Board OKs shelter, but restricts its use

By Kathy Garmus
Herald Reporter

The Board of Directors unanimously authorized the town Tuesday night to purchase a permanent shelter for homeless people, but only after attaching several restrictions on the shelter's operation.

Among the conditions were a 40-bed limit at the shelter and a limit on the number of days a person could stay at the shelter, which will be operated by the Manchester Area Conference of Churches under the plan approved by the directors. The directors also placed a $20,000 limit on the amount of aid MACC could seek from the town during the shelter's first year of operation.

The conditions were included by the board's six Democrats, who caucused prior to the board's 8 p.m. meeting at Lincoln Center. The conditions appeared to satisfy several Democratic directors who had expressed reservations about the town's involvement in purchasing a shelter because they said the homeless were the responsibility of the state.

Under three separate resolutions passed by the directors Tuesday, the town is now authorized to purchase a former church at 406 Main St. for use as a shelter provided it receives a grant from the state for two-thirds of the purchase cost and MACC receives donations or grants for the remaining third.

The cost of purchasing and renovating the church building — one of two Main Street sites considered for a shelter — has been estimated at $227,120. The other site was the former Gammons Hoaglund Co. building at 205 Main St.

The board also authorized town General Manager Robert B. Weis to apply for a state grant not to exceed $25,000 and appointed the town's Human Services Department as the agency responsible for developing shelter plans and representing the town in the purchase of a building. The directors decided the $25,000 could be adjusted if the state funding situation changed.

Weis said today that he would begin preparing the grant application immediately.

Once the building is purchased, it will be turned over to the Manchester Area Conference of Churches for a nominal fee with the condition that it be used only for a shelter for the homeless and a soup kitchen. In an effort to prevent the shelter from becoming a regional one, the directors also included a requirement that MACC not enter into contracts with other towns to provide shelter.

The directors also voted in favor of a 5-day limit on the time a nonresident could stay at the shelter, and a two-week limit for onetime residents of Manchester, unless efforts were being made to secure housing.

MACC, which has operated seasonal shelters out of temporary sites for the past several years, will be required to run the shelter on a year-round basis, under the resolutions passed Tuesday. Volunteers serve in the shelter, along with a few staff members who are paid by MACC.

The directors also authorized MACC to apply to the town for aid if the shelter operated at a deficit. While placing the $20,000 limit on the amount MACC could ask during its first year, the directors left future participation by the town up to the discretion of the board.

Weis had previously estimated that the town would have to provide $15,000 to $25,000 annually if the shelter lost money.

Under one of the resolutions passed Tuesday, Weis will be required to draft the operating and reporting mechanisms for the shelter and present them to the Board of Directors by June 1. The directors will require monthly reports on the performance of the shelter.

Although the nine directors voted Tuesday in favor of the town's participation in setting up a shelter, many of them maintained that the state was shirking its

Governor, in Washington, raps drop in Amtrak funds

WASHINGTON — Congress should freeze federal spending for public transportation systems, rather than shift the financial burden to the states as President Reagan wants to do, says Connecticut Gov. William O'Neill.

"The total and immediate elimination of federal support could mean the total elimination of many mass transit services," testified O'Neill Tuesday before the Senate Committee on Transportation, Commerce and Communications.

"The impact on states, localities, job development and the economy will be severe," warned O'Neill, who represented the National Governors Association at the hearing.

The governor said Reagan's proposed cuts in mass transit spending would kill many of the states' public transportation systems and force commuters onto already-congested highways.

"In my state of Connecticut, state government provides more than 84 percent of the $70 million in subsidies which are needed to operate bus systems and the New Haven Rail Line's commuter rail services," said O'Neill.

"Connecticut's transit system carries 60 million passengers per year, and that is a volume that would severely tax the highways in our state at peak traffic hours," he said.

The president's mass-transit proposals include ending all discretionary capital grants, ending all federal operating grants and increasing local financial responsibility on projects from 20 percent to 30 percent.

"We are opposed to wholesale shifts in current federal responsibilities to state governments," said O'Neill. "There has been no consultation with the governors in order to set common priorities and goals."

O'Neill also asked the subcommittee to take steps to maintain federal support for highway and bridge maintenance.

The governor said the continued economic growth of Connecticut and the rest of the country depends heavily on well-maintained highways and bridges.

"One of the cornerstones to sustained economic recovery is an efficient transportation system, one which allows farm and business products to reach markets, thereby supporting jobs, creating income and generating tax revenues," said O'Neill. "That cornerstone would be threatened by the administration's proposed budget."

Bonn rolls out red carpet to defuse cemetery furor

By Helen Thomas
United Press International

BONN, West Germany — President Reagan arrived today at the start of a 10-day European trip that has been embroiled in controversy over his planned visit to a German military cemetery.

The president and Mrs. Reagan received a red carpet welcome with full honors, including a 21-gun salute and a flyover by four West German jet fighters when they stepped off Air Force One at Cologne-Bonn airport.

Reagan, greeted by West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and U.S. Ambassador Arthur Burns, made no statement before boarding Marine One for a flight to Gymnich Castle, a 14th century moated castle where the president will be staying for the Economic Summit of industrialized nations.

Security was tight at the airport, with heavily armed paramilitary police standing at 50-yard intervals around the tarmac and the perimeter. (Related story, page 5).

Hundreds of spectators were kept inside the main terminal, where they watched the Reagans wave as they emerged from the plane after the seven-hour flight from Washington.

An honor guard of 19 West German soldiers in green berets stood at attention and presented arms when the president, beaming broadly and waving with his wife at his side, stepped out of the plane for a short walk to the Marine helicopter under grey skies just as a downpour ended.

After a short flight, the Reagans arrived at the castle for a day of private relaxation.

In a farewell statement at the White House Tuesday, Reagan said:

Layoffs expected in coming months

Multi-Circuits plans restructuring

By Susan Vaughn
Herald Reporter

Whether Multi-Circuits Inc. will survive depends on the direction the computer industry takes in the next few months, a vice president of Multi-Circuits' parent company said today.

Irving Gutin, vice president of Tyco Laboratories of Exeter, N.H., which bought the circuit-board manufacturer last year, said today that company officials are considering how they can most efficiently restructure Multi-Circuits' operations to "see how we're going to survive."

The company is one of Manchester's largest employers.

"We have had other declines and have survived," Gutin said. He said he hoped the decline in the computer manufacturing industry "will bottom out shortly." "Nobody knows what's going to happen," he added.

Gutin said he is "hopeful layoffs will be minimal." But he said the number is a "big unknown" and depends on whether or not business improves in the next few months. Gutin said any layoffs would probably come in the next three to six months while a restructuring plan is underway.

The management at Multi-Circuits plants in Manchester announced Monday to employees, who now number about 350, that the company would be restructuring its operation, Gutin said. No layoff notices were given, he said. About 130 employees were furloughed March 28.

The company will change over to the manufacture of prototype and high-tech circuit boards for larger main-frame computers because of the decline in the market for the simpler double-sided boards for personal computers, Gutin said.

Of the computer manufacturing industry, Gutin said, "The demand has declined dramatically and a lot of companies have dropped out of the computer market." American companies are also facing more competition from "off-shore companies" in Hong Kong, Japan, Taiwan, and Korea, Gutin said. Tyco's biggest competitors in the U.S. are Hatco of New Hampshire and Kollmorgen, which has plants in various locations, Gutin said.

The changeover in operations at Multi-Circuits will involve additional capital equipment and some retraining of employees, Gutin said.

Gutin said the details involving cost and restructuring of Multi-Circuits' several Manchester plants are "being worked on" by management in Manchester and at Tyco.

He said he does not know if the Manchester operations, now located on Harrison Street, Adams Street and in several warehouses, will be consolidated during the restructuring.

If there are layoffs and business continues to decline, the laid off employees would be in all phases of the business, Gutin said. "Obviously, there would be less need for workers across the line," he said.

"My sense is that it (the layoffs) would be more gradual than dramatic," Gutin said.

Gutin said he thought a few employees from Multi-Circuits were transferred to Tyco's North American Printed Circuits of Stafford after the March layoff, but he did not know exactly how many. The current slowdown at Multi-Circuits does not affect North American, Gutin said, because that plant manufactures a more sophisticated type of circuit board.

Multi-Circuits was listed as the town's fourth-largest taxpayer on the Grand List of Oct. 1, 1984, with an assessment of $4,338,420.

At one point, prior to Tyco's takeover of the company last February, Multi-Circuits employed more than 800 people. Its first layoffs occurred during another declining period in the electronics industry in 1982. About 300 employees were terminated during two layoffs in 1982.

Rhett Gibbs showing the way for Coventry nine

COLCHESTER — Rhett Gibbs has been a key figure in Coventry High's baseball fortunes this year. So it was only fitting that the sophomore mound ace came through in a key COC matchup. Gibbs twirled a seven-inning effort as Coventry overcame Bacon Academy, 7-4, Tuesday.

The Patriots topped their COC record to 5-3, 6-3 overall. Bacon is now 6-3 in the conference and overall.

Gibbs (5-1) had some help from his teammates. Ron Williams delivered a clutch, two-run single in a three-run fifth inning rally that gave Coventry a 5-4 edge. The Patriots added some insurance in the sixth when Bret Lafferriere ripped a two-run double to center. Williams and Tim Cohen had two hits apiece for the winners, while shortstop Bob Harris played excellent defense.

Steve Lappi rapped two singles and Mark Guire belted a home run for Bacon.

"After a week layoff, we started rusty but we settled down and played well defensively the last three innings," cited Bolton coach Howard Sobolov.

Mike Mancini cracked a two-run double in the fifth to bring the Beavers within one run. Rick Gonzales was the only Coventry batter with two hits.

FOCUS / Food

Asparagusto!

Don't miss out on one of springtime's tastiest gifts

NEVER COOKED asparagus in your life? Fear not. First wash thoroughly. Then take a look: Are they thicker than a felt-tipped marking pen? If so, you ought to peel the bottom section of the stem. A potato peeler will do the job very nicely — just remove a thin section of skin from the bottom several inches of each stalk.

Next step — do not cut — the woody ends from each asparagus. Each stalk will automatically snap at the point where tough meets tender.

Now on to the cooking. Most cooks have seen intimidating pictures in cookbooks, where the French housewife has a purple ribbon tied around her bouquet of asparagus, and is steaming them in what appears to be coffee pot. This was, indeed, the European method, designed to keep the stems — which are tougher — submerged in boiling water, while the more delicate tips encountered only the steam.

This was important primarily because people liked their vegetables quite well done. In the time it would take to fully tenderize the stems, the tips would have become a sodden mess.

BUT LEAVE IT to the iconoclastic Americans to come up with a simpler alternative. Most of the fine cookbooks one consults nowadays — from James Beard on — suggest cooking asparagus in a large skillet. Millie Owen, in "A Cook's Guide to Growing Herbs, Greens & Aromatics," uses a skillet but props the tips up out of the water on a large piece of crumpled aluminum foil. We've never found this to be necessary.

Simply lay the asparagus out in the pan, in several layers if necessary, keeping the larger ones on the bottom of the pan. Add about 1/2 inch water, bring to the boil and cook at high speed for about four minutes.

Check asparagus often, either visually, or using the "bite test." Don't allow them to overcook. If you shake a spear with a pair of tongs and it looks like a throwback to the era of Chubby Checkers and the Twist, you've cooked them too long. Set aside the abused vegetables, for use in a soup the next day, and start again on the dinner batch.

Microwave-cooking asparagus is also very successful. Arrange stalks in a large, fairly flat nonmetallic container, with tips toward the center and stems toward the outside. Add about 1/4 cup water and cover with plastic wrap. Cook at full power for 4 minutes, then test.

ANOTHER GOOD METHOD is to cut each asparagus into several pieces and stir-fry rapidly, in either a skillet or wok, in only the tiniest amount of oil. Asparagus are excellent served with melted butter, Hollandaise sauce, or lemon juice and freshly ground black pepper. The latter suggestion for dieters, means that your entire serving of — for example — 20 asparagus will only "cost" you about 40 calories.

Asparagus are delicious at any meal of the day — breakfast or brunch, luncheon and supper. Here is a brunch idea from "The New James Beard."

Dutch asparagus
2 pounds asparagus
Salt
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
1/4 cup chopped parsley
4 eggs, fried
3 to 4 tablespoons capers, finely chopped
Clean asparagus, breaking off tough ends. Lay flat in a skillet, add boiling water and cook, uncovered, until the tips are just tender. Drain well on a clean dish towel, then arrange on four warm plates. Sprinkle lavishly with Parmesan cheese and parsley, then top each serving with a fried egg. Serve with capers, to be added to taste. Serves four.

Your Neighbor's Kitchen

It's Mexican — Manchester-style

By Margaret Hayden
Herold Reporter

Dale Doll of 370 E. Center St. learned Mexican cooking from friends and neighbors during the four years she lived in Los Angeles.

When the family returned to Manchester she adjusted her recipes so she could continue to cook her family's favorites, even though some ingredients sold in California aren't available here.

The Dolls have a Mexican dinner about twice a week.

"In Los Angeles the stores have bins of all kinds of chili peppers," she said.

Here, she buys some kinds in cans. Some seasonings are unavailable here but with the strong flavors of peppers, chili powder, garlic and onions, she manages to get the right taste anyway, she said. Her husband, Jeffrey, adds lots of hot sauce.

"Most of my Mexican recipes come from four friends who had lived in different states in Mexico," she said.

The Dolls lived from 1971 to 1975 in Los Angeles, where her husband attended a school for motorcycle mechanics. Although the couple liked the area, they wanted their two small children to grow up near relatives.

HEE FAVORS cast-iron cooking utensils, which she uses in rotation to keep them seasoned and in good condition. They cover one wall of her kitchen and fill several shelves on another.

"We were down to our last $10 when I bought this one for $7," she said, holding a covered saucepan.

For her Mexican cooking, she makes her own sauce for enchiladas but often uses frozen tortillas. She buys some sauces and relishes, too.

The Dolls enjoy several Mexican recipes. Enchiladas are thin rounds of corn bread filled with seasoned cheese and sometimes meat, rolled and covered with a hot sauce. She serves them with a toasted salad, Mexican rice or frijoles (refried beans). Frijoles are a staple for Mexicans and eaten with almost every dinner, she said.

To adapt Chili Rellenos to New England and canned, instead of fresh green chilies, she learned to place some of the egg mixture in the pan instead of dipping the stuffed peppers in an egg batter before frying them. The canned peppers fell apart when she dipped them.

Mexicans roast fresh chilies over an open flame until the skin blackens and splits, making peeling easy, she says.

She had advice for those who want to buy the jalapeno chilies used in some Mexican recipes. "Remove the seeds, if you don't want a real hot sauce," she said. "Here are some of her Manch-ter adaptations of South of the Border cooking.

Mix all ingredients in a large bowl and set aside. Heat 1/4-inch oil in skillet.

Fry tortillas lightly in hot oil to soften, 3 to 5 seconds each side, one at a time, using tongs to turn and lift. They should not be crisp. Drain on paper towels and dip in warm sauce. Place in 8-1/2-inch baking pan. Put 3 tablespoons (more if meat has been added) of filling across center of tortilla and roll. Place seam side down. Repeat for each tortilla.

Put enchiladas very close together for one layer. Pour on remaining sauce and sprinkle with any remaining filling. Bake uncovered in a preheated, 350-degree oven for 15 minutes. Serve hot.

Top with sour cream, if desired.

Serves 4.

Frijoles
1 pound dried pinto beans
7 cups water
2 cloves garlic, crushed
1/4 cup Monterey Jack cheese, cubed or grated
1/4 cup oil
1 teaspoon salt
Pick over beans, wash and drain. Put beans in pressure cooker, add water and garlic. Bring up to 15 pounds pressure and cook for 45 minutes, (or cook according to package directions.) Turn off heat and let pressure dissipate. Beans should be creamy and slightly thickened. Beans may be mashed a little with a wooden spoon to hasten the thickening.
