READING 17, pt. 2 (adapted)

Eutropius summarizes the accomplishments of Rome's last king, Lucius Tarquinius Superbus, called "superbus" ("proud") for his arrogance. According to this account, his son brought about the end of Rome's rule by kings when he raped Lucretia, another man's wife. She demanded that her husband and father avenge this outrage, and then killed herself, triggering a revolution that led to the Roman Republic. Lucretia became a famous symbol of chastity and faithfulness for the Romans. [continued]

Mox militēs, quī cīvitātem Ardeam cum rēge oppugnābant, eum relīquērunt, et cum vēnit ad urbem rēx portae clausae erant. quamquam rēxerat annōs quattuor et vīgintī, cum uxōre et liberīs fūgit. Ita Rōma rēcta est per septem rēgēs annōs duo centum et quadrāgintā trēs. Hinc Rōmānī cōsulēs, prō ūnō rēge, duo hāc causā creāvērunt: sī ūnus malus esse optāvit, alter, quī habēbat potestātem similem, eum coercēre potuit.
