ORTHODOX CHURCHES' ADHERENCE TO TRADITION IS THEIR MAIN SELLING POINT — AND PERHAPS LIABILITY

■ he bright blue cupolas atop SS. Cyril & Methodius Orthodox Church are an unmistakable landmark in Jeannette — symbols of a parish once home to more than 50 Russian families. In Monessen, families used to fill folding chairs beside packed church pews during Sunday services at St.

Not so today. Not at St. Michael, not at SS. Cyril & Methodius and not at many other Orthodox churches in Southwestern Pennsylvania.

George Essey, 81, was one of 16 worshippers at St. Michael on a recent Sunday. He was one of 10 the Sunday before. Worshippers and leaders attribute struggles at their parishes to the region's transformation from a booming, steel-fueled immigrant haven to the epitome of Rust Belt decline.

More than 20,000 people lived in Monessen in 1930. Today, the town is home to fewer than 7,500. Jeanette's population in 1930 was 15,000. It's about 9,600 now.

Evidence of change is everywhere. Just take a ride through Monessen, Essey said while talking with the Very Rev. Sam Smolcic before a recent weekday Lenten service. It used to be hard to walk through the streets without bumping into somebody.

"Four of five people abreast on a Saturday night was typical," said Smolcic, 64, a longtime Orthodox leader in Mon Valley communities. "(Monessen) is not even a mere shadow of its former self.'

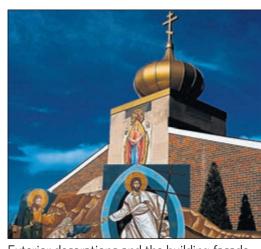

But population and economic declines are only part of the picture, said Archbishop Melchisedek (Pleska), head of the Orthodox Church in America's Pittsburgh Archdiocese. While two parishes in Allegheny County have closed, others, such as St. Nicholas Orthodox Church in McKees Rocks, are thriving.

'There are still people there and still people who are unchurched, and it's our business to be open to them and invite them in," he said.

The OCA's Archdiocese of Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania has a parish development program that helps struggling churches assess their strengths and weaknesses. While the OCA has its roots in the 18th-century Russian Orthodox

N. Korean missile explodes on launch

Failure occurs on heels of huge propaganda event

SEOUL — A North Korean missile exploded during launch Sunday, American and South Korean officials said, a highprofile failure that comes as a powerful U.S. aircraft supercarrier approaches the Korean Peninsula in a show of force.

It wasn't immediately clear what kind of missile was test-fired from the east coast city of Sinpo, but the failure will sting in Pyongyang because it occurred a day after one of the biggest North Korean propaganda events of the year - celebrations of the 105th birthday of late North Korea founder Kim Il Sung, the current leader's grandfather.

There had been a sense of relief when Saturday, the most important day in the North Korean calendar, passed without such a test. Still, the military hardware that was paraded through Pyongyang on Saturday shows that Kim Jong Un is unrelenting in his quest to develop a missile capable of reaching the United States. Experts were stunned at the sheer number of new missiles — including, apparently, a new and previously unknown type of intercontinental ballistic missile. The two-hour parade took place on a day officially known as the "Day of the Sun," the anniversary of the 1912 birth of Kim Il Sung.

A relaxed-looking Kim Jong Un stood smiling and laughing on a balcony as tens of thousands of soldiers marched past, planes in a formation making 105 — for the anniversary — flew overhead and missile transporters rolled through the square in front of him. The North's test firing Sunday could be seen as a message of defiance to the Trump administration in Washington, coming as it did on the day Vice President Mike Pence was set to arrive in Seoul for talks on North Korea. President Trump was uncharacteristically quiet about the failed launch. In a statement, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis said Trump and his military team "are aware of North Korea's most recent unsuccessful missile launch. The president has no further comment." Washington and Seoul will try hard to

The Culberts, of North Huntingdon, described this and other traditions while enjoying the beautiful morning that ushered in the start of Pennsylvania's five-month trout season Saturday. With a campfire burning nearby and anglers wading into Loyalhanna Creek, Teena Culbert said her family has celebrated opening day at their cabin outside Ligonier for 23 years. "This is Fish-mas Day," Teena Culbert said. "Last night was Fish-mas Eve."

STEVE NEWMAN'S EARTHWEEK

Atlantic invasion

The waters of the Arctic Ocean are becoming increasingly similar to those of the Atlantic as warm currents from the south flow in, according to a report. It says the intrusion of the warmer Atlantic currents is contributing to the accelerated melting of sea ice. The increased Atlantic currents have removed a thick layer of cold surface waters that had insulated the polar ice cap, allowing it to thin. "Rapid changes in the eastern Arctic Ocean, which allow more heat from the ocean interior to reach the bottom of sea ice, are making it more sensitive to climate changes," oceanographer Igor Polyakov said.

Earthquakes

One person was killed by the strongest in a swarm of more than 50 quakes that hit El Salvador.

• A temblor in the southern Philippines damaged dozens of Mindanao homes.

• Earth movements were also felt in southern Luzon Island, central New Zealand and Iceland.

Tree 'massacre'

Environmentalists say that changes to a Polish law have led to a "massacre" of trees across the country.

Legislation that went into effect Jan. 1 removed requirements that private landowners who want to cut down trees must apply for permission, pay compensation, plant new trees or notify authoritrees. "We used to receive around one telephone call ties about the removal of a day from people concerned about trees being cut down in their area. But suddenly, we had two telephones ringing all day long," said Pawel Szypulski of Greenpeace. Freshly cleared spaces are being reported around Polish cities and across the countryside.

Zimbabwe officials have launched an investigation into how 11 hippos died from suspected poisoning along the country's Mlibizi River. Environment, Water and Climate Minister Oppah Muchinguri-Kashiri told reporters she fears the use of chemicals in agriculture to kill weeds and invading worms could have polluted the waters in which the hippos live and feed. "So whatever that is put on the ground ends up in our water," she said. "It affects our fish, our crocodiles, our hippos, and we are seeing that this is a feature that we ignored in the past."

McFadden, 70, of Irwin said the day was more about being with loved ones and enjoying the outdoors than it was about catching trout, anyway. His son and the Culberts' son fished nearby. They've been friends since age 5.

"I've got a daughter, and they have a daughter, too," McFadden said. "They've been friends since they were babies, also."

A few miles upstream, Drew Pullion, 53, and his son Justin, 27, of Greensburg fished with spinning rods and minnows just off Route 30 near downtown Ligonier. The fishing was slow — by mid-morning, Justin Pullion had caught and released a single, small rainbow trout — but Drew Pullion was content otherwise. It's better than going to work, he said.

Drew Pullion said he's been fishing on opening day of trout season since he was a boy. He started bringing Justin and Justin's older brother when they were growing up, though it took Justin some time to warm up to the hobby.

"He couldn't stand fishing," Drew Pullion said. "You couldn't get him out of bed. Now you can't get him off the

Each year, the Pennsylvania Fish and Boat Commission stocks the state's waters with 3.2 million brown, brook and rainbow trout, among other species. Pennsylvania is home to 86,000 miles of rivers and streams, as well as 4,000-plus lakes, ponds and reservoirs.

Anglers must purchase a fishing license as well as a trout permit. Annual licenses cost about $23 for adults and $12 for seniors. Trout permits cost $9.90. They're available online at gonefishingpa.com or at more than 9,000 locations statewide.

State rules allow an individual to work up to three rods and keep up to five fish per day. A full explanation of fishing rules and regulations is available at the Fish and Boat Commission's website.

Free fishing days are scheduled for May 28 and July 4. The trout season ends Sept. 4.

Orthodox Christians traditionally rise at dawn on Easter Sunday, ready to spend the day celebrating Christ's life, death and resurrec-

Their churches have never been a major force in the American religious landscape, but Orthodoxy has had its moments in the sun. Greek Orthodox Archbishop Iakovos appeared with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on the cover of Life magazine in 1965. Layman Michael Dukakis ran for president as a Democrat in 1988. An altar boy named George Stephanopoulos became a top aide to President Bill Clinton and now is chief anchor and chief-political correspondent for ABC News, co-anchor of "Good Morning America" and host of "This Week" on Sunday mornings. But laymen and clergy say the real moment in the sun for most worshippers is Orthodox Easter, known as Pascha. Orthodoxy celebrates Christ's resurrection with a bright display of liturgical pomp mostly unknown in other denominations.

"Without the resurrection of Christ, there is no church, there is no Christianity, there is no hope," said the Rev. Tony Joseph, 79, pastor of St. Stephen's Orthodox Church in Latrobe. "It's the day the world was created for — the resurrection of the son of God.'

In much of Southwestern Pennsylvania, fewer and fewer families celebrate Orthodox Easter in the tradition of their ancestors. The onion domes and Byzantine crosses that dot the landscape in so many communities speak more to the area's past than present.

For decades, the region served as a "motherland" for Orthodoxy outside of the old country, said Alexei Krindatch, research coordinator for the Assembly of Canonical Orthodox Bishops of the United Immigrants flocked to Southwestern Pennsylvania's steel mills and mining jobs in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The earliest Orthodox churches here tended to be multi-ethnic. Small groups of immigrants from different places joined together and formed congregations, according to Kristie Bosko Mertz's History of the Archdiocese of Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania.

As immigration from Orthodox regions increased, immigrants congregated according to ethnicity. Syrian immigrants founded St. Michael's, the only Orthodox parish in Greensburg, in 1955, though the church's roots go back to 1918.

Among its early members was Sophie Halaut Abraham, a Syrian survivor of the Titanic who settled in Greensburg with her husband, Joseph. She died in 1976 at 82.

The Rev. John Nosal, St. Michael's pastor since 1988, said churches often served as the center of social and cultural life for their members.

The birth rate in those immigrant communities sustained churches into the second and third generations. But a dramatic membership drop began as communities lost jobs and subsequent generations left the churches, Nosal said.

"We're not living in anything close to the same world that existed in 1988," he said. "(We need to) recognize that we probably weren't doing well for any reason other than the fact of family ties, neighborhood ties, ethnic ties and the spiritual ties of Eastern Orthodoxy. All of those things are very much diminished." America in general has become less religious. In 1998, 61 percent of Americans surveyed by Gallup said religion was a "very important" part of their lives. In 2016, way. The same year, 25 percent said religion was "not very important," up from the 11 percent who answered "not very important" in a 1999 survey.

A survey of 35,000 Americans released by the Pew Research Center in 2015 found the Christian share of the U.S. population is declining. The number of adults who do not identify with any organized religion is growing.

Between 2000 and 2012, the total number of Eastern Orthodox parishes in the United States increased 17 percent. Between 220,000 and 230,000 people pray at 1,900 churches across the country on any given Sunday, Krindatch said.

Orthodoxy's fastest growth is occurring in the South and West parts of the country benefiting from overall population growth.

Sunday services.

St. Michael's in Greensburg is another. Membership there is slightly fewer than 200 families. Average Sunday attendance is about 100. The arrival of 10 firstgeneration Syrian families in the past decade has helped.

Latrobe's St. Stephen's has about 33 families on its membership rolls. About 45 people attend church on an average Sunday, Joseph said, not enough to call the parish thriving but better than many counterparts.

St. John the Baptist Orthodox Church in Wilpen, not far from Ligonier, was founded by immigrants who came to work in the Wilpen Mine & Coke Works. The parish will celebrate its centennial in two It once boasted 150 members, but Joseph now finds only about 20 people there — most of them elderly — when he visits twice a month on Saturdays. Two people one 18, the other 50 — are inquiring about becoming Orthodox.

"The town is dying," he said. "There's only a fire company, a church and a bunch of houses.'

Path to salvation

Leaders differ in their approaches to strengthening their congregations. Some Orthodox jurisdictions, locally and nationally, have successfully courted converts.

Laymen and clergy point to Orthodoxy's historical roots — with traditions of prayer and worship largely unchanged dating back to antiquity — as a particular draw. For the truly pious, Orthodoxy is the closest modern equivalent to the church of the Apostles, they

But Joseph said the very things that make Orthodoxy distinctive among Christian denominations an emphasis on fasting, confession and unchanging worship — put it out of step with American culture.

"It's too easy not to be Orthodox," he said. "It's the strictest, most conservative religion in the world. It's very simply why we're struggling — people don't want to be told what to do."

Monessen today is home to four Orthodox churches: one Greek, one Ukrainian, one Russian and St. Michael, an Antiochian parish. That made sense when the town's economy supported thriving immigrant communities, each trying to hold on to a little piece of its homeland.

Those days are long gone. Less than five years after celebrating its 100th anniversary, St. Michael is for sale. Real estate websites show it has been on the market for more than 250 days. It's listed at $39,900, a $10,000 reduction from the original asking price.

The Rev. Fred Pfeil, the church's pastor, believes the path to salvation lies in unifying Monessen's Orthodox churches.

"Our ethnic heritages have been reasons to be separate in the past,' Pfeil said. "That's why we have four different churches. ... But today, pretty much all of us are removed from being immigrants. We're all pretty much Americans, who can be proud of our American heritage, and that pride can be fostered and used.'

Church is the place people go to have a relationship with God, he said. It's where they share the sacraments. It's where they learn that there is something out there greater than themselves.

"Beyond that, it's a place where families can stay close, where extended families can stay together and where different families in a community can knit together and become (one) family," he said.

vet these are things he's been thinking about," Marks said. Hillman died of heart failure Friday night at UPMC Shadyside, according to his family.

His nimble mind and unceasing interest in innovation drove his success in business and in philanthropy, people who knew him said Saturday. He and his wife, the late Elsie Hillman, helped spur Pittsburgh's medicine- and technology-driven revival while quietly contributing to a broad range of efforts to improve quality of life across the city, they said. "They did a lot of work that helped bring Pittsburgh out of its long economic malaise,' said Maxwell King, president of The Pittsburgh Foundation. Before the couple invested $10 million to help build Hillman Cancer Center in Shadyside in 2002, UPMC oncologists were seeing patients in offices scattered around Oakland or in a trailer on the roof of Montefiore Hospital, Marks said.

The couple's initial investment helped build an internationally known center for treatment and research. The couple gave another $25 million in grants to help young researchers launch promising projects — which in turn helps the researchers qualify for National Institutes of Health funding that flows to Pittsburgh, Marks said. He estimated the grants have helped the cancer center bring in $90 million to $100 million in NIH funding.

Researchers at the center have helped change melanoma from a death sentence to a manageable disease and have identified two of seven known viruses that cause cancer.

"There's this perception, which is real, that top cancer care occurs at the Hillman,'

The Hillman Family Foundations have given $430 million to organizations and projects throughout the country since 1951, said David Roger, the organization's president. Roger estimated Hillman gave tens of millions of dollars more in personal contributions.

The organization includes 18 foundations, some of which are affiliated with Hillman's children and grandchildren in other parts of the country, Roger said. Hillman, whose net worth Forbes estimated at $2.6 billion, preferred to contribute to local causes, Roger said.

13 arrested in pro- and anti-Trump rallies

Protesters call for president to release his tax returns

CHICAGO — Thousands of chanting, sign-carrying protesters took to the streets in cities across the nation Saturday, demanding that President Trump release his tax returns, so Americans can scrutinize his business ties and potential conflicts of interest.

Violent clashes were the exception during the largely peaceful demonstrations, but in Berkeley, Calif., police arrested 13 people and confiscated knives and makeshift weapons after fistfights broke out between factions that support and oppose Trump.

Trump was the first majorparty nominee in more than 40 years not to release his tax returns, saying it was because he was under audit. He later said that voters don't care.

But 71-year-old Ilene Singh said he's wrong. She rode a bus from New Jersey to New York City with her friend Geraldine Markowitz, 83, to take part in protests. "We're here to say we care," said Singh.

Pushing her walker, Karin Arlin, 85, a Holocaust survivor who came to the United States from Germany when she was 9, said she's also worried about the direction of the country.

'You don't know which way the country goes," said Arlin next to her 89-year-old husband who fled Czechoslovakia during World War II. "I hope Republicans see it.'

Actress and producer Justine Bateman, who addressed several thousand people at a rally in downtown Los Angeles, said Americans need "financial statement proof" that Trump is not beholden to any business interests or country other than the U.S.

In Washington, D.C., one of Trump's sharpest critics in the House spoke to protesters at the U.S. Capitol just before they set off on a march to the National Mall. Democratic Rep. Maxine Waters, of California, said there's nothing to prevent Trump from releasing his income taxes and that "the simple truth is he's got a lot to hide."

'If he thinks he can get away with playing king, he's got another thought coming," Waters

In Last Vegas, police said a broadcast photojournalist for KLAS-TV was arrested and structing during a protest at Trump International Hotel near the Strip. Event organizer Laura Martin savs at least three others were detained but released. Authorities said the protest was attended by about 250 people.

For four decades, presidents and major party nominees have released some of their tax returns, with the exception of Gerald Ford. Trump's break with precedent has raised questions about possible conflicts of interest.

Protesters in Raleigh, N.C., said they suspect that Trump's returns might show he has paid little or nothing to the government he now heads, or that he was indebted to Russian, Chinese or other foreign interests.

"His reputation ... as a businessman and, more importantly, as a true American, a person who is concerned with American values, would be totally destroyed if all his financial information was made public," said Mike Mannshardt, a retired teacher.

Democrats are pushing for a vote on a bill from Rep. Anna Eshoo, a Democrat from California, which would require the president and all majorparty nominees to publicly disclose their previous three years of tax returns with the Office of Government Ethics or the Federal Election Commission.

Republicans also have rebuffed Democrats' efforts to get the House Ways and Means Committee to act. It has legal authority to obtain confidential tax records, and could vote to make them public.

Many demonstrators said they hoped Saturday's marches would convince Trump to voluntarily release them.

"We do care. We want to see his taxes," said Ann Demerlis, who was among hundreds who marched in Philadelphia from City Hall to an area in front of historic Independence Hall, carrying signs and chanting "We want your taxes now!"

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — After barring Arkansas from executing eight inmates in rapid succession because of a dispute over how it obtained one of its execution drugs, Judge Wendell Griffen went to an anti-death penalty rally, where he made a stir by lying down on a cot and binding himself as though he were a condemned man on a Griffen's participation in Friday's protest outside the governor's mansion sparked outrage among death penalty supporters, includdescribed it as judicial misconduct and potential grounds for Griffen's removal from the bench.

Griffen, a Pulaski County circuit judge, said he's morally opposed to the death penalty and that his personal beliefs alone shouldn't disqualify him from taking up certain cases. For years, he has been pushing the boundaries of how much a judge can speak out on controversial issues.

"We have never, in my knowledge, been so afraid to admit that people can have personal beliefs yet can follow the law, even when to follow the law means they must place their personal feelings aside,' Griffen told The Associated Press on Saturday. On Friday, Griffen granted a restraining order preventing Arkansas from using its supply of vecuronium bromide, one of three drugs it uses in executions, because the supplier said the state misleadingly obtained the drug. The ruling came a day before a federal judge naited the executions on different grounds. The supplier, however, on Saturday sought to drop its lawsuit and have Griffen's order lifted because it believed the federal ruling removed the imminent risk its drug would be used in executions.

The back-to-back decisions upend what had initially been a plan to execute eight men in 11 days in four double executions, starting Monday night, because the state's supply of one of the other execution drugs expires at the end of the month.

Attorney General Leslie Rutledge on Saturday also asked the state's highest court to vacate Griffen's ruling, citing the judge's participation in anti-death penalty events before and after he issued it. She asked for a new judge to be assigned

'This court should put a stop to the games being played by a judge who is obviously unable to preside over this case impartially," Rutledge's wrote in her request.

Griffen declined to comment on the demonstration or his ruling, saying he'd address any questions about it at a hearing he scheduled for Tuesday.

Lawmakers have suggested the move may be grounds for the Arkansas House to begin impeachment proceedings, saying the demonstration and a blog post Griffen wrote on the death penalty this week may amount to "gross misconduct" under the state constitu-

Ark. plan to execute 6 inmates is halted

Injunctions will delay, if not prevent, punishment from being meted out this week

LOS ANGELES TIMES

The executions are halted — for now. After a flurry of last-minute legal challenges, a pair of judges have issued temporary injunctions effectively blocking Arkansas from executing six men it planned to put to death this month.

The state was prepared to execute the men in an 11-day span starting Monday, a move that drew rebuke from death penalty opponents who said it was cruel and unusual punishment, and increased the likelihood of a botched execution. (Initially, Arkansas officials had been prepared to execute eight convicted murderers this month, but recent legal rulings had already halted two executions.)

On Saturday, a federal judge granted a preliminary injunction requested by the inmates to block the executions, ruling that there is a significant possibility that the men could successfully challenge the state's execution protocol.

A day earlier. Pulaski County Circuit Judge Wendell Griffen issued a temporary restraining order preventing Arkansas from using its supply of vecuronium bromide, a drug used in the state's lethal injection cocktail.

Griffen's ruling came in response to a request from a pharmaceutical company, McKesson Medical-Surgical, which argued that its public image would suffer if the state used its drugs in executions. Moreover, McKesson argued the state had misled it as to how the drug would be used and did not inform the company it would be a part of a lethal cocktail. Arkansas Attorney General Leslie

The executions were slated to begin Monday, followed by more on Thursday, April 24 and 27, with two men to die each day. No state had executed that many individuals in such a short time frame. The closest was Texas, which executed eight men in both May and June 1997, according to the nonprofit Death Penalty Information Center, which opposes capital punish-

Arkansas Gov. Asa Hutchinson set the execution dates in February after Rutledge determined that the eight men had exhausted their legal challenges. Hutchinson said the state had to act before the end of April, when the state's supply of midazolam, an anesthetic, expired.

On Saturday, Hutchinson issued a statement on the latest legal wrangling: "I understand how difficult this is on the victims' families, and my heart goes out to them," he said.

The series of events in recent days has placed Arkansas officials in a race against the clock to execute the men, as death penalty opponents argue the timing and number of executions increases the potential for mishaps.

'They have attempted to carry out these executions in a rush without any concern for what could go wrong,' Robert Dunham, executive director of the Death Penalty Information Center, said Saturday.

have had Multiple Sclerosis for a number of years and can't work. The Social Security Administration rejected my claim. Can I file an appeal and be successful?

Maybe. Your attorney will evaluate your case by asking a lot of questions and start reviewing medical records. An appeal for an initial rejection must be made within 60 days (plus there is a five day grace period for mailing). Do not wait to see your attorney. I would call and get an appointment within a couple of weeks. The attorney will ask many questions concerning your age, education, work experience, the type of jobs that you were doing and the type of restrictions that your doctors can state that you have. If the medical evidence and doctors' opinions support your claim, there is a good chance you would be successful. If you are in remission and can work, the result could be different. There are a lot of questions to ask and a lot of medical records to review. Make sure you see your doctors timely, which can help your case.

These documents should be kept in a safe place and a safe deposit box is usually the best place. The safe deposit box is frozen on the death of a single person, but can be opened for a Will search. If original powers of attorney are kept in a safe deposit box, it is prudent to name the agent in the power of attorney as a deputy on the box, so he or she can have access to it if the need arises.

But for decades, and for scores of mourning families, the bridge has become a symbol of pain.

Last year, 39 people died jumping off the bridge, considered one of the top suicide magnets in the world. Another 184 came to the bridge intending to harm themselves, but were stopped.

The deaths have scarred the bridge's reputation and prompted local officials, lawmakers and families of those who died to call for the construction of barriers to deter people from jumping off the 220-foot-tall bridge.

DNA leads to arrest in killing of jogger

PRINCETON, Mass. — DNA evidence and an attentive state trooper helped find the man authorities believe killed a New York City woman last summer who was out jogging near her mother's Massachusetts home, authorities said Saturday.

"Good afternoon. We got him," Worcester County District Attorney Joseph Early Jr. proclaimed at a news conference Saturday outside the police department in Princeton. a small community of about 3,500 residents in central Massachusetts. It's about 40 miles west of Boston.

"We're very comfortable that we've got Vanessa Marcotte's killer," Early said.

about a halfmile from her mother's house, where young the woman was visiting family. Marcotte, who worked as an account manager for Google in New York, had gone out to run several hours earlier.

Police said throughout the investigation they believed Marcotte fought her attacker and the suspect had scratches on his face, neck and arms. On Saturday, Early said DNA taken from Marcotte's hands during an autopsy helped solve the case. The DNA was used to help create a profile of a suspect, which was relives in nearby Worcester and who police believe was working in the area at the time of Marcotte's attack.

"It's through her determined fight and her efforts that we obtained the DNA of her killer," Early said.

Colon-Ortiz was charged Friday with aggravated assault, aggravated assault and battery and assault with intent to rape. Early said more charges are expected.

The district attorney credited "an alert state trooper assigned to the detective unit" with recently spotting a dark SUV, the type of vehicle witnesses reported seeing in the area. He said that trooper also noticed the driver matched the profile released in February, old Angelo Colon-Ortiz, who Hispanic or Latino man, about 30 years old, with light- to medium-toned skin, an athletic build and is either balding or has short hair.

Unable to find a piece of paper, Early said the trooper wrote down the vehicle's license plate number on his hand. He then looked it up, visited the home of Colon-Ortiz and left a business card, asking him to call. When Colon-Ortiz didn't respond, the trooper returned to the home and obtained a voluntary DNA sample from Colon-Ortiz. That sample was determined to be a match Friday and Colon-Ortiz was subsequently arrested.

Tribes fear end of federal heating help

WHITE RIVER - Native American tribes fear what could happen if President Trump succeeds in eliminating an energy assistance program that they say is crucial to their members.

While Trump's proposal to end the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, or LIHEAP, would be felt far and wide, perhaps no group would be affected more than Native Americans.

Under federal income guidelines, they qualify for the program at slightly higher rates than Latino and black households, and far higher than whites, according to a February report from the Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies. Eileen Shot, who administers LIHEAP for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe of South Dakota, said "people will die" without it.

LIHEAP helps lowincome households meet their heating and cooling needs. Trump's budget blueprint calls it a "lower-impact program."

New nuke tested, draws praise

Military seeks upgrade for nation's arsenal

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. Scientists at Sandia National Laboratories are claiming success with the first in a new series of test flights involving an upgraded version of a nuclear bomb that has been part of the U.S. arsenal for decades.

Work on the B61-12 has been ongoing for years, and government officials say the latest tests using mock versions of the bomb will be vital to the refurbishing effort.

An F-16 from Nellis Air Force Base dropped an inert version of the weapon over the Nevada desert last month to test its non-nuclear functions as well as the plane's ability to carry the bomb.

the mock bomb landed in a dry lake bed at the Tonopah Test Range.

"It's great to see things all come together: the weapon design, the test preparation, the aircraft, the range and the people who made it happen," Anna Schauer, director of Sandia's Stockpile Resource Center, said in a statement.

Scientists are planning to spend months analyzing the data gathered from the test.

Tracking telescopes, remote cameras and other instruments at the test range recorded information on the reliability, accuracy and performance of the weapon under conditions that were meant to replicate real-world operations.

More test flights are planned over the next three years, and officials with the National Nuclear Security Administration said the first production unit of the B61-12 — developed under what is called the Life Extension Program — is scheduled to be completed in

Coal's woes slated for federal study

Effect to be reviewed of aid for wind, solar

BLOOMBERG NEWS

WASHINGTON—Energy Secretary Rick Perry has ordered 60-day study of the U.S. power grid, which will examine whether policies that favor wind and solar energy are accelerating the retirement of coal and nuclear plants critical to ensuring steady, reliable power supplies.

Regulators increasingly wonder how to balance the grid's reliability with state policies that prioritize lessstable renewable energy

In a memo, Perry highlights concerns about the "erosion" of resources providing "baseload power."

"We are blessed as a nation to have an abundance of domestic energy resources, such as coal, natural gas, nuclear and hydroelectric, all of which provide affordable baseload power and contribute to a stable, reliable and resilient grid," Perry wrote in the memo to his chief of staff. But in recent years, grid experts have "highlighted the diminishing diversity of our nation's electric generation mix and what that could mean for baseload power and grid resilience.'

Giraffe April kisses her new calf Saturday at Animal Adventure Park in Harpursville, N.Y.

It's a boy! Giraffe's birth seen by 1.2M

YouTube feed lets spectators see newborn's emergence 6 feet in air

HARPURSVILLE, N.Y. And baby makes glee.

Before an online audience of more than a million viewers, April the giraffe gave birth to a male calf Saturday at a New York zoo, ending weeks of proverbial pacing by animal lovers in a virtual worldwide waiting

The 15-year-old giraffe delivered her calf shortly before 10 a.m. EDT in an enclosed pen at the zoo in Harpursville, a rural upstate village about 130 miles (northwest of New York City. The mama giraffe tenderly licked her calf, which began to slowly pick its head up from the floor of the pen. About 45 minutes after it was born, the calf stood on its wobbly legs for the first time while mom helped keep her baby steady.

He began nursing not long

At least 1.2 million people watched the Adventure Park's YouTube streaming of the event. A logo on the feed quickly changed from Toys-RUs to BabiesRUs following the birth.

Animal Adventure Park owner Jordan Patch said that both mom and calf are doing Patch said the calf's entrance into the world "was unnerving to even those of us who have witnessed animal births previ-

"Giraffes give birth standing up, which means when the calf is ready to be born, it exits its mother hooves first from six feet off the floor, making for a very exciting event," Patch said in a news release.

This is April's fourth calf, but Animal Adventure Park's first giraffe calf. The proud papa, a 5-year-old giraffe named Oliver, watched from an adjacent pen. This is his first offspring.

The privately owned zoo began livestreaming from April's enclosure in February. People around the world have been tuning in daily.

April has her own website and even an apparel line. A GoFundMe fundraiser page that initially set a goal of $50,000 sat at more than $125,000 on Saturday morning. The money will be used for the care of the animals.

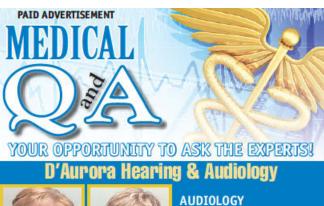

A contest will be held to lecide on a name for the calf.

The park's livestream was briefly interrupted in February when YouTube pulled the feed after someone reported the images contained explicit material and nudity. Jordan Patch, owner of the Animal Adventure Park, blamed "a handful of extremists and animal rights activists" for the interruption.

The wait for the giraffe became an anxiety-ridden experience for some. A Farmington, New Hampshire, songwriter even posted a music video on YouTube called, "I'm Going Crazy Waiting (For A Giraffe)."

The reaction on Twitter was ebullient and hopeful: "We did it, internet! We had a giraffe baby together;" "Everybody sticking their neck out for this baby giraffe;" and "On a day where "mother of all bombs" is a trending phrase, I love how the world unites over the birth of a baby giraffe."

No other details on the calf were announced, but they usually weigh around 150 pounds and are about 6 feet tall at birth. Giraffes are pregnant for 15 months on average.

How long will it take to get used to my hearing aids?

The adjustment period for new hearing aid users will vary from person to person. Factors that affect adjusting to hearing aids include the severity of the hearing loss and the type of hearing aids being worn. In general, when the hearing aid allows for the ear canal to remain open, user's report a higher level of comfort and a shorter adjustment period. Today, due to state-of-the-art feedback cancelling features, most hearing aids can be fit to be more open in the ear canal if it is appropriate. It is easier to use hearing aids than ever before and most new hearing aid wearers find they have little, or no, trouble adapting to them.

Italy's Emma Morano, the world's oldest person, succumbs at 117

She had been the last person who had lived in the 19th century

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Emma Morano, at 117 the world's oldest person who is also believed to have been the last surviving person born in the 1800s, died Saturday at her home in northern Italy, her physician said.

Dr. Carlo Bava told The Associated Press by phone that Morano's caretaker had called him to say she had stopped breathing in the afternoon while sitting in an armchair at her home in Verbania, a town on Italy's Lake Maggiore.

Bava said he had last seen his patient Friday when "she thanked me and held my hand," as she did every time he called on her. While Morano had been increasingly spending more time sleeping and less time speaking in recent weeks, she had still eaten her daily raw egg and biscuits that day, he said.

A woman in Jamaica, Violet Brown, who was born in that Caribbean island on March 10, 1900, is now considered the oldest known person in the world, according to a list kept by the Gerontology Research Group. Jamaican Prime Minister Andrew Holness tweeted his congratulations to her.

Morano's doctor, who lives a few blocks away from his patient, had been her physician for nearly a quarter of a century.

Polls show tight vote on Erdogan's clout

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISTANBUL — In the last day before Turkey's crucial referendum on whether to expand the president's power, both "yes" and "no" campaigners addressed flagwaving supporters Saturday in Istanbul and Ankara.

At stake is the future of Turkey's political system, with supporters saying the constitutional changes will herald a period of stability and prosperity, and detractors warning the reforms could lead to an autocratic one-man rule by President Recep Tayyip Erdogan.

Opinion polls indicate a tight race, and fierce campaigning took place Saturday right up to a 6 p.m. ban.

Erdogan has long championed the idea of changing Turkey's system of government from parliamentary to presidential. He is calling on his countrymen to vote Sunday to approve 18 constitutional changes that would,

But critics argue that Erdogan, who has been at the helm of Turkish government as prime minister or president since 2003, will simply cement his hold on power with even fewer checks and balances if the 'yes" side wins.

"Turkey is at a junction. We will make our decision tomorrow. Do we want a democratic parliamentary system or do we want a one-man regime?" Kemal

Putin pushes buttons with agricultural sanctions

Ban on Turkish tomatoes persists amid split on Syria

BLOOMBERG NEWS

Along a fertile stretch of the northeastern Mediterranean, row after row of once-plump tomatoes are rotting

The fallout from the war in Syria is creeping further into Turkey, where the sanctions Vladimir Putin imposed after President Recep Tayyip Erdogan's forces downed a Russian jet 16 months ago are pushing farmers toward ruin.

"We cannot survive without the Russian market," said Munir Sen, the head of the association of fruit and vegetable brokers in Mersin, the southern city that hosts Turkey's biggest seaport. "Wastage rates have never been this high."

Erdogan's efforts at rapprochement with Putin have led to the lifting of the most punishing of the penalties, on Turkey's key tourism industry. But with the two leaders pursuing conflicting agendas in Syria, Putin is refusing to budge on the tomato ban, keeping a lid on a market that had accounted for 70 percent of all Turkish exports of the fruit.

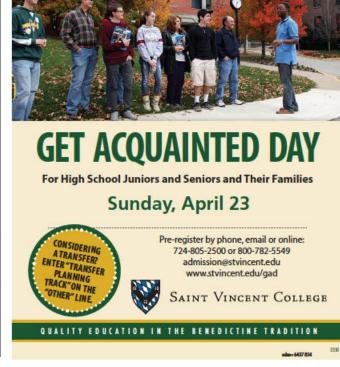

Putin's squeeze is adding to a surge in unemployment and a widening trade deficit, turning the plight of tomato growers and sellers into a campaign issue for Erdogan. Turkey is hitting back by effectively barring purchases of wheat from Russia, the world's largest supplier.

Turkey's struggling farmers are being held hostage to an even bigger and vastly more damaging dispute – the multinational proxy war in Syria.

While Putin has enlisted Erdogan's backing for efforts to end the six-year conflict, which Russia joined in November 2015, the leaders remain deeply at odds over Turkey's policy of pushing for the removal of Putin's Syrian ally, Bashar Assad, and Moscow's embrace of Kurdish forces Ankara considers terrorists

'FREE TUITION'

Illusion, not solution

ttractive as it is for students and parents, "free' in-state tuition won't solve higher education's ever-higher costs at New York's public universities and community colleges — or at Pennsylvania's cash-strapped state-owned universities.

"Free tuition" isn't free. Somebody has to pay for it. New York's new program, costing an estimated $163 million extra in its first year, relies in part on tax hikes on incomes of $1 million-plus to aid families making up to $100,000 (eventually $125,000). Bernie Sanders' federal proposal relied on taxing financial transactions.

Like all higher-education subsidies, "free tuition" provides yet more cover for highereducation price hikes above inflation — but it's taxpayers, not students and parents, footing those ever-higher bills. And when, if ever, does this new entitlement's pain for taxpayers end?

New Yorkers' "free tuition" comes at another price — their freedom. If graduates don't stay in high-tax New York as long as the two or four years they were in school — and just imagine the headaches and costs of enforcing that! — their "free tuition" becomes loans they have to repay. And because it creates more job-seeking grads but not more job openings, "free tuition," as Trib columnist Ralph R. Reiland says, is a "formula for ... higher unemployment and underemployment, and lower income growth."

Simply put, "free tuition" merely shifts families' college costs to taxpayers while doing nothing about higher ed's runaway costs. It's an illusion not a solution.

Sunday pops

Having served two years in prison, disgraced former state House Speaker John Perzel, R-Philadelphia, seemingly caught a break April 5. A Superior Court ruling struck down the $1 million in restitution that was part of his sentence for his 2011 public-corruption conviction, which remains intact. The ruling said the state can't be considered a victim for such purposes. But PennLive reports his case was remanded to a Dauphin County court for resentencing, "in part because (Superior Court) noted that the trial judge may wish to revisit the amount of fines imposed on Perzel in light of erasure of the restitution." Don't spend that $1 million on anything else just yet, Mr. Perzel. ... Ride-sharing giant Uber will pay $3.5 million to settle its Commonwealth Court appeal against the record $11.36 million that the Public Utility Commission tried to fine Uber for operating without permission in 2014. Meanwhile, Reuters says, a ruling in a lawsuit "filed by Italy's major traditional taxi associations" blocked use of Uber apps, promotions and advertisements, essentially banning Uber in Italy. Sorry, Uber, but you can't appeal that ruling in Pennsylvania. ... And finally, causing turmoil in Israeli politics is wait for it — Britney Spears. CNN reports security and logistical concerns related to her first concert ever in Israel, set for July 3 in Tel Aviv, led the Labor Party to delay until July 4 its scheduled July 3 primary to elect a chairman. It remains unclear whether a spokesman who said Labor leaders "aren't concerned about voters favoring Spears over the party" was lip-syncing.

United's unfriendly skies

ccording to the 2016 J.D. Power satisfaction rankings for airlines, among traditional carriers, United Airlines finishes dead last. If you throw in the budget airlines, United finishes only above Frontier Airlines. These rankings have been consistent for years.

There is only one way a company can be so poorly regarded for as long as United has been. It would appear that United is not a company that instills an ethos that the employee's job is to solve problems in order to make the customer happy.

Instead, it suggests that there may be a "go through the motions' mentality that encourages employees to respond negatively to even the most harmless request

I find the United CEO to be physically capable of mouthing the words of a changed attitude, as he did several years ago, but it would not appear as if his heart is actually in it.

My wife and I have had membership in United's frequent-flyer program for years, but I cannot remember the last time we flew with them.

After our second flight on United between our former jobs in Mongolia and our home in the U.S., we knew we would gladly pay a few more dollars to fly on a much more considerate airline, Korean Air.

We spent several thousand dollars flying between Mongolia and the U.S., and we never once considered returning to United.

Their pathetic and unconcerned service convinced us that they did not really want our business.

The writer currently lives and works in Lagos, Nigeria.

It's always been difficult to feel like a valued airline customer with extra charges for early boarding and more comfortable seating — and, don't forget, each piece of luggage. Where has the value of a customer, and now the dignity owed the individual, gone?

When United Airlines neglected to plan for the movement of its employees by overbooking, who should have paid the price? Sadly, United picked a customer who planned in advance, paid in advance and did not volunteer to bail out this corporation at his expense. Is that wrong? As a frequent flier and an employee

I hope that we can all be "united" in our response to the brutality of United Airlines. rirst, since we all have to check in prior to boarding, the problem should have been identified and addressed before boarding.

After a passenger has been checked in and seated, there is no acceptable excuse to remove that passenger from his or her seat, which has been paid for and assigned to that person, unless he or she poses a threat to the flight.

Then to be physically dragged and injured without the least concern for the passenger's safety, dignity and well-being is completely unacceptable. I think that we are all aware of other airlines in business and I hope that every-t will never rival the Super Bowl, the World Series or even March Madness in popularity. But Pennsylvania's budget battle is underway and — unlike those sporting events — it has a realworld impact on every taxpayer.

In February Gov. Tom Wolf released his budget proposal. Predictably, it called for increased spending and higher taxes although far less of both than in past years. This month the House Appropriations Committee, where the budgeting process actually begins, released its own budget that holds the line on taxes while actually slightly reducing overall general fund spending in the coming year.

Harrisburg politicians are operating on the theory that the state has a $1.4 billion "structural budget deficit" and revenue from the current fiscal year is expected to fall about $700 million short of projections, so the new budget begins with a significant shortfall. Early in the process, Wolf a budget deal might actually be struck close to the June 30 deadline.

Optimism is rising that took any broad-based tax hikes, meaning the personal income tax or sales tax, off the table. He proposed a severance tax on Marcellus shale drillers and advocates various targeted tax hikes - a strategy that was used last year and failed, resulting in overly optimistic revenue projections. The House Appropriations Committee has countered with a Republican plan dubbed ReinventPA that includes no new taxes.

Like the governor's plan, the Republican budget increases spending on K-12 education. But unlike Wolf's proposal, it funds that increase by making cuts to administrative spending across all three branches of state government.

The GOP plan utilizes a mix of reforms to the state's liquor system, expansion and reforms of gambling, tax credit reductions and special fund transfers in addition to administrative cuts to bring the budget into balance. It is unrealistic to suggest any significant progress can be made on the biggest cost driver in state government — the growing unfunded liability in the state's public employee pension funds — in time to impact the 2017-18 budget, which must be adopted by the end of June. But the ReinventPA plan does begin the process of moving forward on pension reform. The bottom line: Wolf's budget calls for an overall spending increase of about $500 million; the GOP plan would reduce general fund spending by $245 million. That puts the two sides much closer together than they were at this stage during the first two years of the Wolf administration. Optimism is rising that a budget deal might actually be struck close to the June 30 deadline. The GOP has agreed to some of the governor's spending priorities but will fight hard against any tax hikes.

There are still areas of disagreement. But 2018 is a gubernatorial election year. All members of the state House and half of the Senate will be up for election. No one wants a repeat of the lengthy budget battle that two years ago inflicted financial pain on nonprofits, school districts and others across Penn's Wood. That is why Wolf has abandoned the demands for dramatic tax-andspending increases that were the hallmark of his first two budget proposals. Thus the budget differences between the two sides are far less this year than in the past. But the big fiscal challenges facing the commonwealth remain, leaving much to be done even after the new budget is adopted.

Russia to missile treaty en. Paul Selva recently became the first Pen-tagon official to state publicly that Russia has deployed a land-based cruise missile in direct violation of its treaty obligations to the United States. Selva, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said in testimony before the House Armed Services Committee: "We believe that the Russians have deliberately deployed it in order to pose a threat to NATO.

The Russians have calculated that it costs them more to fulfill their treaty commitments than to break them. The only proper response is to increase the costs and change Russia's calculation.

The agreement in question is the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, which the Soviet Union and the United States signed in 1987 to eliminate a class of land-based missiles with a range of 500 to 5,500 kilometers. Reasons for the treaty date back to the 1970s, when the Soviet Union deployed intermediate-range nuclear missiles to Europe, reducing warning times and threatening to divide Europe from North America. NATO responded by deploying U.S. intermediate-range nuclear missiles in 1983. The increased tensions led to arms-control negotiations and the landmark INF Treaty.

From Vladimir Putin's perspective, the treaty is a one-sided deal. Since only the United States and Russia are parties to the treaty, Russia's neighbors may develop intermediate-range forces, so the Kremlin sees itself as surrounded by hostile countries.

Putin's government has been subverting the treaty for eight years. The State Department formally declared Russia in violation of the treaty in 2014 — and every year thereafter. But all of America's protests were treated as so much hot air.

Violation is a low-risk. high-reward proposition for Russia. The missile deployment not only sows divisions between the U.S. and its allies, but it also yields no consequences. That's why I've introduced legislation with a group of senators that would direct the Pentagon to take four measures until Russia lives up to its obligations:

 Invest $100 million in developing a new intermediate-range cruise missile. Under the treaty, the United States can't test, produce or possess this kind of missile, but it can research improvements to other missiles.

• Provide $500 million in funding for new defense capabilities that could neutralize whatever advantage Russia gains by violating the treaty.

• Direct the Pentagon to facilitate the transfer of cruise missiles among our Curtail funding for two treaties that Russia wants to preserve: a possible extension of the New START Treaty, which limits each country's strategic nuclear forces, and the Open Skies Treaty, which allows Russia to conduct aerial surveillance over the United States (and vice versa). Russia's new cruise missile is an incredibly dangerous threat to the United States and our allies. Unless we act now, Russia will only continue its campaign of aggression. Congress should heed Selva's warning and make Russia pay for its actions. Only by increasing the costs of defying our country will we bring the geopolitical scales back to balance.

A case for preventing scraped knees

WASHINGTON
Then not furrowing their collective brows about creches and displays of the Ten Commandments here and there, courts often are pondering tangential contacts between the government and religious schools. Courts have held that public money can constitutionally fund the transportation of parochial school pupils to classes — but not on field trips. It can fund nurses at parochial schools — but not guidance counselors. It can fund books — but not maps.

Daniel Patrick Moynihan wondered: What about atlases, which are books of maps?

On Wednesday, the Supreme Court will consider the constitutional significance of this incontrovertible truth: "A scraped knee is a scraped knee whether it happens at a Montessori day care or a Lutheran day

The question for the Supreme Court is whether Missouri can demand an even stricter separation of church and state.

That assertion is in an agreeably brief amicus brief written by Michael McConnell, a Stanford law professor specializing in church-state relations. He requires just 13 pages to make mincemeat of Missouri's contention that a bit of 19th-century bigotry lodged in Missouri's Constitution requires it to deny shredded tires to Trinity Lutheran Church in Columbia, which runs a preschool.

Missouri's Department of Natural Resources, which has a capacious conception of natural resources, runs the Scrap Tire Program. It enables playgrounds to replace gravel and dirt with a rubber protective surface that is kinder to the knees of the devout and heathens alike.

The department refused the church's request for a $20,000 grant, citing this from the Missouri Constitution: "No money shall ever be taken from the public treasury, directly or indirectly, in aid of any church, sect or denomination of religion." Trinity Lutheran says the state is abridging its First Amendment right to the "free exercise" of religion and denying the 14th Amendment guarantee of "equal protection of the laws."

The question for the Supreme Court is whether Missouri can demand an even stricter separation of church and state. Can it exclude an otherwise eligible entity from a generally available public benefit — a benefit serving a completely separate purpose (see above: knees) — simply because the entity is religious?

The Blaine Amendment

Missouri's constitutional language is a Blaine Amendment, named for Republican House Speaker James G. Blaine. Protestants resented Catholic immigrants founding parochial schools that taught Catholicism as forthrightly as public schools taught Protestantism with prayers hymn singing and readings from the King James version of the Bible. Each public school was, in Horace Mann's approving words, a "nursery of piety" — Protestant piety.

Hoping that anti-Catholicism would propel him into the presidency, in 1875 Blaine unsuccessfully proposed amending the U.S. Constitution to stipulate that no public money could go to schools "under the control of any religious sect." But 37 states put versions of his amendment into their constitutions, and Congress required its inclusion in the constitutions of states entering the union.

Even if, as Missouri implausibly insists, its constitution's language, which was enacted in — wait for it — 1875, was unrelated to anti-Catholic animus, the language is nevertheless incompatible with the Supreme Court's Establishment Clause jurisprudence. Splitting and re-splitting judicial hairs over the years, the Supreme Court has produced a three-part test: A statute pertaining to contact between government and religion does not constitute establishment of religion if the statute has "a secular legislative purpose" (again: knees), it neither advances nor inhibits religion, and it does not involve "excessive government entanglement with religion.'

Practices during the Founders' era demonstrate, McConnell argues, that "including religious groups in neutral public benefit programs was not viewed as an establishment." And: "Shredded tires have no religious, ideological, or even instructional content ... a rubberized playground is existentially incapable of advancing religion.

Spreading shredded tires beneath a jungle gym hardly (in the Supreme Court's language) intentionally or inadvertently inculcates particular religious tenets." And Missouri's denial of this benefit is, McConnell writes, "the clearest possible example of an unconstitutional penalty on the exercise of a constitutional right," the free exercise of religion. "The religious status of the Trinity Lutheran day care bears not the slightest relevance to the purpose of the state's program." Which pertains to knees.

President Donald Trump reacts with Vice President Mike Pence in the Oval Office after Republicans pulled their health care bill from the House floor.

FIXING OBAMACARE

Letting government health care 'explode' would be reprehensible, says Michael Strain

t would be an error to conclude that the Affordable Care Act is working well because House Republicans failed to pass a bill to repeal and replace it.

Although talk of a "death spiral" is overblown — we are not witnessing a situation in which coverage rates will drop precipitously — it is the case that insurers are pulling out of the exchanges. According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, 21 percent of exchange enrollees have access to only one insurer in 2017, compared with 2 percent in 2016 — a huge and very concerning increase. (And the share of enrollees with access to only two providers nearly doubled between 2016 and 2017, from 12 to 22 percent.)

At the same time, premiums on the ACA exchanges have increased significantly — 22 percent in 2017 alone, and more than double during the past four

Oh, and there were still 29 million Americans without health insurance

These statistics matter. Individuals who live in areas with less competition not only have fewer or no health insurance options, but also fewer options for physicians and other health-care services and longer wait times to get appointments and the like. It is the case that (for now) many enrollees on the exchanges are protected from premium increases — but that just means those cost increases are socialized, which when accumulated over time have tangible consequences for middle-class American households. (And if premiums continue to grow faster than the rest of the economy, at some point premium increases.)

And of course, for the millions of Americans without health insurance, the ACA has yet to achieve its stated goal of universal coverage.

Broader problems

There are broader problems with the ACA, as well. It essentially maintains the link between your job and your health insurance coverage, which is a problematic feature of the U.S. health care system. It does not do enough to encourage healthy people to insure against catastrophic and highly unlikely (but very serious) accidents and medical events. It uses excessive government regulation to narrow the options that are available to consumers in health insurance plans, micromanaging individual choice from Washington and state capitols. It places disruptive burdens on employers. It does not employ market discipline to lower costs, increase productivity and expand choice over the long term. It maintains a structure that confuses prepayment for routine health care services with insurance against unlikely needs.

Republicans control both houses of Congress and the White House. Given the problems with the ACA, what should they do? It seems the obvious and correct answer is get to work. It is discouraging that Congress seems to have a different answer. After the admittedly devastating failure to pass an ACA repeal-and-replace bill, House Speaker Paul D. Ryan, R-Wis., said that the ACA "is the law of the land" and that it will remain as such House Speaker Paul D. Ryan, R-Wis., said that the ACA "is the law of the land" and that it will remain as such "for the foreseeable future." Well. Hopefully "foreseeable" is measured in months — not years.

"for the foreseeable future." Well. Hopefully "foreseeable" is measured in months — not years.

Years is too long. Instead of a cepting the ACA status quo, the GOP should dust itself off from the last debacle and begin a renewed effort on ACA repeal-and-replace by stating clearly and unambiguously that its goal is universal health insurance coverage.

Path to a goal

It is the job of conservatives to offer a path to that goal that is compatible with our principles. Clearly, market discipline is what is most needed in the U.S. health care system — again, to lower costs, expand choice and increase productivity over the long term. But more than market discipline is needed. All the broader problems I mentioned need to be addressed, and more. Fortunately, there are many ideas and plans put forward by conservatives to replace the ACA, and to move health policy in a conservative direction. The GOP's elected leaders have a lot of material to work with.

Health policy can't be left unaddressed "for the foreseeable future." Politically, the GOP has spent seven years saying it was going to replace the ACA with better policy. Giving up after a few weeks of effort is ridiculous.

And substantively, there are major problems with the ACA that simply need to be addressed. The strategy of letting the ACA "explode" and blaming the Democrats, as President Trump suggested, is reprehensible. The GOP is the nation's governing party.

It's time for it to govern. Michael Strain is a resident scholar at the American

Hope springs from rituals here is something about spring. Mark Twain said, "It's spring fever. That is what the name of it is. And when you've got it, you want — oh, you don't quite know what it is you do want, but it just fairly makes your heart ache, you want it so!"

You might wander the yard, looking for an early crocus or daffodil, or sit on vour front stoop when the first warm evening comes

Everyone longs for spring to finally get here.

But some years it is harder than others to feel hopeful. A tough economy, distant wars or strife here at home — all take their toll. And when it seems like the world is just one reckless tweet away from global chaos, spring can struggle to Some people, the smart ones, do not wait for a change in seasons or a religious holiday to give them the boost they need. They build that cycle into their regular routine, renewing their spirit on their own.

On any given Saturday morning, the line at La Prima Espresso, in Pittsburgh's Strip District, begins to form early. By 9 a.m., it is usually four across, and it stretches from the counter to the door, even onto the sidewalk.

It is an imperfect line, an Italian line, more like a block of folks, slowly edging forward.

Five or six baristas are in constant motion behind the counter, and patrons peel off with their coffees, looking for a place to stand or a seat at an outside table.

Waiting in line is its own thing here, a chance to catch up and laugh a little, visit with old friends or make new ones.

Young and old, every race and creed, students and executives, usually chat about the richness of life, rarely about politics.

They all wait in line for the simple pleasure of sharing a coffee.

Surely, these simple rituals are not limited to La Prima or Pittsburgh. They are instinctively repeated around the world, providing a tonic for the ills of our time, the folly of our leaders and the excesses of our politicians.

One recent "CBS Sunday Morning" story, part of a show featuring careful money management, took a surprising turn. Dan and Carolyn Miller, and their six kids, have traveled the world for next to nothing, because they have mastered the use of airline bonus miles.

But Dan talked about the real lesson for their kids, saying, "Everywhere else, people are just people. Whether it's in another state, another city, another country, people are pretty much the same no matter where you go. And to be able to see that, I think, makes a big difference."

And that is the lesson for all of us.

People are just people, everywhere.

Even if we just share a coffee, or a few kind words, we can find our own hope.

3-run shot helps Bucs rally from 6-2 deficit at windy Wrigley Field

CHICAGO — Put Andrew McCutchen in Wrigley Field, and he can play forever.

McCutchen's .315 batting average at the Friendly Confines is second best among active big leaguers. Nobody has a higher on-base percentage there.

With the Pirates trailing the Chicago Cubs by one run in the seventh inning Saturday, McCutchen went to the plate with two outs and runners on first and second.

Cue the "Field of Dreams" theme music.

McCutchen fell behind 0-2 against reliever Pedro Strop, but a pair of errant sliders evened the count.

Sliders have bedeviled McCutchen this season. His 29.5 percent strike rate on sliders is higher than any other

"They can throw 'em as much as they want, but the good hitters are able to adjust," McCutchen said. "I made a bad swing on one, made an adjustment. He threw two good ones in the dirt, and I spit on those."

Strop threw another slider. McCutchen murdered it.

"He left one up, and I was able to do it," McCutchen said. "That's what good hitters do."

McCutchen's shot into the left-field bleachers propelled the Pirates to an 8-7 comeback victory against the Cubs.

"This guy (Strop) had him maybe where he thought he wanted him," manager Clint Hurdle said. "Andrew put a pretty swing on it.'

The ball veered a bit toward the foul pole, but there was never any doubt it was long enough to get out.

"When he hit it, I jumped over the fence (in front of the dugout)," Josh Harrison said. "Everybody got pretty excited." The crowd went pretty silent."

It was McCutchen's 177th career home run, which moved him ahead of Barry Bonds into fourth place on the Pirates' all-time list. Roberto Clemente is third with 240

It also was the first home run McCutchen hit on MLB's Jackie Robinson Day.

Columbus forward Nick Foligno wise cracked after the Blue Jackets' 4-1 loss in Game 2 on Friday at PPG Paints Arena that more Penguins than Marc-Andre Fleury deserved to wear goalie pads with how many blocked shots they accumulated.

wonder if there's a better way to attack the Penguins, who enter Sunday's Game 3 at Nationwide Arena with a 2-0 lead in the series and 45 blocked shots to their credit through two games.

The Penguins certainly aren't shying away from their strategy.

Mercer gets rare day off

BY ROB BIERTEMPFEL

CHICAGO — Cal Ripken Jr. didn't call to offer condolences, but Jordy Mercer wasn't offended.

Mercer was not in the starting lineup Saturday for the first time this season. He hates to take a day off, but playing in 162 games this season — much less matching the 2,632 straight starts made by Ripken — is a tough task.

"You guys knew that wasn't going to happen," Mercer said with a grin. "It's all right. It's fine. That's a lot of games that (Ripken) played." Last season, Mercer appeared in 149 games, which was second on the team behind Andrew McCutchen (153 games). In 2014, Mercer led the team with 149 games played.

In his career, Mercer has hit 1 for 14 (.071) against Chicago Cubs right-hander Jake Arrieta. This is a good day to take a breather," manager Clint Hurdle said. Overall, Mercer is batting .189 with one extra-base hit and three RBIs. He has struck out eight times in 37 at-bats. The down time gave Mercer a chance to

"Your mind's not racing through a bunch of different things," Mercer said before the game. "I can isolate (my swing), go into the cage and work on some things."

Adam Frazier made his first start this season at shortstop, but Mercer didn't get the entire day off. After the Pirates rallied with a five-run seventh inning, he entered the game in the eighth as a defensive replacement.

Planet of the aches recharge.

Gregory Polanco was scratched from the lineup about two hours before the start of Saturday's game because of what the team described as "right-groin discomfort." His status is day-to-day. According to the team, Polanco noticed the discomfort during Friday's game but not on any specific play. Josh Harrison started in left field.

Adam Frazier made his first this year at shortstop in place of Jordy Mercer, who was 1 for 14 for his career against Cubs right-hander Jake Arrieta.

Hurdle said Francisco Cervelli was examined by the training staff before Friday's game but did not provide details of Cervelli's illness. Cervelli played and went 2 for 4, including a key two-run double. He spent much of Saturday morning in the trainer's room and again was in the lineup.

Rivero makes a move

A slight adjustment on the mound helped Felipe Rivero get out of a jam in the eighth inning Friday.

Trying to protect a 4-2 lead, Rivero began spraying his fastball. He walked Kris Bryant and plunked Anthony Rizzo. With two on and none out, Rivero moved from the center of the rubber to the third-base side. It seemed to help him harness his fastball. "It was a little tough from the begin-ning, with my delivery," Rivero said.

"When I moved, that's when it got a little bit better.' Ben Zobrist battled Rivero through a 10-pitch at-bat. With his fastball still in doubt, Rivero tossed three straight changeups, which Zobrist fouled off. 'I was trying to settle in with the changeup and get control of my fastball," Rivero said. "When I saw he was waiting on (the changeup), that's when I came with the fastball."

Zobrist went down swinging at a 95.3 mph four-seamer. With two outs, Jason Heyward legged out an infield single. First baseman John Jaso stepped in front of second baseman Josh Harrison to snag the ball, but Heyward beat the toss to Rivero at the bag with a headfirst slide.

With the bases loaded, Rivero fired a

98.7 mph fastball to pinch-hitter Willson Contreras, who hit a grounder to third baseman David Freese to snuff the

Latrobe on the defensive

Boys lacrosse team improves against opponents' attack

BY JOE SAGER

Latrobe's boys lacrosse team figured its attack would be its strength this

The Wildcats were right. Junior Marco Cuda, who led the team in scoring the past two seasons, senior Garrett Yeager and junior Matt Bobula bring stability to the front line.

However, Latrobe's back line has opened eyes as well. Senior Logan Rockwell, juniors Duke Snyder and Paxton Nupp, sophomore Adam Snvder and freshman Cole Novak and senior goalie Sam Lazzaro have formed a cohesive defensive unit.

"Going into the season, if you asked me how I thought our defense would look, that was the area I was most concerned about," coach Pete Cuda said. "It's one of the stronger areas on the field for us. I have been pleasantly surprised with their performance.'

The Wildcats (1-3) were tested early, though. They dropped games to Canon-McMillan, 14-4, Shady Side Academy, 14-1, and Franklin Regional, 10-5.

"We started out a little slow. But even though we started 0-3, it doesn't mean we are playing poorly," Cuda said. "We just started out with the first three games of the season against probably the three hardest teams we'll face all year. So the start is not what we wanted, as far as our record goes, but we haven't been playing bad.

"The weather didn't help us in the preseason with all the snow, either. It was difficult to get out and get what I think is an adequate number of practices before our first game. Plus, the hockey team did well and went deep in the payoffs. We have a lot of hockey kids whose first lacrosse practice was two days before our first game. But things have really come along, and we're playing better lacrosse. We're excited about the rest of the year."

Latrobe snapped its slide with a 15-6 win over Gateway on Monday. The offense broke out as Yeager scored five goals, Marco Cuda four and Bobula

"We had as many assists as goals, which shows our unselfish play," Pete Cuda said. "We're getting some output from the midfield, too. We're working the ball and scoring that way as opposed to being selfish and just shooting a lot. That's showing we're definitely coming together as a team."

Seniors Nick Bobula, Greg Lane and Tyler Marek, junior Keith Torrillo and sophomore Colvin Stallings are some of the team's midfielders. They've been focusing on possession.

"We're becoming a more patient team. We're not a run-and-gun team. We need to control the ball and work the ball. I think that's where we struggled the first two games," Cuda said. "That's the area we worked at the hardest to improve, and it showed in the Gateway game and it's one of the reasons we had the output we did with our attack."

The Wildcats are dealing with a new classification and section. Latrobe, a WPIAL Division II playoff team last year, is in Class 3A. In addition to Franklin Regional and Shady Side Academy, the Wildcats face Fox Chapel, Hempfield, Norwin, Penn-Trafford and Plum in Section 2.

"The competition in our section is definitely more competitive than it has been in the past. In the long run, that helps us and makes everybody better,' Cuda said. "We're playing teams like Shady Side and Fox Chapel, who, his $torically, have been very strong \, lacrosse$ programs in the Pittsburgh area. It's only going to make us play harder."

Cuda has seen improvement in his squad and believes it will continue.

'It's a good group of kids. I really enjoy coaching them. They listen well and take constructive criticism well. Everyone gets along," he said. "Now we're getting into our stride. Last year, only the top two teams from the section made the playoffs. This year, they're taking the top four. We're definitely in the thick of the playoff race. Our objective is to get in the playoffs, as always. I think if we progress in the way we have, I am confident we will make the playoffs and do well. We're on target and moving in the right direction and playing better when we need to. I think we'll start to see more dividends because of it."

New track rankings set to make debut events. "My dad will help me, too, and we'll just keep checking them."

In a break from recent tradition, the WPIAL eliminated the regional qualifying meets and this year will select its championship contenders based on times, heights and distances earned in the regu-

Each week the WPIAL will post online a list of the top marks in every event so athletes can see where they rank. The first batch of numbers will appear either Monday or Tuesday, said WPIAL track committee member Ed Helbig Competitors will learn if they're above or below the cut line: top 24 in Class AAA and the top 16 in Class AA. And as more results are added, that cut line will fluctuate.

Every dual-meet or invitational becomes a qualifier.

"I like how you can qualify at any time because it makes it easier for people to do well," said Burton, an NA freshman who last week won the 100 meters at the Lady Spartan/Wildcat Invitational at Latrobe. "It doesn't put so much pressure on them to do really good at one meet."

According to the website (pa.milesplit.com) used by WPIAL coaches to compile the results, Burton's 100-meter time was so far the best in WPIAL girls Class AAA. Scherer has the top reported Class AA girls times in the 100 and 200. Scherer's teammate Weimer, a defending WPIAL champion, leads Class AA throwers in shot put and discus.

Yet, the weekly WPIAL list will be must-read motivation for everybody.

"For the veterans like Nikki and Lizzie, there's no doubt they're aware of their numbers," Burrell coach Steve White said, "and I think that they're pretty comfortable (to qualify) from the very first meet. However, I know both of them are very competitive and still want to make sure they are one of the top seeds.'

The WPIAL rankings could encourage some wellplaced athletes to branch out into another event. But the information will be most important for the athletes at risk of missing the cut. The mark-to-beat could change every week.

"I've got 120 kids on my team, and I want as many as possible qualifying," White said. "I plan on making that public knowledge for them to see: 'Here's the list. Here's where you need to be.

The WPIAL track committee eliminated the championship qualifying meets for several reasons. But among them was that the format change would relieve some pressure from the top WPIAL athletes. Under the previous system, one bad day at the qualifier would keep them out of the WPIAL championships.

"The system we had for years with the qualifier wasn't a bad system," said Hempfield coach Ron Colland, a track committee member. But now if you perform well in the early season, and if you get injured or ill, you know that you've still got a chance to recover and come back.'

"I like that it gives the athletes more time to qualify rather than just one day,' said Holmberg, who will try to qualify in the 300 hurdles, 200 meters, triple jump and 1,600-meter relay.

Helbig said feedback overall has been positive, but coaches have expressed a few

Some coaches have not entered their results promptly, so their athletes won't appear on the WPIAL list until later weeks. Their tardiness could have reasonable explanations as coaches figure out the website, but Helbig theorized a few may be "sandbagging."

For strategic reasons, a coach could delay entering team results until after the section schedule has finished — an attempt to hide information from opponents.

"What these people don't understand is that if I want to scout a team, all I have to do is call one of the teams they've already run," Helbig said, "and I can get all the information that I need. You're not really 'sandbagging' anything."

Another point of discussion is the acceptance of handtimed results. Coaches are concerned that those measurements could be inaccurate. However, the WPIAL track committee did not want to disadvantage schools that do not own fully automated timing systems, so hand-held times are allowed for qualifying.

"I think in principle (the new format) is a great move, but I'm concerned about the details," North Allegheny coach John Neff said. "A lot of coaches have already said that in some of the sprint races there have been some ridiculous hand times. I'm just concerned it's not going to really be the top 24 kids.'

If a coach raises a concern about a specific time, the track committee will investigate, Helbig said. Neff would rather see hand times eliminated.

Hand-held results will be converted using a formula that slightly increases the qualifying time, but Helbig understands the concern.

"Every meet you run now becomes a qualifying meet,' Helbig said, "so it becomes that much more important that everything is done right and accurately measured because it could be the difference of someone making the championship meet or not making the championship.'

Penguins right wing Patric Horngvist is upended in front of the goal against the Blue Jackets in the third period of Columbus plays to hit, Pens to win

KEVIN GORMAN

here was something smug about John Tortorella, even after the Columbus Blue Jackets lost to the Penguins on Friday night.

"I don't have one (gripe) about the team. Not one," Tortorella said after the 4-1 loss in Game 2 of their firstround playoff series. "I'm anxious to get our suits on again and get at it in our building."

Now might be a bad time to remind Torts that getting at it in their building hasn't been too beneficial for the Blue Jackets in their postseason history. They have one career playoff victory at Nationwide Arena.

Then again, Columbus has never won a playoff series. And nothing about the first two games has given any indication the Blue Jackets are about to change that.

They have followed Tortorella's game plan to perfection, playing with physicality for an edge in both hits (51-30) and shots (79-55).

It's exactly the type of series Tortorella promised to play against the Penguins, one he foreshadowed when he said the Blue Jackets lost part of their personality during their 16-game winning streak this season.

"We're going to hit. That's a big ari oi who we are, Tortorella salu before the start of the series. "I think we lost some of that. I talked to our guys, during when we had that 16-game winning streak. We were filling the net. We forgot about who we were and what our foundation is, and that's a team that's going to bang and have some grind to its game." As a result, Columbus has lost the ability to fill the net. The Blue Jackets have two goals in as many games, have never held the lead and failed to keep the score tied for a full minute.

To say the Penguins have found the flaws in Tortorella's game plan is an understatement. The Penguins were outplayed in the first period of both games, yet relied on their speed and skill, by blocking shots and clearing the crease to win.

They take a 2-0 series lead into Nationwide Arena, knowing a victory in Game 3 on Sunday could crush Columbus' chances — and its spirit.

"Momentum and momentum swings are big, especially in playoff hockey," Penguins defenseman Ian Cole said. "You want to do everything you can to make sure your team has momentum, and you want to keep that momentum and continue that momentum. A great way to do that in this upcoming game would be to have a great start and put pressure on them early.'

If every series is its own story, as Penguins coach Mike Sullivan is fond of saying, so is every playoff game. Momentum is hard to carry over from one game to next, especially in the Stanley Cup playoffs.

'It's an important game," Penguins center Matt Cullen said. "When you go into an opposing team's building, you have that added crowd energy. We're anticipating an intense, uptempo game.'

Although the Penguins won two of three games at Columbus in their 2014 first-round series, they lost both at Nationwide Arena this season.

"They play great at their building. They always do," Cole said. "Every game that I've played against them at Nationwide Arena in Columbus has been an absolute battle. They're a great team at home. They're a great team wherever they play but especially at home. They seem to have a lot of energy. That canon seems to get them going. It's going to be a challenge, but I think we're up to the challenge.

The Penguins realize they are only halfway to the four games needed to win the series, but the reigning Stanley Cup champions have a far greater understanding of what it takes to win four than their opponents.

"We know how to play on the road, so we have to take care of our own business," Cullen said. "I think in the playoffs it can be easy to get caught up in the emotion and excitement and noise in the rink but with the group that we have — we've been through it before — I think we have the capability to handle that."

Can Columbus can handle it? It might depend on whether Tortorella is willing to adjust his strategy.

"We know it's going to be a battle," Sullivan said. "As series progress, the games get harder to win and it's more difficult to win. That's everything we expect.

"We're going to go to Columbus and we're going to do everything within our power to bring our best game. We're not going to get ahead of ourselves. We're going to focus on the one game in front of us. That's the approach we've taken with this team all year long and that will continue to be the approach that we'll take through the course of the playoffs."

Columbus is playing to hit. The Penguins are playing to win. For both, it's a big part of who they are.

Series is contrast in forechecking

Penguins rely on speed to create loose pucks, but Jackets prefer to be physical

BY JONATHAN BOMBULIE

When Penguins winger Conor Sheary enters the offensive zone on the forecheck, he darts and dives like a hungry hummingbird, stretching out his stick to get as much length as he can from his 5-foot-8 frame, looking to convert a tipped puck into a turnover.

When Columbus winger Boone Jenner is in the same position, he moves in straight, powerful bursts like a predatory panther, hoping to catch an unsuspecting opponent with a crunching hit, using his 216-pound mass to create a bruise or a loose puck.

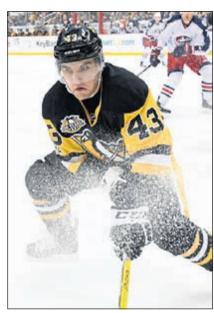

In the ongoing playoff series between them, the Penguins and Blue Jackets aren't just battling for a berth in the Eastern Conference semifinals. They might be waging a referendum on the future of forechecking in the NHL.

Columbus coach John Tortorella makes no bones about which side he's on. He casts his vote for relentless physicality.

"I think we've lost ourselves a little bit in how you're supposed to play the game," Tortorella said. "Hard hitting is a big part of hockey, or it used to be. I think it's an interesting situation right now, how the game is being played.

Columbus captain Nick Foligno knows it's not necessarily an easy or politically correct style of play in the modern NHL, but he and his teammates are sticking to it.

"I think power plays are so important now," Foligno said. "I think concussions have come into it, too. You don't want to be on that edge where you're getting your team caught up in that. The league is looking at it more to protect players, so the physical teams have kind of gone a little bit by the

"For us, though, I think that's just the way we need to play. I don't think we're going out there to just run guys through the boards, but it makes us engaged in games and it gives us room.' It's important to note the Blue Jackets aren't a raving bunch of maniacs looking for hits and ignoring the game being played around them. "I don't know if they don't notice the puck on the ice," Penguins defenseman Ian Cole said. "They're a very well-coached, well-structured team. They do like to come hard. They do like to try to create separation on the forecheck, get the puck in the offensive zone and keep it that way. They are very good at it.'

At the same time, their aim is clear. "Every time they go back for a puck." winger Scott Hartnell said, "they're going to get a lick on them.

The Penguins' approach, meanwhile, is different.

They're going to use their speed to their advantage," Columbus defenseman Seth Jones said. "They get to pucks quick. Their linemates work really well together, staying close together in the offensive zone, which helps them. They definitely use their speed more.

It's a strategy that made the Penguins aggravating to play against en route to a Stanley Cup championship last season. As a result, it's a tactic that's gaining popularity in the NHL, although the debate is far from settled.

How violent should the game be moving forward, especially when it comes to how teams approach the forecheck?

Results of series like the one between the Penguins and Blue Jackets will go a long way toward telling that tale. Both are difficult on any given night," Jones said. "When you play big, physical team like Winnipeg, they're going to pound you and make you pay. When you play a team like Chicago or Pittsburgh, they're going for more stick checks. They're a great stick-checking team. People don't see that a lot, stick-checks off your stick. They pick off a lot of passes. Both definitely have their difficulties.'

Matt Calvert gets in the face of the Bryan in the second period

Columbus'

'Message-sending' costs Calvert game

BY JONATHAN BOMBULIE

Matt Calvert was trying to send a message when he violently cross-checked Penguins winger Tom Kuhnhackl at the end of a playoff game Friday night, the NHL department of player safety ruled Saturday.

The league sent a message back, suspending the Columbus forward for a game. Calvert will sit out Game 3 of the first-round series Sunday in Columbus.

Calvert broke his stick over Kuhnhackl's shoulder with a cross-check late in Game 2, then knocked the Penguins winger down with a check to the head.

This play falls into the category of message-sending," the department of player safety video that announced the suspension said. "While we understand that frustration often occurs at the end of a game, dangerous or retaliatory plays delivered in the closing minutes of a playoff game will be viewed in context and punished accordingly."

Kuhnhackl said he was a little sore after Saturday's practice, but otherwise steadfastly expressed his desire to move past the incident. He said he was surprised by the cross-check and knew of nothing in particular that led up to it.

'Whatever happened happened. It was in Game 2. It's another day, and we're going to get focused for Game 3."

"Obviously, a lot of emotions out there," Kuhnhackl said.

Calvert did not speak with reporters after the Blue Jackets practiced Saturday. Coach John

Tortorella did, and he didn't defend Calvert's actions very strenuously.

These guys are competitive guys, and it's a very emotional game. Sometimes you just kind of lose yourself a little bit," Tortorella said. "Do I want that to happen? No. I don't want to see that.

Penguins coach Mike Sullivan, as is his habit, did not lobby for a suspension for Calvert.

"I think what we focus on is what we can control," Sullivan said. "We're doing to our job. I'm going to do my job and coach the players that I have. The league will do their job. The refs will do their job. We're not going to worry about that."

The Blue Jackets called up winger Sonny Milano from their AHL affiliate in Cleveland on Saturday as the likely replacement for Calvert in the lineup. Milano led the club with 47 points in 63 games this season.

Injury report

Goalie Marc-Andre Fleury, defenseman Trevor Daley and winger Conor Sheary did not practice Saturday. Sullivan said they had the day off for maintenance.

Time set

The NHL set faceoff for Game 5 of the Penguins series, if necessary, for 7 p.m. Thursday at PPG Paints Arena.

Columbus paper scraps Crosby masks

A Columbus newspaper flip-flopped on plans for a promotion that would have poked fun at Penguins captain Sidney Crosby.

On Friday afternoon, the Columbus Dispatch announced it would include "Crying Sid the Kid" masks in its Sunday editions. The masks featured a caricature of Crosby with tears rolling down his cheeks. Opponents, including Columbus Blue Jackets coach John Tortorella, have criticized Crosby as a complainer throughout his career.

By Saturday morning, the newspaper scrapped those

"We heard the response, and we are not going to print it. We appreciate the input from hockey fans," editor Alan Miller said in a tweet distributed by the newspaper's Blue Jackets beat writer, Aaron Portzline. After the Penguins practiced Saturday afternoon in Cranberry, Crosby said he has grown accustomed to jeering, in all its forms, from opposing fans.

"I'm going there to play hockey," Crosby said. "That stuff's been around for a really long time. I've dealt with that for more than just this year. I'm excited to be in the playoffs and everything that comes with it, but it hasn't changed my approach going in there.

Game 3 of the series, which the Penguins lead 2-0, is Sunday in Columbus. Crosby had a goal and two assists in a 4-1 Penguins win in Game 2 Friday night.

THREEPERIODS

FIRST SLOW STARTS

Among the many potentially bothersome elements for Columbus to consider from its first two games against the Penguins is its absence of first-period goals despite 28 shots combined before the first intermissions.

The Blue Jackets made a habit of jumping ahead of their opponents during the regular season as they held a 78-49 edge in first-period scoring. That contributed to why they finished the regular season with the third-highest total of time leading, trailing Washington and Toronto.

The Penguins, meanwhile, barely outscored the opposition in first periods during the regular season as they held a 67-66 edge in goals. Their dominance became more apparent over the latter two periods.

SECOND HIT PARADE

Even with just two goals scored and seven goals allowed, the Blue Jackets, who talllied 100 hits through two games, remain steadfast about the importance of hitting and physicality in their game.

"I think in a seven-game series, it goes a long way," said Boone Jenner, who has 15 hits in the series.

Jenner's philosophy might hold true if the series lasts seven games, but the Penguins are halfway to ending this series well ahead of Columbus' preferred schedule.

THIRD

PADDLE PROBLEMS

Marc-Andre Fleury made one of his best moves with the puck in his long career Friday when he helped the Penguins sustain offensive pressure by leaving his crease and sending a pass back up the ice to his teammates.

Columbus goalie Sergei Bobrovsky made one of his career's worst flubs when he mishandled a puck behind his own net, which allowed Conor Sheary to steal possession away and set up the Penguins' first goal.

These might ultimately represent little more than minor moments in the series, but they capture the fortunes of the goalies after two games. "I don't like to talk about (that) goal," Bobrovsky said. "It is what it is. There was my mistake, and that's it.

Fleury, meanwhile, finds his morale soaring. Puck handling is arguably his greatest weakness, but even that has yet to become a pitfall.

really, really good shot blockers.

"I think it's one of those things that can really get your bench going during the game. Even if you're hemmed in your own end, you see guys blocking shots and diving, making plays to block shots. It means a lot as a team, and you don't want to let your guy down when they make a play like that.'

For much of the Penguins' midseason surge and Stanley Cup run last season, shot-blocking served more as a last resort than a defensive priority. Puck possession and forechecking pressure better suited the Penguins' speedy and skilled

Not until the 2016 second-round series with Washington and the Stanley Cup Final against San Jose did the Penguins' enthusiasm for self-sacrifice become readily apparent. Preventing shots on goal went to the extreme against the Sharks, who watched 38 and 33 of their attempts crash into Penguins skaters in Game 3 and Game 6, respectively.

With 23 blocks on the Blue Jackets in Friday's win and 22 in Wednesday's 3-1 win, the Penguins are reaching totals they hit only a handful of times in the 2016 playoffs and rarely reached during the 2015-16 regular season, when they accumulated at least 22 blocks just once — March 27, 2016 against the New York Rangers.

But their success in the 2016-17 regular season with an increased reliance on blocked shots — they reached or exceeded 22 blocks nine times — led them to trust in a tactic that often works counter to possession efforts.

The key, Penguins shot-blocking extraordinaire Ian Cole explained, is to get in front of pucks without losing mobility and with a keen awareness of the goalie's view of

"I personally prefer to go down on one knee," Cole said, "because you can still pop up really quick, can still conceal (your body) and stay tight and get your stick out there, so if they try to pump and walk around you, you can still kind of maneuver a little bit rather than laying down completely.

There are some certain angles that we talk to our goalies about that we want to take away. So if you're going to err on a side, you want to err on the side of doing what is predictable to one another. The diving in front of (a shot) haphazardly sometimes leads to screens. ... If you're going to screen your goalie, you better block that shot. That's kind of what my mentality is."

continuity a team will need during the season. The best players are split between teams that had only one day (Thursday) to prepare with their new mates.

"When you split the teams up, it's never as crisp as you would like it to be," Narduzzi said.

The game is billed as a real game, but the quarterbacks atop the depth chart—Browne and Ben DiNucci — wore red jerseys to keep the defense off them. Also, there was no rush against punters and field-goal kickers and no returns on punts and kickoffs.

That robbed the announced crowd of 7,076 of seeing more of Quadree Henderson. If there was a star on offense, it was Henderson, who carried twice for 84 yards, including a 30-yard touchdown and a 54-yard run that almost defied description.

"That second run, wow," Narduzzi said. "I didn't know if it would end. I thought he was going to run right through the tunnel into the locker room.'

It was a reverse that the defense seemed to sniff out. Yet, that didn't matter.

Safety Dennis Briggs pushed a blocker inside, forcing Henderson to the outside.

"They all had my helmet, but none of them had my legs," he said. "I snapped my neck away and saw a bunch of daylight.'

Still, cornerback Dane Jackson and linebacker Anthony McKee looked like they had an angle to make the tackle. But Henderson used the speed and elusiveness that made him an All-American returner last year to cut back and find more daylight.

"At that point, I was tired," he said.

Pitt's Avonte Maddox breaks up a pass intended for Maurice Ffrench during Saturday's spring game.

He found enough in reserve to avoid defensive end James Folston, but Jackson eventually recovered to make the tackle at the 7.

"I'm ready to get in the film room and see what all the hype is about," Henderson said.

Said running back Chawntez Moss, who watched from the Blue sideline: "That reverse is nasty. He's like a squirrel. It's hard to touch him.'

The run set up a 5-yard touchdown by tailback Shawn Wood to give the Gold a 17-0 lead early in the third quarter.

Henderson might have felt a little ashamed making his teammates on defense look bad, but maybe not. Browne, who was the Blue's quarterback, said Henderson apologized, "probably jokingly."

Henderson said one of his goals is to repeat as an All-American, but he's also thinking big — really big. Asked if he's thinking Heisman Trophy, he didn't hesitate with his answer: "Yes.

sir. Yes, sir."

That's a story for another day. Of more immediate concern is Henderson and the other pass catchers working on perfecting their on-field relationship with Browne and DiNucci. Henderson had a good day catching the ball, too, with five receptions for "Some missed opportunities on my end as far as those deep balls," said Browne, whose 13 completions totaled 144 yards and a 27-yard touchdown to Tre Tipton. "Some mistakes as a unit you would love to have back.

Browne salvaged the day, however, with the fourth-quarter pass to Tipton, who showed off his athleticism by contorting his body to make the catch.

"That's the explosion you like to see," Browne said.

Senators rally past Bruins in OT

OTTAWA, Ontario -Dion Phaneuf scored at 1 minute, 59 seconds of overtime, and the Senators rallied for a 4-3 victory over the Bruins on Saturday

The Senators rallied from a 3-1 deficit with a two-goal third period to force overtime. The Eastern Conference series is tied 1-1, and Game 3 is Monday night in Boston.

Clarke MacArthur, Chris Wideman and Derick Brassard also scored for the Senators, and Craig Anderson made 26 saves.

Drew Stafford, Tim Schaller and Patrice Bergeron scored for the right to Stafford, who ham-stopped 25 shots.

The Senators started the overtime with the man advantage as the Bruins took a delay of game penalty with 12.5 seconds remaining in regulation.

Trailing 3-1 to start the third, the Senators scored twice in a span of 2:20.

Wideman, with his first playoff goal, made it 3-2 with a goal from the point, and Brassard, off a great pass from Erik Karlsson, tied the score at 7:48 off a one-timer.

With the Bruins pushing, Viktor Stalberg blocked a shot, but the rebound went Bruins. Tuukka Rask mered it past Anderson to open the scoring at 9:47 of the second period.

The Senators challenged the goal believing the play was offside, but a lengthy review upheld the goal.

MacArthur tied it on the power play with his first goal since April 19, 2015.

Boston retook the lead when Anderson misplayed the puck with Dominic Moore bearing down, allowing Schaller to score shorthanded over a sprawled Anderson at 12:39.

The Bruins took a 3-1 lead late in the period with a power-play goal as Bergeron tipped David Pastrnak shot's at 16:01.

Grier delivers in spring game

Ex-WVU star QB Smith throws long TD in cameo appearance

BY DAVID STATMAN

MORGANTOWN, W.Va-For a moment, Mountaineers past met Mountaineers future on passing leader had two former WVU star receivers, Shelton Gibson and Kevin White, on either side. Wearing sweats and tennis shoes, Smith tossed an 85-yard touchdown to Gibson that lit up the crowd at Milan Puskar Stadium.

But while Smith's cameo stole the show, it was the man hailed as Holgorsen's next great quarterback, Will Grier, who delivered. Although the defense largely controlled the action in a 44-21 victory for the Blue, Grier showed some flashes reminiscent of Smith in his first appearance on Mountaineer Field.

"He looked pretty good to me," Holgorsen said of Grier. "He's as good as advertised. I like the kid's demeanor. He's got complete control of the huddle."

Grier completed 12 of 18 pass attempts for 202 yards Saturday, despite the fact two slated starters — sophomore Marcus Simms and senior Ka'Raun White — sat out with

Along the way, Grier and new offensive coordinator Jake Spavital gave the fans a glimpse of WVU's new-look offense in 2017. West Virginia threw the ball 41 times against 31 rushes, as Grier leaned on his healthy chemistry with junior wide receiver David Sills, who led WVU with six receptions for 96 yards.

After leaving WVU and spending last year at a junior college in an attempt to continue his career at quarterback, Sills' big day came on West Virginia's all-time one of his first tries at outside receiver, showcasing a versatility and a considerable natural talent that could pay huge dividends this season.

"His last four or five practices were pretty impressive,' Spavital said. "That was something I was pleased to see. He's a big target. Being the first time actually putting him out there at the outside receiver position, I think it's pretty safe to say he can get that jump ball pretty good right now."

By and large, however, West Virginia's offense especially its second team, led by sophomore Chris Chugunoy — failed to consistently move the ball as the defense took the day.

Outside of Smith's scoring toss to Gibson, which counted on the scoreboard, WVU landed just two scoring drives, both by the first team. Senior running back Justin Crawford a 51-yard touchdown run on one of the game's first plays, and sophomore Martell Pettaway added a 3-yard score after Grier set him up with a 60-yard completion to junior Ricky Rogers.

The scoring system for WVU's spring game rewarded the defense heavily for stops and negative plays, tipping the scales in their favor.

"We were able to keep them from getting in the end zone," senior linebacker Al-Rasheed Benton said. "I think that was one of the biggest keys. We had to make sure we kept those guys from getting in and limited points. We did a pretty good job of that.'

Think long-term with food plots here always have been farmers interested in hunting. Now, increasingly, there are hunters interested in farming.

It's the food plot phenomenon.

Find someone who has picked up a patch of huntable ground anymore, and it's almost a given he or she is trying to figure out what to grow to attract whitetails, turkeys, bears and the like.

Now's the time of year for making those decisions.

There are a couple of things to consider to make food plots better, or at least more advantageous.

For starters, consider what to plant.

Mike Stroff is host of Savage Outdoors TV and operator of Southern Outdoor Experience Hunts, a Texasbased guiding service. He also manages properties for deer in several other states.

He said white-tailed deer have home ranges that take in at least a square mile. So unless you own or control thousands of acres, deer aren't going to spend their entire lives on your land.

The goal should be to make them want to be there as often as possible.

"I would think in a year-round mindset and think what can I plant that will last," Stroff said.

He might plant beans to draw in deer over summer, for example, but be sure to have corn and apples for later in fall, then sugar beets and turnips for late season and winter.

Those latter foods can draw whitetails in as other food sources disappear.

"Green is gold in the winter," Stroff said. Another thing to consider is when to plant. Deer will eat corn in every stage of its existence, for example, said C.J. Winand, a Maryland-based wildlife biologist and author. That includes the early stages when it first is popping out of the ground, the middle stage when it's pollinating or "silking" and the end stage when it has produced ears. But some research in Nebraska shows they prefer that middle stage best, he said.

"In other words, it's sweeter. It tastes better," he said.

So if you're planting corn for deer, it makes sense to do it in two parts, Winand said. Plant most of the corn in early spring, as usual.

But plant the outer edge of the field — closest to the tree line and your tree stand — a month or two later, so it's hitting the silking stage about the time archery season opens, Winand said.

Lastly, be aware of how much food a plot potentially can produce and be there to take advantage of it, Stroff said. He has what he calls "kill plots." They're small, one half- to one-and-a half-acre fields of clover, beets and radishes. All are left standing when everything else is harvested.

Their size means they have limitations.

"If you get a bunch of deer, they don't last very long," he said.

But they can be productive, provided you can get in and out without spooking deer.

"If you're seeing deer, or seeing deer while you wait on one particular one, keep at it. They're great,"

LURE OF THE WEEK

Swedish Pimple

Sugg. retail price: $2.79 and up, depending on size. Company: Bay de Noc Lure Co. (baydenoclure.com)

Lure type: Jigging spoon Sizes and colors: Available in 10 sizes, from 1/10- to 4 ounces, and 44 colors, including four new 'crushed lce" colors, including red, green, purple and Target species: Trout, crappies, yellow perch, bass.

Technique: Long a staple of ice fishing, the Swedish Pimple takes trout and other fish in spring and summer, too. They can be used alone or tipped with live bait for vertical jigging. They also work when cast and retrieved. If using that method, though, remove the red flipper and re-install it on the flat side of the lure. That will lead to more flash when retrieved horizontally.

Notable: If using these for trout, the company recommends going with the four smallest sizes available, starting with the 1/10-ounce, 1-inch #2 on up to the 1/3-ounce, 17/8-inch #5.

Hikers, runners, hunters, anglers and others who spend time outdoors need to protect themselves against ticks and Lyme disease.

THE NEW REALITY

Increasing presence of ticks requires change in behavior for outdoorsmen

BY BOB FRYE

It is, unfortunately, the new re-

Once upon a time, going into the to hunt, fish a stream, hike a trail, camp — and coming out again was something that could be accomplished without worry. No more.

Now, each outing should start with precautions and end with a full-body check.

Black-legged ticks, the pests that carry Lyme disease, have spread throughout the Northeast and upper Midwest and slowly but surely are filling in the gaps between.

No one knows what's behind their appearance. "We don't have a good answer to that question. And it's a great question," said Rick Ostfeld, senior scientist at the Cary Institute of Ecosystem Studies in Millbrook, N.Y., who has been studying ticks for 25 years

One theory holds that ticks were common across the Northeast until European settlers cleared standing forests, Ostfeld said. The thinking, he added, is they now simply are reclaiming old habitats.

What seems certain is ticks aren't going away.

"They're here. That's just the way it is now and probably forever," said Tom Simmons, a professor of environmental health at IUP. "So at the end of the day, it really comes down to taking preventative measures. It's a behavioral thing." People have been slow to adapt. According to the U.S. Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, there were 38,069 diagnosed cases of Lyme disease in America in 2015, the latest year for which numbers are available. That ranked it the fifth-most-common "notifiable disease" nationally.

That doesn't tell the story, though. "Keep in mind that the number lots of acorns in 2015. They'll see

Tick prevention and care

How to avoid ticks and what to do if you're bitten: Advice from the

- U.S. Center for Disease Control. Avoid wooded and brushy areas with high grass and leaf litter.
- Walk in the center of trails.
- Use repellents that contain 20 to 30 percent DEET on exposed
- Use products that contain permethrin on clothing.
- Shower within two hours of coming indoors to more easily find and wash off ticks
- Conduct a full-body tick check using a hand-held or full-length mirror to view all parts of your body. Pay special attention to armpits, ears, the belly button, behind the knees, between the legs, around the waist and especially in hair.
- Examine gear and pets for ticks that might attach to you later. Tumble dry clothes in a dryer on high heat for 10 minutes to kill
- If you find a tick, remove it using fine-tipped tweezers. Grasp it as close to the skin as possible and pull upward with steady, even pressure. Thoroughly clean the bite area and your hands.

of reported cases does not reflect every case of Lyme disease that is diagnosed in the United States every year," said Kate Fowlie, spokeswoman with the CDC.

"Studies suggest that roughly 300,000 people are diagnosed with Lyme disease each year in the United States.

This might be an especially bad season for new cases. Ostfeld said his research shows the abundance of ticks is predicated not on white-tailed deer populations, as many believe, but on acorns and white-footed mice. When oak forests produce a banner crop of acorns, wildlife simply can't consume them all, Ostfeld said. Mice store the surplus and get a jump start on reproduction.' Their population booms the following summer, he said.

The mice are in turn the perfect host, he added. Unlike raccoons, opossums, squirrels and other mammals, they're not very good at grooming away larval ticks.

So the year after a mouse boom, tick numbers explode, Ostfeld said. That's a concern now.

Large areas of the Northeast had lots of ticks this year, Ostfeld said. Outdoorsmen and women are on their own for dealing with that.

While the Food and Drug Administration recently approved clinical trials for a human Lyme disease vaccine, there isn't one yet available, Fowlie said. A vaccine for mice might be

A Nashville company called US Biologic is seeking federal approval for an oral one. Much like the U.S. Department of Agriculture drops fish cakes containing rabies vaccine from airplanes to inoculate raccoons, US Biologic would like to distribute Lyme vaccine by hand or using a timed-release system, said chief executive officer Mason Kauffman.

Field trials in New York showed a "significant drop" in infected ticks, he said. Results of a more recent three-year study in Connecticut are pending.

Similarly, researchers with the Tick-borne Diseases Program in New Jersey learned bait boxes that treat visiting hungry mice with insecticides led to 97 percent fewer ticks in study areas. But it takes two years to see that change, they wrote.

In the meantime, people shouldn't be afraid to go outside, said Jeff Covelli of New Castle. who is affiliated with the PA Lyme Resource Network.

They do need to use caution. though, he said. He knows. His wife and son contracted Lyme disease.

With his son especially, there have been serious health implications, he said. 'Once you get it, it's an absolute mess," Covelli said. "It's like trying to put together a 1,000-piece jigsaw puzzle one piece at a time." Covelli is adamant that outdoors-oriented people need to be proactive in avoiding similar troubles. That includes doing regular tick checks after each outing.

"The key, the absolute key going forward, is prevention," he said. "It's something people have to be mindful of."

Look closely when doing checks, Simmons said.

Adult ticks — about the size of a sesame seed — are relatively easy to spot, he said. Nymph-stage ticks - about the size of a poppy seed are not. They're also more worrisome, he said, as they account for most cases of Lyme.

They'll become more common going forward, he added, with their numbers peaking in mid-

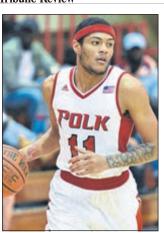

Not all ticks carry Lyme disease, but anyone finding one should see a doctor immediately, said Nicole Chinnici, a forensic scientist at the Northeast Wildlife DNA Laboratory at East Stroudsburg. Save the tick, too, she suggested, so doctors know what they're dealing with.

"Right now, the very best way to know if you've been infected is to get your tick tested," Chinnici said.

If that's inconvenient, it's just the way things are, Simmons said. "If you go outside, you're at risk.

People have to understand that and take precautions," he said. Bob Frye is the Tribune-Review outdoors

POLK STATE ATHLETICS

Pittsburgh native Troy Simons, who averaged 26.3 points per game at Polk State last season, is no longer part of Pitt's incoming recruiting class.

Pitt not it for Simons

JC standout considers other options after Panthers back out

BY JERRY DIPAOLA

Junior college guard Troy Simons, a University Prep graduate who verbally committed to Pitt in the fall, is visiting New Mexico this weekend after he failed to sign a letter of intent with the Panthers on Wednesday, his former coach Matt Furjanic said.

Furjanic coached Simons at Polk (Fla.) Junior College. He said Simons didn't receive a visit or a letter of intent because he was told by Pitt director of basketball operations Dan Cage that it's not the program's policy to do so with junior college transfers until they graduate.

Furjanic, a Rankin native who formerly coached at Robert Morris and Pitt-Greensburg, said Simons is on track to graduate by June 20.

"Because Pitt didn't offer him a visit or a letter of intent, I felt it was in his best interests to look at other options because Pitt is making no attempt to sign him," Furjanic said.

Furjanic said Illinois and South Florida also expressed interest in Simons, who led the NJCAA in scoring last season with an average of 26.3 points per game.

Simons was recruited to Pitt by former assistant coach Jeremy Ballard, who recently left to take a job at VCU.

Heap's child killed in car accident

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Condolences poured in for retired NFL player Todd Heap and his family Saturday, a day after police say the former Pro Bowl tight end accidentally ran over his 3-year-old daughter with a truck, killing her.

Heap was moving the truck at his home in Mesa, a Phoenix suburb, Friday when he struck the girl, police said. She was pronounced dead at a hospital.

The Baltimore Ravens, Heap's longtime former team, called the accident "kneebuckling news and an overwhelming tragedy."

Jay Feely, who played with Heap on the Arizona Cardinals, wrote on Twitter: "My heart is broken for Todd Heap and his family. One of the kindest persons I've ever met and a man who lives for his family." Heap spent 10 seasons with the Ravens, who selected him in the first round out of Arizona State in 2001. He spent two seasons with the Cardinals before retiring with 42 career touchdowns. He made the Pro Bowl after the 2002 and '03 seasons and was a second-team All-Pro in 2003. Heap also is a member of the Raven's Ring of Honor.

"We cannot imagine the heartbreak and sorrow Todd and Ashley's family feels right now," the Ravens said in a statement.

PSU's Godwin coveted at WR

Although the Steelers have Sammie Coates, Eli Rogers, Cobi Hamilton, Demarcus Ayers, Darrius Heyward-Bey, Justin Hunter and possibly Martavis Bryant on the roster, they would like to add a playmaker opposite All-Pro Antonio Brown. Bryant is an uncertainty because of his drug suspension and Coates because of injuries that crippled his production after the fifth week of the season. The other receivers are slot or depth options.

"We're just looking for talented guys who know how to get open, know how to catch the ball, can catch the ball in traffic, and can do something with the ball after they catch it," Steelers general manager Kevin Colbert said.

fit. As a sophomore, he had 69 catches up from a stomach virus. for 1,101 yards and five touchdowns. Last year, when Penn State won the Big Ten championship, Godwin had 59 receptions for 982 yards but scored 11 touchdowns.

Asked at the NFL Combine what he wants to impress upon teams interested in drafting him, Godwin said, "mainly that I'm an all-around receiver," he said. "I'm not afraid to do the dirty work. I'm not afraid to block. I take a lot of pride in blocking, in being at the right place at the right time, making contested catches and things that I've proven that I can do in my college career.'

At Penn State, Godwin also seemed to save his best for big situations. He surpassed 100 yards receiving in all three of his bowl appearances. His performance against USC came after Godwin would seem like an ideal he spent the previous night throwing Godwin said he had already decided to declare for the draft before he torched the Trojans.

"Not one game is going to make or break your decision to when it comes to declaring for the NFL," he said. "It definitely was a good note to go out on."

Before the NFL Combine, Godwin spent a few weeks working out under the tutelage of former Detroit Lions great Calvin Johnson. The work paid dividends. Godwin had some eye-opening performances at the combine, posting the fifth-best 40-yard dash time among receivers at 4.42 seconds. Godwin also tied for second among players at his position with 19 repetitions in the bench press and had the best time (4.0 seconds) in the 20-yard shuttle.

The question is whether Godwin's performance in the "Underwear Olympics" translates onto the field.

NFL Network draft expert Mike Mayock is a believer. Although Washington's John Ross set the combine record with a 4.22 time in the 40, Mayock had this to say: "From a football perspective, (Godwin had) a more impressive 40 time for me."

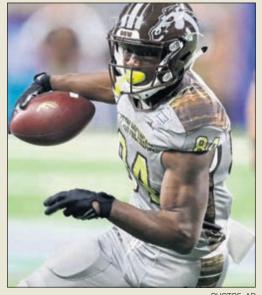

Kiper also seems to be in Godwin's

"No question, he's a competitor," Kiper said. "But does he play quite as fast? You could argue he doesn't. But I saw a couple of games when I went back and looked (at tape) and he did. That USC game, he was phenomenal. He looked like a first-rounder in that game.'

RANKING THE WIDE RECEIVERS

Steelers writer Chris Adamski offers his top 10 wide receivers available in the upcoming NFL Draft, the best fit for the Steelers and a local product to watch.

PHOTOS: AP

1. Corey Davis

WESTERN MICHIGAN, 6-3, 209

Ridiculously productive (the all-time leader in FBS career receiving yards with 5,285), Davis was a star from the start in the MAC and played for a 13-1 Cotton Bowl team as a senior. Offseason ankle surgery isn't a long-term concern, but it did prevent him from working out for teams.

2. Mike Williams

CLEMSON, 6-4, 218

The seemingly annual stud Clemson wideout, Williams has ideal size and — while not a true burner — enough speed to make for a polished package. A neck injury caused him to miss virtually all of the 2015 season, otherwise he would likely

3. John Ross

WASHINGTON, 5-11, 188

Ross had this year's combine's most memorable moment when he ran a 4.22 in the 40. Twentytwo of his career 114 receptions went for touchdowns; two of 14 receptions the past two seasons did. Ross also had a kick-return touchdown in each of the three seasons he played.

4. JuJu Smith-Schuster

USC. 6-1, 215

Strong, powerful receiver who has been on the draft radar since his true freshman season in 2014, Smith-Schuster isn't the fastest receiver in this draft but is an Anquan Boldin-type who is viewed by many as a can't-miss as, at minimum, a starting-caliber NFL receiver.

5. Curtis Samuel

OHIO STATE, 5-11, 196

Polarizing draft figure because he was more of a runner (97 carries, 771 rushing yards last season) than a true receiver. But with 4.31 speed and big-school receiving production (74 catches, 865 yards in 2016), some team will be smitten with Samuel and find a way to

6. Zay Jones

EAST CAROLINA, 6-2, 201

Jones set FBS records for receptions in a season (158 in 2016) and receptions in a career (399). But Jones was not a big-play threat in college (10.7 yards per catch, just 23 touchdowns among all those catches). High-floor, low-ceiling prospect.

7. Cooper Kupp

EASTERN WASHINGTON, 6-2, 204

Yet another record-breaking, extremely productive available receiver, Kupp broke the FCS records for career receptions (428), receiving yards (6,464) and receiving touchdowns (73). A slot receiver in college, questions about the level of his competition were answered by big games against Pac-12 opponents.

8. Chris Godwin

PENN STATE, 6-1, 209

Godwin was the lone bright spot for the poor PSU passing offense of 2015 — and he shined again for a Big Ten champion team last season (11 TDs). With sure hands, surprising speed (4.42) and knack for big games (460 yards in three bowl games), Godwin figures to be a Day 2 pick.

9. ArDarius Stewart

ALABAMA, 5-11, 204

Rarely does an Alabama receiver light up the stat sheet, but Stewart was an All-SEC honoree despite missing three games (two via injury, one via suspension) and having a freshman quarterback. Seen as a physical receiver without top-end speed.

10. Chad Hansen

CALIFORNIA, 6-2, 202

Hansen had 92 catches, 1,249 receiving yards and 11 touchdowns in only 10 games (ankle injury) as a redshirt junior last season. His combine workout figures ranged from average to middling - except in the quickness categories (cone drill, 20-yard shuttle), a good sign for a taller player.

BEST FIT FOR STEELERS

Kenny Golladay

NORTHERN ILLINOIS, 6-4, 218

The Steelers found a possible Hall of Fame receiver in the late rounds from a MAC school. Golladay is a much different style player than Antonio Brown because of his height. But with uncertainty surrounding the likes of Martavis Bryant and Sammie Coates, Golladay is a possible

ONE TO WATCH

Dede Westbrook

OKLAHOMA, 6-0, 178

The highest finisher in 2016 Heisman voting among non-quarterbacks, Westbrook led Power 5 conference players in receiving yards (1,524) and receiving touchdowns (17, tied). No one with as many catches (80) had a better average (19.1), either. A slight frame, though, prevents him from being an early-round pick.

HOMEGROWN

Shelton Gibson

WEST VIRGINIA, 5-11, 191

It's possible Gibson is nabbed earlier than expected because many teams obsess over speed — and Gibson has it. But a disappointing 4.50 in the 40 at the combine took away some of his allure. In games, though, Gibson showed breakaway speed.

Short-term county workers' comp costs to balloon

$1.6M contract does not cover 83 claims expected to require $2M this year

BY RICH CHOLODOFSKY

Workers' compensation benefits paid to injured Westmoreland County government staffers could more than double in 2017 under a contract that took effect this month, a change two commissioners said ultimately will save monev.

Commissioners Gina Cerilli and Charles Anderson in late March approved a one-year, $1.6 million contract with the nonprofit Housing and Redevelopment Insurance Exchange to oversee workers' compensation claims for the county filed after April 1.

The insurance carrier is a consor-agencies in Pennsylvania and is operated by a division of Excalibur Insurance Management Services, a for-profit company based in Scranton with an office in Pittsburgh.

WESTMORELAND

The contract will not cover costs associated with 83 claims already on the books that are expected to cost taxpayers more than $2 million this year in lieu of salary payments to those employees. Those costs will be in addition to the $1.6 million paid to the new carrier.

Whether the county made this change or not, the legacy claims are still the responsibility of the county, as they occurred when the county an email. "Being that Excalibur is going to settle these claims immediately, the cost of each claim will be reduced, as lost wages will seize."

For the past decade, the county handled all workers' compensation claims in-house, meaning it was reof its budget. Under the new conwas self-insured," Cerilli said in tract, the insurance company will be paid an annual fee and pay all future claims over the next year.

Moving forward, Cerilli and Anderson said the arrangement will give the county cost certainty.

'We have all these cases hanging out there, and the way we did it besponsible for paying the claims out fore was not getting the job done," Anderson said. "I want to see the decks cleared. I don't want this to be passed on forever."

But in the short term, the 2017 payout is expected to be substantially more, said Commissioner Ted Kopas, who voted against hiring the insurance company.

"The numbers explain it perfectly, and that's why I opposed it. It's not going to be less. It will be more than we've ever spent before for workers' compensation. It doesn't make sense to me," Kopas said.

Budget director Meghan McCandless said the county spent $1.4 million on workers' compensation claims last year; $1.3 million in 2015; $1.5 million in 2014 and 2013; and $1.3 million in 2012.

Groups of retirees maintain connections forged over decades

BY STEPHEN HUBA

When Constance "Connie" Aretz was facing heart surgery in January, her support group included two women who have been a part of her life since they started working together in 1985.

"They never left my side with my family," Aretz said of her former Sears co-workers Doris Slater and Carol Ann Leasher. "I never thought I'd Those friendships have continued into retirement as the three have gotten involved in the Greensburg Sears Retiree Club. Aretz and Leasher, 66, of Monroeville are past presidents, and Slater, 66, of Hunker is the current president.

"I think the difference that we're going to find going forward is that, back in the day, a person was with a company for a lot of years. And so you built these relationships,' Leasher said. "Now, kids are changing positions and companies all the time ... so you don't have the opportunity to forge those friendships that you had in the past.'

Irwin rejects shared police services plan

Coverage would be hindered by deal with Manor, chief says

BY JOE NAPSHA

Manor and Irwin police departments will continue to operate separately after Irwin officials rejected the possibility of conducting a more thorough analysis into combining the forces into a regional operation.

"I don't know if it is really beneficial to either borough," Irwin Chief Roger Pivirotto said.

A state study found the towns could save $90,000 a year with a regional police force, but that savings would be realized at the expense of reducing police coverage, he said.

While additional officers could be assigned on weekends, reducing costs by cutting the number of officers working in each community to one per shift is not good, Pivirotto said.

'We're not looking to make a cut-rate police store,"

The study conducted through the Governor's Center

"I did not see the little bit of savings worth the commotion you would cause."

for Local Government Services was the first phase of regionalizing the police services. A second phase would have involved forming committees to delve deeper into a regionalization plan.

Establishing a regional force would be "kind of like putting together a police department," Pivirotto said. There would be one police chief and one station, most likely in Manor, Pivirotto said. A decision would have to be made on how to divide the department costs, whether it is done by population or road miles or some other basis, Pivirotto said.

Irwin Council last week unanimously opposed looking further into the issue. "I did not see the little bit of savings worth the commotion you would cause," council President John Cas-Councilman Brian Rasel said he did not see any benefit for public safety, while Councilwoman Deborah Kelly said Irwin would not have its own force if it regionalizes Manor police Chief George Valmassoni said there was uncertainty about a regional force and "people were not excited about it."

Valmassoni presented council with the study in March, but no action was taken on the issue, said Joseph Lapia, Manor Borough manager.

The state has more than 35 regional police departments representing more than 125 municipalities in Pennsylvania. Most regional police departments were created to strengthen existing police services in the areas of administration, supervision, training, investigation, patrol and specialty services, according to the local government services center.

Ligonier Borough and Ligonier Township did move to the second phase of the regional police study process in September 2015, but the departments remain separate.

District expects resignations

Greater Latrobe schools aim to save it looks at staffing needs for 2017-18. $250K via departure of 8 educators

BY JEFF HIMLER

Greater Latrobe School Board is expected Tuesday to accept resignations from eight veteran faculty members that could reduce annual wage expenses by more than $250,000.

Business manager Dan Watson said that amount of savings is expected if the district replaces all eight — music instructors David Cremonese and Debra King, art teacher Janet Baumgardner, physics teacher Kathleen Kniff, elementary teacher Anita Pohland, Sharon Argenta, who teaches health and physical education, and school nurses Shirley Hryckowian and Denise Lordi — with faculty having less seniority.

"We're going to be able to reset our costs for salary and benefits," Watson said. He noted those costs could be reduced further if any of the positions can be eliminated through attrition, a possibility the district is considering as

The board's finance committee learned this month that total general fund expenditures could increase by $926,642, or about 1.7 percent, as part of a tentative 2017-18 budget of roughly $55.7 million. Wages are projected to increase by $392,144, accounting for the eight retirements with no attrition.

Watson said it's too soon to predict if the district property tax rate of 79 mills might change next year, but he noted any increase would not exceed the maximum 2.53 mills set through a state-determined index. The board is expected to vote on a tentative spending plan in May.

Tuesday's agenda includes a revision to the district's early retirement incentive — allowing it to be offered to the eight pending retirees, down from the previous minimum of 10 retirees with at least 17 years of service at the district and 20 years of service in Pennsylvania. The incentive covers medical premiums for up to eight years or until the retiree becomes eligible for Medicare, whichever is earlier.

Sister Mary Hall

Sister Mary (Mary Walter) Hall, CSJ, 80, died Friday, April 14, 2017, in the 61st year of her religious life as a Sister of St. Joseph. A daughter of Walter and Irene Wassell Hall, Sister Mary entered the Congregation from St. Raphael in Pittsburgh and most recently served from 2000 to 2012 as pastoral associate at Our Lady of Guadalupe, St. Mary Parish in Kittanning. In 1963, she was sent to Our Lady of Victory Parish in State College, where she assisted with the opening of a four-classroom grade school, which eventually expanded to include a high school. Sister Mary was a teacher at St. Canice (1965 to 1971, 1977 to 1979), Holy Rosary (1971 to 1975) and St. Joseph High School in Natrona Heights (1986 to 1987); and an educational consultant in the Pittsburgh and Greensburg dioceses (1975 to 1977). Shortly after her arrival as a missionary in Liberia, West Africa, in 1979, a violent civil war erupted, which profoundly affected Sister Mary and the students whom she taught. Living with limited electricity and no running water, sne remained for seven years, relishing the chance to teach in classrooms with as many as 90 students "who hung on every word," she recalled. "It was any teacher's dream come true." When she returned to the United States, Sister Mary drove her Chevette clunker from Baden to Appalachia in Eastern Kentucky. where she served until 1993 as pastoral associate at two mission churches. She also conducted Bible school, preached on the streets and broadcasted four-minute homilies on the local radio station. In her efforts to promote ecumenism, Sister Mary became the only woman member of the ministerial associations in Martin and Lawrence counties. Concerned about the high illiteracy rate in Martin County, she began teaching a few people to read and eventually received a grant to coordinate the county's literacy program. Within two years, the program exceeded its goals and was recognized as the state's outstanding new program in 1990. She later served as program director at Sacred Heart Southern Missions in Tunica, Miss., director of the Sisters of St. Joseph Learning Center in the Northview Heights neighborhood of Pittsburgh and adult education instructor at Jubilee Kitchen Association in Pittsburgh. A self-described "people-person," Sister Mary was known for her compassionate outreach on behalf of the poor and disenfranchised. Whether protesting human rights violations in Central America or writing letters to Congress to reduce hunger and poverty, Sister Mary worked tirelessly for social justice. "Not only has my religious life been rewarding and surprising, but it has been downright exciting because I have been afforded every possible opportunity to grow in my relationship with God," Sister Mary said during her Jubilee celebration. She embraced the "many twists and turns" in her religious life, adding simply, "I loved the people." Sister Mary is survived by a brother, Walter Hall (Ginny) of St. Petersburg, Fla.; niece, nephews, grandnieces and grandnephews; and the associates and the Sisters of St. Joseph. Friends will be received from 11 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Thursday, April 20, 2017, at the Motherhouse of the Sisters of St. Joseph. Prayer vigil will be at 6 p.m. Wednesday, April 19, 2017, at the Motherhouse. Mass of Christian Burial will be offered 4 p.m. Thursday in the Motherhouse. Burial will follow in the Sisters' Cemetery on the Motherhouse grounds. Donations in the name of Sister Mary may be sent to the Sisters of St. Joseph Memorial Fund, Development Office, 1020 State St., Baden, PA 15005.

Reluctant to offer motive

Faced repeatedly with questions about why he did it, Frein demurred. "I don't know," he said at one point. At another, Frein seemed to suggest he was dissatisfied with his life as a 31-year-old man who lived with his parents and had few job prospects.

With total 2017-18 revenues projected to fall short of spending by more than $600,000, the district plans to dip into its fund balance to cover about $925,000 in expenses for curriculum, special education, technology, debt service and digital signage items.

School board President Dr. Rhonda Laughlin said the district believes it will receive about $20 million in state revenue to help support the 2017-18 budget. But, she noted, about 45 percent of that must be spent on specific areas—$3.8 million toward Greater Latrobe's $7.6 million obligation to the Public School Employees' Retirement System, about $1 million toward the district's $1.8 million in Social Security taxes and $750,000 in gambling revenue that offsets tax relief provided to district property owners through the Farmstead/Homestead program.

TAX CHANGES

Senior citizens may be in for financial shock

Border tax plan could cause inflation spike, experts say

THE WASHINGTON POST

Republicans have a plan to cut trillions of dollars in taxes while still having enough money to run the government, thanks in large part to what opponents call a new a tax on imports.

But the proposal could have costly unintended consequences - especially for the elderly.

Retirees are financially vulnerable to rising prices, or inflation, which is one possible result of the GOP plan. If the proposal sets off inflation, many households would benefit from increasing wages and salaries. Meanwhile, some retirees would pay more at the cash register without the benefit of a fatter paycheck.

Economists dispute exactly what would happen if Republicans put the plan, called a border adjustment, into effect. Many experts say the proposal would not prove inflationary, and others debate by how much prices are likely to increase. Rep. Paul Ryan, R-Wis., the speaker of the House and architect of this "border adjustment" plan, and his colleagues included the idea in a white paper on tax reform last year.

But according to a new report published this week by the nonpartisan Peterson Institute for International Economics, other countries that have implemented border adjustments have often seen inflation follow. "That could fall heavily on the elderly," said economist Caroline Freund, who wrote the report along with

"It's a good time for people to be evaluating their investments. Inflation has been so low for so long, people may have forgotten that sometimes you need to protect against it."

"It's a really underappreciated point.

Among the elderly, households that rely exclusively for retirement on benefits that are indexed to inflation — such as Social Security — would receive some protection. Wealthy households would be able to insulate their savings by investing in stocks and other equities. Prices on Wall Street likely would climb if inflation picked up.

Those most negatively affected would be households with savings invested in bonds, certificates of deposit and other fixed-income securities. Likewise, those with pensions that are not adjusted for inflation, such as many privatesector defined-benefit pensions, would lose some of the value of their benefits.

"It's a good time for people to be evaluating their investments," Freund said. "Inflation has been so low for so long, people may have forgotten that sometimes you need to protect colleague Joseph Gagnon. against it."

House Speaker Paul Rvan has advocated the "border adjustment" plan to keep revenue while cutting taxes.

WHY MORE MEN WILL SOON FIND THEMSELVES DOING 'WOMEN'S WORK'

THE WASHINGTON POST

Many fields that are traditionally dominated by women are set to expand in coming decades, while many jobs currently dominated by men are not. That's the result of new research published recently by Jed Kolko, an economist at job search site Indeed, which shows that less-educated men may especially face challenges in the job market of the future.

Jobs in the United States are still strongly divided by gender. A little more than one-third of men and a little less than one-third of women work in fields that are at least 80 percent staffed by their gender, according to U.S. Census data analyzed by Kolko.

In recent decades, fields that are dominated by men and by women have not fared equally. Many men have fallen out of work as increasing mechanization has allowed the country to produce more agricultural and manufacturing goods than ever with fewer people than before.

Meanwhile, the economy has shifted more to service-sector jobs that are resilient to automation and tend to be more dominated by women—like health care, one of the sectors that is forecast to grow most in coming decades.

Jobs that are dominated by women are projected to grow nearly twice as fast as jobs that are dominated by men, Kolko says, citing data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

This dynamic is especially hurting lesseducated men. As Kolko points out, the least-educated men in the United States tend to work in the most male-dominated jobs, with about half of all men with a high school degree or less working in fields that are at least 80 percent male.

In contrast, only slightly more than 10 percent of men with a graduate or professional degree work in fields that are 80 percent male.

'Therefore, fast-growing male jobs that require lots of education don't really help men without a college degree who have been in traditionally male jobs,'

Fascinatingly, the trend isn't the same for women. Women in the middle of the education spectrum — those with some college or an associate's degree — are the most likely to work in more female occupations. But women with the least education (those with no more than a high school degree or with no high school degree) and those with the most (those with a bachelor's degree or with a graduate or professional degree) are less likely to work in female-dominated fields.

Of course, the gender identity of a job can change quickly, as history shows. Women once dominated computer programming, for example, a field that is now heavily male.

The jobs that President Trump campaigned on bringing back to the United States — those of coal miners, steelworkers and farmers — are all traditionally male industries that have shrunk in recent decades. The White House has pledged to revive these industries, in part by encouraging manufacturing and penalizing companies that decide to move jobs offshore.

However, many economists say bringing back once-high-paying jobs for less educated men will be difficult, if not impossible.

Kolko points out that automation has also put some traditionally female jobs at risk. Telephone operators, textile workers and travel agents are all femaledominated fields that are set to shrink in coming decades.

Yet we don't often hear the same nostalgia for the disappearance of these jobs the reason is likely economic, but part also seems tied up in ideas about masculinity and gender roles, as manufacturing jobs allowed less educated men to earn enough to serve as breadwinners for an entire family.

As economist David Autor pointed out recently, many less educated men have struggled to find good jobs to replace theirs, while many women have generally moved to expanding and more lucrative fields, he said.

"We know in general as the labor market has become more skill intensive, women have educated themselves and adapted by moving quickly into other jobs," Autor said. "Women have moved on and up."

Slumping PC market shows glimmer of hope

Shipments increase 1% in 1Q, mostly on business sales, IDC report shows

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — The long-suffering personal computer market may be finally recovering from the damage inflicted by the shift to smartphones and tablets, according to a recent report.

PC shipments in the first quarter rose by about 1 percent from last year, based on calculations from the research firm International Data Corp. The modest gain marks the first quarterly increase in five years, a stretch that has seen people increasingly turn to mobile devices for their computing

Another breakdown released by Gartner Inc. painted a gloomier picture. That research firm estimated PC shipments fell by 2 percent in the first quarter.

The rival reports measure the market in different ways, accounting for their contrast-

Despite an uptick in sales in the first quarter of this year, worldwide PC shipments are 30 percent lower than the same period in 2011.

ing conclusions.

Both IDC and Gartner concurred on this point: About the only signs of life are in the corporate market, where PCs remain an essential tool. Businesses have recently been replacing larger numbers of outdated machines.

"Winners in the business segment will ultimately be the survivors in this shrinking market," predicted Gartner analyst Mikako Kitagawa.

As has been the case for the past few years, HP Inc. and China's Lenovo remain the world's two largest PC makers. Each company holds about 20 percent of the market, according to IDC and Gartner. Consumers, though, remain reluctant to spend more money on new desktop or laptop computers when smartphones have become an additional appendage, giving people access to email, maps, search engines and social networks wherever Smartphone proliferation is the main reason PC sales are unlikely to ever return to preslump levels. For instance, IDC's more upbeat analysis of the market pegged worldwide PC shipments at 60 million during the first quarter — about 30 percent below the 85 million shipped in the same period in 2011 before the industry downturn took hold.

Now, even tablets are losing their luster as consumers hold on to those devices for longer as well. Apple's iPad, the market leader, is mired in a threeyear sales slump. Although smartphone demand also is easing, sales of those devices remain on the upswing.

If you see something.

Consider these things before you act if you observe suspiscious activity in the workplace

By Chris Gelbach

CTW FEATURES

There's good news for workers who speak up about illegal activity at work: Legal protections for corporate whistleblowers in the United States are the strongest they've ever been.

"It's a new world both for employees in terms of their rights and for employers in terms of the legal quicksand that they are likely to find themselves in by engaging in traditional bullying tactics," said Tom Devine, legal director for the nonprofit Government Accountability Project (GAP) and co-author of "The Corporate Whistleblowers Survival Guide" (Berrett-Koehler Publishers, 2011).

Devine says that there are now 58 different whistleblower protection laws.

The most common features of these laws emerged from the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989, which protects federal government workers but has served as a blueprint for many other whistleblower laws.

"Under that law, in order to be a whistleblower, you have to disclose information that you reasonably believe is evidence of illegality," Devine said. "That's the common ground that would apply to corporate workers if they have [whistleblower | rights."

More and more corporations are starting to appreciate the value of internal whistleblowing to help reduce economic fraud and legal liability within their organizations. As a result, an increasing number are providing anonymous hotlines to address the issue — and reaping business benefits as a result.

A 2014 global fraud study by the Association of Certified Fraud Examiners found that organizations with hotlines got 51 percent of their fraud cases detected by tips, compared to just 33.3 percent of companies without a hotline.

As the study notes, several of the other detection methods tend to be associated with higher median losses and increased duration of fraud. These less-effective means of detection were more than twice as common in organizations lacking

"I basically view a corporate leader's perspective toward whistleblowers as a test of professional maturity," Devine said. "It may be bad news they don't want to hear, but it's like the bitter pill that keeps you out of the hospital."

When they see evidence of wrongdoing, Devine advises whistleblowers to make an anonymous hotline tip first. This gives the organization an opportunity to act on the evidence without the employee being identified as a potential threat.

"Surveys have consistently shown that almost all of the corporate whistleblowing disclosures occur within the organization," Devine said. "And that's because, as a general rule, they're blowing the whistle in defense of the corporation."

In the absence of a hotline, any attempt to raise the issue internally should be done with caution and extreme discretion.

"Raise it as a concern," Devine said. "Say 'I'm worried. Are we going to be incurring any liability by taking this action?' or 'What are the legal facts of life before we find ourselves inadvertently in trouble with the regulatory agency?'

In situations where the organization is clearly covering up misconduct or is proudly in defiance of regulators, this approach is inadvisable.

"Then the whistleblower knows that they probably need to go public rather than advising the fox about the security breakdown in the henhouse," Devine said.

Before taking any action that could spark retaliation from the employer, workers should gather all the evidence they can regarding the wrongdoing. The worker should also at that time consult a lawyer with expertise in the area.

"The attorney can be the navigator for what options give them the strongest legal rights or put them on the highest legal ground," Devine said. "The lawyer may also know the best politicians to share that information with and the most trustworthy law enforcement officials. The lawyer can additionally help the worker respond effectively to legal threats of prosecution from the organization that intend to intimidate but have no legal basis."

Devine estimates that he has provided legal assistance to over 5,000 whistleblowers over his career. He notes that becoming a whistleblower can be the most fulfilling decision of a person's life because they've been true to themselves and effective in challenging abuse of power. But it can also be an apocalyptic decision that often leads to blacklisting, bankruptcy and a shattered personal life.

"It can go either direction depending upon how strategic they are in acting on their rights," Devine said. "But the one thing that everyone has in common, whether there's a happy or a tragic ending, is that their lives will never be the same. This is a life's crossroads decision from which there's no turning back.

GMC Acadia

STATUS: New for 2017

The previous Acadia that was launched for the 2007 model year has been a big success for GMC, with the emphasis on "big." The second-generation Acadia now hits a sweeter spot with buyers seeking space and comfort in a more manageable size. Although it still comes with three rows of seats, the folding third-row is more kidthan adult-friendly, cargo capacity has shrunk by quite a bit and maximum towing capacity has been reduced to 4,000 pounds from 5,200. With a smaller base powerplant factored in, the new Acadia also weighs a significant 700 pounds less. The Acadia's smaller, lighter platform is derived from the same one used in the 2017 Cadillac XT5 and also will wind up in a reduced version of the similar Chevrolet Traverse. For 2017, a four-cylinder engine becomes the base engine, while an updated V-6 becomes optional. A six-speed automatic transmission is common to both engines. All-wheel-drive is available with either engine. It can be disconnected from the rear axle to save on gas or switched to 4x4, Sport, Off Road or Trailer/Tow modes by adjusting the console-mounted selector knob.

Bishop Edward C. Malesic blesses the altar adorned in flowers at Blessed Sacrament Cathedral in Greensburg on a previous Easter.

Sanctuaries filled with sights, smells of spring for Easter

TRIBUNE-REVIEW

Since Bob and Dorothy Dbec opened Dbec Wholesale Co. in 1976, the business has expanded to include sites in Monessen and Wheeling, W.Va., operated under different names by their adult children.

The husband and wife team employs 42 people at the Hempfield Industrial Park location.

In recent weeks, the business has ramped up into holiday mode, as it prepares for its fourth busiest season.

'Christmas is the biggest holiday, then Mother's Day, Valentine's Day and Easter," Bob Dbec says.

While most home gardeners are watching their daffodils blossoming and peonies starting to bud, Dbec has been moving tens of thousands of flowers throughout the region in preparation for this year's Easter observance.

On April 16, church altars will be lined and foyers and sanctuaries filled with lilies, often given in honor or memoriam of others.

Many guests attending holiday dinners will gift their hostesses with lilies. East to State College, north to Bob Craig (left), owner of Craig's Floral in Acme, checks over his flower order at Dbec Wholesale Co. in Hempfield.

Punxsutawney and Dubois, south to Elkins, W.Va., and west to the Ohio state line, the company's three sites have been hustling plants and arrangements.

"We supply individual florists and grocery chains," Dbec says.

For Easter, he says, the most popular flowers typically are lilies, tulips and hyacinths, in that order.

Dbec anticipates his Hempfield business will sell 30,000 to 40,000 lilies, 20,000 tulips and 15,000 hyacinths for the Global events, such as flooding, can sometimes affect flowers

"Our whole business is affected by Mother Nature," Dbec says. People who have allergies, or who want to avoid an overpowering scent, can still enjoy most common Easter flowers by limiting quantities, he says.

'An individual will buy one or two pots of hyacinths; 20 doesn't cut it," Dbec says.

Storage coolers at his business keep the scent from becoming overwhelming, he says.

Just as people want arrangements featuring poinsettias over the Christmas holiday, spring flowers feature prominently in contemporary Easter arrangements.

Pom poms, carnations and Asiatic lilies are all popular, Dbec says. But interest in the white lily remains consistent for this particular season, he says. They announce the holiday as surely as do colored eggs and chocolate bunnies, and are likely to outlast both.

"Easter is Easter," Dbec says. No matter where it falls on the calendar, the striking plants with their trumpet-shaped flowers and sweet perfume, and their religious connotation, always play a role.

A glimpse into Hill District's early days

Blumenfeld's latest solo exhibition depicts childhood

BY KURT SHAW

Currently on display at the American Jewish Museum at the Jewish Community Center in Squirrel Hill, Rochelle Blumenfeld's latest solo exhibition offers a surprising twist for the petite octogenarian artist known for creating monumental abstract paintings.

The 14 paintings in the exhibit are distinctive for two reasons: one, their scale, being much smaller than the artist's usual work; and two, they are all representational works that tell the story of Blumenfeld's childhood, growing up in the Hill District.

Now 80, Blumenfeld says she was inspired to begin painting this new series about four years ago after telling her grandchildren stories about growing up in a community that was "a true melting pot," she

The first of the series, "No Sale," depicts the old cash register that came from her grandfather's store, Sam Reznik & Sons, a dry goods store once located at 68 Logan St.

Glenn's come a long way for a bed-ridden Pittsburgh boy

BY MICHAEL ELKIN

Pittsburgh native Scott Glenn is a man of mystery

The acclaimed actor's many roles from his breakout in "Urban Cowboy" to the "Bourne" movies - show off that quality in a career spanning some 40 years.

But of the many parts Glenn has played, his latest — Kevin Garvey Sr., a New York town's former police chief who hears voices on HBO's "The Leftovers" — might be the most inscrutable.

He is declared insane and shuttled off to an asylum, where the voices are stilled.

But Garvey has plenty left to say in the outcome of the series about the spiritual and secular dilemmas caused by the Sudden Departure, in which 140 million people — 2 percent of the world's population — suddenly disappear.

The "leftovers" are left wondering why they weren't chosen and what to believe in now that they've been spared.

When I watched today's deal in a penny game at the club, it was a traumatic affair for poor Cy the Cynic. He picked up a nice hand as West, opened the bidding — and heard his opponents roll into game. Against four spades, Cy led the king of diamonds. East encouraged with the nine, so Cy continued with the ace and a third diamond. South ruffed, drew trumps and led the jack

Cy huddled. He knew declarer had started with seven spades and two diamonds, but he didn't know whether the jack was a singleton. Finally, Cy took his ace and led a fourth diamond.

South ruffed and produced a second club. He took dummy's K-Q to discard his jack of hearts and claimed.
"My fault," Cy muttered grimly.

"You're supposed to be an expert," East snapped. "Well, an expert never apologizes and never admits he was wrong."
"Sorry," Cy said meekly. "I really didn't know that." I wasn't sure what Cy was apologizing for. He couldn't beat four spades by ducking the jack of clubs. South would overtake with the queen, ruff dummy's last diamond and lead a second club. When Cy won, he would have to lead another club to dummy or a heart from his

Cy's error came earlier. If he treated East's encouraging nine of diamonds as showing the queen, Cy could lead a low diamond next. East would win and shift to a heart, assuring four tricks for the defense. On the bidding, South was more likely to have 10-5 in diamonds than Q-10-5, so maybe Cy should have gotten it right

Flowers and ferns adorn the altar during the 2016 Easter Vigil at Mount St. Peter Church, New Kensington.

Lilies are wrapped by Bernadette Ackerman as they prepare an order of 90 lilies for a local church client, at Laurel Nursery and Garden Center in Unity.

Why Easter lilies?

The Easter Lily, sometimes called the "whiterobed apostle of hope," is commonly associated with the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Tradition says that the lilies were found growing in the Garden of Gethsemane after Christ prayed on the night before his crucifixion. Lilies were said to have sprung up where drops of his sweat fell to the ground.

Symbolism of new life also is seen in the bulb emerging from the ground, just as Christians believe Christ rose from the dead. Christian churches mark these traditions at Easter time by placing lilies around crosses and altars to commemorate the resurrection and hope of everlasting life. The lily is mentioned numerous times in the Bible, including the wellknown reference in the Sermon on the Mount, when Christ tells his listeners, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet ... Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Lilium longiflorum, the Latin name for the Easter lily, is native to the Ryukyu Islands of southern Japan.

The majority of Easter lily bulbs were exported from Japan prior to World War II, after which commercial bulb production shifted to the U.S. Today, a narrow coastal area on the California-Oregon border is often called the "Easter lily capital of the Cornerstone Ministries

Instead of having a profusion of Easter flowers in the sanctuary, Cornerstone Ministries in Export arranges colorful displays in various locations around the church com-

"We're a more contemporary, nondenominational church with a more casual service," says communications director Jen Lawlor. "We don't decorate our sanctuary with flowers. Our services include a lot of lighting, so we consider that to be more of how we decorate."

For Easter services, flowers are placed in the main lobby, on tables in the café, near the carport entrance and in an upstairs worship area known as The Loft.

"We do create a special display area where people can take their Easter photos in front of the flowers," Lawlor says.

Lawlor works with church member and interior designer Amy Speranza to create the arrangements. The church orders about 90 potted daffodils, hyacinths, tulips and lilies, along with cut flowers.

'We don't have people order flowers as a memorial, like a lot of churches do, but we do let people take them home after the last Easter service," Lawlor says. "A volunteer takes any that are left over and gives them away.

"We want to make sure nothing is wasted."

Mount St. Peter Catholic Church

During the 40 days of Lent leading up to Easter, Mount St. Peter Church in New Kensington, was decorated with curly willow, which as Easter drew closer — little by little — produced buds and then small green

On Good Friday, the Easter flowers were delivered to the church, however, the decorating couldn't begin until after the Good Friday liturgy. This year, Mount St. Peter Church received its order of three dozen tulips, three dozen hyacinth, 30 Easter lilies, 12 hydrangea, calla lilies and a splendid arrangement of cut flowers.

"In addition to the flowers, a yellow-gold bunting is used between the windows, on the choir loft rail and in the sanctuary to embrace the entire church with the festive spirit of Easter," says Monsignor Michael Begolly.

To accent the flowers, an array of greens and ferns adorn the church. The Easter lilies are placed in each of the window wells, while two vases of calla lilies are placed at the tabernacle. The arrangement of cut flowers decorates the 6-foot tall Paschal candle which is lit for the 50 days of Easter. The remainder of the flowers dress the altar, giving the church the fragrant smell of Easter and spring. — Stephanie Traeger

Blessed Sacrament Cathedral

At Blessed Sacrament Cathedral in Greensburg, parishioners receive an envelope in their monthly offerings packet for flower donations, so they can contribute what they like.

They buy the flowers from Cellurale Garden Center in Lemont Furnace.

They also purchase about 85 plants and some palm trees. Arrangements also arrive from Curly Willow in Greensburg.

"It can be kind of challenging to keep them fresh through the holiday season," says Julie Stauffer, receptionist who also takes care of the environment at the cathedral. "But they are an amazing sight to behold and truly help create a picturesque scene as we celebrate the resurrec-

Roberts helps expand Rose Nose Day charity telecast ASSOCIATED PRESS NBC is expanding its Red Nose Day charity programming with help from Julia Roberts and other stars.

The network said Wednesday that its prime-time schedule on May 25 will be devoted to the Comic Relief fundraiser for children in need. "Running Wild with Bear Grylls for Red Nose Day," with Roberts joining the host in Africa, will air at 9 p.m. A celebrity edition of "American Ninja Warrior" with Derek Hough, Natalie Morales and others will precede it at 8

The night will be capped by NBC's third annual "The Red Nose Day Special," hosted from 10 to 11 p.m. by Chris Hardwick.

"Red Nose Day's effort to lift children out of poverty is centered around heart and humanity, and we're excited to create a night of programming that reflects this," said Paul Telegdy, president of NBC Entertainment's alternative and reality show group.

Roberts and Grylls will show how donations are helping people in Nairobi, Julia Roberts, left, interacts with a child while filming a special edition of the survival series "Running Wild with Bear Grylls," in Kenya.

Kenya, with other segments addressing how children in the United States and other countries are being helped.

Entertainment is key as well for Red Nose Day. The roster of stars has yet to be announced, but past specials included Celine Dion, Bono, Will Ferrell and Ludacris.

Red Nose Day was founded in Britain

by filmmaker Richard Curtis and expanded to the U.S. two years ago, where it has raised more than $60 million to date. Donations are made through the sale of red noses at Walgreens and Duane Reade drugstores, neighborhood penny drives and bake sales, and the NBC special.

An added attraction this year: Curtis, writer-director of the 2003 movie "Love Actually," created a short reunion film that will air as part of "The Red Nose Day Special." Cast members revisiting their roles from the romantic comedy include Hugh Grant, Keira Knightley, Andrew Lincoln, Colin Firth, Liam Neeson, Bill Nighy and Rowan Atkin-

Beneficiaries of Red Nose Day grants include charity organizations such as the Boys & Girls Clubs of America, Save the Children and the Children's Health Fund.

Britain's Red Nose Day, which took place last month, brought in more than $90 million, according to Comic Relief Inc. The campaign has raised more than $1 billion worldwide since its origin in 1988.

PAINTINGS • FROM E1

"I always thought it was so beautiful because of the ornamental brass on it," she says of the cash register, which she still keeps in the basement of her Highland Park home.

Blumenfeld says all five of her grandchildren have played with it over the years, filling it with Monopoly money, playing their own version of store.

Blumenfeld's paternal grandparents, Sam Reznik (1880-1965) and Rachel Reznik (1888-1933), immigrated to Pittsburgh from Russia in 1904 along with Mr. Reznick's younger brother Abe and sister Batia "Bessie."

Before opening his store, Sam Reznik peddled combs, needles and thread from door to door in the Hill District. Once opened, the store became a second home for the entire family.

"Everybody in the family worked in the store," Blumenfeld says. "On weekends we knew that that's where we were to be."

Even Rochelle and her younger brother, Alan, would help out when asked.

The painting "Mother's Day," for example, depicts a young Rochelle peddling crepe paper flowers in front of the store.

Blumenfeld says she painted the work after seeing August Wilson's play "Seven Guitars." "In the last scene the women are making crepe paper flowers. I didn't know where they came from. My father would put me out there (on the sidewalk) for Mother's Day, and if somebody wanted to buy one I'd send them into the store."

Inside the family store, visitors were privy to purchase from all that the Reznicks had available, as Blumenfeld so perfectly portrays in "The Clothes Hung From the Ceiling (Logan St.)." "My grandfather thought that if they didn't see what he had they wouldn't ask for it. So, he wanted everything that he had for sale to be seen. So, they had strings that hung from the ceiling with hangers on them showing all that they had."

Blumenfeld's maternal grandparents, Harry Fairman (1876-1954) and Sarah Rubinrot Fairman (1878-1931) also owned a store, Fairman Wallpaper and Paint on Fullerton and Center, as depicted in "Wallpaper Store Interior."

"He was quite an artist in his own right," Blumenfeld says of her grandfather, Harry Fairman. "He would decorate borders around (the rooms of) people's homes. He would take a stepladder into Squirrel Hill and hand-paint borders for people."

Even Blumenfeld's father, Lawrence Reznik (1911-2003), had artistic talent. He briefly attended Columbia University before returning to Pittsburgh to take night classes in advertising and design at the Carnegie Institute of Technology and to work in the family store. From about 1934 to 1942, he was also a sign painter for the candy company Reymer & Brothers. Blumenfeld says she believes it was her father who designed the winking lemon for Lemon Blennd, Reymer's lemon-flavored drink. "He certainly painted it enough," she says.

He also made signs for the Jewish War Veterans Post 49, the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies and Israel Bonds, and of course, for the store. "He would make signs on top of the clothes, but he was very neat," Blumenfeld recalls.

Other works depict places that were once iconic, such as the Irene Kaufmann Settlement House (1835 Centre Ave., now part of the Hill House Association) and the Mayflower Bakery, once located at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Logan Street. "I used the watch the people's feet through the windows as they walked up the hill," Blumenfeld says, which is why in the latter work entitled "Bakery" one can see the legs and feet of people walking up a street through windows high above the bakery counter.

"I just really wanted my grandchildren to have an idea of what it was like when I was growing up," Blumenfeld says as to why she created these paintings. But she hopes others will find meaning and memories in the visual stories they tell as well.

INSIDE WESTMORELAND ARTS

Festival director has come full circle

BY SHIRLEY McMARLIN

As executive director of the Westmoreland Arts & Heritage Festival, Diane Shrader wants people to know that the festival is more than just four days of fun in Twin Lakes Park. The festival partners in events such as Westmoreland Cultural Trust's Rock the Palace battle of the bands and TGTS summer concerts It sponsors the Westmoreland Art Nationals, with separate annual juried exhibits at Westmoreland County Community College and at the festival. It also sponsors short story and poetry contests for youths and adults and a youth art contest. Submissions come from around the country and, for the first time this year, there was an international submission from India.

Shrader started with the festival in the early 1980s as an exhibitor and moved up the ranks from volunteer to employee to boss. Her daughter Erin Shrader is the festival's administrative assistant. Husband and father Jeff Shrader completes the Greensburg family unit.

Question: How does the festival keep people coming back year after year?

Answer: We want some staples who are here every year that people look forward to, and we want some fresh things. Some people like to come for a certain jeweler or a piece of pottery that they keep adding to their pottery collection. We have what we call preferred vendors, and some of them have been here for 30 years. There are about 15 of them and they know they'll have their favorite spot. Everybody else gets juried in - we have a committee that goes over every single application.

Q: What's new and exciting this year?

A: We have Franz Spohn coming. Franz was at the festival eons ago. He's from Edinboro, and he has work in museums all over the world; he's very popular. He does portraits made out of gumballs. It sounds a little hokey, but it's not.

SHIRLEY MCMARLIN | TRIBUNE-REVIEW

Diane Shrader is the executive director of the Westmoreland Arts & Heritage Festival.

We're going to honor Arnold Palmer, so we'll be making his portrait. Franz will have everything ready — he designs the art and knows what gumballs will be used, and then our visitors will actually finish the mural. I'm really excited about that, because it's an opportunity for our visitors to work with an international artist. Then we'll be looking for a home for the mural after the festival.

Q: What surprised you the most when you took over as executive director?

A: That it does actually take the whole year to plan the festival.

Q: What's the biggest challenge?

A: This might sound ridiculous – parking everyone. I've said it since I started. There's no public parking here, so park lots are all for vendors. Of course, we have more vendors than we have spaces. When a performer comes in and they're on at 11, I'm counting on them leaving right after so we can park somebody else in their space.

Q: What's the best part of the job?

A: Working with people.
I love going to every single artist market booth down there to ask them how they're doing, are sales good, are they happy, is there something we can do to improve things? That's their livelihood, so I want it to be profitable and enjoyable for them. Then there are the visitors. I want them to come back multiple days, because something different is going on all the time. And I want them to be happy and walk away with a great experience.

Q: Separate yourself from the job and tell what you like best as a festival-you like best as a festivalgoer. A: I like to go for the bands and look at the crowds. Are and look at the crowds. Are there a lot of people listening? Is the band interacting with the crowd? So my favorite bands are the ones the people want to see.

O: That's still work.

What about you personally?

A: When I was coming to the festival for my own enjoyment, I liked the Celtic bands, reggae, the cultural bands. Music that's not mainstream around here. You can go see a rock band or a country band pretty easily, but you don't see a Celtic band so often. I like that.

For the crafters, of course women like jewelry, and because I like to sew, I like to see what other people are sewing.

Q: When you were an exhibitor, what did you sell?
A: I did stenciling. At that time, country crafts were very popular, so there were a lot of geese that said 'welcome' on them, little wooden boxes with stencils, things like that, some with stencils I designed and hand-cut.

Pittsburgh roots have served Glenn well

GLENN • FROM E1

"The Leftovers," with stars Justin Theroux, Amy Brenneman and Liv Tyler, starts its third and final season on April 16.

"In a lot of ways, it is the most mysterious character I've played," says the craggily handsome 76-year-old actor. "The voices that have been talking to me throughout the series have never told me a lie. And, suddenly, they've stopped talking, and I feel lost. Because they've been an addiction, given me a purpose in

Western Pa. roots

"I have that Western Pennsylvania mentality," says Glenn, who has lived in Ketchum, Idaho, for the past 40 years. "You don't have to read between the lines about what people mean. I feel right at home when I get back there."

A number of Pittsburgh neighborhoods lay claim to his heartfelt love of the city. "I grew up all around Pittsburgh; my dad (Theodore, which is the actor's given first name as well) was a traveling salesman and as he did better, we moved to better neighborhoods,'

He says his late father "is my inspiration."

"My father grew up on the Hill; he had no advantages in life at all. He never wimped out in the face of life. I've never lived up to the kind of guy he was," Glenn says.

"I come from a functional family," says an appreciative Glenn of his father, mother Elizabeth and siblings, Terry and Bonnie. "My parents were so much in love with each

But still his childhood had challenges.

"I contracted scarlet fever when I was 9," Glenn says, and at one point, the doctor treating him "told my parents that they better get a burial plot ready for me.

Glenn recovered, but not without some telltale signs.

"I limped for 3½ to 4 years afterward, and people from the neighborhood were mortified. I looked like a refugee from Auschwitz," says the actor. "I got out of bed and knew I had to get physically active.

The Pittsburgh streets provided plenty of opportunities. "If there was a pickup football game, I played it. I began to embrace physical things to get back to survivability."

While he was bedridden for nearly a year, Glenn savs, "I lived within my imagination. I made up tales, told myself stories."

He would later study English at the College of William and Mary in Virginia. And then there was his football field of dreams that inspired him as he lay in bed.

"Franco Harris — he was one of my greatest heroes," he says of the Steelers Hall of Famer who played 12 years for the team. To this day, the actor describes himself as a "huge Steelers fan."

Becoming an actor

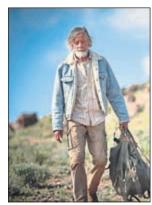

For a career, Glenn was first drawn to the daily deadlines of journalism "I always wanted to be a writer, and loved the poetry of Lord Byron" – but on his way to a newspaper job in the Virgin Islands, he made a life-altering stop in New

"The weakest part of my writing was dialogue." he says of his literary ambitions. "But a friend of mine told me I should take some acting classes, that it would be good for me, since I would be speaking dialogue, and that would help me as a writer."

He landed in classes taught by legendary acting coach and actor William Hickey (who earned an Oscar nomination for his role in "Prizzi's what he was meant to do with his life. "Acting found me."

His folks also provided inspiration and sage advice when he told them he wanted to act. "My mother thought it was great; my father said, 'Don't give yourself any deadlines" to make it in the business.

Glenn worked as a bricklayer and club bouncer, until he found the right acting jobs.

In the 1960s, he got some theater work, including his Broadway debut in "The Impossible Years" in 1965 (opposite Alan King), married his wife Carol Schwartz, a former model and noted ceramicist, and converted to Judaism. In 1970, Glenn and his wife moved to Los Angeles, where he faced some lean

"I lived by my Dad's precepts: Be honest and don't hurt anybody. And if you leave things alone, things will work out for you."

But maybe his father wasn't counting on his son's sudden bout with hubris. "I was a New York stage actor moving to work in Los Angeles, says Glenn, of his stuffy self-image that hurt his chances to get work. "Suddenly I stopped working; I was locked out of the studios. I thought that I would never work again in Hollywood.

"I learned to drop that attitude.

He also changed altitudes in 1978, moving to Idaho, where he originally figured, "I could apprentice myself out to a hunting guide, and then do some Shakespeare in the Park in Boise."

He also worked as a mountain ranger and mixologist, mixed in with some acting gigs in Seattle. But it was a casting call in 1980 from friend James Bridges, director of "Urban Cowboy," that made Ketchum's urbane cowbov the toast of Hollywood. His portrayal of Wes Hightower — the rugged, mechanical-bullriding rogue who tangles with John Travolta's oil refinery worker spurred Hollywood into action. His acting career was set in motion, and Glenn has gleaned accolades for a bio brimming with creative, challenging roles, from "Silverado" (1983) to "The Hunt for Red October" (1990) to "The Bourne Ultimatum" (2007) and "The Bourne Legacy" (2012). He came back to Western Pennsylvania to film a supporting role in "The Silence of the Lambs" (1991) and he received much acclaim for his role as astronaut Alan Shepard in the Oscar-nominated "The Right Stuff" (1983).

Besides "The Leftovers," Glenn has most recently been seen as Stick in Netflix's "Daredevil' and the upcoming "The Defenders" — both part of the Marvel universe.

The ever-evolving artist who once noted that "one reason I became an actor is my basic unwillingness to live one life." had a tough time giving an answer when his two daughters recently asked him, "Dad, what do you want to be when you grow

Why commit to one thing? he mused. "I'm changing every day.'

'Thousand-Miler'

New book follows the Ice Age Trail

Chances are you've heard of the Appalachian Trail, the hiking path that runs 2,179 miles from Georgia to Maine. You may also be familiar with the Pacific Crest Trail. a 2,650-mile route from California to Canada.

But unless you live in Wisconsin, you may not know about the 1,100-mile Ice Age Trail. Melanie Radzicki Mc-Manus hopes to bring more attention to that route with a new book, "Thousand-Miler." McManus, 55, set women's records for fastest-known times on the Ice Age Trail, completing it in 36 days in 2013 and 34 days in 2015.

Her book, just out from the Wisconsin Society Historical Press, documents the challenges that she and others faced hiking the Ice Age Trail — from getting lost to blisters, injuries, ticks, bears as well as the and dogs rewards.

"Whether you're from Wisconsin or somewhere else, when you hike a trail like that, you get such a deep connection with the land and with the outdoors," McManus said in an interview.

One memorable moment was a downhill stretch into a field edged with grasses, creating a "stunning effect, like a carpet being unrolled for royalty," she recalled. "I made my way down this thing like I was a bride going down the aisle." When she encountered a cairn, a mound of stones left by previous visitors about halfway through her trek, "I felt like the trail was saying, 'Way to go, you're halfway there. We salute you.' It was a magical feeling.' The Ice Age Trail follows a landscape of woods, hills and wetlands sculpted by the retreat of glacial ice 12,000 years ago. The trail runs from St. Croix Falls across the northern half of Wisconsin in a squiggly east-west line before dipping into a giant U, with its eastern terminus in Potawatomi State Park in Sturgeon Bay.

McManus chose to run the trail on what's known as a supported hike, meaning that she was picked up and dropped off each day at pre-designated spots by car. That also lightened her load: She didn't have to carry a tent or more than a day's worth of supplies.

But simply finding her way proved to be a big part of the adventure. Only a little more than half of the Ice Age Trail is completed and some sections are in poor condition.

Hikers use roads to connect the trail segments. GPS reception is unreliable, so detailed maps and a compass are essential. McManus writes of being disoriented, backtracking and hunting for trail markers that were sometimes missing or hard

Another challenge was persevering despite a bacterial skin infection called cellulitis that developed in her feet. "One day at a time, one hour at a time, one step at a time" became her mantra. "Every time the pain was superbad, I would just keep walking, just thinking about taking the next step," she said.

Long-distance hiking has boomed in popularity since the 1970s. There were just 10 through-hikers on the Appalachian Trail in 1970, but more than 1,000 completed the trail last year. Some 17.500 hikers in all are believed to have completed the Appalachian Trail.

In contrast, the number of Ice Age Trail through-hikers to date is still under 150 and the trail's first known through-hike wasn't reported until 1979, the year before it was designated a National Scenic Trail.

Of course, through-hikers on any trail represent a tiny fraction of those who use it. A study by the University of Wisconsin concluded that 1.25 million people used the Ice Age Trail in McManus said that while the Appalachian and Pacific Crest trails are the best-known of America's long-distance trails, "don't overlook these smaller ones." She recommends the Point Beach, Chippewa Moraine and Kettle Moraine areas for beginning hikers to exper1ence the Ice Age Trail.

"I would just hope people — whether it's the Ice Age Trail or a trail in their own backyard — just get out and explore," she said. "You don't have to hike 1,100 miles. You can hike a mile or 5 miles."

Twin Roast Chickens with Root Vegetables and Tarragon Vinaigrette

EASY CLEANUP AN ADDED BENEFIT OF ONE-PAN WONDERS

By SALLY QUINN

You can cook a meal on a sheet pan, simmer an entrée in a skillet, or prepare dinner in a roasting pan.

It's a fun, trendy way to prepare delicious meals – without ending up with a sink full of pots and pans.

Cook's Country and America's Test Kitchen puts the theory to the test with modern recipes that never sacrifice flavor. "One-Pan Wonders" ($27.95) entices home cooks with streamlined techniques and innovative methods to create appealing meals your family will love.

Part of the strategy to shorten ingredient lists and keep dishes tasty is choosing ingredients that pack a delicious punch. Heating spices in oil can elevate flavor, too, by releasing their aromatic oils. The aroma alone will draw your family to the kitchen.

Recipes look at cooking in stages. Some ingredients go in sooner, others are removed earlier, so all the components reach the right temperature and cooking time.

Finishing dishes is another area of reaching culinary perfection. Rich sauces, piquant herbs, bubbling cheese and browned potatoes give a recipe that added pizzazz

For techniques beyond sheet pans, skillets and roasting pans, "One-Pan Wonder' includes chapters on dutch ovens, casseroles and slow cookers. The tips and advice we've come to expect from America's Test Kitchen helps get the job done with efficiency.

The Skillet: Sausage Lasagna

This big, bubbly lasagna is made with minimal effort and minimal dishes. The bold sauce created with sautéed onion, garlic and red pepper flakes, then cooking the sausage in the sauce and adding tomatoes, simmering to meld their flavors. With our sauce at the ready, we assembled the lasagna, layering sauce, a rich ricotta-egg mixture, no-boil lasagna noodles (broken and shingled to suit the round pan), and plenty of Parmesan and mozzarella.

Top with extra cheese and slide it into the oven to a beautifully browned, perfectly cooked lasagna.

Do not use non-fat ricotta or fat-free mozzarella here. You will need a 12-inch ovensafe nonstick skillet for this Total Time: 1 hour 30 minutes

3 (14.5-ounce) cans whole peeled tomatoes

2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive 1 onion, chopped fine

Salt and pepper 3 garlic cloves, minced ¼ teaspoon red pepper flakes 1 pound hot or sweet Italian sausage, casings removed 12 ounces (1 ½ cups) whole-milk ricotta cheese

1 large egg yolk I teaspoon minced fresh thyme or ¼ teaspoon dried

8 ounces mozzarella cheese, shredded (2 cups)

¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese 12 no-boil lasagna noodles, broken in half

3 tablespoons chopped fresh

1. Adjust oven rack to middle position and heat oven to 375 degrees. Pulse tomatoes and their juice in food processor until coarsely ground, about 10 pulses.

2. Heat oil in 12-inch ovensafe nonstick skillet over medium heat until shimmering. Add onion and ½ teaspoon salt and cook until onion is softened and lightly browned, 5 to 7 minutes. Stir in garlic and pepper flakes and cook until fragrant, about 30 seconds. Add sausage and cook, breaking up meat with wooden spoon, until no longer pink, about 5 minutes. Stir in processed tomatoes, bring to simmer, and cook until sauce is thickened slightly, about 10 minutes; transfer to bowl.

3. In second bowl, combine ricotta, egg yolk, thyme, ½ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Combine mozzarella and Parmesan in third bowl.

4. Spread ¾ cup sauce over bottom of now-empty skillet. Shingle 7 noodle halves around edge of skillet and place 1 noodle half in center. Dollop one-third of ricotta mixture over noodles, then top with one-quarter mozremaining sauce (in that order). Repeat layering process of noodles, ricotta mixture, mozzarella mixture, and sauce twice more. Top with remaining mozzarella mixture. (Lasagna can be held at room temperature for 2 hours before baking.) 5. Transfer skillet to oven and bake until cheese is golden brown and lasagna is bubbling around edges, 30 to 40 minutes, rotating skillet halfway through baking. Remove skillet from oven. Let cool for 10 minutes, then sprinkle with basil and serve.

Makes 6 servings.

The Sheet Pan: Pork Tenderloin with Green Beans and Potatoes

To create a satisfying onepan meal of roasted pork and plenty of vegetables, seasoned and scattered green beans are placed down the middle of a sheet pan, perching two tenderloins atop the beans to protect the lean meat from drying out while the vegetables roast and become crisp-tender. As a complement, fingerling potatoes are chosen because they cook quickly, simply halved and arranged cut side down on the sheet pan for tasty browning. An easy garlic-chive butter, melted over the resting pork and tossed with the vegetables, makes for a rich, flavorful finish.

Create stunning planted containers

n a few short weeks, it will be time to start planting garden containers with summer annuals and tropical plants. I've written about designing beautiful container plantings before but wanted to offer some extra tips and tricks for creating well-designed plant combinations.

Follow these five design "plans" to create garden containers with good proportion and balance. With them, you'll achieve beautiful results.

1. Thriller, filler and spiller style

This design technique combines three heights of plants together to fill out a container on every available plane while still maintaining balance and proportion. This is a particularly valuable design plan for containers that are meant to be viewed from all sides.

First, a single "thriller" plant is selected for the center of the pot. This is typically a large plant with bold foliage, interesting flowers or some other eyecatching feature. Then, the space around the "thriller" plant is filled with a layer of "filler" plants to accent it. Finally, the "spiller" plants are placed around the outer edge of the container. These plants cascade, or spill, over the edge of the pot, draping it with colorful flowers or interesting foliage

2. Flat-backed style

This design technique is perfect for containers that are tucked against a building and are meant to be viewed only from one side. Rather than thinking about top-to-bottom layers like the previous technique, flat-backed style adds layers from back-tofront. Begin by selecting a tall, upright, narrow plant for the back of the container. Position it a little off center, in the very back of the pot. Once you've planted this backdrop plant, select a slightly shorter plant to create the other half of the back layer. This plant should be more branched and less upright than the first plant.

After the back layer is selected, create a second layer of plants just to the front of it. The plants in this layer are slightly shorter than those comprising the back drop. The third and final layer at the front edge of the container consists of two or three low-growing plants that cascade over the lip of the

3. Featured specimen style

This design technique is the perfect way to feature a single, unique, largestatured plant. I love to use it when creating containers that include a really special plant I want to show off. With this design technique, the large-statured plant I want to highlight gets placed smack in the center of the container. Then, I surround this featured plant with a "skirt" of plants that compliment

The Good Earth g everybodygardens

A banana tree and bronze oxalis plants combined in the featured specimen style design technique.

it but don't distract from its beauty. These plants are low-growing or cascading and are chosen to highlight the central plant.

4. Monoculture style There's not much design involved in this style of container planting, but it makes beautiful containers. It involves using a single plant to fill a container. Whether it's one plant, or three to five plants of the same variety, the container is filled with only one species.

I like to use this style with groups of containers of differing heights. Each container houses a different plant, but together, they make a cohesive collection.

5. Pot-hugging style

The final container garden design style I'd like to share with you is pothugging style. It involves using only extremely low or cascading plants in a container.

Though it isn't for everyone, this design technique makes for some visually stunning displays. Perhaps it's a big bowl of moss or a planter box filled with ground-covering succulents: the idea is for the plants to sit tight against the container. I find that with pot-hugging designs, the entire container becomes a focal point.

As you design and build your garden containers every year, keep these five design tricks in mind. With a little experience, vou can build on these techniques and come up with some gorgeous combinations.

Ultimate in comfort

Make THE perfect grilled cheese

BY MEGHAN RODGERS

everybodycraves

Gooey grilled cheese has become such a unanimously craveable comfort food that somewhere along the way, it earned its own month. As if we needed a reason to eat more grilled cheese, the whole month of April was declared as annual "National Grilled Cheese Month."

Grilled cheese won the coveted top spot as "The Most Comforting Comfort Food,' beating out chocolate, pizza, ice cream, french fries and even cheesy rival, mac and cheese, in a recent survey by Ranker, a digital media company, of more than 34,000

Just about anyone can butter bread and slap some cheese in between, but there is actually a fair amount of science and research (read: dozens of enviable taste-testing sessions) that the experts put in, so they can elevate your grilled cheese eating experience.

In honor of this historic holiday, three experts on the topic discuss, in detail, how to craft your most satisfying grilled cheese sandwich ever.

Start with the obvious — the cheese

Not all cheeses are created equal — different cheeses have different melting points - so it's important to know what you're working with. For example, Manchego or Roquefort aren't the best melters, but brie or gouda are perfect for that classic, stringy cheese pull.

"There needs to be some stretch to the cheese. I go for an oozy-gooey cheese like Gruyere," says Heidi Gibson, co-owner of the American Grilled Cheese Kitchen in San Francisco, Calif. "I like to do thin slices of different types of cheese for variations in texture and flavors."

But before you throw down any old cheese, keep in mind the style you're going for.

Dave Danhi, owner of the Grilled Cheese Food Truck of Los Angeles, Calif., says, "When you make a grilled cheese, there's a personality to each sandwich. Ooey gooey cheddar is different from brie that's comforting and warm. Jarlesburg and blue are a bit more aggressive. It's really where you want to go with it."

Choose carbs with care — the bread

Bread can bring a grilled cheese from good to great. Choose a bread that has some texture and some density.

"A good bread has to have a good crumb to it. Less moisture in the bread means it crisps up better. No Wonderbready types," said Danhi.

Seth Murphy, co-owner and chef of Wünderbar Coffee & Crepes in Harmony, Pa., says good bread has to be dense enough to hold up to the weight of the cheese but still have some lightness to it and it has to be fresh.

"I like a pretzel bread because it stays soft on the inside and toasts nicely,' Murphy says.

Butter up!

"Go light on the butter you need less than you think," Gibson says, "and look for an evenly toasted crust on your bread before you call it done. No one likes a pale grilled cheese.'

Murphy specifies, that it should be salted butter — on both sides.

But if you're feeling a little more adventurous, Danhi offers an alternative.

'If you're doing a grilled cheese that's a bit thicker, mayonnaise helps to raise the smoking temperature, so you can keep it on the griddle longer. I mix butter and mayo together and it helps create a much crunchier outside."

BY MELISSA D'ARABIAN

My mom was a wannabe urban farmer long before it was cool. Living in the city limits didn't stop us from growing our own veggies in a backyard garden that flanked a huge handmade chicken coop, where we raised hens for eggs. (I'll take this opportunity to apologize to our neighbors, especially for the year we accidentally acquired a rooster, and the year after when we ended up with 38 clucking egg-layers as a result of said rooster.)

Today, raising your own food is trendy, but back then we did it because it was cheap. As a kid, I remember being sent to the backyard to grab a snack. I'd forego the plethora of fuzzy zucchini, and grab either a tomato or orange. Biting into a sunwarmed fruit, laced with just the tiniest bit of clinging dirt (I never bothered with the hose), sweet juice dripping down my chin in the dry heat of Tucson, Ariz,, is a memory stuck in my bones.

No surprise oranges and tomatoes were interchangeable snacks, both of them sweet, acidic and juicy. Turns out, oranges and tomatoes are worthy swaps for each other in a host of raw

So if you are out of tomatoes, or they are simply out of season, consider using oranges instead, tasty yearround. The additional sweetness is a welcome twist in most recipes — try oranges in your caprese salad — but if you want a less sweet option, use grapefruit or a combination of cucumber and oranges instead.

few oranges and add toppings

When you are stuck for a side dish, grab a few oranges from the fruit basket, slice them up and lay them out on a platter and add whatever tasty toppings you have on hand — avocado, chopped scallions or shallots, nuts, seeds, fresh herbs, spicy greens, leftover rotisserie chicken, a drizzle of pesto are just a few ideas. Try this week's Orange and Cucumber Layered Salad with Shrimp, but use the ingredient list as a mere suggestion to start your own creative version.

1/4 small red onion, thinly sliced (To mellow the red onion flavor, shock the red onion slices by placing for 10 seconds in ice cold water, and then blotting dry.)

1 tablespoon toasted pumpkin seeds (or other nut or seed) 1-2 tablespoons fresh lemon

SLYLOCK FOX and COMICS FOR KIDS

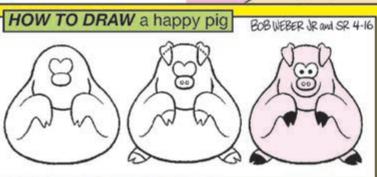

BY BOB WEBER JR.

Spot six differences between these panels.

After Karla Kangaroo's physical examination, the doctor left the exam room for an emergency phone call. When she returned, she noticed that a silver bookend was missing. Karla insisted she didn't steal it. How was Slylock Fox able to gather evidence, without a search, that suggested the kanga-roo was hiding the bookend in her pouch?

Solution -- Patients are weighed during physical exams. Slylock weighed the kangaroo again and discovered she had suddenly alined 10 pounds.
