INTRODUCTION

IT IS now nearly thirty-two years since the first volume of Sharpe's Handlist of the Genera and Species of Birds made its appearance. The five volumes comprising that work have long been the one and only standard catalogue available to ornithologists, and it is a pity that Sharpe's work could not have remained so, but the rapidity of the increase of ornithological knowledge has made it clear for a number of years that a new work along the same, or perhaps slightly more elaborate, lines was needed.

The order of families and higher groups followed in this work is essentially the same as that proposed by Wetmore in the Proceedings U. S. National Museum, 76, Art. 24, 1930, pp. 1-8. The arrangement of the subfamilies and the sequence of genera and species have been compiled from many sources and from personal examination of material. The much-mooted question of generic limits is largely a matter of individual preference. In the recognition of genera I have endeavored to adhere to the doctrine that "the genus should be used for expressing relationships," and that minor structural differences should be considered as of specific value only, or at the most merely of subgeneric worth.

The fact that a species or subspecies is included does not necessarily mean that I am in a position to vouch for its validity; nor when a name is relegated to synonymy does it mean that the form is unrecognizable (unless, of course, the name is a direct synonym). In a work such as this which contains a large amount of compilation, it is clearly impossible to be critical throughout and it is absolutely necessary to refer freely to the opinions of sound ornithologists. Where a conflict of opinion exists I have tried to follow my own best judgment. In recognizing representative forms as subspecies, even where physical intergradation does not occur, or where intergradation by individual variation is not complete, I think my own views are entirely in harmony with those of most progressive ornithologists.

In giving the ranges I have endeavored to outline concisely the normal range of each bird, and whether or not it is migratory; specific instances of casual or accidental occurrence are considered to be outside the scope of a list of this character.

For each genus I have endeavored to give one or more references to recently published revisionary work, geographic lists, or to works where the principal synonymy of the genus may be found. In large genera there may be several such references, while in a small genus one or two suffice. In short, these references may be regarded as the basis on which the treatment of the genus and species rests.

It must be clearly understood by all users of this work that it does not include a complete principal synonymy. Synonyms, both generic, specific and subspecific, are given only for genera, species and subspecies described since the publication of the first volume of Sharpe's Handlist. In many cases where the Handlist recognized as valid a form since relegated to synonymy, that fact is stated in a footnote. Synonyms not to be found in any of the volumes of the Catalogue of Birds of the British Museum are cited in full. References also in full are given for each genus and species recognized. In the large majority of cases such references have been personally verified.

Within each genus the species have been arranged in phylogenetic sequence as nearly as can be determined; subspecies are arranged geographically from North to South and from West to East.

Fossil birds are regarded as being outside the scope of this Check-list, which deals with recent birds only. To maintain the continuity of the classification as far as possible, the fossil orders and families have been included in their proper place, but printed in Gothic type. It has been necessary to draw a line somewhere between fossil and recent birds, and for this purpose any bird is considered as belonging among the fossils if it is not known from at least a fragment of the skin and feathers. Recent species now known to be extinct are indicated by a dagger (†).

The International Code of Zoölogical Nomenclature has been followed except in the application of Article 28. Where two names are of the same date, and it has been or can be proven that one of them is actually the prior name, even if only a matter of line anteriority on the same page, then I have used the prior name, regardless of the action of some "first reviser."

No names have been included that have been published since December 31, 1930. The manuscript was sent to the printer late in January, 1931, and it has seemed best to close it to birds described after January first. One or two of my friends have given me advance information of new birds in manuscript, suggesting that the names be published as nomina nuda in this list in advance of their descriptions. This practice was very common seventy-five or a hundred years ago and led to much confusion in later years. It should not be attempted as late as 1931.

In the preparation of this volume I have received aid and encouragement from numerous friends. First and foremost it gives me great pleasure to acknowledge a debt of gratitude to Outram Bangs, an outstanding figure in Ornithology for over thirty years, whose kindly help and wise counsel have helped me over many a difficult group.

Thomas Barbour, Director of the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy, has long encouraged me in the belief that this Check-list could be printed under the auspices of the University.

Proofs have been read in whole or in part by Mr. H. B. Conover, Dr. Herbert Friedmann, Dr. C. E. Hellmayr, Dr. Ernst Mayr, Dr. Robert Cushman Murphy, Dr. C. W. Richmond, Dr. Alexander Wetmore and Mr. J. T. Zimmer. Miss Eleanor K. Sweet, Librarian at the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy, has also carefully read the proofs and detected many inconsistencies in citation of titles of both books and serials. To Dr. Roberto Dabbene was submitted the manuscript covering the Rheas and the Argentine species of Tinamiformes. Mr. W. B. Alexander read over the part of the manuscript dealing with the Pelicaniformes and made numerous valuable suggestions; Dr. Erwin Stresemann performed the same service for the genus Accipiter; Mr. J. H. Fleming, Dr. Einar Lönnberg, Mr. W. L. Sclater, and Dr. B. Stegmann have helped me with specific inquiries. To Mr. Thomas E. Penard of Arlington, Massachusetts, I am indebted for access to his private library containing several rarities not otherwise available in the vicinity of Cambridge. I am also indebted to the authorities of the American Museum of Natural History, Academy of Natural Sciences, and the United States National Museum for the privilege of examining material in their respective institutions. I should be most remiss in my acknowledgments if I did not express my appreciation of the devotion of Mrs. R. E. Bowen, Secretary to the Bird Department at the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy, who painstakingly typed the entire manuscript and performed much other tedious clerical work in connection with the undertaking.

<sup>1</sup> I believe it best to follow the treatment of this genus as constituted by Hartert and by Phillips. The only other alternative is to break it up into a large number of genera and subgenera, each one monotypic. It does seem, however, that the "Widgeons" constitute a small, well-defined group, so I maintain Mareca, and for similar reasons Chaulelasimus, is also kept distinct.

<sup>1</sup> This form of Buteo burmanicus described from western China and southeastern Tibet may well be a valid form, but the name saturatus is invalidated if Asturina saturata Sclater and Salvin is placed in the genus Buteo as has been done in this Check-List.

In the same paper, Portenko divides the different subspecies of the palaeartic Buteos each into a number of color varieties, employing a quadrinomial form of terminology to designate them, i. e., Buteo japonicus japonicus Temminck f. pallidipictus. In such cases it is quite evident that no nomenclatorial value is to be attached to the fourth term, nevertheless the practice of designating color varieties in this way may lead to serious complications and should be avoided.

<sup>1</sup> Hypomorphnus must replace Urubitinga. Urubitinga was used in a vernacular sense by the French ornithologists from Cuvier's time onward, but its use was always in the vernacular and it was never validated as a generic name prior to 1840. In that year G. R. Gray, in his List Gen. Bds., p. 2, cited Urubitinga in a generic sense as a synonym of Morphnus Cuvier, rendering it untenable from that date.

<sup>2</sup> In my opinion the short-legged, short-tailed species with more slender bills formerly associated with Hypomorphnus urubitinga are not very closely related to it. They are, however, not generically separable from Buteogallus, formerly considered monotypic.

Southeastern New Guinea, Australia (except western), Tasmania, New Zealand.

NOTE. Slater (Syst. Av. Æthiop., 1930, app., p. 840) sets up Circus Humbloti Milne-Edwards and Grandidier, Hist. Madagascar, Oiseaux, 1, p. 747; 2, Atl. 1, pl. 29A, 29B, f. 1, 1a, 1b, 29C, f. 1, 1a 1885? (= 1876-1879?) believing it to be a distinct species generally overlooked. The description is based on a young bird; no color characters are given to distinguish it from young macroscelis but the figures show the tips of the wings reaching to the tip of the tail. The measurements given for the wing and tail of macroscelis and humbloti by Milne-Edwards and Granddier are approximately the same, however. It therefore would appear that in the type of humbloti the tail had been shoved up into the body of the skin.

<sup>2</sup> The renaming of Falco bacha Daudin was uncalled for. Levaillant's plate and description on which the name is based agree closely with the Spilornis from the Malay Peninsula. Levaillant's account of the habits of "Le Bacha" and the region it was supposed to inhabit undoubtedly refer to a Spizaëtus or one of the closely allied genera, but that is no reason for discarding a name based exclusively on a recognizable plate. If names are thrown out simply because the type locality is erroneous, many more names among the early authors would find their way into the discard.

<sup>1</sup> Menzbier, supra, p. 59, cites this name in an array of "Faunistic Literature relating to Russia" but does not dispose of it definitely in synonymy. Menzbier's method of handling subspecies is one all his own. He divides Falco p. peregrinus into a number of "forms" including F. p. p. f. griseiventer, f. corniculum, f. abietinus, and f. brevirostris.

<sup>2</sup> Hartert (supra) and Menzbier (supra) are entirely at variance in their views on the forms of Peregrine Falcon in Asia. I have followed the former's treatment, but the occurrence in China of certain anomalous specimens leads to the belief his views are not entirely correct.
