Notes:

1) The word locations highlighted in blue involve an epithet, with the word "I," ego (EKV). In the expression the ego is being acted upon.

2) It may be that the mother tongue of the Etruscans, French and Italians – and possibly their neighboring "Latin" tongues – is older than Latin. This word, along with others found in Table 1, may be an illustration of that fact. If Latin jin|cubare is equal to Italian covare and French couver, then the Etruscan word may be reminding us that in adapting the same word, the Latins added a prefix, "in" to the old "Etruscan" word. As with other words in this table, the French and the Italians maintained their identity. The word must be a very old Indo-European word, since its meaning includes to cover embers. Covering the embers, to brood them as it were, would appear to be a more important, early task realized by man than the knowledge of the importance of a bird brooding its eggs.

3) The character k is ☒, a rarely used character in the scripts. The character is used again in a Villanovan fibula, Script VF, in the concluding word on the fibula, maximas, (Lat. maximus, great). The "f" in chiave, VF-3, is used again at VF-4, LAFES (Lat. laus, laudis).

4) En appears to be the first word in a script written on the left hand side of a bronze haruspex (augur), Script HA of the Translation Short Scripts.html. The bronze is in the Vatican museum. "Behold!" would appear to be the appropriate context for the word.

5) Hittite language resource for second entry is <http://www.utexas.edu/cola/depts/lrc/eieol/hitol-EI-X.html>.

6) Thanks to Constantin Cucu for his contribution on the Romanian words listed in Table 1.
