Thank you for visiting the historic town of Cranbury. Please come back soon.

The Historic Village of Cranbury, New Jersey

Cranbury is one of the oldest towns in New Jersey. It is believed that there were settlers here as early as 1680, when the town was known as Cranberry and Cranberry Town. A deed dated 1698 for land "with all improvements" indicates buildings on the land and earlier settlement. Cranbury celebrated its 300th anniversary in 1997.

Cranbury Bicentennial Gazebo in Village Park

Cranbury Township was established in 1872 as a political subdivision of Middlesex County consisting of the village and outlying areas. In 1979 Cranbury was named a State Historic District. In 1980 it received the designation of National Historic District, at a time when it was said to be "the best preserved 19th century village in Middlesex County." The significance of Cranbury's historic district is inexorably tied to its agricultural setting. The village was built to serve the surrounding farm community, and one of the most attractive draws to Cranbury Township is its commitment to preserving open space. Presently, 75% of available farmland is preserved.

While maintaining its roots, Cranbury has grown to include business projects such as factory outlets, warehouses and office buildings on its outer rim. New housing developments have attracted seniors and young families, causing the population of Cranbury to grow in recent years.

Cranbury is located in southern Middlesex County, and is 13.4 square miles. The Township is bordered by South Brunswick, Monroe, Plainsboro, and East Windsor.

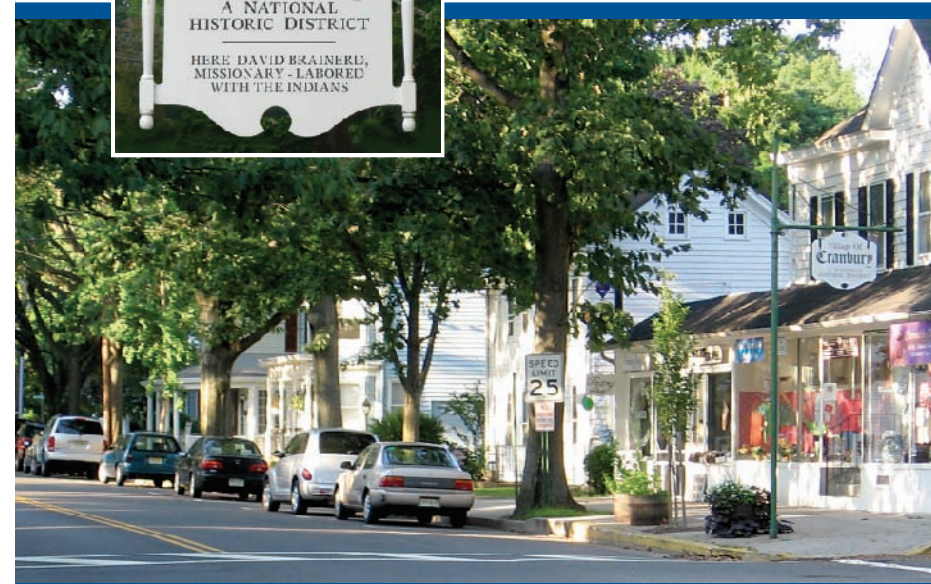

The CBPA is an association of businesses and individuals whose mission is to create, maintain, stimulate, and expand economic activity in the Cranbury region, and to foster a positive and progressive atmosphere of community spirit, enhancing the quality of life for its citizens.
