with art, there must necessarily be an art in connexion with that subject, as there must also be in any subject in which the man who has received instruction is the superior of him who has not. But 43 as regards the practice of rhetoric, it is not merely the case that the trained speaker will get the better of the untrained. For even the trained man will prove inferior to one who has received a better training. If this were not so, there would not be so many rhetorical rules, nor would so many great men have come forward to teach them. The truth of this must be acknowledged by everyone, but more especially by us, since we concede the possession of oratory to none save the good man.²

XVIII. Some arts, however, are based on examination, that is to say on the knowledge and proper appreciation of things, as for instance astronomy,

QUINTILIAN

qualis est astrologia, nullum exigens actum sed ipso rei, cuius studium habet, intellectu contenta, quae θεωρητικὴ vocatur; aliae in agendo, quarum in hoc finis est et ipso actu perficitur nihilque post actum operis relinquit, quae πρακτικὴ dicitur, qualis saltatio 2 est; aliae in effectu, quae operis, quod oculis subiicitur, consummatione finem accipiunt, quam ποιητικὴν appellamus, qualis est pictura: fere iudicandum est, rhetorice in actu consistere; hoc enim, quod est officii sui,
3 perficit. Atque ita ab omnibus dictum est. Mihi autem videtur etiam ex illis ceteris artibus multum assumere. Nam et potest aliquando ipsa res per se inspectione esse contenta. Erit enim rhetorice in oratore etiam tacente, et si desierit agere vel proposito vel aliquo casu impeditus, non magis desinet esse orator quam medicus, qui curandi fecerit finem.
4 Nam est aliquis, ac nescio an maximus, etiam ex secretis studiis fructus ac tum pura voluptas litterarum, cum ab actu, id est opera, recesserunt et contemplatione sui fruuntur. Sed effectivae quoque aliquid
5 simile scriptis orationibus vel historiis, quod ipsum opus in parte oratoria merito ponimus, consequetur. Si tamen una ex tribus artibus habenda sit, quia maxime eius usus actu continetur atque est in eo which demands no action, but is content to understand the subject of its study : such arts are called theoretical. Others again are concerned with action : this is their end, which is realised in action, so that, the action once performed, nothing more remains to do : these arts we style practical, and dancing will provide us with an example. Thirdly there are others which 2 consist in producing a certain result and achieve their purpose in the completion of a visible task : such we style productive, and painting may be quoted as an illustration. In view of these facts we must come to the conclusion that, in the main, rhetoric is concerned with action ; for in action it accomplishes that which it is its duty to do. This view is universally accepted, 3 although in my opinion rhetoric draws largely on the two other kinds of art. For it may on occasion be content with the mere examination of a thing. Rhetoric is still in the orator's possession even though he be silent, while if he gives up pleading either designedly or owing to circumstances over which he has no control, he does not therefore cease to be an orator, any more than a doctor ceases to be a doctor when he withdraws from practice. Perhaps the 4 highest of all pleasures is that which we derive from private study, and the only circumstances under which the delights of literature are unalloyed are when it withdraws from action, that is to say from toil, and can enjoy the pleasure of self-contemplation. But in the results that the orator obtains by writing 5 speeches or historical narratives, which we may reasonably count as part of the task of oratory, we shall recognise features resembling those of a productive art. Still, if rhetoric is to be regarded as one of these three classes of art, since it is with action that its frequentissima, dicatur activa vel administrativa, nam et hoc eiusdem rei nomen est.

QUINTILIAN

XIX. Scio, quaeri etiam, naturane plus ad eloquentiam conferat an doctrina. Quod ad propositum quidem operis nostri nihil pertinet (neque enim consummatus orator nisi ex utroque fieri potest), plurimum tamen referre arbitror, quam esse in hoc loco 2 quaestionem velimus. Nam si parti utrilibet omnino alteram detrahas, natura etiam sine doctrina multum valebit, doctrina nulla esse sine natura poterit. Sin ex pari coeant, in mediocribus quidem utrisque maius adhuc credam naturae esse momentum, consummatos autem plus doctrinae debere quam naturae putabo; sicut terrae nullam fertilitatem habenti nihil optimus agricola profuerit, e terra uberi utile aliquid etiam nullo colente nascetur, at in solo fecundo plus cultor quam ipsa per se bonitas soli practice is chiefly and most frequently concerned, let us call it an active or administrative art, the two terms being identical.
3 efficiet. Et, si Praxiteles signum aliquod ex molari lapide conatus esset exsculpere, Parium marmor malleum rude; at si illud idem artifex expolisset, plus in manibus fuisset quam in marmore. Denique natura materia doctrinae est; haec fingit, illa fingitur. Nihil ars sine materia, materiae etiam sine arte pretium est, ars summa materia optima melior.

XIX. I quite realise that there is a further question as to whether eloquence derives most from nature or from education. This question really lies outside the scope of our inquiry, since the ideal orator must necessarily be the result of a blend of both. But I do regard it as of great importance that we should decide how far there is any real question on this point. For if we make an absolute divorce between the two, nature will still be able to accomplish much without the aid of education, while the latter is valueless without the aid of nature. If, on the other hand, they are blended in equal proportions, I think we shall find that the average orator owes most to nature, while the perfect orator owes more to education. We may take a parallel from agriculture. A thoroughly barren soil will not be improved even by the best cultivation, while good land will yield some useful produce without any cultivation; but in the case of really rich land cultivation will do more for it than its own natural fertility. Had Praxiteles attempted to carve a statue out of a millstone, I should have preferred a rough block of Parian marble to any such statue. On the other hand, if the same artist had produced a finished statue from such a block of Parian marble, its artistic value would owe more to his skill than to the material. To conclude, nature is the raw material for education: the one forms, the other is formed. Without material art can do nothing, material without art does possess a certain value, while the perfection of art is better than the best material.

QUINTILIAN

XX. Illa quaestio est maior, ex mediis artibus, quae neque laudari per se nec vituperari possunt, sed utiles aut secus secundum mores utentium fiunt, habenda sit rhetorice, an sit, ut compluribus etiam 2 philosophorum placet, virtus. Equidem illud, quod in studiis dicendi plerique exercuerunt et exercent, aut nullam artem, quae ἀτεχνία nominatur, puto, (multos enim video sine ratione, sine litteris, qua vel impudentia vel fames duxit, ruentes) aut malam quasi artem, quam κακοτεχνίαν dicimus. Nam et fuisse multos et esse nonnullos existimo, qui facultatem dicendi ad hominum perniciem converterint.
3 Ματαιοτεχνία quoque est quaedam, id est supervacua artis imitatio, quae nihil sane neque boni neque mali habeat, sed vanum laborem, qualis illius fuit, qui grana ciceris ex spatio distante missa in acum continuo et sine frustratione inserebat, quem cum spectasset Alexander, donasse dicitur eiusdem leguminis modio, quod quidem praemium fuit illo opere dig-4 nissimum. His ego comparandos existimo, qui in declamationibus, quas esse veritati dissimillimas volunt, aetatem multo studio ac labore consumunt. Verum haec, quam instituere conamur et cuius imaginem animo concepinus, quae bono viro con-
5 venit quaeque est vere rhetorice, virtus erit. Quod

XX. More important is the question whether rhetoric is to be regarded as one of the indifferent arts, which in themselves deserve neither praise nor blame, but are useful or the reverse according to the character of the artist; or whether it should, as not a few even among philosophers hold, be considered as a virtue. For my own part I regard the practice of rhetoric which so many have adopted in the past and still follow to-day, as either no art at all, or, as the Greeks call it, ἀτεχνία (for I see numbers of speakers without the least pretension to method or literary training rushing headlong in the direction in which hunger or their natural shamelessness calls them); or else it is a bad art such as is styled κακοτεχνία. For there have, I think, been many persons and there are still some who have devoted their powers of speaking to the destruction of their fellow-men. There is also an unprofitable imitation of art, a kind of ματαιοτεχνία, which is neither good nor bad, but merely involves a useless expenditure of labour, reminding one of the man who shot a continuous stream of vetch-seeds from a distance through the eye of a needle, without ever missing his aim, and was rewarded by Alexander, who was a witness of the display, with the present of a bushel of vetch-seeds, a most appropriate reward. It is to such men that I would compare those who spend their whole time at the expense of much study and energy in composing declamations, which they aim at making as unreal as possible. The rhetoric on the other hand, which I am endeavouring to establish and the ideal of which I have in my mind's eye, that rhetoric which befits a good man and is in a word the only true rhetoric, will be a virtue. Philosophers arrive philosophi quidem multis et acutis conclusionibus colligunt, mihi vero etiam planiore hae proprieque nostra probatione videtur esse perspicuum.

Ab illis haec dicuntur. Si consonare sibi in faciendis ac non faciendis virtus est, quae pars eius prudentia vocatur, eadem in dicendis ac non dicendis 6 erit. Et si virtutes sunt, ad quas nobis etiam ante quam doceremur initia quaedam ac semina sunt concessa natura, ut ad iustitiam, cuius rusticis quoque ac barbaris apparet aliqua imago, nos certe sic esse ab initio formatos, ut possemus orare pro nobis, etiamsi non perfecte, tamen ut inessent quaedam (ut 7 dixi) semina eius facultatis, manifestum est. Non eadem autem natura est iis artibus, quae a virtute sunt remotae. Itaque cum duo sint genera orationis, altera perpetua, quae rhetorice dicitur, altera concisa, quae dialectice (quas quidem Zeno adeo coniunxit, ut hanc compressae in pugnum manus, illam explicatae diceret similem), etiam disputatrix virtus erit. Adeo de hac, quae speciosior atque apertior tanto est, nihil dubitabitur.

8 Sed plenius hoc idem atque apertius intueri ex ipsis operibus volo. Nam quid orator in laudando faciet nisi honestorum et turpium peritus? aut in at this conclusion by a long chain of ingenious arguments; but it appears to me to be perfectly clear from the simpler proof of my own invention which I will now proceed to set forth.

The philosophers state the case as follows. If self-consistency as to what should and should not be done is an element of virtue (and it is to this quality that we give the name of prudence), the same quality will be revealed as regards what should be said and what should not be said, and if there are 6 virtues, of which nature has given us some rudimentary sparks, even before we were taught anything about them, as for instance justice, of which there are some traces even among peasants and barbarians, it is clear that man has been so formed from the beginning as to be able to plead on his own behalf, not, it is true, with perfection, but yet sufficiently to show that there are certain sparks of eloquence implanted in us by nature. The same nature, how- 7 ever, is not to be found in those arts which have no connexion with virtue. Consequently, since there are two kinds of speech, the continuous which is called rhetoric, and the concise which is called dialectic (the relation between which was regarded by Zeno as being so intimate that he compared the latter to the closed fist, the former to the open hand), even the art of disputation will be a virtue. Consequently there can be no doubt about oratory whose nature is so much fairer and franker.

I should like, however, to consider the point 8 more fully and explicitly by appealing to the actual work of oratory. For how will the orator succeed in panegyric unless he can distinguish between what is honourable and the reverse? How suadendo nisi utilitate perspecta? aut in iudiciis, si iustitiae sit ignarus? Quid? non fortitudinem postulat res eadem, cum saepe contra turbulentas populi minas, saepe cum periculosa potentium offensa, nonnunquam, ut iudicio Miloniano, inter circumfusa militum arma dicendum sit; ut, si virtus non est, ne 9 perfecta quidem esse possit oratio. Quodsi ea in quoque animalium est virtus, qua praestat cetera vel pleraque, ut in leone impetus, in equo velocitas, hominem porro ratione atque oratione excellere ceteris certum est: cur non tam in eloquentia quam in ratione virtutem eius esse credamus, recteque hoc apud Ciceronem dixerit Crassus: Est enim eloquentia una quaedam de summis virtutibus, et ipse Cicero sua persona cum ad Brutum in epistulis, tum aliis etiam 10 locis virtutem eam appellet? At prooemium aliquando ac narrationem dicet malus homo et argumenta, sic ut nihil sit in iis requirendum. Nam et latro pugnabit acriter, virtus tamen erit fortitudo; et tormenta sine gemitu feret malus servus, tolerantia tamen doloris laude sua non carebit. Multa fiunt eadem sed aliter. Sufficiant igitur haec, quia de utilitate supra tractavimus.

QUINTILIAN

¹ de Or. III. xiv. 55.

² Lost.

can he urge a policy, unless he has a clear perception of what is expedient? How can he plead in the law-courts, if he is ignorant of the nature of justice? Again, does not oratory call for courage, since it is often directed against the threats of popular turbulence and frequently runs into peril through incurring the hatred of the great, while sometimes, as for instance in the trial of Milo, the orator may have to speak in the midst of a crowd of armed soldiers? Consequently, if oratory be not a virtue, perfection is beyond its grasp. If, on the other hand, each living thing has its own peculiar virtue, in which it excels the rest or, at any rate, the majority (I instance the courage of the lion and the swiftness of the horse), it may be regarded as certain that the qualities in which man excels the rest are, above all, reason and powers of speech. Why, therefore, should we not consider that the special virtue of man lies just as much in eloquence as in reason? It will be with justice then that Cicero¹ makes Crassus say that "eloquence is one of the highest virtues," and that Cicero himself calls it a virtue in his letters to Brutus² and in other passages. "But," it may be urged, "a bad man will at times produce an exordium or a statement of facts, and will argue a case in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired." No doubt; even a robber may fight bravely without courage ceasing to be a virtue; even a wicked slave may bear torture without a groan, and we may still continue to regard endurance of pain as worthy of praise. We can point to many acts which are identical with those of virtue, but spring from other sources. However, what I have said here must suffice, as I have already dealt with the question of the usefulness of oratory.

QUINTILIAN

XXI. Materiam rhetorices quidam dixerunt esse orationem, qua in sententia ponitur apud Platonem Gorgias. Quae si ita accipitur, ut sermo quacun- que de re compositus dicatur oratio, non materia sed opus est, ut statuarii statua; nam et oratio efficitur arte sicut statua. Sin hac appellatione verba ipsa signifi- 2 cificari putamus, nihil haec sine rerum substantia faciunt. Quidam argumenta persuasibilia; quae et ipsa in parte sunt operis et arte fiunt et materia egent. Quidam civiles quaestiones; quorum opinio non qualitate sed modo erravit, est enim haec materia 3 rhetorices sed non sola. Quidam, quia virtus sit rhetorice, materiam eius totam vitam vocant. Alii, quia non omnium virtutum materia sit tota vita, sed pleraeque earum versentur in partibus, sicut iustitia, fortitudo, continentia propriis officiiis et suo fine in- telliguntur, rhetorice quoque dicunt in una aliqua parte ponendam, eique locum in ethice negotialem adsignant id est πραγματικόν.

4 Ego (neque id sine auctoribus) materiam esse rhetorices iudico omnes res quaecunque ei ad dicen- dum subiectae erunt. Nam Socrates apud Platonem dicere Gorgiae videtur, non in verbis esse materiam

¹ Gorg. 449 E.

² Gorg. 449 E.

XXI. As to the material of oratory, some have asserted that it is speech, as for instance Gorgias¹ in the dialogue of Plato. If this view be accepted in the sense that the word "speech" is used of a discourse composed on any subject, then it is not the material, but the work, just as a statue is the work of the sculptor. For speeches like statues require art for their production. If on the other hand we interpret "speech" as indicating the words themselves, they can do nothing unless they are related to facts. Some again hold that the material consists of persuasive arguments. But they form part of the work, are produced by art and require material themselves. Some say that political² questions provide the material. The mistake made by these lies not in the quality of their opinion but in its limitation. For political questions are material for eloquence but not the only material. Some, on the ground that rhetoric is a virtue, make the³ material with which it deals to be the whole of life. Others, on the ground that life regarded as a whole does not provide material for every virtue, since most of them are concerned only with departments of life (justice, courage and self-control each having their own duties and their own end), would consequently restrict oratory to one particular department of life and place it in the practical or pragmatic department of ethics, that is to say the department of morals which deals with the business of life.

For my own part, and I have authority to support⁴ me, I hold that the material of rhetoric is composed of everything that may be placed before it as a subject for speech. Plato, if I read him aright, makes Socrates² say to Gorgias that its material is to be

QUINTILIAN

sed in rebus. Et in Phaedro palam, non in iudiciis modo et contionibus, sed in rebus etiam privatis ac domesticis rhetorice esse demonstrat. Quo manifestum est hanc opinionem ipsius Platonis fuisse. Et Cicero quodam loco materiam rhetorice vocat res, quae subiectae sint ei, sed certas demum putat esse subiectas. Alio vero de omnibus rebus oratori dicendum arbitratur his quidem verbis: Quanquam vis oratoris professioque ipsa bene dicendi hoc suscipere ac polliceri videtur, ut omni de re, quaecunque sit pro-
 5 posita, ornate ab eo copioseque dicatur. Atque adhuc alibi: Vero enim oratori, quae sunt in hominum vita, quandoquidem in ea versatur orator atque ea est ei sub- 6 iecta materies, omnia quaesita, audita, lecta, disputata, tractata, agitata esse debent.

7 Hanc autem, quam nos materiam vocamus, id est res subiectas, quidam modo infinitam modo non propriam rhetorice esse dixerunt, eamque artem circumeurrentem vocaverunt, quod in omni materia 8 diceret, cum quibus mihi minima pugna est. Nam de omni materia dicere eam fatentur; propriam habere materiam, quia multiplicem habeat, negant. Sed neque infinita est, etiamsi est multiplex; et

¹ Phaedr. 261 A.

² de Inv. i. 5.

³ de Or. I. vi. 21. "I will not demand omniscience from an orator, although" etc.

⁴ ib. III. xiv. 54.

found in things not words ; while in the *Phaedrus*¹ he clearly proves that rhetoric is concerned not merely with law-courts and public assemblies, but with private and domestic affairs as well : from which it is obvious that this was the view of Plato himself. Cicero⁵ also in a passage² of one of his works, states that the material of rhetoric is composed of the things which are brought before it, but makes certain restrictions as to the nature of these things. In another passage,³ however, he expresses his opinion that the orator has to speak about all kinds of things ; I will quote his actual words : "although the very meaning of the name of orator and the fact that he professes to speak well seem to imply a promise and undertaking that the orator will speak with elegance and fullness on any subject that may be put before him." And in another passage⁴ he says, 6 "It is the duty of the true orator to seek out, hear, read, discuss, handle and ponder everything that befalls in the life of man, since it is with this that the orator is concerned and this that forms the material with which he has to deal."

But this material, as we call it, that is to say 7 the things brought before it, has been criticised by some, at times on the ground that it is limitless, and sometimes on the ground that it is not peculiar to oratory, which they have therefore dubbed a discursive art, because all is grist that comes to its mill. I have no serious quarrel with these critics, for they 8 acknowledge that rhetoric is concerned with every kind of material, though they deny that it has any peculiar material just because of that material's multiplicity. But in spite of this multiplicity, rhetoric is not unlimited in scope, and there are other minor aliae quoque artes minores habent multiplicem materiam, velut architectonice, namque ea in omnibus, quae sunt aedificio utilia, versatur, et caelatura, 9 quae auro, argento, aere, ferro opera efficit. Nam sculptura etiam lignum, ebur, marmor, vitrum, gemmas praeter ea quae supra dixi complectitur. 10 Neque protinus non est materia rhetorices, si in eadem versatur et alius. Nam si quaeram, quae sit materia statuarii, dicitur aes; si quaeram quae sit excusoris, id est fabricae eius quam Graeci χαλκευτικὴν vocant, similiter aes esse respondeant. Atqui 11 plurimum statuis differunt vasa. Nec medicina ideo non erit ars, quia unctio et exercitatio cum palaestrica, ciborum vero qualitas etiam cum cocorum ei 12 sit arte communis. Quod vero de bono, utili, iusto disserere philosophiae officium esse dicunt, non obstat. Nam cum philosophum dicunt, hoc accipi volunt virum bonum. Quare igitur oratorem, quem a bono viro non separo, in eadem materia versari 13 mirer? cum praesertim primo libro iam ostenderim, philosophos omissam hanc ab oratoribus partem occupasse, quae rhetorices propria semper fuisset, ut illi potius in nostra materia versentur. Denique cum sit dialectices materia de rebus subiectis disputare, sit autem dialectice oratio concisa, cur non eadem perpetuae quoque materia videatur?

QUINTILIAN

¹ Pref. § 10 sqq.

arts whose material is characterised by the same multiplicity: such for instance is architecture, which deals with everything that is useful for the purpose of building: such too is the engraver's art which works on gold, silver, bronze, iron. As for sculpture, 9 its activity extends to wood, ivory, marble, glass and precious stones in addition to the materials already mentioned. And things which form the material for 10 other artists, do not for that reason cease forthwith to be material for rhetoric. For if I ask what is the material of the sculptor, I shall be told bronze; and if I ask what is the material of the maker of vessels (I refer to the craft styled χαλκευτική by the Greeks), the answer will again be bronze: and yet there is all the difference in the world between vessels and statues. Similarly medicine will not cease to be an 11 art, because, like the art of the gymnast, it prescribes rubbing with oil and exercise, or because it deals with diet like the art of cookery. Again, the 12 objection that to discourse of what is good, expedient or just is the duty of philosophy presents no difficulty. For when such critics speak of a philosopher, they mean a good man. Why then should I feel surprised to find that the orator whom I identify with the good man deals with the same material? There 13 is all the less reason, since I have already shown in the first book¹ that philosophers only usurped this department of knowledge after it had been abandoned by the orators: it was always the peculiar property of rhetoric and the philosophers are really trespassers. Finally, since the discussion of whatever is brought before it is the task of dialectic, which is really a concise form of oratory, why should not this task be regarded as also being the appropriate material for continuous oratory?

QUINTILIAN

- 14 Solet a quibusdam et illud opponi: Omnium igitur artium peritus erit orator, si de omnibus ei dicendum est. Possem hic Ciceronis respondere verbis, apud quem hoc invenio: Mea quidem sententia nemo esse poterit omni laude cumulatus orator, nisi erit omnium rerum magnarum atque artium scientiam consecutus; sed mihi satis est eius esse oratorem rei de qua dicit non 15 insecium. Neque enim omnes causas novit, et debet posse de omnibus dicere. De quibus ergo dicit? De quibus didicit. Similiter de artibus quoque, de quibus dicendum erit, interim discet; et de quibus didicerit dicit.
- 16 Quid ergo? non faber de fabrica melius aut de musicæ musicus? Si nesciat orator, quid sit, de quo quaeratur, plane melius. Nam et litigator rusticus illitteratusque de causa sua melius, quam orator, qui nesciet quid in lite sit; sed accepta a musico, a fabro, sicut a litigatore melius orator 17 quam ipse qui docuerit. Verum et faber, cum de fabrica, et musicus, cum de musica, si quid confirmationem desideraverit, dicit. Non quidem erit orator, sed faciet illud quasi orator, sicut cum vulnus impe-

¹ de Or. i. vi. 20.

There is a further objection made by certain 14 critics, who say "Well then, if an orator has to speak on every subject, he must be the master of all the arts." I might answer this criticism in the words of Cicero,¹ in whom I find the following passage:—"In my opinion no one can be an absolutely perfect orator unless he has acquired a knowledge of all important subjects and arts." I however regard it as sufficient that an orator should not be actually ignorant of the subject on which he has to speak. For he 15 cannot have a knowledge of all causes, and yet he should be able to speak on all. On what then will he speak? On those which he has studied.
 Similarly as regards the arts, he will study those concerning which he has to speak, as occasion may demand, and will speak on those which he has studied.

What then?—I am asked—will not a builder 16 speak better on the subject of building and a musician on music? Certainly, if the orator does not know what is the question at issue. Even an illiterate peasant who is a party to a suit will speak better on behalf of his case than an orator who does not know what the subject in dispute may be. But on the other hand if the orator receive instruction from the builder or the musician, he will put forward what he has thus learned better than either, just as he will plead a case better than his client, once he has been instructed in it. The builder and 17 the musician will, however, speak on the subject of their respective arts, if there should be any technical point which requires to be established. Neither will be an orator, but he will perform his task like an orator, just as when an untrained person binds up a

QUINTILIAN

ritus deligabit, non erit medicus, sed faciet ut 18 medicus. An huiusmodi res neque in laudem neque in deliberationem neque in iudicium veniunt? Ergo cum de faciendo portu Ostiensi deliberatum est, non debuisset sententiam dicere orator? atqui opus erat 19 ratione architectorum. Livores et tumores in corpore cruditatis an veneni signa sint, non tractat orator? at est id ex ratione medicinae. Circa men-suras et numeros non versabitur? dicamus has geometriae esse partes. Equidem omnia fere credo posse casu aliquo venire in officium oratoris; quod si non accidet, non erunt ei subiecta.

20 Ita sic quoque recte diximus, materiam rhetorices esse omnes res ad dicendum ei subiectas; quod quidem probat etiam sermo communis. Nam cum aliquid, de quo dicamus, accepimus, positam nobis esse materiam frequenter etiam praefatione testa-21 mur. Gorgias quidem adeo rhetori de omnibus rebus putavit esse dicendum, ut se in auditoriis interrogari pateretur, qua quisque de re vellet. Hermagoras quoque, dicendo materiam esse in causa et in quae-22 stionibus, omnes res subiectas erat complexus. Sed quaestiones si negat ad rhetoricen pertinere, dissentit a nobis; si autem ad rhetoricen pertinent, ab hoc wound, he will not be a physician, but he will be acting as one. Is it suggested that such topics 18 never crop up in panegyric, deliberative or forensic oratory? When the question of the construction of a port at Ostia came up for discussion, had not the orator to state his views? And yet it was a subject requiring the technical knowledge of the architect. Does not the orator discuss the question whether 19 livid spots and swellings on the body are symptomatic of ill-health or poison? And yet that is a question for the qualified physician. Will he not deal with measurements and figures? And yet we must admit that they form part of mathematics. For my part I hold that practically all subjects are under certain circumstances liable to come up for treatment by the orator. If the circumstances do not occur, the subjects will not concern him.

¹ See III. v. 12-16.

We were therefore right in asserting that the 20 material of rhetoric is composed of everything that comes before the orator for treatment, an assertion which is confirmed by the practice of everyday speech. For when we have been given a subject on which to speak, we often preface our remarks by calling attention to the fact that the matter has been laid before us. Gorgias indeed felt so strongly 21 that it was the orator's duty to speak on every subject, that he used to allow those who attended his lectures to ask him questions on any subject they pleased. Hermagoras also asserted that the material of oratory lay in the cause and the questions it involved, thereby including every subject that can be brought before it. If he denies that general 22 questions¹ are the concern of oratory, he disagrees with me: but if they do concern rhetoric, that quoque adiuvamur. Nihil est enim, quod non in 23 causam aut quaestionem cadat. Aristoteles tres faciendo partes orationis, iudicalem, deliberativam, demonstrativam, paene et ipse oratori subiecit omnia ;

QUINTILIAN

nihil enim non in haec cadit.

24 Quaesitum a paucissimis et de instrumento est.
Instrumentum voco, sine quo formari materia in id quod velimus effici opus non possit. Verum hoc ego non artem credo egere sed artificem. Neque enim scientia desiderat instrumentum, quae potest esse consummata, etiamsi nihil faciat, sed ille artifex, ut caelator caelum et pictor penicilla. Itaque haec in eum locum, quo de oratore dicturi sumus, differamus.

supports my contention. For there is nothing which may not crop up in a cause or appear as a question for discussion. Aristotle¹ himself also by his tripartite 23 division of oratory, into forensic, deliberative and demonstrative, practically brought everything into the orator's domain, since there is nothing that may not come up for treatment by one of these three kinds of rhetoric.

A very few critics have raised the question as to 24 what may be the instrument of oratory. My definition of an instrument is that without which the material cannot be brought into the shape necessary for the effecting of our object. But it is not the art which requires an instrument, but the artist. Knowledge needs no instruments, for it may be complete although it produces nothing, but the artist must have them. The engraver cannot work without his chisel nor the painter without his brush. I shall therefore defer this question until I come to treat of the orator as distinct from his art.

¹ Rhet. I. iii. 3.

BOOK III

LIBER III

I. QUONIAM in libro secundo quaesitum est, quid esset rhetorice et quis finis eius, artem quoque esse eam et utilem et virtutem, ut vires nostrae tulerunt, ostendimus, materiamque ei res omnes, de quibus dicere oporteret, subiecimus: iam hinc, unde coeperit, quibus constet, quo quaeque in ea modo inveni-enda atque tractanda sint, exsequar; intra quem modum plerique scriptores artium constiterunt, adeo ut Apollodorus contentus solis iudicialibus 2 fuerit. Nec sum ignarus, hoc a me praecipue, quod hic liber inchoat, opus studiosos eius desiderasse, ut inquisitione opinionum, quae diversissimae fuerunt, longe difficillimum, ita nescio an minimae legentibus futurum voluptati, quippe quod prope nudam prae-
3 ceptorum traditionem desideret. In ceteris enim admiscere temptavimus aliquid nitoris, non iactandi ingenii gratia (namque in id eligi materia poterat uberior), sed ut hoc ipso adliceremus magis iuventutem ad cognitionem eorum, quae necessaria studiis arbitrabamur, si ducti iucunditate aliqua lectionis 37°

BOOK III

I. IN the second book the subject of inquiry was the nature and the end of rhetoric, and I proved to the best of my ability that it was an art, that it was useful, that it was a virtue and that its material was all and every subject that might come up for treatment. I shall now discuss its origin, its component parts, and the method to be adopted in handling and forming our conception of each. For most authors of text-books have stopped short of this, indeed Apollodorus confines himself solely to forensic oratory. I know that those who asked me to write 2 this work were specially interested in that portion on which I am now entering, and which, owing to the necessity of examining a great diversity of opinions, at once forms by far the most difficult section of this work, and also, I fear, may be the least attractive to my readers, since it necessitates a dry exposition of rules. In other portions of this work I have attempted to 3 introduce a certain amount of ornateness, not, I may say, to advertise my style (if I had wished to do that, I could have chosen a more fertile theme), but in order that I might thus do something to lure our young men to make themselves acquainted with those principles which I regarded as necessary to the study of rhetoric: for I hoped that by giving them something which was not unpleasant to read I might induce a greater readiness to learn those rules which I feared

QUINTILIAN

libentius discerent ea, quorum ne ieiuna atque arida traditio averteret animos et aures praesertim tam 4 delicatas raderet verebatur. Qua ratione se Lucretius dicit praecepta philosophiae carmine esse complexum; namque haec, ut est notum, similitudine utitur:

*Ac veluti pueris absinthia lactra medentes Cum dare conantur, prius oras pocula circum
 Aspirant¹ mellis dulci flavoque liquore,*

5 et quae sequuntur. Sed nos veremur, ne parum hic liber mellis et absinthii multum habere videatur, sitque salubrior studiis quam dulcior. Quin etiam hoc timeo, ne ex eo minorem gratiam ineat, quod pleraque non inventa per me sed ab aliis tradita continebit, habeat etiam quosdam, qui contra sentiant et adversentur, propterea quod plurimi auctores, quamvis eodem tenderent, diversas tamen vias muniverunt atque in suam quisque induxit sequentes.
 6 Illi autem probant quaecumque ingressi sunt iter, nec facile inculcatas pueris persuasiones mutaveris, 7 quia nemo non didicisse mavult quam discere. Est autem, ut procedente libro patebit, infinita dissensio auctorum, primo ad ea, quae rudia atque imperfecta adhuc erant, adiciendis quod invenissent scripto-

¹ inspirant, A: adspirant, B: contingunt, MSS. of Lucretius.

¹ iv. 11. See also i. 936.

might, by the dryness and aridity which must necessarily characterise their exposition, revolt their minds and offend their ears which are nowadays grown somewhat over-sensitive. Lucretius has the same 4 object in mind when he states that he has set forth his philosophical system in verse; for you will remember the well-known simile which he uses¹:—

“ And as physicians when they seek to give A draught of bitter wormwood to a child,
First smear along the edge that rims the cup
The liquid sweets of honey, golden-hued,” and the rest. But I fear that this book will have 5 too little honey and too much wormwood, and that though the student may find it a healthy draught, it will be far from agreeable. I am also haunted by the further fear that it will be all the less attractive from the fact that most of the precepts which it contains are not original, but derived from others, and because it is likely to rouse the opposition of certain persons who do not share my views. For there are a large number of writers, who though they are all moving toward the same goal, have constructed different roads to it and each drawn their followers into their own. The latter, however, approve of 6 the path on which they have been launched whatever its nature, and it is difficult to change the convictions implanted in boyhood, for the excellent reason that everybody prefers to have learned rather than to be in process of learning. But, as will appear in 7 the course of this book, there is an infinite diversity of opinions among writers on this subject, since some have added their own discoveries to those portions of the art which were still shapeless and unformed, ribus, mox, ut aliquid sui viderentur adferre, etiam recta mutantibus.

QUINTILIAN

- 8 Nam primus post eos, quos poetae tradiderunt, movisse aliqua circa rhetoricen Empedocles dicitur. Artium autem scriptores antiquissimi Corax et Tisias Siculi, quos inscentus est vir eiusdem insulae Gorgias
- 9 Leontinus, Empedocles, ut traditur, discipulus. Is beneficio longissimae aetatis (nam centum et novem vixit annos) cum multis simul floruit, ideoque et illorum, de quibus supra dixi, fuit aemulus et ultra
- 10 Socraten usque duravit. Thrasymachus Chalcedonius cum hoc et Prodicus Cius et Abderites Protagoras, a quo decem milibus denariorum didicisse artem, quam edidit, Euathlus dicitur, et Hippias Eleus et, quem Palameden Plato appellat, Alcidas
- 11 Elaïtes. Antiphon quoque et orationem primus omnium scripsit et nihilo minus et artem ipse composuit et pro se dixisse optime est creditus, etiam Polycrates, a quo scriptam in Socraten diximus orationem, et Theodorus Byzantius ex iis et ipse, quos
- 12 Plato appellat λογοδαιδάλους. Horum priimi communes locos tractasse dicuntur Protagoras, Gorgias, adfectus Prodicus et Hippias et idem Protagoras et Thrasymachus. Cicero in Bruto negat ante Periclea scriptum quidquam, quod ornatum oratorum habeat; eius aliqua ferri. Equidem non reperio quidquam

¹ About £312.

² Phaedr. 261 D.

³ Phaedr. 266 E.

⁴ vii. 27.

and subsequently have altered even what was perfectly sound in order to establish a claim to originality.

The first writer after those recorded by the poets 8 who is said to have taken any steps in the direction of rhetoric is Empedocles. But the earliest writers of text-books are the Sicilians, Corax and Tisias, who were followed by another from the same island, namely Gorgias of Leontini, whom tradition asserts to have been the pupil of Empedocles. He, thanks to 9 his length of days, for he lived to a hundred and nine, flourished as the contemporary of many rhetoricians, was consequently the rival of those whom I have just mentioned, and lived on to survive Socrates. In the same period flourished Thrasymachus of 10 Chalcedon, Prodicus of Ceos, Protagoras of Abdera, for whose instructions, which he afterwards published in a text-book, Euathlus is said to have paid 10,000¹ denarii, Hippias of Elis and Alcidas of Elaea whom Plato² calls Palamedes. There was Antiphon also, 11 who was the first to write speeches and who also wrote a text-book and is said to have spoken most eloquently in his own defence; Polycrates, who, as I have already said, wrote a speech against Socrates, and Theodorus of Byzantium, who was one of those called "word-artificers" by Plato.³ Of these Pro- 12 tagoras and Gorgias are said to have been the first to treat commonplaces, Prodicus, Hippias, Protagoras and Thrasymachus the first to handle emotional themes. Cicero in the *Brutus*⁴ states that nothing in the ornate rhetorical style was ever committed to writing before Pericles, and that certain of his speeches are still extant. For my part I have been unable to discover anything in tanta eloquentiae fama dignum; ideoque minus miror esse, qui nihil ab eo scriptum putent, haec 13 autem, quae feruntur, ab aliis esse composita. His successere multi, sed clarissimus Gorgiae auditorum Isocrates, quanquam de praeceptore eius inter auc-tores non convenit; nos autem Aristoteli credimus.

QUINTILIAN

14 Hinc velut diversae secari coeperunt viae. Nam et Isocratis praestantissimi discipuli fuerunt in omni studiorum genere, eoque iam seniore (octavum enim et nonagesimum implevit annum) postmeridianis scholis Aristoteles praecipere artem oratoriam coepit, noto quidem illo (ut traditur) versu ex Philocteta fre-quenter usus: Turpe esse tacere et Isocraten pati dicere.
Ars est utriusque, sed pluribus eam libris Aristoteles complexus est. Eodem tempore Theodectes fuit, de 15 cuius opere supra dictum est. Theophrastus quoque Aristotelis discipulus de rhetorice diligenter scripsit, atque hinc vel studiosius philosophi quam rhetores praecipueque Stoicorum ac Peripateticorum principes.
16 Fecit deinde velut propriam Hermagoras viam, quam plurimi sunt secuti; cui maxime par atque aemulus

¹ cp. XII, ii. 22: x. 49, where Quintilian asserts that all the writings of Pericles have been lost.

² Aristotle gave his esoteric lectures in the morning, reserving the afternoon for those of more general interest: see Aul. Gell. xx. v.

the least worthy of his great reputation for eloquence,¹ and am consequently the less surprised that there should be some who hold that he never committed anything to writing, and that the writings circulating under his name are the works of others. These 13 rhetoricians had many successors, but the most famous of Gorgias' pupils was Isocrates, although our authorities are not agreed as to who was his teacher: I however accept the statement of Aristotle on the subject. From this point the roads begin to 14 part. The pupils of Isocrates were eminent in every branch of study, and when he was already advanced in years (and he lived to the age of ninety-eight), Aristotle began to teach the art of rhetoric in his afternoon lectures,² in which he frequently quoted the well-known line from the *Philoctetes*³ in the form “Isocrates still speaks. 'Twere shame should I Sit silent.”

Both Aristotle and Isocrates left text-books on rhetoric, but that by Aristotle is the larger and contains more books. Theodectes, whose work I mentioned above, also lived about the same period; while 15 Theophrastus, the pupil of Aristotle, produced some careful work on rhetoric. After him we may note that the philosophers, more especially the leaders of the Stoic and Peripatetic schools, surpassed even the rhetoricians in the zeal which they devoted to the subject. Hermagoras next carved out a path of 16 his own, which numbers have followed: of his rivals Athenaeus seems to have approached him most ³ Probably the Philoctetes of Euripides. The original line was αἰσχρὸν σιωπᾶν, βαρβάρους δ' εἶναι λέγειν, which Aristotle travestied by substituting Ἴσοκράτην for βαρβάρους.

QUINTILIAN

videtur Athenaeus fuisse. Multa post Apollonius Molon, multa Areus, multa Caecilius et Halicarnas-17 seus Dionysius. Praecipue tamen in se converterunt studia Apollodorus Pergamenus, qui praeceptor Apolloniae Caesaris Augusti fuit, et Theodorus Gadareus, qui se dici maluit Rhodium, quem studiose audisse, eum in eam insulam secessisset, dicitur Tiberius 18 Caesar. Hi diversas opiniones tradiderunt, appellatique inde Apollodorei ac Theodorei ad morem certas in philosophia sectas sequendi. Sed Apollodori praecepta magis ex discipulis cognoscas, quorum diligentissimus in tradendo fuit Latine Gaius Valgius, Graece Atticus. Nam ipsius sola videtur Ars edita ad Matium, quia ceteras missa ad Domitium epistula non agnoscit. Plura scripsit Theodorus, cuius auditorem Hermagoran sunt qui viderint.
19 Romanorum primus (quantum ego quidem sciam) condidit aliqua in hanc materiam M. Cato ille censorius, post M. Antonius inchoavit; nam hoc solum opus eius atque id ipsum imperfectum manet. Secuti minus celebres; quorum memoriam, si quo 20 loco res poscet, non omittam. Praecipuum vero lumen sicut eloquentiae ita praeceptis quoque eius dedit, unicum apud nos specimen orandi docendique oratorias artes, M. Tullius; post quem tacere mode-

¹ The younger Hermagoras, a rhetorician of the Augustan age.

nearly. Later still much work was done by Apollonius Molon, Areus, Caecilius and Dionysius of Halicarnassus. But the rhetoricians who attracted the most enthusiastic following were Apollodorus of Pergamus, who was the instructor of Augustus Caesar at Apollonia, and Theodorus of Gadara, who preferred to be called Theodorus of Rhodes: it is said that Tiberius Caesar during his retirement in that island was a constant attendant at his lectures. These rhetoricians taught different systems, and two schools have arisen known as the Apollodoreans and the Theodoreans, these names being modelled on the fashion of nomenclature in vogue with certain schools of philosophy. The doctrines of Apollodorus are best learned from his pupils, among whom Caius Valgius was the best interpreter of his master's views in Latin, Atticus in Greek. The only text-book by Apollodorus himself seems to be that addressed to Matius, as his letter to Domitius does not acknowledge the other works attributed to him. The writings of Theodorus were more numerous, and there are some still living who have seen his pupil Hermagoras. 17 18

The first Roman to handle the subject was, to the best of my belief, Marcus Cato, the famous censor, while after him Marcus Antonius began a treatise on rhetoric: I say "began," because only this one work of his survives, and that is incomplete. He was followed by others of less note, whose names I will not omit to mention, should occasion demand. But it was Cicero who shed the greatest light not only on the practice but on the theory of oratory; for he stands alone among Romans as combining the gift of actual eloquence with that of teaching the art. With him for 19 20

QUINTILIAN

stissimum foret, nisi et rhetoricos suos ipse adolescenti sibi elapsos diceret, et in oratoriis haec minora, quae plerumque desiderantur, sciens omni-21 sisset. Scripsit de eadem materia non pauca Cornificius, aliqua Stertinius, nonnihil pater Gallio; accuratius vero priores Gallione Celsus et Laenas et aetatis nostrae Verginius, Plinius, Tutilius. Sunt et hodie clari eiusdem operis auctores, qui si omnia complexi forent, consulissent labori meo; sed parco nominibus viventium; veniet eorum laudi suum tempus, ad posteros enim virtus durabit, non perveniet invidia.

22 Non tamen post tot ac tantos auctores pigebit meam quibusdam locis posuisse sententiam. Neque enim me eniusquam sectae velut quadam superstitione imbutus addixi, et electuris quae volent facienda copia fuit, sicut ipse plurimum in unum confero inventa, ubicunque ingenio non erit locus, curae testimonium meruisse contentus.

II. Nec diu nos moretur quaestio, quae rhetorices origo sit. Nam cui dubium est, quin sermonem ab ipsa rerum natura geniti protinus homines acceperint (quod certe principium est eius rei), huic studium et incrementum dederit utilitas, summam ratio et exerci-
2 citatio? Nec video, quare curam dicendi putent

¹ sc. the de Inventione.

predecessor it would be more modest to be silent, but for the fact that he himself describes his *Rhetorica*¹ as a youthful indiscretion, while in his later works on oratory he deliberately omitted the discussion of certain minor points, on which instruction is generally desired. Cornificius wrote a good deal, Stertinius 21 something, and the elder Gallio a little on the same subject. But Gallio's predecessors, Celsus and Laenas, and in our own day Verginius, Pliny and Tutilius, have treated rhetoric with greater accuracy. Even to-day we have some distinguished writers on oratory who, if they had dealt with the subject more comprehensively, would have saved me the trouble of writing this book. But I will spare the names of the living. The time will come when they will reap their meed of praise; for their merits will endure to after generations, while the calumnies of envy will perish utterly.

Still, although so many writers have preceded me, 22 I shall not shrink from expressing my own opinion on certain points. I am not a superstitious adherent of any school, and as this book will contain a collection of the opinions of many different authors, it was desirable to leave it to my readers to select what they will. I shall be content if they praise me for my industry, wherever there is no scope for originality.

II. The question as to the origin of rhetoric need not keep us long. For who can doubt that mankind received the gift of speech from nature at its birth (for we can hardly go further back than that), while the usefulness of speech brought improvement and study, and finally method and exercise gave perfection? I cannot understand why some hold that 23 the elaboration of speech originated in the fact that quidam inde coepisse, quod ii, qui in discrimen aliquod vocabantur, accuratius loqui defendendi sui gratia instituerint. Haec enim ut honestior causa, ita non utique prior est, cum praesertim accusatio praecedat defensionem; nisi quis dicet, etiam gladium fabricatum ab eo prius, qui ferrum in tutelam sui 3 quam qui in perniciem alterius compararit. Initium ergo dicendi dedit natura, initium artis observatio. Homines enim, sicuti in medicina, cum viderent alia salubria, alia insalubria, ex observatione eorum effecerunt artem, ita, cum in dicendo alia utilia, alia inutilia deprehenderent, notarunt ea ad imitandum vitandumque, et quaedam secundum rationem eorum adiecerunt ipsi quoque; haec confirmata sunt usu, 4 tum quae sciebat quisque docuit. Cicero quidem initium orandi conditoribus urbium ac legum latoribus dedit, in quibus fuisse vim dicendi necesse est; cur tamen hanc primam originem putet, non video, cum sint adhuc quaedam vagae et sine urbibus ac sine legibus gentes, et tamen qui sunt in iis nati et legationibus fungantur et accusent aliqua atque defendant et denique alium alio melius loqui credant.

QUINTILIAN

III. Omnis autem orandi ratio, ut plurimi maxime auctores tradiderunt, quinque partibus constat, inventione, dispositione, elocutione, memoria, pronuntiatione sive actione, utroque enim modo dicitur. Omnis vero sermo, quo quidem voluntas aliqua enun-
2 tiatur, habeat necesse est rem et verba. Ac si est those who were in peril owing to some accusation being made against them, set themselves to speak with studied care for the purpose of their own defence. This, however, though a more honourable origin, cannot possibly be the earlier, for accusation necessarily precedes defence. You might as well assert that the sword was invented for the purpose of self-defence and not for aggression. It was, then, nature that created speech, and observation that originated the art of speaking. Just as men discovered the art of medicine by observing that some things were healthy and some the reverse, so they observed that some things were useful and some useless in speaking, and noted them for imitation or avoidance, while they added certain other precepts according as their nature suggested. These observations were confirmed by experience and each man proceeded to teach what he knew. Cicero,¹ it is true, attributes the origin of oratory to the founders of cities and the makers of laws, who must needs have possessed the gift of eloquence. But why he thinks this the actual origin, I cannot understand, since there still exist certain nomad peoples without cities or laws, and yet members of these peoples perform the duties of ambassadors, accuse and defend, and regard one man as a better speaker than another.

III. The art of oratory, as taught by most authorities, and those the best, consists of five parts:—invention, arrangement, expression, memory, and delivery or action (the two latter terms being used synonymously). But all speech expressive of purpose involves also a subject and words. If such expression is brief

¹ de Inv. i. 2.

QUINTILIAN

- brevis et una conclusione finitus, nihil fortasse ultra desideret; at oratio longior plura exigit. Non tantum enim refert, quid et quo modo dicamus, sed etiam quo loco; opus ergo est et dispositione. Sed neque omnia, quae res postulat, dicere neque suo quacque loco poterimus nisi adiuvante memoria;
- 3 quapropter ea quoque pars quarta erit. Verum haec cuncta corrumpit ac propemodum perdit indecora vel voce vel gestu pronuntiatio. Huic quoque igitur tribuendus est necessario quintus locus.
- 4 Nec audiendi quidam, quorum est Albutius, qui tris modo primas esse partes volunt, quoniam memoria atque actio natura non arte contingant (quarum nos praecepta suo loco dabimus), licet Thrasymachus
- 5 quoque idem de actione crediderit. His adiecerunt quidam sextam partem, ita ut inventioni iudicium subnecterent, quia primum esset invenire, deinde iudicare. Ego porro ne invenisse quidem credo eum, qui non iudicavit; neque enim contraria, communia, stulta invenisse dicitur quisquam, sed non vitasse.
- 6 Et Cicero quidem in Rhetoricis iudicium subiecit inventioni; mihi autem adeo tribus primis partibus videtur esse permixtum (nam neque dispositio sine eo neque elocutio fuerit), ut pronuntiationem quoque
- 7 vel plurimum ex eo mutuari putem. Quod hoc audacius dixerim, quod in Partitionibus oratoriis ad

¹ Book II. chaps. ii. and iii.

² No such statement is found in the de Inventione.

and contained within the limits of one sentence, it may demand nothing more, but longer speeches require much more. For not only what we say and how we say it is of importance, but also the circumstances under which we say it. It is here that the need of arrangement comes in. But it will be impossible to say everything demanded by the subject, putting each thing in its proper place, without the aid of memory. It is for this reason that memory 3 forms the fourth department. But a delivery, which is rendered unbecoming either by voice or gesture, spoils everything and almost entirely destroys the effect of what is said. Delivery therefore must be assigned the fifth place.

Those (and Albutius is among them), who maintain 4 that there are only three departments on the ground that memory and delivery (for which I shall give instructions in their proper place¹) are given us by nature not by art, may be disregarded, although Thrasymachus held the same views as regards delivery. Some have added a sixth department, sub- 5 joining judgment to invention, on the ground that it is necessary first to invent and then to exercise our judgment. For my own part I do not believe that invention can exist apart from judgment, since we do not say that a speaker has invented inconsistent, two-edged or foolish arguments, but merely that he has failed to avoid them. It is true that Cicero in his *Rhetorica*² in- 6 cludes judgment under invention; but in my opinion judgment is so inextricably mingled with the first three departments of rhetoric (for without judgment neither expression nor arrangement are possible), that I think that even delivery owes much to it. I say 7 this with all the greater confidence because Cicero in easdem, de quibus supra dictum est, quinque pervenit partes. Nam cum dupliciter primum divisisset in inventionem atque elocutionem, res ac dispositionem inventioni, verba et pronuntiationem elocutioni dedit quintamque constituit, communem ac velut custodem omnium, memoriam. Idem in¹ Oratore quinque rebus constare eloquentiam dicit, in quibus postea scriptis certior eius sententia est.

QUINTILIAN

- 8 Non minus mihi cupidi novitatis alicuius videntur fuisse, qui adiecerunt ordinem, eum dispositionem dixissent, quasi aliud sit dispositio quam rerum ordine quam optimo collocatio. Dion inventionem modo et dispositionem tradidit sed utramque duplicem, rerum et verborum, ut sit elocutio inventionis, pronuntiatio dispositionis, his quinta pars memoriae, accedat. Theodori fere inventionem duplicem, rerum atque elocutionis, deinde tris ceteras partes.
- 9 Hermagoras iudicium, partitionem, ordinem, quaeque sunt elocutionis, subiicit oeconomiae, quae Graece appellata ex cura rerum domesticarum et hic per abusum posita nomine Latino caret.
- 10 Est et circa hoc quaestio, quod memoriam in ordine partium quidam inventioni, quidam dispositioni subiunxerunt; nobis quartus eius locus maxime placet. Non enim tantum inventa tenere, ut dis-

¹ in libris de Oratore, Spalding (sc. I. xxxi. 142).

¹ i. 3.

² 14 17.

his *Partitiones oratoriae*¹ arrives at the same five-fold division of which I have just spoken. For after an initial division of oratory into invention and expression, he assigns matter and arrangement to invention, words and delivery to expression, and makes memory a fifth department common to them all and acting as their guardian. Again in the *Orator*² he states that eloquence consists of five things, and in view of the fact that this is a later work we may accept this as his more settled opinion. Others, who seem to me to have been no less desirous than those mentioned above to introduce some novelty, have added order, although they had already mentioned arrangement, as though arrangement was anything else than the marshalling of arguments in the best possible order. Dion taught that oratory consisted only of invention and arrangement, but added that each of these departments was twofold in nature, being concerned with words and things, so that expression comes under invention, and delivery under arrangement, while memory must be added as a fifth department. The followers of Theodorus divide invention into two parts, the one concerned with matter and the other with expression, and then add the three remaining departments. Hermagoras places judgment, division, order and everything relating to expression under the heading of economy, a Greek word meaning the management of domestic affairs which is applied metaphorically to oratory and has no Latin equivalent.

A further question arises at this point, since some make memory follow invention in the list of departments, while others make it follow arrangement. Personally I prefer to place it fourth. For we ought not merely to retain in our minds the fruits of our ponamus, nec disposita, ut eloquamur, sed etiam verbis formata memoriae mandare debemus. Hac enim omnia, quaecumque in orationem collata sunt, continentur.

QUINTILIAN

- 11 Fuerunt etiam in hac opinione non pauci, ut has non rhetorices partes esse existimarent sed opera oratoris; eius enim esse invenire, disponere, eloqui 12 et cetera. Quod si accipimus, nihil arti relinquimus. Nam bene dicere est oratoris, rhetorice tamen erit bene dicendi scientia; vel, ut alii putant, artificis est persuadere, vis autem persuadendi artis. Ita invenire quidem et disponere oratoris, inventio autem et 13 dispositio rhetorices propria videri potest. In eo plures dissenserunt, utrumne hae partes essent rhetorices an eiusdem opera an, ut Athenaeus credit, elementa, quae vocant στοιχεῖα. Sed neque elementa recte quis dixerit, alioqui tantum initia erunt, ut mundi vel umor vel ignis vel materia vel corpora insecabilia; nec operum recte nomen accipient, quae non ab aliis perficiuntur, sed aliud ipsa perficiunt:
14 partes igitur. Nam cum sit ex his rhetorice, fieri non potest ut, cum totum ex partibus constet, non sint partes totius ex quibus constat. Videntur autem mihi, qui haec opera dixerunt, eo quoque moti, quod in alia rursus divisione nollent in idem invention, in order that we may be able to arrange them, or to remember our arrangement in order that we may express it, but we must also commit to memory the words which we propose to use, since memory embraces everything that goes to the composition of a speech.

There are also not a few who have held that these 11 are not parts of rhetoric, but rather duties to be observed by the orator. For it is his business to invent, arrange, express, etcetera. If, however, we accept this view, we leave nothing to art. For 12 although the orator's task is to speak well, rhetoric is the science of speaking well. Or if we adopt another view, the task of the artist is to persuade, while the power of persuasion resides in the art. Consequently, while it is the duty of the orator to invent and arrange, invention and arrangement may be regarded as belonging to rhetoric. At this point 13 there has been much disagreement, as to whether these are parts or duties of rhetoric, or, as Athenaeus believes, elements of rhetoric, which the Greeks call στοιχεῖα. But they cannot correctly be called elements. For in that case we should have to regard them merely as first-principles, like the moisture, fire, matter or atoms of which the universe is said to be composed. Nor is it correct to call them duties, since they are not performed by others, but perform something themselves. We must therefore conclude that they are parts. For since rhetoric is composed of 14 them, it follows that, since a whole consists of parts, these must be parts of the whole which they compose. Those who have called them duties seem to me to have been further influenced by the fact that they wished to reserve the name of parts for another nomen incidere, partes enim rhetorices esse dicebant laudativam, deliberativam, iudicialem. Quae si partes 15 sunt, materiae sunt potius quam artis. Namque in his singulis rhetorice tota est, quia et inventionem et dispositionem et elocutionem et memoriam et pronuntiationem quaecunque earum desiderat. Itaque quidam genera tria rhetorices dicere maluerunt, optime autem ii, quos secutus est Cicero, genera causarum.

QUINTILIAN

IV. Sed tria an plura sint, ambigitur. Nee dubie prope omnes utique summae apud antiquos auctoritatis scriptores Aristotelem secuti, qui nomine tantum alio contentivalem pro deliberativa appellat, haec
2 partitione contenti fuerunt. Verum et tum leviter est temptatum, cum apud Graecos quosdam tum apud Ciceronem in libris de Oratore, et nunc maximo temporum nostrorum auctore prope impulsus, ut non modo plura haec genera, sed paene innumera-
3 bilia videantur. Nam si laudandi ac vituperandi officium in parte tertia ponimus, in quo genere versari videbimur, cum querimus, consolamur, mitigamus, concitamus, terremus, confirmamus, praecipimus, obscure dicta interpretamur, narramus, deprecamur, gratias agimus, gratulamur, obiurgamus, maledicimus, describimus, mandamus, renuntiamus, 4 optamus, opinamur, plurima alia? ut mihi in illa vetere persuasionem permanenti velut petenda sit venia, quaerendumque, quo moti priores rem tam

¹ de Or. I. xxxi. 141; Top. xxiv. 91.

² de Or. ii. 10 sq.

division of rhetoric: for they asserted that the parts of rhetoric were, panegyric, deliberative and forensic oratory. But if these are parts, they are parts rather of the material than of the art. For each of them contains the whole of rhetoric, since each of them requires invention, arrangement, expression, memory and delivery. Consequently some writers have thought it better to say that there are three kinds of oratory; those whom Cicero¹ has followed seem to me to have taken the wisest course in terming them kinds of causes. 15

IV. There is, however, a dispute as to whether there are three kinds or more. But it is quite certain that all the most eminent authorities among ancient writers, following Aristotle who merely substituted the term public for deliberative, have been content with the threefold division. Still a feeble attempt has been made by certain Greeks and by Cicero in his de Oratore,² to prove that there are not merely more than three, but that the number of kinds is almost past calculation: and this view has almost been thrust down our throats by the greatest authority³ of our own times. Indeed if we place the task of praise and denunciation in the third division, on what kind of oratory are we to consider ourselves to be employed, when we complain, console, pacify, excite, terrify, encourage, instruct, explain obscurities, narrate, plead for mercy, thank, congratulate, reproach, abuse, describe, command, retract, express our desires and opinions, to mention no other of the many possibilities? As an adherent of the older view I must ask for indulgence and must enquire what was the reason that led earlier writers to restrict a subject 3

³ Unknown. Perhaps the elder Pliny.

QUINTILIAN

late fusam tam breviter astrinxerint. Quos qui errasse putant, hoc secutos arbitrantur, quod in his 5 fere versari tum oratores videbant; nam et laudes ac vituperationes scribebantur, et ἐπιταφίους dicere erat moris, et plurimum in consiliis ac iudiciis in-sumebatur operae, ut scriptores artium pro solis 6 comprehenderint frequentissima. Qui vero defendunt, tria faciunt genera auditorum, unum, quod ad delectationem conveniat, alterum, quod consilium accipiat, tertium, quod de causis iudicet. Mihi cuncta rimanti et talis quaedam ratio succurrit, quod omne orationis officium aut in iudiciis est aut extra 7 iudicia. Eorum, de quibus iudicio quaeritur, manifestum est genus; ea, quae ad iudicem non veniunt, aut praeteritum habent tempus aut futurum; praeterita laudamus aut vituperamus, de futuris delibe-8 ramus. Item omnia, de quibus dicendum est, aut certa sint necesse est aut dubia. Certa, ut cuique est animus, laudat aut culpat; ex dubiis partim nobis ipsis ad electionem sunt libera, de his deliberatur; partim aliorum sententiae commissa, de his lite contenditur.

9 Anaximenes iudicalem et contionalem generales partes esse voluit, septem autem species: hortandi, of such variety to such narrow bounds. Those who think such authorities in error hold that they were influenced by the fact that these three subjects practically exhausted the range of ancient oratory. For it was customary to write panegyrics and denun- 5 ciations and to deliver funeral orations, while the greater part of their activities was devoted to the law-courts and deliberative assemblies; as a result, they say, the old writers of text-books only included those kinds of oratory which were most in vogue. The 6 defenders of antiquity point out that there are three kinds of audience: one which comes simply for the sake of getting pleasure, a second which meets to receive advice, a third to give judgement on causes. In the course of a thorough enquiry into the question it has occurred to me that the tasks of oratory must either be concerned with the law-courts or with themes lying outside the law-courts. The nature of the 7 questions into which enquiry is made in the courts is obvious. As regards those matters which do not come before a judge, they must necessarily be concerned either with the past or the future. We praise or denounce past actions, we deliberate about the future. Again everything on which we have to 8 speak must be either certain or doubtful. We praise or blame what is certain, as our inclination leads us: on the other hand where doubt exists, in some cases we are free to form our own views, and it is here that deliberation comes in, while in others, we leave the problem to the decision of others, and it is on these that litigation takes place.

Anaximenes regarded forensic and public oratory 9 as genera but held that there were seven species:— exhortation, dissuasion, praise, denunciation, accusadehortandi, laudandi, vituperandi, accusandi, defendendi, exquirendi, quod ἐξισταστικόν dicit; quarum duae primae deliberativi, duae sequentes demonstrativi, tres ultimae iudicialis generis sunt partes.

- 10 Protagoran transeo, qui interrogandi, respondendi, mandandi, precandi, quod ἐὺχολήν dixit, partes solas putat. Plato in Sophiste iudiciali et contionali tertiam adiecit προσομιλητικήν, quam sane permittamus nobis dicere sermocinatricem; quae a forensi ratione diiungitur et est accommodata privatis disputationibus, cuius vis eadem profecto est quae dialecticae.
- 11 Isocrates in omni genere inesse laudem ac vituperationem existimavit.

- Nobis et tutissimum est auctores plurimos sequi, 12 et ita videtur ratio dictare. Est igitur, ut dixi, unum genus, quo laus ac vituperatio continetur, sed est appellatum a parte meliore laudativum; idem alii demonstrativum vocant. Utrumque nomen ex Graeco creditur fluxisse, nam ἐγκωμιστικόν aut ἐπι- 13 δεικτικόν dicunt. Sed mihi ἐπιδεικτικόν non tam demonstrationis vim habere quam ostentationis videtur et multum ab illo ἐγκωμιστικῶ differre; nam ut continet laudativum in se genus, ita non intra hoc 14 solum consistit. An quisquam negaverit Panegyricos ἐπιδεικτικούς esse? Atqui formam suadendi habent et plerumque de utilitatibus Graeciae loquuntur; ut causarum quidem genera tria sint, sed ea tum in negotiis tum in ostentatione posita. Nisi

¹ 222 c.

² Fr. 3 s.

tion, defence, inquiry, or as he called it ἐξεταστικόν. The first two, however, clearly belong to deliberative, the next to demonstrative, the three last to forensic oratory. I say nothing of Protagoras, who held that oratory was to be divided only into the following heads: question and answer, command and entreaty, or as he calls it εὐχολή. Plato in his *Sophist*¹ in addition to public and forensic oratory introduces a third kind which he styles προσομιλητική, which I will permit myself to translate by "conversational." This is distinct from forensic oratory and is adapted for private discussions, and we may regard it as identical with dialectic. Isocrates² held that praise and blame find a place in every kind of oratory.

The safest and most rational course seems to be to follow the authority of the majority. There is, then, as I have said, one kind concerned with praise and blame, which, however, derives its name from the better of its two functions and is called laudatory; others however call it demonstrative. Both names are believed to be derived from the Greek in which the corresponding terms are encomiastic, and epideictic. The term epideictic seems to me however to imply display rather than demonstration, and to have a very different meaning from encomiastic. For although it includes laudatory oratory, it does not confine itself thereto. Will any one deny the title of epideictic to panegyric? But yet panegyrics are advisory in form and frequently discuss the interests of Greece. We may therefore conclude that, while there are three kinds of oratory, all three devote themselves in part to the matter in hand, and in part to display. But it may be that Romans are not

QUINTILIAN

forte non ex Graeco mutuantes demonstrativum vocant, verum id sequuntur, quod laus ac vituperatio 15 quale sit quidque demonstrat. Alterum est deliberativum, tertium iudiciale. Ceterae species in haec tria incident genera, nec invenietur ex his ulla, in qua non laudare ac vituperare, suadere ac dissuadere, intendere quid vel depellere debeamus. Illa quoque sunt communia, conciliare, narrare, docere, augere, minuire, concitandis componendisve adfecti-16 bus animos audientium fingere. Ne iis quidem acceserim, qui laudativam materiam honestorum, deliberativam utilium, iudicalem iustorum quaestione contineri putant, celeri magis ac rotunda usi distributione quam vera. Stant enim quodammodo mutuis auxiliis omnia. Nam et in laude iustitia utilitasque tractatur et in consiliis honestas, et raro iudicalem inveneris causam, in cuius non parte aliquid eorum, quae supra diximus, reperiatur.

V. Omnis autem oratio constat aut ex iis, quae significantur, aut et iis, quae significant, id est rebus et verbis. Facultas orandi consummatur natura, arte, exercitatione, cui partem quartam adiciunt 2 quidam imitationis, quam nos arti subiicimus. Tria sunt item, quae praestare debeat orator, ut doceat, moveat, delectet. Haec enim clarior divisio quam eorum, qui totum opus in res et in adfectus par-borrowing from Greek when they apply the title demonstrative, but are merely led to do so because praise and blame demonstrate the nature of the object with which they are concerned. The second 15 kind is deliberative, the third forensic oratory. All other species fall under these three genera: you will not find one in which we have not to praise or blame, to advise or dissuade, to drive home or refute a charge, while conciliation, narration, proof, exaggeration, extenuation, and the moulding of the minds of the audience by exciting or allaying their passions, are common to all three kinds of oratory. I 16 cannot even agree with those who hold that laudatory subjects are concerned with the question of what is honourable, deliberative with the question of what is expedient, and forensic with the question of what is just: the division thus made is easy and neat rather than true: for all three kinds rely on the mutual assistance of the other. For we deal with justice and expediency in panegyric and with honour in deliberations, while you will rarely find a forensic case, in part of which at any rate something of those questions just mentioned is not to be found.

V. Every speech however consists at once of that which is expressed and that which expresses, that is to say of matter and words. Skill in speaking is perfected by nature, art and practice, to which some add a fourth department, namely imitation, which I however prefer to include under art. There are also 2 three aims which the orator must always have in view; he must instruct, move and charm his hearers. This is a clearer division than that made by those who divide the task of oratory into that which relates to things and that which concerns the emotions, tiuntur. Non semper autem omnia in eam quae tractabitur materiam cadent. Erunt enim quaedam remotae ab adfectibus, qui ut non ubique habent locum, ita quocumque irruperunt, plurimum valent.

QUINTILIAN

3 Praestantissimis auctoribus placet alia in rhetorice esse, quae probationem desiderent, alia quae non desiderent, cum quibus ipse consentio. Quidam vero, ut Celsus, de nulla re dicturum oratorem, nisi de qua quaeratur, existimant, cui cum maxima pars scriptorum repugnat tum etiam ipsa partitio; nisi forte laudare, quae constet esse honesta, et vituperare, quae ex confesso sint turpia, non est oratoris officium.

4 Illud iam omnes fatentur, esse quaestiones aut in scripto aut in non scripto; in scripto de iure, in non scripto de re. Illud rationale hoc legale genus Hermagoras atque eum secuti vocant, id est νομικόν
5 et λογικόν. Idem sentiunt, qui omnem quaestionem ponunt in rebus et in verbis.

Item convenit, quaestiones esse aut infinitas aut finitas. Infinitae sunt, quae remotis personis et temporibus et locis ceterisque similibus in utramque partem tractantur, quod Graeci θέσω dicunt, Cicero propositum, alii quaestiones universales civiles, alii quaestiones philosopho convenientes, Athenaeus 6 partem causae appellat. Hoc genus Cicero scientia et actione distinguit, ut sit scientiae, An providentia

¹ Top. xxi. 79.

² Top. 81; Part. Or. xviii. 62.

since both of these will not always be present in the subjects which we shall have to treat. For some themes are far from calling for any appeal to the emotions, which, although room cannot always be found for them, produce a most powerful effect wherever they do succeed in forcing their way. The 3 best authorities hold that there are some things in oratory which require proof and others which do not, a view with which I agree. Some on the other hand, as for instance Celsus, think that the orator will not speak on any subject unless there is some question involved in it; but the majority of writers on rhetoric are against him, as is also the threefold division of oratory, unless indeed to praise what is allowed to be honourable and to denounce what is admittedly disgraceful are no part of an orator's duty.

It is, however, universally agreed that all questions 4 must be concerned either with something that is written or something that is not. Those concerned with what is written are questions of law, those which concern what is not written are questions of fact. Herma-goras calls the latter rational questions, the former legal questions, for so we may translate λογικόν and νομικόν. Those who hold that every question con- 5 cerns either things or words, mean much the same.

It is also agreed that questions are either definite or indefinite. Indefinite questions are those which may be maintained or impugned without reference to persons, time or place and the like. The Greeks call them theses, Cicero¹ propositions, others general questions relating to civil life, others again questions suited for philosophical discussion, while Athenaeus calls them parts of a cause. Cicero² distinguishes two kinds, 6 the one concerned with knowledge, the other with action. Thus "Is the world governed by promundus regatur; actionis, An accedendum ad rempublicam administrandam. Prius trium generum, an sit? quid sit? quale sit? omnia enim haec ignorari possunt; sequens duorum, quo modo adipiscamur?

QUINTILIAN

7 quo modo utamur? Finitae autem sunt ex complexu rerum, personarum, temporum, ceterorumque; hae ὑποθέσεις a Graecis dicuntur, causae a nostris. In his omnis quaestio videtur circa res personasque

8 consistere. Amplior est semper infinita, inde enim finita descendit. Quod ut exemplo pateat, infinita est, An uxor ducenda? finita, An Catoni ducenda? ideoque esse suasoria potest. Sed etiam remotae a personis propriis ad aliquid referri solent. Est enim

9 simplex, An respublica administranda? refertur ad aliquid, An in tyrannide administranda? Sed hic quoque subest velut latens persona; tyrannus enim geminat quaestionem, subestque et temporis et qualitatis tacita vis; nondum tamen hoc proprie dixeris causam. Hae autem, quas infinitas voco, et generales appellantur; quod si est verum, finitae

10 inest generalis, ut quae sit prior. Ac nescio an in causis quoque, quidquid in quaestionem venit quali-vidence?" is a question of knowledge, while "Should we enter politics?" is a question of action. The first involves three questions, whether a thing is, what it is, and of what nature: for all these things may be unknown: the second involves two, how to obtain power and how to use it. Definite 7 questions involve facts, persons, time and the like. The Greeks call them hypotheses, while we call them causes. In these the whole question turns on persons and facts. An indefinite question is always the 8 more comprehensive, since it is from the indefinite question that the definite is derived. I will illustrate what I mean by an example. The question "Should a man marry?" is indefinite; the question "Should Cato marry?" is definite, and consequently may be regarded as a subject for a deliberative theme. But even those which have no connexion with particular persons are generally given a specific reference. For instance the question "Ought we to take a share in the government of our country?" is abstract, whereas "Ought we to take part in the government of our country under the sway of a tyrant?" has a specific reference. But in this latter case we may 9 say that a person is tacitly implied. For the mention of a tyrant doubles the question, and there is an implicit admission of time and quality; but all the same you would scarcely be justified in calling it a cause or definite question. Those questions which I have styled indefinite are also called general: if this is correct, we shall have to call definite questions special questions. But in every special question the general question is implicit, since the genus is logically prior to the species. And perhaps 10 even in actual causes wherever the notion of quality comes into question, there is a certain intrusion of tatis, generale sit. Milo Clodium occidit, iure occidit insidiatorem; nonne hoc quaeritur, An sit ius insidiatorem occidendi? Quid in coniecturis? non illa generalia, An causa sceleris odium? cupiditas? An tormentis credendum? Testibus an argumentis maior fides habenda? Nam finitione quidem comprehendi 11 nihil non in universum certum erit. Quidam putant etiam eas thesises posse aliquando nominari, quae personis causisque contineantur, aliter tantummodo positas: ut causa sit, cum Orestes accusatur: thesis, An Orestes recte sit absolutus; cuius generis est, An Cato recte Marciam Hortensio tradiderit. Hi thesises a causa sic distinguunt, ut illa sit spectativae partis, haec activae; illic enim veritatis tantum gratia disputari, hic negotium agi.

QUINTILIAN

12 Quanquam inutiles quidam oratori putant universales quaestiones, quia nihil prosit, quod constet ducendam esse uxorem vel administrandam rempublicam, si quis vel aetate vel valetudine impediatur. Sed non omnibus eiusmodi quaestionibus sic occurri potest, ut illis, sitne virtus finis? regaturne provi-13 dentia mundus? Quin etiam in iis, quae ad per-the abstract. "Milo killed Clodius: he was justified in killing one who lay in wait for him." Does not this raise the general question as to whether we have the right to kill a man who lies in wait for us? What again of conjectures? May not they be of a general character, as for instance, "What was the motive for the crime? hatred? covetousness?" or "Are we justified in believing confessions made under torture?" or "Which should carry greater weight, evidence or argument?" As for definitions, everything that they contain is undoubtedly of a general nature. There are some who hold that even those 11 questions which have reference to persons and particular cases may at times be called theses, provided only they are put slightly differently: for instance, if Orestes be accused, we shall have a cause: whereas if it is put as question, namely "Was Orestes rightly acquitted?" it will be a thesis. To the same class as this last belongs the question "Was Cato right in transferring Marcia to Hortensius?" These persons distinguish a thesis from a cause as follows: a thesis is theoretical in character, while a cause has relation to actual facts, since in the former case we argue merely with a view to abstract truth, while in the latter we have to deal with some particular act.

Some, however, think that general questions are 12 useless to an orator, since no profit is to be derived from proving that we ought to marry or to take part in politics, if we are prevented from so doing by age or ill health. But not all general questions are liable to this kind of objection. For instance questions such as "Is virtue an end in itself?" or "Is the world governed by providence?" cannot be countered in this way. Further in questions 13

QUINTILIAN

- sonam referuntur, ut non est satis generalem tractasse quaestionem, ita perveniri ad speciem nisi illa prius excussa non potest. Nam quomodo, an sibi uxor ducenda sit, deliberabit Cato, nisi constiterit, uxores esse ducendas? Et quomodo, an ducere debeat Marciam, quaeretur, nisi Catoni ducenda uxor est?
- 14 Sunt tamen inscripti nomine Hermagorae libri, qui confirmant illam opinionem, sive falsus est titulus sive alius hic Hermagoras fuit. Nam eiusdem esse quomodo possunt, qui de hac arte mirabiliter multa composuit, cum, sicut ex Ciceronis quoque rhetorico primo manifestum est, materiam rhetorices in thesis et causas diviserit? Quod reprehendit Cicero ac thesin nihil ad oratorem pertinere contendit totumque hoc genus quaestionis ad philosophos refert.
- 15 Sed me liberavit respondendi verecundia, et quod ipse hos libros improbat, et quod in Oratore atque his, quos de Oratore scripsit, et Topicis praecipit, ut a propriis personis atque temporibus avocemus controversiam: quia latius dicere liceat de genere quam de specie, et, quod in universo probatum sit, in parte
- 16 probatum esse necesse sit. Status autem in hoc omne genus materiae iidem, qui in causas, cadunt. Adhuc adiicitur, alias esse quaestiones in rebus ipsis,

¹ de Inv. i. 6. ² Orator xiv. 45

³ de Or. iii. 30; Top. 21.

which have reference to a particular person, although it is not sufficient merely to handle the general question, we cannot arrive at any conclusion on the special point until we have first discussed the general question. For how is Cato to deliberate "whether he personally is to marry," unless the general question "whether marriage is desirable" is first settled? And how is he to deliberate "whether he should marry Marcia," unless it is proved that it is the duty of Cato to marry? There are, however, certain books attributed to Hermagoras which support this erroneous opinion, though whether the attribution is spurious or whether they were written by another Hermagoras is an open question. For they cannot possibly be by the famous Hermagoras, who wrote so much that was admirable on the art of rhetoric, since, as is clear from the first book of the Rhetorica of Cicero,¹ he divided the material of rhetoric into theses and causes. Cicero objects to this division, contends that theses have nothing to do with an orator, and refers all this class of questions to the philosophers. But Cicero has relieved me of any feeling of shame that I might have in controverting his opinion, since he has not only expressed his disapproval of his Rhetorica, but in the Orator,² the de Oratore and the *Topica*³ instructs us to abstract such discussions from particular persons and occasions, "because we can speak more fully on general than on special themes, and because what is proved of the whole must also be proved of the part." In all general questions, however, the essential basis is the same as in a cause or definite question. It is further pointed out that there are some questions which alias quae ad aliquid referantur: illud, An uxor ducenda? hoc, An seni ducenda? illud, An fortis? hoc, An fortior? et similia.

QUINTILIAN

- 17 Causam finit Apollodorus, ut interpretatione Valgi discipuli eius utar, ita: Causa est negotium omnibus suis partibus spectans ad quaestionem; aut: Causa est negotium, cuius finis est controversia. Ipsum deinde negotium sic finit: Negotium est congregatio personarum, locorum, temporum, causarum, modorum, casuum, factorum, instrumentorum, sermonum, scriptorum et non 18 scriptorum. Causam nunc intelligamus ἰπóθεσις, negotium περίστασις. Sed et ipsam causam quidam similiter finierunt, ut Apollodorus negotium. Isocrates autem causam esse ait quaestionem finitam civilem aut rem controversam in personarum finitarum complexu; Cicero his verbis: Causa certis personis, locis, temporibus, actionibus, negotiis cernitur, aut in omnibus aut in plerisque eorum.

VI. Ergo cum omnis causa contineatur aliquo statu, priusquam dicere aggredior, quo modo genus concern "things in themselves," while others have a particular reference; an example of the former will be the question "Should a man marry?" of the latter "Should an old man marry?"; or again the question whether a man is brave will illustrate the first, while the question whether he is braver than another will exemplify the second.

¹ Fr. 13 Sheehan.

² Top. xxi. 80.

³ This chapter is highly technical and of little interest for the most part to any save professed students of the technique of the ancient schools of rhetoric. Its apparent obscurity will, however, be found to disappear on careful analysis. The one passage of general interest it contains is to be found in the extremely ingenious fictitious theme discussed in sections 96 sqq.

Apollodorus defines a cause in the following terms 17 (I quote the translation of his pupil Valgius):—"A cause is a matter which in all its parts bears on the question at issue," or again "a cause is a matter of which the question in dispute is the object." He then defines a matter in the following terms:—"A matter is a combination of persons, circumstances of place and time, motives, means, incidents, acts, instruments, speeches, the letter and the spirit of the law. Let us then understand a cause in the sense of 18 the Greek hypothesis or subject, and a matter in the sense of the Greek peristasis or collection of circumstances. But some, however, have defined a cause in the same way that Apollodorus defines a matter. Isocrates¹ on the other hand defines a cause as some definite question concerned with some point of civil affairs, or a dispute in which definite persons are involved; while Cicero² uses the following words:—"A cause may be known by its being concerned with certain definite persons, circumstances of time and place, actions, and business, and will relate either to all or at any rate to most of these."

VI.³ Since every cause, then, has a certain essential *basis*⁴ on which it rests, before I proceed to set forth how each kind of cause should be handled, I think I ⁴ There is no exact English equivalent for status. Basis or ground are perhaps the nearest equivalents.

quodque causae sit tractandum, id quod est commune omnibus, quid sit status et unde ducatur et quot et qui sint, intuendum puto. Quanquam id nonnulli ad iudiciales tantum pertinere materias putaverunt, quorum insecitiam, cum omnia tria genera
 2 fuero exsecutus, res ipsa deprehendet. Quod nos statum, id quidam constitutionem vocant, alii quaestionem, alii quod ex quaestione appareat, Theodorus caput id est κεφάλαιον γενικώτατον, ad quod referantur omnia. Quorum diversa appellatio, vis eadem est; nec interest discentium, quibus quidque nominibus
 3 appelletur, dum res ipsa manifesta sit. Statum Graeci στάσις vocant, quod nomen non primum ab Hermagora traditum putant, sed alii ab Naucrante, Isocratis discipulo, alii a Zopyro Clazomenio; quanquam videtur Aeschines quoque in oratione contra Ctesiphontem uti hoc verbo, cum a iudicibus petit, ne Demostheni permittant evagari, sed eum dicere
 4 de ipso causae statu cogant. Quae appellatio dicitur ducta vel ex eo, quod ibi sit primus causae congressus, vel quod in hoc causa consistat. Et nominis quidem haec origo; nunc quid sit. Statum quidam dixerunt primam causarum conflictionem; quos recte sensisse, 5 parum eloquos puto. Non enim est status prima conflictio, fecisti, non feci; sed quod ex prima con-

¹ § 206.

should first examine a question that is common to all of them, namely, what is meant by basis, whence it is derived and how many and of what nature such bases may be. Some, it is true, have thought that they were peculiar merely to forensic themes, but their ignorance will stand revealed when I have treated of all three kinds of oratory. That which I call the basis some style the constitution, others the question, and others again that which may be inferred from the question, while Theodorus calls it the most general head, κεφάλαιον γενικώτατον, to which everything must be referred. These different names, however, all mean the same thing, nor is it of the least importance to students by what special name things are called, as long as the thing itself is perfectly clear. The Greeks call this essential basis στάσις, a name which they hold was not invented by Hermagoras, but according to some was introduced by Naucrates, the pupil of Isocrates, according to others by Zopyrus of Clazomenae, although Aeschines in his speech against Ctesiphon¹ seems to employ the word, when he asks the jury not to allow Demosthenes to be irrelevant but to keep him to the stasis or basis of the case. The term seems to be derived from the fact that it is on it that the first collision between the parties to the dispute takes place, or that it forms the basis or standing of the whole case. So much for the origin of the name. Now for its nature. Some have defined the basis as being the first conflict of the causes. The idea is correct, but the expression is faulty. For the essential basis is not the first conflict, which we may represent by the clauses "You did such and such a thing" and "I did not do it." It is rather the kind of question which arises from the first conflict, flictione nascitur, id est genus quaestionis, fecisti, non feci, an fecerit? Hoc fecisti, non hoc feci, quid fecerit? Quia ex his apparet, illud coniectura, hoc finitione quaerendum, atque in eo pars utraque insistit, erit 6 quaestio coniecturalis vel finitivi status. Quid si enim dicat quis, sonus est duorum inter se corporum conflictio: erret, ut opinor, non enim sonus est conflictio sed ex conflictione. Sed hoc levius; intelligitur enim utcumque dictum. Inde vero ingens male interpretantibus innatus est error, qui, quia primam conflictionem legerant, crediderunt statum semper ex prima quaestione ducendum; quod est

QUINTILIAN

7 vitiosissimum. Nam quaestio nulla non habet utique statum, constat enim ex intentione et depulsione; sed aliae sunt propriae causarum, de quibus ferenda sententia est, aliae adductae extrinsecus, aliquid tamen ad summam causae conferentes, velut auxilia quaedam, quo fit ut in controversia una plures quae-
8 stiones esse dicantur. Harum porro plerumque levissima quaeque primo loco fungitur. Namque et illud frequens est, ut ea, quibus minus confidimus, cum tractata sunt, omittamus, interim sponte nostra which we may represent as follows. "You did it," "I did not," "Did he do it?," or "You did this," "I did not do this," "What did he do?" It is clear from these examples, that the first sort of question depends on conjecture, the second on definition, and that the contending parties rest their respective cases on these points: the bases of these questions will therefore be of a conjectural or definitive character respectively. Suppose it should be asserted that 6 sound is the conflict between two bodies, the statement would in my opinion be erroneous. For sound is not the actual conflict, but a result of the conflict. The error is, however, of small importance: for the sense is clear, whatever the expression. But this trivial mistake has given rise to a very serious error in the minds of those who have not understood what was meant: for on reading that the essential basis was the first conflict, they immediately concluded that the basis was always to be taken from the first question, which is a grave mistake. For every question has 7 its basis, since every question is based on assertion by one party and denial by another. But there are some questions which form an essential part of causes, and it is on these that we have to express an opinion; while others are introduced from without and are, strictly speaking, irrelevant, although they may contribute something of a subsidiary nature to the general contention. It is for this reason that there are said to be several questions in one matter of dispute. Of these questions it is often the most 8 trivial which occupies the first place. For it is a frequent artifice to drop those points in which we place least confidence, as soon as we have dealt with them; sometimes we make a free gift of them to our velut donantes, interim ad ea quae sunt potentiora 9 gradum ex iis fecisse contenti. Simplex autem causa etiamsi varie defenditur, non potest habere plus uno, de quo pronuntietur, atque inde erit status causae, quod et orator praecipue sibi obtinendum et iudex spectandum maxime intelligit; in hoc enim causa consistet. Ceterum quaestionum possunt esse 10 diversi. Quod ut brevissimo pateat exemplo: cum dicit reus, Etiamsi feci, recte feci, qualitatis utitur statu; cum adiicit, sed non feci, coniecturam movet.

 Semper autem firmitus est non fecisse, ideoque in eo statum esse iudicabo, quod dicerem, si mihi plus 11 quam unum dicere non liceret. Recte igitur est appellata causarum prima conflictio non quaestionum.
 Nam et pro Rabirio Postumo Cicero prima parte orationis in hoc intendit, ut actionem competere in equitem Romanum neget; secunda, nullam ad eum pecuniam pervenisse confirmat. Statum tamen in 12 eo dicam fuisse, quod est potentius. Nec in causa Milonis circa primas quaestiones¹ iudicabo conflixisse causam, sed ubi totis viribus insidiator Clodius ideoque iure interfectus ostenditur. Et hoc est, quod ante omnia constituere in animo suo debeat orator, etiamsi

¹ After quaestiones the MSS. continue quae sunt ante prooemium positae. The words as they stand are absurd. Halm therefore brackets the whole sentence as interpolated. The alternative is to read post (Regius) or ante pro prooemio (Baden), for which cp. iv. ii 25 sq., where Quintilian states that these primae quaestiones have the "force of an exordium" (rim prooemii).

opponents, while sometimes we are content to use them as a step to arguments which are of greater importance. A simple cause, however, although it 9 may be defended in various ways, cannot have more than one point on which a decision has to be given, and consequently the basis of the cause will be that point which the orator sees to be the most important for him to make and on which the judge sees that he must fix all his attention. For it is on this that the cause will stand or fall. On the other hand questions may have more bases than one.¹ A brief example 10 will show what I mean. When the accused says "Admitting that I did it, I was right to do it," he makes the basis one of quality; but when he adds "but I did not do it," he introduces an element of conjecture.² But denial of the facts is always the stronger line of defence, and therefore I conceive the basis to reside in that which I should say, if I were confined to one single line of argument. We are 11 right therefore in speaking of the first conflict of causes in contradistinction to the conflict of questions. For instance in the first portion of his speech on behalf of Rabirius Postumus Cicero contends that the action cannot lie against a Roman knight, while in the second he asserts that no money ever came into his client's hands. Still I should say that the basis was to be found in the latter as being the stronger of the two. Again in the case of Milo I do not consider 12 that the conflict is raised by the opening questions, but only when the orator devotes all his powers to prove that Clodius lay in wait for Milo and was therefore rightly killed. The point on which above all the orator must make up his mind, even although he may be going to pro causa plura dicturus est, quid maxime liquere iudici velit. Quod tamen ut primum cogitandum, ita non utique primum dicendum erit.

¹ See § 21.² See § 30 sqq.

QUINTILIAN

- 13 Alii statum crediderunt primam eius, cum quo ageretur, deprecationem. Quam sententiam his verbis Cicero complectitur: in quo primum insistit quasi ad repugnandum congressa defensio. Unde rursus alia quaestio, an cum semper is faciat qui respondet. Cui rei praecipue repugnat Cornelius Celsus dicens non a depulsione sumi, sed ab eo qui propositionem suam confirmet; ut, si hominem occisum reus negat, status ab accusatore nascatur, quia is velit probare; si iure occisum reus dicit, translata probationis ne-
- 14 cessitate idem a reo fiat, et sit eius intentio. Cui non accedo equidem; nam est vero propius quod contra dicitur, nullam esse litem, si is, cum quo agatur, nihil respondeat, ideoque fieri statum a re-
- 15 spondente. Mea tamen sententia varium id est, et accidit pro conditione causarum, quia et videri potest propositio aliquando statum facere, ut in coniecturalibus causis; utitur enim coniectura magis qui agit, (quo moti quidam eundem a reo infitiam esse dixerunt) et in syllogismo tota ratiocinatio ab eo est take up various lines of argument in support of his case, is this: what is it that he wishes most to impress upon the mind of the judge? But although this should be the first point for his consideration, it does not follow that it should be the first that he will make in his actual speech.

¹ Top. xxv. 93.

² i.e. where the law forms the major premiss, while the minor premiss is the act which is brought under the law.

Others have thought that the basis lay in the first point raised by the other side in its defence. Cicero¹ expresses this view in the following words:—"the argument on which the defence first takes its stand with a view to rebutting the charge." This involves a further question as to whether the basis can only be determined by the defence. Cornelius Celsus is strongly against this view, and asserts that the basis is derived not from the denial of the charge, but from him who affirms his proposition. Thus if the accused denies that anyone has been killed, the basis will originate with the accuser, because it is the latter who desires to prove: if on the other hand the accused asserts that the homicide was justifiable, the burden of proof has been transferred and the basis will proceed from the accused and be affirmed by him. I do not, however, agree. For the contrary is nearer to the truth, that there is no point of dispute if the defendant makes no reply, and that consequently the basis originates with the defendant. But in my opinion the origin of the basis varies and depends on the circumstances of the individual case. For instance in conjectural causes the affirmation may be regarded as determining the basis, since conjecture is employed by the plaintiff rather than the defendant, and consequently some have styled the basis originated by the latter negative. Again in any *sylogism*² the whole of the reasoning proceeds from him who

QUINTILIAN

16 qui intendit. Sed quia videtur illic quoque necessitatem hos status exsequendi facere qui negat, (is enim si dicat, non feci, coget adversarium coniectura uti; et si dicat, non habes legem, syllogismo) concedamus ex depulsione nasci statum. Nihilominus enim res eo revertetur, ut modo is qui agit, modo is 17 cum quo agitur, statum faciat. Sit enim accusatoris intentio, Hominem occidisti. Si negat reus, faciat statum qui negat. Quid si confitetur, sed iure a se adulterum dicit occisum? nempe legem esse certum est quae permittat. Nisi aliquid accusator respondet, nulla lis est. Non fuit, inquit, adulter; ergo depulsio incipit esse actoris, ille statum faciet. Ita erit quidem status ex prima depulsione, sed ea fiet ab 18 accusatore non a reo. Quid? quod eadem quaestio potest eundem vel accusatorem facere vel reum: Qui artem ludicram exercuerit, in quattuordecim primis ordinibus ne sedeat; qui se praetori in hortis ostenderat neque erat productus, sedit in quattuordecim 19 ordinibus. Nempe intentio est: Artem ludicram exercuisti; depulsio: Non exercui artem ludicram;

¹ Conjectural causes and the syllogism.

² Reserved for equites.

affirms. But on the other hand he who in such cases¹ 16 denies appears to impose the burden of dealing with such bases upon his opponent. For if he says "I did not do it," he will force his opponent to make use of con- jecture, and again, if he says "The law is against you," he will force him to employ the sylogism. Therefore we must admit that a basis can originate in denial.
All the same we are left with our previous conclusion that the basis is determined in some cases by the plaintiff, in some by the defendant. Suppose the 17 accuser to affirm that the accused is guilty of homicide: if the accused denies the charge, it is he who will determine the basis. Or again, if he admits that he has killed a man, but states that the victim was an adulterer and justifiably killed (and we know that the law permits homicide under these circumstances), there is no matter in dispute, unless the accuser has some answer to make. Suppose the accuser does answer however and deny that the victim was guilty of adultery, it will be the accuser that denies, and it is by him that the basis is determined. The basis, then, will originate in the first denial of facts, but that denial is made by the accuser and not the accused. Again the same question may make the 18 same person either accuser or accused. "He who has exercised the profession of an actor, is under no circumstances to be allowed a seat in the first fourteen rows of the theatre."² An individual who had performed before the praetor in his private gardens, but had never been presented on the public stage, has taken his seat in one of the fourteen rows. The 19 accuser of course affirms that he has exercised the profession of an actor: the accused denies that he has exercised the profession. The question then arises

QUINTILIAN

quaestio: Quid sit artem ludicram exercere? Si accusabitur theatri lege, depulsio erit rei; si excitatus fuerit de spectaculis et aget iniuriarum, depulsio erit 20 accusatoris. Frequentius tamen illud accidet, quod est a plurimis traditum. Effugerunt has quaestiones qui dixerunt, statum esse id, quod appareat ex intentione et depulsione, ut Fecisti, Non feci aut Recte
21 feci. Viderimus tamen, utrum id sit status an in eo status. Hermagoras statum vocat, per quem subiecta res intelligatur et ad quem probationes etiam partium referantur. Nostra opinio semper haec fuit: cum essent frequenter in causa diversi quaestionum status, in eo credere statum causae, quod esset in ea potentissimum et in quo maxime res verteretur. Id si quis generalem quaestionem vel caput generale dicere malet cum hoc mihi non erit pugna, non magis, quam si aliud adhuc, quo idem intelligatur, eius rei nomen invenerit, quanquam tota volumina in hanc disputationem impendisse multos sciam; nobis statum dici 22 placet. Sed cum in aliis omnibus inter scriptores summa dissensio est, tum in hoc praecipue videtur mihi studium quoque diversa tradendi fuisse; adeo, nec qui sit numerus nec quae nomina nec qui generales quive speciales sint status, convenit.

¹ i.e. that the defendant makes the basis or status. See § 13.

as to the meaning of the "exercise of the profession of actor." If he is accused under the law regarding the seats in the theatre, the denial will proceed from the accused; if on the other hand he is turned out of the theatre and demands compensation for assault, the denial will be made by the accuser. The view 20 of the majority of writers¹ on this subject will, however, hold good in most cases. Some have evaded these problems by saying that a basis is that which emerges from affirmations and denials, such as "You did it," "I did not do it," or "I was justified in doing it." But let us see whether this is the basis 21 itself or rather that in which the basis is to be found. Hermagoras calls a basis that which enables the matter in question to be understood and to which the proofs of the parties concerned will also be directed. My own opinion has always been that, whereas there are frequently different bases of questions in connexion with a cause, the basis of the cause itself is its most important point on which the whole matter turns. If anyone prefers to call that the general question or general head of the cause, I shall not quarrel with him, any more than I have done hitherto if he produced a different technical term to express the same thing, although I know that whole volumes have been written on such disputes. I prefer however to call it the basis. There is the greatest possible disagree- 22 ment among writers about this as about everything else, but in this case as elsewhere they seem to me to have been misled by a passion for saying something different from their fellow-teachers. As a result there is still no agreement as to the number and names of bases, nor as to which are general and which special.

- 23 Ae primum Aristoteles elementa decem constituit, circa quae versari videatur omnis quaestio. Ὀσίαρ, quam Plautus essentiam vocat, neque sane aliud est eius nomen Latinum; sed ea quaeritur, an sit. Qualitatem, cuius apertus intellectus est. Quantitatem, quae dupliciter a posterioribus divisa est, quam magnum et quam multum sit? Ad aliquid,
- 24 unde ducta est translatio et comparatio. Post haec Ubi et Quando; deinde Facere, Pati, Habere, quod est quasi armatum esse, vestitum esse. Novissime κῆσθαι, quod est compositum esse quodam modo, ut calere, stare, irasci. Sed ex iis omnibus prima quatuor ad status pertinere, cetera ad quosdam locos
- 25 argumentorum videntur. Alii novem elementa posuerunt, Personam, in qua de animo, corpore, extra positus quaeratur, quod pertinere ad coniecturae et qualitatis instrumenta video. Tempus, quod χρόνον vocant, ex quo quaestio, an is quem, dum addicta est, mater peperit, servus sit natus. Locum, unde controversia videtur, an fas fuerit tyrannum in templo occidere. An exulaverit, qui domi latuit.
- 26 Tempus iterum, quod καίρον appellant; hanc autem videri volunt speciem illius temporis, ut aestatem

¹ Categ. ii. 7.

² See §§ 52, 68 sqq., 84-86, which make the meaning of translatio fairly clear. No exact rendering is satisfactory. Literally it means "transference of the charge"; the sense is virtually the same as that of exceptio (a plea made by defendant in bar of plaintiff's action). "Exception" is

To begin with Aristotle¹ lays down that there are 23 ten categories on which every question seems to turn. First there is οὐσία, which Plautus calls essence, the only available translation: under this category we inquire whether a thing is. Secondly there is quality, the meaning of which is self-evident. Third comes quantity, which was subdivided by later philosophers as dealing with two questions as to magnitude and number. Next relation, involving questions of *competence*² and comparison. This is followed by when and where. Then come doing, suffering and possessing, 24 which for example are concerned with a person's being armed or clothed. Lastly comes κείσθαι or position, which means to be in a certain position, such for instance as being warm, standing or angry. Of these categories the first four concern bases, the remainder concern only certain topics for argument. Others 25 make the number of categories to be nine. Person, involving questions concerning the mind, body or external circumstances, which clearly has reference to the means by which we establish conjecture or quality. Time, or χρόνος, from which we get questions such as whether a child is born a slave, if his mother is delivered of him while assigned³ to her creditors. Place, from which we get such disputes as to whether it is permissible to kill a tyrant in a temple, or whether one who has hidden himself at home can be regarded as an exile. Then comes time in another 26 sense, called καιρός by the Greeks, by which they refer to a period of time, such as summer or winter; too unfamiliar and technical a term. "Competence," despite its vagueness, is perhaps the least unsatisfactory rendering.

³ addicti were not technically servi, though in a virtual condition of servitude, being the bondsmen of their creditors till their debt was paid.

QUINTILIAN

- vel hiemem ; huic subiicitur ille in pestilentia comisator. Actum, id est πρᾶξις, quod eo referunt, sciens commiserit an insciens? necessitate an casu? et talia. Numerum, qui cadit in speciem quantitatis, an Thrasibulo triginta praemia debeantur, quia tot tyrannos
- 27 sustulerit? Causam, cui plurimae subiacent lites, quotiens factum non negatur, sed quia iusta ratione sit factum, defenditur. Τρόπον, cum id, quod alio modo fieri licet, alio dicitur factum; hinc est adulter loris caesus vel fame necatus. Occasionem factorum, quod est apertius, quam ut vel interpretandum vel exemplo sit demonstrandum, tamen ἀφορμὰς ἔργων
- 28 vocant. Hi quoque nullam quaestionem extra haec putant. Quidam detrahunt duas partes, numerum et occasionem, et pro illo quod dixi actum subiiciunt res, id est πράγματα. Quae ne praeterisse viderer, satis habui attingere. Ceterum his nec status satis ostendi nec omnes contineri locos credo, quod apparbit diligentius legentibus, quae de utraque re dicam. Erunt enim plura multo, quam quae his elementis comprehenduntur.
- 29 Apud plures auctores legi, placuisse quibusdam, unum omnino statum esse coniecturalem. Sed

¹ There is no other reference to this theme.

² An adulterer caught flagrante delicto might be killed by the husband or beaten. But to starve him to death in cold blood would be illegal.

under this heading come problems such as that about the man who held high revel in a time of pestilence.¹ Action or πρᾶξις, to which they refer questions as to whether an act was committed wittingly or unwittingly, by accident or under compulsion and the like. Number, which falls under the category of quantity, under which come questions such as whether the state owes Thrasybulus thirty talents for ridding it of the same number of tyrants. Cause, under which 27 heading come a large number of disputes, whenever a fact is not denied, but the defence pleads that the act was just and reasonable. Τρόπος or manner, which is involved when a thing is said to have been done in one way when it might have been done in another: under this category come cases of such as that of the adulterer who is scourged with thongs or starved to death.² Opportunity for action, the meaning of which is too obvious to need explanation or illustration: the Greeks however call it ἔργων ἀφορμαί. These 28 authorities like Aristotle hold that no question can arise which does not come under one of these heads. Some subtract two of them, namely number and opportunity, and substitute for what I have called action, things, or in Greek πράγματα. I have thought it sufficient to notice these doctrines, for fear someone might complain of their omission. Still I do not consider that bases are sufficiently determined by these categories, nor that the latter cover every possible kind of topic, as will be clear to any that read carefully what I have to say on both points. For there will be found to be many topics that are not covered by these categories.

I find it stated in many authors that some rhe- 29 toricians only recognise one kind of basis, the con-

QUINTILIAN

- quibus placuerit, neque illi tradiderunt neque ego usquam reperire potui. Rationem tamen hanc secuti dicuntur, quod res omnis signis colligeretur. Quo modo licet qualitatis quoque solum statum faciant, quia ubique, qualis sit cuiusque rei natura, quaeri potest. Sed utrocunq; modo sequetur summa confusio. Neque interest, unum quis statum faciat an nullum, si omnes causae sunt condicionis eiusdem. Coniectura dicta est a coniectu, id est directione quadam rationis ad veritatem, unde etiam somniorum atque ominum interpretes coniectores vocantur. Appellatum tamen est hoc genus varie, sicut sequentibus apparebit.
- 31 Fuerunt, qui duos status facerent: Archedemus coniecturalem et finitivum, exclusa qualitate, quia sic de ea quaeri existimabat, quid esset iniquum, quid iniustum, quid dicto audientem non esse;
- 32 quod vocat de eodem et alio. Huic diversa sententia eorum fuit, qui duos quidem status esse voluerunt, sed unum infitiale, alterum iuridiciale. Infitialis est, quem dicimus coniecturalem, cui ab infitiando nomen alii in totum dederunt, alii in partem, quia accusatorem coniectura, reum infitiatione uti putaverunt.
- 33 Iuridicialis est qui Graece dicitur δικαιολογικός. Sed quemadmodum ab Archedemo qualitas exclusa est, sic ab his repudiata finitio. Nam subiijectural. But they have not mentioned who these rhetoricians are nor have I been able to discover. They are however stated to have taken this view on the ground that all our knowledge is a matter of inference from indications. On this line of reasoning they might regard all bases as qualitative, because we inquire into the nature of the subject in every case. But the adoption of either view leads to inextricable confusion. Nor does it matter whether one 30 recognises only one kind of basis or none at all, if all causes are of the same nature. Coniectura is derived from conicere "to throw together," because it implies the concentration of the reason on the truth. For this reason interpreters of dreams and all other phenomena are called coniectores "conjecturers." But the conjectural basis has received more names than one, as will appear in the sequel.

¹ Fr. II, Arnim.

² i.e. the question may be stated "Does it conform to our conception of injustice or is it something different?" Questions of quality are regarded as questions of definition.

Some have recognised only two bases. Archedemus¹ for instance admits only the conjectural and definitive and refuses to admit the qualitative, since he held that questions of quality take the form of "What is unfair? what is unjust? what is disobedience?" which he terms questions about identity and difference.² A different view was held by those who 32 likewise only admitted two bases, but made them the negative and juridical. The negative basis is identical with that which we call the conjectural, to which some give the name of negative absolutely, others only in part, these latter holding that conjecture is employed by the accuser, denial only by the accused. The juridical is that known in Greek as 33 δικαιολογικός. But just as Archedemus would not recognise the qualitative basis, so these reject the definitive which they include in the juridical, holding ciunt eam iuridiciali, quaerendumque arbitrantur iustumne sit, sacrilegium appellari quod obiiciatur 34 vel furtum vel amentiam. Qua in opinione Pam-philus fuit, sed qualitatem in plura partitus est; plurimi deinceps, mutatis tantum nominibus, in rem de qua constet, et in rem de qua non constet. Nam est verum nec aliter fieri potest, quam ut aut certum sit factum esse quid aut non sit; si non est certum, coniectura sit, si certum est, reliqui status.

QUINTILIAN

 35 Nam idem dicit Apollodorus, cum quaestionem aut in rebus extra positis, quibus coniectura explicatur, aut in nostris opinionibus existimat positam, quorum illud πραγματικόν, ἵος περὶ ἐννοίας vocat; idem, qui ἀπρόληπτον et προληπτικόν dicunt, id est dubium et 36 praesumptum, quo significatur de quo liquet. Idem Theodorus, qui de eo, An sit, et de accidentibus ei quod esse constat, id est περὶ οὐσίας καὶ συμβεβηκότων, existimat quaeri. Nam in his omnibus prius genus coniecturam habet, sequens reliqua. Sed haec reliqua Apollodorus duo vult esse, qualitatem et de nomine, id est finitivam; Theodorus, quid, quale, 37 quantum, ad aliquid. Sunt et qui de eodem et de alio modo qualitatem esse modo finitionem velint.

¹ e.g. circumstantial evidence.

² ἀπρόληπτός lit. = unpresumed.

that in these questions we have to enquire whether it is just that the act with which the accused is charged should be called sacrilege or theft or madness. Pamphilus held this opinion but subdivided quality into several different species. The majority of later writers have classified bases as follows, involving however no more than a change of names:— those dealing with ascertained facts and those dealing with matters where there is a doubt. For a thing must either be certain or uncertain: if it is uncertain, the basis will be conjectural; if certain, it will be some one of the other bases. Apollodorus says the same thing when he states that a question must either lie in things external,¹ which give play to conjecture, or in our own opinions: the former he calls πραγματικός, the latter περὶ ἐννοίας. The same is said by those who employ the terms *ἀπροληπτός*² and προληπτικός, that is to say doubtful and presumptive, by this latter term meaning those facts which are beyond a doubt. Theodorus agrees with them, for he holds that the question is either as to whether such and such a thing is really so, or is concerned with the accidents of something which is an admitted fact: that is to say it is either περὶ οὐσίας or περὶ συμβεβηκότων. For in all these cases the first basis is conjectural, while the second belongs to one of the other classes. As for these other classes of basis, Apollodorus holds that there are two, one concerned with quality and the other with the names of things, that is to say a definitive basis. Theodorus makes them four, concerned with existence, quality, quantity and relation. There are some too who make questions of identity and difference come under the head of quality, others who place it under the head

QUINTILIAN

In duo et Posidonius dividit, vocem et res. In voce quaeri putat an significet, quid, quam multa, quo modo? in rebus coniecturam, quod κατ' αἴσθησιν vocat, et qualitatem, et finitionem, cui nomen dat κατ' ἔννοιαν, et ad aliquid. Unde et illa divisio est, alia esse 38 scripta, alia inscripta. Celsus Cornelius duos et ipse fecit status generales, an sit? quale sit? Priori subiecit finitionem, quia aequè quaeratur an sit sacrilegus, qui nihil se sustulisse de templo dicit et qui privatam pecuniam confitetur sustulisse. Qualitatem in rem et scriptum dividit. Scripto quattuor 39 partes legales, exclusa translatione; quantitatem et mentis quaestionem coniecturae subiecit. Est etiam alia in duos dividendi status ratio, quae docet, aut de substantia controversiam esse, aut de qualitate; ipsam porro qualitatem aut in summo genere con-
 40 sistere aut in succedentibus. De substantia est coniectura. Quaestio enim tractatur rei, an facta sit? an fiat? an futura sit? interdum etiam mentis; idque melius, quam quod iis placuit, qui statum eundem facti nominaverunt, tanquam de praeterito of definition. Posidonius¹ divides them into two classes, those concerned with words and those concerned with things. In the first case he thinks that the question is whether a word has any meaning; if so, what is its meaning, how many meanings has it, and how does it come to mean what it means? In the latter case, we employ conjecture, which he calls κατ' αἴσθησιν, or inference from perception, quality, definition which he calls κατ' ἔννοιαν or rational inference, and relation. Hence also comes the division into things written and unwritten. Even Cornelius 38 Celsus stated that there were two general bases, one concerned with the question whether a thing is, the other with the question of what kind it is. He included definition under the first of these, because enquiry may equally be made as to whether sacrilege has been committed, when a man denies that he has stolen anything from a temple, and when he admits that he has stolen private money from a temple. He divides quality into fact and the letter of the law. Under the head of the letter of the law he places four classes, excluding questions of *competence*²: quantity and intention he places under the head of conjecture.³ There is also another method of 39 dividing bases into two classes: according to this disputes are either about substance or quality, while quality is treated either in its most general sense or in its special senses. Substance is dealt with by con- 40 jecture: for in enquiring into anything, we ask whether it has been done, is being done, or is likely to be done, and sometimes also consider its intention: this method is preferable to that adopted by those who style the conjectural basis a basis of fact, as though we only enquired into the past and what has

¹ Fr. p. 232, Bake.

² cp. § 23; translatio and exceptio are virtually identical. The four classes are Intention, Ambiguity, Contradictory Laws, Syllogism.

³ i.e. the conjectural basis concerned with questions of fact.

- 41 tantum et tantum de facto quaeretur. Pars qualitatis, quae est de summo genere, raro in iudicium venit, quale est, idne sit honestum, quod vulgo laudatur; succedentium autem aliae de communi appellatione, ut sitne sacrilegus, qui pecuniam privatam ex templo furatus est; aut de re denominata, ubi et factum esse certum est nec dubitatur, quid sit quod factum est. Cui subiacent omnes de honestis,
- 42 iustis, utilibus quaestiones. His etiam ceteri status contineri dicuntur, quia et quantitas modo ad coniecturam referatur, ut maiore sol quam terra? modo ad qualitatem, quanta poena quempiam quantove praemio sit affici iustum? et translatio versetur circa
- 43 qualitatem, et definitio pars sit translationis; quin et contrariae leges et ratiocinativus status, id est syllogismos, et plerumque scripti et voluntatis aequitantur (nisi quod hic tertius aliquando coniecturam accipit, quid senserit legis constitutor); ambiguitatem vero semper coniectura explicari necesse sit, quia, eum sit manifestum, verborum intellectum esse duplicem, de sola quaeritur voluntate.
- 44 A plurimis tres sunt facti generales status, quibus et Cicero in Oratore utitur, et omnia, quae aut in controversiam aut in contentionem veniant, contineri

¹ See § 11 and the case cited in 38, where the accused would argue that he was guilty not of sacrilege, but of simple theft.

² When we argue that a certain case comes under a certain law. cp. § 15. ³ Or. xiv. 45.

actually been done. The consideration of quality 41 under its most general aspect rarely comes up in the courts; I refer to questions such as "whether that is honourable which is generally praised." With regard to the special aspects of quality, questions sometimes occur about some common term, such as whether sacrilege has been committed when a man has stolen private money from a temple, or about some act with a definite name, when there is no doubt either as to the commission or the nature of the act. Under this heading come all questions about what is honourable, just or expedient. These 42 bases are said to contain others as well, because quantity is sometimes concerned with conjectural bases, as in the question whether the sun is bigger than the earth, and sometimes with qualitative bases, as in the question what reward or punishment it would be just to assign to some particular person, while questions of competence undoubtedly are concerned with quality, and definition with questions of compe- tence.¹ Further contradictory laws and the ratiocinative 43 basis or *sylogism*² and the majority of questions dealing with the letter of the law and intention are based on equity, with the exception that this last question sometimes admits of conjecture as, for instance, concerning the intentions of the legislator: ambiguity, however, must always be explained by conjecture, because as it is clear that the words admit of two interpretations the only question is as to the intention.

A large number of writers recognise general bases; 44 Cicero adopts them in his Orator,³ and holds that everything that can form the subject of dispute or discussion is covered by the three questions, whether putat, Sitne? Quid sit? Quale sit? quorum nomina 45 apertiora sunt, quam ut dicenda sint. Idem¹ Patrocles sentit. Tres fecit et M. Antonius his quidem verbis: Paucae res sunt, quibus ex rebus omnes orationes nascuntur, factum non factum, ius iniuria, bonum malum.

 Sed quoniam, quod iure dicimur fecisse, non hunc solum intellectum habet, ut lege, sed illum quoque, ut iuste fecisse videamur, secuti Antonium apertius voluerunt eodem status distinguere. Itaque dixerunt coniecturalem, legalem, iuridicalem; qui et 46 Verginio placent. Horum deinde fecerunt species, ita ut legali subiicerent finitionem et alios, qui ex scripto ducuntur, legum contrariarum, quae ἀτινομία dicitur, et scripti et sententiae vel voluntatis, id est κατὰ ῥητὸν καὶ διάνοιαν, et μετάληψιν, quam nos varie translativam, transumptivam, transpositivam voca-mus, συλλογισμόν, quem accipimus ratiocinativum vel collectivum, ambiguitatis, quae ὑμφιβολία nominatur; quos posui, quia et ipsi a plerisque status appellantur, cum quibusdam legales potius quaestiones eas dici placuerit.

47 Quattuor fecit Athenaeus, προτρεπτικὴν στάσιν vel παρορμητικὴν, id est exhortativum, qui suasoriae est proprius; συντελικὴν, qua coniecturam significari magis ex his, quae sequuntur, quam ex ipso nomine

¹ Iatrocles, B.

¹ Conjectural, definitive, and qualitative.

² Concerned with questions of competence.

it is, what it is, and of what kind it is. The names of these three bases are too obvious for mention.¹ The same view is asserted by Patrocles. Marcus Antonius stated that there were three bases in the following words:—"The things which form the ground of every speech are few and are as follows:—"Was a thing done or not done?" "Was it just or unjust?" "Was it good or bad?" But since, when we are said to have been justified in doing anything, this does not merely mean that our action was legal, but further implies that it was just, those who follow Antonius attempt to differentiate these bases with greater exactness. They therefore called them conjectural, legal and juridical, a division which meets with the approval of Verginius as well. These they then subdivided into species, placing definition under the head of the legal basis, together with all others which are concerned with the letter of the law: such as that of contradictory laws, or ἀντινομία, that which rests on the letter of the law and on meaning or intention (which the Greeks call κατὰ ῥητὸν καὶ διάνοιαν) and μετάληψις to which latter we give various names, styling it the translative, transumptive or *transpositive basis*²; the syllogism, which we call the ratiocinative or deductive basis; and those which turn on ambiguity or ἀμφιβολία. I mention these because they are called bases by most writers, though some prefer to call them legal questions.

Athenaeus laid down that there were four bases: the προτρεπτικὴ στάσις or παρορμητικὴ, that is, the hortative, which is peculiar to deliberative themes; the συντελική,³ which is shown to be the conjectural, not so much from the name itself, but from what

³ συντελική lit. = contributory.

apparet; ὑπαλλακτικὴν, ea finitio est, mutatione enim nominis constat; iuridicalem, eadem appellatione Graeca qua ceteri usus. Nam est, ut dixi, multa in 48 nominibus differentia. Sunt qui ὑπαλλακτικὴν translationem esse existiment, secuti hanc mutationis significationem. Fecerunt alii totidem status, sed alios, An sit? Quid sit? Quale sit? Quantum 49 sit? ut Caecilius et Theon. Aristoteles in rhetoricis, An sit, Quale, Quantum, et Quam multum sit? quaerendum putat. Quodam tamen loco finitionis quoque vim intelligit, quo dicit quaedam sic defendi, Sustuli, sed non furtum feci; Percussi, sed non iniuriam 50 feci. Posuerat et Cicero in libris rhetoricis, facti, nominis, generis, actionis; ut in facto coniectura, in nomine finitio, in genere qualitas, in actione ius intelligeretur. Iuri subiecerat translationem. Verum hic legales quoque quaestiones alio loco tractat ut species actionis.

51 Fuerunt qui facerent quinque, coniecturam, finitionem, qualitatem, quantitatem, ad aliquid. Theodorus quoque, ut dixi, iisdem generalibus capitibus utitur, An sit? Quid sit? Quale sit? Quantum sit? Ad aliquid. Hoc ultimum maxime in comparativo genere versari putat, quoniam melius ac

¹ The defendant admits the act, but gives it a different name, e.g. theft, not sacrilege. ὑπαλλακτικὴ = changing.

² δικαιολογικός.

³ Caec. fr. 49, Burkh.

⁴ Ar. Rhet. 1416 b: 1374 a.

⁵ de Inv. I. viii. 10.

⁶ Part. Or. 31 and 38.

⁷ § 36.

follows; the ὑπαλλακτική or definitive, for it consists in a change of terms¹; and the juridical to which he gives the name employed by other Greek writers.² For, as I have said, there is a great variety in the names employed. There are some who, arguing from its meaning of change, hold that ὑπαλλακτική is the translative basis, which is concerned with competence. Others, Caecilius³ and Theon for instance, hold that there are the same number of bases, but make them of a different kind, namely, those covered by the questions whether a thing is, what it is, of what kind it is and how great it is. Aristotle⁴ in his Rhetoric states that all enquiry turns on the questions whether a thing is, of what kind it is, how great it is, and of how many parts it consists. In one place however he recognises the force of definition as well, saying that certain points are defended on the following lines:—"I took it, but did not steal it." "I struck him, but did not commit an assault." Cicero⁵ again in his Rhetorica makes the number of bases to be four, namely those concerned with fact, names, kinds, and legal action, that is to say conjecture is concerned with fact, definition with names, quality with kinds, and law with action: under this latter head of law he included questions of competence. But in another passage he treats⁶ legal questions as a species of action.

Some writers have held that there are five bases: the conjectural, definitive, qualitative, quantitative and relative. Theodorus, also, as I have said,⁷ adopts the same number of general heads, whether a thing is, what it is, of what kind it is, how great it is, and to what it refers. The last he considers to be chiefly concerned with comparison, since better and worse, greater and less peius, maius et minus nisi alio relata non intelliguntur. Sed in illas quoque translativas, ut supra significavi, quaestiones incidit, An huic ius agendi sit? vel, facere aliquid conveniat? An contra hunc? An hoc tempore? An sic? omnia enim ista referri ad aliquid necesse est. Alii sex status putant, coniecturam, quam γένεσις vocant, et qualitatem, et proprietatem, id est ιδιότητα, quo verbo finitio ostenditur, et quantitatem, quam ἀξίαν dicunt, et comparisonem, et translationem, cuius adhuc novum nomen inventum est μετάστασις; novum, inquam, in statu, alioqui ab Hermagora inter species iuridiciales usitatum. Aliis septem esse placuit; a quibus nec translatio nec quantitas nec comparatio recepta est, sed in horum trium locum subditae quattuor legales adiectaeque tribus illis rationalibus. Alii pervenerunt usque ad octo, translatione ad septem superiores adiecta. A quibusdam deinde divisa ratio est, ut status rationales appellarent, quaestiones (quemadmodum supra dixi) legales, ut in illis de re, in his de scripto quaereretur. Quidam in diversum hos status esse, illas quaestiones maluerunt. Sed alii rationales tres putaverunt, An sit? Quid sit? Quale sit? Hermagoras solus quattuor, coniecturam, proprietatem, translationem, qualitatem, quam per accidentia,

¹ See § 46.

² Conjectural, definitive, qualitative.

³ § 46.

are meaningless terms unless referred to some standard. But questions of relation, as I have already 52 pointed out, enter also into translative questions, that is, questions of competence, since in cases such as "Has this man a right to bring an action?" or "Is it fitting that he should do such and such a thing, or against this man, or at this time, or in this manner?" For all these questions must be referred to a certain standard. Others hold that there are 53 six bases: conjecture or γένεσις, quality, particularity or ιδιότης, by which word they mean definition, quantity or ἀξία, comparison and competence, for which a new term has been found in μετάστασις; I call it new when applied to a basis, for Hermagoras employs it to describe a species of juridical question. Others 54 think there are seven, while refusing to recognise competence, quantity or comparison, in place of which they substitute four legal bases,¹ completing the seven by the addition of those three which they call rational.² Others again make eight by the addition 55 of competence to the above-mentioned seven. Some on the other hand have introduced a fresh method of division, reserving the name of bases for the rational, and giving the name of questions to the legal, as I mentioned above,³ since in the former the problem is concerned with facts, in the latter with the letter of the law. Some on the contrary reverse this nomenclature calling the legal questions bases and the rational grounds questions. But others have 56 thought that there are only three rational bases, covered by the questions whether a thing is, what it is, and of what kind it is? Hermagoras is alone in thinking that there are four, namely conjecture, particularity, competence, and quality: to the latter he id est κατὰ συμβεβηκός, vocat, hac interpretatione, an illi accidat viro bono esse, vel malo. Hanc ita dividit, de appetendis et fugiendis, quae est pars 57 deliberativa; de persona, ea ostenditur laudativa; negotialem, quam πραγματικήν vocat, in qua de rebus ipsis quaeritur, remoto personarum complexu, ut, Sitne liber qui est in assertione, an divitiae superbiam pariant, an iustum quid, an bonum sit. Iuridicialem, in qua fere eadem sed certis destinatisque personis quaerantur: an ille inste hoc fecerit, 58 vel bene. Nec me fallit, in primo Ciceronis rhetorico aliam esse loci negotialis interpretationem, cum ita scriptum sit: Negotialis est, in qua, quid iuris ex civili more et aequitate sit, consideratur; cui diligentiae 59 praeesse apud nos iurisconsulti existimantur. Sed quod ipsius de his libris iudicium fuerit, supra dixi. Sunt enim velut regestae in hos commentarios, quos adolescens deduxerat, scholae, et si qua est in his culpa, tradentis est, sive eum movit id, quod Hermagoras prima in hoc loco posuit exempla ex quaestionibus iuris, sive quod Graeci πραγματικούς vocant iuris in-

QUINTILIAN

 60 terpretes. Sed Cicero quidem his pulcherrimos illos

¹ assertio = a trial in which the question of a person's liberty is involved. When waiting trial, this person is described as in assertione.

² de Inv. i. xi. 14.

³ See III. v. 15.

appends the phrase κατὰ συμβεβηκός, "according to its accidents," illustrating his meaning by putting a case where it is enquired whether a man happen to be good or bad. He then subdivides quality into four species: first that which is concerned with things to be sought or avoided, which belongs to deliberative oratory: secondly those concerned with persons, by which he indicates panegyric: thirdly the practical or pragmatic, which is concerned with things in general without reference to persons, and may be illustrated by questions such as whether he is free who is claimed as a slave and waiting the trial of his case,¹ whether riches beget insolence, and whether a thing is just or good; lastly there is the juridical species, under which practically the same questions arise, but in relation to certain definite persons, as for instance when it is asked whether that particular man has done well or ill. I am aware that another explanation is given by Cicero in the first book of his *Rhetorica*² of the species known as practical, where he says that it is "the department under which we consider what is right according to civil usage and equity: this department is regarded by us as the special sphere of the lawyer." But I have already mentioned³ what his opinion was about this particular work. The Rhetorica are simply a collection of school-notes on rhetoric which he worked up into this treatise while quite a young man. Such faults as they possess are due to his instructor. In the present instance he may have been influenced by the fact that the first examples given by Hermagoras of this species are drawn from legal questions, or by the fact that the Greeks call interpreters of the law πραγματικοί. But for these early efforts Cicero substi-

de Oratore substituit, ideoque culpari, tanquam falsa praecepiat, non potest. Nos ad Hermagoran. Translationem hic primus omnium tradidit, quanquam semina eius quaedam citra nomen ipsum apud Aris-61 totelen reperiuntur. Legales autem quaestiones has fecit, scripti et voluntatis (quam ipse vocat κατὰ ῥητὸν καὶ ὑπεξαίρεσις, id est dictum et exceptionem, quorum prius ei cum omnibus commune est, exceptionis nomen minus usitatum), ratiocinativum, ambiguitatis, 62 legum contrariarum. Albutius eadem divisione usus detrahit translationem, subiiciens eam iuridiciali.
 In legalibus quoque quaestionibus nullum putat esse, qui dicatur ratiocinativus. Scio plura inventuros adhuc, qui legere antiquos studiosius volent, sed ne haec quoque excesserint modum vereor.

63 Ipse me paulum in alia, quam prius habuerim, opinione nunc esse confiteor. Et fortasse tutissimum erat famae modo studentī nihil ex eo mutare, quod multis annis non sensissem modo, verum etiam 64 approbassem. Sed non sustineo esse conscius mihi dissimulati (in eo praesertim opere, quod ad bonorum iuvenum aliquam utilitatem componimus) in ulla parte iudicii mei. Nam et Hippocrates, clarus arte medicinae, videtur honestissime fecisse, quod quosdam

¹ Rhet. II. xv. 8.

² Epidem. v. 14.

tuted his splendid de Oratore and therefore cannot be blamed for giving false instruction. I will now return to Hermagoras. He was the first rhetorician to teach that there was a basis concerned with competence, although the elements of this doctrine are found in Aristotle,¹ without however any mention of the name. The legal questions were according to 61 Hermagoras of five kinds. First the letter of the law and its intention; the names which he gives to these are κατὰ ῥῆτόν and ὑπεξαίρεσις, that is to say the letter of the law and the exceptions thereto: the first of these classes is found in all writers, but the term exception is less in use. The number is completed by the ratiocinative basis and those dealing with ambiguity and contradictory laws. Albutius 62 adopts this classification, but eliminates competence, including it under the juridical basis. Further he holds that in legal questions there is no ratiocinative basis. I know that those who are prepared to read ancient writers on rhetoric more carefully than I have, will be able to discover yet more on this subject, but I fear that I may have been too lengthy even in saying what I have said.

I must admit that I am now inclined to take a 63 different view from that which I once held. It would perhaps be safer for my reputation if I were to make no modification in views which I not only held for so many years, but of which I expressed my open approbation. But I cannot bear to be thought guilty of 64 concealment of the truth as regards any portion of my views, more especially in a work designed for the profit of young men of sound disposition. For Hippocrates,² the great physician, in my opinion took the most honourable course in acknowledging some of errores suos, ne posterî errarent, confessus est; et M. Tullius non dubitavit aliquos iam editos libros aliis postea scriptis ipse damnare, sicut Catulum atque Lucillum et hos ipsos, de quibus modo sum 65 locutus, artis rhetoricae. Etenim supervacuum foret in studiis longior labor, si nihil liceret melius invenire praeteritis. Neque tamen quidquam ex iis, quae tum praecepi, supervacuum fuit; ad easdem enim particulas haec quoque, quae nunc praecipiam, revertentur; ita neminem didicisse poeniteat, colligere tantum eadem ac disponere paulo significantius conor. Omnibus autem satisfactum volo, non me hoc serius 66 demonstrare aliis, quam mihi ipse persuaserim. Secundum plurimos auctores servabam tris rationales status, coniecturam, qualitatem, finitionem, unum legalem. Hi mihi status generales erant. Legalem in quinque species partiebar, scripti et voluntatis, legum contrariarum, collectivum, ambiguitatis, trans-67 lationis. Nunc quartum ex generalibus intelligo posse removeri; sufficit enim prima divisio, qua diximus alios rationales, alios legales esse; ita non erit status, sed quaestionum genus; alioqui et ratio-68 nalis status esset. Ex iis etiam, quos speciales vocabam, removi translationem, frequenter quidem (sicut omnes qui me secuti sunt meminisse possunt) testatus et in ipsis etiam illis sermonibus me nolente

QUINTILIAN

¹ The two books of the first edition of the Academica.

² i.e. the Rhetorica, better known as de Inventione.

³ See III. v. 4. ⁴ See I. Proem. 7.

his errors to prevent those who came after from being led astray, while Cicero had no hesitation about condemning some of his earlier works in books which he published later: I refer to his condemnation of his Lucullus and *Catulus*¹ and the books² on rhetoric which I have already mentioned. Indeed we should 65 have no justification for protracting our studies if we were forbidden to improve upon our original views. Still none of my past teaching was superfluous: for the views which I am now going to produce will be found to be based on the same principles, and consequently no one need be sorry to have attended my lectures, since all that I am now attempting to do is to collect and rearrange my original views so that they may be somewhat more instructive. But I wish to satisfy everybody and not to lay myself open to the accusation that I have allowed a long time to elapse between the formation and publication of my views. I used to follow the majority of authorities in ad- 66 hering to three rational bases, the conjectural, qualitative and definitive, and to one legal basis.³ These were my general bases. The legal basis I divided into five species, dealing with the letter of the law and intention, contradictory laws, the syllogism, ambiguity and competence. It is now clear to me that the fourth of the 67 general bases may be removed, since the original division which I made into rational and legal bases is sufficient. The fourth therefore will not be a basis, but a kind of question; if it were not, it would form one of the rational bases. Further I have removed 68 competence from those which I called species. For I often asserted, as all who have attended my lectures will remember, and even those discourses which were published against my will⁴ included the state-

QUINTILIAN

vulgatis hoc tamen complexus, vix in ulla controversia translationis statum posse reperiri, ut non et alius in eadem recte dici videretur, ideoque a qui-69 busdam eum exclusum. Neque ignoro multa transferri, cum in omnibus fere causis, in quibus cecidisse quis formula dicitur, hae sint quaestiones, an huic, an cum hoc, an hac lege, an apud hunc, an hoc tem-70 pore liceat agere? et si qua sunt talia. Sed personae, tempora, actiones ceteraque propter aliquam causam transferuntur; ita non est in translatione quaestio sed in eo, propter quod transferuntur: Non debes apud praetorem petere fidei commissum, sed apud consules, maior enim praetoria cognitione summa est.
Quaeritur, an maior summa sit, facti controversia 71 est. Non licet tibi agere mecum, cognitio enim fieri non potuisti: iudicatio, an potuerit. Non debuisti interdicere sed petere: an recte interdictum sit, ambigitur.
72 Quae omnia succedunt legitimis quaestionibus. An non praescriptiones (etiam in quibus maxime videtur manifesta translatio) easdem omnes species habent,

sc. by getting an order for restitution.

ment, that the basis concerned with competence hardly ever occurs in any dispute under such circumstances that it cannot more correctly be given some other name, and that consequently some rhetoricians exclude it from their list of bases. I am, however, 69 well aware that the point of competence is raised in many cases, since in practically every case in which a party is said to have been ruled out of court through some error of form, questions such as the following arise: whether it was lawful for this person to bring an action, or to bring it against some particular person, or under a given law, or in such a court, or at such a time, and so on. But the question of com- 70 petence as regards persons, times, legal actions and the rest originates in some pre-existent cause: the question turns therefore not on competence itself, but on the cause with which the point of competence originates. "You ought to demand the return of a deposit not before the praetor but before the consuls, as the sum is too large to come under the praetor's jurisdiction." The question then arises whether the sum is too large, and the dispute is one of fact. "You have no right to bring an action against 71 me, as it is impossible for you to have been appointed to represent the actual plaintiff." It then has to be decided whether he could have been so appointed. "You ought not to have proceeded by interdict,¹ but to have put in a plea for possession." The point in doubt is whether the interdict is legal. All these 72 points fall under the head of legal questions. For do not even those special pleas, in which questions of competence make themselves most evident, give rise to the same species of question as those laws under which the action is brought, so that the enquiry is

73 quas eae leges, quibus agitur, ut aut de nomine aut scripto et sententia vel ratiocinatione quaeratur?
 Deinde status ex quaestione oritur; translatio non habet quaestionem, de qua contendit orator, sed propter quam contendit. Hoc apertius, Occidisti hominem, Non occidi; quaestio, an occiderit, status coniectura. Non est tale, Habeo ius actionis, Non habes, ut sit quaestio, an habeat, et inde status.
 Accipiat enim actionem necne, ad eventum pertinet, non ad causam, et ad id, quod pronuntiat iudex, non 74 id, propter quod pronuntiat. Hoc illi simile est, Puniendus es, Non sum; videbit iudex, an puniendus sit. Sed non hic erit quaestio nec hic status. Ubi ergo? Puniendus es, hominem occidisti; Non occidi; An occiderit. Honorandus sum, Non es; num statum habet? non, ut puto. Honorandus sum, quia tyrannum 75 occidi; Non occidisti; quaestio et status. Similiter, Non recte agis, Recte ago non habet statum. Ubi est ergo? Non recte agis ignominiosus. Quaeritur, an

¹ e.g. murder or manslaughter : sacrilege or theft.

² See § 70.

³ sc. the conjectural.

really concerned with the name of a given act,¹ with the letter of the law and its meaning, or with something that requires to be settled by argument? The basis originates from the question, and in cases of competence it is not the question concerning which the advocate argues that is involved, but the question on account of which he argues.² An example will make 73 this clearer. "You have killed a man." "I did not kill him." The question is whether he has killed him; the basis is the conjectural. But the following case is very different. "I have the right to bring this action." "You have not the right." The question is whether he has the right, and it is from this that we derive the basis. For whether he is allowed the right or not depends on the event, not on the cause itself, and on the decision of the judge, not on that on account of which he gives such a decision. The following is a similar 74 example. "You ought to be punished." "I ought not." The judge will decide whether he should be punished, but it is not with this that the question or the basis is concerned. Where then does the question lie? "You ought to be punished, for you have killed a man." "I did not kill him." The question is whether he killed him. "I ought to receive some honour." "You ought not." Does this involve a basis? I think not. "I ought to receive some honour for killing a tyrant." "You did not kill him." Here there is a question and a *basis*³ as well. So, too, "You 75 are not entitled to bring this action," "I have," involves no basis. Where then is it to be found? "You have no right to bring this action, because you have been deprived of civil rights." In this case the question is whether he has been so deprived, or whether loss of civil rights debars a person from ignominiosus sit; aut, an agere ignominioso liceat; quaestiones et status. Ergo translativum genus 76 causae ut comparativum et mutuae accusationis. At enim simile est illi "Habeo ius, Non habes," "Occidisti, Recte occidi." Non nego, sed nec haec res statum facit. Non enim sunt hae propositiones (alioqui causa non explicabitur), sed, cum suis rationibus. Scelus commisit Horatius, sororem enim occidit. Non commisit, debuit enim occidere eam, quae hostis mortem macrebat. Quaestio, an haec iusta causa; ita qua-77 litas. Et similiter in translatione, Non habes ius abdicandi, quia ignominioso non est actio. Habeo ius, quia abdicatio actio non est. Quaeritur, quid sit actio: finiemus Non licet abdicare filium syllogismo. Item cetera per omnes et rationales et legales status.

 78 Nec ignoro fuisse quosdam, qui translationem in rationali quoque genere ponerent hoc modo, Hominem occidi, iussus ab imperatore. Dona templi cogenti tyranno dedi. Deserui tempestatibus, fluminibus, valetudine impeditus. Id est, non per me stetit, sed per illud.
 79 A quibus etiam liberius dissentio. Non enim actio transfertur sed causa facti, quod accidit paene in omni

¹ sc. the conjectural or definitive basis and the qualitative.

² See III. x. 3 and 4.

³ Disinheritance could only be effected by legal action.

⁴ See § 15.

bringing an action. Here on the other hand we find both questions and bases.¹ It is therefore to kinds of causes, not to bases that the term competence applies: other kinds of cause are the comparative and the recriminatory.² "But," it is urged, "the case 'I have a right,' 'You have not,' is similar to 'You have killed a man,' 'I was justified in so doing.'" I do not deny it, but this does not make it a basis. For these statements are not propositions until the reasons for them are added. If they were propositions as they stand, the case could not proceed. "Horatius has committed a crime, for he has killed his sister." "He has not committed a crime, since it was his duty to kill her for mourning the death of an enemy." The question is whether this was a justifiable reason, and the basis is one of quality. So too as regards competence. "You have no right to disinherit, since a person who has been deprived of civil rights is not allowed to take legal action."³ "I have the right, since disinheriting is not legal action." The question here is what is legal action. And we shall arrive at the conclusion that the son's disinheritance is unlawful, by use of the syllogism.⁴ The case will be similar with all the rational and legal bases. I am aware that there have been some who placed competence among rational bases, using as illustrations cases such as, "I killed a man under orders from my general," "I gave the votive offerings in a temple to a tyrant under compulsion," "I deserted owing to the fact that storms or floods or ill-health prevented me from rejoining." That is to say it was not due to me, but some external cause. From these writers I differ even more widely: for it is not the nature of the legal action itself which is involved in the question of competence, but the cause of the act; defensione. Deinde is, qui tali utitur patrocinio, non recedit a forma qualitatis, dicit enim, se culpa vacare; ut magis qualitatis duplex ratio facienda sit, altera qua et factum defenditur, altera qua tantum reus.

QUINTILIAN

- 80 Credendum est igitur his, quorum auctoritatem secutus est Cicero, tria esse, quae in omni disputatione quaerantur, an sit, quid sit, quale sit? quod ipsa nobis etiam natura praescribit. Nam primum oportet subesse aliquid, de quo ambigitur; quod, quid sit et quale sit, certe non potest aestimari, nisi prius esse constiterit, ideoque ea prima quaestio.
- 81 Sed non statim, quod esse manifestum est, etiam quid sit, apparet. Hoc quoque constituto novissima qualitas superest, neque his exploratis aliud est ultra. His infinitae quaestiones, his finitae continentur; horum aliqua in demonstrativa, deliberativa, iudiciali
- 82 materia utique tractatur. Haec rursus iudiciales causas et rationali parte et legali continent; neque enim ulla iuris disceptatio nisi finitione, qualitate,
- 83 coniectura potest explicari. Sed instituentibus rudes non erit inutilis latius primo fusa ratio et, si non statim rectissima linea tensa, facilior tamen et aperior via. Discant igitur ante omnia quadripertitam and this is the case in almost every defence. Finally he who adopts this line of defence, does not thereby abandon the qualitative basis; for he states that he himself is free from blame, so that we really should differentiate between two kinds of quality,¹ one of which comes into play when both the accused person and his act are defended, and the other when the accused person alone is defended.

¹ (A) Absolute, when the deed is shown to be right. (B) Relative, when the act is not defended, but the agent is cleared of the guilt of the act.

² See § 44.

We must therefore accept the view of the authorities followed by Cicero,² to the effect that there are three things on which enquiry is made in every case: we ask whether a thing is, what it is, and of what kind it is. Nature herself imposes this upon us. For first of all there must be some subject for the question, since we cannot possibly determine what a thing is, or of what kind it is, until we have first ascertained whether it is, and therefore the first question raised is whether it is. But even when it is clear that a thing is, it is not immediately obvious what it is. And when we have decided what it is, there remains the question of its quality. These three points once ascertained, there is no further question to ask. These heads cover both definite and indefinite questions. One or more of them is discussed in every demonstrative, deliberative or forensic theme. These heads again cover all cases in the courts, whether we regard them from the point of view of rational or legal questions. For no legal problem can be settled save by the aid of definition, quality and conjecture. Those, however, who are engaged in instructing the ignorant will find it useful at first to adopt a slightly less rigid method: the road will not be absolutely straight to begin with, but it will be more open and will provide easier going. I would have them therefore learn above all things in omnibus causis esse rationem, quam primam intueri debeat qui acturus est. Nam, ut a defensore potissimum incipiam, longe fortissima tuendi se ratio est, si quod obiicitur negari potest; proxima, si non id, quod obiicitur, factum esse dicitur; tertia honestissima, qua reete factum defenditur. Quibus si deficiamus, ultima quidem sed iam sola superest salus aliquo iuris adiutorio elabendi ex crimine, quod neque negari neque defendi potest, ut non videatur 84 iure actio intendi. Hinc illae quaestiones sive actiones sive translationes. Sunt enim quaedam non laudabilia non natura sed iure concessa, ut in XII tabulis debitoris corpus inter creditores dividi licuit, quam legem mos publicus repudiavit; et aliquid aequum sed prohibitum iure, ut libertas testamentorum. Accusatori nihilo plura intuenda sunt, ut probet factum esse, hoc esse factum, non recte factum, iure se intendere. Ita circa species easdem 85 lis omnis versabitur translatis tantum aliquando partibus, ut in causis, quibus de praemio agitur, recte factum petitor probat.

QUINTILIAN

86 Haec quattuor velut proposita formaeque actionis, quae tum generales status vocabam, in duo (ut

¹ e.g. that the legal heir must receive at least a quarter of the property.

that there are four different methods which may be employed in every case, and he who is going to plead should study them as first essentials. For, to begin with the defendant, far the strongest method of self-defence is, if possible, to deny the charge. The second best is when it is possible to reply that the particular act with which you are charged was never committed. The third and most honourable is to maintain that the act was justifiable. If none of these lines of defence are feasible, there remains the last and only hope of safety : if it is impossible either to deny the charge or justify the act, we must evade the charge with the aid of some point of law, making it appear that the action has been brought against us illegally. Hence arise those questions of legal action 84 or competence. For there are some things, which, although not laudable in themselves, are yet permitted by law ; witness the passage in the Twelve Tables authorising creditors to divide up a debtor's body amongst themselves, a law which is repudiated by public custom. There are also certain things which although equitable are prohibited by law ; witness the restrictions placed on testamentary disposition.¹ The 85 accuser likewise has four things which he must keep in mind : he must prove that something was done, that a particular act was done, that it was wrongly done, and that he brings his charge according to law. Thus every cause will turn on the same sorts of questions, though the parts of plaintiff and defendant will sometimes be interchanged : for instance in the case of a claim for a reward, it will be the plaintiff's task to show that what was done was right.

These four schemes or forms of action which I then 86 called general bases fall into two classes as I have ostendi) genera discedunt rationale et legale. Rationale simplicius est, quia ipsius tantum naturae contemplatione constat. Itaque in eo satis est ostendisse coniecturam, finitionem, qualitatem. Legali-87 tum plures sint species necesse est, propterea quod multae sunt leges et varias habent formas. Alia est cuius verbis nitimur, alia cuius voluntate, alias nobis, cum ipsi nullam habeamus, adiungimus, alias inter se 88 comparamus, alias in diversum interpretamur. Sic nascuntur haec velut simulacra ex illis tribus, interim simplicia, interim et mixta, propriam tamen faciem ostendentia, ut scripti et voluntatis, quae sine dubio aut qualitate aut coniectura continetur, et syllogismos, qui est maxime qualitatis, et leges contrariae, quae iisdem, quibus scriptum et voluntas, constant, et ἀμφιβολία, quae semper coniectura explicatur.

QUINTILIAN

 89 Finitio quoque utrique generi, quodque rerum quodque scripti contemplatione constat, communis est. Haec omnia, etiamsi in illos tres status veniunt, tamen, quia (ut dixi) habent aliquid velut proprium, videntur demonstranda discentibus, et permittendum ea dicere vel status legales vel quaestiones vel capita quaedam minora, dum sciant, nihil ne in his quidem 90 praeter tria, quae praediximus, quaeri. At Quantum? et Quam multum? et Ad aliquid et, ut non-

¹ § 67, and III. v. 4.

² § 87. ³ § 80.

shown,¹ namely, the rational and the legal. The rational is the simpler, as it involves nothing more than the consideration of the nature of things. In this connection, therefore, a mere mention of conjecture, definition and quality will suffice. Legal questions 87 necessarily have a larger number of species, since there are many laws and a variety of forms. In the case of one law we rely on the letter, in others on the spirit. Some laws we force to serve our turn, when we can find no law to support our case, others we compare with one another, and on others we put some novel interpretation. Thus from these three bases we 88 get three resemblances of bases: sometimes simple, sometimes complex, but all having a character of their own, as, for instance, when questions of the letter of the law and its intention are involved, for these clearly come under conjecture or quality; or again where the syllogism is involved, for this is specially connected with quality; or where contradictory laws are involved, for these are on the same footing as the letter of the law and intention; or yet again in cases of ambiguity, which is always resolved by conjecture. Definition also 89 belongs to both classes of question, namely those concerned with the consideration of facts and those concerned with the letter of the law. All these questions, although they come under the three bases, yet since, as I have mentioned,² they have certain characteristic features of their own, require to be pointed out to learners; and we must allow them to be called legal bases or questions or minor heads, as long as it is clearly understood that none of them involve any other questions than the three I have mentioned.³ As regards questions of quantity, number, 90 relation, and, as some have thought, comparison, the nulli putarunt, comparativus non eandem rationem habent; sunt enim haec non ad varietatem iuris sed ad solam rationem referenda, ideoque semper in parte aut coniecturae aut qualitatis ponenda sunt, ut Qua mente? et Quo tempore? et Quo loco?

- 91 Sed de singulis dicemus quaestionibus, cum tractare praecepta divisionis coeperimus. Hoc inter omnes convenit, in causis simplicibus singulos status esse causarum, quaestionum autem, quae velut subiacent his et ad illud, quo iudicium continetur, referuntur, saepe in unam cadere plures posse; etiam credo aliquando dubitari, quo statu sit utendum, cum adversus unam intentionem plura opponuntur; et sicut in colore dicitur narrationis, eum esse optimum, quem actor optime tueatur, ita hic quoque posse dici, eum statum esse faciendum, in quo tuendo plurimum
- 92 adhibere virium possit orator; ideoque pro Milone aliud Ciceroni agenti placuit aliud Bruto, cum exercitationis gratia componeret orationem, cum ille iure tanquam insidiatorem occisum et tamen non Milonis consilio dixerit, ille etiam gloriatus sit occiso malo
- 93 cive: in coniunctis vero posse duos et tris inveniri vel diversos, ut si quis aliud se non fecisse, aliud recte fecisse defendat, vel generis eiusdem, ut si
- 94 quis duo crimina neget. Quod accidit etiam, si de una re quaeratur aliqua sed cum plures petant, vel case is different. For these have no connexion with the complexities of the law, but are concerned with reason only. Consequently they must always be regarded as coming under conjecture or quality, as, for instance, when we ask with what purpose, or at what time, or place something was done.

¹ Book VII.

But I will speak of individual questions when I 91 come to handle the rules for division.¹ This much is agreed to by all writers, that one cause possesses one basis, but that as regards secondary questions related to the main issue of the trial, there may frequently be a number in one single cause. I also think there 92 is at times some doubt as to which basis should be adopted, when many different lines of defence are brought to meet a single charge; and, just as in regard to the complexion to be given to the statement of the facts of the case, that complexion is said to be the best which the speaker can best maintain, so in the present connexion I may say that the best basis to choose is that which will permit the orator to develop a maximum of force. It is for this reason that 93 we find Cicero and Brutus taking up different lines in defence of Milo. Cicero says that Clodius was justifiably killed because he sought to waylay Milo, but that Milo had not designed to kill him; while Brutus, who wrote his speech merely as a rhetorical exercise, also exults that Milo has killed a bad citizen.
 In complicated causes, however, two or three bases may 94 be found, or different bases: for instance a man may plead that he did not do one thing, and that he was justified in doing another, or to take another similar class of case, a man may deny two of the charges.
 The same thing occurs when there is a question 95 about some one thing which is claimed by a number

QUINTILIAN

eodem iure ut proximitatis vel diverso, ut cum hic testamento, ille proximitate nitetur. Quotiens autem aliud alii petitori opponitur, dissimiles esse

96 status necesse est, ut in illa controversia: Testamenta legibus facta rata sint. Intestatorum parentium liberi heredes sint. Abdicatus ne quid de bonis patris capiat. Nothus ante legitimum natus legitimus filius sit, post legitimum natus tantum civis. In adoptionem dare liceat. In adoptionem dato redire in familiam liceat, si pater

97 naturalis sine liberis decesserit. Qui ex duobus legitimis alterum in adoptionem dederat, alterum abdicaverat, sustulit nothum; instituto herede abdicato decessit. Tres omnes de bonis contendunt. Nothum, qui non sit legitimus, Graeci vocant; Latinum rei nomen, ut Cato quoque in oratione quadam testatus est, non habemus ideoque utimur peregrino.

98 Sed ad propositum. Heredi scripto opponitur lex, Abdicatus ne quid de bonis patris capiat; fit status scripti et voluntatis, an ullo modo capere possit, an ex voluntate patris, an heres scriptus. Notho duplex fit quaestio, quod post legitimos natus sit et of persons, who may all of them rely on the same kind of plea (for instance, on the right of the next of kin), or may put in different claims, one urging that the property was left him by will, another that he is next of kin. Now whenever a different defence has to be made against different claimants, there must be different bases, as for example the well-known controversial theme : “ Wills that are made in accordance with law shall be valid. When parents die intestate, their children shall be the heirs. A disinherited son shall receive none of his father’s property. A bastard, if born before a legitimate son, shall be treated as legitimate, but if born after a legitimate son shall be treated merely as a citizen. It shall be lawful to give a son in adoption. Every son given in adoption shall have the right to re-enter his own family if his natural father has died childless. A father of two legitimate sons gave one in adoption, disinherited the other, and acknowledged a bastard, who was born to him later. Finally after making the disinherited son his heir he died. All three sons lay claim to the property.” Nothus is the Greek word for a bastard ; Latin, as Cato emphasized in one of his speeches, has no word of its own and therefore borrows the foreign term. But I am straying from the point. The son who was made heir by the will finds his way barred by the law “ A disinherited son shall receive none of his father’s property.” The basis is one resting on the letter of the law and intention, and the problem is whether he can inherit by any means at all? can he do so in accordance with the intention of his father? or in virtue of the fact that he was made heir by the will? The problem confronting the bastard is two-fold, since he was born after the two legitimate sons

QUINTILIAN

99 quod non sit ante legitimum natus. Prior syllogismon habet, an pro non natis sint habendi, qui a familia sunt alienati. Altera et scripti et voluntatis. Non esse enim hunc natum ante legitimum convenit, sed voluntate legis se tuebitur, quam dicet talem fuisse, ut legitimus esset nothus tunc natus, cum alius legi-100 timus in domo non esset. Scriptum quoque legis excludet dicens, non utique, si postea legitimus natus non sit, notho nocere; uteturque hoc argumento: *Finge solum natum nothum, cuius conditionis crit? Tantum civis? atqui non erit post legitimum natus. An filius? atqui non erit ante legitimos natus.
 Quare si verbis legis stari non potest, voluntate standum* 101 est. Nec quemquam turbet, quod ex una lege duo status fiant; duplex est, ita vim duarum habet.
 Redire in familiam volenti dicitur ab altero primum, Ut tibi redire liceat, heres sum. Idem status, qui in petitione abdicati; quaeritur enim, an possit esse 102 heres abdicatus. Obicitur communiter a duobus, Redire tibi in familiam non licet, non enim pater sine liberis decessit. Sed in hoc propria quisque eorum quaestione nitetur. Alter enim dicet abdicatum

¹ The law is twofold as containing two separate, though complementary, enactments on the position of bastards: (a) nothus . . . filius sit, (b) post . . . civis (§ 96).

and was not born before a legitimate son. The first 99 problem involves a syllogism: are those sons who have been cast out from their own family to be regarded as though they had never been born? The second is concerned with the letter of the law and intention. For it is admitted that he was not born before any legitimate son, but he will defend his claim by appealing to the intention of the law, which he will maintain to imply that the bastard, born when there was no legitimate son in the family, should rank as legitimate. He will dismiss the letter of the 100 law, pointing out that in any case the position of a bastard is not prejudiced by the fact that no legitimate son was born after him, and arguing as follows:— “Suppose that the only son is a bastard, what will his position be? Merely that of a citizen? and yet he was not born after any legitimate son. Or will he rank as a son in all respects? But he was not born before the legitimate sons. As it is impossible to stand by the letter of the law we must stand by its intentions.” It need disturb no one 101 that one law should originate two bases. The law is twofold, and therefore has the force of two laws.¹ To the son who desires to re-enter the family, the disinherited’s first reply is, “Even though you are allowed to re-enter the family, I am still the heir.”
 The basis will be the same as in the claim put forward by the disinherited son, since the question at issue is whether a disinherited son can inherit. Both the 102 disinherited and the bastard will object, “You cannot re-enter the family, for our father did not die childless.” But in this connexion each will rely on his own particular question. For the disinherited son will say that even a disinherited man does not cease

QUINTILIAN

- quoque inter liberos esse, et argumentum ducet ex ipsa, qua repellitur, lege; supervacuum enim fuisse prohiberi patris bonis abdicatum, si esset numero alienorum; nunc quia filii iure futurus fuerit intestati heres, oppositam esse legem, quae tamen non id efficiat, ne filius sit, sed ne heres sit. Status
- 103 finitivus, quid sit filius. Rursus nothus eisdem colligit argumentis, non sine liberis patrem decessisse, quibus in petitione usus est, ut probaret esse se filium. Nisi forte et hic finitionem movet, an liberi sint etiam non legitimi. Cadent ergo in unam controversiam vel specialiter duo legitimi status scripti et voluntatis et syllogismos et praeterea finitio, vel tres illi, qui natura soli sunt, coniectura in scripto et voluntate, qualitas in syllogismo, et, quae per se est aperta, finitio.
- 104 Causa quoque et iudicatio et continens est in omni genere causarum. Nihil enim dicitur, cui non insit ratio et quo iudicium referatur et quod rem maxime contineat. Sed quia magis haec variantur in litibus et fere tradita sunt ab iis, qui de iudicialibus causis aliqua composuerunt, in illam partem differantur. Nunc, quia in tria genera causas divisi, ordinem sequar.

¹ See § 82. ² See § 88.

³ For discussion of these technical terms see chap. xi.

⁴ Chaps. iii. and iv.

to be a son, and will derive an argument from that very law which denies his claim to the inheritance; namely that it was unnecessary for a disinherited son to be excluded from possession of his father's property if he had ceased to be one of the family; but now, since in virtue of his rights as son he would have been his father's heir if he had died intestate, the law is brought to bar his claim; and yet the law does not deprive him of his position as son, but only of his position as heir. Here the basis is definitive, as turning on the definition of a son. Again the bastard in his turn will urge that his father did not die childless, employing the same arguments that he had used in putting forward his claim that he ranked as a son; unless indeed he too has recourse to definition, and raises the question whether even bastards are not sons. Thus in one case we shall have either two special legal bases, namely the letter of the law and intention, with the sylogism and also definition, or those three¹ which are really the only bases strictly so called, conjecture as regards the letter of the law and intention, quality in the sylogism,² and definition, which needs no explanation.

Further every kind of case will contain a cause, a point for the decision of the judge, and a central argument.³ For nothing can be said which does not contain a reason, something to which the decision of the judge is directed, and finally something which, more than aught else, contains the substance of the matter at issue. But as these vary in different cases and are as a rule explained by writers on judicial causes, I will postpone them to the appropriate portion of my work. For the present I shall follow the order which I prescribed by my division⁴ of causes into three classes.

QUINTILIAN

VII. Ac potissimum incipiam ab ea, quae constat laude ac vituperatione. Quod genus videtur Aristoteles atque eum secutus Theophrastus a parte negotiali, hoc est πραγματικῆ, removisse totamque ad solos auditores relegasse, et id eius nominis, quod
 2 ab ostentatione ducitur, proprium est. Sed mos Romanus etiam negotiis hoc munus inseruit. Nam et funebres laudationes pendent frequenter ex aliquo publico officio atque ex senatus consulto magistratibus saepe mandantur, et laudare testem vel contra pertinet ad momentum iudiciorum, et ipsis etiam reis dare laudatores licet, et editi in Competitores, in L. Pisonem, in Clodium et Curionem libri vituperationem continent et tamen in Senatu loco sunt
 3 habiti sententiae. Neque infitias eo, quasdam esse ex hoc genere materias ad solam compositas ostentationem, ut laudes deorum virorumque, quos priora tempora tulerunt. Quo solvitur quaestio supra tractata, manifestumque est errare eos, qui nunquam 4 oratorem dicturum nisi de re dubia putaverunt. An laudes Capitolini Iovis, perpetua sacri certaminis materia, vel dubiae sunt vel non oratorio genere tractantur?

¹ Rhet. 1358 b. 2.

² sc. ἐπιδεικτικῆ.

³ The speech was known as in Toga Candida. Only fragments survive.

⁴ The in Pisonem survives, the in Clodium et Curionem, to which he refers again (v. x. 92), is lost.

⁵ III. v. 3.

VII. I will begin with the class of causes which are concerned with praise and blame. This class appears to have been entirely divorced by Aristotle,¹ and following him by Theophrastus, from the practical side of oratory (which they call πραγματική) and to have been reserved solely for the delectation of audiences, which indeed is shown to be its peculiar function by its name, which implies display.² Roman usage on the other hand has given it a place in the practical tasks of life. For funeral orations are often imposed as a duty on persons holding public office, or entrusted to magistrates by decree of the senate. Again the award of praise or blame to a witness may carry weight in the courts, while it is also a recognised practice to produce persons to praise the character of the accused. Further the published speeches of Cicero directed against his rivals in the election to the consulship,³ and against Lucius Piso, Clodius and Curio,⁴ are full of denunciation, and were notwithstanding delivered in the senate as formal expressions of opinion in the course of debate. I do not deny that some compositions of this kind are composed solely with a view to display, as, for instance, panegyrics of gods and heroes of the past, a consideration which provides the solution of a question which I discussed a little while back,⁵ and proves that those are wrong who hold that an orator will never speak on a subject unless it involves some problem. But what problem is involved by the praise of Jupiter Capitolinus, a stock theme of the sacred Capitoline contest,⁶ which is undoubtedly treated in regular rhetorical form?

⁶ The quinquennial contest in honour of Jupiter Capitolinus, founded by Domitian in 86.

QUINTILIAN

Ut desiderat autem laus, quae negotiis adhibetur, probationem, sic etiam illa, quae ostentationi componitur, habet interim aliquam speciem probationis; 5 ut qui Romulum Martis filium educatumque a lupa dicat, in argumentum caelestis ortus utatur his, quod abiectus in profluentem non potuerit exstingui, quod omnia sic egerit, ut genitum praeside bellorum deo incredibile non esset, quod ipsum quoque caelo receptum temporis eius homines non dubitaverint. 6 Quaedam vero etiam in defensionis speciem cadent, ut si in laude Hereulis permutatum eum regina Lydiae habitum et imperata, ut traditur, pensa orator excuset. Sed proprium laudis est res amplificare et ornare.

Quae materia praecipue quidem in deos et homines cadit, est tamen et aliorum animalium, etiam earentium anima. Verum in deis generaliter primum maiestatem ipsius eorum naturae venerabimur, deinde proprie vim cuiusque et inventa, quae utile 7 aliquid hominibus attulerint. Vis ostenditur, ut in Iove regendorum omnium, in Marte belli, in Neptuno maris; inventa, ut artium in Minerva, Mercurio litterarum, medicinae Apolline, Cerere frugum, Li-

However, just as panegyric applied to practical matters requires proof, so too a certain semblance of proof is at times required by speeches composed entirely for display. For instance, a speaker who tells 5 how Romulus was the son of Mars and reared by the she-wolf, will offer as proofs of his divine origin the facts that when thrown into a running stream he escaped drowning, that all his achievements were such as to make it credible that he was the offspring of the god of battles, and that his contemporaries unquestionably believed that he was translated to heaven. Some arguments will even wear a certain semblance 6 of defence: for example, if the orator is speaking in praise of Hercules, he will find excuses for his hero having changed raiment with the Queen of Lydia and submitted to the tasks which legend tells us she imposed upon him. The proper function however of panegyric is to amplify and embellish its themes.

This form of oratory is directed in the main to the praise of gods and men, but may occasionally be applied to the praise of animals or even of inanimate objects. In praising the gods our first step 7 will be to express our veneration of the majesty of their nature in general terms. next we shall proceed to praise the special power of the individual god and the discoveries whereby he has benefited the human race. For example, in the case of Jupiter, we shall 8 extol his power as manifested in the governance of all things, with Mars we shall praise his power in war, with Neptune his power over the sea; as regards inventions we shall celebrate Minerva's discovery of the arts, Mercury's discovery of letters, Apollo's of medicine, Ceres' of the fruits of the earth, Bacchus' hero vini. Tum si qua ab iis aeta vetustas tradidit, commemoranda. Addunt etiam dis honorem parentes, ut si quis sit filius Iovis; addit antiquitas, ut iis, qui sunt ex Chao; progenies quoque, ut Apollo 9 ac Diana Latonae. Laudandum in quibusdam quod geniti immortales, quibusdam quod immortalitatem virtute sint consecuti; quod pietas principis nostri praesentium quoque temporum decus fecit.

QUINTILIAN

10 Magis est varia laus hominum. Nam primum dividitur in tempora, quodque ante eos fuit quoque ipsi vixerunt; in iis autem, qui fato sunt funeti, etiam quod est insecutum. Ante hominem patria ac parentes maioresque erunt, quorum duplex tractatus est: aut enim respondisse nobilitati pulchrum 11 erit aut humiliter genus illustrasse factis. Illa quoque interim ex eo, quod ante ipsum fuit, tempore trahentur, quae responsis vel auguriis futuram claritatem promiserint, ut eum, qui ex Thetide natus esset, maiorem patre suo futurum cecinisse dicuntur 12 oracula. Ipsius vero laus hominis ex animo et corpore et extra positae peti debet. Et corporis quidem fortuitorumque cum levior, tum non uno modo tractanda est. Nam et pulchritudinem interim roburque of wine. Next we must record their exploits as handed down from antiquity. Even gods may derive honour from their descent, as for instance is the case with the sons of Jupiter, or from their antiquity, as in the case of the children of Chaos, or from their offspring, as in the case of Latona, the mother of Apollo and Diana. Some again may be 9 praised because they were born immortal, others because they won immortality by their valour, a theme which the piety of our sovereign has made the glory even of these present times.¹

¹ sc. by Domitian's deification of his father Vespasian and his brother Titus.

There is greater variety required in the praise of 10 men. In the first place there is a distinction to be made as regards time between the period in which the objects of our praise lived and the time preceding their birth; and further, in the case of the dead, we must also distinguish the period following their death. With regard to things preceding a man's birth, there are his country, his parents and his ancestors, a theme which may be handled in two ways. For either it will be creditable to the objects of our praise not to have fallen short of the fair fame of their country and of their sires or to have ennobled a humble origin by the glory of their achievements. Other topics to be drawn from the period preceding 11 their birth will have reference to omens or prophecies foretelling their future greatness, such as the oracle which is said to have foretold that the son of Thetis would be greater than his father. The praise 12 of the individual himself will be based on his character, his physical endowments and external circumstances. Physical and accidental advantages provide a comparatively unimportant theme, which requires variety of treatment. At times for instance

QUINTILIAN

- prosequimur honore verborum, ut Homerus in Agamemnone atque Achille, et interim confert admirationi multum etiam infirmitas, ut cum idem Tydea 13 parvum sed bellatorem dicit fuisse. Fortuna verotum dignitatem adfert, ut in regibus principibusque (namque est haec materia ostendendae virtutis uberior), tum quo minores opes fuerunt, maiorem bene factis gloriam parit. Sed omnia, quae extra nos bona sunt quaeque hominibus forte obtigerunt, non ideo laudantur, quod habuerit quis ea, sed quod
14 iis honeste sit usus. Nam divitiae et potentia et gratia, cum plurimum virium dent, in utramque partem certissimum faciunt morum experimentum, aut enim meliores sumus propter haec aut peiores.
15 Animi semper vera laus, sed non una per hoc opus via ducitur. Namque alias aetatis gradus gestarumque rerum ordinem sequi speciosius fuit, ut in primis annis laudaretur indoles, tum disciplinae, post hoc operum id est factorum dictorumque contextus; alias in species virtutum dividere laudem, fortitudinis, iustitiae, continentiae ceterarumque, ac singulis assignare, quae secundum quamque earum gesta erunt.
16 Utra sit autem harum via utilior, cum materia deliberabimus, dum sciamus gratiora esse audientibus, quae solus quis aut primus aut certe cum paucis fecisse dicetur, si quid praeterea supra spem aut

¹ Iliad, ii. 477.

² Iliad, ii. 180.

³ Iliad, v. 801.

we extol beauty and strength in honorific terms, as Homer does in the case of Agamemnon¹ and Achilles²; at times again weakness may contribute largely to our admiration, as when Homer says³ that Tydeus was small of stature but a good fighter. Fortune too may confer dignity as in the case of 13 kings and princes (for they have a fairer field for the display of their excellences) but on the other hand the glory of good deeds may be enhanced by the smallness of their resources. Moreover the praise awarded to external and accidental advantages is given, not to their possession, but to their honourable employment. For wealth and power and influ- 14 ence, since they are the sources of strength, are the surest test of character for good or evil; they make us better or they make us worse. Praise awarded to 15 character is always just, but may be given in various ways. It has sometimes proved the more effective course to trace a man's life and deeds in due chronological order, praising his natural gifts as a child, then his progress at school, and finally the whole course of his life, including words as well as deeds. At times on the other hand it is well to divide our praises, dealing separately with the various virtues, fortitude, justice, self-control and the rest of them and to assign to each virtue the deeds performed under its influence. We shall have to decide which of 16 these two methods will be the more serviceable, according to the nature of the subject; but we must bear in mind the fact that what most pleases an audience is the celebration of deeds which our hero was the first or only man or at any rate one of the very few to perform: and to these we must add any other achievements which surpassed hope or

QUINTILIAN

exspeetationem, praecipue quod aliena potius causa 17 quam sua. Tempus, quod finem hominis insequitur, non semper tractare contingit; non solum quod videntes aliquando laudamus, sed quod rara haec ocasio est, ut referri possint divini honores et 18 decreta et publice statuae constitutae. Inter quae numeraverim ingeniorum monumenta, quae saeculis probarentur. Nam quidam, sicut Menander, iustiora posterorum quam suae aetatis iudicia sunt conseenti.
Adferunt laudem liberi parentibus, urbes conditori-bus, leges latoribus, artes inventoribus nec non instituta quoque auctoribus, ut a Numa traditum deos colere, a Publicola fascces populo summittere.

19 Qui omnis etiam in vituperatione ordo constabit, tantum in diversum. Nam et turpitudine generis opprobrio multis fuit, et quosdam claritas ipsa noti-ores circa vitia et invisos magis fecit, et in quibusdam, ut in Paride traditum est, praedicta pernicies, et corporis ac fortunae quibusdam mala contemptum, sicut Thersitae atque Iro, quibusdam bona vitiis corrupta odium attulerunt, ut Nireia imbellem, Plis-20 thenen impudicum a poetis accepimus. Et animo

¹ The handsomest warrior among the Greeks of Troy.

² Son of Atreus: the allusion is not known.

expectation, emphasising what was done for the sake of others rather than what he performed on his own behalf. It is not always possible to deal with the time subsequent to our hero's death: this is due not merely to the fact that we sometimes praise him, while still alive, but also that there are but few occasions when we have a chance to celebrate the award of divine honours, posthumous votes of thanks, or statues erected at the public expense. Among such themes of panegyric I would mention monuments of genius that have stood the test of time. For some great men like Menander have received ampler justice from the verdict of posterity than from that of their own age. Children reflect glory on their parents, cities on their founders, laws on those who made them, arts on their inventors and institutions on those that first introduced them; for instance Numa first laid down rules for the worship of the gods, and Publicola first ordered that the lictors' rods should be lowered in salutation to the people.

The same method will be applied to denunciations as well, but with a view to opposite effects. For humble origin has been a reproach to many, while in some cases distinction has merely served to increase the notoriety and unpopularity of vices. In regard to some persons, as in the story of Paris, it has been predicted that they would be the cause of destruction to many, some like Thersites and Irus have been despised for their poverty and mean appearance, others have been loathed because their natural advantages were nullified by their vices: the poets for instance tell us that Nireus¹ was a coward and Pleisthenes² a debauchee. The mind too has as totidem vitia, quot virtutes sunt, nec minus quam in laudibus duplici ratione tractantur. Et post mortem adiecta quibusdam ignominia est, ut Maelio, cuius domus solo aequata, Marcoque Manlio, cuius prae-21 nomen e familia in posterum exemptum est; et parentes malorum odimus; et est conditoribus urbium infame contraxisse aliquam perniciosam ceteris gentem, qualis est primus Iudaicae superstitionis auctor; et Gracchorum leges invisae; et si quod est exemplum deforme posteris traditum, quale libidinis vir Perses in muliere Samia instituere ausus 22 dicitur primus. Sed in viventibus quoque iudicia hominum velut argumenta sunt morum, et honos aut ignominia veram esse laudem vel vituperationem probat.

QUINTILIAN

23 Interesse tamen Aristoteles putat, ubi quidque laudetur aut vituperetur. Nam plurimum refert, qui sint audientium mores, quae publice recepta persuasio, ut illa maxime quae probant esse in eo, qui laudabitur, credant, aut in eo, contra quem dicemus, ea quae oderunt. Ita non dubium erit 24 iudicium, quod orationem praecesserit. Ipsorum etiam permiscenda laus semper, nam id benevolos facit; quotiens autem fieri poterit, cum materiae utilitate iungenda. Minus Laedaemone studia

¹ Moses.

² Rhet. i. 9.

many vices as virtues, and vice may be denounced, as virtue may be praised, in two different ways. Some have been branded with infamy after death like Maelius, whose house was levelled with the ground, or Marcus Manlius, whose first name was banished from his family for all generations to come. The vices of the children bring hatred on 21 their parents; founders of cities are detested for concentrating a race which is a curse to others, as for example the founder of the Jewish superstition;¹ the laws of Gracchus are hated, and we abhor any loathsome example of vice that has been handed down to posterity, such as the criminal form of lust which a Persian is said to have been the first to practise on a woman of Samos. And even in the 22 case of the living the judgment of mankind serves as a proof of their character, and the fairness or foulness of their fame proves the orator's praise or blame to be true.

Aristotle² however thinks that the place and sub- 23 ject of panegyrics or denunciations make a very considerable difference. For much depends on the character of the audience and the generally received opinion, if they are to believe that the virtues of which they approve are pre-eminently characteristic of the person praised and the vices which they hate of the person denounced. For there can be little doubt as to the attitude of the audience, if that attitude is already determined prior to the delivery of the speech. It will be wise 24 too for him to insert some words of praise for his audience, since this will secure their good will, and wherever it is possible this should be done in such a manner as to advance his case. Literature

QUINTILIAN

- litterarum quam Athenis honores merebuntur, plus patientia ac fortitudo. Rapto vivere quibusdam honestum, aliis cura legum. Frugalitas apud Sybaritas forsitan odio foret, veteribus Romanis summum luxuria crimen. Eadem in singulis differentia.
- 25 Maxime favet iudex, qui sibi dicentem assentiri putat. Idem praecipit illud quoque (quod mox Cornelius Celsus prope supra modum invasit), quia sit quaedam virtutibus ac vitiis vicinitas, utendum proxima derivatione verborum, ut pro temerario fortem, pro prodigo liberalem, pro avaro parcum vocemus; quae eadem etiam contra valent. Quod quidem orator, id est vir bonus, nunquam faciet, nisi forte communi utilitate ducetur.
- 26 Laudantur autem urbes similiter atque homines. Nam pro parente est conditor, et multum auctoritatis adfert vetustas, ut iis, qui terra dicuntur orti; et virtutes ac vitia circa res gestas eadem quae in singulis, illa propria quae ex loci positione ac munitione sunt. Cives illis ut hominibus liberi decori.
- 27 Est laus et operum, in quibus honor, utilitas, pulchritudo, auctor spectari solet. Honor ut in templis, utilitas ut in muris, pulchritudo vel auctor will win less praise at Sparta than at Athens, endurance and courage more. Among some races the life of a freebooter is accounted honourable, while others regard it as a duty to respect the laws. Frugality might perhaps be unpopular with the Sybarites, whilst luxury was regarded as a crime by the ancient Romans. Similar differences of opinion are found in individuals. A judge is most favourable to the orator whose views he thinks identical with his own. Aristotle also urges a point, which at a later date Cornelius Celsus emphasised almost to excess, to the effect that, since the boundary between vice and virtue is often ill-defined, it is desirable to use words that swerve a little from the actual truth, calling a rash man brave, a prodigal generous, a mean man thrifty; or the process may, if necessary, be reversed. But this the ideal orator, that is to say a good man, will never do, unless perhaps he is led to do so by consideration for the public interest. 25

Cities are praised after the same fashion as men. 26 The founder takes the place of the parent, and antiquity carries great authority, as for instance in the case of those whose inhabitants are said to be sprung from the soil. The virtues and vices revealed by their deeds are the same as in private individuals. The advantages arising from site or fortifications are however peculiar to cities. Their citizens enhance their fame just as children bring honour to their parents.

Praise too may be awarded to public works, 27 in connexion with which their magnificence, utility, beauty and the architect or artist must be given due consideration. Temples for instance will be praised for their magnificence, walls for utrobique. Est et locorum, qualis Siciliae apud Ciceronem, in quibus similiter speciem et utilitatem intuemur; speciem in maritimis, planis, amoenis; utilitatem in salubribus, fertilibus. Erit et dictorum honestorum factorumque laus generalis, erit et rerum 28 omnis modi. Nam et somni et mortis scriptae laudes et quorundam a medicis ciborum.

Itaque, ut non consensi hoc laudativum genus circa solam versari honesti quaestionem, sic qualitate maxime contineri puto; quanquam tres status omnes cadere in hoc opus possint, iisque usum C. Caesarem in vituperando Catone notaverit Cicero. Totum autem habet aliquid simile suasoriis, quia plerumque eadem illic suaderi, hic laudari solent.

VIII. Deliberativas quoque miror a quibusdam sola utilitate finitas. Ac si quid in his unum sequi oporteret, potior fuisset apud me Ciceronis sententia, qui hoc materiae genus dignitate maxime contineri putat. Nec dubito, quin ii, qui sunt in illa priore sententia, secundum opinionem pulcherrimam ne utile quidem, nisi quod honestum esset, existimarint.
2 Et est haec ratio verissima, si consilium contingat semper bonorum atque sapientium. Verum apud imperitos, apud quos frequenter dicenda sententia est, populumque praecipue, qui ex pluribus constat

¹ in Ferr. ii. 1 sqq., iv. 48.

² Quality, conjecture, definition. See chap. vi. for explanation of this term. ³ Top. xxv. 94.

⁴ de Or. ii. lxxxii. 334.

their utility, and both for their beauty or the skill of the architect. Places may also be praised, witness the praise of Sicily in Cicero.¹ In such cases we consider their beauty and utility: beauty calls for notice in places by the sea, in open plains and pleasant situations, utility in healthy or fertile localities. Again praise in general terms may be awarded to noble sayings or deeds. Finally things of every kind may be praised. Panegyrics have been composed on sleep and death, and physicians have written eulogies on certain kinds of food. 28

While therefore I do not agree that panegyric concerns only questions regarding what is honourable, I do think that it comes as a rule under the heading of quality, although all three *bases*² may be involved in Panegyric and it was observed by Cicero³ that all were actually used by Gaius Caesar in his denunciation of Cato. But panegyric is akin to deliberative oratory inasmuch as the same things are usually praised in the former as are advised in the latter.

VIII. I am surprised that deliberative oratory also has been restricted by some authorities to questions of expediency. If it should be necessary to assign one single aim to deliberative I should prefer Cicero's⁴ view that this kind of oratory is primarily concerned with what is honourable. I do not doubt that those who maintain the opinion first mentioned adopt the lofty view that nothing can be expedient which is not good. That opinion is perfectly sound so long as we are fortunate enough to have wise and good men for counsellors. But as we most often express our views before an ignorant audience, and more especially before popular assemblies, of which 2 indoctis, discernenda sunt haec et secundum com-3 munes magis intellectus loquendum. Sunt enim multi, qui etiam, quae credunt honesta, non tamen satis eadem utilia quoque existiment, et quae turpia esse dubitare non possunt, utilitatis specie ducti pro bent, ut foedus Numantinum iugumque Cau-4 dinum. Ne qualitatis quidem statu, in quo et honestorum et utilium quaestio est, complecti eas satis est. Nam frequenter in his etiam coniecturae locus est, nonnunquam tractatur aliqua finitio, ali-quando etiam legales possunt incidere tractatus, in privata maxime consilia, si quando ambigetur an 5 liceat. De coniectura paulo post pluribus. Interim est finitio apud Demosthenen, Det Halonnesum Philippus, an reddat? apud Ciceronem in Philippicis, Quid sit tumultus? Quid? non illa similis iudicia-lium quaestio de statua Servi Sulpici, an iis demum ponenda sit, qui in legatione ferro sunt interempti?

QUINTILIAN

6 Ergo pars deliberativa, quae eadem suasoria dicitur,

¹ Mancinus was surrounded on retreat from Numantia in 137 B.C., while the surrender at the Caudine Forks took place in 321 B.C. In both cases the Senate refused to ratify the humiliating treaties which had been made the price of the release of the Roman armies.

² For conjecture see III. vi. 30 sqq.

³ Halonnesus had belonged to Athens, but had been seized by pirates. Philip ejected the pirates. The Athenians asked him to restore it; he replied that it belonged to him and that there could be no question of restoration, but if they asked for it as a gift he promised to give it them.

the majority is usually uneducated, we must distinguish between what is honourable and what is expedient and conform our utterances to suit ordinary understandings. For there are many who do not 3 admit that what they really believe to be the honourable course is sufficiently advantageous, and are misled by the prospect of advantage into approving courses of the dishonourable nature of which there can be no question: witness the Numantine treaty and the surrender of the Caudine Forks.¹ Nor does 4 it suffice to restrict deliberative oratory to the basis of quality which is concerned with questions of honour and expediency. For there is often room for conjecture as well. Sometimes again definition is necessary or legal problems require handling; this is especially the case when advice has to be given on private matters, where there is some doubt of the legality of the course under consideration. Of *conjecture*² I shall speak more fully a little later on. Returning to definition for the moment, we 5 find it in the question raised by Demosthenes, "whether Philip should give or restore Halonnesus,"³ and to that discussed by Cicero in the *Philippics*⁴ as to the nature of a tumultus. Again does not the question raised in connection with the statue of Servius Sulpicius⁵ as to "whether statues should be erected only in honour of those ambassadors who perish by the sword" bear a strong resemblance to the questions that are raised in the law courts? The 6 deliberative department of oratory (also called the

¹ viii. i. 2, where the question is discussed as to whether the war with Antony is bellum or tumultus, the latter being the technical name for any grave national emergency such as civil war or a Gallic invasion within the bounds of Italy. ² Phil. ix. 1.

QUINTILIAN

de tempore futuro consultans quaerit etiam de praeterito. Officiis constat duobus suadendi ac dissuadendi.

Prooemio, quale est in iudicialibus, non ubique eget, quia conciliatus est ei quisque, quem consulit. Initium tamen quodcumque debet habere aliquam prooemii speciem; neque enim abrupte nec unde libuit incipiendum, quia est aliquid in omni materia 7 naturaliter primum. In senatu et utique in contionibus eadem ratio quae apud iudices, adquirendae sibi plerumque eorum, apud quos dicendum sit, benevolentiae. Nec mirum, eum etiam in panegyricis petatur audientium favor, ubi emolumentum non in utilitate aliqua, sed in sola laude consistit.
8 Aristoteles quidem nec sine causa putat et a nostra et ab eius, qui dissentiet, persona duci frequenter in consiliis exordium, quasi mutantibus hoc nobis a iudiciali genere, nonnunquam etiam, ut minor res maiorve videatur; in demonstrativis vero prooemia 9 esse maxime libera existimat. Nam et longe a materia duci, ut in Helenae laude Isocrates fecerit; et ex aliqua rei vicinia, ut idem in Panegyrico, cum queritur plus honoris eorum quam animorum virtutibus dari; et Gorgias in Olympico laudans eos, qui primi tales instituerint conventus. Quos secutus advisory department), while it deliberates about the future, also enquires about the past, while its functions are twofold and consist in advising and dissuading.

¹ Rhet. iii. 14.

² The speech opens with a disquisition on the absurd and trivial nature of much that is contained in the speeches of sophists and rhetoricians.

Deliberative oratory does not always require an exordium, such as is necessary in forensic speeches, since he who asks an orator for his opinion is naturally well disposed to him. But the commencement, whatever be its nature, must have some resemblance to an exordium. For we must not begin abruptly or just at the point where the fancy takes us, since in every subject there is something which naturally comes first. In addressing the senate or the people the same 7 methods apply as in the law courts, and we must aim as a rule at acquiring the goodwill of our audience. This need cause no surprise, since even in panegyric we seek to win the favour of our hearers when our aim is praise pure and simple, and not the acquisition of any advantage. Aristotle,¹ it is true, holds, not 8 without reason, that in deliberative speeches we may often begin with a reference either to ourselves or to our opponent, borrowing this practice from forensic oratory, and sometimes producing the impression that the subject is of greater or less importance than it actually is. On the other hand he thinks that in demonstrative oratory the exordium may be treated with 9 the utmost freedom, since it is sometimes drawn from irrelevant material, as for example in Isocrates' Praise of Helen,² or from something akin to the subject, as for instance in the Panegyricus of the same author, when he complains that more honour is given to physical than to moral excellence, or as Gorgias in his speech delivered at the Olympic games praises the founders of the great national games. Sallust seems videlicet C. Sallustius in bello Iugurthino et Catilinae nihil ad historiam pertinentibus principiis orsus est.

QUINTILIAN

10 Sed nunc ad suasoriam, in qua, etiam cum prooemio utemur, brevior tamen et velut quodam capite tantum et initio debemus esse contenti. Narrationem vero nunquam exigit privata deliberatio, eius duntaxat rei, de qua dicenda sententia est;

11 quia nemo ignorat id de quo consulit. Extrinsecus possunt pertinentia ad deliberationem multa narrari. In contionibus saepe est etiam illa, quae ordinem

12 rei docet, necessaria. Adfectus ut quae maxime postulat. Nam et concitanda et lenienda frequenter est ira, et ad metum, cupiditatem, odium, conciliationem impellendi animi. Nonnunquam etiam movenda miseratio, sive, ut auxilium obsessis feratur, suadere oportebit sive sociae civitatis eversionem deflebitur. Valet autem in consiliis auctoritas

13 plurimum. Nam et prudentissimus esse haberique et optimus debet, qui sententiae suae de utilibus atque honestis credere omnes velit. In iudiciis enim vulgo fas habetur indulgere aliquid studio suo; consilia nemo est qui neget secundum mores dari.

to have imitated these authors in his Jugurthine War and in the introduction to his Catiline, which has no connection with his narrative.

But it is time for me to return to deliberative oratory 10 in which, even when we introduce an exordium, we must content ourselves with a brief prelude, which may amount to no more than a mere heading. As regards the statement of facts, this is never required in speeches on private subjects, at least as regards the subject on which an opinion has to be given, because everyone is acquainted with the question at issue.
 Statements as to external matters which are relevant 11 to the discussion may however frequently be introduced. In addressing public assemblies it will often be necessary to set forth the order of the points which have to be treated. As regards appeals to the 12 emotions, these are especially necessary in deliberative oratory. Anger has frequently to be excited or assuaged and the minds of the audience have to be swayed to fear, ambition, hatred, reconciliation. At times again it is necessary to awaken pity, whether it is required, for instance, to urge that relief should be sent to a besieged city, or we are engaged in deploring the overthrow of an allied state. But what really carries greatest weight in deliberative speeches is the authority of the speaker. For he, who would have 13 all men trust his judgment as to what is expedient and honourable, should both possess and be regarded as possessing genuine wisdom and excellence of character. In forensic speeches the orator may, according to the generally received opinion, indulge his passion to some extent. But all will agree that the advice given by a speaker should be in keeping with his moral character.

QUINTILIAN

14 Graecorum quidem plurimi omne hoc officium contionale esse indicaverunt et in sola reipublicae administratione posuerunt. Quin et Cicero in hac maxime parte versatur. Ideoque suasuris de pace, bello, copiis, operibus, vectigalibus haec duo esse praecipue nota voluit, vires civitatis et mores, ut ex 15 suadendi duceretur. Nobis maior in re videtur varietas, nam et consultantium et consiliorum plu-rima sunt genera.

Quare in suadendo et dissuadendo tria primum spectanda erunt, quid sit de quo deliberetur, qui 16 sint qui deliberent, qui sit qui suadeat. Rem, de qua deliberatur, aut certum est posse fieri aut incertum. Si incertum, haec erit quaestio sola aut potentissima; saepe enim accidet, ut prius dicamus, ne si possit quidem fieri, esse faciendum, deinde fieri non posse. Cum autem de hoc quaeritur, coniectura est, an Isthmos intercidi, an sicari palus Pomptina, an portus fieri Ostiae possit, an Alexander terras ultra Oceanum sit inventurus.
17 Sed in iis quoque quae constabit posse fieri, con-iectura aliquando erit, si quaeretur, an utique futurum sit, ut Carthaginem superent Romani; ut

¹ de Orat. ii, 82

² The theme of a suasoria of the elder Seneca (Suas. i).
"Alexander deliberates whether to sail forth into the ocean."

The majority of Greek writers have held that this kind of oratory is entirely concerned with addressing public assemblies and have restricted it to politics. Even Cicero¹ himself deals chiefly with this department. Consequently those who propose to offer advice upon peace, war, troops, public works or revenue must thoroughly acquaint themselves with two things, the resources of the state and the character of its people, so that the method employed in tendering their advice may be based at once on political realities and the nature of their hearers. This type of oratory seems to me to offer a more varied field for eloquence, since both those who ask for advice and the answers given to them may easily present the greatest diversity.

Consequently there are three points which must be specially borne in mind in advice or dissuasion: first the nature of the subject under discussion, secondly the nature of those who are engaged in the discussion, and thirdly the nature of the speaker who offers them advice. As to the subject under discussion its practicability is either certain or uncertain. In the latter case this will be the chief, if not the only point for consideration; for it will often happen that we shall assert first that something ought not to be done, even if it can be done, and secondly, that it cannot be done. Now when the question turns on such points as to whether the Isthmus can be cut through, the Pontine Marshes drained, or a harbour constructed at Ostia, or whether Alexander is likely to find land beyond the Ocean,² we make use of conjecture. But even in connection with things that are undoubtedly feasible, there may at times be room for conjecture, as for instance in questions such as whether Rome is ever likely to redeat Hannibal, si Scipio exercitum in Africam transtulerit; ut servent fidem Samnites, si Romani arma deposuerint. Quaedam et fieri posse et futura esse credibile est, sed aut alio tempore aut alio loco aut alio modo.

- 18 Ubi coniecturae non erit locus, alia sunt intuenda. Et primum aut propter ipsam rem, de qua sententiae rogantur, consultabitur aut propter alias intervenientes extrinsecus causas. Propter ipsam deliberant Patres conscripti, an stipendium militi 19 constituent? Haec materia simplex erit. Accedunt causae aut faciendi, ut deliberant patres conscripti, an Fabios dedant Gallis bellum minitantibus; aut non faciendi, ut deliberat C. Caesar, an perseveret in Germaniam ire, cum milites passim testamenta 20 facerent. Hae suasoriae duplices sunt. Nam et illic causa deliberandi est, quod bellum Galli minitentur; esse tamen potest quaestio, dedendine fuerint etiam citra hanc denuntiationem, qui contra fas, cum legati missi essent, proelium inierint, regemque, ad quem mandata acceperant, truci-21 darint. Et hic nihil Caesar sine dubio deliberaret nisi propter hanc militum perturbationem; est tamen locus quaerendi, an citra hunc quoque casum conquer Carthage, whether Hannibal will return to Africa if Scipio transports his army thither, or whether the Samnites are likely to keep faith if the Romans lay down their arms.¹ There are some things too which we may believe to be both feasible and likely to be carried into effect, but at another time or place or in another way.

¹ sc. at the Caudine Forks: see above, § 3.

² See Livy, v. 36.

³ See Caesar, Gallie War, i. 39, where this detail is recorded, also 40 where the speech made to his troops is given.

When there is no scope for conjecture, our attention will be fixed on other points. In the first place advice will be asked either on account of the actual thing on which the orator is required to express his views, or on account of other causes which affect it from without. It is on the actual thing that the senate for instance debates, when it discusses such questions as whether it is to vote pay for the troops. In this case the material is simple. To this however 19 may be added reasons for taking action or the reverse, as for example if the senate should discuss whether it should deliver the Fabii to the Gauls when the latter threaten war,² or Gaius Caesar should deliberate whether he should persist in the invasion of Germany, when his soldiers on all sides are making their wills.³ These deliberative themes are of a twofold nature. 20 In the first case the reason for deliberation is the Gallie threat of war, but there may still be a further question as to whether even without such threat of war they should surrender those who, contrary to the law of nations, took part in a battle when they had been sent out as ambassadors and killed the king with whom they had received instructions to treat. In the second case Caesar would doubtless never deli- 21 berate on the question at all, but for the perturbation shown by his soldiers; but there is still room for enquiry whether quite apart from this occurrence it penetrandum in Germaniam fuerit. Semper autem de eo prius loquemur, de quo deliberari etiam detractis sequentibus possit.

QUINTILIAN

- 22 Partes suadendi quidam putaverunt honestum, utile, necessarium. Ego non inveno huic tertiae locum. Quantalibet enim vis ingruat, aliquid fortasse pati necesse sit, nihil facere; de faciendo 23 autem deliberatur. Quodsi hanc vocant necessitatem, in quam homines graviorum metu coguntur, utilitatis erit quaestio; ut si obsessi et impares et aqua ciboque defecti de facienda ad hostem deditione deliberent et dicatur, necesse est; nempe sequitur, ut hoc subiiciatur, alioqui pereundum est: ita propter id ipsum non est necesse, quia perire potius licet. Denique non fecerunt Saguntini nec
24 in rate Opitergina circumventi. Igitur in his quoque causis aut de sola utilitate ambigetur aut quaestio inter utile atque honestum consistet. At enim si quis liberos procreare volet, necesse habet ducere uxorem. Quis dubitat? sed ei, qui pater vult fieri, 25 liqueat necesse est uxorem esse ducendam. Itaque mihi ne consilium quidem videtur, ubi necessitas est, non magis quam ubi constat, quid fieri non possit.

¹ In 218 B.C., when besieged by Hannibal. See Livy, xxi. 14.

² C. Antonius was blockaded in an island off the Dalmatian coast which he held for Caesar 49 B.C. Reinforcements on rafts were sent to his rescue. Most were captured; but in one case, of a raft carrying 1,000 men from Opitergium in would be wise to penetrate into Germany. But it must be remembered that we shall always speak first on that subject which is capable of discussion quite apart from the consequences.

Some have held that the three main considerations 22 in an advisory speech are honour, expediency and necessity. I can find no place for the last. For however great the violence which may threaten us, it may be necessary for us to suffer something, but we are not compelled to do anything; whereas the subject of deliberation is primarily whether we shall do anything. Or if by necessity they mean that into which we are 23 driven by fear of worse things, the question will be one of expediency. For example, if a garrison is besieged by overwhelmingly superior forces and, owing to the failure of food and water supplies, discusses surrender to the enemy, and it is urged that it is a matter of necessity, the words "otherwise we shall perish" must needs be added: consequently there is no necessity arising out of the circumstances themselves, for death is a possible alternative. And as a matter of fact the Saguntines¹ did not surrender, nor did those who were 24 surrounded on the raft from Opitergium.² It follows that in such cases also the question will be either one of expediency alone or of a choice between expediency and honour. "But," it will be urged, "if a man would beget children, he is under the necessity of taking a wife." Certainly. But he who wishes to become a father must needs be quite clear that he 25 must take a wife. It appears to me, therefore, that where necessity exists, there is no room for deliberation, any more than where it is clear that a thing is Venetia, surrender was scorned and the men slew each other rather than yield. See Lucan, iv. 462; Florus, ii. 33.

QUINTILIAN

Omnis enim deliberatio de dubiis est. Melius igitur, qui tertiam partem dixerunt δυστάτον, quod nostri possibile nominant, quae ut dura videatur appellatio, 26 tamen sola est. Quas partes non omnes in omnem cadere suasoriam manifestius est, quam ut docendum sit. Tamen apud plerosque earum numerus augetur, a quibus ponuntur ut partes, quae superiorum species sunt partium. Nam fas, iustum, pium, aequum, mansuetum quoque (sic enim sunt interpretati τὸ ἡμέρον) et si qua adhuc adii cere quis eiusdem generis 27 velit, subiici possunt honestati. An sit autem facile, magnum, iucundum, sine periculo, ad quaestionem pertinet utilitatis. Qui loci oriuntur ex contradictione: Est quidem utile sed difficile, parvum, iniucundum, periculosum. 28 Tamen quibusdam videtur esse nonnunquam de iucunditate sola consultatio, ut si de aedificando theatro, instituendis ludis deliberetur. Sed neminem adeo solutum luxu puto, ut nihil in 29 causa suadendi sequatur praeter voluptatem. Praecedat enim semper aliquid necesse est, ut in ludis honor decorum, in theatro non inutilis laborum remissio, deformis et incommoda turbae, si id non sit, not feasible. For deliberation is always concerned with questions where some doubt exists. Those therefore are wiser who make the third consideration for deliberative oratory to be τὸ δυνατόν or "possibility" as we translate it; the translation may seem clumsy, but it is the only word available. That all these 26 considerations need not necessarily obtrude themselves in every case is too obvious to need explanation. Most writers, however, say that there are more than three. But the further considerations which they would add are really but species of the three general considerations just mentioned. For right, justice, piety, equity and mercy (for thus they translate τὸ ἡμέρον), with any other virtues that anyone may be pleased to add, all come under the heading of that which is honourable. On the other hand, if the question 27 be whether a thing is easy, great, pleasant or free from danger, it comes under questions of expediency. Such topics arise from some contradiction; for example a thing is expedient, but difficult, or trivial, or unpleasant, or dangerous. Some however hold that at 28 times deliberation is concerned solely with the question whether a thing is pleasant, as for instance when discussion arises as to whether a theatre should be built or games instituted. But in my opinion you will never find any man such a slave to luxury as not to consider anything but pleasure when he delivers an advisory speech. For there must needs be something on every 29 occasion that takes precedence of pleasure: in proposing the institution of public games there is the honour due to the gods; in proposing the erection of a theatre the orator will consider the advantages to be derived from relaxation from toil, and the unbecoming and undesirable struggle for places which will arise if conflictatio, et nihilominus eadem illa religio, cum theatrum veluti quoddam illius sacri templum voca-30 binus. Saepe vero et utilitatem despiciendam esse dicimus, ut honesta faciamus, ut cum illis Opiterginis damus consilium, ne se hostibus dedant, quanquam perituri sint, nisi fecerint; et utilia honestis praeferimus, ut cum suademus, ut bello Punico servi 31 armentur. Sed neque hic plane concedendum est esse id inhonestum, liberos enim natura omnes et eisdem constare elementis et fortasse antiquis etiam nobilibus ortos dici potest; et illic, ubi manifestum periculum est, opponenda alia, ut crudelius etiam perituros adfirmemus, si se dediderint, sive hostis non servaverit fidem, sive Caesar vicerit, quod est vero 32 similis. Haec autem, quae tantum inter se pug-nant, plerumque nominibus deflecti solent. Nam et utilitas ipsa expugnatur ab iis, qui dicunt, non solum potiora esse honesta quam utilia, sed ne utilia quidem esse, quae non sint honesta; et contra, quod nos honestum, illi vanum, ambitiosum, stolidum, 33 verbis quam re probabilius vocant. Nee tantum inutilibus comparantur utilia, sed inter se quoque ipsa, ut si ex duobus eligamus, in altero quid sit magis, in altero quid sit minus. Crescit hoc adhuc.

QUINTILIAN

Nam interim triplices etiam suasoriae incidunt: ut cum Pompeius deliberabat, Parthos an Africam an Aegyptum peteret. Ita non tantum, utrum melius

¹ After the battle of Cannae: Livy, xxii. 57.

² After his defeat at Pharsalus.

there is no proper accommodation ; religion, too, has its place in the discussion, for we shall describe the theatre as a kind of temple for the solemnization of a sacred feast. Often again we shall urge that honour 30 must come before expediency ; as for instance when we advise the men of Opitergium not to surrender to the enemy, even though refusal to do so means certain death. At times on the other hand we prefer expediency to honour, as when we advise the arming of slaves in the Punic War.¹ But even in this case we 31 must not openly admit that such a course is dishonourable : we can point out that all men are free by nature and composed of the same elements, while the slaves in question may perhaps be sprung from some ancient and noble stock ; and in the former case when the danger is so evident, we may add other arguments, such as that they would perish even more cruelly if they surrendered, should the enemy fail to keep faith, or Caesar (a more probable supposition) prove victorious. But 32 in such a conflict of principles it is usual to modify the names which we give them. For expediency is often ruled out by those who assert not merely that honour comes before expediency, but that nothing can be expedient that is not honourable, while others say that what we call honour is vanity, ambition and folly, as contemptible in substance as it is fair in sound. Nor is expediency compared merely with 33. inexpediency. At times we have to choose between two advantageous courses after comparison of their respective advantages. The problem may be still more complicated, as for instance when Pompey deliberated whether to go to Parthia, Africa or Egypt.² In such a case the enquiry is not which of sed quid sit optimum, quaeritur, itemque contra.

QUINTILIAN

34 Nec unquam incidet in hoc genere materiae dubitatio rei, quae undique secundum nos sit. Nam ubi contradictioni locus non est, quae potest esse causa dubitandi? Ita fere omnis suasoria nihil est aliud quam comparatio, videndumque, quid consecuturi 35 simus et per quid, ut aestimari possit, plus in eo quod petimus sit commodi, an vero in eo per quod petimus incommodi. Est utilitatis et in tempore quaestio, expedit sed non nunc; et in loco, non hic; et in persona, non nobis, non contra hos; et in genere agendi, non sic; et in modo, non in tantum.

Sed personam saepius decoris gratia intuemur, quae et in nobis et in iis, qui deliberant, spectanda 36 est. Itaque quamvis exempla plurimum in consiliis possint, quia facillime ad consentiendum homines ducuntur experimentis, refert tamen, quorum auctoritas et quibus adhibeatur. Diversi sunt enim 37 deliberantium animi, duplex condicio. Nam consultant aut plures aut singuli; sed in utrisque differentia, quia et in pluribus multum interest, senatus two courses is better or worse, but which of three or more. On the other hand in deliberative oratory there will never be any doubt about circumstances wholly in our favour. For there can clearly be no doubt about points against which there is nothing to be said. Consequently as a rule all deliberative speeches are based simply on comparison, and we must consider what we shall gain and by what means, that it may be possible to form an estimate whether there is more advantage in the aims we pursue or greater disadvantage in the means we employ to that end. A question of expediency may also be concerned with time (for example, "it is expedient, but not now") or with place ("it is expedient, but not here") or with particular persons ("it is expedient, but not for us" or "not as against these") or with our method of action ("it is expedient, but not thus") or with degree ("it is expedient, but not to this extent").

But we have still more often to consider personality with reference to what is becoming, and we must consider our own as well as that of those before whom the question is laid. Consequently, though examples are of the greatest value in deliberative speeches, because reference to historical parallels is the quickest method of securing assent, it matters a great deal whose authority is adduced and to whom it is commended. For the minds of those who deliberate on any subject differ from one another and our audience may be of two kinds. For those who ask us for advice are either single individuals or a number, and in both cases the factors may be different. For when advice is asked by a number of persons it makes a considerable difference whether they are sit an populus, Romani an Fidenates, Graeci an barbari, et in singulis, Catoni petendos honores suadeamus an C. Mario, de ratione belli Scipio prior an 38 Fabius deliberet. Proinde intuenda sexus, dignitas, aetas. Sed mores praecipue discrimen dabunt. Et honesta quidem honestis suadere facillimum est; si vero apud turpes recta obtinere conabimur, ne videamur exprobrare diversam vitae sectam, cavendum.

QUINTILIAN

39 Et animus deliberantis non ipsa honesti natura, quam ille non respicit, permovendus, sed laude, vulgi opinione, et si parum proficiet haec vanitas, secutura ex his utilitate, aliquanto vero magis obiiciendo
40 aliquos, si diversa fecerint, metus. Namque praeter id quod his levissimi cuiusque animus facillime terretur, nescio an etiam naturaliter apud plurimos plus valeat malorum timor quam spes bonorum, sicut facilior eisdem turpium quam honestorum intellectus 41 est. Aliquando bonis quoque suadentur parum decora, dantur parum bonis consilia, in quibus ipsorum qui consulunt spectatur utilitas. Nec me fallit, quae statim cogitatio subire possit legentem: Hoc ergo 42 praecipis? et hoc fas putas? Poterat me liberare Cicero, qui ita scribit ad Brutum, praepositis plurimis, ¹ The letter is lost. The argument of the quotation is as follows. The policy which I advise is honourable, but it would be wrong for me to urge Caesar to follow it, since it is contrary to his interests.

the senate or the people, the citizens of Rome or Fidenae, Greeks or barbarians, and in the case of single individuals, whether we are urging Cato or Gaius Marius to stand for office, whether it is the elder Scipio or Fabius who is deliberating on his plan of campaign. Further sex, rank, and age, must be taken into account, though it is character that will make the chief difference. It is an easy task to recommend an honourable course to honourable men, but if we are attempting to keep men of bad character to the paths of virtue, we must take care not to seem to upbraid a way of life unlike our own. The minds of such an audience are not to be moved by discoursing on the nature of virtue, which they ignore, but by praise, by appeals to popular opinion, and if such vanities are of no avail, by demonstration of the advantage that will accrue from such a policy, or more effectively perhaps by pointing out the appalling consequences that will follow the opposite policy. For quite apart from the fact that the minds of unprincipled men are easily swayed by terror, I am not sure that most men's minds are not more easily influenced by fear of evil than by hope of good, for they find it easier to understand what is evil than what is good. Sometimes again we urge good men to adopt a somewhat unseemly course, while we advise men of poor character to take a course in which the object is the advantage of those who seek our advice. I realise the thought that will immediately occur to my reader: "Do you then teach that this should be done or think it right?" Cicero¹ might clear me from blame in the matter; for he writes to Brutus in the following terms, after setting forth a number of things that quae honeste suaderi Caesari possint: Simne bonus vir, si haec suadeam? Minime. Suasoris enim finis est utilitas eius, cui quisque suadet. At recta sunt. Quis negat? sed non est semper rectis in suadendo locus. Sed quia est altior quaestio nec tantum ad suasorias pertinet, destinatus est mihi hic locus duodecimo, 43 qui summus futurus est, libro. Nec ego quidquam fieri turpiter velim. Verum interim haec vel ad scholarum exercitationes pertinere credantur, nam et iniquorum ratio noscenda est, ut melius aequa

QUINTILIAN

44 tueamur. Interim si quis bono inhonesta suadebit, meminerit non suadere tanquam inhonesta, ut quidam declamatores Sextum Pompeium ad piraticam propter hoc ipsum quod turpis et crudelis sit, impellunt; sed dandus illis deformibus color idque etiam apud malos. Neque enim quisquam est tam malus,

45 ut videri velit. Sic Catilina apud Sallustium loquitur, ut rem sceleratissimam non malitia, sed indignatione videatur audere. Sic Atreus apud Varium: —Iam fero (inquit) infandissima, Iam facere cogor. Quanto magis eis, quibus cura famae fuit, conser-

46 vandus est hic velut ambitus? Quare et, cum Ciceroni dabimus consilium, ut Antonium roget, vel etiam ut Philippicas (ita vitam pollicente eo) exurat, non cupiditatem lucis allegabimus (haec enim si

¹ Chap. xii. ² Cat. xx.

³ For examples of this theme see the elder Seneca (Suas. vi. and vii.).

might honourably be urged on Caesar : "Should I be a good man to advise this? No. For the end of him who gives advice is the advantage of the man to whom he gives it. But, you say, your advice is right. Certainly, but there is not always room for what is right in giving advice." However, this is a somewhat abstruse question, and does not concern deliberative oratory alone. I shall therefore reserve it for my twelfth and concluding book.¹ For my part 43 I would not have anything done dishonourably. But for the meantime let us regard these questions as at least belonging to the rhetorical exercises of the schools : for knowledge of evil is necessary to enable us the better to defend what is right. For the 44 present I will only say that if anyone is going to urge a dishonourable course on an honourable man, he should remember not to urge it as being dishonourable, and should avoid the practice of certain declaimers who urge Sextus Pompeius to piracy just because it is dishonourable and cruel. Even when we address bad men, we should gloss over what is unsightly. For there is no man so evil as to wish to seem so. Thus Sallust makes Catiline² speak as one 45 who is driven to crime not by wickedness but by indignation, and Varius makes Atreus say :

"My wrongs are past all speech,
And such shall be the deeds they force me to."

How much more has this pretence of honour to be kept up by those who have a real regard for their own good name ! Therefore when we advise Cicero 46 to beg Antonius for mercy or even to burn the Philippics if Antonius promises to spare him on that condition,³ we shall not emphasise the love of life in our advice (for if that passion has any force with valet in animo eius, tacentibus quoque nobis valet), 47 sed ut reipublicae se servet hortabimur. Hac illi opus est occasione, ne eum talium precum pudeat.

QUINTILIAN

Et C. Caesari suadentes regnum adfirmabimus stare iam rempublicam nisi uno regente non posse. Nam qui de re nefaria deliberat, id solum quaerit, quo-modo quam minimum peccare videatur.

48 Multum refert etiam, quae sit persona suadentis; quia anteacta vita si illustris fuit aut clarius genus aut aetas aut fortuna adfert expectationem, provi-dendum est, ne quae dicuntur ab eo qui dicit dis-sentiant. At his contraria summissiorem quendam modum postulant. Nam quae in aliis libertas est, in aliis licentia vocatur, et quibusdam sufficit auctoritas, quosdam ratio ipsa aegre tuetur.

49 Ideoque longe mihi difficillimae videntur prosopo-poeiae, in quibus ad reliquum suasoriae laborem accedit etiam personae difficultas. Namque idem illud aliter Caesar, aliter Cicero, aliter Cato suadere debebit. Utilissima vero haec exercitatio, vel quod duplicis est operis, vel quod poetis quoque aut historiarum futuris scriptoribus plurimum confert 50 Verum et oratoribus necessaria. Nam sunt multae a Graecis Latinisque compositae orationes, quibus alii uterentur, ad quorum condicionem vitamque

¹ Julius Caesar.

him, it will have it none the less if we are silent), but we shall exhort him to save himself in the interest of the state. For he needs some such reason 47 as that to preserve him from feeling shame at entreating such a one as Antony. Again if we urge Gaius Caesar¹ to accept the crown we shall assert that the state is doomed to destruction unless controlled by a monarchy. For the sole aim of the man who is deliberating about committing a criminal act is to make his act appear as little wicked as possible.

It also makes a great deal of difference who it is 48 that is offering the advice: for if his past has been illustrious, or if his distinguished birth or age or fortune excite high expectations, care must be taken that his words are not unworthy of him. If on the other hand he has none of these advantages he will have to adopt a humbler tone. For what is regarded as liberty in some is called licence in others. Some receive sufficient support from their personal authority, while others find that the force of reason itself is scarce sufficient to enable them to maintain their position.

Consequently I regard impersonation as the most 49 difficult of tasks, imposed as it is in addition to the other work involved by a deliberative theme. For the same speaker has on one occasion to impersonate Caesar, on another Cicero or Cato. But it is a most useful exercise because it demands a double effort and is also of the greatest use to future poets and historians, while for orators of course it is absolutely necessary. For there are many speeches composed 50 by Greek and Latin orators for others to deliver, the words of which had to be adapted to suit the position and character of those for whom they were aptanda quae dicebantur fuerunt. An eodem modo cogitavit aut eandem personam induit Cicero, cum scriberet Cn. Pompeio et cum T. Ampio ceterisque; ac non minus cuiusque eorum fortunam, dignitatem, res gestas intuitus omnium, quibus vocem dabat, etiam imaginem expressit? ut melius quidem sed 51 tamen ipsi dicere viderentur. Neque enim minus vitiosa est oratio, si ab homine quam si ab re, cui accommodari debuit, dissidet; ideoque Lysias optime videtur in iis, quae scribebat indoctis, servasse veritatis fidem. Enimvero praecipue declamatoribus considerandum est, quid cuique personae conveniat, qui paucissimas controversias ita dicunt ut advocati, plerumque filii, parentes, divites, senes, asperi, lenes, avari, denique superstitiosi, timidi, derisores sunt; ut vix comoediarum actoribus plures habitus in pronuntiando concipiendi sint quam his in dicendo.

QUINTILIAN

52 Quae omnia possunt videri prosopopoeiae, quam ego suasoriis subieci, quia nullo alio ab iis quam persona distat. Quanquam haec aliquando etiam in controversias ducitur, quae ex historiis compositae 53 certis agentium nominibus continentur. Neque ignoro plerumque exercitationis gratia poni et poeticas et historicas, ut Priami verba apud Achillem

¹ Nothing is known of these speeches.

written. Do you suppose that Cicero thought in the same way or assumed the same character when he wrote for Gnaeus Pompeius and when he wrote for Titus Ampius and the rest? ¹ Did he not rather bear in mind the fortune, rank and achievements of each single individual and represent the character of all to whom he gave a voice so that though they spoke better than they could by nature, they still might seem to speak in their own persons? For a speech 51 which is out of keeping with the man who delivers it is just as faulty as the speech which fails to suit the subject to which it should conform. It is for this reason that Lysias is regarded as having shown the highest art in the speeches which he wrote for uneducated persons, on account of their extraordinary realism. In the case of declaimers indeed it is of the first importance that they should consider what best suits each character: for they rarely play the rôle of advocates in their declamations. As a rule they impersonate sons, parents, rich men, old men, gentle or harsh of temper, misers, superstitious persons, cowards and mockers, so that hardly even comic actors have to assume more numerous rôles in their performances on the stage than these in their declamations. All these rôles may 52 be regarded as forming part of impersonation, which I have included under deliberative themes, from which it differs merely in that it involves the assumption of a rôle. It is sometimes introduced even with controversial themes, which are drawn from history and involve the appearance of definite historical characters as pleaders. I am aware also 53 that historical and poetical themes are often set for the sake of practice, such as Priam's speech to aut Sullae dictaturam deponentis in contione. Sed haec in partem cedent trium generum, in quae causas divisimus. Nam et rogare, indicare, rationem reddere et alia, de quibus supra dictum est, varie atque ut res tulit in materia iudiciali, deliberativa, 54 demonstrativa, solemus. Frequentissime vero in iis utimur ficta personarum, quas ipsi substituimus, oratione, ut apud Ciceronem pro Caelio Clodiam et Caecus Appius et Clodius frater, ille in castigationem, hic in exhortationem vitiorum compositus, alloquitur.

55 Solent in scholis fingi materiae ad deliberandum similiores controversiis et ex utroque genere compositae, ut cum apud C. Caesarem consultatio de poena Theodoti ponitur. Constat enim accusatione et defensione causa eius, quod est iudicialium pro- 56 prium. Permixa tamen est et utilitatis ratio, an pro Caesare fuerit occidi Pompeium, an timendum a rege bellum, si Theodotus sit occisus, an id minime opportunum hoc tempore et periculosum et 57 certe longum sit futurum. Quaeritur et de honesto, deceatne Caesarem ultio Pompeii, an sit verendum, ne peiorem faciat suarum partium causam, si 58 Pompeium indignum morte fateatur. Quod genus accidere etiam veritati potest.

¹ xiv. sqq.

Achilles or Sulla's address to the people on his resignation of the dictatorship. But these will fall under one or other of the three classes into which I have divided causes. For entreaty, statement, and argument, with other themes already mentioned, are all of frequent occurrence in forensic, deliberative or demonstrative subjects, according as circumstances demand, and we often introduce fictitious speeches 54 of historical persons, whom we select ourselves. Cicero for instance in the *pro Caelio*¹ makes both Appius Caecus and her brother Clodius address Clodia, the former rebuking her for her immorality, the latter exhorting her thereto.

In scholastic declamations the fictitious themes for 55 deliberative speeches are often not unlike those of controversial speeches and are a compromise between the two forms, as for instance when the theme set is a discussion in the presence of Gaius Caesar of the punishment to be meted out to Theodotus; for it consists of accusation and defence, both of them peculiar to forensic oratory. But the topic of expediency also 56 enters into the case, in such questions as whether it was to Caesar's advantage that Pompeius should be slain; whether the execution of Theodotus would involve the risk of a war with the king of Egypt; whether such a war would be highly inopportune at such a critical moment, would prove dangerous and be certain to last a long time. There is also a question 57 of honour. Does it befit Caesar to avenge Pompeius' death? or is it to be feared that an admission that Pompeius did not deserve death will injure the cause of the Caesarian party? It may be noted that dis- 58 cussions of such a kind may well occur in actual cases.

QUINTILIAN

Non simplex autem circa suasorias error in plerisque declamatoribus fuit, qui dicendi genus in iis diversum atque in totum illi iudiciali contrarium esse existimaverunt. Nam et principia abrupta et concitatam semper orationem et in verbis effusio-rem, ut ipsi vocant, cultum adfectaverunt, et earum breviores utique commentarios quam legalis materiae facere 59 laborarunt. Ego porro ut prooemio video non utique opus esse suasoriis, propter quas dixi supra causas, ita cur initio furioso sit exclamandum, non intelligo; cum proposita consultatione rogatus sententiam, si modo est sanus, non quiritet, sed quam maxime potest civili et humano ingressu mereri ad sensum
60 deliberantis velit. Cur autem torrens et utique aequaliter concitata sit in ea dicentis oratio, cum vel praecipue moderationem consilia desiderent? Neque ego negaverim, saepius subsidere in controversiis impetum dicendi prooemio, narratione, argumentis; quae si detrahas, id fere supererit, quo suasoriae constant, verum id quoque aequalius erit non tumul-
61 tuosius atque turbidius. Verborum autem magnificentia non validius est adfectanda suasorias declamantibus, sed contingit magis; nam et personae fere magnae fingentibus placent, regum, principum, Declaimers have however often been guilty of an error as regards deliberative themes which has involved a series of consequences. They have considered deliberative themes to be different and absolutely opposed to forensic themes. For they have always affected abrupt openings, an impetuous style and a generous embellishment, as they call it, in their language, and have been especially careful to make shorter notes for deliberative than for forensic themes. For my part while I realise that deliberative themes 59 do not require an exordium, for reasons which I have already stated, I do not, however, understand why they should open in such a wild and exclamatory manner. When a man is asked to express his opinion on any subject, he does not, if he is sane, begin to shriek, but endeavours as far as possible to win the assent of the man who is considering the question by a courteous and natural opening. Why, I ask, in 60 view of the fact that deliberations require moderation above all else, should the speaker on such themes indulge in a torrential style of eloquence kept at one high level of violence? I acknowledge that in controversial speeches the tone is often lowered in the exordium, the statement of facts and the argument, and that if you subtract these three portions, the remainder is more or less of the deliberative type of speech, but what remains must likewise be of a more even flow, avoiding all violence and fury. With 61 regard to magnificence of language, deliberative declaimers should avoid straining after it more than others, but it comes to them more naturally. For there is a preference among those who invent such themes for selecting great personages, such as kings, princes, senators and peoples, while the theme itself

QUINTILIAN

senatus, populi et res ampliores ; ita cum verba rebus 62 aptentur, ipso materiae nitore clarescunt. Alia veris consiliis ratio est, ideoque Theophrastus quam maxime remotum ab omni adfectione in deliberativo genere voluit esse sermonem, secutus in hoc auctoritatem praeceptoris sui, quanquam dissentire ab eo 63 non timide solet. Namque Aristoteles idoneam maxime ad scribendum demonstrativam proximamque ab ea iudicalem putavit, videlicet quoniam prior illa tota esset ostentationis, haec secunda egeret artis, vel ad fallendum, si ita poposcisset utilitas, 64 consilia fide prudentiaque constarent. Quibus in demonstrativa consentio, nam et omnes alii scrip-tores idem tradiderunt ; in iudiciis autem consiliisque secundum condicionem ipsius, quae tractabitur, rei 65 accommodandam dicendi credo rationem. Nam et Philippicas Demosthenis iisdem quibus habitas in iudiciis orationes video eminere virtutibus, et Ciceronis sententiae et contiones non minus clarum, quam est in accusationibus ac defensionibus, eloquentiae lumen ostendunt. Dicit tamen idem de suasoria hoc modo : Tota autem oratio simplex et gravis 66 et sententiis debet ornatior esse quam verbis. Usus exemplorum nulli materiae magis convenire merito fere omnes consentiunt, cum plerumque videantur

¹ Rhet. iii. 12.

² Part. or. xxvii. 97.

is generally on a grander scale. Consequently since the words are suited to the theme, they acquire additional splendour from the magnificence of the matter. In actual deliberations the case is different, 62 and consequently Theophrastus laid it down that in the deliberative class of oratory the language should as far as possible be free from all affectation: in stating this view he followed the authority of his instructor, although as a rule he is not afraid to differ from him. For Aristotle¹ held that the demonstrative 63 type of oratory was the best suited for writing and that the next best was forensic oratory: his reason for this view was that the first type is entirely concerned with display, while the second requires art, which will even be employed to deceive the audience, if expedience should so demand, whereas advice requires only truth and prudence. I agree with this view as 64 regards demonstrative oratory (in fact all writers are agreed on this point), but as regards forensic and deliberative themes I think that the style must be suited to the requirements of the subject which has to be treated. For I notice that the Philippics of Demosthenes 65 are pre-eminent for the same merits as his forensic speeches, and that the opinions expressed by Cicero before the senate or the people are as remarkable for the splendour of their eloquence as the speeches which he delivered in accusing or defending persons before the courts. And yet Cicero² says of deliberative oratory that the whole speech should be simple and dignified, and should derive its ornament rather from the sentiments expressed than the actual words. As regards the use of examples practically all authorities are with good reason agreed that there is no 66 subject to which they are better suited, since as a

QUINTILIAN

respondere futura praeteritis, habeaturque experi-67 mentum velut quoddam rationis testimonium. Brevitas quoque aut copia non materiae genere sed modo constat. Nam ut in consiliis plerumque simplicior quaestio est, ita saepe in causis minor.

Quae omnia vera esse sciet, si quis non orationes modo, sed historias etiam (namque in iis contiones atque sententiae plerumque suadendi ac dissuadendi funguntur officio), legere maluerit quam in commen-68 tariis rhetorum consenescere. Inveniet enim nec in consiliis abrupta initia et concitatus saepe in iudiciis dictum et verba aptata rebus in utroque genere et breviores aliquando causarum orationes quam sen-69 tentiarum. Ne illa quidem in iis vitia deprehendet, quibus quidam declamatores laborant, quod et contra sentientibus inhumane conviciantur et ita plerumque dicunt, tanquam ab iis qui deliberant utique dissen-tiant, ideoque obiurgantibus similiores sunt quam 70 suadentibus. Haec adolescentes sibi scripta sciant, ne aliter quam dicturi sunt exerceri velint et in desuescendis morentur. Ceterum, cum advocari coeperint in consilia amicorum, dicere sententiam in rule history seems to repeat itself and the experience of the past is a valuable support to reason. Brevity 67 and copiousness are determined not so much by the nature as by the compass of the subject. For, just as in deliberations the question is generally less complicated, so in forensic cases it is often of less importance.

Anyone who is content to read not merely speeches, but history as well, in preference to growing grey over the notebooks of the rhetoricians, will realise the truth of what I say: for in the historians the speeches delivered to the people and the opinions expressed in the senate often provide examples of advice and dissuasion. He will find an avoidance of abrupt 68 openings in deliberative speeches and will note that the forensic style is often the more impetuous of the two, while in both cases the words are suited to the matter and forensic speeches are often shorter than deliberative. Nor will he find in them those faults into 69 which some of our declaimers fall, namely a coarse abuse of those who hold opposite opinions and a general tendency to speak in such a way as to make it seem that the speaker's views are in opposition to those of the persons who ask his advice. Consequently their aim seems to be invective rather than persuasion. I would have my younger readers realise that these 70 words are penned for their special benefit that they may not desire to adopt a different style in their exercises from that in which they will be required to speak, and may not be hampered by having to unlearn what they have acquired. For the rest if they are ever summoned to take part in the counsels of their friends, or to speak their opinions in the senate, or advise the emperor on some point on which he senatu, suadere si quid consulet princeps, quod praeceptis fortasse non credunt, usu docebuntur.

QUINTILIAN

IX. Nunc de iudiciali genere, quod est praecipue multiplex, sed officii constat duobus intentionis ac depulsionis. Cuius partes, ut plurimis auctoribus placuit, quinque sunt: prooemium, narratio, probatio, refutatio, peroratio. His adiecerunt quidam partitionem, propositionem, excessum; quarum priores duae probationi succedunt. Nam proponere quidem, quae sis probaturus, necesse est, sed et concludere; cur igitur si illa pars causae est, non et haec sit? Partitio vero dispositionis est species, ipsa dispositio pars rhetorices et per omnes materias totumque earum corpus aequaliter fusa, sicut inventio, elocutio. Ideoque eam non orationis totius partem unam esse credendum est sed quaestionum etiam singularum. Quae est enim quaestio, in qua non promittere possit orator, quid primo, quid secundo, quid tertio sit loco dicturus? quod est proprium partitionis. Quam ergo ridiculum est, quaestionem quidem speciem esse probationis, partitionem autem, quae sit species quaestionis, partem totius orationis vocari? Egressio vero vel, quod usitatus esse coepit, excessus, sive est extra causam, non potest esse pars causae, sive est in causa, adiutorium vel ornamentum partium est earum, ex quibus egreditur. Nam si, quidquid in causa est, pars causae vocabitur, cur non argumentum, similitudo, may consult them, they will learn from practice what they cannot perhaps put to the credit of the schools.

IX. I now come to the forensic kind of oratory, which presents the utmost variety, but whose duties are no more than two, the bringing and rebutting of charges. Most authorities divide the forensic speech into five parts: the exordium, the statement of facts, the proof, the refutation, and the peroration. To these some have added the partition into heads, proposition and digression, the two first of which form part of the proof. For it is obviously ² necessary to propound what you are going to prove as well as to conclude. Why then, if proposition is a part of a speech, should not conclusion be also? Partition on the other hand is merely one aspect of arrangement, and arrangement is a part of rhetoric itself, and is equally distributed through every theme of oratory and their whole body, just as are invention and style. Consequently we must regard partition ³ not as one part of a whole speech, but as a part of each individual question that may be involved. For what question is there in which an orator cannot set forth the order in which he is going to make his points? And this of course is the function of partition. But how ridiculous it is to make each question an aspect of proof, but partition which is an aspect of a question a part of the whole speech. As ⁴ for digression (egressio, now more usually styled excessus), if it lie outside the case, it cannot be part of it, while, if it lie within it, it is merely an accessory or ornament of that portion of the case from which digression is made. For if anything that lies within the case is to be called part of it, why not locus communis, adfectus, exempla partes vocentur?

QUINTILIAN

5 Tamen nec iis adsentior, qui detrahunt refutationem tanquam probationi subiectam, ut Aristoteles; haec enim est, quae constituat, illa, quae destruat. Hoc quoque idem aliquatenus novat, quod prooemio non narrationem subiungit sed propositionem. Verum id facit, quia propositio ei genus, narratio species videtur, et haec non semper, illa semper et ubique credit opus esse.

6 Verum ex his quas constitui partibus non, ut quidque primum dicendum, ita primum cogitandum est; sed ante omnia intueri oportet, quod sit genus causae, quid in ea quaeratur, quae prosint, quae noceant, deinde quid confirmandum sit ac refellendum, tum quo modo narrandum. Expositio enim probationum est praeparatio, nec esse utilis potest, nisi prius constiterit, quid debeat de probatione promittere. Postremo intuendum, quemadmodum iudex sit conciliandus. Neque enim nisi totius causae partibus diligenter inspectis scire possumus, qualem nobis facere animum cognoscentis expediat, severum an mitem, concitatum an remissum, adversum gratiae an obnoxium.

8 Neque ideo tamen eos probaverim, qui scribendum

¹ Rhet. ii. 26.

² Rhet. iii. 13.

call argument, comparison, commonplace, pathos, illustration parts of the case? On the other hand I 5 disagree with those who, like Aristotle,¹ would remove refutation from the list on the ground that it forms part of the proof: for the proof is constructive, and the refutation destructive. Aristotle² also introduces another slight novelty in making proposition, not statement of facts, follow the exordium. This however he does because he regards proposition as the genus and statement of facts as the species, with the result that he holds that, whereas the former is always and everywhere necessary, the latter may sometimes be dispensed with.

It is however necessary to point out as regards 6 these five parts which I have established, that that which has to be spoken first is not necessarily that which requires our first consideration. But above all we must consider the nature of the case, the question at issue and the arguments for and against. Next we must consider what points are to be made, and what refuted, and then how the facts are to be stated. For the statement of facts is 7 designed to prepare the way for the proofs and must needs be unprofitable, unless we have first determined what proofs are to be promised in the statement. Finally we must consider how best to win the judge to take our view. For we cannot be sure until we have subjected all the parts of the case to careful scrutiny, what sort of impression we wish to make upon the judge: are we to mollify him or increase his severity, to excite or relax his interest in the case, to render him susceptible to influence or the reverse?

I cannot however approve the view of those who 8

QUINTILIAN

quoque prooemium novissime putant. Nam ut conferri materiam omnem et, quid quoque loco¹ sit opus, constare decet, antequam dicere aut scribere ordi-9 amur, ita incipiendum ab iis, quae prima sunt. Nam nec pingere quisquam aut fingere coepit a pedibus, nec denique ars ulla consummatur ibi, unde ordiendum est. Quid fiet alioqui, si spatium componendi orationem stilo non fuerit? nonne nos haec inversa consuetudo deceperit? Inspicienda igitur materia est, quo praecepimus ordine, scribenda, quo dicemus.

X. Ceterum causa omnis, in qua pars altera agentis est, altera recusantis, aut unius rei controversia constat aut plurium. Haec simplex dicitur, illa coniuncta. Una controversia est per se furti, per se adulterii. Plures aut eiusdem generis, ut in pecuniis repetundis, aut diversi, ut si quis sacrilegii et homicidii simul accusetur. Quod nunc in publicis iudiciis non accidit, quoniam praetor certa lege sortitur, principum autem et senatus cognitionibus frequens est et populi fuit; privata quoque iudicia saepe unum iudicem habere multis et diversis formulis solent.
2 Nec aliae species erunt, etiamsi unus a duobus dumtaxat eandem rem atque ex eadem causa petet aut

¹ quoque loco, Regius: quoque, MSS.

¹ In the permanent courts (quaestiones perpetuae). There were separate courts for different offences. In cases brought before the Senate or the Emperor a number of different charges might be dealt with at once.

think that the exordium should actually be written last. For though we must collect all our material and determine the proper place for each portion of it, before we begin to speak or write, we must commence with what naturally comes first. No one begins a portrait 9 by painting or modelling the feet, and no art finds its completion at the point where it should begin. Otherwise what will happen if we have not time to write our speech? Will not the result of such a reversal of the proper order of things be that we shall be caught napping? We must therefore review the subject-matter in the order laid down, but write our speech in the order in which we shall deliver it.

X. Every cause in which one side attacks and the other defends consists either of one or more controversial questions. In the first case it is called simple, in the second complex. An example of the first is when the subject of enquiry is a theft or an adultery taken by itself. In complex cases the several questions may all be of the same kind, as in cases of extortion, or of different kinds, as when a man is accused at one and the same time of homicide and sacrilege. Such cases no longer arise in the public courts, since the praetor allots the different charges to different courts in accordance with a definite rule; but they still are of frequent occurrence in the Imperial or Senatorial courts, and were frequent in the days when they came up for trial before the people.¹ Private suits again are often tried by one judge, who may have to determine many different points of law. There are no other species of forensic 2 causes, not even when one person brings the same suit on the same grounds against two different duo ab uno aut plures a pluribus, quod accidere in hereditariis litibus interim scimus, quia quamvis in multis personis causa tamen una est, nisi si condicio personarum quaestiones variaverit.

QUINTILIAN

- 3 Diversum his tertium genus, quod dicitur comparativum; cuius rei tractatus in parte causae frequens est, ut cum apud centumviros post alia quaeritur et hoc, uter dignior hereditate sit. Rarum est autem, ut in foro iudicia propter id solum constituentur, sicut divinationes, quae fiunt de accusatore constituendo, et nonnunquam inter delatores, uter praemium meruerit. Adiecerunt quidam numero mutuan accusationem, quae ἀντικατηγορία vocatur, aliis videlicet succedere hanc quoque comparativo generi existimantibus, cui similis erit petitionum invicem diversarum, quod accidit vel frequentissime. Id si et ipsum vocari debet ἀντικατηγορία (nam proprio caret nomine) duo genera erunt eius, alterum quo litigatores idem erimen invicem intentant, alterum quo aliud atque aliud. Cui et petitionum condicio par est.
- 5 Cum apparuerit genus causae, tum intuebimur, negeturne factum, quod intenditur, an defendatur, an alio nomine appelletur, an a genere actionis repellatur; unde sunt status.

¹ A civil court specially concerned with questions of inheritance.

² Divinatio is a trial to decide between the claims of two persons to appear as accuser, there being no public prosecutor at Rome. cp. Cicero's Divinatio in Caecilium.

persons, or two persons bring the same suit against one, or several against several, as occasionally occurs in lawsuits about inheritances. Because although a number of parties may be involved, there is still only one suit, unless indeed the different circumstances of the various parties alter the questions at issue.

There is however said to be a third and different 3 class, the comparative. Questions of comparison frequently require to be handled in portions of a cause, as for instance in the centumviral court,¹ when after other questions have been raised the question is discussed as to which of two claimants is the more deserving of an inheritance. It is rare however for a case to be brought into court on such grounds alone, as in *divinations*² which take place to determine who the accuser shall be, and occasionally when two informers dispute as to which has earned the reward. Some again have added a fourth class, namely 4 mutual accusation, which they call ἀντικατηγορία. Others, however, regard it as belonging to the comparative group, to which indeed the common case of reciprocal suits on different grounds bears a strong resemblance. If this latter case should also be called ἀντικατηγορία (for it has no special name of its own), we must divide mutual accusation into two classes, in one of which the parties bring the same charge against each other, while in the other they bring different charges. The same division will also apply to claims.

As soon as we are clear as to the kind of cause 5 which we are engaged, we must then consider whether the act that forms the basis of the charge is denied or defended, or given another name or excepted from that class of action. Thus we determine the basis of each case.

QUINTILIAN

XI. His inventis, intuendum deinceps Hermagorae videtur, quid sit quaestio, ratio, iudicatio, continens, vel, ut alii vocant, firmamentum. Quaestio latius intelligitur omnis, de qua in utramque partem vel in plures partes dici credibiliter potest.

2 In iudiciali autem materia dupliciter accipienda est: altero modo, quo dicimus multas quaestiones habere controversiam, quo etiam minores omnes complectimur, altero, quo significamus summam illam, in qua causa vertitur; de hac nunc loquor, ex qua nascitur

3 status, an factum sit, quid factum sit, an recte factum sit. Has Hermagoras et Apollodorus et alii plurimi scriptores proprie quaestiones vocant, Theodorus, ut dixi, capita generalia, sicut illas minores aut ex illis pendentes specialia. Nam et quaestionem ex quaestione nasci et speciem in 4 species dividi convenit. Hanc igitur quaestionem veluti principalem vocant ζήτημα. Ratio autem est, qua id, quod factum esse constat, defenditur. Et cur non utamur eodem, quo sunt usi omnes fere, exemplo? Orestes matrem occidit, hoc constat; dicit se iuste fecisse: status erit qualitatis; quaestio, an iuste fecerit, ratio, quod Clytaemnestra maritum suum, patrem Orestis, occidit; hoc αἴτιον dicitur.

¹ This highly technical chapter will be largely unintelligible to those who have not read chapter vi. Those who have no stomach for such points would do well to skip §§ 1-20; they will however find consolation in § 21 sqq., where Quintilian says what he really thinks of such technicalities.

XI. As soon as these points are ascertained, the next step, according to Hermagoras, should be to consider what is the question at issue, the line of defence, the point for the judge's decision and the central point, or, as others call it, the foundation of the case.¹ The question in its more general sense is taken to mean everything on which two or more plausible opinions may be advanced. In forensic subjects however it 2 must be taken in two senses: first in the sense in which we say that a controversial matter involves many questions, thereby including all minor questions; secondly in the sense of the main question on which the case turns. It is of this, with which the basis originates, that I am now speaking. We ask whether a thing has been done, what it is that has been done, and whether it was rightly done. To 3 these Hermagoras and Apollodorus and many other writers have given the special name of questions; Theodorus on the other hand, as I have already said, calls them general heads, while he designates minor questions or questions dependent on these general heads as special heads. For it is agreed that question may spring from question, and species be subdivided into other species. This main question, then, they 4 call the ζήτημα. The line of defence is the method by which an admitted act is defended. I see no reason why I should not use the same example to illustrate this point that has been used by practically all my predecessors. Orestes has killed his mother: the fact is admitted. He pleads that he was justified in so doing: the basis will be one of quality, the question, whether he was justified in his action, the line of defence that Clytemnestra killed her husband, Orestes' father. This is called the αἴτιον or motive.

QUINTILIAN

Κρινόμενον autem iudicatio, an oportuerit vel nocen-5 tem matrem a filio occidi. Quidam diviserunt αἴτιον et αἰτίαν, ut esset altera, propter quam iudicium constitutum est, ut occisa Clytaemnestra, altera, qua factum defenditur, ut occisus Agamemnon. Sed tanta est circa verba dissensio, ut alii αἰτίαν causam iudicii, αἴτιον autem facti vocent, alii eadem in contrarium vertant. Latinorum quidam haec initium et rationem vocaverunt, quidam utrumque eodem 6 nomine appellant. Causa quoque ex causa, id est αἴτιον ἐξ αἰτίου, nasci videtur, quale est: Occidit Agamemnonem Clytaemnestra, quia ille filiam com-munem immolaverat et captivam pellicem adducebat. Idem putant et sub una quaestione plures esse rationes, ut si Orestes et alteram adferat causam matris necatae, quod responsis sit impulsus; quot autem causas faciendi, totidem iudicationes; nam et haec erit iudicatio, an responsis parere debuerit.
 7 Sed et una causa plures habere quaestiones et iudicationes (ut ego arbitror) potest, ut in eo, qui, cum adulteram deprehensam occidisset, adulterum, qui tum effugerat, postea in foro occidit. Causa enim est una, adulter fuit; quaestiones et iudicationes, an

The point for the decision of the judge is known as the κρινόμενον, and in this case is whether it was right that even a guilty mother should be killed by her son. Some have drawn a distinction between 5 αἴτιον and αἰτία, making αἴτιον mean the cause of the trial, namely the murder of Clytemnestra, αἰτία the motive urged in defence, namely the murder of Agamemnon. But there is such lack of agreement over these two words, that some make αἰτία the cause of the trial and αἴτιον the motive of the deed, while others reverse the meanings. If we turn to Latin writers we find that some have given these causes the names of initium, the beginning, and ratio, the reason, while others give the same name to both. Moreover 6 cause seems to spring from cause, or as the Greeks say αἴτιον ἐξ αἰτίου, as will be seen from the following:—Clytemnestra killed Agamemnon, because he had sacrificed their daughter and brought home a captive woman as his paramour. The same authors think that there may be several lines of defence to one question: for instance Orestes may urge that he killed his mother because driven to do so by oracles. But the number of points for the decision of the judge will be the same as the number of alleged motives for the deed: in this case it will be whether he ought to have obeyed the oracles. But one alleged motive may 7 also in my opinion involve several questions and several points for the decision of the judge, as for instance in the case when the husband caught his wife in adultery and slew her and later slew the adulterer, who had escaped, in the market place. The motive is but one: "he was an adulterer." But there arise as questions and points for decision by the judge, whether

QUINTILIAN

8 illo tempore, an illo loco licuerit occidere. Sed sicut, cum sint plures quaestiones omnesque suos status habeant, causae tamen status unus sit, ad quem referuntur omnia, ita iudicatio maxime propria, 9 de qua pronuntiatur. Συνέχον autem (quod, ut dixi, continens alii, firmamentum alii putant, Cicero fir- missimam argumentationem defensoris et adpositissimam ad iudicationem) quibusdam id videtur esse, post quod nihil quaeritur, quibusdam id quod ad iudicationem 10 firmissimum adfertur. Causa facti non in omnes controversias cadit. Nam quae fuerit causa faciendi, ubi factum negatur? At ubi causa tractetur, negant eodem loco esse iudicationem quo quaestionem, idque et in Rhetoricis Cicero et in Partitionibus 11 dicit. Nam in coniectura est quaestio ex illo Factum, non factum an factum sit. Ibi ergo iudi-catio, ubi quaestio, quia in eadem re prima quaestio et extrema disceptatio. At in qualitate, Matrem Orestes occidit: recte, non recte, an recte occiderit, quaestio nec statim iudicatio. Quando ergo?
Illa patrem meum occiderat; sed non ideo tu matrem 12 debuisti occidere; an debuerit, hic iudicatio. Firma-

¹ De Inv. 1. xiv. 19.

² De Inv. l.c.: Part. Or. xxx. 104.

it was lawful to kill him at that time and at that place. But just as, although there be several questions, 8 each with its special basis, the basis of the case is but one, namely that to which all else is referred, even so the real point for the decision of the judge is, strictly speaking, that on which judgment is given. As for 9 the σύνεχον, the central argument, as I have mentioned it is called by some, or the foundation as it is called by others, or as Cicero¹ styles it the strongest argument of the defender and the most relevant to the decision of the judge, some regard it as being the point after which all enquiry ceases, others as the main point for 10 adjudication. The motive of the deed does not arise in all controversial cases. For how can there be a motive for the deed, when the deed is denied? But when the motive for the deed does come up for discussion, they deny that the point for the decision of the judge rests on the same ground as the main question at issue, and this view is maintained by Cicero² in his Rhetorica and Partitiones. For when it has been 11 asserted and denied that a deed was done, the question whether it was done is resolved by conjecture, and the decision of the judge and the main question rest on the same ground, since the first question and the final decision are concerned with the same point. But when it is stated and denied that Orestes was justified in killing his mother, considerations of quality are introduced: the question is whether he was justified in killing her, but this is not yet the point for the decision of the judge. When, then, does it become so? "She killed my father." "Yes, but that did not make it your duty to murder your mother." The point for the decision of the judge is whether it was his duty to kill her. As regards the foundation, I will put 12

QUINTILIAN

mentum autem verbis ipsius ponam: si velit Orestes dicere eiusmodi animum matris suae fuisse in patrem suum, in se ipsum ac sorores, in regnum, in famam generis et familiae, ut ab ea poenas liberi potissimum sui 13 petere debuerint. Utuntur alii et talibus exemplis: (Qui bona paterna consumpserit, ne contionetur; in opera publica consumpsit; quaestio, an, quisquis consump-
14 serit, prohibendus sit: iudicatio, an, qui sic. Vel, ut in causa militis Arrunti, qui Lusium tribunum vim sibi inferentem interfecit, quaestio, an iure fecerit, ratio, quod is vim afferebat; iudicatio, an indemnatum, an tribunum a milite occidi oport- 15 uerit. Alterius etiam status quaestionem, alterius iudicationem putant. Quaestio qualitatis, an recte Clodium Milo occiderit. Iudicatio coniecturalis, an 16 Clodius insidias fecerit. Ponunt et illud, saepe causam in aliquam rem dimitti, quae non sit propria quaestionis, et de ea iudicari. A quibus multum dissentio. Nam et illa quaestio, an omnes, qui paterna bona consumpserint, contione sint prohibendi, habeat oportet suam iudicationem. Ergo non alia quaestio alia indicatio erit, sed plures quaesti-

¹ de Inv. l.c.

it in the words of Cicero¹ himself:—"The foundation is the strongest argument for the defence, as for instance, if Orestes were ready to say that the disposition of his mother towards his father, himself and his sisters, the kingdom, the reputation of the race and the family were such that it was the peculiar duty of her children to punish her." Others again use 13 illustrations such as the following:—"He who has spent his patrimony, is not allowed to address the people." "But he spent it on public works." The question is whether everyone that spends his patrimony is to be prohibited, while the point for decision is whether he who spent it in such a way is to be prohibited. Or again take the case of the soldier 14 Arruntius, who killed the tribune Lusius for assaulting his honour. The question is whether he was justified in so doing, the line of defence, that the murdered man made an assault upon his honour, the point for the decision of the judge, whether it was right that a man should be killed uncondemned or a tribune by a soldier. Some even regard the basis of the question 15 as being different from the basis of the decision. The question as to whether Milo was justified in killing Clodius, is one of quality. The point for the decision of the judge, namely whether Clodius lay in wait for Milo, is a matter for conjecture. They also 16 urge that a case is often diverted to the consideration of some matter irrelevant to the question, and that it is on this matter that judgment is given. I strongly disagree. Take the question whether all who have spent their patrimony are to be prohibited from addressing the people. This question must have its point for decision, and therefore the question and the point for decision are not different, but there are more

QUINTILIAN

17 ones et plures iudicationes. Quid? non in causa Milonis ipsa coniectura refertur ad qualitatem? nam si est insidiatus Clodius, sequitur, ut recte sit occisus. Cum vero in aliquam rem missa causa recessum est a quaestione, quae erat, et hic constituta quaestio, ubi iudicatio est.¹

18 Paulum in his secum etiam Cicero dissentit. Nam in Rhetoricis (quemadmodum supra dixi) Hermagoran est secutus; in Topicis ex statu effectam contentionem κρινόμενον existimat, idque Trebatio, qui iuris erat consultus, adludens qua de re agitur appellat; quibus id contineatur, continentia, quasi firmamenta defensionis, quibus sublatis defensio nulla sit;

19 at in Partitionibus oratoriis firmamentum, quod opponitur defensioni, quia continens, quod primum sit, ab accusatore dicatur, ratio a reo, ex rationis et firmamenti quaestione disceptatio sit indicationum.

Verius igitur et brevius ii, qui statum et continens et iudicationem idem² esse voluerunt; continens 20 autem id esse, quo sublato lis esse non possit. Hoc mihi videntur utramque causam complexi, et quod than one question and more than one point for decision in the case. Again, in the case of Milo, is not the question of fact ultimately referred to the question of quality? For if Clodius lay in wait for Milo, it follows that he was justifiably killed. But when the case is shifted to some other point far removed from the original question, even in this case the question will be found to reside in the point for decision. 17

¹ causa est recessum est a quaestione quae erat et hic constituta quaestio iudicatio est, A: causa est recessum et a quaestione quae erat hic constituta quaestio ubi iudicatio est, B. The reading and meaning are very uncertain.

² idem, added by Regius.

As regards these questions Cicero is slightly inconsistent with himself. For in the Rhetorica, as I have already mentioned, he followed Hermagoras, while in the *Topica*¹ he holds that the κρινόμενον or disputed point is originated by the basis, and in addressing the lawyer Trebatius on this subject he calls it the point at issue, and describes the elements in which it resides as central arguments or foundations of the defence which hold it together and the removal of which causes the whole defence to fall to the ground. But in the *Partitiones Oratoriae*² he gives the name of foundation to that which is advanced against the defence, on the ground that the central argument, as it logically comes first, is put forward by the accuser, while the line of defence is put forward by the accused, and the point for the decision of the judge arises from the question jointly raised by the central argument and the line of defence. 18 19

The view therefore of those who make the basis, the central argument, and the point for the decision of the judge identical, is at once more concise and nearer to the truth. The central argument, they point out, is that the removal of which makes the whole case fall to the ground. In this central argument they seem to me to have included both the alleged causes, that 20

¹ Top. xxv. 95.² xxix. 103.

QUINTILIAN

Orestes matrem et quod Clytaemnestra Agamemnonem occiderit. Iidem iudicationem et statum consentire semper existinarunt, neque enim aliud eorum rationi conveniens fuisset.

21 Verum haec adfectata subtilitas circa nomina rerum ambitiose laborat, a nobis in hoc assumpta solum, ne parum diligenter inquisisse de opere, quod aggressi sumus, videremur; simplicius autem instituenti non est necesse per tam minutas rerum
22 tículas rationem docendi concidere. Quo vitio multi quidem laborarunt, praecipue tamen Hermagoras, vir alioqui subtilis et in plurimis admirandus, tantum diligentiae nimium sollicitae, ut ipsa eius reprehensio 23 laude aliqua non indigna sit. Haec autem brevior et vel ideo lucidior multo via neque discentem per ambages fatigabit nec corpus orationis in parva momenta diducendo consumet. Nam qui viderit, quid sit, quod in controversiam veniat, quid in eo et per quae velit efficere pars diversa, quid nostra, quod in primis est intuendum, nihil eorum ignorare, 24 de quibus supra diximus, poterit. Neque est fere quisquam modo non stultus atque ab omni prorsus Orestes killed his mother and that Clytemnestra killed Agamemnon. The same authorities have likewise always held that the basis and the point for the decision of the judge are in agreement; any other opinion would have been inconsistent with their general views.

But this affectation of subtlety in the invention of 21 technical terms is mere laborious ostentation: I have undertaken the task of discussing them solely that I might not be regarded as having failed to make sufficient inquiry into the subject which I have chosen as my theme. But it is quite unnecessary for an instructor proceeding on less technical lines to destroy the coherence of his teaching by attention to such minute detail. Many however suffer from this draw- 22 back, more especially Hermagoras who, although he labours these points with such anxious diligence, was a man of penetrating intellect and in most respects deserves our admiration, so that even where we must needs blame him, we cannot withhold a certain meed of praise. But the shorter method, which for that 23 very reason is also by far the most lucid, will not fatigue the learner by leading him through a maze of detail, nor destroy the coherence of his eloquence by breaking it up into a number of minute departments.
 For he who has a clear view of the main issue of a dispute, and divines the aims which his own side and his opponents intend to follow and the means they intend to employ (and it is to the intentions of his own side that he must pay special attention), will without a doubt be in possession of a knowledge of all the points which I have discussed above. And there is hardly 24 anyone, unless he be a born fool without the least acquaintance with the practice of speaking, who does

QUINTILIAN

usu dicendi remotus, quin sciat, et quid litem faciat, (quod ab illis causa vel continens dicitur) et quae sit inter litigantes quaestio, et de quo iudicari oporteat; quae omnia idem sunt. Nam et de eo quaestio est, quod in controversiam venit, et de eo iudicatur, de 25 quo quaestio est. Sed non perpetuo intendimus in haec animum et cupiditate laudis utcumque acquirendae vel dicendi voluptate evagamur, quando uberior semper extra causam materia est, quia in controversia pauca sunt, extra omnia, et hic dicitur de his, quae accepimus, illic, de quibus volumus.
26 Nec tam hoc praecipendum est, ut quaestionem, continens, iudicationem inveniamus (nam id quidem facile est), quam ut intueamur semper, aut certe si digressi fuerimus saltem respiciamus, ne plausum adfectantibus arma excidant. Theodori schola, ut 27 dixi, omnia refert ad capita. His plura intelliguntur: uno modo summa quaestio item ut status, altero ceterae quae ad summam referuntur, tertio propositio cum affirmatione; ut dicimus, Caput rei est, apud Menandrum κεφάλαιόν ἐστιν. In universum autem, quidquid probandum est, erit caput; sed id maius aut minus.

¹ Perhaps a gloss referring to the late rhetorician Menander. If genuine, the words must refer to the comic poet.

not know what is the main issue of a dispute (or as they call it the cause or central argument) and what is the question between the parties and the point on which the judge has to decide, these three being identical. For the question is concerned with the matter in dispute and the decision of the judge is given on the point involved in the question. Still we do not keep 25 our attention rigidly fixed on such details, but the desire to win praise by any available means and the sheer delight in speaking make us wander away from the subject, since there is always richer material for eloquence outside the strict theme of the case, inasmuch as the points of any given dispute are always few, and there is all the world outside, and in the one case we speak according to our instructions, in the other on the subjects of our own choice. We should 26 teach not so much that it is our duty to discover the question, the central argument, and the point for the decision of the judge (an easy task), as that we should continually keep our attention on our subject, or if we digress, at least keep looking back to it, lest in our desire to win applause we should let our weapons drop from our grasp. The school of Theodorus, as I 27 have said, groups everything under heads, by which they mean several things. First they mean the main question, which is to be identified with the basis; secondly they mean the other questions dependent on the main question, thirdly the proposition and the statement of the proofs. The word is used as we use it when we say "It is the head of the whole business," or, as Menander says, κεφάλαιον ἔστιν.¹ But generally speaking, anything which has to be proved will be a head of varying degrees of importance.

QUINTILIAN

28 Et quoniam, quae de his erant a scriptoribus artium tradita, verbosius etiam quam necesse erat exposuimus, praeterea, quae partes essent iudicialium causarum, supra dictum est, proximus liber a prima, id est exordio ineipiet.

I have now set forth the principles laid down by 28 the writers of text-books, though I have done so at a greater length than was necessary. I have also explained what are the various parts of forensic causes. My next book therefore shall deal with the exordium.

INDEX

(Only those names are included which seem to require some explanation; a complete index will be contained in Vol. IV.)

- Accius, I. vii. 14; I. viii. 11. Famous tragic poet, fl. 140 B.C.
- Aelius Stilo, I. vi. 37. Famous as a philologist, circa 100 B.C.
- Aeschines, II. xvii. 12; III. vi. 3. Attic orator, contemporary and opponent of Demosthenes.
- Agnon, II. xvii. 15. Academic philosopher and rhetorician, teacher of Carneades, second century.
- Albutus Silus, C., II. xv. 36; III. iii. 4; III. vi. 62. Rhetorician of the Augustan period.
- Alcidamas, III. i. 10. Rhetorician from Elaea, pupil of Gorgias, fl. 425 B.C.
- Amplius, T., III. viii. 50. T. Amplius Balbus, trib. pleb. 68 B.C., praetor 59. Friend and correspondent of Cicero.
- Anaximenes of Lampsacus, III. iv. 9. A rhetorician, who accompanied Alexander on his campaigns.
- Antigonus, II. xiii. 12. King of Asia, after Alexander's death.
- Antipho, III. i. 11. Orator and instructor of Thucydides.
- Antonius, M., II. xv. 7; II. xvii. 5 sq.; III. i. 19; III. vi. 45. With L. Crassus, the most famous Roman orator prior to Cicero, of whom he was an elder contemporary.
- Antonius Gniphio, I. vi. 23. A famous grammarian and rhetorician, contemporary with Cicero.
- Antonius Rufus I. v. 43. An early grammarian of uncertain date. Possibly also a dramatic poet.
- Apelles, II. xiii. 12. A famous Greek painter, fl. 330 B.C.
- Apollodorus of Pergamus, II. xv. 12; III. i. 1, 17; III. v. 17; III. vi. 35 sq.; III. xi. 3. Cp. II. xi. 2; II. xv. 12; III. i. 18. A distinguished rhetorician of the Augustan age.
- Apollonius Molon of Rhodes, III. i. 16. A famous rhetorician. Cicero was among his pupils.
- Appius Caecus, II. xvi. 7; III. viii. 54. Consul 307 B.C.; specially famous for the speech by which he persuaded the senate to reject Pyrrhus' terms of peace. The earliest great orator of Rome.
- Aquilius Manius, II. xv. 8. Accused of maladministration in Sicily, 98 B.C.
- Archedemus, III. vi. 31, 33. A rhetorician of the generation following Aristotle.
- Archimedes, I. x. 48. The famous mathematician of Syracuse, who perished in the sack of that city by the Romans, 212 B.C., after prolonging the siege by his skill in the construction of siege engines.
- Archytas, I. x. 17. Pythagorean philosopher, mathematician and statesman of Tarentum, fl. 400 B.C.
- Arcus, II. xv. 36; III. i. 16. Stoic

INDEX

- philosopher of Alexandria, first century B.C.
- Argiletum, I. vi. 31. District near the Aventine, popularly derived from argilla (clay) or Argiletum (the death of a mythical Argus).
- Aristarchus, I. iv. 20. A famous Alexandrian critic and grammarian, pupil of Aristophanes of Byzantium.
- Ariston, II. xv. 19. Peripatetic philosopher, disciple of Critolaus.
- Aristophanes of Byzantium, I. l. 15. A famous Alexandrian critic and grammarian, fl. 260 B.C.
- Aristoxenus, I. x. 22. Peripatetic philosopher and musician, contemporary with Aristotle.
- Athenaeus, II. xv. 23; III. i. 16; III. iii. 13; III. v. 5; III. vi. 47. Rhetorician and opponent of Hermagoras (i).
- Athenodorus of Rhodes, II. xvii. 15. Otherwise unknown.
- Atticus, III. i. 18. Dionysius surnamed Atticus, rhetorician, pupil of Apollodorus.
- Beneventum, I. vi. 31. Town in S. Italy, originally Maleventum, but changed for luck to Beneventum.
- Brutus (i), I. vi. 31. The expeller of the kings, so called from feigning to be half-witted (brutus).
- Brutus (ii), III. vi. 93. The murderer of Caesar, famous as an orator of the Attic school.
- Busiris, II. xvii. 4. Legendary king of Egypt, who sacrificed to the gods all foreigners who entered Egypt.
- Caecilius (i), I. viii. 11. Famous comic poet, d. 168 B.C.
- Caecilius (ii), III. i. 16; III. vi. 48. Sicilian rhetorician, who taught at Rome in the reign of Augustus.
- Caelius Rufus, M., I. v. 61; I. vi. 29, 42; III. viii. 51. Younger contemporary of Cicero, distinguished as an orator.
- Calvus, C., I. vi. 42. Younger contemporary of Cicero, poet and orator, with Brutus chief representative of the Attic school.
- Capitolium, I. vi. 31. The Capitol at Rome, fancifully derived from caput Oli, the head of Olus alleged to have been dug up there.
- Cato, M., the Censor, I. vi. 42; I. vii. 23; II. v. 21; II. xv. 8; III. i. 19; III. vi. 97. The famous opponent of Carthage, one of the most distinguished writers and orators of his day, 234-149 B.C.
- Cato Uticensis, III. v. 8; III. viii. 49. Contemporary of Cicero and among the most ardent opponents of Caesar.
- Celsus, Cornelius, II. xv. 22, 32; III. i. 21; III. v. 3; III. vi. 3, 38; III. vii. 25. Writer on medicine, rhetoric and many other subjects; flourished under Augustus and Tiberius.
- Cethegus, M., II. xv. 4. Consul 204. Famous as an orator.
- Chrysippus, I. l. 4, 16; I. iii. 14; I. x. 32; I. xi. 17; II. xv. 34. The most famous of Stoic philosophers, fl. 250 B.C.
- Claudius, I. vii. 26. The emperor.
- Cleanthes, II. xv. 31; II. xvii. 41. One of the earliest Stoic philosophers; successor of Zeno; slightly earlier than Chrysippus.
- Clodius, II. iv. 35; III. v. 10; III. vii. 2; III. viii. 54; III. xi. 15, 17. Demagogue and inveterate enemy of Cicero.
- Colotes, II. xiii. 13. A famous painter, circa 276 B.C.
- Corax, II. xvii. 7; III. l. 8. One of the earliest writers on rhetoric. A Sicilian, fl. circa 470 B.C.
- Cornelius Gallus, I. v. 8. Friend of Virgil and Augustus, first of the elegiac poets of Rome and governor of Egypt, d. 25 B.C.
- Corniliclus, III. i. 21. Rhetorician, contemporary with Cicero. Probably author of the rhetorical treatise ad Herennium.
- Crassus, L., I. xi. 8; II. iv. 42;

INDEX

- II. xx. 9. With L. Antonius the chief Roman orator prior to Cicero, of whom he was an elder contemporary.
- Crates, I. ix. 5. Athenian philosopher, fl. circa 280 B.C.
- Critolaus, II. xv. 19, 23; II. xvii. 15. A Peripatetic of the second century.
- Demades, II. xvii. 13. An Athenian orator, contemporary with Demosthenes.
- Demetrius of Phalerum, II. iv. 41. Statesman, poet, philosopher and orator, 345-283 B.C.
- Didymus, I. viii. 20. Alexandrian grammarian and polymath, contemporary with Cicero, variously alleged to have written 3,500 or 4,000 books.
- Diogenes of Babylon, I. i. 9. Stoic of the second century.
- Dion, I. x. 48. Syracusan disciple of Plato, expelled Dionysius the tyrant and became ruler of Syracuse, where he was murdered, 353 B.C.
- Dion of Prusa, III. iii. 6, 8. Orator and philosopher, known as Chrysostomus. Contemporary of Quintilian.
- Dionysius of Halicarnassus, III. i. 16. Famous rhetorician and historian of the Augustan age.
- Domitius, III. i. 18. Probably Domitius Marsus, a distinguished man of letters of the Augustan age.
- Egeria, II. iv. 19. A nymph, counsellor of King Numa.
- Empedocles, I. iv. 4; III. i. 8. Famous philosopher of Agrigentum, fl. 450 B.C.
- Ennius, I. v. 12; I. vi. 12; I. viii. 11; II. xv. 4; II. xvii. 24. The greatest of the early Roman poets. His chief work was the Annales, the epic of Roman history. Also wrote drama and satire. D. 169 B.C.
- Ephorus, II. viii. 11. Wrote a history of Greece from the earliest times to 341 B.C.
- Eratosthenes, I. i. 16. Poet, geometrician, astronomer and grammarian. Librarian of Alexandria, 276-196 B.C.
- Euenus, I. x. 17. Poet and sophist, contemporary with Plato.
- Eupolis, I. x. 18. A poet of the old comedy, and rival of Aristophanes.
- Fabius Pictor, I. vi. 12. Earliest of Roman historians: wrote the history of Rome down to the battle of Zama.
- Flaminius, II. xvi. 5. General defeated by Hannibal at the battle of L. Trasimene.
- Galba, Servius, II. xv. 8. Praetor in Spain, put to death a number of Lusitanians whom he had promised to spare, for which he was brought to trial on his return to Rome, 150 B.C.
- Gallio, Iunius, III. i. 21. Orator and friend of Ovid.
- Gavius Bassus, I. vi. 36. Grammarian of early Augustan age.
- Glaucia (C. Servilius), II. xvi. 5. Praetor 100 B.C. Supporter of the tribune Saturninus, with whom he perished.
- Gorgias of Leontini, II. xxi. 21; III. i. 8, 12, 13, 18; III. viii. 9. The most famous of Greek sophists and rhetoricians in the fifth century. Born about 480 B.C.
- Hermagoras (i), I. v. 61; II. xv. 14; II. xxi. 21; III. i. 16; III. iii. 9; III. v. 4, 14; III. vi. 3, 21, 53, 56, 59 sq.; III. xi. 1, 3, 18, 22. Famous rhetorician of the Rhodian school, contemporary with Cicero.
- Hermagoras (ii), III. i. 18. Surnamed Carion, rhetorician of the Augustan age.
- Hippias of Elis, III. i. 10, 12. Famous sophist, contemporary with Socrates.
- Hortensia, I. i. 6. Daughter of the orator Hortensius. Pleaded

INDEX

- before Octavian, Antony and Lepidus for remission of part of the tax imposed on married women.
- Hortensius, I. v. 12; II. I. 1, 11; III. v. 11. The leading orator at Rome when Cicero first made his appearance at the bar, and the latter's most serious rival.
- Hyperbolus, I. x. 18. Athenian demagogue at end of fifth century B.C.
- Hyperides, II. xv. 9. Attic orator contemporary with Demosthenes and ranked as second only to him.
- Hypobolimaenus, I. x. 18. "The Supposititious Son," a lost play of Menander.
- Irus, III. vii. 19. A beggar who flirts Odysseus in the Odyssey.
- Isocrates, II. viii. 11; II. xv. 4, 33; III. i. 13 sqq.; III. iv. 11; III. v. 18; III. vi. 3; III. viii. 9. Famous orator and founder of the science and technique of Greek rhetoric. 426-338 B.C.
- Italia, I. vi. 31. From ἰταλοί = oxen, i.e., Oxland.
- Labienus, I. v. 8. Orator and historian under Augustus.
- Laelia, I. i. 6. Daughter of Laelius the wise and wife of Scævola. She was famous for the pure Latinity of her conversation.
- Laenas, Popilius, III. i. 21. Rhetorician probably of the reign of Tiberius.
- Latium, I. vi. 31. Probably from latus = the broad lands: popularly derived from latere, because Saturn lay hid there.
- Leonidas, I. i. 9. Uncle and tutor of Alexander the Great.
- Lucilius, I. v. 56; I. vi. 8; I. vii. 15, 19; I. viii. 11. The founder of Roman satire. D. 163 B.C.
- Maelius, Spurius, III. vii. 20. Bought up corn in time of dearth and sold it cheap to the people in 440 B.C. Was suspected of wishing to seize the supreme power and killed in the following year.
- M. Manlius Capitolinus, III. vii. 20. Saved Rome from the Gauls, but was subsequently suspected of aiming at supreme power and hurled from the Tarpeian rock in 384 B.C.
- Marcellus Victorius, Ep. ad Tryph. 1; I Pr. 5. Nothing is known of him except for the fact that Statius dedicated the Fourth Book of the Silvae to him.
- Matius, III. I. 18. A friend of Augustus.
- Messala, I. v. 15, 61; I. vi. 42; I. vii. 23, 34. Distinguished orator and philologist of the Augustan age.
- Milo of Croton, I. ix. 5. A famous athlete of the sixth century B.C.
- Modestus, I. vi. 36. Probably Iulius Modestus, a grammarian who flourished in the principate of Tiberius.
- Naucrates, III. vi. 3. Orator and rhetorician, famous for the funeral oration on Mausolus, king of Caria, in 352 B.C.
- Nicias, I. x. 48. Athenian statesman and general, was captured with his army in Sicily owing to his refusal to march during eclipse of the moon, 413 B.C.
- Nirens, III. vii. 19. The handsomest man in the Greek army at Troy.
- Pacuvius, I. v. 67; I. viii. 11; I. xii. 18. Famous tragic poet, 220-130 B.C.
- Palaemon, Remmius, I. iv. 20; I. vi. 35. Famous grammaticus, taught Quintilian, fl. circa 30 A.D.
- Palamedes, III. I. 10. Greek chief in the Trojan war, put to death on false accusation of treachery. He was later regarded by the sophists as their prototype.
- Pamphilus, III. vi. 34. A rhetorician mentioned by Aristotle.
- Patrocles, II. xv. 16; III. vi. 41.

INDEX

- Rhetorician otherwise unknown. Some read Iatrocles.
- Paulus, L., I. x. 47. The famous general, surnamed Macedonicus, on account of his successful campaign in Macedonia (168 B.C.) during which the incident referred to occurred.
- Pedianus, Asconius, I. vii. 24. Distinguished historian and critic, contemporary with Quintilian.
- Pericles, I. x. 47. The eclipse in question occurred in 430 B.C. on the eve of an expedition to the Peloponnese.
- Phoenix, II. iii. 12. The tutor of Achilles in the Iliad.
- Plautus, II. xiv. 2; III. vi. 23. Probably the Stoic Rubellius Plautus, d. 62 A.D.
- Plisthenes, III. vii. 19. A son of Atreus. The allusion is uncertain.
- Plotius, II. iv. 42. A rhetorician and older contemporary of Cicero.
- Pollio, Asinius, I. v. 8, 56; I. vi. 42; I. viii. 11. Famous orator, poet and historian of the Augustan age.
- Polycrates, II. xvii. 4; III. i. 11. An Athenian rhetorician, contemporary with Socrates.
- Posidonius, III. vi. 37. Famous philosopher of the Middle Stoa, who taught at Rome in the time of Cicero.
- Prodicus of Cos, III. i. 10, 12. Sophist of the fifth century B.C.
- Protagoras of Abdera, III. i. 10, 12. Sophist of the fifth century B.C.
- Publicola, I. vi. 31; III. vii. 18. Name (= friend of the people) given to M. Valerius, consul in opening year of the republic.
- Pythicus, I. vi. 31. Cognomen in the family of Sulpicius Camerinus (see Dio, 63, 18); origin unknown.
- Quirinalis, collis, I. vi. 31. Various derived from Quirinus, Quirites, and the Sabine town of Cures.
- Saturninus, II. xvi. 5. Tribune and demagogue, killed 100 B.C.
- Sisenna, I. v. 13. Historian and man of letters with a passion for rare words; an elder contemporary of Cicero.
- Sophon, I. x. 17. Famous Sicilian writer of mimes, fl. 450 B.C.
- Sotades, I. viii. 6. Alexandrian writer of indecent lampoons, third century B.C.
- Stertinius, III. i. 21. Stoic writer of the Augustan age.
- Subura, I. vii. 29. A quarter of Rome near the Esquiline.
- Sulpicius, Gallus, I. x. 47; II. xv. 8. Astronomer. Consul 166 B.C. A relative of Servius Sulpicius Galba, q.v.
- Sulpicius, Servius, III. viii. 5. Distinguished orator contemporary with Cicero, died on an embassy to Mark Antony.
- Theodectes, I. iv. 18; II. xv. 10; III. i. 14. Rhetorician of first half of fourth century B.C.
- Theodorus (i), of Byzantium, III. i. 11. Rhetorician contemporary with Plato.
- Theodorus (ii), of Gadara, II. xv. 16, 21; III. i. 17; III. vi. 2, 36, 51; III. xi. 3. Famous rhetorician of the Augustan age. Theodorei = his followers.
- Theodotus, III. viii. 55. Rhetorician of Samos, by whose advice Pompey was murdered; was put to death by Brutus, 43 B.C.
- Theon, III. vi. 48. Stoic and rhetorician of the Augustan age.
- Theopompus (i), II. viii. 11. Famous Greek historian of latter half of fourth century B.C.
- Theopompus (ii), of Sparta, II. xvii. 20. (?) King of Sparta, eighth century B.C.
- Thersites, III. vii. 19. The misshapen demagogue of the Iliad.
- Thrasylbulus, III. vi. 26. Overthrew the Thirty tyrants of Athens, 404 B.C.

INDEX

- Thrasymachus, III. i. 10; III. iii. 4, 12. Rhetorician contemporary with Plato.
- Timagenes, I. x. 10. Rhetorician who came to Rome in 55 B.C. from Alexandria.
- Timanthes, II. xiii. 13. Painter, fl. 400 B.C.
- Timotheus, II. lii. 3. Celebrated fluteplayer of Thebes in the time of Alexander.
- Tinga of Placentia, I. v. 12. Contemporary of Cicero, famous for his wit.
- Tisias, II. xvi. 3; II. xvii. 7; III. i. 8. One of the earliest writers on rhetoric, pupil of Corax, q.v.
- Trypho. Introductory letter. A well-known bookseller and publisher at Rome.
- Tutillius, III. i. 21. Rhetorician, contemporary with Quintilian.
- Valerius Corvinus, II. iv. 18. Consul, 348, 346, 343 B.C.
- Valgius Rufus, C., III. i. 18; III. v. 17. Grammarian and rhetorician of the Augustan age.
- Varius, III. viii. 45. Dramatist and epic poet; friend of Virgil and editor of the Aeneid. His tragedy, the Thyestes, is highly praised, X. i. 98.
- Varro of Atax, I. v. 17. Poet of the last years of the republic; translated Apollonius Rhodius and Aratus and wrote elegies in honour of his mistress Leucadia.
- Varro of Reate, I. iv. 4; I. vi. 12, 37. The most learned of Roman writers. Wrote on grammar, agriculture and antiquities; also Menippean satires; d. at great age, 28 B.C.
- Verginius Flavus, III. i. 21; III. vi. 45. Famous rhetorician, who flourished under Nero.
- Zeno of Citium, II. xx. 7. Famous Stoic philosopher of first half of third century B.C.
- Zopyrus of Clazomenae, III. vi. 3. Rhetorician, flourished in first half of third century B.C.

THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED

Latin Authors

- APULEIUS. THE GOLDEN ASS (METAMORPHOSES).
W. Adlington (1566). Revised by S. Gaselee. (4th Imp.)
- AULUS GELLIUS. J. C. Rolfe. 3 Vols.
- AUSONIUS. H. G. Evelyn White. 2 Vols.
- BEDE. J. E. King. 2 Vols.
- BOETHIUS: TRACTS AND DE CONSOLATIONE PHILOSOPHIAE. Rev. H. F. Stewart and E. K. Rand.
(2nd Imp.)
- CAESAR: CIVIL WARS. A. G. Peskett. (3rd Imp.)
- CAESAR: GALLIC WAR. H. J. Edwards. (6th Imp.)
- CATULLUS. F. W. Cornish; TIBULLUS. J. B. Postgate; AND PERVIGILIUM VENERIS. J. W. Mackail. (9th Imp.)
- CICERO: DE FINIBUS. H. Rackham. (3rd Imp. revised.)
- CICERO: DE NATURA DEORUM AND ACADEMICA.
H. Rackham.
- CICERO: DE OFFICIIS. Walter Miller. (3rd Imp.)
- CICERO: DE SENECTUTE, DE AMICITIA, DE DIVINATIONE. W. A. Falconer. (3rd Imp.)
- CICERO: DE REPUBLICA AND DE LEGIBUS. Clinton W. Keyes.
- CICERO: LETTERS TO ATTICUS. E. O. Winstedt.
3 Vols. (Vol. I. 4th Imp., Vol. II. 3rd Imp. and III. 2nd Imp.)
- CICERO: LETTERS TO HIS FRIENDS. W. Glynn Williams. 3 Vols.

- CICERO: PHILIPPICS. W. C. A. Ker.
- CICERO: PRO ARCHIA, POST REDITUM, DE DOMO, DE HARUSPICUM RESPONSIS, PRO PLANCIO. N. H. Watts.
- CICERO: PRO QUINCTIO, PRO ROSCIO AMERINO, PRO ROSCIO COMOEDO, CONTRA RULLUM. J. H. Freese.
- CICERO: TUSCULAN DISPUTATIONS. J. E. King.
- CICERO: PRO CAECINA, PRO LEGE MANILIA, PRO CLUENTIO, PRO RABIRIO. H. Grose Hodge.
- CICERO: PRO MILONE, IN PISONEM, PRO SCAURO, PRO FONTEIO, PRO RABIRIO POSTUMO, PRO MARCELLO, PRO LIGARIO, PRO REGE DEIOTARO. N. H. Watts.
- CICERO: VERRINE ORATIONS. L. H. G. Greenwood. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
- CLAUDIAN. M. Platnauer. 2 Vols.
- FLORUS: E. S. Forster, and CORNELIUS NEPOS: J. C. Rolfe.
- FRONTINUS: STRATAGEMS AND AQUEDUCTS. C. E. Bennett.
- FRONTO: CORRESPONDENCE. C. R. Haines. 2 Vols.
- HORACE: ODES AND EPODES. C. E. Bennett. 9th) Imp. revised.)
- HORACE: SATIRES, EPISTLES, ARS POETICIA. H. R. Fairclough. (3rd Imp. revised.)
- JEROME: SELECTED LETTERS. F. A. Wright.
- JUVENAL AND PERSIUS. G. G. Ramsay. (5th Imp.)
- LIVY. B. O. Foster. 13 Vols. Vols. I.-V. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp. revised.)
- LUCAN. J. D. Duff.
- LUCRETIUS. W. H. D. Rouse. (3rd Imp. revised.)
- MARTIAL. W. C. A. Ker. 2 Vols. (3rd Imp. revised.)
- OVID: THE ART OF LOVE AND OTHER POEMS. J. H. Mozley.
- OVID: FASTI. Sir James G. Frazer.
- OVID: HEROIDES AND AMORES. Grant Showerman. (3rd Imp.)
- OVID: METAMORPHOSES. F. J. Miller. 2 Vols. 5th Imp.
- OVID: TRISTIA AND EX PONTO. A. L. Wheeler.
- PETRONIUS. M. Heseltine; SENECA: APOCOCYNTOSIS. W. H. D. Rouse. (5th Imp.)

- PLAUTUS. Paul Nixon. 5 Vols. Vol. I.-IV. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp. Vol. II. 2nd Imp. Vol. III. 4th Imp.)
- PLINY: LETTERS. Melmoth's Translation revised by W. M. L. Hutchinson. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 4th Imp., Vol. II. 3rd Imp.)
- PROPERTIUS. H. E. Butler. (4th Imp.)
- QUINTILIAN. H. E. Butler. 4 Vols. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.)
- ST. AUGUSTINE, CONFESSIONS OF. W. Watts (1631). 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 4th Imp., Vol. II. 3rd Imp.)
- ST. AUGUSTINE, SELECT LETTERS. J. H. Baxter.
- SALLUST. J. Rolfe. (2nd Imp. revised.)
- SCRIPTORES HISTORIAE AUGUSTAE. D. Magie. 3 Vols. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp. revised.)
- SENECA: APOCOLOCYNTOSIS. Cf. PETRONIUS.
- SENECA: EPISTULAE MORALES. R. M. Gummere. 3 Vols. Vols. I. and II. 2nd Imp. revised.)
- SENECA: MORAL ESSAYS. J. W. Basore. 3 Vols. Vols. I. and II.
- SENECA: TRAGEDIES. F. J. Miller. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp. revised.)
- SILIUS ITALICUS. J. D. Duff. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
- STATIUS. J. H. Mozley. 2 Vols.
- SUETONIUS. J. C. Rolfe. 2 Vols. (4th Imp. revised.)
- TACITUS: DIALOGUS. Sir Wm. Peterson and AGRICOLA AND GERMANIA. Maurice Hutton. (4th Imp.)
- TACITUS: HISTORIES AND ANNALS. C. H. Moore and J. Jackson. 3 Vols. Vols. I. and II. (Histories and Annals I-III.)
- TERENCE. John Sargeant. 2 Vols. (5th Imp.)
- TERTULLIAN: APOLOGIA AND DE SPECTACULIS. T. R. Glover. MINUCIUS FELIX. G. H. Rendall.
- VELLEIUS PATERCULUS AND RES GESTAE. F. W. Shipley.
- VIRGIL. H. R. Fairclough. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 11th Imp. Vol. II. 8th Imp.)
- VITRUVIUS: DE ARCHITECTURA. F. Granger. 2 Vols. Vol. I.

Greek Authors

- ACHILLES TATIUS. S. Gaselee.
- AENEAS TACTICUS: ASCLEPIODOTUS AND ONASANDER. The Illinois Greek Club.
- AESCHINES. C. D. Adams.
- AESCHYLUS. H. Weir Smyth. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp., Vol. II. 2nd Imp.)
- APOLLODORUS. Sir James G. Frazer. 2 Vols.
- APOLLONIUS RHODIUS. R. C. Seaton. (4th Imp.)
- THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Kirsopp Lake. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 5th Imp., Vol. II. 4th Imp.)
- APPIAN'S ROMAN HISTORY. Horace White. 4 Vols. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp., Vols. II., III. and IV. 2nd Imp.)
- ARATUS. Cf. CALLIMACHIUS.
- ARISTOPHANES. Benjamin Bickley Rogers. 3 Vols. (3rd Imp.) Verse trans.
- ARISTOTLE: "ART" OF RHETORIC. J. H. Freese.
- ARISTOTLE: METAPHYSICS. H. Tredennick. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
- ARISTOTLE: NICOMACHEAN ETHICS. H. Rackham.
- ARISTOTLE: PHYSICS. Rev. P. Wicksteed and F. M. Cornford. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
- ARISTOTLE: POETICS AND LONGINUS. W. Hamilton Fyfe; DEMETRIUS ON STYLE. W. Rhys Roberts. (2nd Imp. revised.)
- ARISTOTLE: POLITICS. H. Rackham.
- ARRIAN, HISTORY OF ALEXANDER AND INDICA. Rev. E. Hille Robson. 2 Vols.
- ATHENAEUS: DEIPNOSOPHISTAE. C. B. Gulick. 7 Vols. Vols. I-V.
- CALLIMACHIUS AND LYCOPHRON. A. W. Mair; ARATUS. G. R. Mair.
- CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA. Rev. G. W. Butterworth.
- COLLUTHUS. Cf. OPIAN.
- DAPHNIS AND CHLOE. Thornley's Translation revised by J. M. Edmonds; AND PARTHENIUS. S. Gaselee. (2nd Imp.)
- DEMOSTHENES: DE CORONA AND DE FALSA LEGATIONE. C. A. Vince and J. H. Vince.
- DEMOSTHENES: OLYNTHIACS, PHILIPPICS AND MINOR ORATIONS I-XVII AND XX. J. H. Vince.
- DIO CASSIUS: ROMAN HISTORY. E. Cary. 9 Vols. (Vol. II. 2nd Imp.)
- DIO CHRYSOSTOM. J. W. Cohoon. 4 Vols. Vol. I.
- DIODORUS SICULUS. C. H. Oldfather. In 10 Volumes. Vol. I.

- DIOGENES LAERTIUS. R. D. Hicks. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.) EPICTETUS. W. A. Oldfather. 2 Vols.
 EURIPIDES. A. S. Way. 4 Vols. (Vol. I. 5th Imp., Vol. II. 5th Imp., Vol. IV. 4th Imp., Vol. III. 3rd Imp.) Verse trans.
 EUSEBIUS: ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY. Kirsopp Lake and J. E. L. Oulton. 2 Vols.
 GALEN: ON THE NATURAL FACULTIES. A. J. Brock. (2nd Imp.)
 THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY. W. R. Paton. 5 Vols. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp., Vol. II. 2nd Imp.) GREEK ELEGY AND IAMBUS WITH THE ANACREONTEA. J. M. Edmonds. 2 Vols.
 THE GREEK BUCOLIC POETS (THEOCRITUS, BION, MOSCHUS). J. M. Edmonds. (5th Imp. revised.) HERODES. Cf. THEOPIRASTUS: CHARACTERS.
 HERODOTUS. A. D. Godley. 4 Vols. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp., Vols. II.-IV. 2nd Imp.) HESIOD AND THE HOMERIC HYMNS. H. G. Evelyn White. (4th Imp.) HIPPOCRATES AND THE FRAGMENTS OF HERACLEITUS. W. H. S. Jones and E. T. Withington. 4 Vols.
 HOMER: ILIAD. A. T. Murray. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp., Vol. II. 2nd Imp.)
 HOMER: ODYSSEY. A. T. Murray. 2 Vols. (4th Imp.) ISAEUS. E. W. Forster.
 ISOCRATES. George Norlin. 3 Vols. Vols. I. and II.
 JOSEPHUS: II. St. J. Thackeray. 8 Vols. Vols. I.-IV.
 JULIAN. Wilmer Cave Wright. 3 Vols. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.) LUCIAN. A. M. Harmon. 8 Vols. Vols. I.-IV. (Vols. I. and II. 3rd Imp.) LYCOPHRON. Cf. CALLIMACHUS.
 LYRA GRAECA. J. M. Edmonds. 3 Vols. (Vols. I. and II. 2nd Ed. revised and enlarged.) LYSIAS. W. R. M. Lamb.
 MARCUS AURELIUS. C. R. Haines. (3rd Imp. revised.) MENANDER. F. G. Allinson. (2nd Imp. revised.) OPPIAN, COLLUTHUS, TRYPHIODORUS. A. W. Mair.
 PAPYRI (SELECTIONS). A. S. Hunt and C. C. Edgar. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
 PARTHENIUS. Cf. DAPHNIS AND CHLOE.
 PAUSANIAS: DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. W. H. S. Jones. 5 Vols. and Companion Vol. Vols. I., II. and III. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.)

- PHILO. F. H. Colson and Rev. G. H. Whitaker. 10 Vols.
Vols. I.-IV.
- PHILOSTRATUS: THE LIFE OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA. F. C. Conybeare. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 3rd Imp., Vol. II. 2nd Imp.)
- PHILOSTRATUS. IMAGINES; CALLISTRATUS.
DESCRIPTIONS. A. Fairbanks.
- PHILOSTRATUS AND EUNAPIUS: LIVES OF THE SOPIHISTS. Wilmer Cave Wright.
- PINDAR. Sir J. E. Sandys. (5th Imp. revised.)
- PLATO: CHARMIDES, ALCIBIADES, HIPPARCHIUS, THE LOVERS, THEAGES, MINOS AND EPINOMIS.
W. R. M. Lamb.
- PLATO: CRATYLUS, PARMENIDES, GREATER HIP-PIAS, LESSER HIPPIAS. H. N. Fowler.
- PLATO: EUTHYPHRO, APOLOGY, CRITO, PHAEDO, PHAEDRUS. H. N. Fowler. (7th Imp.)
- PLATO: LACHES, PROTAGORAS, MENO, EUTHY-DEMUS. W. R. M. Lamb.
- PLATO: LAWS. Rev. R. G. Bury. 2 Vols.
- PLATO: LYSIS, SYMPOSIUM, GORGIAS. W. R. M.
Lamb. (2nd Imp. revised.)
- PLATO: REPUBLIC. Paul Shorey. 2 Vols.
- PLATO: STATESMAN, PHILEBUS. H. N. Fowler; ION. W. R. M. Lamb.
- PLATO: THEAETETUS AND SOPHIST. H. N. Fowler.
(2nd Imp.)
- PLATO: TIMAEUS, CRITIAS, CLITOPHIO, MENEXE-NUS, EPISTULAE. Rev. R. G. Bury.
- PLUTARCHI: MORALIA. F. C. Babbitt. 14 Vols. Vols.
I.-III.
- PLUTARCHI: THE PARALLEL LIVES. B. Perrin. 11
Vols. (Vols. I., II., III. and VII. 2nd Imp.)
- POLYBIUS. W. R. Paton. 6 Vols.
- PROCOPIUS: HISTORY OF THE WARS. H. B.
Dewing. 7 Vols. Vols. I.-V. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.)
- QUINTUS SMYRNAEUS. A. S. Way. Verse trans.
- ST. BASIL: LETTERS. R. J. Deferrari. 4 Vols.
- ST. JOHN DAMASCENE: BARLAAM AND IOASAPH.
Rev. G. R. Woodward and Harold Mattingly.
- SENTUS EMPIRICUS. Rev. R. G. Bury. In 3 Vols.
Vol. I.

- SOPHOCLES. F. Storr. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 6th Imp., Vol. II. 4th Imp.) Verse trans.
- STRABO: GEOGRAPHY. Horace L. Jones. 8 Vols. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.)
- THEOPHRASTUS: CHARACTERS. J. M. Edmonds; HERODES, etc. A. D. Knox.
- THEOPHRASTUS: ENQUIRY INTO PLANTS. Sir Arthur Hort, Bart. 2 Vols.
- THUCYDIDES. C. F. Smith. 4 Vols. (Vols. I., II. and III. 2na Imp. revised.)
- TRYPHIODORUS. Cf. OPPIAN.
- XENOPHON: CYROPAEDIA. Walter Miller. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
- XENOPHON: HELLENICA, ANABASIS, APOLOGY AND SYMPOSIUM. C. L. Brownson and O. J. Todd. 3 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
- XENOPHON: MEMORABILIA AND OECONOMICUS. E. C. Marchant.
- XENOPHON: SCRIPTA MINORA. E. C. Marchant.

IN PREPARATION

Greek Authors

- ARISTOTLE, ATHENIAN CONSTITUTION. H. Rackham.
- ARISTOTLE, DE ANIMA, etc. W. S. Hett.
- ARISTOTLE, ECONOMICS. W. G. Armstrong.
- ARISTOTLE, ON HISTORY, MOTION AND PROGRESSION OF ANIMALS. E. S. Forster and A. Peck.
- ARISTOTLE, ORGANON. H. P. Cooke.
- DEMOSTHENES, MEIDIAS, ANDROTION, ARISTOCRATES, TIMOCRATES. J. H. Vince.
- DEMOSTHENES, PRIVATE ORATIONS. G. M. Calhoun.
- GREEK MATHEMATICAL WORKS. J. Thomas.
- MINOR ATTIC ORATORS (ANTIPIION, ANDOCIDES, DEMADES, DINARCHUS, HYPEREIDES). K. Maidment.
- MYTHOGRAPHI GRAECI. D. H. Knappe.

Latin Authors

- AMMIANUS MARCELIINUS. J. C. Rolfe.
CELSUS. W. G. Spencer.
CICERO, IN CATILINAM, PRO FLACCO, PRO MURENA, PRO SULLA. B. L. Ullman.
CICERO, DE ORATORE. Charles Stuttaford and W. E. Sutton.
CICERO, ORATOR, BRUTUS. H. Caplan.
CICERO, PRO SESTIO, IN VATINIUM, PRO CAELIO, PRO PROVINCIIS CONSULARIBUS, PRO BALBO. J. H. Freese.
ENNIUS, LUCILIUS and other specimens of Old Latin. E. H. Warmington.
PLINY, NATURAL HISTORY. W. H. S. Jones.
PRUDENTIUS. J. H. Baxter and C. J. Fordyce.
SIDONIUS, LETTERS & POEMS. E. V. Arnold and W. B. Anderson.
VALERIUS FLACCUS. J. H. Mozley.

DESCRIPTIVE PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION

London	-	-	WILLIAM HEINEMANN
New York	-	-	- G. PUTNAM'S SONS

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

