Local manufacturing jobs face uncertain future

BY MICHAEL WALTON

One are the well-paying jobs that once employed more than 3,000 workers at a sprawling industrial plant not far from the New Stanton exit along the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

"Companies that are born here, grow here and establish roots here, those are the ones that tend to stick around."

JIM SMITH
CEO OF ECONOMIC GROWTH CONNECTION OF WESTMORELAND

Rows of empty parking spaces previously reserved for those who first built Volkswagen Golfs and Jettas and later Sony television components stretched around the vast facility on a recent cloudy morning.

But inside, work continues.

Educators train the next generation of machinists, welders and craftsmen. Nearby, men and women make envelopes and state-of-the-art batteries.

While the scale is smaller, the work shows that manufacturing lives on in places such as Greensburg, Jeannette and Ligonier.

"This industry, manufacturing, is still a very significant part of our local economy," said William Thompson, executive director of the Westmoreland-Fayette Workforce Investment Board.

Since 1980, nearly 7 million U.S. manufacturing jobs — more than a third of all such positions that existed then — have been lost to globalization and automation, according to The Brookings Institution.

The decline hit communities across the country and state, including Westmoreland County. But local companies continue to make and sell products ranging from colossal industrial turbines to quarter-inch, stainless-steel hex nuts.

Factory fallout

The number of Americans with manufacturing jobs has declined over the last 35 years, with the trend accelerating in the first decade of the 2000s. Numbers have rebounded since.

Beijing irate over phone call

Trump's talk with Taiwanese president breaks 4-decade policy; observers fear retaliation by China

WIRE REPORTS

BEIJING — On Friday, President Xi Jinping told Henry Kissinger that he hoped for "stability" in U.S.-China ties under the new administration. Nobody told Donald Trump.

The president-elect broke with four decades of diplomatic practice by talking on the phone Friday with Taiwanese President Tsai Ing-wen, a breach of protocol that could disrupt U.S.-China ties before the inauguration.

» Green Party drops bid. A3

The 10-minute phone call is believed to be the first time that a U.S. president or president-elect and a Taiwanese leader have spoken since the late 1970s.

It left Beijing fuming and China-watchers the world over wondering, "Is this a slip-up or a major shift?"

The United States formally recognized the government in Beijing as representing China in 1978 and has pursued a "One China" policy since 1972, when then-President Richard M. Nixon visited China. But although the U.S. government ended official relations with Taiwan in 1979, U.S. presidential administrations have maintained unofficial ties with Taiwan, which has become a thriving democracy in recent decades.

Fire's death toll expected to rise

Stairwell made of wooden pallets was only way out of rave in Calif.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Fire tore through an Oakland warehouse converted into artist studios during a late-night dance party, killing at least nine people, and officials said Saturday that the death toll could rise as high as 40.

Officials said people either escaped from the cluttered building or died inside, where the only way down from the second story was via a stairwell constructed entirely of wooden pallets.

Naloxone an important tool in opioid battle

As more police departments throughout state carry, administer overdose-reversal drug, deaths still on rise

BY RENATTA SIGNORINI

Greensburg Patrolman Henry Fontana Jr. has had a hand in reviving three people who were near death from drug overdoses since late summer.

One man was lying unconscious in an alley.

Another had overdosed at a home.

The third, a woman, initially didn't respond when Fontana used a nasal spray of naloxone, a medication that can reverse the effects of an opioid overdose.

Within hours, wildfires set Tenn. mountain city aflame

Hopes of containment dashed as low humidity, high temperatures aided spread

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GATLINBURG, Tenn. — Tracey Mayberry told her boss to fire her. It was 2 o'clock Monday afternoon in Gatlinburg, and the sky was dark with smoke. Mayberry's shift as a manager at the resort where she worked did not end until 5 p.m., but she could see a wildfire crawling down the mountain. Local officials said the city had nothing to worry about, and Mayberry's boss had no plans to close. But she knew something was wrong, so she walked home, coughing and crying through the smoke until a stranger handed her a mask.

That wildfire had ignited five days earlier on a steep, rugged peak known as Chimney Tops, about 4 miles away from Gatlinburg. In less than 24 hours, aided by 87 mph winds and months of suffocating drought, the blaze would spread, forging a path to this tourist mecca. In all, 13 people were killed, about 85 were injured and nearly 1,000 homes and businesses were charred or destroyed.

The flames came with little warning.

At 5 o'clock, there were no fires in Gatlinburg. Within an hour, 20 buildings were ablaze.

Over the next few hours, the fires transformed a city busily preparing for holiday festivities in the foothills of the Great Smoky Mountains into the scene of a grim, building-by-building search for the missing and the dead. Rain fell by midweek, dousing much of the fire but leaving hollow-eyed city officials, firefighters and police officers working around the clock. Many had to put news of their own gutted homes from their minds.

Across the city, firefighters were locked in a hopeless battle. The wind was scattering chunks of flame across a thirsty landscape and knocking trees into power lines, creating new fires. At 6 o'clock, authorities shifted their focus from stopping the fire to evacuating the city.

At a local hospital, 57-year-old Mark Howard was recovering from pneumonia when a neighbor called to tell him his house was on fire. He dialed 911 from his hospital bed.

The operator said, "Are you kidding me? You're calling us?" Howard said. "I said, 'Yeah, is there another number I should call?'"

The fire had been burning for several days, mostly in the unreachable peaks of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park not far from the edge of one of the most popular hiking trails. The fire was so small and so remote that for days firefighters could not get to it. Instead they came up with a plan to contain it. But beginning Sunday afternoon and into Monday morning, the moisture vanished from the air, the temperature rose and the wind began galloping through the trees.

By Monday afternoon, "There was no stopping the fire," said Clayton Jordan, deputy superintendent for the park.

N.D. officials say they have plans to aid protesters

In emergency, 'We aren't going to let somebody out there freeze'

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FARGO, N.D. — The head of North Dakota's emergency management services says the state is prepared to respond to Dakota Access pipeline protesters who may need help during a winter storm or some other crisis.

State Homeland Security Director Greg Wilz said it would be a "huge challenge," especially during a mass evacuation, but his office has winter shelter plans in place and various agencies are ready to respond.

"The bottom line here is, if we are in a situation of life and limb, we are going to be humane in anything and everything we do," Wilz said. "We aren't going to let somebody out there freeze. So if they start evacuating en masse looking for shelter — which I highly suspect will happen — we would take care of that."

The government has ordered hundreds of protesters to leave the Oceti Sakowin, or Seven Council Fires camp, on federal land in southern North Dakota by Monday, although demonstrators say they're prepared to stay until changes are made to the route of the four-state, $3.8-billion pipeline. The Standing Rock Sioux tribe and others say the pipeline north of the reservation could pollute drinking water and threatens sacred sites.

The North Dakota Department of Transportation and Morton County Highway Department will be key players in any evacuation plans, Wilz said, noting that those agencies worked to keep roads clear around the protest site during a recent storm that dumped more than a foot of snow.

U.S. Attorney General Loretta Lynch said in a statement Friday that the Department of Justice has offered community policing resources to local law enforcement as "winter begins to take hold."

Warehouse was subject of numerous complaints

FIRE • FROM A1

Sheriff's Office spokesman Sgt. Ray Kelly.

Just last month, the city of Oakland opened an investigation into the warehouse after numerous complaints filed by neighbors complaining of trash piling up outside the property and reports people were illegally living in the building, which was zoned as a warehouse.

Darin Ranelletti of the Oakland Planning Department said the city opened an investigation Nov. 13, and an investigator went to the premises Nov. 17 but could not get inside the building. The city has not confirmed people were living inside.

Firefighters used chain saws and axes Saturday to cut through the debris of the cluttered building in a gritty neighborhood of the San Francisco Bay Area city, where the fire broke out about 11:30 p.m. Friday.

Aerial images of the warehouse showed the structure was gutted with just the wooden frame remaining. Fire officials said the roof collapsed into the second floor, which in places fell to the bottom floor.

It's unclear what sparked the fire.

GETTY IMAGES

Oakland fire Chief Teresa Deloche-Reed said at least 25 people were unaccounted for in what authorities were calling the deadliest building fire in the city in recent memory. The victims were believed to be young people in their 20s, Kelly said. He said as many as 40 may have perished and that the coroner is preparing for a "mass casualty event" that could include victims from other countries.

The warehouse was known as the "Oakland Ghost Ship." Its website showed pictures of a bohemian, loft-like interior made of wood and cluttered with rugs, old sofas and a garage sale-like collection of pianos, paintings, turntables, statues and other items.

The website included advertisements for various electronic music parties. On Friday night, there was an event featuring musician Golden Donna's 100% Silk West Coast tour.

Panicked friends and family posted messages on the group's Facebook page trying to find out whether their loved ones were among the dead. Those searching for the missing were sent to a local sheriff's office, where Dan Vega was anxiously awaiting news. He had been unable to find his younger brother or his brother's girlfriend. Vega said he was not sure the two were at the party Friday night but that his brother likes to go to raves and he had not been able to reach him Saturday. His girlfriend's car was still parked at a transit station in San Bruno, south of San Francisco.

Fighting tears, Vega said he was frustrated authorities hadn't been able to tell him anything about his 22-year-old brother.

"I just want to go over there. I have my work boots on; I'm ready to go," Vega said. "Just give me some gloves. I'll help out any way, shape or form, I don't care. This is infuriating. I don't know where my brother's at. I just want to find him."

It was not clear what started the fire, but there did not appear to be sprinklers in the building, Deloche-Reed said. She said 50 to 100 people were believed to have been at the party when the fire started and that clutter "made it difficult for people to escape."

The warehouse was partitioned into artist studios and was packed with furniture, mannequins, statues, lamps and other objects and did not have a clear entry or exit path, the fire chief said.

"There is still a large portion of the building that needs to be searched," she said.

"There is large timber and debris that will need to be removed, and it's going to have to be removed in a slow and methodical way."

By midday Saturday, authorities had not yet identified the nine dead. Kelly said crews had removed only one body from the building.

Investigators were having trouble entering parts of the warehouse to search for bodies because the structure was deemed unsafe, Deloche-Reed said.

One survivor said he struggled to find a working fire extinguisher.

"It was too hot, too much smoke. I had to get out of there," Bob Mule, a photographer and artist who lives at the building and suffered minor burns, told the East Bay Times. "I literally felt my skin peeling and my lungs being suffocated by smoke. I couldn't get the fire extinguisher to work."

Oakland police urged those concerned about missing people to call the Alameda County Sheriff's Coroner's Bureau at 510-382-3000.

The office said coroners were also at the scene Saturday morning and unavailable for comment.

Universities explore 'sanctuary' status

Penn renews pledge to block federal agents from removing illegals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Universities and colleges in several states are considering labeling themselves "sanctuary campuses" amid fears from immigrant students and pressure from activists following the election of Donald Trump.

College administrators in New Mexico — the state with the highest percentage of Latino residents — are looking into proposals that would grant immigrant students living in the country illegally protections while they pursue their studies.

Meanwhile, advocates in California, Georgia, Illinois, Minnesota and Texas are pressing their state and private universities to provide sanctuary to these immigrant students, known as DREAMers.

"We urge you to declare the University of San Diego a sanctuary campus for students, faculty, staff and community members now facing, among other things, the threat of deportation under President-elect Donald J. Trump's policy proposals, and the specter of hate speech and bigoted violence in our campus community," read a letter from alumni to administrators of the private Roman Catholic university.

Trump's alma mater, the University of Pennsylvania, renewed its pledge to block federal agents without a warrant from removing students in the country illegally.

"Let us be unequivocally clear: We are and remain resolute in our commitment to Penn's undocumented students and will do all that we can to ensure their continued safety and success here at Penn," University of Pennsylvania President Amy Gutmann and other administrators wrote in a letter released Wednesday.

Students and professors at University of Illinois campuses are circulating petitions to make their schools sanctuary campuses. One such group in Chicago gathered more than 1,700 signatures and turned them over to school leaders.

A Nevada education philanthropist also is pushing for UNLV, College of Southern Nevada and Nevada State College to declare themselves sanctuary campuses.

The movement is in response to Trump's promise to end an executive order that granted temporary status to immigrant students living in the country illegally. During his campaign, he also promised to launch a "deportation force" and withhold federal funding from sanctuary cities.

Trump has not said anything about sanctuary campuses.

Still, New York's Columbia University recently announced plans to offer sanctuary and financial support to immigrant students. And last month, Wesleyan University President Michael Roth said the Connecticut school will be a sanctuary campus and will not voluntarily help the federal government deport students. On Thursday, Connecticut College President Katherine Bergeron announced that her institution also would be a sanctuary campus.

The specifics of advocates' sanctuary demands vary. Some are asking colleges not to cooperate with federal authorities on immigrant issues, while others want administrators to block federal immigration authorities from searching campuses.

Man sues jail after gouging out his own eye

DENVER — A man who gouged out his own eye while in jail is suing Rio Grande County saying jailers failed to adequately protect him from himself.

The Denver Post reports Gordon Sawyers' lawsuit alleges that while he was under suicide watch — which calls for cell checks every 15 minutes — no one checked on him for three hours one night in early December, during which he gouged out his right eye.

Sawyers had been arrested Nov. 18, 2015, for allegedly burning down an art gallery to cleanse it of witches.

The lawsuit says Sawyers' psychiatrist told jailers that Sawyers was suffering from severe mental illness and should be watched carefully because his delusions were likely to intensify.

The lawsuit also names Sheriff Brian Norton. He declined to comment, saying he hadn't seen the lawsuit.

Oldest zoo gorilla doing well after biopsy

POWELL — The oldest known gorilla living in a zoo is doing well after a surgical biopsy ahead of her 60th birthday on Dec. 22.

The Columbus Zoo and Aquarium said Saturday that veterinarians successfully removed a mass under the gorilla's arm that recently started causing her discomfort.

The zoo took tissue samples from the gorilla, a female named Colo, to determine the cause and possible treatment. She also got a thorough medical check-up.

Colo will remain off-exhibit while she is observed after the surgery.

Colo was the first gorilla born in a zoo. She has surpassed the usual life expectancy by two decades.

Colo is a mother of three, grandmother of 16, great-grandmother of 12 and great-great-grandmother of three.

Final Senate seat to be settled in La. runoff

Republican state treasurer holds edge in Dec. 10 vote

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BATON ROUGE, La. — Louisiana's last-in-the-nation U.S. Senate race has drawn donations from desperate Democrats around the country seeking a victory in their otherwise dismal election cycle, even if they're supporting a pro-gun, anti-abortion candidate deemed such a long shot that he's getting little help from the national Democratic Party.

The Republican contender in the Dec. 10 election is banking on the popularity of Donald Trump in the state to help solidify his path to victory, which is considered all but certain barring some last-minute bombshell.

GOP state Treasurer John

Kennedy is the clear front-runner in the runoff against Democrat Foster Campbell, a state utility regulator and cattle farmer. A recent poll from Baton Rouge-based Southern Media and Opinion Research showed Kennedy with a 14-point lead.

Republicans will have a slim 52-48 Senate majority next year if they hold the Louisiana seat, which is open because GOP incumbent David Vitter didn't seek re-election. The two runoff candidates, both in Louisiana politics for decades, were the top vote-getters in the November primary among 24 contenders for the seat.

A former state senator before his current elected position with the Public Service Commission, Campbell is an unabashed populist known for his rants against "Big Oil," his push to lessen the costs of prisoner phone calls and his criticism of utilities' spending on executive perks.

The north Louisiana native tells voters he "won't be in anybody's shirt pocket" in Washington. He talks openly about man-made climate change. He opposes efforts to repeal President Obama's health law. He supports a minimum wage hike. "I'm a populist. I'm not ashamed of it," he said. "I am what I am. I represent people." He's also a decidedly Louisiana Democrat — strongly opposed to abortion, with a recent ad that showed him loading a shotgun to highlight his support for gun rights.

A former state revenue secretary and lawyer, the Oxford-educated Kennedy is in his fifth term as treasurer. In that role, he's repeatedly clashed with Louisiana's governors on financial issues, raising his own profile in the process.

Kennedy highlights his support for Trump and Campbell's vote for Democrat Hillary Clinton. The Republican contender got in-person support Saturday from Vice President-elect Mike Pence, who headlined a New Orleans rally and fundraiser for Kennedy on the final day of early voting.

An Iraqi army soldier feeds dogs Saturday in a village recently liberated from ISIS outside Mosul, Iraq.

At ISIS camp, evidence of intensive training

Documents highlight mixed tactics, large influx from Russia

THE WASHINGTON POST

MOSUL, Iraq — The bunk beds that fill the rooms sleep more than 80 Islamic State recruits. On the walls, posters detail the components of Russian Kalashnikovs and American assault rifles.

One sign reminds the trainees that victory comes from long fights and pain — rewards come later: “Remember that we didn’t come for this life, we came for the afterlife.”

Spread across several large houses, the “Sheikh Abu Samaya Ansari Camp” was discovered last week by Iraqi forces as they pushed deeper into the northern city of Mosul, Iraq, which Islamic State militants have been fighting bitterly to retain.

It is the first military training center that the Iraqi forces have found in the city since they began an offensive to retake it more than six weeks ago.

Since then, the Islamic State’s grip on its most prized urban center in Iraq has slipped. But the terrorist group is still inflicting heavy casualties on advancing Iraqi forces, waylaying them with car bombs and street-to-street fighting.

The documents and learning aids left at the training center highlight the mix of guerrilla and conventional warfare tactics — combined with religious indoctrination — that make the group such a formidable foe. They show a detailed level of military planning and training, drawing manpower and expertise from around the world.

The sign for the training camp’s armory was written in both Russian and Arabic. A carbon-dioxide canister, probably for use in an air rifle for target training, was also marked in Russian.

Thousands of Russian passport-holders have traveled to Iraq and Syria to join Islamic State militants, making up as much as 8 percent of the group’s foreign fighters, according to Europol, the European Union’s law enforcement agency. Most come from the predominantly Muslim North Caucasus region.

“This was an initial step for new recruits,” said Brig. Gen. Haider al-Obaidi, a commander with the Iraqi counterterrorism troops that retook the camp and interviewed residents in the area. “We think they were mostly Iraqi, with some foreigners. They were mostly training on Russian weapons, so maybe some foreigners were training them.”

The documents that the militants left behind when they moved out more than a month ago shed light on the group’s inner workings.

One printed sheet detailed the equipment that fighters were told to take on operations. In addition to weapons and ammunition, each group should have two TNT mines and 10 molotov cocktails, it said, as well as a shovel, ladder, hammers and nails, and stretchers.

Website aims to link jobs, migrants

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — A startup company in Berlin is trying to help integrate last year’s flood of migrants into the German workforce with a tailor-made online job market for new arrivals.

The website www.Migrant Hire.com was founded earlier this year by a mix of Germans and migrants, and operates with a staff of five volunteers out of a shared working space in a former industrial building in Berlin’s trendy Kreuzberg district.

More than 8,000 migrants have registered on the website — a fraction of the 890,000 asylum-seekers who arrived in Germany last year but a good sign that some are serious about finding employment.

The website helps migrants create resumes that match

Effort aims to accommodate flood of 890K into Germany

German standards, then connects the applicants to German companies. It’s free for the migrants and relies on donations and volunteers.

MigrantHire co-founder Hussein Shaker has channeled his own experience trying to find work as a migrant into helping others. Back in the Syrian city of Aleppo, he studied information technology, but when he came to Germany he couldn’t find any work in the IT sector. Instead he ended up working in a call center while learning German.

When he was approached with the idea of MigrantHire by Remi Mekki, a Norwegian entrepreneur living in Berlin, he immediately quit his job and threw himself into the project.

On a normal workday he and others help migrants write resumes, answer questions about German employment law and apply for jobs that companies have posted on the website.

“It is not easy,” he says about the thousands of migrants looking for jobs. “The migrants had to leave everything behind but I think that, in the end, I think it will all work out.”

For Syrian migrant Naji Negmah, it already has. After a year spent learning German, Negmah was put in contact by MigrantHire with a security company in Berlin. After an interview, the 24-year-old from Damascus who arrived in 2014 was given a 10-day training course, then started working as a security guard at an asylum-seekers home in Berlin.

Now he works full time on the same contract as all the other staff.

Negmah is greeted by a group of children as he enters the four-story former office building that now houses around 200 asylum-seekers, mostly from Syria but also Afghanistan and Iraq. He speaks Arabic to the children, and they think of him as one of their own.

“When I came here, I knew I wanted get a job that let me help other migrants,” he said in fluent German. “This job lets me do that.”

At the security company, recent migrants make up about 25 percent of the guards.

Q: Does a person hear with the ears or with the brain?

A: Our ears receive and transmit sound to the brain and the brain is where sound becomes recognizable, useful information. The ears and the brain work together as a system. Hearing with two ears provides your brain with the information it needs to orient you by figuring out which direction sound is coming from and it gives your brain the ability to focus and separate relevant sounds from competing noise. The ability to recognize and understand speech occurs in the brain. When hearing loss is untreated, the signal that the brain expects to receive is incomplete and the brain has to work harder to make sense of the sound. This taxes the brain and has a negative impact on the brain's activities including memory, alertness, and the ability to engage in conversation.

Professor fatally stabbed on USC campus; student arrested

Victim, suspect worked together in lab that researched vision loss

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES—A graduate student arrested on suspicion of stabbing to death the professor who oversaw his work at the University of Southern California was being held on $1 million bail Saturday as their shocked colleagues began processing the news.

David Jonathan Brown, a 28-year-old brain and cognitive science student, was arrested in the Friday afternoon attack in the heart of the Los Angeles campus. His mentor, Bosco Tjan, was killed inside the Seeley G. Mudd building, where he runs an intensive lab that studies vision loss.

Brown, one of just five students who worked in the lab, was arrested without incident almost immediately afterward, police said, adding that the killing was targeted. In a biography page about the lab and the students involved in it, Brown's is the only one without a detailed description or photograph. Nathaniel Kwok, who recently finished working 18 months in the lab, said graduate students like Brown work in the lab 40 to 60 hours a week and develop their own projects that are required in order to graduate.

Tjan

Brown had been working in the lab since about 2013, but he took a leave of absence for personal reasons sometime last year that lasted roughly a semester, Kwok said. He added that he didn't know why Brown needed the time off or how close to graduation he was.

"He seemed normal for the most part. He was a little on the reserved side, but he was nice. He was friendly," Kwok said from New York, where he's in medical school. "There was nothing that ever would have given me some kind of indicator that he would be harboring any kind of sentiment like this."

Kilho Shin, a brain and cognitive science graduate student who works in Tjan's lab, said Brown was a quiet student and seemed satisfied with Tjan's oversight.

"I don't know what exactly happened between them. But as far as I know, Bosco likes David's work and David also seemed to be satisfied with his supervising," Shin said. "Their conversation on research was healthy and constructive."

Shin said he was shocked by Tjan's killing, adding that the professor was humorous, kind and warm, and a genius in his area of study.

"It is a big loss not only to me but also in this field and society. He has served his lab members as his family members, not just graduate students, including David Brown," he said.

Chris Purington, project manager at Tjan's lab, said Friday that he never heard of anyone having a problem with Tjan, a married father of one son listed in public records as 50 years old.

"He was somebody who really cared about people. I know he cared about me," Purington said through tears.

D.C. mercy law for young adults yields more crimes

Leniency applied to repeat and violent offenders, investigation finds

THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — Hundreds of criminals sentenced by District of Columbia judges under an obscure local law crafted to give second chances to young adult offenders have gone on to rob, rape or kill residents of the nation's capital.

The original intent of the law was to rehabilitate inexperienced criminals younger than 22. The District's Youth Rehabilitation Act allows for shorter sentences for some crimes and an opportunity for offenders to emerge with no criminal record. But a Washington Post investigation has found a pattern of violent offenders returning rapidly to the streets and committing more crimes. Hundreds have been sentenced under the act multiple times.

In dozens of cases, D.C. judges were able to hand down Youth Act sentences shorter than those called for under mandatory minimum laws designed to deter armed robberies and other violent crimes. The criminals have often repaid that leniency by escalating their crimes of violence upon release.

In 2013, four masked men entered the home of a family in Northeast Washington, held them at gunpoint and ransacked the house. One of the invaders, Shareem Hall, was sentenced under the Youth Act. He was released on probation in 2015.

Almost exactly a year later, Hall and a co-conspirator shot a 22-year-old transgender woman, Deeniquia Dodds, during a robbery in the District, according to charging documents. It is unclear who pulled the trigger. Police said the pair were targeting transgender females.

Dodds died nine days later. "You're telling me you can come back out on the streets and rob again, hold people hostage again, kill again — because of the Youth Act?" said Joeann Lewis, Dodds's aunt.

Hall is one of at least 121 defendants sentenced under the Youth Act who have gone on to be charged with murder in the District since 2010, according to The Post's analysis of available sentencing data and court records. Four of the slayings, including the killing of Dodds, occurred while the defendants could still have been incarcerated for previous crimes under mandatory minimum sentencing, and 30 of the killings took place while the suspects were on probation.

Youth Act offenders accounted for 1 in 5 suspects arrested on homicide charges in the District since 2010, a period that has seen a recent surge in homicides and growing public concern about repeat violent offenders.

The cycle of violence has been largely shrouded from public view or oversight. D.C. judges do not track the use of the law, which provides a collection of benefits to violent felons that experts say does not exist anywhere else in the country.

After a young adult is convicted of a crime, the Youth Act allows judges to decide whether the offender can benefit from rehabilitation and should receive special treatment. The law gives felons a chance to have their convictions expunged from the public record if they serve out their sentences or complete their probation. Because of the way the law was written, Youth Act offenders also can avoid mandatory prison time for certain violent gun crimes. The Post also found that judges applying the Youth Act generally give lighter sentences across the board.

The law was enacted in 1985 during the mayoral administration of Marion Barry (D), at a time when jails were being filled with young men charged with drug crimes, in an attempt to protect African-American youths from the stigma of lengthy prison sentences.

"We have a value in this city that youthful offenders should be rehabilitated," said D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser. "But I don't think anybody expects leniency for violent criminals."

The judges declined The Post's requests for interviews and also declined to comment about specific cases. In a written statement, the judges said they weigh many factors in sentencing, including the ages of offenders and the effect of their crimes on the victims.

"In considering whether to sentence a young person under the Youth Act, generally judges are aware that a felony conviction can create lifelong obstacles to becoming a good and productive citizen," wrote Lynn Leibovitz and Milton Lee, who are, respectively, the presiding judge and deputy presiding judge of the criminal division of the D.C. Superior Court.

"It is important to note that a sentence under the Youth Act gives the defendant this opportunity, not a guarantee, to get the benefit of a set aside of the conviction — it is still up to the defendant to perform during his or her sentence and to apply to the court or the Parole Commission to receive the benefit of the Youth Act.

THE WASHINGTON POST

Joeann Lewis holds the ashes of her niece, Deeniquia Dodds, who was killed in July in Northeast Washington during a robbery allegedly committed by Shareem Hall and another assailant. Hall was out of jail on a reduced sentence he received under the Youth Rehabilitation Act for a previous crime.

If the offender does not perform well, the conviction remains on his or her record."

The D.C. Public Defender Service defended the use of the law.

"The Youth Act is a valuable sentencing option because as the Supreme Court has recognized and science has shown, youthful offenders, compared to older adults, can have diminished culpability and greater prospects for reform," said PDS general counsel Laura Hankins in a written statement.

She said her office knows of "hundreds" of young offenders who have successfully completed their sentences.

From January 2010 to April 2016, 3,188 sentences for felony crimes were handed down under the Youth Act, 73 percent of them in cases involving violent crimes or weapons offenses, The Post found.

To assess the effects of the Youth Act, The Post obtained data from the D.C. Sentencing Commission showing the date and outcome of every felony case since 2010. The data did not include names of offenders or judges, or details of the crimes. To link individuals to crimes, The Post wrote software to extract those details for every criminal case, including those that mentioned the Youth Act, in publicly available electronic court dockets.

This search captured Youth Act cases in which people had not received the benefit of expungement either because they were still serving their sentences or had violated the terms of probation or release from prison. The overall success rate of the program is unclear because the identities of offenders disappear from public view if they complete the terms of their sentences.

Among The Post's findings:
● At least 136 Youth Act sentences were given to young offenders convicted of armed robbery since 2010.

● At least 750 offenders have been sentenced multiple times under the Youth Act in the past decade. More than 200 of those were sentenced for multiple violent or weapons offenses.

● Judges have given roughly 2,300 Youth Act sentences to young offenders for weapons offenses or crimes of violence since 2010. On average, the offenders have received about 60 percent of the prison time of non-Youth Act offenders who had comparable criminal histories and had committed similar crimes.

In a survey of states across the country, The Post was unable to find any law with provisions equivalent to those in the District's Youth Act.

An expert in national expungement laws told The Post that leniency programs typically focus on first-time or juvenile offenders and apply expungement to misdemeanors or other nonviolent crimes.

"It is opposite of the trend nationally," said Anne Teigen, a program principal at the National Conference of State Legislatures in Colorado, referring to the District's expungement of records of repeat and violent felonies.

In the District, Youth Act sentences have been handed down in cases involving victims who are vulnerable in ways that ordinarily lead to tougher sentences: an elderly woman held up at gunpoint; a brother and sister — 12 and 13 years old — kidnapped outside their middle school and held hostage by someone armed with a box cutter; a pizza deliveryman hit on the head with a brick during a robbery; the driver of an ice cream truck whose vehicle was taken during an armed carjacking.

D.C. politicians wrote the Youth Act, but the judges, prosecutors and public defenders in the District who carry out the law are funded by Congress, because of the unique split in federal and local authority in the District. The judges are nominated by the president and confirmed by the Senate for 15-year terms and are not accountable to D.C. voters.

Briefed on The Post's findings, Bowser, a Democrat, said she thinks judges, prosecutors and public defenders have come to "misapply" the law at the expense of public safety.

"Prosecutions, plea deals, sentences rendered, sentences served, and then what happens when folks are being supervised . . . the community should know that," she said. "We can't have a safe city if there are no quick and certain punishments for crimes."

Last year, homicides in the District jumped 54 percent from the previous year to 162, the highest total since 2008. A survey found that for the first time in almost a decade, crime had become the top concern of D.C. residents.

Killings in 2015 charged to prior Youth Act recipients reached 22, double the previous year's total.

Tavon Pinkney was charged with one of those 22 homicides. In 2014, the 18-year-old was arrested on a robbery charge after he snatched a man's Apple iPad. It was the first adult offense for Pinkney.

"I wasn't really worried," Pinkney said in a recent prison interview with The Post. "I knew they were going to let me off easy."

Pinkney said that he had committed at least a dozen robberies by the time he was arrested.

"I saw their scared faces," he told The Post of his victims. "But I never thought about their feelings. I was just being selfish."

Penguins storm back to top Wings

Pens struggle early against little-known goalie but rally from 3-1 deficit for victory

BY JONATHAN BOMBULIE

For the first half of Saturday night's game, the Penguins were frustrated by an anonymous goaltender.

They got pucks to the blue paint regularly, but once there, they were stymied by 6-foot-6 Jared Coreau, an undrafted 25-year-old rookie out of Northern Michigan University making his NHL debut.

So they decided to take a different tact.

Ugly and up close wasn't getting it done. Pretty and long range worked a lot better.

Phil Kessel finished off a pair of nifty passes, and Nick Bonino and Justin Schultz connected for goals from more than 40 feet, leading the Penguins to a come-from-behind 5-3 victory at PPG Paints Arena.

The Penguins, who had alternated wins and losses for their previous six games, put together a two-game winning streak for the first time since the beginning of last month.

With the Penguins trailing 3-1 entering the third period, Bonino gathered in a puck at the top of the right faceoff circle and scored for the second straight game, whipping in a shot past a Bryan Rust screen at 2 minutes, 5 seconds.

Four minutes later, on a delayed penalty, Schultz took a pass at the top of the left circle and beat Noreau under the right arm with a shot to make it 3-3.

With 9:06 to play, Carl Hagelin made a turning pass across the face of the goal, and Kessel finished it from the left post to put the Penguins ahead for good.

It was the second goal of the game for Kessel. In the second period, he converted on a perfect cross-ice pass from Evgeni Malkin to get the Penguins on the board at 2-1.

It was the fifth third-period comeback win for the Penguins in 25 games this season.

The Penguins introduced members of their 1991-92 championship teams before the games, with Hall of Famers Mario Lemieux, Paul Coffey, Bryan Trottier, Larry Murphy, Scotty Bowman and Craig Patrick among those receiving ovations from

Steelers DB Davis tested by rookie year

BY CHRIS ADAMSKI

After the majority of his teammates left the UPMC Rooney Sports Complex fields following a midweek practice late last month, rookie defensive back Sean Davis remained.

But Davis and his position coach, Carnell Lake, were working on a skill you normally wouldn't expect to see from a safety/cornerback mentor and a much younger safety/cornerback.

"We were working on pass-rushing moves," Davis said while shaking his head and laughing. "I need to work on my blitzing. I don't want to miss any easy (sacks) like I have."

A defensive back spending time soaking up techniques for swim moves and head-fake rushes like what an outside linebacker would do? Fitting for Davis during a rookie season that has been anything but normal.

"I didn't think it was going to go like this, man," the Steelers second-round pick said of his NFL baptism.

NFL players wear cause on their cleats

The Steelers-Giants storylines have centered on quarterbacks Ben Roethlisberger and Eli Manning and receivers Antonio Brown and Odell Beckham Jr., but this is a week where their feats shouldn't overshadow the players' feet.

Roethlisberger will wear custom cleats with the badge number of Rocco, the Pittsburgh Police K-9 officer killed in the line of duty in January 2014, and an image of a German shepherd.

Cornerback Will Gay will wear purple cleats to raise awareness for domestic violence, honoring the mother he lost as an 8-year-old when she was fatally shot by his stepfather.

Their stories will be showcased through the NFL's "My Cleats, My Cause" campaign, in which players will wear custom cleats Sunday in support of their foundation or favorite charity.

"Any time to get you an opportunity to bring attention to a stage like the NFL, that's always great," said Gay, who supports the Women's Center and Shelter of Greater Pittsburgh. "But that's just the first step. It's bigger than the cleats. If the cleats get people to actually start talking about it and actually start writing about it, then that's cool. The issues that people are putting out there are bigger than the cleats.

"It's personal, but it's bigger than me. As long as we continue to do that, and make it bigger than us, the world will be a better place. I'm wearing the cleats not

Time is now for Mt. Pleasant boys

Guard-oriented Vikings primed for success under 3rd-year coach Porter

BY KEVIN LOHMAN

This is the season Mt. Pleasant boys basketball coach Don Porter has been building toward.

The Vikings had success during Porter's time at the helm, including a playoff appearance last season.

But, according to the third-year coach, this season is primed to be the culmination of years of hard work he and his players invested into the program.

"The big thing about this year is that I coached this group of seniors when I was the junior high coach.

This is the group I had, and I went from seventh to eighth grade with them, and then on to ninth and now, varsity," Porter said.

Seniors Keith Kalp, Jason Beranek and Jake Newill are a formidable trio of guards for Mt. Pleasant. Forward Brandon McCormick returns for his final year, and the Vikings gained a fifth senior in Johnny Yester, who quarterbacked the football team this season.

Given his group's experience and past competitive play, Porter believes the time to take the next step is now.

"Each year, you want to make a little bit of a jump," Porter said. "As these guys grow from children to young men now the expectations have gotten bigger and bigger each and every year. I know their thought process is just like mine. We're hoping for a section title this year and a deep playoff run. That's what the goal is."

In order to achieve team goals, Porter has been adapting his philosophy to fit the talent at his disposal. Outside of McCormick and sophomore Alex Kadyak, the Vikings roster is composed mostly of guards.

A lack of height, however, doesn't bother Porter. Instead, he feels Mt. Pleasant will be able to work its unconventional personnel to its advantage.

"Our style of play is going to change this year. We're going to play five guards, with a focus on putting a lot of pressure on offenses and getting out to a lot of up-tempo fast breaks," Porter said.

"Offensively, we're big on the

Officials wrestle with medical pot zoning

Municipalities determine location of growing operations, dispensaries

BY TONY RAAP

Storefronts selling marijuana for medical purposes could soon be up and running in Pittsburgh business districts, and Hempfield Township officials seem to be fine with an entrepreneur's plan to grow and process cannabis in an industrial area.

But Frazer officials intend to limit marijuana dispensaries to an undeveloped spot on the edge of town.

As the Pennsylvania Department of Health develops regulations for medical marijuana, municipalities across the state are wrestling with zoning rules for cannabis operators.

"Every municipality has the ability to write (the zoning code) however they want," Pittsburgh Councilman Corey O'Connor said. "Different municipalities are going to do it in different ways."

Pittsburgh City Council passed legislation last week allowing dispensaries to operate in commercially zoned areas. Marijuana processors and growers will be on the city's outskirts in industrial sites.

"We won't see them in a residential area," said O'Connor, who introduced the legislation.

Dispensaries will be at least 1,000 feet from any public, private or parochial school or day care center.

Gov. Tom Wolf in April signed legislation legalizing marijuana for those with serious medical conditions. The state's first dispensaries are expected to open by 2018.

"With a dispensary, you want people to have access to it because this is something they need for their well-being," O'Connor said.

But in Frazer, supervisors want to limit dispensaries to a mostly wooded area south and east of Route 28 in the township's industrial zone.

"They really don't seem to want us here because we've been zoned out into the hinterlands," said Patrick Nightingale, executive director of the Pennsylvania Medical Cannabis Society, a nonprofit that advocates for the medical marijuana industry and its patients.

Frazer Supervisor Lori Ziencik said officials considered all zoning areas.

"We certainly didn't want it in the Pittsburgh Mills commercial area," she said, referring to the township's sprawling shopping complex.

A public hearing on Frazer's ordinance amendment will be held Tuesday.

In Hempfield, Rodney Yemc wants to cultivate and process cannabis in a 25,000-square-foot warehouse on Arona Road, a few miles from his restaurant, Rodney's. He plans to apply for a license in the coming months.

The warehouse is in an industrial area, so there would be no need to amend the township's zoning ordinance, Hempfield officials said.

"We've really had no push-back because people understand the benefits" of medical marijuana, Yemc said.

Moon Township officials will decide Wednesday where cannabis operators can do business.

Statue of Latrobe native finds 'home' in park

BY JOE NAPSHA

With tears in her eyes, Nancy Rogers Crozier hugged the newly unveiled statue of her late brother and proudly proclaimed that he was home.

"It really is my brother," Crozier told more than 100 people who watched Saturday in downtown Latrobe as she sat next to the lifelike bronze statue of Fred McFeely Rogers.

"It's really thrilling," she said minutes later. "The little children are beaming and smiling, and that's what it is all about."

year run on public television, sits at the corner of Jefferson and Main streets in James Hillis Rogers Park, named after the siblings' father. The park is maintained by the McFeely-

Rogers Foundation.

"We are excited and very happy to be bringing him home," Latrobe Mayor Rosie Wolford said.

Although Fred Rogers died 13 years ago at 74, it was clear he remains in the hearts of those gathered to see his statue — which depicts a smiling Rogers sitting at one end of a bench with his legs crossed and an arm around the back. He is adorned in his trademark cardigan sweater and tennis shoes.

Sculptor Jon Hair of St. Petersburg, Fla., said he used countless photos in deciding how to create the 300-pound work of art that took more than six months to make.

Statue change aims to honor Civil War vets

Sardis Cemetery shift offers improved view of monument

BY PATRICK VARINE

McCutcheon. Clements. Haymaker. McClure. Borland.

The surnames on the largest monument in Sardis Cemetery are immediately recognizable to people in Murrysville, Monroeville and Plum, many of whom travel along roads bearing those names every day.

The 2.3-acre cemetery on Route 286 dates to the 1800s, and the monument pays tribute to local Civil War veterans.

W. Scott Rubright of Murrysville is chairman of the Sardis M.E. Cemetery Association, and in an effort to honor those veterans, he recently had the statue atop the monument rotated to face the cemetery grounds.

"With the (former) church (next door) being sold separately from the cemetery, and with the fence that was installed, you can't really see or appreciate the statue from the far side," Rubright said.

Thomas Ermine of Davis Monuments offered to rotate the statue, and he did so in late summer.

"They set some scaffolding up, and we just choked it off and spun it around with our crane," Ermine said. "We were hoping it didn't have a pin in it, but we were surprised to find out there was nothing holding it on to begin with."

Rubright said the statue sits atop four pieces of lead, which keeps groundwater from wicking upward into the statue in the winter.

"It's heavy enough on its own that it wasn't anchored," he said. "I went up and just tapped it into place to make sure that (lead) seal stays."

Rubright is now in the process of trying to find more information about the names on the monument. Many of the records related to the cemetery have gone missing or been destroyed over time.

"When you drive straight into the cemetery, there's an opening in the middle, which is where the original one-room church sat," he said. "It burnt down, they built the newer church and a lot of

Parking lot, paved path offer access to Bushy Run monument

$325K project funded by donations, sales of bricks

BY JOE NAPSHA

Visitors to Penn Township's Bushy Run Battlefield — where British and colonial troops under Col. Henry Bouquet defeated Native Americans who ambushed them on the way to relieve the besieged Fort Pitt in 1763 — will have easier access to the new monument with a paved parking lot and path to the memorial.

"We are so pleased with it. It's finally accessible to the people," said Kelly Ruoff of Penn Township, treasurer of the Bushy Run Battlefield Heritage Society.

The group oversaw the monument and trail project and operates the visitor center, which contains a museum and gift shop.

"We're extremely proud of this accomplishment and this addition to the battlefield," Ruoff added.

The parking lot off Route 993, just west of the battlefield's main entrance, was paved last month along with the Byerly Trail, which leads from the parking lot to the bronze monument commemorating the battle.

The paving work capped a three-year initiative that cost $325,000 for the monument, surrounding base of memorial bricks and walking trail, said Bonnie Ramus of Penn Township, heritage society president.

"It's been quite an undertaking. Everybody did a real good job with it," Ramus said.

The project was funded by the heritage society through donations and the sale of engraved bricks, Ruoff said. The society, which administers the site with the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission, raised money for the project for several years.

The centerpiece of the project was the bronze monument, dedicated in 2013 to coincide with the 250th anniversary of the battle. Lying at the base of a seldom-used amphitheater, it features three granite pedestals and three bronze statues. A Native American and a British soldier face each other armed with rifles and stand above a colonial Ranger, who is sprawled against flour bags that served as a makeshift shelter during the attack by allied Native American nations.

Anonymous donation boosts school's Giving Tree effort

Greensburg Salem program that helps students in need given infusion of coats, jackets, hoodies

BY JACOB TIERNEY

It started when Greensburg Salem High School counselor Debbie Rietski fielded a phone call from an anonymous man with an unusual request. He wanted to know if the school district could use new winter clothing for students.

“He asked if he could just ship things directly to the guidance office,” Rietski said. “And within a few days, we had between 10 and 15 coats, jackets and hoodies.” The anonymous donation provided a major boost to the school’s Giving Tree program, which provides clothing and other essentials to about 30 students in need every year. “The coat donation gift completely caught us off guard,” high school Principal David Zilli said. “There was obviously some kind heart in the community.” Each of the district’s five schools runs a Giving Tree program. Corporate sponsors and other donors aren’t unusual at lower grade levels, but the high school’s initiaive is mostly funded through teacher donations, Zilli said. The school buys coats, hats and gloves, then provides them to students’ families in time for Christmas. “It may be some of the only gifts that they can really provide. We see students wearing the same clothing items day after day, and we know it can be a game-changer,” counselor Laura Klipa said. Students often pitch in by raising money, shopping for items and wrapping them. Delivering gifts to the families is always eye-opening, Klipa said. “It’s heart-wrenching. For us, that day is emotional,” she said. “It’s an experience that you don’t forget, and you make it grateful for what you have.” The high school is trying to grow its Giving Tree program this year, getting more students involved and looking for more donors outside the district, Klipa said. She offered her gratitude to the anonymous donor. “Thank you from the bottom of our hearts,” Klipa said. “That was amazing, and we have children who won’t be cold this winter.” *Jacob Tierney is a Tribune-Review staff writer. Renee Seifert has stepped down as president of the Laurel Highlands Visitors Bureau after leading the Ligonier-based tourism organization for about 16 months. Current staff will manage bureau operations through the rest of the year, while the board weighs a search for a new president, Langer said. Seifert could not be reached for comment.

Families chronicled in 'History'

Some of the names on the monument can be found in the three-volume compendium, "History of Westmoreland County," which is available for free through the Google Books website. Among them:

- David Tallant: Born Oct. 28, 1830, to Henry and Sarah Tallant, David began working as a school teacher at 18. He enlisted in 1862 with the First Company, 15th Regiment of the Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry known as the "Old Anderson Troop," and was discharged in January 1865. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic Corporal Murray Post 243. He was married to Catherine Ann Hall.
- Wilson McWilliams: Born Aug. 22, 1827, in what was then Franklin Township, Wilson was the son of Hamilton and Mary (McElwain) McWilliams. He learned the art of carriage making under James Morrow of Murrysville, and briefly became a photographer. He enlisted in 1864 with Battery L, Sixth Regiment of the Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and served until the close of the Civil War. Afterward, he worked at a store in Murrysville owned by Alexander Buchanan. He later owned the store, before selling it to a member of the McCutcheon family.

"One of the names is McWilliams, and we just buried someone up there in one of their plots," Rubright said. "The family had gone from here and moved east across the state to Philadelphia, but they still own the plots here." Six generations of the Rubright family are buried at Sardis Cemetery. Rubright said it is a window into not just his past, but the community's history. "There's a lot of names on there that I remember from growing up," he said. Informal worship appealing to all ages

'Messy Church' concept spreading across the region and the world

BY REX RUTKOSKI

Too often people think that church has to be black and white. A non-traditional, informal, multi-generational and hands-on approach to worship and fellowship bearing the unlikely name of "Messy Church," is "the exact opposite," says Christina Mottura. "It is crazy and messy and wonderful!"

She is one of the lay leaders of the ministry project at the United Methodist Church's Kiski Charge, pastored by the Rev. Sara Wrona, consisting of First United Methodist Church, Vandergrift, and New Beginnings Church in Spring Church, Kiski Township, Armstrong County. Wrona is a native of Western North Carolina who was raised in New Kensington with decidedly ecumenical roots.

Similar programs have begun in Greensburg, Monroeville, Pittsburgh and throughout Western Pennsylvania.

It is now found across the United Kingdom, where it had its origins in 2004, and in 30 countries, reports Christian Today magazine. It is estimated, the publication adds, that at least 500,000 people attend a Messy Church program each month.

The Messy Church movement, happening across many denominations, celebrated its 3,500th church registration in November in what the magazine called a milestone for the organization.

"It is designed to reach people that we might not normally see on a Sunday morning. In today's society and culture, it is becoming more and more difficult to do ministry and be the church in the traditional sense. Messy Church

"Vapors" by Kathleen Mulcahy on display for Opposites Attract: Kathleen Mulcahy & Sylvester Damianos at the Westmoreland Museum of American Art.

JOINED TOGETHER

2 artists blend their works in Westmoreland exhibit

BY KURT SHAW

"Opposites Attract," currently on display at Westmoreland Museum of American Art, is a complimentary display of two distinctly disparate bodies of work by two seasoned artists from our region, Kathleen Mulcahy and Sylvester Damianos.

Mulcahy, who lives in Oakdale, creates sculptures in glass and metal, while Damianos, of Edgewood, prefers wood as his primary medium.

Though the materials may have their obvious contrasts, the works flow together seamlessly in this magnificent exhibition.

Mulcahy agrees. "Syl's and my work look great together," she says. "I liked working with Syl very much. From the first moment we met and started working together to create an exhibition with flow."

Whereas Mulcahy has always been a glass artist — she has been creating works of art from glass and mixed media for five decades — Damianos has had a dual career in art and architecture since the 1960s.

"He made it fun," Mulcahy says about working with Damianos on this exhibition. "He made a precise model with windows and asked me to print out some tiny photos of work to slip into his model so we could arrange walls and figure out where each artist should have their work."

Both artists allowed themselves the chance to play with the right arrangements.

"We picked colors together for the long walls," Mulcahy says. "I like the deep gray and he complimented it with the lighter gray. Then Lou, his wife, picked the vibrant panel colors and they really gave the show a kick. So much so that I had the painters change the facing panel in my space to the cinnamon so it would marry his exhibition to mine."

"Each of us have works we will never part with that are here," Mulcahy says. "And we spent several years making work specifically for this show."

Having a masters of fine arts in glass sculpture and three-dimensional design from Alfred University in Western New York, Mulcahy directed glass studio programs at Bowling Green State University in Ohio and Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh then went on to develop the Pittsburgh Glass Center with her husband and partner, artist Ron Desmett.

Her work in this exhibition ranges from a selection of pieces from her "Vapors" series from 1992, all the way to works from the present day, such as "Murmur II" and "Eclipse II," which were completed this year, specifically for this exhibition.

For his part, Damianos says of the overall display, "The balance of transparencies and solids was a great opportunity to

COOKING CLASS

Eighty Acres Kitchen & Bar keeps it fresh as fresh can be

Everything is made from scratch in Plum restaurant

Cooking Class visits the kitchens of area restaurants, whose chefs share their popular recipes.

BY DEBORAH WEISBERG

When Don Winkie opened his restaurant in Plum two years ago, he knew he had the ideal name in Eighty Acres Kitchen & Bar.

It honors his family's northeast Missouri farm and reflects the farm-to-table ethic that Winkie embraces as the eatery's executive chef.

"We use as pure a product as we can and buy local as much as possible," Winkie says. "Everything in our kitchen is made from scratch."

Winkie and chef de cuisine Alan

D'Angelo have crafted a menu of modern American fare that ranges from bison burgers and wild boar to lump crab cakes and Gerber Amish chicken breast. Many dishes combine Winkie's roots in southwestern cooking — a style that fuses Mexican, cowboy ranch and American Indian cuisines — and D'Angelo's training in the French tradition.

The wild boar, for instance, is seasoned with dried chili and sweet spices, and the Coyote Queso features melted fontina, chorizo, roasted poblano, cilantro, and brick-oven flatbread. The Scottish salmon is seasoned with piquillo chimichurri, and the shrimp and grits served at Sunday brunch is enriched with molasses barbecue sauce.

A self-described Army brat, Winkie traveled extensively in his youth and spent his early years as a chef in New Mexico and Utah. He helped open the Coyote Cafe at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas for Mark Miller, who is regarded as the father of southwestern cuisine. His style celebrates the use of spices, especially chili peppers, of which there are dozens of different kinds with varying degrees of sweetness and heat.

"Mark could taste a dish and tell you exactly which peppers were used," says Winkie, who considers the creative use of seasonings his strong suit as well.

Winkie moved to Pittsburgh with wife Amy, a Monroeville native, 22 years ago and became executive chef at The Tuscan Inn in Hampton. There he worked with D'Angelo, a graduate of Le Cordon Bleu Institute of Culinary Arts, whose resume includes stints at the Turning Stone Resort Casino

HEATHER MULL

CLASS • E7 Ingredients for Eighty Acres Kitchen & Bar autumn butternut squash soup.

Pair robust reds with venison dishes for hearty winter fare

With Western Pennsylvania deer hunting season in full swing n'at, venison frequently finds its way onto local dinner tables. Venison dishes in all their variety readily pair with robust red wines perfect for enjoyment in cold weather.

Venison pot roast and venison stew both use moist, slow cooking to transform the meat into succulent tenderness. Pot roasts start with large cuts, while stewing calls for cutting the venison into cubes.

For maximum flavor, be sure to add peppercorns, pearl onions, carrots, mushrooms, minced garlic, bits of streaky bacon and herbs in the pot. During cooking, use beef stock and a bottle of fruity, inexpensive red Beaujolais for the liquid.

For drinking, pair the venison pot roast or stew with the 2014 Decoy, Zinfandel, Sonoma County, California (Luxury 74172; $19.99). This delicious Zin harkens back to bygone times when California winemakers put a premium on flavor, freshness and balance rather than brute concentration, new oak and ponderously high alcohol by volume. The wine blends Zinfandel (91%) with Petite Sirah. Most of the fruit comes from outstanding Dry Creek Valley vineyards, ground zero for terrific Zinfandel.

The light purple color unfolds ripe raspberry and black berry fruit with subtle spicy notes from aging in mostly neutral French oak barrels. Juicy, ripe red and black fruit flavors balance with refreshing acidity and soft tannins. The wine effortlessly carries its relatively modest 13.9% alcohol by volume. Outstanding. Highly recommended.

Then there's the classic Western Pennsylvania spoof of inviting unsuspecting guests to dinner for incognito venison dishes such as venison meatloaf, spaghetti with venison meatballs or venison chili. Guest reactions after being told the meat's identity usually range from delightful surprise to emphatic expressions of extreme displeasure.

It always helps to serve a good red wine — or two — with the meal. Try the 2014 Domaine Petroni, Rouge Corse, France (Luxury 49958; $12.99). This delicious, Recommended: Indicates a well-made table wine ready for immediate enjoyment with everyday meals and offering good value.

Highly recommended: Indicates a well-made table wine ready for immediate enjoyment and offering very good value on a particularly well-made example of its type.

understated wine comes from Corsica, a place where diverse cultures converge.

The grapes used reflect the diversity by blending Nielluciu — the Corsican clone of the Italian Sangiovese grapes — with lesser amounts of Syrah, a distinctly French variety, and Grenache, a grape native to Spain but now widely planted across the Mediterranean. The fruit ripens in hot sunny days and cool nights.

Fermentation in concrete vats captures natural fruitiness. The wine opens with ripe black fruit and earthy aromas. Ripe dark fruit flavors and fresh acidity balance with firm but smooth tannins. Recommended.

Or try the 2015 Domaine M & C Lapiere, Morgon, France (Luxury 99358; $26.99), a delicious Cru Beaujolais from one of the region's top producers. This wine comes from Gamey vines have toiled in the granite rich soils for 70 years old on average.

To take full advantage of the rocky terroir and old vines, Mathieu Lapiere maintains his late father's focus on farming organically (without chemical herbicides, pesticides and fungicides). He also makes the wine naturally with minimal sulfites added. Harvest takes place manually followed by fermentation with indigenous yeasts.

The dark-cherry color offers enticing red fruit and liquorice aromas. Juicy, firm raspberry and strawberry flavors unfold in the glass. Vibrant acidity, mouthwatering mineral traits and elegant, fine tannins balance the fresh, fruity finish. Highly recommended.

All that said, if venison is just not to your taste, then stick to beef with a fun twist. Try Bœuf Carbonnade à la 2014 Decoy, Zinfandel, Sonoma County, Calif., complements a venison pot roast or stew.

2013 Domaine Jean-Marc Pillot, Santenay "Les Champs Claude," France, is perfect on a cold winter's night.

Flamande — Flemish beef and onion stew. This tasty dish offers a marvelous variation on the French beef Burgundy. During cooking, the Belgian version includes brown sugar, apple-cider vinegar and Belgian-style brown abbey ale instead of red wine.

For drinking, try a classic red Burgundy such as the 2013 Domaine Jean-Marc Pillot, Santenay "Les Champs Claude," France (Luxury 91882; $35.99). Since taking full responsibility for the family domaine in 1991, fourth generation winegrower Jean-Marc Pillot has refocused on terroir and quality. This wine comes from Santenay, a village in southern Burgundy that many enthusiasts tend to overlook.

In 2013 Pillot turned out a terrific red despite significant challenges with hail. The wine's lovely light ruby color offers pure red fruit aromas and light spicy notes. Fresh, pure red fruit flavors layer with pronounced acidity and smooth, elegant tannins. The pure, fruity finish linger pleasantly. Highly recommended.

in Oneida, N.Y., and Pittsburgh's Capital Grille, and Echo.

Besides collaborating with Winkie on the Eighty Acres menu, D'Angelo curates the bar, which features rotating craft beers on draft, select wines and classic and seasonal cocktails. Spirits include those from local distilleries, such as Boyd & Blair vodka and Wigle rye.

The restaurant's decor is rustic but refined, with bamboo tables, hand-painted trompe l'oeil nature scenes, and red barn doors leading to a warm-weather patio.

A new and improved way to eat peppermint bark

BY ELIZABETH KARMELE

I have always loved peppermint and chocolate together and peppermint bark is my favorite way to eat it.

Or it was — until I created this peppermint bark variation of my favorite childhood Christmas cookie.

My mother made Spritz cookies every Christmas for as long as I can remember. She always made the simple butter cookies in both chocolate and vanilla and we decorated them with colored sugar sprinkles.

ened chocolate and sugar together until creamy. Add egg yolks one at a time to combine. Add vanilla and mix thoroughly. Using your hands or a blending fork, work in the flour, a little at a time, until smooth.

Peppermint Bark Spritz Cookies

Cookie presses like the OXO Good Grips with stainless-steel discs work better than presses with plastic plates. Start to finish: 30 minutes, not including cooling and decorating. Makes about 5 dozen cookies.

- 1 cup unsalted butter, room temperature
- 2 squares (2 ounces) unsweetened chocolate, melted
- ⅔ cup granulated white sugar
- 3 egg yolks
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 2 ½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
- Topping:
- 4 ounces semi-sweet chocolate, melted
- 2 ounces white chocolate, melted
- 1 cup crushed peppermint candies
- Preheat oven to 400 F
- Mix butter, unsweet-

Divide dough into 2-3 pieces and roll them into a tube shape and cover with wax paper. Chill dough for 30 minutes. When the dough is chilled, place the roll in the cookie press tube and choose cookie plate for your design. Press the cookies out one at a time onto an ungreased cookie sheet.

Bake 7 to 10 minutes or until set but not brown. Remove from cookie sheet after 1 minute, and gently place on a cooling rack. Let cookies cool completely.

Melt chocolate and place in a decorating bag or a re-closeable plastic bag. When ready to decorate cookies, snip a small corner at one end of the bag for the chocolate to flow through. When the cookies are cool, carefully drizzle melted semi-sweet chocolate on the top of the cookie. While the chocolate is still warm, sprinkle with crushed peppermint candies so the candy will stick to the chocolate, then drizzle with melted white chocolate.

Place in the refrigerator to set the chocolate for at least 1 hour before serving.

BANKING EXPLAINED

by Rat

WE CAN'T MAKE THIS STUFF UP.

WELL, SIR, NO LOAN FOR YOU. WE HAVE TO BE VERY CAREFUL UNDER ALL THESE NEW BANKING REGULATIONS.

BUT AREN'T YOU THE SAME BANK WHOSE EMPLOYEES OPENED TWO MILLION FAKE ACCOUNTS TO CHARGE CUSTOMERS FAKE FEES?

YES, BUT WE FIRED THOSE BAD APPLES!

BUT WAS SOMEONE ABOVE THEM HELD RESPONSIBLE?

YES, SIR! SHE'S RETIRING.

RETIRED?

WITH A $124,000,000 PAYOUT.

SO YOU COLLECT FAKE FEES FROM CUSTOMERS, FIRE THE EMPLOYEES YOU PRESSED, AND KEEP ALL THE MILLIONS FOR YOURSELF?

YES, BUT IF YOU FEEL STRONGLY ABOUT IT, YOU SHOULD TALK TO YOUR CONGRESSMAN.

WHERE IS HE?

WITH OUR C.E.O.

I LOVE YOU, BEST BUDDY!

SLYLOCK FOX and COMICS FOR KIDS

BY BOB WEBER JR.

An intruder entered Slylock Fox's home in the middle of the night. The house was completely dark except for a tiny point of red light from the DVD player. The red light was not nearly bright enough to illuminate the intruder, but it did make it possible for Slylock to grab him. How?

Solution -- The intruder stepped between Slylock Fox and the DVD player. When Slylock's view of the red light was blocked, he knew the intruder was in front of him, and that's when Slylock grabbed him.
