AMES FOUNDATION FOREWORD

THIS volume continues the Ames Foundation's series of volumes independent of the Year Books of Richard II. We have recently converted this series into an 'eseries', in which an online electronic book in PDF format accompanies the publication in traditional paper format.

The first volume in the eseries was Daniel Williman's and Karen Corsano's The Spoils of the Pope and the Pirates, 1357: The Complete Legal Dossier from the Vatican Archives, an edition in extenso of documents from the Vatican Archives. They tell the remarkable story of what happened in one of the exercises of the papal right of spoil (Case no. 1310 in this book).¹ Selection of these documents was based on a list of regesta of what purported to be all the exercises of the papal right of spoil by the Avignonese papacy. This list was published by the American Philosophical Society in 1988. Williman and Corsano continued to work on the list. They discovered many more examples of exercises of the papal right of spoil in Vatican Archives and made numerous corrections and additions to the 'cases' (defined as all the documents associated with the spoliation of a particular person) in the original list. They now believe that they have all the instances in which the Avignonese papacy exercised this right, and a second edition of the list was clearly called for.

The first edition was published only in paper; online publication was not possible at the time. It contained numerous tables that reflected what the editor thought might be useful for users of the list, but no index of persons. When the current authors asked the Foundation to publish the second edition, the first consideration was what could be done with the technology that is now available. It made no sense not to use that technology to improve the accessibility of the material, but not everyone has access to the Internet at all times, and many people remain uncomfortable with using it. Hence, we decided to publish the second edition in both online and in paper.

The first edition contained a very large amount of data; the second edition contains even more. Some of this data is specific to the cases: who was despoiled, when did this happen, where did it happen. Rather than making up tables that arranged this data in ways that we imagined might be useful to the user, it seemed to make more sense to create one massive table in the form of an Excel spreadsheet that the user could download and arrange in any way that suited his or her purposes. This spreadsheet is freely downloadable from the online edition (URL: amesfoundation.law.harvard.edu/papal_spoils/2ded STATISTICAL TABLE.xlsx).

A somewhat different problem was presented by the very large number of personal names that appear in the cases (approximately 2700). The archival material tells us a great deal about some of these people, particularly about those who were despoiled. The authors have also searched the standard reference works, e.g., Eubel and Gallia Christiana, for those who were despoiled and have included some such material for those people who are mentioned just in passing. What seemed to be called for here was a quite elaborate index of persons in the cases. The Foundation created a database of all the personal names that are in the second edition with all the information about them that is in the edition, with occasional expansion from standard reference works, and the modern spelling of the place-names with which the persons are associated. From this database the Foundation produced a traditional, but elaborate, index of the persons in the cases. This index is included in the printed edition. The online edition also hyperlinks the references to the cases in the index to the cases themselves, and includes a number of search engines that allow the user to find all the persons of a given type, e.g., collectors for the papal Camera.

The authors have prepared an introduction that is much fuller than that in the first edition and have supplied an index of proper names in the introduction. The repertory of the cases and the statistical table are accompanied by instructions for using them. The book is completed with a table of abbreviations, weights and measures, and moneys, and a bibliography.

There are many possible uses of this product of the authors' long labors; we can mention only a few here. For those who are interested in the Avignonese papacy it is obviously of critical importance. Many have written about the papal right of spoil in this period, but no one until now has put together a complete list of all the instances in which it was exercised. The statistical table allows one to see not only the temporal and geographical range of the practice, but also when and where it was exercised only occasionally or not at all. It is thus a piece, and a rather important piece, of the story of regnum and sacerdotium in the fourteenth century and of the story of the relations between the papacy and the local churches and the religious orders. For the historian of administration we have a precocious example, in considerable detail, of how a bureaucracy develops. The cases contain a large amount of data about money and prices that should be of interest to economic historians. The Index of Persons identifies a large number of churchmen and a few laymen over the course of the 'long' fourteenth century. The possibilities of using this material for prosopographical purposes and/or for network analysis are great. Many people are identified who obviously played important roles in local churches. The authors have, however, systematically explored only the papal archives and standard reference works, many of which are themselves based on the papal archives. The full story of these people and of the cases can only be told when local archives are also systematically explored.

For the legal historian the story that is told in these documents and in the Introduction is both fascinating and puzzling. As the Introduction shows, contemporary canonists dealt with the general problem of separating a secular cleric's personal property from that which belonged to the church. This canonical discussion antedates the fourteenth century, and is continued in the fourteenth-century canonists. There is some treatment in the academic canonists of the papal reservation of vacant benefices, but canonical discussion of the papal right of spoil, even the term ius spoli, postdates the Avignonese papacy and comes from a period when the practice had largely fallen into disuse.

If, however, one takes a wider view of what law is, there clearly was a law of the papal right of spoil in the fourteenth century. It can be discerned in the authorizations of the popes to the chamberlains, the most important of which are printed in the Appendix to the Introduction, and perhaps even more so in what is reflected in the documents of practice. That the overall justification of the practice probably rested on what Hostiensis and others called the plentitudo potestatis of the pope seems reasonably clear. It was supported by Aquinas' notion that the pope is the dispensator rerum ecclesiarum. It can be described, as the Introduction does, as papal 'eminent domain', so long as we do not think of the dominium eminens of Grotius. Grotius' eminent domain was a power that the secular state had to appropriate an individual's property so long as it paid just compensation. The analogy of the church to a secular state was quite imperfect when Grotius wrote and was even more imperfect in the fourteenth century. The Avignonese popes were not seizing property that belonged to others. They were seizing property that was, in some sense, theirs. We are reminded that fourteenth-century theologians (the lawyers did not follow them) frequently used the word dominium to describe any kind of subjective right, not just those involving property.

Starting from these very broad ideas, the bureaucrats of the Camera worked out the legal details. They were helped by the fact that the chamberlain had judicial powers, and his judgments were not subject to appeal to the Rota. That the legal details were being worked out seems clear enough from the documents, but the documents are mostly documents of account. We are often told that a composition was reached, and how much was paid to the Camera. Sometimes we are told that a composition was reached and how much was paid to the executors, heirs, or legatees of the person despoiled, or to the local church, or to the creditors of the person despoiled. We are normally given only hints, if that, of what principles might be reflected in the composition.

There is one surviving document of c. 1368 (Case no. 549), printed here in extenso (Appendix B.5), that reports what seems to be a formal legal argument before the chamberlain, Arnaldus Aubert, sitting in his judicial capacity. The argument is plausible. Bertrandus du Mazel,² the advocate for the cardinal Raymundus de Cantillac, the successor to the despoiled provost of Mainz, argues that the spoils of the predecessor belong to the successor. He cites canon law to support the notion that the goods are attached to the office of provost. He also argues that his client has reached a composition with the Camera for the goods.

We do not know whether the document was successful. It is the last document in the case. The list of provosts of Mainz (which dates from the eighteenth century) does not include Raymundus as one of them. The extensive list of Raymundus' benefices in both English and German Wikipedia does not include the provostship of Mainz among them, though it does include the provostship of Bremen.

That Raymundus probably did not obtain the provostship of Mainz does not undercut the legal interest of the arguments made on his behalf when he thought that he had obtained it. There seems little doubt that his opponent was not the Camera. Little time is spent on the argument that Raymundus had purchased (emit) the goods from the Camera; that he did seems to be conceded. One would certainly like to know what the price was and how it was calculated. We might speculate that the price was the debts that the predecessor was thought to have owed to the Holy See, but the document does not tell us that. One does not spend time in a legal argument arguing about what is conceded. The opponents to whom the argument is addressed seem to be the executors of the predecessor. They seem to be arguing that by custom the predecessor's goods belong to them, and the thrust of the counter-argument is that if such a custom exists, it is invalid. It cannot overcome the general law of the church that the goods of an office-holder are attached to his office and that the successor in office succeeds to the goods.

² Bertrandus du Mazel appears in a number of the documents, always, except for here, as a papal collector. He does, however, seem to have been a Lic.Decr. Glénisson, "Un agent de la Chambre apostolique" 90.

Aubert does not seem to have ruled on this argument. In all probability events overtook him when it became clear that Raymundus was not going to obtain the provostship of Mainz. What the document gives us, however, is a glimpse into the kinds of arguments that could be made in these kinds of cases.

It seems plausible to assume that many, if not most, of the compositions recorded in the documents were based on similar arguments that did not have to be presented formally to the chamberlain. We should also recall that the collectors were supposed to act as executors of the deceased and in the process to allow the heirs or executors of the deceased to obtain that property which canon law determined was personal to the holder of the benefice. The Camera did not simply grab what it could and devote all of it to papal purposes at Avignon. Some of the property went back to others who had a claim to it. Many of the documents tell us who those claimants were; some of them tell us who succeeded in getting some of the property and who did not succeed. Systematic search of local archives will almost certainly tell us more, at least in some cases.

This is not to say that everything in the process was done according to law in a modern sense. There was corruption. We should, however, distinguish among different kinds of corruption. There were those in this period who thought that the whole system was corrupt, in the sense that the papacy should not have the amount of wealth that it indubitably had. Wycliff thought that, but so did Alvaro Pais, who was a papal official and certainly no Wycliff.

There was probably also corruption in the bureaucracy itself. With very large amounts of goods and money moving around, some bureaucrats may have helped themselves to some of it or may have taken bribes not to take some of it for the papacy. Some also took property that could not be plausibly be argued was property of the deceased or took property that clearly was personal to the deceased under canon law. The accounting system was designed to forestall the most obvious examples of corruption, and the more important bureaucrats were themselves subject to spoliation when they died, and hence the papacy recovered some of what had been corruptly taken. It is perhaps significant that the complaints against the collectors were almost all that they were taking too much, not that they were personally corrupt. If the bureaucrats took too much for the Camera, one had to go to the Camera to get it back. That process obviously favored the Camera, but sometimes those who went to the Camera did get something back. There was also political pressure put on the papacy to moderate the system. The moderatio described in the Introduction seems to have been developed in response to such pressure. And, of course, the whole system was for the most part shut down in the whirlwind caused by the schism and its ultimate resolution.

The law that the Camera developed was a law that respected persons. If one insists that one cannot have law unless there is nothing but impersonal rules that are inexorably applied, then the law of the Camera was not law. That, however, is a high standard. Much of what passes for law both historically and today is not law if that standard is applied. One could take a broader view of what law is. If one did, one would include in a description of the law who succeeded or failed in the legal process.

If one accepts the notion that there is law here, there is much work to be done to figure out what that law was. That work can now be done because, thanks to the authors, we now know where to look. In addition to the difficult task of figuring out what law lay behind the compositions, one might take the authors' description of the processes of the Camera, which is written in the Introduction from the point of view of the history of administration, and write it from the point of view of how bureaucratic processes become law.

The Ames Foundation's contributions to the Index of Persons could not have been brought to fruition without the extraordinary efforts of both Shannon MacDonald and Devon Coleman. They both have a remarkable devotion to detail, and we are deeply grateful for their help. The undersigned bears ultimate responsibility for the errors, which certainly exist.

The undersigned wrote this foreword at the request of the Literary Director; the Foundation accepted this publication while he held her current position.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION (1988)

EARLIER versions of the study of papal spoils which introduces this volume appeared in unpublished dissertations for the Licentiate in Mediaeval Studies in the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies (1969) and for the Ph.D. in the University of Toronto (1973). The present version was largely finished at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, during spring term 1985, supported by a grant in aid from the American Philosophical Society. The original records of the individual spoils processes, preserved in the Vatican Archives, were indexed in my Records of the Papal Right of Spoil, 1316–1412 (Institut de recherche et d'histoire des textes: Bibliographies, colloques, travaux préparatoires; Paris: CNRS, 1974). A revised and expanded edition of that repertory, outfitted with fuller and more accurate indices, completes this volume.

Among the reviewers of Records when it first appeared, the one who offered the most valuable suggestions for its improvement was the late dean of French medieval historians, Charles Samaran, writing in the Journal des Savants (1976) and looking back three quarters of a century to his own first major contribution on the subject. This study is dedicated to his memory.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION (2020)

No sooner was The Right of Spoil in print in 1988 than previously unknown cases of spoils began to appear; this second edition has 1352 of them, against 1191 in the first edition. Helpful friends and reviewers favored the work with corrigenda and addenda. New studies enriched the prosopography of fourteenth-century Avignon. The authors joined in a research collaboration and then in marriage. Then, when Professor Charles Donahue brought the Ames Foundation to our attention, with its generous project of publishing legal records, even Latin records from the Middle Ages, it became clearly our duty, and promised to be our pleasure, to make a new edition. The authors have profited from the attentive readings and insights of such reviewers of the first edition as Michel Hayez, an invaluable guide to the papal court of Avignon, and Pierre Jugie, who carried on after his review to amplify this edition, notably with 41 new records from the pontificate of Innocent VI, and frequently to correct the text in its several drafts.

A short word about editorial practices: Two dates joined by a dash, as 1354–1362, represent the ends of a duration, e.g. one bishop's time in office. If one of the dates is unknown, it is simply left out. Two dates joined by x, as 1360 x 1363, are the points, at some unknown time between which, some event took place. Editorial conventions used in transcriptions from manuscript are given at the beginning of the Appendix to the Introduction.

Abbreviations

Bibliographical abbreviations are found in the Bibliography. We list here standard sigla for the sources of Roman and canon law, showing how they may be found in the Bibliography. The table also includes, in a single alphabet, abbreviations for the names of the apostolic chamberlains, religious orders, university degrees, and the archival classes in the Vatican Archives. An explanation of the function of the last-named can be found in the Introduction (Records of the Camera Apostolica). There is a fuller and more technical explanation in Dossier, p. xvii–xviii (online: <http://amesfoundation.law.harvard.edu/DossierFinal4.pdf>). Money, weights, and measures are in the next section.

Money

The values of the various moneys mentioned in the Cases can be understood with the help of two guides: Peter Spufford, Handbook of Medieval Exchange (London, 1986); and K. H. Schäfer “Wertvergleiche des Florentiner Goldguldens zu den Edelmetallen und den wichtigsten europäischen Gold-, Silber- und Scheidemünzen im 13. und 14. Jahrhundert,” in Die Ausgaben der apostolischen Kammer unter Johann XXII (Vatikanische Quellen 2) (Paderborn, 1912), 38*–131*.

Gold Coins

fl. Flor. = the gold florin of Firenze, 3.52 grams (less after 1350) of 24-karat gold, with St. John the Baptist on the obverse and the Florentine lily on the reverse (Schäfer 53–55*; Spufford 1–7). This was the major international standard of monetary value. Most frequently, the abbreviation fl. appears alone, and can be assumed to refer to this standard coin.

fl. Cam. = florin of the Camera, of the same weight and fineness as that of Firenze, and of the same pattern as well, until the pontificate of Gregory XI, when a seated pope and his name and number replaced the Florentine symbols. The Camera exchanged one such florin for 26 sous of Avignon and viceversa (Schäfer 58–59*; Spufford 123–125).

fl. sent. = florenus sententie: any florin of the Florentine standard, whether the name reflected a Florentine ordinance (Schäfer 53*) or a papal one (Spufford 125).

fl. curr. = florenus currens, a florin of less weight, struck by the papal mint and others after 1371, was worth 12 gros of Provence or 24 sous of Avignon (Spufford 125–126).

fl. Alaman. = florenus Alamannie or Rheingulden, worth a Florentine florin or more (Schäfer 55*; Spufford 240).

fl. Aragon = the florin of Aragon, worth about 3/4 fl. Flor. (Schäfer 57*)

fl. Fran. = florenus Francie (Spufford 172) = an écu, q.v.

fl. Ped. = florenus Pedimontis, a light florin of Piemonte, worth 23 sous of Avignon (Schäfer 61*; Spufford 131).

agni = agni auri or moutons, first minted by Philip IV of France, each worth slightly more than a florin (Schäfer 48*).

cygnum = a type of franc (1383).

ducat = the standard gold coin of Genova, 3.53 grams, or of Venice, 3.56 grams (Spufford 109–110 and 81–83; Schäfer 51*–52*).

duple = either doblas of Castile or gold doubles of France (Schäfer 52–53*).

écu, alias florenus Francie = the French cathedra or chaise à l'écu, commonly called écu or in Latin scutum, was the first French gold coin to appear in large quantities (Spufford 189).

fr. = franc, the royal coinage of France. The franc à cheval, struck from 1360 on, was 3.89 grams of 24-karat gold, originally equal in value to the silver pound of Tours. The franc à pied, which supplanted the cheval from 1365, weighed 3.82 grams and was still officially worth one pound Tours (Spufford 191). This was the coin called regalis auri in the accounts. The franc was worth more than the Cameral florin by 5 to 4.

georgius worth about 1 1/3 fl. (Schäfer *63).

leopardi (Schäfer 64*)

noble = from 1344 the principle English gold coin, a double florin valued at 6s. 8d. sterling (Schäfer 65*; Spufford 198) pabalhi = papiliones, French gold, worth about 1 1/3 fl. (Schäfer 66*).

reg. = regalis auri = fr., q.v.

Silver and Accounts

£ = liber, livre, lira, pound: not a coin, but a count of 240 silver pennies

s. = solidus, sou, soldo, shilling: not a coin, but a count of 12 silver pennies

d. = denarius, denier, diñero: a silver penny ob. = obolus: 1/2 d.

(Therefore, £99 19s. 11d. ob. = a sum 1/2 d. less than £100.)

A specific silver money is sometimes specified:

Barc. = Barcinonensis, silver of Barcelona (Schäfer 74–75*; Spufford 139) Bordeaux (Schäfer 82*; Spufford 207)

Fr. or Paris. = Parisius, French royal silver of Paris (Schäfer 106*; Spufford 167)

Genova (Schäfer 95; Spufford 106).

Jac. = Jaccenses, money of Aragon (Schäfer 94–95*)

Morlanorum = of Morlaix in Brittany (Schäfer 101*)

Pisan (Schäfer 108–109; Spufford 40–47).

Port. = of Portugal (Schäfer 110*; Spufford 162)

Coronat or Prov. = of Provence (Schäfer 110*; Spufford 117–118)

Tur. = Turonensis, French royal silver of Tours (Schäfer 119–125; Spufford 172)

Valois = a double penny Parisius (Schäfer 126; Spufford 171–172).

In accounting, sometimes a real gold coin takes the place of the theoretical £.

gros. = grossi, large silver pennies, gros. Tur. unless otherwise specified, valued at 15d. parve monete and exchanged at 12 gros to the florin; the type cum o rotunda was slightly more valuable than that cum o longa (Schäfer 122–125*).

maravedis of silver (Spufford 157–158).

regales = either reis of Portugal or dineros reales of Majorca.

unc., tar., gran.: In accounts of southern Italy, 1 uncia = 30 tareni = 600 grani (Spufford 59).

Weights and Measures

m. = mark, about 225 grams = 8 unc. = 160d.

modius or modium = muid, a measure of grain roughly $8 \frac{2}{3}$ litre.

molegium = ?sester, used only in Case no. 1119, where it seems to be a fraction of a modium of grain.

seam = salma, a horse-load, a measure of grain.

sextarius, starta (statera) = sester, classically one-sixth of a unit of measure or one-sixteenth of a modius, but seems to be used as a unit of either liquid or dry measure, the quantity of which probably varied regionally.

Troy weight of gold or silver: 24 grains = 1d. (pennyweight); 20d. = 1 ounce; 12 ounces = 1 pound = 373.24 grams.

INTRODUCTION: PAPAL SPOILS, 1316–1415

THE “bureaucracy” of a modern state literally means the direction and control of government by the officials, scribes, and bookkeepers who are responsible for its written records and accounts.¹ The bureaucracy of the Roman Church developed from its infancy in the pontificate of Innocent III, chiefly in the continuous series of standardized registers of letters in the papal Chancery. In the next century, which saw the popes established in Avignon, bureaucracy passed through a vigorous and expansive adolescence in the sophisticated systems of registry and bookkeeping that gave the Church an efficient fiscal department, the Apostolic Camera, to collect and dispense its enormous wealth.²

The popes of Avignon, beginning with the election of John XXII in 1316 and ending with the deposition of Benedict XIII by the Council of Constance in 1415, laid claim to the movable possessions of many hundreds of ecclesiastical persons, exercising a power that was later named jus spoli, the “right of spoil.”³

The authors have systematically searched the Vatican Archives for the fourteenth century and extracted every record that they found of this particular fiscal activity. It is possible that some cases were overlooked, but unlikely that there were many. The search was facilitated by the fact that most of the records are still kept in the fondi of the Archives which were created to receive them. An explanation of the origin and function of each class of documents can be found in chapter 4 of

² Weiss, Rechnungswesen und Buchhaltung 7–175, provides a history of the developing fiscal bureaucracy, pontificate by pontificate.

³ The phrase jus spoli to designate the right of the pope to reserve the goods of deceased clerics for his own use seems to appear for the first time at the end of the fifteenth century, although such goods themselves were frequently called spolia in the fourteenth-century records: Saint-Palais, Droit de dépouille 19.

this Introduction under Records of the Camera Apostolica.⁴

The heart of this book is the repertory of 1352 case histories, under the names of the clerics whose spoils were taken and to whom the records relate. We must clarify just what we mean by a “case.” That English word is a direct borrowing from the Latin casus, a fourth-declension masculine verbal noun which meant “a fall” and by extension “what befalls a person,” as in the expressions “a bad case of the flu,” or “the worst-case scenario.” But the English word “case” has also come to mean “cause,” which comes from the Latin causa, a first-declension feminine noun meaning “a judicial proceeding.” Both meanings apply here. Each of our numbered cases is a dossier of the legal and administrative cause or process by the Apostolic Camera to take the goods of one cleric. The cases are arranged in alphabetical order of the clerics’ forenames, and numbered in the same sequence. Within each numbered case dossier, brief summaries of the documents are arranged by their dates, with their archival citations, and each dossier is headed by an account of the cleric, his status and titles, and whatever we have found published about him.

But what was the nature of the papal right of spoil, and what was its foundation? Was it simply customary, or did it rest on a papal decretal or a conciliar constitution, or did it lie implicit in ecclesiastical tradition until the Camera Apostolica, the financial office of the papal government, gave it administrative expression? Those questions are explored in the sections of this introduction: first, the legal tradition of clerics’ property in general; second, as the papal Curia in particular was concerned; third, as fiscal practice shifted the law under Pope John XXII; fourth, the Camera’s practice of reserving and collecting spoils in the 14th century; fifth, the territorial extent and economic incidence of spoils; sixth, the weaknesses and the end of the papal right of spoil.

1. Definitions and Legal Tradition

Spolia

The subject of spoils comes to us surrounded by ancient social and legal constructions. The concrete ancient meaning of the Latin spolium is: the skin, hide, fleece, etc. (of an animal, as stripped off the body).⁵ Its transferred meanings, usually in the plural, are plundered armor, plunder in general, and portable belongings, especially clothing. The corresponding verb spoliare means to strip (often reflexively, like the Italian spogliarsi and the French se dépouiller) or to rob or plunder. The connotation of plunder or robbery is the one picked out by the Roman civil law's actio spoli, and this is the meaning usually found in the English derivatives "to despoil" and "spoils." In the usage ius spoli / droit de dépouille / Spolienrecht / derecho de expolio, the spolia are the movable goods (and the papal records refer many times to spolia sive bona mobilia) of which a person has been divested by death; and the French dépouille mortelle means, like the English "mortal remains," a corpse.

The ius spoli, then, is a right, title, or claim to succeed in possession of the movable goods of a deceased person. Now, the Middle Ages knew several kinds of customary rights, besides the right of the natural heir to inherit, which could have been called iura spoli, although, as far as we know, they were not so designated. After the execution of a capital sentence, for example, the felon's goods became the property of the court; by the English heriot a dead man's weapons reverted to the lord who had granted them, and later the name was applied to a customary burden on servile, not military, tenements: the landlord would claim by this title a deceased tenant's best animal.⁶

In general, regular clergy, that is, monks and friars, took vows not to own any property; others, called secular clerics, did hold property, subject to canonical controls, and their possessions were subject at various times to a number of claims which could reasonably be called rights of spoil.⁷

Clerics and their Goods

From the time of the Gregorian Reform, the principle was securely planted in the law that an ecclesiastical person could have no legitimate heir of his body, only an heir instituted by testament; and because it was further presumed that clerics derived their wealth from their ecclesiastical benefices, they had only limited, vague, and tenuous rights to devise goods by testament. Consequently, the death of a wealthy cleric could easily become the occasion of a legal clash. The churchman's possession lapsed with his death, and many claimants might compete to take it up, none of them with a right so clear and strong that the others could not contest it: a designated heir, such as a nephew; the executor of the testament, if there was a testament, acting for its beneficiaries; an ecclesiastical superior, i.e. bishop or abbot;⁸ a bishop's widowed church or an abbot's orphaned monastery, in the corporate person of its chapter or conventual community; the successor to the title, once he was elected or provided; a secular or ecclesiastical patron, who might by custom claim the fruits of the vacant office, and could argue that the spoils of the last incumbent were precisely the first fruits of the vacancy. It was in the context of such a confusion of legal and customary rights of succession that the popes of Avignon began to exercise a power of reservation over the goods left behind by certain clerics, especially prelates, and this power has been denominated the ius spoli.

Civil Law

The Judeo-Christian and the Roman conceptions of dedicated property, or sacra, were sufficiently harmonious to blend together in an imperial law against the alienation of church property. The Roman codes further set up the right of a church or of a monastery to succeed to the personal property of a priest, deacon, deaconess, subdeacon, or hermit who died intestate and without relatives capable of inheriting.⁹ A rather severe rule for the deathbed dispositions of bishops and other administrators of ecclesiastical corporations is Novellae 131.13:¹⁰

We forbid the holy bishops to transfer any goods, movable or immovable or self-moving, which may have come to them in any way after their consecration, to their own relatives or to any other persons. But they have license to spend from such goods for the redemption of captives, feeding the hungry, or other pious causes, or for the benefit of their own churches.

1. Whatever remains of such goods in their possession after death, we order it to become the property of the churches where they held their priestly office. We give them license to alienate, or to leave to whomever they please, only those things which they are proven to have possessed before their episcopal consecration; but after consecration, only those things which came to them from their families; and in case of intestacy, those may inherit who are within the fourth degree.

2. But all that we have said regarding the goods which come to the holy bishops after consecration we also intend to apply to the reverend orphans, almoners, nurses of the sick and of the aged, guest-masters and all other rectors of venerable houses, in regard to those things which come to them in the aforesaid way during the period of their administration.

3. But if any bishop or cleric or minister of whatever ecclesiastical rank, or any deaconess of the church, should die without a testament or legitimate successor, the succession belongs to the church in which they were established.

The law of the middle ages on the descent of clerics' goods cited these well-considered provisions and never departed far from them.

Canon Law

The Decreta of Gratian marshal an array of laws against the alienation of church property by its administrators in Causa 12, questions 1 and 2, although the right of a bishop to pass his own goods to heirs is mentioned in C.12 q.1 c.19. Question 5 takes up the problem of the succession post mortem to a bishops' goods. The first three canons of question 5, all excerpted from letters of Gregory the Great, declare that bishops may alienate freely anything which they had possessed before consecration, but that a bishop's testament should be prevented from diminishing the wealth of his church in any way. A canon from a council of Paris in 829 (C.12 q.5 c.4) allows a bishop the free disposition of his own goods, even if these came to him by inheritance after his consecration. Canon 7, from the provincial council of Mainz held at Trebur in 895, is a summary of the Novellae rule above, stating that the church succeeds a bishop ab intestato; the ordinary gloss later commented at this point that a bishop's church is his closest heir.¹¹

The decretal collections of the early thirteenth century dealt with this matter in the titles De peculio clericorum and De testamentis et ultimis voluntatibus. In his Summa decretalium Bernard of Pavia tried to settle the question by defining and distinguishing different types of peculium, disposable property, without treating bishops differently from other clerics:¹²

What is called peculium here is what is possessed by any cleric as his own. Usually, however, the term is used with regard to sons or slaves: it means what a father allows to a son or a master to his slave. . . . There are two types of peculium of clerics, one coming from the church, which can be called profectitium, the other coming from any other source, which can be called adventitium, for instance what comes to a cleric from his own craft, or any acquisition intended for his own person.¹³ All clerics are allowed to have peculium who (such as secular canons) have not renounced ownership; but not canons regular, monks and nuns

Let us see now what power clerics have over their peculium. They can certainly have and hold their profectitium peculium while they are living in their church, and they can make moderate donations from it . . . ; but when they move out of the church or die, they ought to leave it to that church, as below [in the canon Cum in officiis]. That the fruits of a church are to be held in common by its clerics . . . does not prevent individual peculium, because this rule applies only before each one's portion is assigned to him. But a cleric has power over his peculium adventitium, even the power of conferring it inter vivos or causa mortis, upon anyone he pleases – even King Arthur.

The canon Cum in officiis, mentioned by Bernard of Pavia in the passage just quoted, was a constitution of the Third Lateran Council (1179) published in the Compilatio prima and then as 3.26.7 in the Decretales of Gregory IX (1234). The Lateran Council was not innovating, merely confirming the traditional law against the alienation of church goods by clerics in their testaments.¹⁴

In the duty of charity we are under obligation first of all to those from whom we are conscious of having received a favor. Some clerics, however, when they have taken a great deal of property from their churches, presume to transfer property thus acquired to other uses. As this is prohibited by the ancient canons, we also prohibit it. With a desire, therefore, to protect the churches against loss, we command that such goods remain (remanere) in the possession of the churches, whether their incumbents died intestate or expressed a wish that these goods be transferred to others.

The foremost canonist of the fourteenth century, Giovanni d'Andrea, (c. 1270–1348) performed a thorough review of the law relating to the property of clerics and attached it as a comment to the word remanere in the passage just quoted. His Novella commentaria in Decretales can be taken as an authoritative statement of the applicable law in the Avignon period; in fact, the Apostolic Camera made use of this particular comment to justify certain testamentary provisions in a spoils case of 1375 (Case no. 656). Nowhere does cites Roffredus Beneventanus for a third category from the civil law, a peculium quasi castrense, “which comes from a public sort of work, such as defending clients in ecclesiastical cases, especially in the Roman Curia, according to him [Roffredus] (quod provenit ex opera quasi publica, puta patrocinando in ecclesiasticis causis et maxime in Romana curia secundum eum).” The canonists do not, however, normally deal with this third category. But see the citation of Nov. 123.19 in Appendix A.4, n. 6.

the commentator mention the taking of spoils, a telling omission. Here is the comment, in our translation:¹⁵

No one, whether prelate, cleric, or layman, can bequeath the goods, even the movables, of the church, as it says here and in the following canon, although they can, even from the deathbed, allot some things for the sake of alms and in repayment for services rendered to them by their relatives as well as by others. The same prohibition applies to the goods which they have purchased from their ecclesiastical incomes, unless the recipients should give to the church as much in compensation as they take, or unless, as some say, the practice obtains by custom. But if a cleric has goods of his own, he can bequeath them.

In case of intestacy, those things go to the heirs which the cleric had acquired before he became a cleric, and also those things which came to him afterward from gifts, hereditary succession, a craft, or teaching.

As to the goods which he acquired after becoming a cleric, it is to be presumed prima facie that he acquired them as gifts to the church or from church income. This is the presumption in the case of any cleric, but it is most strongly to be presumed in the case of prelates; and I should say that such is the status of this presumption that the sentence must be in favor of the church unless the opposite is proven or there is a contrary presumption.

Some say, perhaps not wrongly, that in the case of non-prelates an acquisition is assumed to be intended for the person, not for the church, when he has no office by which to acquire it in the name of the church; and so he seems to have acquired them in his own name if he has goods from other sources than the church, and hence his legitimate heir will licitly take those things after his death. But since in these matters it would be difficult, almost impossible, to prove by witnesses or documents just what or how much he purchased from the income of the church and how much from his own property, on that account a judge proceeds in this matter largely on the basis of presumptions; and since it sometimes happens that one presumption confounds another, the judge will be arbiter of how much is the cleric's patrimony and just what things are from church income, and likewise whether anything is profit from a craft or teaching, and so on.

But in making his computation, the judge should always first deduct the cleric's expenditures for food and clothing from the church's account, for he who serves the altar ought to live by the altar.

Furthermore, since a prelate ought to separate his goods from those of the church, and ought to do everything always with the counsel of his clergy, there is a strong presumption against him if he does not; and often, because of his own fault, his oath to the church can be held against him, especially where an extensive and obvious fault of a prelate is discovered.

Also, the judge should first remove all vain and indulgent expenditures of a cleric's goods; he will approve only those expenses out of the church's wealth which were made toward its own support and that of the poor, for the redemption of captives, and for hospitality or other pious causes.

We do not believe that either party, the church or the heir, is in a better position for proof, in this case, by being in possession, as if the burden of proof thus fell upon the other; for the presumption is always in favor of the church, unless the heir of the deceased cleric shall have proven that the deceased owned a particular thing before he became a cleric, or that it came to him for his private use.

The judge arrives at proof by truth or by presumption, and in this case he acts according to what is said of a wife: what she acquires during the marriage she is presumed to have acquired from the goods of her husband. The analogy, however, is not perfect in all ways, for what a wife acquires by her own work, her husband acquires, but a cleric, even a prelate, acquires for himself, not for the church.

But if a cleric has many churches, his goods are to be divided among those churches by an equitable distribution.

And if a cleric has no heir within the seventh degree, his church succeeds.

The question has been asked: Who succeeds to the goods of one who dies intestate? I answer in accordance with what has already been said, that in the goods of the church, he has no heir but his successor, and so the church will take possession of them. The heir will take possession of other things which certainly belonged to the testator. And the church will take possession of the things that are doubtful, because the presumption is in favor of the church.

Giovanni d'Andrea makes it clear by his silence on the subject that spoils is simply not the business of canon law.

2. Papal Authority and Clerical Testaments

The general tendency of canon law in its maturity, as we find it expounded by Giovanni d'Andrea, was to protect the orderly succession, by the church and by the heirs, each according to their rights, to the various goods left by beneficed clerics when they died. The law recognized no other normal right of succession. To reinforce that legal tradition in its defense of those rights against unjust usurpations, Boniface VIII and Clement V had issued decretals, Praesenti and Frequens respectively, against spoliation. Another aid to the law of orderly succession to clerics' goods was the papal privilege embodied in the testamentary license.

The exposition of the law on clerical property in this second section does not explain or justify any papal right of spoil, much less the massive reservations and collections made by the popes of Avignon. In fact, canon law does not sanction the papal reservation of spoils, nor even refer to it. Consequently, the historical explanations which have been devised for the papal ius spoli have almost unanimously (and we think quite correctly) accounted for it in terms of some such supralegal principle as eminent domain.

Praesenti

The decretal Praesenti (1298) of Boniface VIII¹⁶ was concerned with spoliations that so impoverished a benefice that it could not support its pastoral function. This decretal is of paramount importance among the legal circumstances of later spoliations by papal authority; it notes and condemns (in lesser patrons than the pope) the extension of a right of presentation to a benefice into a presumptive right of spoil on the goods of its deceased incumbent. When John XXII first began reserving to himself the spoils of his own beneficiaries, he evidently had Praesenti in mind, although his bulls of reservation did not name it. When Innocent VI found it necessary to moderate the activity of his collectors of spoils, he did so with rules suggested by Praesenti. And when the Council of Constance in 1417 forbade the popes to collect spoils, Praesenti was the authority explicitly cited. Here is the text in translation:

By the present edict we forbid bishops and their superiors, abbots, and all other prelates regular and secular, and all ecclesiastical persons to dare to reserve, occupy, or convert to their own uses in any way the goods of deceased rectors or ministers, goods which are found in their deaneries, parsonages, priories, or churches when these are vacant, or goods which are collected during the vacancy, even though such deaneries [etc.] may subject to them or belong to their collation, ordination, presentation, or custody. Such goods ought to be spent in ways useful to the churches, or faithfully preserved for the successors, unless it is determined that this right belongs to a superior by special privilege, or by a custom already legitimately prescribed, or for another reasonable cause.¹⁷

Furthermore, where anyone asserts that these goods belong to them by privilege or custom or other reasonable cause, only this part of the goods may be understood: the things which are found to remain after the debts, if any, are paid and those things are duly set aside which will be necessary to support the servants and ministers and other burdens until the next payment of dues.

Frequens

Clement V in the Council of Vienne (1311) used the constitution *Frequens*¹⁸ to list and make provisions against thirty gravamina of which various religious interests had complained. Like Praesenti, this decretal is directed at bishops and their superiors, and is concerned with the wasting of beneficial properties during vacancies. The twenty-second and twenty-third gravamina are of particular interest here; they are also strikingly similar to the protests against papal collections of spoils late in the fourteenth century:

The frequent and insistent complaint of certain religious persons echoes about us, that many bishops and their superiors, and other prelates of churches, disturb the peace of those religious in many ways as follows. . . .

Sometimes they deprive abbots, priors, and others of their benefices so that they can collect the fruits of those benefices in the first year, pretending that they have for a certain time the privilege of collecting the first year's fruits of vacant benefices.

Not content with these fruits, they unlawfully seize the horses, cattle, treasure and other goods of monasteries and vacant benefices, which should be reserved for the successors to come. . . .

But because there is one universal church of regulars and seculars, prelates and subjects, outside which no one at all is saved, and there is one Lord of them all, one faith and one baptism, it is fitting that those who are of one body should be of one will, and should be bound to each other like brothers by the bond of charity. Therefore it is fitting that prelates and others, exempt and non-exempt, should be content with their own rights, and no one should invade another's to their injury or damage. And so we strictly command all prelates, by the edict of this present sanction, entirely to cease, and to make their subjects cease, those abuses, and to treat with charitable care all religious men, exempt and privileged or not, mendicants or not, and inviolably to observe their rights and privileges.

¹⁷ Alia causa rationabili was the justification for spoils later adduced in the papal commissions: see the end of this section 2.

¹⁸ Promulgated by John XXII in 1317:

The law embodied in Praesenti and Frequens continued valid in the fourteenth century. Following a petition by the Dominican procurator general in 1369, for example, the chamberlain ordered the Hospitalers of Rhodes to hand back to the Order the goods of the late Catalan Dominican Joannes Bernardi, which they had illegally collected.¹⁹ But those decretals did not restrict the popes' own collections of spoils.

Licentia testandi

The general canon law left the distribution of a deceased cleric's movable goods still problematic. In order to apply the rules for peculium, it was necessary to determine whether the particular goods at issue had come from the income of church property or from elsewhere, but by the nature of the case, this question only arose when the best witness of fact was dead. Giovanni d'Andrea in his Novella commentaria was compelled, as we have seen, to balance the presumptions which a judge would have to use in lieu of good testimony or documents. One way to prevent the problem from arising post mortem was to allow the cleric to make a testament of his goods under a special papal privilege, laying on his own conscience the duty of dividing his ecclesiastical from his patrimonial and other peculiar wealth. In this way, the cleric's personal knowledge of the facts and his own equitable skill would be combined with the authority of the Apostolic See to defend his dispositions after his death, and it could be hoped that the legitimate interests would be served without litigation. This privilege, the licentia testandi or facultas testandi, was used with increasing frequency beginning with the pontificate of Innocent III, if not earlier.²⁰

The flow of testamentary licenses, moderate in the thirteenth century, became a flood in the pontificate of John XXII (1316–1334). For the whole preceding century, between 1209 and 1314, in the papal registers that have been calendared by Potthast, the École française de Rome, and the Benedictines of Montecassino, there are about 320 testamentary licenses; the Chancery of John XXII, in the eighteen years of his pontificate, issued at least 400. The Chancery used a few different formulary letters for the testamentary license, but they all granted substantially the same privilege with the same guidelines for its use. In 1367 Urban V directed his cardinal vice-chancellor Pierre de

Monteruc to have the Chancery issue the license routinely to any prelate who requested it, without the formalities of a petition to the pope.²¹

A typical testamentary license of the Avignon period is transcribed in Appendix B.1. It begins with an arenga on the instability of human life, then goes on to concede to the cleric (usually an abbot or bishop or higher) full and free faculty to dispose of his own goods for alms and funeral expenses, and to remunerate “moderately” those who had served him, after he had divided his own wealth from that of the church. The presumption in the text is that a testament will be drawn up only after it is licensed, and Benedict XII insisted that testaments could not be licensed retroactively.²² Finally, the letter of license counseled the testator to be generous to the churches from which he had acquired his wealth.²³

Some testaments of clerics were protected by the power of the Camera. Jean Roger, who died as archbishop of Narbonne in September 1391, was the nephew of Clement VI and the brother of Gregory XI. The chamberlain François de Conzié warned all holders of the late archbishop’s goods to surrender them to his universal heir, another brother, Guillaume Roger, count of Beaufort.²⁴

But the testamentary license usually did not afford its holder complete protection from the reservation and collection of spoils. Rather the contrary. The pope was the final judge of his own privileges, and through the fourteenth century the gatherers of prelates’ spoils held commissions as papal judge-executors to probate those wills. Those collectors decided on the validity of testamentary bequests, and they collected the remainders for the Apostolic Camera.

Eminent Domain

Late in the sixteenth century, in the wake of the council of Trent, the Roman apologist Guglielmo Rodano undertook to justify in legal theory the papal right of spoil, by then much attenuated. Rodano could find no canonical text that explicitly warranted it, but only the principle, implied by law and long practice, that the pope is the supreme dispensator and administrator of the whole church’s goods.²⁵ If this were not so, he argued, the pope could not grant the first fruits of vacancies, nor reserve them to himself, nor grant testamentary licenses. For the pope's right to give such licenses, Rodano was compelled to cite Thomas Aquinas, and that theologian had a more severely restrictive notion of a bishop's relation to church property than the law supported:²⁶

Bishops absolutely cannot have property. [If they claim a patrimony] they claim it not as their own, but as due to the church. The canon²⁷ says that after a bishop is ordained he should restore to the altar at which he is anointed whatever he has been able to acquire. He absolutely cannot make a testament, because only the administration of ecclesiastical things is committed to him, and that ends with death, when a testament's validity begins, as the Apostle says.²⁸

But if, by a grant of the pope, a bishop makes a testament, he is not to be understood as making the testament by his own right; rather, his administration should be understood as extended by apostolic authority, so that it may have validity after his death.

Rodano also mentioned testamentary licenses as a custom going back to Innocent III, and he cited the canonist Henricus de Segusio (Hostiensis) to the effect that cardinals could not make valid testaments without such licenses.²⁹

Louis Thomassin, writing early in the eighteenth century, without recourse to the Vatican Archives and finding no canonical justification for papal spoliation, had to rely on the evidence of the chronicles.³⁰ These misled him into the belief that the practice, a violation of Gallican liberties, began only in the 1380s, when the church had been split by the Great Western Schism and France weakened by the minority of Charles VI. He quoted the decretals Praesenti and Frequens against spoils, and wondered "how so many canons and so many decretals could permit a practice of simony?"³¹ A good question, which we will try to answer in the last part of this section 2.

Franz Ehrle wrote the monumental history of the papal library at Avignon, edition (1569) and a later one (1619). Rodano bishop of Nebbio (d. 1574), was also the author of a study of the alienation of ecclesiastical property in canon law.

a library which was nourished in part by the spoils of prelates. He diffidently offered one of the best legal and administrative explanations for the practice: the reservation of benefices to papal collation, so greatly extended by John XXII, implicitly reserved also the fruits of the last vacancy, including the spoils of the last incumbent:³²

It is most regrettable that the rationale of spoils, especially those which were reserved to the Apostolic Camera, has been treated so far by writers on canon law only lightly and meagerly. While I do not wish to put my sickle into someone else's harvest, I will just sketch a few points that seem to me probable and necessary to my treatment. I should think that the custom of reserving to the Apostolic Camera the spoils of those who died in the Curia either began or expanded along with the reservation of the benefices of those prelates.

Charles Samaran seems at first to have interpreted the collection of spoils as a sort of profitable penalty for prelates' irregularities: intestacy, non-pious, or excessive bequests, or their deaths in the Curia or at least when they were absent from their sees or monasteries.³³ In his study of the Camera at Avignon with Guillaume Mollat, spoils are seen to be linked with the increase in papal reservation of benefices.³⁴ In his later studies, Guillaume Mollat was satisfied with a theory of implicit eminent domain. He cited with approval the legal conclusion of his student Saint-Palais d'Aussac, and both argued in equity, that the pope had the better right to the goods of clerics in cases where laymen could usurp their spoils.³⁵ William Lunt, thinking along the same lines as Franz Ehrle, assumed that the deceased clerics whose spoils were reserved to the Camera had received their benefices by papal collation,³⁶ and this was in fact usually the case.

The Avignonese popes' right of spoil stood legally upon a local custom of the papal court, long-standing and unopposed, which was vastly expanded in the fourteenth century by the administrative power of the Camera Apostolica in response to its own needs and opportunities. But this was no mere exercise of eminent domain by superior force; there was a serious theoretical background in the canonical literature.

Plenitudo potestatis in Theory and Practice

The canonist Hostiensis,³⁷ in his Lectura on certain crucial decretals, had developed the phrase plenitudo potestatis, “fullness of power,” from a vague gesture of deference to papal authority into a real legal instrument of that authority. Beginning about 1230, theologians had used the phrase potestas absoluta as an expression of the divine omnipotence defined in the first article of the Creed. Applying his principle that the pope’s authority was divine, Hostiensis equated the divine potestas absoluta and the pope’s plenitudo potestatis.³⁸

In his Lectura on the decretal Proposuit of Innocent III, Hostiensis spoke for the pope in a bold paraphrase of his radical doctrine: “We are bound by no law; rather, we are placed above all laws and councils.”³⁹ And from the expression supra omnia iura, Hostiensis drew the conclusion that the pope, “whatever he pleases to do or say, cannot be accused or condemned by any man”;⁴⁰ and furthermore that “he has over his subjects such fullness of power that whatever he commands by that power must be obeyed.”⁴¹ In his Lectura on Magnae devotionis (X 3.34.7) Hostiensis recognized one restriction or condition: when the pope acts or speaks beyond the law or even against the law, it is permitted, but unless there is “sufficient cause,” it is not decent or becoming to him.⁴²

It may fairly be objected that the principle of plenitudo potestatis, since it could cover any fiscal outrage, explains nothing. But John A. Watt illuminated the mode of operation of the plenitudo potestatis, and his account sheds light on the ius spoli as an instance of it. Watt was especially concerned with papal collations and how they interfered with canonical elections, but his explanation applies equally well to the papal invasion of canonical property rights.⁴³

⁴³ Watt, “Theory of Papal Monarchy” 277–278 (paragraphing ignored and footnotes omitted).

For if the function of the pope was to provide for the ‘communibus utilitatibus,’ it was necessary to postulate for him an unfettered discretionary power to decide how such provision should best be made. ‘Plenitudo potestatis omnia supplet.’ Papal letters illustrate this process in action in a number of ecclesiastical matters as a routine feature of thirteenth-century papal government. When the language in which such exercises of the discretionary power [were expressed] was already established in the formulae of the papal chancery, canonists took note of it to clarify their understanding of the terminology. Hostiensis distinguished between the papal plenitudo officii and the papal plenitudo potestatis. The former applied when the pope exercised his authority in ways which canon law already prescribed for him, namely, in all circumstances canonists listed as ‘maiores causae’ reserved to the pope alone. The latter applied when the pope, by exercising his absolute power, acted outside the normal course of the law, either supra ius, because he had decided to set existing law aside (dispensation was the best example of this) or because existing law was inadequate for the particular circumstances in question. Plenitudo potestatis thus stood for a theory of prerogative, in that sense of the word which sees its essence as an indefinite power to act out of the ordinary course of the law.

Watt’s model applies very neatly to the reservation of spoils, considered as an exercise of papal prerogative. The decretal Praesenti, quoted in section 2, forbids the collection of clerics’ spoils except where this is justified by approved custom, seu alia de causa rationabili, and this is the key phrase by which the development of ius spoli beyond the law can be traced. The Chancery of Boniface VIII was using the unspecified “reasonable cause” in place of a canonical justification as early as 3 February 1296.⁴⁴ A papal bull of that date erected the new diocese of Pamiers in the territory of Toulouse; such a division of a diocese was a maior causa, reserved to the pope alone, and the letter began Dudum nobis rationabili causa. This is the first example that we have discovered of an arenga that uses the phrase in relation to papal authority.⁴⁵ The same expression occurs later in the pontificate of Boniface VIII, in a letter appointing a bishop to the administration of his see before consecration (a papal dispensation),⁴⁶ and in three letters which ordered the confiscation of goods from the adherents of the Colonna cardinals who had been condemned as schismatics.⁴⁷ Benedict XI, on 3 May 1304, reserved to himself the provision of the metropolitan see of Aix with a bull beginning Ex certis causis et

⁴⁵ The phrase has a long history in canonical language in general. For example, 3 Lateran (1179) c. 4 (= X 3.39.6) allowed prelates to ask for aid from the faithful for necessities, si manifesta ac rationabilis causa extiterit. For the rhetorical character of the arenga, see Fichtenau, Arenga.

rationabilibus.⁴⁸ The phrase occurs in several letters in the registers of Clement V, some restoring bishops to the administration of their churches and one ordering a cardinal legate to select and induct a bishop to the reserved see of Firenze, translating a bishop from elsewhere if necessary.⁴⁹ In each instance, plenitudo potestatis is acting ex certis causis.

John XXII was using his plenitudo potestatis, exercising a sovereign lordship over the church of Languedoc, when he split the enormous ecclesiastical province of Narbonne in two, separating Toulouse as a new metropolitan see with seven suffragan dioceses created out of its own original territory. He erected new dioceses by similar partitions in the provinces of Bordeaux, Albi, and Bourges. By the end of 1318 Languedoc had seventeen new dioceses,⁵⁰ and we should note that by the end of the century the spoils of 59 bishops of those new sees had been reserved.

3. Fiscal Innovations of Pope John XXII

Spoils before Avignon

When we trace backward the practice of spoliation for the benefit of the papal treasure, we find, not a general canonical warrant, but a narrowly confined usage: in 1262, Urban IV was able to claim that the goods of clerics who die intestate at the Apostolic See devolved by approved custom to the Roman Church.⁵¹ That custom had some equitable justifications that are easily perceived: that the Curia deserved some recompense for the costs of such a cleric's burial, and that if he had a curial post, his possessions came from that source of income.⁵² That customary practice continued through the Avignon period. Of all those despoiled in our Repertory of Cases, 216 (16%) had offices in the Curia as their major source of income, or they died in the Curia.⁵³

Province of Bordeaux: Sarlat partitioned from Périgueux, Tulle from Limoges, Condom from Agen, Luçon and Maillezais from Poitiers (in 1648 the diocese of Maillezais was enlarged and the See transferred to La Rochelle);

Province of Albi: Vabres separated from Ro-

Province of Narbonne: Saint-Pons and Alet partitioned from Narbonne; Province of Bourges: Saint-Flour partitioned from Clermont.

⁵¹ Urban IV, Registres 20 (18 Mar 1262), quoted by Mollat, "À propos du droit de dépouille" 316 n. 3.

⁵² This may have been the rationale of Urban V in his viva voce edict (Montefiascone, Aug 1368) forbidding the curial notaries to make testaments at all: VQ 6:35.

As the financial burdens of the papacy became heavier, there were suggestions that the custom of spoils should be extended beyond the Curia. According to Matthew Paris, Innocent IV laid claim in 1246 to the spoils of all clerics who died intestate in England and commanded the mendicant orders to collect them. This “unheard-of statute” was prompted by recent events: three English archdeacons had died very rich but intestate, and great wealth had been transferred from their churches to the royal treasure by regalian right. Henry III, says the chronicler, forbade these novel collections.⁵⁴

A new crusade was in the air on the eve of the Council of Vienne (1311–1312) and at least two of its programmatists, Pierre Dubois and Ramon Llull, suggested that the anticipated expenses of the expedition should be met by despoiling the higher clergy, whose wealth they regarded as scandalously great. Pierre Dubois recommended to Edward II of England that one half of the goods of all cardinals and prelates and the whole property of clerics who died intestate should be collected as a subsidy for the duration of the crusade.⁵⁵ The Catalan philosopher Ramon Llull, in his seventies, offered some crochety proposals to the Council of Vienne: that the resources of the churches should be mobilized for the crusade by a confiscatory tax on pluralities, by allowing bishops to raise armed companies at their own expense, and by collecting the plate, jewelry, and clothing of prelates when they died.⁵⁶

In fact, within five years after the Council of Vienne, John XXII did begin reserving to himself the spoils of bishops who died, even at home in their sees, even with testaments licensed and duly drawn up. Thus he was invading the proprietary interests which canon law had been at pains to protect. He was acting above the law, by his plenitudo potestatis.

spoils. Favier, Finances pontificales 253, assumed that the chaplains of honor were curial officers or papal familiars; but many were mendicant friars who acted as confessors in the polyglot Penitentiary. In at least one instance, that of Jacques Querauld chaplain of Céret (Elne), who died in the Curia in 1398, money was collected as fruit of the reserved vacancy, not as spoils: Coll. 160, 123r.

Hugues Gérard and Arnaud Pascal

The pattern for hundreds of later reservations of spoils was set at the very beginning of the pontificate of John XXII by the condemnations of Hugues Gérard, former bishop of Cahors, and Arnaud Pascal, former canon of Saintes.⁵⁷ Gérard was condemned for leading a conspiracy to kill the pope and his nephew Arnaud de la Vie by poisons and sorcery with baptized wax dolls. He was deposed from the bishopric of Cahors before 9 April 1317, tried and found guilty, and on 27 August was summoned to hear his sentence: he was degraded and released to the secular arm, the marshal of the Roman Curia, to be burned. He had secured a testamentary license from Clement V – two licenses, in fact – which proved irrelevant in the disposition of his goods.⁵⁸ His considerable library, some 90 books, was gathered by a commissioner, Pierre Danrocha; 55 were sold for a total of £414, 7s. of Tours. His Bible was donated to the Carthusian abbey of Bonpas (Avignon).⁵⁹ Much later, other commissioners collected debts that had been due to the condemned man, one for £360 of Tours, one for 21 florins.⁶⁰ Arnaud Pascal was condemned to prison for life as a partner in the conspiracy. When he died early in 1320 a dozen of his books were taken in by the commissioner Guillaume de la Roche; their disposition remains unknown.⁶¹

Marsiglio and Alvaro Pais Observe Abuses

Because it was under John XXII that testamentary licenses became commonplace and spoils began to be reserved and brought in to the Apostolic Camera, one critical contemporary observer, the political philosopher Marsiglio of Padua, linked the two exercises of papal power in a single condemnation:⁶²

And add to these another sprout from that same root: that the Roman bishop, out of this plenitudo potestatis, has forbidden the holders of ecclesiastical benefices anywhere to make testaments without his license; and darentur ad passagium dum viveret. Et etiam quod prelatus habeat certos scutiferos et equitaturas, licet temperate ad evitandum vanam gloriam et etiam malum exemplum. [544rb] Et quod prelato mortuo vasa eius argentea et etiam omnia iocalia, vestes et alia darentur ad passagium.

Et hiis adice novum germen iam dictae radiceis, quod Romanus episcopus ex hac plenitudine potestatis beneficium ecclesiasticum obtinentibus ubique locorum absque sui licentia interdixit condere testaments, et intestatorum (simpliciter aut sic) ad suam sedem immediate decrevit bona devolvi et debere deferri.

he has decreed that the goods of the intestates (whether really intestate or merely unlicensed) devolve to his own See and should immediately be brought there.

What can have been Marsiglio's actual experience of the pope's reservation and collection of spoils? Some 35 cases had begun with deaths before the publication of Defensor pacis on 24 June 1324.⁶³ Sixteen of those cases lay in the south of France or in Provence and six more in Iberia, all outside Marsiglio's sphere of activity, though rumors could surely have reached him. Somewhat more pertinent cases included the bishop of Arras in Flanders who died in 1320 and was said to have exceeded his licentia testandi (Case no. 193) and the Franciscan bishop of Tréguier in Bretagne (Case no. 813) who died in 1323, also possessed of a license. We know of no testamentary license in any of the five Italian cases, and the earliest three of these may have been known to Marsiglio: the bishops of Firenze and Spoleto (Case no. 60 and No. 1113) and the archbishop of Napoli (Case no. 639). But especially to the point is the Franciscan archbishop of Cosenza in Calabria, Pietro Buccaplanola, who died in 1319 (Case no. 1017). The first document in that dossier, a papal letter of 4 June 1320, was probably the source of Marsiglio's indignation on the practice of spoils. The letter ordered the rector of Benevento to inquire whether the late archbishop had a license to make a will, and if he had not, to take his movable goods from the executors. The archbishop's books were taken as spoils, and the Franciscan Order's resentment at losing these may well have carried the news to Marsiglio.

As we hope to have shown, plenitudo potestatis is the most apt legal justification that can be advanced for the papal right of spoil; but for the rest, Marsiglio was reacting to incomplete information. Papal spoliation was not decreed, nor was it universally imposed. On the other hand, where it was active, it struck intestate clerics and those who had made wills, with or without papal license.

The Franciscan canonist Alvaro Pais served as penitentiary in the Curia of John XXII. His florid treatise De statu et planctu Ecclesie is a sort of universal confessors' manual of sins and their cures. When he finished his book in 1332 he was rewarded with the titular see of Korone in Achaia, and then the real if poor bishopric of Silves in the Algarve. In his treatise de statu Alvaro declared the reason and the rational limits of the pope's plenitudo potestatis: as vicar of Christ, the pope has all the governing powers over the faithful that he needs for the function of his office, which is the welfare of the Church and the saving of souls.⁶⁴ But in chapter 2.7 of the Planctus, Alvaro expressed his horror at the great and growing fiscality of the Curia at Avignon.⁶⁵

They all come from Saba⁶⁶ (meaning the eastern lands, source of the best gold) carrying gold to the Roman Curia and carrying back lead. The gold given for that lead weighs more than the lead, for frequently fifty, seventy, or a hundred gold florins are paid for one leaden bull. But gold is given for lead so that more gold may be made from the lead. What someone buys, he is ready to sell to others, and to commit simony. . . .

Literally: I often entered the Camera of the chamberlain of the lord pope, and I always saw there money-changers and tables full of gold, and clerics counting and weighing the florins. May Christ the poor man once again, and soon, throw those tables over and out of the Church, never to return.

Chapter 2.14 of the Planctus raises the obvious question, whether the pope can commit simony, and Alvaro answers with Thomas Aquinas:⁶⁷

Yes, a pope can commit the sin of simony just as any other man can. And a sin in any person is graver, the greater the position he holds. Although the things of the Church are the pope's as principal dispensator, they are not his as lord and possessor. And so, if he should receive money for any spiritual thing from the income of any church, he would not be free of the sin of simony.

But John XXII and his successors at Avignon showed no sign that they considered their fiscal policies sinful in that or any other way.

The Camera and the Chamberlains

The fiscal administration of the papacy was revolutionized and brought to a high level of efficiency in the first pontificate of the Avignon period. A former minister of state himself, chancellor to Charles II of Anjou, king of Naples and count of Provence, Jacques Duèse, the future John XXII, chose his own entourage of administrators wisely when he was bishop of Fréjus, then of Avignon, then cardinal.⁶⁸ Two of those expert and loyal servants are important in this study. Adémar Ameil was clavarius (cellarer or treasurer) of Fréjus before 1307 and then of Avignon when Jacques Duèse became bishop there. Ameil used his own books of accounts from Fréjus as models for his systematic accounting at Avignon and then in the Apostolic See.⁶⁹ Jacques Duèse was elected as Pope John XXII on 7 August 1316, and five days later Adémar Ameil and Gasbert de Laval, another associate of the Avignon episcopal court, were appointed papal co-treasurers; Ameil continued in the office of treasurer until his death in 1333 (Case no. 1). Pope John recast the constitution of the Curia on 18 September 1319 when he appointed Gasbert de Laval to the see of Marseille and made him apostolic chamberlain, an office that was from that time on entirely distinct from that of the cardinal chamberlain.⁷⁰ The latter continued to be responsible for receiving and distributing the cardinals' shares of the common services that prelates paid for their appointments, while Laval was in effect the pope's minister of finance, his principal minister. By 1323 Laval's success in office earned him promotion to archbishop of Arles, and Adémar Ameil succeeded him as bishop of Marseille.

Thereafter, the chamberlain was by custom an archbishop and the treasurer was a bishop or abbot, and that difference of rank marked their relative authority. The chamberlain appointed the treasurer and received his oath of office, then received the treasurer's monthly and annual reports of the Treasury's receipts and expenses. When the chamberlain was away from Avignon and the Treasury, he usually delegated the direction of the collectors to the treasurer. For example, Arnaud Aubert, in Rome with the pope in 1368, instructed the treasurer Gaucelme de Deux in the spoils business of Guido Scettem archbishop of Genova (Case no. 446).

The chamberlain was appointed by the pope and reported only to the pope. The electoral constitution Ubi periculum maius of 1274, confirmed by Ne

⁷⁰ See Kirsch, Finanzverwaltung des Kardinalkollegiums 45–46, for the administrative function of the cardinal-chamberlains.

Romani of Clement V,⁷¹ provided that the office of chamberlain did not lapse with the death of the pope; this was to secure the property of the Church and the maintenance of the daily almonry for the poor, sede vacante. Consequently, each pontificate after John XXII's began with an experienced chamberlain already in office. The eight popes had just five chamberlains at Avignon; Gasbert de Laval, in fact, served the first three popes.

The expansive fiscal system of Avignon brought an increasing number of legal questions to the Curia. Rather than burden the existing Audience of the Camera Apostolica and that of the Apostolic Palace (the Rota) with these essentially administrative matters, Clement VI gave judicial commissions to his chamberlain (still Gasbert de Laval) and his co-treasurers. In 1342 he gave them authority to take up any case that arose from the activity of the collectors, and to judge and determine such cases by summary procedure.⁷² In 1344 he empowered the same officers to judge all complaints brought to the Curia against the collectors.⁷³

Gasbert de Laval died on 3 January 1347 and that very day Étienne Cambarou was appointed to succeed him by a papal letter that breezily commissioned him to do “those things, all and each, which belong to the aforesaid office.”⁷⁴ Nothing more specific was needed at the time because Cambarou had been trained in Laval's fiscal policies and practices, and he continued them with attentive vigor. Cambarou died on 15 March 1361 and was immediately succeeded as chamberlain by Arnaud Aubert, the nephew of the reigning pope Innocent VI. Arnaud Aubert and his successors Pierre de Cros (chamberlain 1371–1383) and François de Conzié (chamberlain 1383–1409) needed greater judicial powers, more explicitly detailed. After seven months in office, on 25 October 1361, Aubert obtained from his uncle a detailed judicial commission, Apostolice Camere per quam incumbentibus, that delegated to him all the apostolic powers necessary for his office. In fact, that commission was doubled on 6 December by Apostolice Camere per quam Sancte, a letter granting essentially the same powers in more and different words.⁷⁵

Why did Aubert receive two different letters of commission, and why did his successor de Cros also take both those letters, given that the two texts convey essentially the same powers? The answer seems to lie in a commonplace clause, found in both versions, which insists that the decisions of the chamberlain cannot be reversed “by apostolic letters which do not make a full, express, and verbatim mention of this warrant.” The device of two commissions provides a bureaucratic hedge against a formidable potential adversary, one who could get, or who could forge, a papal exemption from the chamberlain’s jurisdiction. Such a papal letter, to be effective, would have to incorporate a verbatim recitation of the chamberlain’s commission. But whichever text of Apostolice Camere might appear in such a privilege, the chamberlain could repel the objection by claiming to be acting under a different commission. In short, it was legitimate authority defended by chicanery.

Clement VII of Avignon did not perform the same trick, but gave François de Conzié only Apostolice Camere per quam Sancte, with two procedural paragraphs added, on 24 December 1383.⁷⁶

The written commission of the chamberlain, Apostolice Camere, begins with an arenga in which the pope premises that the rights and business of the Camera Apostolica are not sufficiently understood by other judges. The chamberlain is therefore empowered to take judicial cognizance of all questions, controversies, causes, and lawsuits, present and future, spiritual, ecclesiastical, and temporal, civil and criminal, those which would have come to the Camera by custom and those which, according to the chamberlain’s free decision, concern the Camera directly or indirectly. All persons ecclesiastical and secular, all chapters, colleges, convents, monasteries, and orders, exempt or not, must come to his court when cited (summoned) even if the causes would not customarily be heard at the Apostolic See. The chamberlain may begin such processes, hear them on appeal, or take them away from any other tribunal at any stage. He may delegate these powers. He is permitted to hear these causes “summarily, simply and plainly and without the clamor and formalities of judgement”: that is, he may himself determine what is due process, free of the traditional rules. His decisions, whether they be revocations of excommunication, suspension, or interdict, releases, orders, declarations, mandates, decrees, warnings, executory orders, or sentences, are not subject to appeal.

Chamberlains died rich, and their own spoils were important: Gasbert de Laval (Case no. 374 and 375); Étienne Cambarou (Case no. 1294); and Arnaud Aubert (Case no. 70). Pierre de Cros was a cardinal when he died, and so his goods were regarded as exempt from reservation; but his successor François de Conzié took the plate and jewels of de Cros as security for a loan of more than 9000 florins. Repayment of the loan was never made by the Camera or demanded by the executors.⁷⁷ François de Conzié himself died after the papal right of spoil had fallen out of use, but we have a rich inventory of his valuable goods, listed in the quittance that he issued at Marseille to Hugues Costin, treasurer of Narbonne, for the delivery of the goods by Henri de Saconnex canon of Lyon.⁷⁸

Ex debito and Execrabilis

Within a month of the election of John XXII, the University of Paris sent him a supplication roll of new graduates in all faculties, asking that they be provided suitable benefices. That roll is lost, but the first papal letters granting those Paris petitions are dated 13 November 1316.⁷⁹ So began the political economy of the papacy at Avignon, rooted in the regular revenues of thousands of benefices high and low throughout Latin Christendom.

John XXII centralized the beneficial system of the Latin Church. His program rested canonically on his decretals Ex debito (1316) and Execrabilis (1317). Ex debito reserved a large class of benefices to papal collation, and Execrabilis called for the holders of plural benefices to surrender all but one of them into that reserved class. The texts of those decretals can be found in Appendix A.8 and A.9.

Long practice, defined in legislation by Boniface VIII and Clement V, allowed the pope to reserve to himself the collation of any benefices that fell vacant by the death of the incumbent in the Roman Curia. Ex debito, adducing these precedents and the good of the church, reserved all such benefices ex causis rationabilibus to John XXII for his lifetime, and vastly extended the meaning of vacans apud apostolicam sedem. That category now included all benefices, major (episcopal and abbatial) and minor, which fell vacant in the Roman Curia for any reason, not only because of the death of the incumbent there, since the beginning of the pontificate of Clement V; and to all benefices held by cardinals and curial officials, whether these happened to die in the Curia or outside it.⁸⁰

On 19 November 1317, when Ex debito had been in force for about a year, the bull Execrabilis required those clerics who held plural benefices to surrender all but one of them into the pope's hands (exception was made for cardinals and the sons of kings).⁸¹ Those surrendered benefices, becoming va- cantia apud apostolicam sedem, would be reserved to papal collation under the terms of Ex debito. The measure echoes Ramon Llull's suggestion of six years earlier. No variant of the phrase certis ex causis rationabilibus occurs anywhere in the decretal, and yet the glossator of the Extravagantes of John XXII, Jesselinus de Cassanis († 1334/35) "took note" of the Chancery's language, as John Watt leads us to expect that he should, and in his gloss to the word reservamus he brings up plenitudo potestatis and "reasonable cause."⁸²

Given plenitudo potestatis, no one can say to the pope, "Lord, why are you doing this?"⁸³ But if you ask me what could be the "reasonable cause" why he will recall to himself the collation of such benefices, I can answer: that the burdensome care of the pontifical office requires many ministers; that while the harvest is great the laborers are few; and that he is required to remunerate those whom he must call to his aid, and also those who served his predecessors; and to his See needy clerics flood in from everywhere, whom he is obliged to provide for with fatherly foresight, lest the shame of beggary fall upon the clergy. And he has to show his favor to many great men of the world, especially to those who have endowed the church of God with many gifts, or whose ancestors have done so, and who are devoted to the church of God, by conferring benefices at their instance, so that they can be induced to come to the church's aid more quickly when necessary, and not hold themselves aloof. It was just and equitable to find a way by which the pope could appoint to many benefices, so that a just distribution could be made of them by him, especially since the measure of his giving is said to be immense. We may say that this is the reason why the vacant benefices can not regularly be conferred by anyone but himself.

To sum up: the letters of commission to collect spoils almost invariably justify the reservation by certis causis rationabilibus or causis legitimis, thus grounding the pope's claim to the spoils upon his plenitudo potestatis, and evading Praesenti's prohibition of spoils by a tacit appeal to the exception allowed by the words of that very decretal.

4. The Administration and Documentation of Spoils

The Camera Apostolica developed its methods in the collection of spoils beginning with the pontificate of John XXII, and those methods were established in efficient routines before the pontificate of Clement VI.⁸⁴

Reservation and Commission to Collect Spoils

In the early years, each case began with a reservation of spoils by the pope. This reservation was an act of his will, communicated orally to his chamberlain or implicitly assumed by the latter. There was usually no papal “bull of reservation” strictly speaking. The first written form of the reservation was a close or secret letter of commission by which a judge-executor was deputed to investigate and collect the spoils. An example, from the case of Arnaldus Cescomes archbishop of Tarragona (Case no. 76) is edited below in Appendix B.2.

From the pontificate of Clement VI (1342–1352) onward, the commissioner for spoils was usually the regional collector, whose duties and powers were extended to spoils by a particular letter of commission in each case. When the spoils of the clergy had been reserved in general, either regionally or universally, the ordinary collectors were given general commissions to investigate and gather them. General reservations were made by Benedict XII for Corsica and Sardinia,⁸⁵ and by Clement VI for Sicilia citra farum (the kingdom of Naples);⁸⁶ the latter reservation was repeated by Innocent VI.⁸⁷ Late in 1357 Innocent VI extended that reservation to the island of Sicilia and to Corsica and Sardinia, with a commission to the archbishop of Benevento and Reginaldus de Lupchaco, cantor of Auxerre. A letter of the same date commissioned the treasurer general in Lombardia and Androin de la Roche abbot of Cluny to gather spoils in Tuscany, Lombardy, and Slavonia.⁸⁸

On 11 December 1362, about a month after his consecration, Urban V gave his chamberlain Arnaud Aubert a sweeping viva voce general reservation of the spoils of all ecclesiastical persons secular and regular, wherever they happened to die; but he specifically exempted the “Gallican” and “Anglican” churches, and he added that the commissioners were to moderate their collections by certain rules. His successors Gregory XI and Clement VII began their pontificates with the same sweeping viva voce reservation, with modifications.⁸⁹

and Portugal by Urban V himself;⁹⁰ and by Gregory XI in the provinces of Bordeaux and Auch, Tarragona, Zaragoza, and Mallorca, in both Sicilies and Sardinia, and again in Castile, León, and Portugal.⁹¹ Clement VII directed Pierre de Tarascon, collector of Toulouse and Auch, to take the spoils of prelates and clerics who had goods and incomes distinct from their benefices.⁹² The chamberlain François de Conzié gave the commission for Castile and León to the veteran collector Fulco Perrier in 1387,⁹³ and in 1403 to two other commissioners.⁹⁴ In 1393 he armed one of the clerks of the Camera, Pierre de Jouy archdeacon of Vauxrenard (Mâcon) with a commission of summary justice and sent him out against several persons unnamed, clerical and lay, who were in possession of reserved spoils.⁹⁵ Such blanket reservations and commissions seem to have been intended to prevent the delays incidental to long-distance correspondence, delays during which goods could disappear if the collectors were not ready to secure them promptly when the owners died. The general reservation was liable to arouse the same resistance as had the individual reservations of the early period. Now that the collectors were acting on their own initiative, without any particular apostolic warrant in each case, resentment could be even sharper.

Instructions and Moderations

The letters of commission and subsequent letters of instruction sometimes specified precisely what spoils should be collected. Almost always, as in the letter edited in Appendix B.2, they made the commissioner a judge-executor with full papal jurisdiction for the case in hand, to be exercised summarily and without respect of persons, and to stand without appeal. It is no wonder that the right of spoil, driven as it was with such extraordinary powers, became a focus for the displeasure of the conciliarist reformers.

After about 1360, when the right of spoil had acquired the legal force and administrative facility of an old custom, it could be managed by executive orders that originated with the chamberlain and under his seal, rather than by papal letters. The letters of the chamberlains began to be registered in 1361.⁹⁶ And from that time, the chamberlain possessed in Apostolice Camere, and could delegate, the supreme legal authority for the summary processes of spoils.⁹⁷

The law which guaranteed the rights of the legitimate heirs and successors of despoiled clerics, outlined in section 2, seems to have guided the practice of the papal collectors of spoils without being explicitly enjoined upon them during the first half of the century.⁹⁸ The bereaved churches and relatives, and the officials of various regalian rights, nevertheless resisted the collections, passively or actively. The collectors sometimes abused their large powers. Thus, for example, clerics of Cahors brought charges against the collector Jean des Paumes:⁹⁹

When [Jean Desprès], the bishop of Castres of good memory, had ended his days [1348], and lord Jean [des Paumes] had taken the spoils of that lord bishop, among which was a certain precious vestment from the body of the lord bishop (who was nephew of my lord [Pierre Desprès, cardinal-bishop] of Palestrina) and the proctor of my lord of Palestrina requested that vestment from lord Jean, the same lord Jean swore by God's holy Gospels that he had lost that vestment, which was not true but the contrary, and that vestment was in his possession and still is. And lord Jean settled with the proctor for forty florins.

During the twenty-six years from the death of Clement VI to the Schism, the right of spoil, by then a custom in the strict canonical sense – a practice of forty years' prescription – became more commonplace, more a regular function of the regional collectors. Accustomed to using their extraordinary powers to intervene in the disposition of prelates' goods, they became high-handed, aroused resentment, and required regulation. The popes of this period, Innocent VI, Urban V, and Gregory XI, extended the general reservation of spoils, but restrained the operations of their fiscal officers so as not to vio-

On the same presumption Déprez in EFR, Clément VI closes France 2486, put the letter in 1346 because he mistakenly counted the years after the election-anniversary of Clement VI instead of his coronation-anniversary. But from internal and external evidence, it is a letter of Clement VII, issued 16 May 1382, simply repeating the moderatio established by Innocent VI. When the author called the mistake to the attention of the Archives staff, the chronological index to the IM was corrected, placing the letter in 1382.

late the spirit of canon law, which protected the right of a dying man to make pious donations for his soul's good, of an ecclesiastical successor to receive the land and buildings of the benefice in good repair and working condition and furnished with the necessary equipment, and of the heirs to recover the patrimonial goods.

Innocent VI, who continued his predecessor's general reservation of spoils in the kingdom of Naples, was compelled by the protests of the clergy there to impose limitations on the collectors in 1356. The cause of the local reaction was a major sweep of spoils, carried out between October 1351 and December 1354 by Pierre Dupin, nuncio in the Kingdom of Naples and archbishop of Benevento. His summary accounts of the campaign are found in Coll. 169, 45v–52v. Instead of attending to each case in person, the prelate-collector mobilized eight subcommissioners including his brother Jean Dupin, and gathered the spoils of three archbishops,¹⁰⁰ eight bishops,¹⁰¹ and six abbots.¹⁰² The reported net proceeds were more than 6300 florins, a large sum, considering that the region was just recovering its productivity after the Black Death and that there had already been an energetic harvest of spoils in 1343–1349, directed by Guillaume des Rosières.¹⁰⁴ The actual collections may have been even harsher. The Cameral records do not show what orders the subcommissioners were given, nor how they carried out their tasks. According to the complaints, however, they had been stripping the churches of the necessities of worship, and the landed properties of their tools and weapons of defense. The pope responded with the general restraining order Quamvis in cunctis.¹⁰⁴ This papal moderatio was open to interpretation according to the various interests in the Kingdom. Some said that it prohibited the collection of goods belonging to the church for worship, including whatever the late incumbent had left to it by his testament, up to a quarter of his goods; some held that there was no limit to the pious bequests of prelates, and that these should all be respected by the collectors. A third opinion, which Innocent VI himself approved in his determination of the debate, Quamquam fabricam militantis, said that the moderatio forbade the seizure of those goods which had been given to the service of the church's land or altar before the last illness of the incumbent and moderate pious bequests to which the collectors show themselves favorable.¹⁰⁵ The collectors, of course, remained the judges of their own activities; they were to be guided by the rules of Quamquam fabricam, but because their decisions were still not subject to appeal, the moderatio did not provide the Neapolitan clergy any defense at law against spoliation. The energetic Pierre Dupin made another sweep in 1357 to collect the spoils of four archbishops¹⁰⁶ and fifteen bishops.¹⁰⁷

At the beginning of his pontificate Urban V tried to regulate his Camera's collection of spoils, not by a decretal letter that might become grist for lawyers' mills, but by a careful instruction viva voce to his chamberlain Arnau Aubert. The first paragraph of Aubert's memorandum was the universal reservation of spoils. The rest of the instruction set territorial limits to that reservation and named the sorts of expenses from the decedent's wealth that were to be allowed before spoils were taken.¹⁰⁸

Our lord Pope Urban V reserved during his lifetime, when, if, and however much he should please, the use of all the movable goods and debts of all patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, abbots, deans, provosts, priors, rectors, and any other ecclesiastical persons,¹⁰⁹ secular and regular, of any order (even if they be of the Cistercian or another order who have only common property) who die anywhere, in the Roman Curia or elsewhere.

Likewise, he wished that from those goods should be excluded the books and other things which the deceased had acquired from his patrimony or by the work of his own hands or otherwise than from the church or benefice in which he presided, if he has a legitimate heir, not otherwise. Likewise our lord the pope wished that this reservation should not extend to the books, chalices, crosses, vestments, and endar 277, p. 177.

¹¹⁰ On 25 Jan 1365 Urban V ordered the chamberlain not to interfere with Benedictine abbots in their collection of the spoils of dependent priors, where this was customary: Samaran-Mollat 234–235; Aubert Calendar no. 298, p. 186. The same restraint was exercised under Gregory XI, witness De Cros Calendar nos. 117, 321, 333, 539; and by chamberlain François de Conzié under Clement VII: Coll. 362, 147v–148r and Coll. 369, 78v–79r.

other ornaments anciently reserved to the use of the church, either before the time of the dead man or by him during his lifetime, without fraud. He desired the same regarding the oxen and other animals and things likewise anciently reserved for agriculture or other uses of the benefice.¹¹¹

But the lord pope wished us not to use this reservation in regard to the Gallican and Anglican churches. Done in the presence of myself, Arnaldus, chamberlain, and of the lord archbishop of Vienne, on 11 December in the first year of his pontificate.

The chamberlains who served Gregory XI and Clement VII of Avignon noted their masters' confirmations of this general reservation, and it was mentioned, with its moderatio, in papal instructions to collectors.¹¹² The moderatio was essentially the same as Innocent VI's for Naples, and no novelty. It simply recognizes certain canonical rights which the reservation of spoils could not but affect adversely, while it tacitly buries others. The hereditary and testamentary rights of the decedent over his patrimonial goods and peculium and the profit that he had gained by his own work and skill were secured by the moderatio and respected in practice. For example, the collector was ordered to release to the heir of Jean de Lieux bishop of Poitiers (Case no. 769) some goods which were "bona aliqua patrimonialia uel de patrimonio . . . prouenientia, aut ex ipsius episcopi labore et industria antequam esset ad dictum episcopatum assumptus uel beneficia obtineret ecclesiastica acquisita."¹¹³ Similarly, the heritage of Guillaume Chevrier, cantor of Tours (Case no. 502) was allowed to stand against the reservation of spoils because "erat magnus aduocatus et multas habebat pensiones a multis nobiles partium illorum pro aduocatione sua."¹¹⁴ A similar claim was allowed for Pierre de Montrevel bishop of Lectoure (Case no. 1076) and for Giacomo Muto bishop of Spoleto (Case no. 671) "homo magne scientie, magni consilii et etiam magne industrie." Pierre Brengas, commissioned to collect the spoils of Raymond de Laval, canon of Rodez and abbreviator of papal letters, considered the mere existence of a licentia testandi reason enough to take nothing.¹¹⁵

On the other hand, the right of clerics to make pious bequests to their own churches was not mentioned in the moderatio, and a few years later Urban V explicitly closed that loophole, permitting the chamberlain to collect spoils even when prelates had so devised their goods. Urban V recognized that there were some bequests that exceeded the requirements of piety, and he instructed his chamberlain Arnaud Aubert that those could be abrogated or reduced “prout sibi placeret.”¹¹⁶ An outrageous example came in 1369, when the chamberlain was with the pope in Italy, in the testament of Jean de Garrigue, precentor of Béziers, canon and collector of Narbonne (Case no. 747). In his nuncupative testament Garrigue dispensed purses totaling 6030 florins, but the testament was not licensed and the florins were either imaginary or already the property of the Camera. The treasurer Gaucelme de Deux simply ignored Garrigue’s will and ordered the collection of his spoils.¹¹⁷ Bishop Giovanni de Luna (Case no. 771) left a precious crozier of crystal and silver-gilt to his church of Catania, and to make certain that it would be protected (as it should be) by the moderatio from the collection of his spoils or those of a successor, he made a petition to Urban V to that effect. The petition was granted in an instruction to his successor Marziale, who was also the collector of his spoils.¹¹⁸

Procedure and Records of a Commissioner

The collector or special commissioner would begin his work by publishing his letters, often by having them read in the chapter of the cathedral, monastery, or collegiate church concerned. He would cite witnesses to appear before him with information about the movables owned by the late cleric and the debts owed to him, and would seal his house or houses. He would then make an inventory of the goods, room by room and item by item, frequently employing a notary to record his search, and local experts, such as stationers and silversmiths, to estimate the value of precious pieces. He would hear and record depositions from servants and relatives and gather the written records of the property: wills and codicils, inventories, and the documents which had to do with loans to or from the deceased or with the purchase, sale, donation, and pawn of goods. Local feeling was sometimes gravely offended by the intrusions of the papal commissioner. In 1371 Pierre Evrard abbot of S. Vincent de Besançon was killed in a riot when he came to take the spoils of the archbishop Aimo de Villersexel (Case no. 10).¹¹⁹

The commissioner would sequester the cash, goods, and such valuable paper as notes receivable. Frequently he would offer the goods for sale, trying to get the estimated value from the general public or from persons close to the household. When the local market for precious commodities such as books, worked gold and silver, rings, gems, and vestments was depressed or uncertain, these had to be shipped to the Camera rather than sold.¹²⁰ The grain, wine, livestock, and domestic furniture, when these were considered spoils, were usually left to the heirs, executors, or successors, or were shared among them in return for a cash composition or a note of promise (obligatio) to pay a composition; such a settlement had to be approved by the Camera.

All these acts, with their gross proceeds, would be entered under recepta in the commissioner's account book. He would pay for the funeral and its incidental alms and the servants' wages, and if there was a licentia testandi he would allot to the executors of the testament the bequests in cash or in kind which were considered legitimate. All these items, with the commissioner's expenses for the whole process – travel and lodging for himself and his servants and mounts, fees to the special masters, and freight for the remaining goods to Avignon – were entered and summed up as expensa. Under the heading assignationes, the collector recorded his payments to the treasury or, at the order of the chamberlain, to others.

Returning to the papal court, the commissioner would turn over the goods and cash which he had received to the treasury, securing a receipt or quit-tancia, sometimes in great detail. The quittances would sometimes also be registered as solutiones in the registers of the papal treasurer, which were gathered in the Vatican Archives series Obligationes et Solutiones. If the collector had taken a debtor's bond for a composition, this would be registered there as an obligatio.¹²¹

Now the collector was ready to sort his papers, finish his formal account book, and submit it to the Cameral council (the chamberlain, treasurer, auditor and clerks) for audit. Sometimes he would deliver to the Camera the documents that he had gathered on the scene, in the original or in notarial copies, and these are to be found among the Instrumenta miscellanea of the Vatican Archives. Often they would be copied into the collectors' regular account books which survive in the Archives as Collectoriae volumes.

One of the clerks of the Camera would examine the accounts and write a brief summary for the rapid perusal of the chamberlain, who would note his approval of the sums and balances with the siglum APP[robatum], or his concern about irregularities with a curt doce: “explain.” A particularly unsatisfied clerk marked up the report of Jean de Rivesaltes, collector of Elne, on the spoils of his predecessor Nicolas Gilles (Case no. 935):¹²²

Recepi de bonis dicti Nicholay, facta inter heredes dicti Nicholay sive exequutores sui ultimi testamenti et me, amicabili avinentia sive compositione de consensu gentium Camere prelibate, £165. Doce de conventione et consensu gentium Camere.

Item recepi de dictis bonis 8 cornutas sive barrals fustreas. Ad idem ut in proximo: quid factum est de cornutis?

Item recepi 8 volumina librorum iuris et theologie modici valoris. Declara quales libri erant et quid de illis factum est.

When a collector had appeared in person before the council and answered for his activity, his explanations, supported by documents, would be noted with a docuit. The collectors’ account books are the major and eponymous contents of the series Collectoriae.

The papal treasurer submitted monthly reports of his receipts, and these were cumulated semi-annually as introitus in the Introitus et Exitus series. The introitus reports occasionally included detailed lists of spoils received. The spoils of clerics who died in the Curia, usually collected by the seal-bearer of the auditor of the Camera, would be reported here.¹²³

Litigation

We find spoils being purchased, along with the fruits of the vacant benefice, without any question of the Camera’s right to sell them, in a series of legal Allegationes drafted by the former collector of Portugal, Bertrand du Mazel, on behalf of Raymond de Canilhac, the cardinal-bishop of Palestrina (1361–1373).¹²⁴ Intervening in litigation in the Auditio Camerae, Mazel argued that the movable goods of the late provost of Mainz, Wilhelm Pinchon (Case no. 549) as well as the fruits of the vacancy, should not have gone to the executors of his testament but rather to the cardinal, because the pope had reserved the office of provost to his own provision and then provided it to the cardinal. The movables considered accessory to the benefice had thus been reserved to the Camera, and the cardinal had bought them from the Camera for a fixed composition. Mazel cited canon- and civil-law sources and the commentators Guido de Baysio, Innocent IV, and Giovanni d'Andrea (on Praesenti) against the executors' claim. He assumed that the pope had the authority to reserve and sell the spoils, and he summed up (saving the better advice of the legal experts) in favor of the cardinal. These diffident allegationes show how completely the papal prerogative, as administered at Avignon, had perverted the original intention of the law. A pluralist absentee, a cardinal in favor in the Curia (he was the general supervisor of the gabelles and of the defensive works of Avignon while the Curia was in Italy)¹²⁵ could claim the benefice by papal collation, and the fruits of the vacancy and the last incumbent's spoils by purchase, all without regard to the needs of the church of Mainz, to serve which the benefice originally existed.

5. The Incidence and Extent of the Right of Spoil

Persons Affected

Until Gregory XI returned to Italy from Avignon in 1378, the fiscal system operated with a high level of cooperation from the clergy affected, who were increasingly dependent upon papal collations for their advancement.¹²⁶ Protests, even against such a new tax as spoils, were few and isolated until the conciliarist movement for reform grew strong late in the fourteenth century. Prerogative, therefore, seldom had to explain itself. When a legal justification for spoils did exist in a particular case, for example when the spoliand died in the Curia, or intestate, or in debt to the Camera, or without having rendered final account of some fiscal responsibility, this circumstance would be mentioned in the documents of the case, but not as a necessary condition for the reservation of the spoils. Having, as a prerogative function, neither conditions nor explicit legal warrant, papal spoils in the Avignon period also had no firm limits, and if we are to define the institution we must infer a definition from its individual instances. In this study, a broad definition has been applied: spoils are the movable goods and wealth of any cleric or religious person reserved to the Camera Apostolica for any reason. It has been suggested that some cases belong not to the ius spoli but to a seigniorial or other fiscal right.¹²⁷ This may be true, but the procedure that appears in the documents is that of spoils, and we can construct no abstract legal definition of the ius spoli to supersede the functional or descriptive one in such a way as to exclude them.

On 16 August 1316, only nine days after the election of John XXII, and twenty days before his coronation, Bertrand Malsang abbot of Montmajour died (Case no. 226). His nephews plundered the monastery's treasure and granaries, and other neighbors followed suit. The Camera intervened vigorously to protect the papal reservation of the abbacy and the spoils against such a scandalous abuse.¹²⁸ On 5 December of the same year Arnaldus de Puyana bishop of Pamplona died at Toulouse (Case no. 85). The records do not indicate whether he had made a will, but he had a license to do so from Clement V.¹²⁹ Papal letters of 11 March 1317 and 5 September 1318 called for his goods to be surrendered to the safekeeping of the Franciscan convent of Toulouse.¹³⁰ These were the first two cases that we know of spoils from outside the Curia reserved to papal disposition.

From the very beginning, the consequences for the clergy were clear to Marsiglio of Padua: he saw plenitudo potestatis in the time of John XXII creating a monster, an ecclesiastical body in which all the organs were directly attached to the head rather than arranged in their proper hierarchical constitution; concretely, he pointed to fiscal, beneficial, and disciplinary connections, created by spoils and annates, papal collations and immunities.¹³¹

About 150 of the despoiled were clerics who died in the Curia, with no note of any benefice that they held outside it. These were mostly lower-level curial officials like the famous visionary scrivener of the Penitentiary Opicino de Canistris (Case no. 960). These probably derived most or all their property from their salaries and other curial opportunities, and in those cases the Curia itself is taken to be the source of the spoils. Some were proctors, that is, lawyers who practiced in the courts and offices of the Curia on behalf of outsiders. Seventy or so were or had been fiscal agents of the Camera, collectors, subcollectors, or provincial rectors or treasurers; their wealth can usually be presumed to include goods and money which they had collected in the course of their service to the Camera, although they usually had benefices as well, sometimes major ones. In our statistical analysis, the spoils of a collector are assumed to have come from his benefice, not from his collectory. The spoils of the collectors naturally included spoils of other clerics that they had received and not yet paid out at the order of the Camera.¹³² Directly and indirectly, it was the landed wealth of ecclesiastical benefices that bore the burden of the right of spoil.

In at least eight cases, a bishop was despoiled on the occasion, not of his death, but of his translation to another see. Gasbert de Laval, camerarius apostolicus, was despoiled a first time (Case no. 374) on his transfer from Arles to Narbonne in 1341; Jean de Neuchâtel (Case no. 789) when he passed from Nevers to Toul; and Peytavin de Montesquiou when he advanced from Montauban to Albi in 1339 (Case no. 1137). The goods of Angelo dei Ricasoli bishop of Sora were reserved when he was translated to Aversa in 1357 (Case no. 51). Jacques Fournier, translated from Pamiers to Mirepoix in 1326, had his goods reserved on that occasion (Case no. 665) but some of the items in this account were not paid until ten years later, when he received them himself as Pope Benedict XII. These prelates, like Marino del Giudice (Case no. 891) Arnau de Lordat (Case no. 82) and Roger d'Armagnac (Case no. 1249) no doubt stood deep in debt to the Camera for their past common services, and the Camera, quite likely with the consent of the debtors, was securing the arrears by way of spoils rather than by litigating obligations of debt. The procedure resembles a modern business receivership in bankruptcy. Similarly, in 1372, Gregory XI reserved the movable goods of Lambert von Born, lately bishop of Speyer and collector in Germany (Case no. 858) and commissioned special agents to collect them, probably because of accounts improperly rendered.¹³³ Where large sums, especially large debts to the Camera, were involved, the collectors were sometimes commissioned in anticipation of the owner's death, as in Cases No. 247, 276, 475, 532, 596, 611, 798, 961, 1046, 1191, and 1269; or in Case 891 in anticipation of a bishop's translation to another See.

Under John XXII, we find spoils confiscated after the condemnation for heresy of Eudes prior of S. Martin, Chartres (Case no. 953). In the sorcery and murder case of Hugues Géraud bishop of Cahors, however, we have only an inventory of books which were confiscated when the bishop was degraded and imprisoned for earlier crimes, not as spoils after he had been burned.¹³⁴ The defendant in a Cameral action for 16,000 ducats, Demetrios de Matafaris bishop of Knin in Dalmatia (Case no. 268) broke his arrest at Rome in 1368. A Cameral warrant for his capture, addressed to Doge Andrea Contarini and officials of the Veneto in January, seems to have been fruitless, and the few books and liturgical items that he had left behind at Rome were seized by the Camera in December.¹³⁵ powers carefully. Innocent VI intervened in the succession of Cardinal Hugues Roger, not to collect spoils reserved to the pope, but to arbitrate the interests of the Camera Apostolica and the Camera of the College of Cardinals. In the spring and summer of 1361 a second wave of bubonic plague struck, more deadly at Avignon than the Black Death of 1348. It is quite likely that the papal chamberlain Étienne Cambarou, who died in mid-March, was a victim. Arnaud Aubert, who succeeded Cambarou, had been in office less than three months when Guillaume Court, called the White Cardinal, chamberlain of the College of Cardinals since 1348, also died, on 12 June 1361. The major function of the cardinal-chamberlain, to collect and distribute the cardinals' shares of the common services which prelates paid for their papal provisions, was handed temporarily to Arnaud Aubert.¹³⁶ On 4 September Guillaume Court's successor was appointed: Cardinal Hugues Roger, called the cardinal of Tulle, brother of the late Clement VI and a rising star among the Limousins in the papal court.¹³⁷ In the conclave (22–26 September 1362) following the death of Innocent VI, Hugues Roger received 15 out of 20 votes on the first ballot, but he begged off before the election could be made public.¹³⁸ The burden of his duty as chamberlain of the College was itself more than he could discharge. When he died a year later an astonishing quantity of gold was found in his personal chest: 150,000 florins even after some disbursements had been made in execution of his testament.¹³⁹ This was an accumulation of the money paid in by prelates for their common services but not yet distributed to the College.

That chest of florins and the other wealth left by Hugues Roger were involved in a tangle of interests which required years of work to resolve. Those 150,000 florins comprised the shares of eight cardinals who had themselves died in 1361, 1362, and 1363. The pope had claimed for himself such cardinals' shares under such circumstances.¹⁴⁰ But interests of the College and of important Limousin families were involved here which could not be ignored: the late cardinals included three nephews of Clement VI (Bernard de la Tour, Raymond de Canilhac, and Pierre de Cros the elder) one nephew of Innocent VI (Audoin Aubert) a grand-nephew of John XXII (Jean de Caraman) and a papal vice-chancellor (Pierre Desprès). In May 1364 Arnaud Aubert was given the commission to distribute the trove of florins.¹⁴¹ Then Pierre de Cros, even before his appointment as papal chamberlain in April 1371, was put to work on a judicial committee with Hugues Faydit bishop of Orléans, and Guillaume de Lestrangle dean of Saintes and the pope's cubicularius. Their charge was to settle the claims by and against the executors of the testament of the late cardinal chamberlain, so that final payments could be made to the executors of the deceased cardinals.¹⁴²

Seven cardinals, as far as we know, were touched in their movable goods by papal reservations. The earliest, Andrea Ghini Malpigli (Case no. 40) who died in 1343, was treated like any other subject of spoils, and it is conceivable that his colleagues, anxious for their privileges, prevented Clement VI and his successors from touching their college again in this way.¹⁴³ But the spoils of Pierre d'Estaing (Case no. 1042) were reserved in 1380 against his enormous debts to the Camera for his administration of the Papal States as legate in Italy, an office from which he was recalled under a cloud.¹⁴⁴ Urban V had reserved the movable goods of Androin de la Roche, the cardinal of Cluny, whom he had recently recalled as legate in Italy, legally incapacitating him from alienating them during his life.¹⁴⁵ But la Roche apparently rendered a satisfactory account of his legation, and we see no indication that his spoils were gathered after his death, which occurred in the plague at Viterbo in 1369. The other four cases were exceptional. Arnaud Bernard de la Pérarède (Case no. 72) and Fortanerio Vassalli (Case no. 324) were not fully cardinals, the former having died three weeks before his creation and the other before entering the Curia to receive his red hat and title. Only those goods of Guillaume de la Jugie (Case no. 530) which he had left in the collectory of Hungary were reserved for papal collection, and he may have been the object of papal solicitude for his testament rather than spoliation. Agapito Colonna (Case no. 8) was one of twenty-five cardinals in the first creation by the Roman pope Urban VI in 1378; his goods at Lisbon were reserved forthwith by Clement VII of Avignon.

The elevation of a prelate to a patriarchal church was a high honor but not usually a profitable one. In eleven cases, the spoils of Latin patriarchs of Jerusalem, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Grado were reserved; but the patriarchs were “in administration,” that is, receiving the revenues, of eleven different bishoprics, and the spoils were collected from those.¹⁴⁶

Gross Incidence of Spoils: Territorial

The popes of Avignon and their chief ministers, the papal chamberlains, confronted a radical choice. Without the centralization of the beneficial system and a hard-headed fiscal policy to extract the maximum profit from it, even at the risk of weakening the hierarchical constitution of the church, their control of the papal states in Italy stood in danger of complete collapse. The reversal of losses there required the militant legations of the cardinals Bertrand du Pouget (1319–1334) and Gil Albornoz (1353–1367) backed to the limit of papal resources. The large building programs at Avignon to satisfy Benedict XII’s defensive requirements, and Clement VI’s desire “to live like a pope” also drank money, and until the Italian patrimony was recovered, a fiscal substitute had to be established by prerogative.

The prerogative of the pope in the matter of spoils was potentially in conflict with the regalian rights of other sovereigns. Those most cooperative with the papal collectors were the kings of France (where 472 of the cases occurred, 363 in Languedoc and 109 in the Gallican north);¹⁴⁷ the Angevin king and then the queen of Naples, or Sicilia citra Farum (223 cases, including 91 in the county of Provence and Forcalquier); the pope himself, as secular ruler of the papal states in central Italy and the Comtat Venaissin, and as lord of Avignon after 1348 (216 cases in total); and Aragon (102 cases, including 20 in the islands of Sardegna and Sicily). Castile and León were primarily affected in 56 cases, Portugal in 35, and the churches of northern Italy in 59. Other princes resisted. Even before the Statutes of Provisors (1351) and Praemunire (1353), the Anglican Church was exempt from papal spoliation (except for English beneficiaries who died in the Curia),¹⁴⁸ but the English lands in France were not (46 cases). Forty-eight cases occurred within the territory of the Empire, 18 of those in Savoie and 20 within the German Nation or Deutschland. It is noteworthy that until Ludwig of Bavaria died (11 October 1347) no spoils came to the Camera out of the German Nation; there was only a rather timid reservation there (Case no. 403) which lapsed without effect, and one parish priest of Worms who died in the Curia (Case no. 944).

¹⁴⁷ Not counting 4 cases in Flanders and 21 in Burgundy, which were only theoretically French subjects.

¹⁴⁸ Case no. 199 is an exception, but the subject was a papal nuncio. The subject of Case no. 620 probably died in the Curia, though that is not specifically stated.

Gross Incidence of Spoils: Chronological

In spite of protests like Marsiglio's and the weakness of the resistance, the papal prerogative marched on, guided by the chamberlain Gasbert de Laval. Before John XXII died, the Apostolic See was thriving on an income derived from a fiscal system that was centered in Languedoc rather than its old patrimonial base in central Italy. By means of services, annates, charitable subsidies, tenths, and Chancery taxes for the collation of benefices,¹⁴⁹ the Roman Church at Avignon tapped the landed wealth of churches and monasteries of all grades, through their living incumbents. The reservation to the Camera of spoils and vacancies did the same, after the incumbents died. Those two categories of reservations were eventually confused and combined in the accounts.¹⁵⁰

We have found 1,353 cases of the papal ius spoli in the following century (counting no. 82 as two cases) and these are documented in the Repertory which follows. The papal reservation of spoils was most vigorous in the time of the three Limousin popes Clement VI, Innocent VI, and Gregory XI, in part because their chamberlains were able to take advantage of the plague mortalities of 1348 (71 cases), 1361 (88 cases), and 1375 (43 cases). A single page of Introitus et Exitus for September of 1361 shows a veteran clerk of the Camera, Eblo de Miers, using summary powers – which must have been given him orally by the new chamberlain Arnaud Aubert – to collect financia, round cash settlements, for the spoils of fourteen clerics of all ranks who died in Curia of the pestilence.¹⁵¹

The cases are found to be distributed through the century on a roughly bell-shaped secular curve. Their frequency was steady during the pontificates of John XXII and Benedict XII (182 cases together, 13.5% of the total) as the Camera improved its methods and extended its reach.¹⁵²

We find that 270 cases (20%) belong to the time of Clement VI, and 308 (23%) to the slightly shorter pontificate of Innocent VI. The pontificates of Urban V and Gregory XI together account for 333 (24.5%). The frequency of the collections declined sharply from 1378 to 1409, as the Great Western Schism and then the Subtraction of Obedience by France reduced the area under tribute and the complaisance of the local clergy. Clement VII of Avignon reserved spoils in more cases (184) than his uncontested predecessor Gregory XI (173) but he reigned more than twice as long. There was a sharp decline of cases within the obedience of Benedict XIII of Avignon (76), only seven of those after 1408, within the shrinking court at Peñiscola.

¹⁴⁹ The various imposts are explained in Lunt, Papal Revenues 1:57–136; Renouard, Papauté à Avignon 101–103; and Mollat, Papes d'Avignon 530–543.

¹⁵⁰ The phrase spolium vacationis occurs in a letter of 31 Aug 1411 (RA 337, 497rv).

We have attributed the cases of spoils cui bono, that is, to the pope to whose Camera they were paid or owed. For example, the spoils of a cleric who died after the death of Clement VI are assigned to Innocent VI. Dividing the cases in each pontificate by its length in months, we can estimate the relative intensity of each pope's gathering of spoils.

John XXII: 115 cases in 220 months, 0.523 per month or 6.3 per year
 Benedict XII: 67 cases in 89 months, 0.756 per month or 9.1 per year
 Clement VI: 270 cases in 127 months, 2.120 per month or 25.4 per year
 Innocent VI: 308 cases in 117 months, 2.623 per month or 31.5 per year
 Urban V: 160 cases in 99 months, 1.613 per month or 19.4 per year
 Gregory XI: 173 cases in 87 months, 1.984 per month or 23.8 per year
 Clement VII: 184 cases in 198 months, 0.931 per month or 11.2 per year
 Benedict XIII: 76 cases in 233 months, 0.327 per month or 3.9 per year (average (1316–1414): 1353 cases in 1170 months, 1.157 or 13.88 per year)

Of the eight popes of Avignon, the three under whom spoils were taken most frequently were all Limousins by birth: Clement VI, Innocent VI, and Gregory XI. The next in frequency was Urban V, whose chamberlain was a Limousin, Arnaud Aubert. Those statistical facts help to explain the resentment of Italians against the papacy of that century, which reached its peak in 1378 with the cry of the Roman mob before and during the fateful conclave, "Death to the Limousins!"

Those eight popes of Avignon were served by six successive papal chamberlains, whose energy in the collection of spoils can be compared in a similar way.

Gasbert de Laval until 3 Jan 1347 oversaw 262 cases in 30 years and 5 months: 8.6 per year
 Étienne Cambarou until 15 Mar 1361 oversaw 392 cases in 14 years and 2 months: 27.6 per year
 Arnaud Aubert until 11 Jun 1371 oversaw 283 cases in 10 years and 3 months: 27.6 per year
 Pierre de Cros until 23 Dec 1383 oversaw 238 cases in 12 years and 6 months: 19.0 per year
 François de Conzié until 15 Jun 1409 oversaw 171 cases in 25 years: 6.7 per year
 Luis de Prades until 2 Feb 1414 oversaw 7 cases in 4 years and 8 months: 1.5 per year

6. Curbing the Right of Spoil

Cracks in the System

Opposition to the papal reservation of spoils became clamorous during the Great Western Schism, beginning in 1378. The chorus of protest convinced Louis Thomassin that the ius spoli was newly exercised by Clement VII of Avignon, taking advantage of new opportunities in France:¹⁵³

It was only the Schism of the Church, the minority of Charles VI, and the self-serving conduct of the prince regent that allowed the entry of this novelty into France. Into France, I say, because it was apparently here that the spoliations by the popes began, because it was closest and most subject to the popes of Avignon.

It is true enough that the burden on France was more keenly felt during the Schism. Clement VII and Benedict XIII of Avignon depended on a restricted base for their revenues, chiefly France and Languedoc, where the right of spoil had operated so vigorously for sixty-two years before the Schism. Furthermore, the papal treasure was practically in pawn to Louis duke of Anjou. The duke had lent Clement VII 35,000 francs to finance the return of the papal court to Avignon, adding that debt to the 94,000 francs still owing from Gregory XI's transfer to Italy. On 11 March 1382 Clement assigned to Louis of Anjou three years of receipts of the Camera in France and – what the duke especially wanted – the revenue of the gabelles of wine and salt in Avignon.¹⁵⁴

Because of these pressures the popes of the Avignon sect in the Schism could not so well afford to restrain their collectors as could their uncontested predecessors, and the rapacity of the collectors, accustomed for almost a generation to act on their own discretion, was allowed to grow. At the same time, the consensus of the French church was shifting, not toward the Roman obedience, but away from the Avignonese. The clergy were not inclined to cooperate with papal pretensions, especially the pretensions of a pope whose ability to reward their loyalty was diminishing. Stories about the extortionate collectors were retailed by Jean Petit:¹⁵⁵

¹⁵³ Thomassin, Ancienne et nouvelle discipline 7:185.

Ce ne fut donc que le schisme de l'Église, la minorité du roi Charles VI et la conduite intéressée du prince régent, qui donnèrent alors entrée à cette nouveauté dans la France. Je dis dans la France, parce que ce fut apparemment le lieu où les dépouilles de la part des papae commencèrent; parce qu'elle était et plus proche et plus soumise aux papes d'Avignon.

¹⁵⁴ Favier, "Galées de Louis d'Anjou" 137–138, citing his Finances pontificales 611–613.

¹⁵⁵ Ed. Valois, La France et le Grand Schisme 3:436 n. 2; quoted in Samaran-Mollat 53 and in Favier, "Temporels ecclésiastiques" 116–117:

Quant aux despoilles des mors, dit que s'aucun homme d'Esglise, prelat ou autre,

As for the spoliation of the dead, they say that if any churchman dies, prelate or otherwise, the pope will succeed to his goods and take away everything that is not nailed down to stone, wood, or iron. There is a story about a papal collector who took a door, which a prelate recently deceased had had made to put on his house, and because it was not yet hung, ordered it to be brought to him. Another one ordered that a dead priest be stripped who lay in the church for his funeral, clad in a chasuble; he said the chasuble was pretty, and took it away. Nothing like this was ever seen in France.

That door does not appear in any collector's accounts that we have seen, but the chasuble might be a remembrance of the scandalous collector Jean des Paumes and his rapacity in the year of the Black Death.

Such gossip does not tell the whole story of the impact of spoils on the French churches, as the late Jean Favier, the major explorer of Schism finances, warned. Favier considered the stories exaggerated, and he indicated examples of generous, even luxurious, allowances made by the collectors for the funerals of the despoiled. Furthermore, he argued, the spoils that were collected actually represented debts which the deceased prelates had owed for their services and other taxes, and consequently the Camera was only using a confiscatory receivership to recover what was due to the pope: "Common services or annates, tenths, subsidies, procurations: these sometimes formed considerable arrears, which the Apostolic Camera intended to recover first of all. We may ask if it was not the principal function of the seizure of spoils to assure that recovery."¹⁵⁶

Our answer is a definite "yes." But the Camera included in the debt of a deceased prelate the unpaid arrears of his predecessors' obligations in all those categories, and these accumulated in the Camera's records as one successor after another failed to meet them. Legitimate or not, equitable or not, spoils were a burden that the French church was ready to shed, with royal help if necessary. Jean Favier memorably summed up: "For the clergy, as for the lay world which it touched through the families of the deceased, the right of spoil was odious. For the papacy, it was neither substantial nor regular nor manageable. Maintaining the right of spoil had been a political blunder, and the trifling financial return made it worse.”¹⁵⁷ The chronicle attributed to Jean Juvénal des Ursins summarized the protests that came to the royal courts:¹⁵⁸

When a bishop died, you could see nothing on the landscape but collectors and subcollectors of the Apostolic Camera swarming in to take whatever the bishop had acquired in the way of movables, even though these things should really have belonged to the heirs, or at least to the testamentary executors; it was not even permitted to use these things for the most necessary repairs to their houses. Furthermore, they seized the temporalities of monasteries after the deaths of abbots, and their successors could not undertake the subsistence of their religious communities with the little that remained, and they had to sell or pawn the ornaments and silverware of their churches for a little money to save themselves from beggary.

French Secession

Charles VI consequently condemned the levy of spoils in a letter patent of 6 October 1385, whose argument was implicitly grounded on the canons and the moderatio:¹⁵⁹

When it befalls a bishop in our kingdom to depart from the light of day, the collectors and subcollectors of the supreme pontiff, in the provinces subject to them, by the authority of the supreme pontiff, seize the movable and immovable goods of such bishops, left behind at their death, even those things which they had acquired by their own industry, which things, furthermore, do not belong to those bishops and are not considered to belong to them, but rather to their heirs or executors; in such a case applying ment.

The same caution was urged in Hayez, “Review of Williman, Records of the Papal Right of Spoil” 211 and echoed in Meyer, “Review of Williman, Right of Spoil of the Popes [1st ed.]” 399–405.

¹⁵⁷ Favier, Finances pontificales 291.

Pour le clergé comme pour le monde laïc qu’il atteignait à travers les familles des défunts, le droit de dépouille était odieux. Pour la papauté il n’était ni substantiel, ni régulier, ni maniable. Ce faible intérêt financier aggrave encore l’erreur politique que fut son maintien.

¹⁵⁸ Histoire de Charles VI, as quoted in Thomassin, Ancienne et nouvelle discipline 7:185 and in Samaran-Mollat 53:

S’il mourait quelque évêque, on ne voyoit autre chose en campagne, que collecteurs ou sous-collecteurs de la Chambre Apostolique, pour se saisir de ce qu’ils avoient acquis en meubles, quoiqu’ils dussent vraisemblablement appartenir à leurs héritiers, ou en tout cas à leurs exécuteurs testamentaires; et il n’étoit pas même permis de les employer aux réparations les plus nécessaires de leurs maisons. Ils saisissoient encore la temporalité des monastères après la mort des abbés. Ceux qui succédoient, ne pouvoient subvenir à la subsistence de leurs religieux du peu qui leur restoit; et il falloit vendre, ou engager pour peu d’argent les ornemens et l’argenterie de leurs églises, pour se tirer de la mendicité.

¹⁵⁹ Pithou, Preuves des libertés de l’église gallicane 2:810 (ch. 22, no. 8), extract quoted in Thomassin, Ancienne et nouvelle discipline 7:186; Latin text: Appendix D.1.

none of these things to the repair or rebuilding of the structures and other patrimonial properties of those episcopal establishments, and also with no payment or satisfaction made by the collectors or subcollectors to the creditors of those bishops, but totally removing those goods from the heirs of bishops so dying (even though, the richer they are, the more honorably they may and should serve us in our wars and elsewhere, according to their state) and disinheriting them against law and custom, they cause us no small prejudice and trouble after the death of bishops in those churches.

The king prohibited those fiscal abuses and ordered his baillis and séné-schaux to sequester the goods of all clerics in order to protect the rights of the king and the heirs.¹⁶⁰

It remained unclear, however, whether the 1385 ordinance applied only in the Gallican Church, i.e. the north, or also in Languedoc; and whether it went beyond spoils to other operations of the papal fisc. The Camera sought by direct negotiation to get a clarification of the ordinance favorable to its interests. Pierre Gérard bishop of Le Puy (1385–1390) sat as the pope's proctor in the negotiations, and a memorandum was made of the two positions.¹⁶¹ It was a rather shocking reversal of traditional roles. The king was standing for the good of the churches, which were falling into ruin for want of the most elementary repairs, while the necessary funds were being carried off as the spoils of bishop after bishop. Furthermore, the noble houses to which the bishops belonged, and which needed their patrimonial wealth to support their military and other services to the crown, saw the Camera as a thieving enemy. The royal proctors could see no justification at all for collecting the spoils of abbots who owned no private property, and yet the monastic property which they administered was being plundered twice with each succession, in spoils and then in services due from the new abbot. In reply, Gérard argued custom; and he asked the king to rectify the damage done by his ordinance in its encouragement of disobedience by French prelates, not only in the matter of spoils but in other dues as well. The King's counsel offered to procure royal letters declaring that common services, both current and in arrears, and other customary dues, were not forbidden by the ordinance. The bishop then asked for recognition of the custom of spoils in Languedoc, where it had operated ever since the Curia came to Avignon, and the royal reply was that the ordinance of prohibition would not be executed in the south as long as the moderatio of spoils was also observed as a custom.

The consequences of the royal constitution of 1385 were immediate and striking. Between that date and July 1398, when Charles VI and the Gallican Church withdrew their obedience from Benedict XIII of Avignon, the spoils of only 14 clerics were reserved in the north, and five of those were papal collectors or subcollectors, while there were 48 reservations in Languedoc. Between the subtractio obedientie and March 1403, when Benedict slipped out of the besieged palace of Avignon, we find in Languedoc one case (180) that yielded £ 540 and three that were fruitless (237, 1037 and 1075); and in the north two cases (643 and 1097) where the Camera acted effectively as a collector of debts for the French crown.

But the Avignon chamberlain François de Conzié soldiered on with the help of a skeleton staff in the papal palace. When Conzié was abroad with the pope he had an able and ambitious lieutenant, Pierre de Foix bishop of Les-car.¹⁶² Working in familiar territory – the Curia itself, Languedoc, Provence, and Aragon – the Camera sought spoils in 30 cases. Elsewhere, we see symptoms of failure. There was one Breton rector (Case no. 1091) but the other northern action (Case no. 643) only strove to relieve the incumbent from the accumulated debts to the Camera of his predecessors, and nothing was taken. The only German case (No. 391) was of a canon of Metz who died in the Curia.

In 1403 François de Conzié signed the letters for a corrupt use of the dying system (Case no. 1321). Discovering that the Latin archbishop of Thíva, who also had been collector of the Latin province of Colossi or Rodos, had died on the Aegean island of Nisyros, a layman, Buffillo Brancacci, marshal of justice of the Curia, bought all the spoils to be found on Nisyros and Rodos for a composition of 600 florins, and the chamberlain gave him a full commission of summary justice to collect them. Buffillo was the brother of Cardinal Nicolò Brancacci (Avignon obedience) nephew of Rinaldo Brancacci (Roman obedience) and an agent of Florentine banks.¹⁶³

When the cardinals in the Council of Pisa, including both Brancacci, deposed the Roman and Avignonese popes, François de Conzié stayed on at Avignon, and like the faithful butler of a mansion under foreign occupation he served as chamberlain to the Pisan popes Alexander V and John XXIII. Luis de Prades acted as chamberlain to Benedict XIII in exile, and from 1409 to 1412 he intervened in five reservations in Iberia, with little profit (Case nos. 145, 362, 519, 672, and 745).

Pisa

Even as the Camera at Avignon pursued spoils between 1403 and 1408, the discontent of curialists and cardinals of both obediences, who would cooperate in the Council of Pisa, was already at work by 1406 to end the practice.

¹⁶³ Esch, Zeitalter und Menschenalter 165–168.

When Itier de Martreuil bishop of Poitiers (Case no. 643) died in 1403, his spoils were reserved in the usual way, in order to secure the arrears of debts for common and minute services, his own and those of his three immediate predecessors. The family and the successor Gérard de Montaigu protested that it was too much: 3295 florins, 6s. 6d. of arrears in addition to the fresh services of 2800 florins. The chamberlain François de Conzié took counsel at Savona with the cardinal chamberlain Amadeo Saluzzo. It was their joint duty to collect the common services in arrears, through reservation of spoils if necessary. They jointly declared that bishop Gérard was exonerated from those arrears; but they ordered the officiales and all other clergy of the dioceses concerned to compel payment from those predecessors who had been translated to other sees and were still living, and also from the holders of the goods of those deceased. All appeals were to be directed to the chamberlain's deputy, Pierre Adémar bishop of Maguelonne at Avignon where the records were kept.¹⁶⁴ At that moment, when the reservation of spoils was still the policy of the Avignon Curia, the two chamberlains were shifting the responsibility of collection to local clergy who could not, on account of the royal prohibition of 1385, perform it.

The cardinals of the Roman and the Avignonese sects who met in council at Pisa in March 1409 were strongly opposed to papal spoliation as one of the most blatant invasions of episcopal and national rights. On 27 July, immediately after his election by the Council, Alexander V renounced spoils as an unreasonable burden on the churches: "Our lord notified all, through the mouth of the archbishop of Pisa, that he did not intend in future to reserve the goods or spoils of prelates as in the past."¹⁶⁵

After Pisa, the reservation of a cleric's spoils was an exceptional and rare event. The chamberlain François de Conzié worked peacefully on in the papal palace of Avignon under the rules set by Alexander V and then John XXIII of Pisa, although he did not formally renounce Benedict XIII until the end of 1416. In 1413 de Conzié warned Jean Chrétien bishop of Mâcon, collector of Lyon and Vienne, that according to the ordinance of Alexander V in the Council of Pisa he should not take the spoils of Antonius de Nantusia prior of Cognac, chaplain of honor, unless an exception should be made by a special bull issued by John XXIII of Pisa.¹⁶⁶ However, all persons, religious and secular, who died intestate in Avignon or the adjacent church states, or whose testaments did not legitimately dispose of all their wealth, were still subject to reservation, as the chamberlain instructed Costantino di Pergola bishop-elect of Apt, collector of Aix, Arles, and Embrun.¹⁶⁷ The last spoils reserved were those of two officials of the Camera: Pierre Tilhin, collector of Toulouse (Case no. 1109) and in 1413 Jean Lavergne bishop of Lodève, the papal treasurer (Case no. 766). The chamberlain's action in each of those cases was to remove the hand of the Camera from the goods.

Constance

The chorus of voices against spoliation continued to swell, and it came to include Dietrich of Niem, clerk in the chanceries of eight successive popes,¹⁶⁸ whose avisamenta to the Council of Constance make a telling contrast to the petitio of Ramon Llull one century earlier. Llull had looked at the luxurious lives of his contemporary prelates and proposed collecting their spoils as part of a program of crusading discipline; Dietrich saw the enemy within the church and the luxury at the very top, while the papal collectors served their own interests with the unlimited powers vested in them by three simultaneous popes. He proposed eradicating the practice of collecting spoils, vacancies, services, and annates.¹⁶⁹

When the bishop of a cathedral church or the abbot of any monastery dies, in Italy and certain other places, immediately the collectors of first fruits of the Apostolic Camera take the moneys, clothing, books, jewels, houses, utensils, horses, cows, oxen and other animals, the grain: in short, all the movables and moving creatures; and also all the credits and rights and legal actions whatsoever, which had belonged to the deceased when he was alive, which they call "spoils," they sieze and extort to the very bottom and apply them to their own and the Camera's uses, although these things should in reason remain to those churches and monasteries, or at least be reserved for the successors. On this account, these churches and monasteries are greatly destroyed, and divine worship and regular observance in the monasteries is neglected, nor can the required works of charity be done in them. And on top of this, before provisions can be made to those vacant churches and monasteries, it is necessary for the candidates to strike a bargain with the officials of the Camera or their deputies for new large sums of money, and that they really pay these sums, even though on that account the churches and monasteries be nearly destroyed; and so what the worm does not eat, the locust consumes. The churches and monasteries are perceptibly declining in this way to a worse condition. Although this is an old observance, perhaps based on the apostolic plenitudo potestatis, still, because it is intolerably damaging to these churches and monasteries, it should definitely be abolished.

The topics of the argument against spoils had become commonplace by the time an anonymous French commentator (whose language and point of view are reminiscent of Honoré Bonet prior of Salon, who died about 1410) wryly offered fifty-eight theses for debate in the forthcoming Council. Three of them mention spoils.¹⁷⁰

Should not the pope be compelled to provide for one upright man as a visitor to reside on Rodos to examine and investigate those crossing over to the land of the infidels? There are many who under some pretense carry to them arms and other things forbidden by law, and what is worse, for a small profit they deny the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Should not the pope be compelled to provide for one holy man to visit the islands of the infidels to strengthen the hearts of believers and servants of God held there, and to the lands of the schismatics, just as they maintain a collector there to seize spoils? There seems to be no concern for the faith, only for the purse.¹⁷¹

Should the pope take the spoils of prelates and others who do not die in the Curia? In many places, out of these spoils, books could be copied, chalices, missals, vestments, and clothing for the poor could be bought and distributed, and churches repaired and roofed, all of which things are needed. Worse yet, the collectors do not pay off the servants of the deceased, but carry the spoils to their relatives, sons and daughters; and the pope has sometimes the smaller share in his purse and the greater load on his conscience.¹⁷² Alexander V of happy memory made at Pisa a very good and laudable provision in this matter which his successor refused to follow. Testimony should be heard from the men from Languedoc in France, from Lodève, and in many places in Provence.

Lodève may have been specified as an outstanding case because of its experience of five despoiled bishops, 1331–1375; but Lodève is in central southern Languedoc, not in Provence. The records that we have seen do not indicate that John XXIII returned to the practice that Alexander V had renounced of reserving spoils outside the Curia.

The reforming party had its day. The agenda of the University of Paris¹⁷³ were accepted by the national conciliar commissions and then adopted by the Council of Constance in its 39th plenary session on 9 October 1417:¹⁷⁴

Because the reservation, exaction, and reception by the pope of the procurations owed to ordinaries and lesser prelates by reason of visitation, and of the spoils of deceased prelates and other clerics, cause grave detriment to churches, monasteries and other benefices, and to ecclesiastical persons, we declare by the present edict that it is according to reason and helpful to the common good that such reservations by the pope, and exactions or receipts by collectors and others deputed by apostolic authority, are absolutely not to be done or attempted henceforth; that instead, these procurations of any prelates whatsoever, even cardinals, and the spoils or goods of the pope's own familiars, officials, or of any clerics at all who die within the Roman Curia or outside at any time and anywhere, belong freely to, and should be received by, those to whom otherwise, the afore-said reservations, mandates, and exactions being ended, they belong and should pertain. And we forbid also the exaction of spoils by lesser prelates and others, as being beyond and against the form of the common law, that is, the constitution of Boniface VIII which begins Praesenti, issued in this matter especially, which is to remain in full force.

The Council of Constance marked the end, for all practical purposes, of the exercise of the papal ius spoli. Lesser prelates continued to exert their own iura spoli. As late as 1683, Abbé Jean-Baptiste Thiers, the rebellious curé of Champrond (Chartres), published a carefully researched and reasoned essay against the pretensions of the archdeacon of Chartres in his Traité de la dépouille des cures.¹⁷⁵

Nov. 131.13, ed. Schöll-Kroll, 661–662. Introduction, p. 4–5.

Interdicimus autem sanctissimis episcopis res mobiles aut immobiles seseque moventes, quaecumque post episcopatum ad eos quoquo modo pervenerint, in proprios cognatos aut in alias quascumque transferre personas. In captivorum vero redemptionem et egentium pabula et alias pias causas aut pro utilitate propriae ecclesiae ex his expendere licentiam habeant.

1. Et quicquid ex huiusmodi rebus post obitum eorum in ipsorum facultate remanserit, iubemus hoc ad proprietatem ecclesiarum quarum sacerdotium habuerunt competere. In illis enim solummodo rebus licentiam eis alienandi aut relinquendi quibus voluerint damus, quas ante episcopatum probantur habuisse, post episcopatum vero quae ex genere sibi coniuncto ad eos devolutae sunt, quibus ab intestato usque ad quartum gradum succedere potuerunt.

2. Haec autem omnia, quae diximus de rebus quae post episcopatum devolutae sunt ad sanctissimos episcopos, et in reverendissimis orphanotrophis et ptochotrophis et nosocomis et gerontocomis et xenodochis et omnibus aliis rectoribus venerabilium domuum valere sancimus in rebus quae in tempore propriae administrationis secundum praedictum modum ad eos pervenerunt.

3. Si quis autem episcopus aut clericus aut cuiuslibet ecclesiastici gradus minister aut ecclesiae diaconissa moriatur sine testamentis et legitimis successoribus, horum successio ecclesiae competat in qua constituti fuerunt.

Peculium hic appellatur, quod ab aliquo clerico velut proprium possidetur; usualiter autem peculium solet dici filiorum et servorum, scil. quod pater concedit filio vel dominus servo Duo vero sunt peculia clericorum, aliud ab ecclesia proveniens, quod profectitium vocari potest, aliud aliunde procedens, quod potest adventitium nuncupari, puta quod provenit clerico ex suo artificio vel alia qualibet acquisitione intuitu personae. Licet autem omnibus clericis habere peculium, qui propriis non renuntiaverint, ut clericis secularibus; non autem canonicis regularibus aut monachis vel monachabus

Nunc videamus, quam potestatem habeant clerici de peculio suo; et certe profectitium peculium possunt, dum in ipsa ecclesia vivunt, et praecipuum habere et retinere et inde moderate donare . . . ; ab illa vero ecclesia transeuntes vel morientes ipsi ecclesiae relinquere debent . . . , nec obstat, quod ea quae ab ecclesiis proveniunt, clericis communiter sunt habenda . . . ; nam illud intelligitur, antequam sua cuique portio assignetur. De peculio vero adventitio potestatem habet clericus, et inter vivos et causa mortis cui voluerit conferendi, etiam regi Arturo

3. Quum in officiis

3 Lateran (1179) c. 15, in X 3.26.7, ed. Friedberg 2:540. Introduction, p. 6.

Quum in officiis caritatis primo loco illis teneamur obnoxii, a quibus beneficium nos cognoscimus recipisse, econtra quidam clerici, quum ab ecclesiis suis multa beneficia perceperint, bona per eas acquisita in alios transferre praesumunt. Hoc igitur, quia et antiquis canonibus constat inhibitum, nos etiam nihilominus prohibemus [et] indemnitati ecclesiarum providere volentes, sive intestati decesserint, sive aliis conferre voluerint, penes ecclesias eadem bona praecipimus remanere.

The reference may, however, be to the d.p. c.5, where Huguccio seems to recognize local custom [though he does not use the word] in determining the heirs of an intestate. In support of the opinion ascribed to Huguccio, Johannes cites X 3.24.3: “Illius terrae consuetudo, quae tamen sacris canonibus manifeste non obviet, est diligentius attendanda”; X 3.26.12, above, note 2.

his quae acquisivit post clericatum prima facie praesumitur quod intuitu ecclesiae et de rebus ecclesiae acquisierit.⁸ Hoc autem, licet praesumatur in singulis clericis ut in praeallegatis iuribus, in praelatis tamen maxime praesumitur.⁹ Et est dicendum quod in tantum standum est huic praesumptioni, quod sententia fertur pro ecclesia nisi ex adverso probetur vel praesumatur contrarium.¹⁰

Quidam tamen dicunt, et forte non male, quod in non praelatis creditur acquiri intuitu personae non ecclesiae quando ad hoc quaerendum, scilicet nomine ecclesiae nullum habet officium et ideo suo nomine quaerere videtur si aliunde habet bona quam de ecclesia, unde haeres suus legitimus licite post eius mortem haec occupabit, et est ad hoc argumentum.¹¹ Sed quia in his difficiles et quasi impossibiles essent probationes testium vel instrumentorum, scilicet quid vel quantum de rebus ecclesiae et quantum de suo proprio emerit, idcirco iudex in hoc facto multum ex praesumptionibus procedet, et cum contingat aliquando unam praesumptionem alii colluderet¹² iudex arbitratur quantum sit patrimonium suum et quot sint redditus ecclesiae. Item si quid lucratur de artificio seu doctrina et sic multa alia, et hoc videtur dicere.¹³

⁹ C.12 q.3 c.2 (9 Toledo [655] c. 4) C.12 q.4 c.1 (ibid.); C.12 q.4 c.3 (Agde [506] c.54). All three canons support the proposition that the private nature of a cleric’s purchases must be proven by contemporary documents.

Item cum praelatus segregare debeat res suas a rebus ecclesiae¹⁵ et omnia debet agere semper cum consilio clericorum suorum.¹⁶ Multum contra eum praesumitur si omiserit hoc et saepe posset propter culpam eius deferri iusurandum ecclesiae ut argumentum,¹⁷ maxime ubi [fol. 108ra] lata et manifesta deprehenderetur culpa praelati.¹⁸

Item omnes vanas et delicatas expensas prius deducet super bonis clerici. Solas autem expensas approbabit iudex de bonis ecclesiae quae factae sunt in alimoniam suam et pauperum et in redemptionem captivorum et in hospitalitatem vel alias pias causas.¹⁹

Nec credimus melioris conditionis quoad probationem esse alterum, scilicet ecclesiam, vel haeredem, ex quo possidet, quantum ad hoc quod onus probandi alii incumbat, quia semper pro ecclesia praesumitur, nisi haeres defuncti clerici probaverit ante clericatum defunctum clericum habuisse aliquid, vel aliu[d] de suo intuitu obvenisse.²⁰

Si autem plures quis ecclesias habet, aequa distributione bona clerici sunt inter illas ecclesias dividenda.²⁴

Et si clericus nullum habet haereditem usque ad septimum gradum succedat ecclesia.²⁵

Sed quaeritur quis occupabit bona intestati defuncti? Respondeo secundum praedicta in bonis ecclesiae non habet haereditem sed successorem unde illa occupabit ecclesia. Alia de quibus certum est quod fuerint testatoris occupabit haeres. Ea autem de quibus dubitari potest, cum pro ecclesia praesumitur, occupabit ecclesia.

The former does not directly address this question, and the latter does not specify the permissible degree of kinship for an heir.

Alioquin episcopi et eorum superiores ab ingressu ecclesiae, ceteri vero ab officio et beneficio tamdiu eo ipso noverint se suspensos, quousque restitutionem fecerint de praedictis.

Porro, ubi ex privilegio vel consuetudine, seu alia de causa rationabili sibi aliquis praedictorum asserit bona competere supra dicta: hoc de illis bonis solum debet intelligi, quae solutis debitis, si qua sint, et his, quae fuerint necessaria pro servitoribus et ministris, ac incumbendis oneribus usque ad novos redditus supportandis, congrue reservatis, ex ipsis reperta fuerint superesse. Sane constitutionem, quam superius specialiter edidimus contra capitula, collegia, conventus seu singulares personas, bona cathedralium vel regularium aut collegiarum ecclesiarum vacantium occupantes, per constitutionem praesentem, quam in dignitatibus, personatibus, prioratibus et ecclesiis aliis locum habere censemus, nolumus in aliquo derogari.²⁸

6. Frequens

Clem. 5.6, ed. Friedberg 2:1185–1186. Introduction, p. 10–11.

Frequens et assidua nos quorundam religiosorum querela circumstrepit, quod plerique episcopi, et eorum superiores, ac ceteri ecclesiarum praelati ipsorum religiosorum quietem iniuste in subsequentibus multipliciter inquietant. . . .

Praeterea interdum iniuste abbates, priores ac alios beneficiatos beneficiis suis privant, ut sic fructus beneficiorum illorum percipere valeant primo anno praetextu privilegii, quod asserunt se habere, quod usque ad certum tempus fructus beneficiorum vacantium possint percipere primi anni.

Quibus non contenti, equos, boves, thesaurum et alia bona monasteriorum et beneficiorum vacantium illicite occupant, quae essent futuris successoribus firmari, comparatur usuario, et ita nihil habet nisi usum tantum; eleemosynam tamen facere potest, [X 3.26.8], testari non [X 3.26.7]. Si vero sit clericus non habens administrationem, sed personaliter et simpliciter beneficiatus, et in morte comparatur usufructuario quantum ad faciendum fructus suos, et de ipsis potest testari; ecclesia tamen succedit ei in istis si decedat ab intestato [X 3.26.15 § illud, apparently a negative inference] et consuetudo generalis quasi ubique eam [distinctionem] approbat. Et quod dictum est de clerico simpliciter beneficiato, quod facit fructus suos, intelligendum est de perceptis et reconditis; alii vero per iura allegata ad ecclesiam pertinebunt.

The distinction, between administrators who cannot make gifts from their ecclesiastical incomes by testament or in articulo mortis and simple clerics who may do so, anticipates the Johannes' own Novellae.

²⁸ The last sentence refers to VI 1.6.40, which has similar, though not quite the same, provisions regarding cathedrals, collegiate churches, and churches of regulars.

bus reservanda. . . .

Verum quia una est regularium et saeculorum praelatorum et subditorum universalis ecclesia, extra quam nullus omnino salvatur, quorum omnium unus est Dominus, una fides et unum baptisma: decet ut omnes qui eiusdem sunt corporis, unius etiam sint voluntatis, et sicut fratres adinvicem vinculo caritatis sint adstricti. Decet igitur, ut et praelati, et alii tam exempti quam non exempti suis iuribus sint contenti, et alter in alterius iniuriam non prosiliat seu iacturam. Universis itaque praelatis ecclesiarum praesentis sanctionis edicto districte praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus ipsi, a praedictis gravaminibus omnino cessantes, et cessare suos subditos facientes, viros religiosos exemptos, privilegiatos et non exemptos, mendicantes et non mendicantes, caritative tractent et foveant, et sua iura et privilegia inviolabiliter eis servent.

2a 2ae, 185, 8 ad 3, ed. "Leonina" (Roma 1899) 10:484. Introduction, p. 18.

Ad tertium dicendum quod hoc est per accidens quod episcopi religiosi obedire praelatis suarum religionum non tenentur, quia sibi subditi esse desierunt, sicut et ipsi praelati religionum. Manet tamen adhuc obligatio voti virtualiter, ita scilicet quod, si eis legitime aliquis praeficeretur, obedire tenerentur, in quantum tenentur obedire statutis regulae per modum praedictum, et suis superioribus, si quos habent. Proprium autem nullo modo habere possunt. Non enim hereditatem paternam vindicant quasi propriam, sed quasi Ecclesiae debitam. Unde ibidem subditur quod, postquam episcopus ordinatur, ad altare ad quod sanctificatur, quod acquirere potuit restituat [C. 18, q. 1, c. 1 (Friedberg ed. 1:828)]. Testamentum autem nullo modo facere potest, quia sola dispensatio ei committitur rerum ecclesiasticarum, quae morte finitur, ex qua incipit testamentum valere, ut apostolus dicit, ad Heb. IX. Si tamen ex concessione Papae testamentum faciat, non intelligitur ex proprio facere testamentum, sed apostolica auctoritate intelligitur esse ampliata potestas suae dispensationis, ut eius dispensatio possit valere post mortem.

Extrav. comm. 1.3.4, ed. Friedberg 2:1240–1242. Introduction, p. 25–26.

Ex debito pastoralis officii, nobis quanquam immeritis superna dispositione commissi, periculis animarum et ecclesiarum ac monasteriorum dispendiis, quae ob ipsorum vacationes diutinas ipsis solent frequentius provenire, congruis remediis, (quantum nobis ex alio conceditur) salubriter occurrere intendentes, ut celerius et utilius provideatur ecclesiis ac monasteriis antedictis, et ut Romanae ecclesiae, quae super ipsas ecclesias ac monasteria ex divina provisione obtinere dignoscitur principatum, honor debitus impendatur, praedecessorum nostrorum Romanorum Pontificum, praesertim felicitis recordationis Bonifacii VIII., qui dignitates, personatus, ecclesias et alia ecclesiastica beneficia, et Clementis V., qui tam huiusmodi dignitates, personatus, ecclesias, beneficia, quam cathedrales ecclesias quaslibet, monasteria, prioratus, administrationes et officia quaecunque, quae apud sedem apostolicam vacarent, provisioni apostolicae sub certis tenoribus reservaverunt, vestigiis inhaerentes, nos ex causis rationabilibus, quae ad id nostrum animum induxerunt, de fratrum nostrorum consilio nonnulla detrahendo, aliqua declarando, et quaedam addendo de novo, episcopales et earum superiores sedes, monasteria et regulares ecclesias, ad quae hi, qui eis pro tempore praeficiendi sunt, etiam per electionem canonicam assumuntur, prioratus, officia vel administrationes eorundem, dignitates, personatus, praebendas aliaque ecclesiastica beneficia cum cura vel sine cura, quocunque nomine censeantur, quae apud praedictam sedem vacant ad praesens, et exnunc in antea, (donec Christi dignatio nos dignabitur universalis ecclesiae sponsae suae regimini praesidere,) vacare contigerit apud eam, provisioni nostrae de fratrum nostrorum consilio auctoritate apostolica reservamus. Huiusmodi autem sedes, monasteria, ecclesias et alia praefata beneficia ecclesiastica, per mortem, vel depositionem ac privationem eorum, qui ea obtinerent, per electionum cassationem, postulationum repulsionem, renunciationem, quorumlibet provisionem, translationem, sive per successionem muneris consecrationis aut benedictionis dudum a dicto Clemente praedecessore nostro promotis impensi, nisi de ipsis disposuerit praedecessor, et a nobis sive auctoritate nostra promovendis impendendi apud sedem ipsam, vel etiam ubicunque aut quovis alio modo, canonicè vacare apud sedem intelligimus praelibatam. Episcopales insuper vel alias dignitates, ecclesias, monasteria, et alia praedicta fratrum nostrorum sanctae Romanae ecclesiae cardinalium apud dictam sedem per eorum obitum vacare censemus, sive inibi sive alibi ubicunque ipsos migrare contigerit de hac luce. Et hoc idem in dignitatibus et beneficiis quibuslibet, (ut de aliis praemittitur,) officialium nostrorum, videlicet vicecancellarii, eiusdem ecclesiae camerarii, notariorum, auditoris contradictarum, correctorum, scriptorum literarum, ac poenitentiariorum nostrorum, nec non abbreviatorum curiae Romanae locum sibi volumus vindicare. Rursus huius nostrae reservationis edictum ad dignitates et alia iam dicta capellanorum nostrorum commensalium, et quorumlibet aliorum, ratione officii vel ex causa legitima in dicta curia morantium, quando a nobis pro nostris et eiusdem sedis negotiis prosequendis de ipsa curia quocunque modo praemissi, vel aliqui eorum transmissi, aut legati vel nuncii fuerint, et eos ubilibet ante ipsorum ad praefatam curiam reditum durante legatione seu prosecutione ipsorum negotiorum rebus eximi contigerit ab humanis, duximus extendendum. Et id ipsum etiam esse volumus in huiusmodi capellanis commensalibus, etiamsi, ut praemittitur, nunc transmissi fuerint ubicunque, et ipsos rebus eximi contigerit ab humanis. Ceterum edictum ipsum trahimus ad sedes, monasteria, et alia supra dicta, quae, vivente adhuc dicto Clemente praedecessore nostro, usque ad eius obitum, nisi de ipsis per eum fuerit ordinatum, et deinde usque ad datam praesentium apud sedem vacaverint eandem, illaque vacare decernimus apud ipsam, dummodo in eis ius in re, licet ad rem non sit aliquibus acquisitum, decernimus extunc irritum et inane, si secus in praedictis et singulis eorum scienter vel ignoranter per quaecunque seu quoscunque apostolica vel alia quavis auctoritate attentatum fuerit, vel contigerit in posterum attentari, non obstantibus piae memoriae Gregorii X., ac Bonifacii VIII., et aliorum Romanorum Pontificum praedecessorum nostrorum constitutionibus super hoc editis, quatenus edicto essent et sunt contrariae memorato, ceteris in ipsis constitutionibus contentis in suo robore duraturis. B. Incidental Documents in the Collection of Spoils

1. A licentia testandi, 1327

This privilege was issued in 1327 by John XXII to Arnaldus Cescomes bishop of Lleida, who died as archbishop of Tarragona in 1346. It was registered with the common letters when it was issued (EFR, Jean XXII communes 30352). Upon the archbishop's death, the papal commissioner Guillelmus de Platulis copied the original license into his accounts of the spoils, Coll. 473, 2rv, from which the following transcription was taken. Introduction, p. 11–12.

Joannes episcopus servus servorum Dei venerabili fratri Arnaldo episcopo Ilerdensi, salutem et apostolicam benedictionem.

Quia presentis vite conditio statum habet instabilem, et ea que visibilem habent essentiam tendunt visibiliter ad non esse, tu hoc salubri meditatione meditans diem tue peregrinationis extremum dispositione testamentaria desideres prevenire, nos itaque tuis supplicationibus inclinati, ut de bonis tuis undecunque tibi, non per ecclesiam seu ecclesias tibi commissas, alias tamen licite acquisitis, que ad te pertinere dinascuntur [better: dinoscuntur] libere testari valeas, ac de bonis mobilibus ecclesiasticis tue dispositioni seu administrationi commissis, que tamen non fuerunt altaris seu altarium ecclesiarum tibi commissarum in misterio [better: ministerio] seu alicui speciali earundem ecclesiarum divino cultui seu usui deputata, necnon et quibuscumque bonis mobilibus a te per ecclesiam seu ecclesias licite acquisitis, pro decentibus et honestis expensis tui funeris, et pro remuneratione illorum qui tibi viventi serviverunt sive sint consanguinei sive alii iuxta servitii meritum (modice tamen) disponere et erogare possis et alias prius earundem ecclesiarum ere alieno deducto ut eedem ecclesie non remaneant debitis obligate de illis in pios usus convertendis, plenam et liberam²⁹ fraternitati tue auctoritate presentium concedimus facultatem. Volumus autem ut in earundem ecclesiarum dispositione bonorum, iuxta quantitatem residui erga ecclesias a quibus eadem percepisti te liberalem exhibeas prout conscientia tibi dictaverit et anime tue saluti videris expedire.

2. A commission for spoils, 1346

Notwithstanding the testamentary license edited above, the spoils of Arnaldus Cescomes were reserved (Case no. 76) and the following joint commission was granted to investigate and collect them. It is edited from the commissioners' final accounts in Coll. 473, 1r–2r. Introduction, p. 27.

Clemens episcopus servus servorum Dei, dilectis filiis [Guillelmo de Platulis] archidiacono Villeficti Terraconensis, et Almeracio de Cabrespino canonico Ilerdensis ecclesiarum, salutem et apostolicam benedictionem.

Cum bone memorie Arnaldus archiepiscopus Terraconensis in diversis pecuniarum summis ex diversis causis legitimis, necnon rationes reddere de diversis bonis et proventibus ad Cameram nostram spectantibus per eum perceptis, hactenus eidem Camere dum adhuc viveret teneretur adstrictus, nos, volentes eiusdem Camere providere ut tenemur, indemnitatibus in hac parte hiis et aliis rationabilibus causis suadentibus, pridem cum adhuc idem archiepiscopus in humanis ageret, bonorum mobilium ipsius archiepiscopi ac eorum que ad ipsum spectabant et poterant quomodolibet pertinere dispositionem ut inde valeret prefate Camere de premissis rationabiliter satisfieri, et alias quod nobis videretur expediens ordinari, nobis duximus specialiter reservandam.

Cupientes igitur de bonis predictis certiores effici, et ea pro predictis complendis fideliter custodiri, discretioni vestre per apostolica scripta comitimus et mandamus, quatinus per vos vel alium seu alios, de bonis et debitis eisdem simpliciter et de plano sine strepitu et figura iudicii vos informantes, ea in quibuscumque rebus consistant et per quascumque detineantur vel debeantur personas, nomine nostra petere, exigere, recipere ac fideliter et integraliter conservare curetis, contradictores quoslibet et rebelles cuiuscumque status, ordinis, dignitatis vel conditionis existant, etiam si pontificali vel quavis alia prefulgeant dignitate, per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione postposita compescendos, non obstante si eis vel eorum aliquibus communiter vel divisim a sede apostolica sit indultum quod interdici, suspendi vel excommunicari non possint per litteras apostolicas non facientes plenam et expressam et de verbo ad verbum de indulto huiusmodi mentionem, et qualibet alia dicte sedis indulgentia generali vel speciali cuiuscumque tenoris existat, per quam presentibus non expressam vel totaliter non inserta effectus presentium impediri posset quomodolibet vel differi. Volumus autem quod eos qui nobis assignanda, restituenda vel solvenda duxerint dicta bona, possitis absolvere pleniusque quitare de hiis que inde ab ipsis recipere vos contigeret, facienda super singulis assignationibus, restitutionibus vel solutionibus huiusmodi duo confici publica instrumenta, quorum uno penes assignantes ipsis [better: ipsos] dimisso, et reliquum ad eandem mittere Cameram procuretis cum certificaturi de premissis nichilominus clare, particulariter et distincte.

Porro nostre intentionis existit quod redditus predictis rationibus et satisfactione facta prefate Camere de hiis in quibus idem archiepiscopus dum viveret tenebatur eidem debita bona et legalia memorati archiepiscopi et legata pia pro remuneratione servitorum, decenti et alia qua rationabilia fuerit de bonis predictis prout sufficienter paruerint persolventur, et alias per nos ordinetur quod rationi et honestati videbimus convenire.

5. Legal allegationes in a case of spoils, ca. 1368

IM 6427, written on two paper sheets sewn end to end: a legal assessment by Bertrand du Mazel in favor of the claim of cardinal Raymond de Canilhac to the movable goods of Wilhelm Pinchon, late provost of Mainz. The legal citations have been converted to modern forms and placed in the footnotes. Introduction, p. 36.

Allegationes: Ad ostendendum quod bona que erant domini G[uillelmi] Pinchon, predecessoris domini mei R[aymundi] Penestrensis episcopi cardinalis nunc prepositi Mog[untini], recondita et recollecta tempore mortis ipsius et que obvenerunt tempore vacationis et post fuit dicto domino meo cardinali reservanda assignanda et restituenda, ostenditur rationibus que sequuntur.

³⁰ But note that the odd 21 solidi is rounded up to one florin, and that the items add up only to 3529 florins.

Primo debent ad dictum dominum meum pervenire quia dignitas prepositure Mog[untine] ante mortem predecessoris domini mei erat Sedi Apostolice specialiter reservata, ita quod nullus de ea disponere ordinare nec providere poterat nisi solus papa, qui de ea providit dicto domino meo cardinali.

Item ex quo dignitas predicta erat per papam reservata et omnia bona Camere dicti predecessoris censentur reservata et sic Camere Apostolice debentur et non alii, quia accessorium sequitur principali,³¹ et sic clause sunt manus et ligate super bonis predictis executoribus dicti domini G. et quibuscumque aliis, Camera Apostolica excepta.

Item quod bona predicta debeant pervenire ad successorem probatur tam iure quam ratione, nam dictus dominus meus emit omnia bona a Camera Apostolica sui predecessoris et sub certa pecunie quantitate prout Camera se sibi vendere poterat ratione predicta, quod non emisset nisi dicta bona essent reservata ut predixi.

Preterea ostenditur quod de iure communi ad dictum dominum meum ut ad successorem bona omnia debent pervenire non solum bona mobilia ymmo et immobilia quia nomine bonorum bona mobilia et immobilia continentur,³² nam brevius conscriptum sive inventarium debet fieri scilicet de utensilibus et omni suppellectili, ita quod omnia sunt restituenda, unde si aliqua fuerunt retenta, talis ut convictus pro furtu debet condempnari.

Item secundum quod bona episcopi defuncti sunt futuro successori reservanda et restituenda,³³ et si contrarium factum fuerit tales occupatores ut sacrilegi debent puniri, anatematis mucrone feriri, peregrina commune eis debet denegari et qualescumque fuerint excommunicationis sententie debet mandari. Sic et bona prepositi seu archidiaconi successori reservantur.³⁴

Distinguendo tamen, quia si bona prepositure seu archidiaconatus distincta sunt et ordinata a rebus canonicorum, ut in casu nostro, tunc successori bona de sunt reservanda et restituenda.³⁵ Si vero bona omnia archidiaconatus seu prepositure et canonicorum sunt communia, tunc ad capitulum bona devoluntur.³⁶ Unde per hoc apparet quod ex quo bona reservantur seu debent

reservari futuro successori quod de talibus bonis nullus testari potest.³⁷

Preterea de dictis bonis predecessor ordinare, testari nec disponere poterat que fuerunt intuitu ecclesie et non persone acquisita nec aliqua legare, cum ipsius proprietas non fuerit sua sed ecclesie, sed si est consuetudo potest de dictis bonis aliqua dare et erogare pauperibus et religiosis locis et illis qui defuncto servierant, sive sint consanguinei sive alii, iuxta servitii meritum ipsorum; que tamen ex hereditate pervenerant distribuuntur pro arbitrio decedentis prout hec habentur et leguntur.³⁸

Item prelati habens administrationem quandiu vivit et sanus est potest [dare] donare, moderate tamen, comparatur usufructuario cum nichil habeat nisi usum tantum, nam eius ius morte finitur sicut ius usufructuarii.³⁹ Clericus vero simpliciter beneficiatus, administrationem non habens, et in vita et in morte comparatur usufructuario quantum ad faciendum fructus suos; nam tales clerici de perceptis fructibus et ~~recon~~ horreo reconditis testari possunt.⁴⁰

Preterea nullus episcopus, archiepiscopus aut patriarcha aut alius superior seu abbas vel alius inferior potest nec debet occupare bona predecessoris nisi ex privilegio speciali vel consuetudine iam prescripta licite vel alia causa rationabili quod si fecerint episcopi et superiores sunt suspensi ab ingressu ecclesie, alii inferiores ab ~~ben~~ officio et beneficio quousque restitutionem fecerint receptori.⁴¹

Item si dicatur quod de consuetudine bona predicta pervenerint et pervenire debuerint ad executores seu manufideles et non ad successorem, requirit antequam talis consuetudo preiudicium successori et iuri communi, cum de iure communi bona debeant pervenire ad successorem, quod consuetudo suffragetur rationi et veritati cum semper ius preiudicet consuetudini, et consuetudo iuri et rationi sit postponenda.

Item requiritur quod consuetudo sit rationabilis et licite prescripta saltem spatio XL annorum;⁴² item quod fuit obtenta in contradictorio iudicio populi;⁴³ item quod cum animo fiat ut credatur se ius habere ut imposterum illud intendat facere, alioquin talis usus non dicitur usus sed abusus;⁴⁴ item quod res illa sit prescriptabilis;⁴⁵ item quod sit antiqua et approbata;⁴⁶ item debet continere virtualem equitatem;⁴⁷ item quod sit de certa conscientia principis inducta, non tantum de tollerantia;⁴⁸ item quod non sit inducta per errorem sed ex certa scientia;⁴⁹ item quod maior pars consuevit illa consuetudine uti, quia sicut minor pars populi non possit inducere legem ~~sive consue~~ sic nec consuetudinem. Unde dico quod nunquam ex sola consuetudine, licet esset prescripta, ius aliquod sit quesitum, nisi forte esset tanta [supply: etate] cuius memorie non esset.⁵⁰ Item sole vices non inducunt consuetudinem quia non exemplis sed legibus iudicandum est ~~Item~~.⁵¹ Item minor prescriptio quam centenaria non currit contra Romanam Ecclesiam.⁵²

Item ubi in rebus ecclesiasticis aliquis allegat prescriptionem requiritur bona fides et iustus tytulus quando allegans non potest de iure communia talia possidere. Cum ergo dicti executores non possint bona predecessoris possidere de iure communi, cum ius commune eis resistat, necessario habent probare bonam fidem et iustum tytulum.

Item quando est presumptio contra possidentem non procedit prescriptio sine tytulo,⁵³ sed contra illos qui dicunt quod bona predecessoris non pervenerunt ad successorem est presumptio iuris, ergo bona fides illis non sufficit, sed est necessarius tytulus qui possessori tamen tribuat prescribendi.⁵⁴

Item ubi petitor fundat intencionem suam de iure communi tunc prescribens habet necessarie probare tytulum nec sufficit probare prescriptum esse in tali ecclesia loco seu personis nisi probetur specificitate locum prescriptorem habuisse et prescripsisse in loco seu persona de quibus proprie agitur.⁵⁵ Cum ergo ius commune resistat executoribus cum ex tali iure bona predecessoris debent pervenire ad successorem, dicti executores habent probare consuetudinem et prescriptionem in ecclesia cathedrali Mog[untina] locum sibi diutius vendicasse. 3. Apostolice Camere

The two letters of commission by Innocent VI to his chamberlain Arnaud Aubert were registered together in a portfolio of useful documents which was assembled in the Camera for Aubert, ASV, Coll. 359A, 4r–6v. The version Apostolice Camere per quam Sancte comes first in the portfolio of Arnaud Aubert, although it was dated later (6 Dec 1361).⁵⁸ In the portfolio it is followed by the note: “Similis commissio fuit facta domino Petro Bituricensi, postmodum Arelatensi archiepiscopo, camerario etc. per dominum Gregorium XI, mutatis dumtaxat nominibus, et data anno primo [1371] pontificatus sui, ut in registro pergamineo [i.e. RV 263] eiusdem anni, folio 226 [in fact: 227v–228r]”. Innocent VI’s other letter to Arnaud Aubert, Apostolice Camere per quam incumbentibus, bears the date 24 Oct 1361 and is followed by the note: “Renovata fuit per dominum Gregorium in personam domini Petri Bituricensis, postmodum Arelatensis archiepiscopi, anno primo [1371] pontificatus sui, ut folio 227 [in fact: 226v–227v] libri pergaminei eiusdem anni [RV 263]”. It is these later letters that we transcribe below. Note that in RV 263, the order of the letters is reversed. Introduction, p. 25–26.

Venerabili fratri Petro archiepiscopo Bituricensi, camerario nostro, salutem etc.

Apostolice camere per quam incumbentibus sancte Romane Ecclesie multiplicibus agendis et oportunitatibus subvenire sic tenemur et solerter attendere, quod eius iura non pereant et aliorum iustitia non ledatur. Cum itaque, sicut accepimus, nonnullae questiones diversarum personarum secularium et regularium ordinum, conventuum et locorum, exemptorum et non exemptorum, super variis et diversis negociis ipsius Camere seu eam concernentibus, tam in Romana Curia quam extra in diversis mundi partibus, tam auditoribus et locorum ordinariis quam etiam delegatis iudicibus, ventilentur et cotidie moveantur et moveri possent infuturum, que per ipsorum desidiam iudicium [better: iudicium] seu calumpnias partium, in ipsius Camere enorme preiudicium, perniciose tractari possunt, et nimium etiam protelari;

Nos, super hiis providere volentes ac de tue circumspectionis industria, cui eiusdem Camere principaliter est cura commissa, gerentes in Domino fiduciam specialem, ad tuum in hac parte officium expressius roborandum, cognoscendi, auctoritate apostolica, per te vel alium seu alios, omnes et singulas causas [better: de omnibus et singulis causis], litibus seu questionibus tam civilibus quam etiam criminalibus [227r] prefatam Cameram seu eius negotia iuxta tuum arbitrium liberum quocumque et qualitercumque, directe vel indirecte tangentibus seu concernentibus, seu que etiam quomodolibet tangere possent infuturum, etiam coram aliis quibuscumque auditoribus, iudicibus ordinariis vel delegatis, in prefata Curia vel extra, ceptis et non ceptis, motis et movendis, etiam si usque ad contestationem litis aut alterius [better: ulterius] fuerit inclusive processum, et etiam si cause ipse de sui natura apud Apostolicam Sedem tractande et terminande non sint seu etiam devolute, et etiam si ad nos seu Sedem eandem super illis per viam appellationis aut simplicis querele vel alias sit recursum vel imposterum [omit: in] recurri contingat, et insuper huiusmodi lites et questiones et causas presentes et futuras, etiam coram alio vel aliis, etiam per nos delegatis seu subdelegatis, ab eis ut premititur inchoatas seu motas, illam vel illas ex eis de quibus et quando expedire videris ad te advocandi, easque audiendi et fine debito terminandi, dictisque iudicibus inhibendi ne de causis ipsis post advocacionem huiusmodi cognoscere vel se intromittere quoquomodo presumant et quaslibet alias inhibitiones in causis eisdem necnon ordinationes, declarationes, decreta, citationes, monitiones, mandata et sententias etiam excommunicationis, suspensionis vel interdicti, etiam extra prefatam Curiam, et ad partes, quotiens opus fuerit et tibi expedire videbitur faciendi et etiam partes quarum causas seu lites ut prefertur ad te advocaveris absolvendi ab omnibus sententiis et censuris latis per iudices coram quibus dicte cause ventilabantur quomodolibet contra eas;

Et insuper contradictores quoslibet et rebelles cuiuscumque status, dignitatis, ordinis vel conditionis existant, etiam si pontificali vel maiori, aut alia quavis prefulgeant dignitate, eadem auctoritate per censuram ecclesiasticam, appellatione postposita compescendi, non obstantibus quibuscumque inhibitionibus, sententiis etiam excommunicationis vel aliis, ac etiam constitutionibus apostolicis seu si aliquibus communiter vel divisim a Sede Apostolica sit indultum vel imposterum indulgeri contingat, quod extra vel ultra certa loca ad iudicium trahi aut quod interdicti, suspendi vel excommunicari non possint, per litteras apostolicas non facientes plenam et expressam ac de verbo ad verbum de indulto huius [add: -modi] mentionem et quibuslibet aliis privilegiis, exemptionibus, immunitatibus, gratiis et litteris quibuscumque, personis, locis, collegiis et ordinibus ab Apostolica Sede concessis vel imposterum concedendis, etiam si talia sint de quibus, quorumque totis tenoribus et ipsarum personarum, locorum et ordinum propriis nominibus specialis et expressa mentio sit habenda, que ipsis vel eorum aliquibus contra premissa nolumus in aliquo suffragari, plenam et liberam fraternitati tue concedimus tenore presentium facultatem;

Eandem fraternitatem tuam attentius exhortantes ut sic in premissis te fidelem exhibeas et etiam studiosum omnibus iustitiam ministrando quod tam eidem [227v] Camere quam aliis quibuslibet sua iura seruentur, tuaque circumscriptio inde possit in Domino merito comendari, presentibus usque ad beneplacitum Apostolice Sedis valituris, dantes tibi potestatem etiam de causis, litibus et questionibus antedictis cognoscendi et in eis pronuntiandi simpliciter et de plano ac sine strepitu iudicii [add: et] figura.

4. The chamberlains' portfolio, 1362, and after Articles selected and arranged chronologically from a portfolio or manual of warrants and instructions of the popes to chamberlains Arnaud Aubert and Pierre de Cros. Coll. 359A, 16v–18r, ed. Samaran, “Jurisprudence” 152–154 (reprint 1:57–70) (in the order of the manuscript register) and Samaran-Mollat 233–236. Introduction, p. 28, 31–34.

11 Dec 1362: Dominus noster Urbanus papa V reservavit ad vitam suam dumtaxat et si et quando et quotiens voluerit uti omnia bona mobilia ac debita omnium patriarcharum, archiepiscoporum, episcoporum, abbatum, decanorum, prepositorum, priorum, rectorum et aliarum quarumcumque personarum ecclesiasticarum, secularium et regularium, quorumcumque ordinum existant, etiam si sint ordinis Cisterciensis aut alterius cuiuscumque qui non haberent proprium nisi in communi, ubicumque, sive in Romana Curia vel alibi decedentium. (Nota. Dominus noster non vult quod utamur contra istos qui non habent proprium, nisi de sententia sua.)

Voluit tamen idem dominus noster quod de dictis bonis reservatis solvantur debita dictorum decedentium propter utilitatem ecclesie seu beneficii in quo defunctus prefuit contracta.

Item quod etiam solvantur exequie sepulture sue secundum condecenciam et statum persone, item remunerationes servitorum suorum, item emende si revera alicui tenebantur. Item voluit quod de dictis bonis deducantur libri et alia que defunctus de patrimonio suo vel ex labore proprii corporis seu aliter quam ab ecclesia sive beneficio in quo prefuit acquisivit, si heredem habeat legitimum, alias non. Item voluit dominus noster papa quod ad libros, calices, cruces, vestimenta et alia ornamenta ab antiquo etiam ante tempus dicti defuncti vel per ipsum in vita sua sine fraude deputata ad usum ecclesie dicta reservatio se non extendat, et idem voluit quoad boves et alia animalia et res similiter ab antiquo pro agricultura seu aliis usibus beneficii deputatas.

Voluit autem idem dominus noster quod quoad ecclesias Gallicanam et Anglicanam hac reservatione non utamur.

Actum in presentia mei Arnaldi camerarii et [Petri Amelii] domini archiepiscopi Viennensis, 11 die mensis Decembris, pontificatus sui anno 1.

24 Oct 1363. Die 24 mensis Octobris, anno 1, dominus noster Urbanus papa V michi camerario suo dixit et precepit quod hoc scriberem quod si forsitan alicui concederet liberam testamenti factionem, quod propterea propter illud verbum liberam non intendebat aliquid amplius concedere nisi secundum quod si fuisset concessum simpliciter testamenti factio sine verbo "libera". . . .

23 Feb 1364. Die 23 Februarii, anno 2, idem dominus noster dixit mihi camerario suo quod de dicta tricesima olim indicta in dicto regno Francie pro tempore preterito sic me haberem; videlicet quod prelatos et alios qui a clero receperunt tricesimam et Camere Apostolice non rediderunt, cogam ad solvendum et reddendum, si tamen vivant; quia si erant mortui, noluit quod cogere successorem ad solvendum, nec si et quatinus de bonis predecessoris ad eum pervenissent, sed quod sequerer possessorem bonorum dicti defuncti si quis, eum aut eundem levatorem, si forsitan viveret sed esset translatus. Si tamen Camera Apostolica habuerat bona dicti predecessoris, tunc nichil peteretur a successore.

Ab aliis autem qui debent tricesimam, non quia ab aliis levavissent, ratione beneficiorum suorum qui possunt solvere, quod exigatur. Si autem non possent solvere, quod dentur eis competentes dilationes, sed si omnino erant impotentes et de hoc constabat, quod nichil peteretur ab eis.

Item voluit quod super premissis possem excommunicatos absolvere et cum eis super irregularitate, si interim immiscuerint se divinis, dispensare.

...

25 Jan 1365. Die 25 mensis Januarii, pontificatus domini nostri anno 3, idem dominus noster papa dixit mihi A[rinaldo] camerario suo quod non erat nec fuit intentio sua quod si abbatibus ordinis sancti Benedicti competit de consuetudine, statuto, privilegio vel alias legitime recipere spolia priorum a suo monasterio dependentium, quod Camera aliquid recipiat nec impediat eos.

Similem fecit dominus Gregorius XI, eius immediatus successor, in principio sui pontificatus [Jan 1371] et est scripta in libro capellanorum suorum in principio, et incipit "Sciendum est."

7 Jun 1365. Die 7 mensis Junii anno quo supra, dominus noster papa dixit michi A[rinaldo] camerario suo quod intentio sua erat et fuerat quod fructus omnium beneficiorum ecclesiasticorum tam secularium quam regularium apud Sedem Apostolicam vacquantium quamdiu vacquabunt recipiantur per Camera[m] seu collectores ad utilitatem Camere Apostolice sine deductione alicuius annualis, et hoc voluit a tempore quo in Romanum pontificem fuit assumptus et hoc voluit de beneficiis que a die promotionis citra apud eandem Sedem vacquaverunt, quia de beneficiis que vacquaverunt ante promotionem suam voluit quod fieret et servaretur sicut tunc consuevit observari.

17 Jun 1366. Die 17 mensis Junii, pontificatus domini nostri Urbani pape V anno 4, idem dominus noster mihi A[rinaldo] camerario suo dixit et precepit ut prescriberem quod ipse volebat et sibi retinebat a cetero quod, licet prelati ecclesiarum testati fuissent seu reliquissent de bonis ecclesiasticis ad pias causas vel ecclesiis suis quibus prefuissent, nichilominus ipse seu Camera sua posset recipere de bonis eorum et detrahere de dictis legatis seu relictis prout sibi placeret.

Fondi, 31 Oct 1378. Sciant cuncti quod dominus noster papa Clemens VII die sue coronationis in civitate Fundorum michi Petro camerario suo archiepiscopo Arelatensi precepit vive vocis oraculo quod scriberem ad futuram rei memoriam quod ipse reservabat ad vitam suam spolia prelatorum et aliarum personarum ecclesiasticarum decedentium ubique ad instar et prout fecerunt sancte memorie domini Urbanus V et Gregorius XI predecessores sui et sic michi precepit quod ego uterer et per collectores apostolicos facerem observari. Scriptum [add: manu] propria in civitate Fundorum anno domini 1378 die ultima Octobris. Ita est per me camerarium et Arelatensem archiepiscopum.

D. Documents of the End of Papal Spoils

1. Letter patent of Charles VI, 1385

Pithou, Preuves des libertéz de l'église gallicane 2:8–10 (ch. 22, no. 8), extract quoted in Thomassin, Ancienne et nouvelle discipline 7:186. Introduction, p. 47–48.

Nunc cum episcopum in regno nostro ab hac luce migrare contingit, collectores et subcollectores summi Pontificis in provinciis quibus subsunt hujusmodi episcopi, ipsius summi Pontificis auctoritate bona mobilia et immobilia ex decessu talium episcoporum relicta, etiam illa quae per suam industriam quaesierunt, quae amplius ipsorum episcoporum non sunt, neque censentur, sed ad suos heredes, aut eorum executores spectant, capiunt; et nihil de his in reparatione seu refectioe aedificiorum et aliorum haereditariorum dictorum locorum episcopalium eo casu convertentes; nulla etiam solutione aut satisfactione dictorum episcoporum creditoribus facta per collectores aut subcollectores; praedicta bona haeredibus episcoporum sic decedentium, qui ditiores inde nobis honestius in guerris nostris et alibi juxta status eorum servire possent et deberent, totaliter amovendo, ac ipsos contra jus et consuetudinem exhaereditando, in juris nostri regaliaeque post obitum episcoporum nobis in eisdem ecclesiis competentis ac totius reipublicae praejudicium non modicum et gravamen.

2. Negotiations of the French Royal Council and the Camera, 1385

IM 4283 is a file of four large paper sheets, formerly sewn end to end as a roll, containing minutes of the pleading by Pierre Gérard, bishop of Le Puy (1385–1390) for the revocation of the royal ordinance against spoils (6 Oct 1385) and the replies of the royal council. Introduction, p. 48.

. . . Sequuntur articuli super quibus est provisio seu ordinatio facta per regem super quibus queritur de remedio:

Primo quia papa vult habere bona episcoporum post mortem ipsorum, ipsa tollenda heredibus qui debent per consuetudinem succedere aut executoribus testamentorum suorum, unde sequitur quod edificia et habitationes dictorum episcopatum deveniunt in ruinam in desertum in maximum dampnum regis et sui domini, prejudicium ecclesiarum et deformitatem regni, quia collectores nolunt pati sibi aliquas reparationes ad quas fuissent astricti heredes ipsorum episcoporum aut executores si bona ipsorum habuissent. Et una cum hoc subditi regis quibus huiusmodi bona pervenire seu pertinere debuissent sunt exhereditati de hoc quod eis pertinebat, et propter hec non possunt servire regi in suis guerris, nec aliter, ita bene seu convenienter sicut si haberent illa bona.

Item, quod peius est, post mortem abbatum collectores recipiunt bona mobilia sub umbra quod per dominum nostrum papam sunt reservata, quamvis abbates non habent bona propria, et propter hoc successores abbates non habent de quo substinere possint edificia dictarum abbatiarum, unde deveniunt in ruinam, et eis oportet solvere servitium curie Romane et administrare victualia religiosis, propter quod eis oportet vendere libros, ornamenta et alia iocalia suarum ecclesiarum, et sepissime vendere redditus ad vitam, unde dicte ecclesie sunt et morantur destructe, et oportet diminuere numerum religiosorum et servitium divinum. . . .

Sequuntur requisitiones facte per dictum dominum [Petrum] Aniciensem gentibus regis super revocationem et emendationem ordinationum predictarum, et responsiones per consilium regis, eidem super hoc facte:

Super infrascriptis in quibus est certa ordinatio facta per regem, petitur quod placeat regi de remedio opportuno providere, nam propter dictam ordinationem iura Camere Apostolice sunt ex toto vel quasi adnichilata, ymo quod est de[te]stabile, illi qui tenentur Camere Apostolice quantumcumque sint potentes ad solvendum sunt omnino inobedientes, nec curant de sententiis latis, nec de processibus apostolicis, ymo vulgariter dicunt quod ex parte regis inhibitum est eis, ut de nullo satisfaciant gentibus dicti domini nostri pape.

(Responsio per regem) Per ordinationem regis iura domini nostri pape de quibus fit mentio in articulo precedente non impediuntur in aliquo, et nichilominus dominus noster rex dabit litteras declaratorias quod non fuit sue intentionis quod per ordinationem noviter factum iura antiqua domini nostri pape seu eius Camere Apostolice, videlicet in servitiis communibus et arreragiis temporis preteriti, et aliis deneriis [better: denariis] que Camera Apostolica ab antiquo de et super beneficiis regni accipere consuevit, in aliquo impediuntur, mandabitur quia omnibus etc., quod de iuribus et deneriis [better: denariis] predictis collectores domini nostri pape uti et gaudere permittatur. . . .

[per Aniciensem] Item cum predecessores domini nostri pape a tempore quo curia fuit citra montes et a tempore de quo non extat memoria de contrario reservaverunt bona prelatorum decedentium in lingua occitana cum certa tamen modificatione rationabili, et ea post decessum dictorum prelatorum habuerunt sine contradictione quacumque, et per ordinationem nunc per regem factam generaliter sit mandatum quod bona prelatorum qualitercumque decedentium in regno pertineant ad heredes et ipsa habeant in magnum preiudicium dicti domini nostri pape et sue Camere, placeat regi super hoc de remedio opportuno providere et Cameram antiquam [sic] in suis libertatibus antiquis tueri, et ipsarum possessione et saisina teneri.

(Responsio per regem) Predicta ordinatio de presenti non mandabor executari in lingua occitana, attentis actis modificationibus per dictum dominum episcopum Aniciensem, traditis et declaratis quas ut asserit dominus noster papa vult inviolabiliter observari, videlicet quod quando Camera Apostolica capit bona prelatorum decedentium in lingua occitana predicta, primo fit super dictis bonis sepultura deffuncti concedenter [better: concedenter], secundo remunerantur servitores ipsius, et solvantur [omit:servitores ipsius et solvantur] debita hinc contracta; item utensilia necessaria ad hospitium ecclesie et animalia necessaria ad agriculturas numquam consuevit Camera recipere; providet etiam dicta Camera novo successori usque ad novos fructus, bona etiam mobilia que dictus deffunctus per industriam acquisierat, vel ex successione parentum eidem obvenerant, heredibus ipsius deffuncti aut executoribus sui testamenti, si quod fecerit, tradentur et deliberabuntur. . . .

3. A commission by Pierre de Foix, 1405

15 Oct 1405 (RA 325, 510v–511v) Pierre de Foix, bishop of Lescar, lieutenant of the chamberlain François de Conzié, commissions Jean Martin LL.Lic., collector of Narbonne, and Simon de Prades, collector of Arles, Aix, and Embrun, to collect the spoils of Antonius de Louvier, bishop of Maguelonne, referring to the decree of Benedict XIII, the example of his two predecessors, and the moderatio. Introduction, p. 48–49.

Petrus miseratione divina episcopus Lascurrensis, domini nostri pape cubicularius, reverendissimi in Christo patris Francisci eadem miseratione archiepiscopi Narbonensis, eiusdem domini nostri pape camerarii in Curia Romana cum eodem domino nostro presentialiter degentis, locumtenens in partibus citramontanis per eundem camerarium specialiter deputatus, venerabilibus viris dominis Symon de Pratis Barchinonensis et Johanni Martini Narbonensis ecclesiarum canonicis, salutem in Domino.

Cum dudum sanctissimus in Christo pater et dominus noster dominus Benedictus, divina providentia papa XIII, videlicet in sui apostolatus primordiis, ex certis rationalibus causis ad id sue sanctitatis animum moventibus, et etiam ad instar felicis recordationis dominorum Gregorii XI et Clementis VII ac nonnullorum aliorum predecessorum suorum Romanorum pontificum, dispositionem et ordinationem omnium bonorum mobilium debitorum et creditorum quorumcumque dominorum patriarcharum, archiepiscoporum et episcoporum, necnon abbatum et priorum habentium bona sive redditus a suis conventibus discreta, ubicumque sive in Romana Curia sive alibi decedentium, que ipsi domini patriarche, archiepiscopi, episcopi, abbates et priores tempore sui obitus haberent, vel pertinerent quomodolibet ad eosdem, ordinationi et dispositioni suis, cum modificatione per dictos Romanos pontifices predecessores suos alias in similibus facta et servari consueta, usque ad sue sanctitatis beneplacitum duxerit specialiter reservandas, decernens extunc irritum et inane si secus super hiis a quocumque vis aut scienter vel ignoranter contingeret attemptari, prout in registris Camere Apostolice vidimus serius contineri.

Cum autem postmodum, videlicet noviter sicut accepimus, bone memorie dominus Anthonius episcopus Magalonensis viam fuerit universe carnis ingressus discretioni vestre tenore presentium committimus et mandamus quatenus vos vel alter vestrum per se vel alium seu alios fide et facultatibus ydoneos omnia et singula eiusdem quondam domini episcopi bona mobilia, debita et credita ut premittitur reservata que ipse tempore sui obitus habebat aut pertinebant quomodo qualibet ad eundem quecumque, quotcumque, qualiacumque, quantacumque et ubicumque fuerunt ac in quibuscumque rebus consistent et per quascumque debeantur sive detineantur personas, de et super quibus, si necesse fuerit, summarie, simpliciter et de plano ac sine strepitu et figura iudicii vos informetis auctoritate apostolica et Camere Apostolice nomine, forma tamen predictae modificationis servata, petere, exigere et cum beneficio inventarii recipere illaque postmodum quamprimum poteritis eadem Camere fideliter assignare curetis.

Nos enim vobis et vestrum cuilibet, de hiis omnibus que de bonis, debitis et creditis huiusmodi vos aut alterum recipere et habere continget, omnes et singulas personas a quibus illa recipietis nomine prefate Camere quittandi et liberandi, necnon contradictores quoslibet et rebelles vobis in hac parte, cuiuscumque status, gradus, ordinis, conditionis vel prehemencie fuerint, etiam si pontificali vel alia qualibet ecclesiastica vel mundana prefulgeant dignitate, quandocumque et quotienscumque expedierit, auctoritate apostolica predicta per censuram ecclesiasticam et penas ac compulsiones alias de quibus vobis aut alteri vestrum, secundum eorum rebellionem videlicet, compescendi, invocato ad hoc, si opus fuerit, auxilio brachii secularis plenam et liberam tenore predicto concedimus facultatem.

Datum Avinione sub sigillo camerariatus officii prefati domini camerarii in testimonium premissorum, die xv mensis Octobris anno a nativitate Domini 1405, pontificatus prefati domini nostri domini Benedicti pape XIII anno 12.

4. Avisamenta by Dietrich of Niem to the Council of Constance

Ed. Finke, Acta concilii constanciensis 4:625–626. Introduction, p. 51.

Preterea cum moritur episcopus cathedralis ecclesie vel abbas cuiuscumque monasterii in Italia et quibusdam aliis partibus, statim collectores fructuum apostolice camere recipiunt pecunias, vestes, libros, iocalia, domus, utensilia, equos, boves, oves et animalia, grana, vina et breviter omnia mobilia sequemovencia et eciam credita necnon iura et actiones quecumque, prout ad ipsum defunctum, dum viveret, pertinebant, que vocantur spolia, ad unguem rapiunt et extorquent suisque et dicte camere usibus applicant, que rationabiliter deberent eisdem ecclesiis et monasteriis remanere aut saltem futuris successoribus reservari, propter quod ecclesie et monasteria ipsa permaxime destruuntur ac divinus cultus et regularis observancia in ipsis monasteriis propterea negligitur nec possunt inibi fieri debita opera caritatis. Et cum hoc, antequam dictis vacantibus ecclesiis et monasteriis de pastoribus providetur, necesse est, quod illis [better: illi] preficiendi pro novis magnis pecuniarum summulis cum dictis officialibus camere aut aliis ad hos deputatis stipulentur et illas efficaciter solvant, eciam si propterea ecclesie et monasteria huiusmodi ad peiorem statum manifeste declinant. Et licet hoc sit diu observatum forsitan de plenitudine apostolice potestatis, quia tamen nimis est dampnosum et intollerabile ecclesiis et monasteriis ipsis, est merito abolendum.

5. Anonymous theses for the Council of Constance

Ed. Finke, Acta concilii constanciensis 2:582. Introduction, p. 51–52.

Utrum papa teneatur providere de uno probo viro visitatore, qui stet in Rodo ad examinandum et inquirendum transeuntes ad terram infidelium, cum multi sub tali umbra portent eis arma et alia vetita de iure, et quod peius est, abnegant pro modico fidem domini nostri Jhesu Christi.

Utrum papa teneatur providere de uno sanctifico viro, qui visitet insulas infidelium ad corroborandum cor credentium detentorum vel ibidem Deo deserviencium et ad [add: terras] scismaticorum, sicut tenet ibidem collectorem ad capiendum spolia. Et sic videtur, quod non sit mentio de fide set de bursa.

Utrum papa debeat recipere spolia prelatorum et aliorum, qui non moriuntur in curia, cum de ipsis spoliis possent in plerisque locis scribi libri, emi calices, missalia, indumenta, paramenta et pauperibus distribui et resarciri ecclesia et coperiri, de quibus omnibus diverse indigent. Set peius est, tales collectores non satisfaciunt servitoribus defuncti set illa portant parentibus suis, filiis et filiabus, et papa habet quandoque minorem partem in bursa, maius dampnum in consciencia; super hiis bene et laudabiliter providit recolende memorie d. Alexander V, Pisis, que servare noluit eius successor. Narrent illi de lingua Ocitana, in Francia, Lodone [better: Lodove] in Provincia et in pluribus locis.

6. Agenda of the University of Paris for the Council of Constance

Ed. Finke, Acta concilii constanciensis 2:623–624. Introduction, p. 52–53.

Cum per papam facta reservacio ac exactio et perceptio procuracionum ordinariis et aliis inferioribus prelatibus debitarum ratione visitacionis, necnon et spoliolum decedencium prelatorum aliorumque clericorum gravia eccle-siis, monasteriis ac aliis beneficiis ecclesiasticisque personis afferant detrimenta, presenti declaramus edicto rationi fore consentaneum et rei publice accomodum tales per papam [add: factas] reservationes ac per collectores et alios auctoritate apostolica deputatos seu deputandos exactiones seu perceptiones de cetero nullo modo fieri seu aptemptari, quinymo procuraciones huiusmodi ac quorumcumque prelatorum eciam cardinalium vel ipsius pape familiarium, officialium et aliorum quorumvis clericorum in curia Romana vel extra ubicunque et quandocunque decedencium spolia seu bona eorum mortis tempore reperta plene et libere pertineant illis et per illos recipiantur, quibus alias prefatis reservationibus mandatis et exactionibus cessantibus competerent ac pertinere deberent. Prelatis eciam inferioribus et aliis huiusmodi spoliolum exactionem preter et contra iuris comunis formam fieri interdiciamus constitutione felicis recordacionis Bonifacii pape VIII, que incipit, Presenti, super hoc edita in suo robore duratura.

INDEX OF PERSONS IN THE CASES

A number of specialized search engines are provided in the online version this index.

This index lists all of the personal names found in the cases (2,690 as of this writing). It does not include persons for whom no element of the name is given, those identified only by office, dignity, or benefice, unless that person was also the subject of a case. The index gathers in one place all of the information found in the cases about a person and in some instances what is found in standard reference works, such as Eubel or Gallia Christiana. There are occasional notes about the identity of a person or about the benefice ascribed to him.

The index is sorted by the person's first (Christian) name. Additional names (some of which look like surnames and some of which do not) follow. The first names are in Latin; the additional names in the vernacular. Where there are additional names, alphabetization is by the main element of the additional name, ignoring, for example, 'de' and similar elements. As in the cases, persons who are not given an additional name appear before those who have the same first name and do have additional name elements. Most of such persons are prelates, or heads or former heads of religious houses. These are listed, as in the cases, in the order of the diocese in which the prelature or house was located. Unlike the cases, where they are found at the end, the index puts those people for whom there is no first name at the beginning.

The main entries are preceded by a number in square brackets carried to one digit after the decimal point, e.g. '[2662.0]'. These numbers are anchors in the HTML and may be used for referencing in the URL or searching in the browser's search engine. In the Index, however, 'no.' does not refer to these numbers but to the number of the case in the Repertory.

The information about the person, where known, appears in the following order: academic degree, benefice(s), relation(s) to others in the cases, papal office(s), 'addition' (e.g., 'cleric' or 'merchant', if the person is so described in the case), secular title, death date as precise as we can get it, the spoils-incidence of the case where the person was the subject of a case, and the role that s/he played in the case if not the subject of the case. This is followed by a list of the case numbers in which the person appears. If the person in question is the subject of the case, the case number is in boldface.

Benefices. Our definition of 'benefice' is broad. It includes, for example, members of religious houses, though these are not technically benefices. The religious order of the house is given. Where the person in question was known to be a member of a religious order, but his house is not known, the order appears after the person's name.

The medieval diocese in which the benefice was located is given as it is in the text. The modern location of the diocese is fixed on the modern location of the see, which in many cases does not include the entire territory of the diocese. Similarly, where the benefice was not diocese-wide, we have tried to give the modern location of the place where it is now found. When the name has changed, we indicate the modern place-name in square brackets preceded by 'now' or 'now in'. In the case of religious houses, 'now in' frequently means not that the religious house survives, but frequently its church, or a successor of its church, survives.

The text identifies dignitaries by diocese. We have assumed, where contrary information is not given, that the dignity was in the see of the diocese. Where the dignity was clearly not in a specific town but was not diocese-wide (archdeacons are a notable example), we have tried to indicate modern place-names that correspond to those of the dignity.

Dates of benefices. In most cases, the benefice is followed by a date. For subjects of cases, the list of benefices is fairly complete, and each date is preceded by 'from'. For persons who are not subjects of cases, the list is incomplete, and the date is the date of the person's appearance in a case, preceded by 'before'.

Relationships. We included both personal relationships, son of 'X', executor of 'Y', and official ones, predecessor or successor (in office or benefice) of 'X'. The case number in which the predecessor or successor is mentioned is given in parentheses after his name. Usually this number also appears in the references, but normally not in all of them, and in some cases we have constructed predecessors and successors on the basis of the dates even when that fact is not mentioned in the text.

Papal offices. Papal offices are also broad, ranging all the way from the pope's barber to beneficed clergy whom the pope appointed as administrators of dioceses or religious houses or cardinals. Officers of papal institutions, such as collectors for the Camera, will be found here.

Spoils incidence. The area of incidence of spoils (abbreviated 'spoils incidence') appears only for those who were the subject of cases, and only where we have reason to believe that the administration of the spoils did not take place where the subject's last benefice was located, or, in the case of those who are noted as having died in the Curia, that it did not take place in the Curia, and hence in the general area of the diocese of Avignon. The collectors paid little attention to boundaries, either secular or ecclesiastical, so an indication of the area of incidence should be taken more as an indication of the general area in which the administration of the spoils took place rather than as an indication of precisely where it took place. In particular, where a name applies both to a city and to a wider area, it should not be assumed that the administration took place only in the city. Sometimes the detail in the cases allows a more precise identification.

Roles in cases. We tried to limit the roles in cases to a few: holders of spoils, receivers of spoils, commissioners, debtors, creditors, agents, messengers, buyers, and a few odd ones. We did not include collectors where it was already noted that the person in question held that office. If a person was simply mentioned in connection with a case without it being clear what his or her role was, we left the category blank.

Place-names. Many place-names are mentioned in this index. The index is already quite long and takes a while to load on the screen. For this reason we did not include cross-references to the places (nor to the additional name elements) but these may be searched in the search engines provided.

The same abbreviations used in the Introduction and in the Cases are used in the Index.

The modern locations in the index use the following three-letter country codes: BEL = Belgium. ČES = Czech Republic. DAN = Denmark. DEU = Germany. EES = Estonia. ELL = Greece. ENG = England. ESP = Spain. FRA = France. HEL = Switzerland. HRV =

Croatia. ITA = Italy. KYP = Cyprus. LAT = Latvia. LUB = Lebanon. MAG = Hungary. MAK = Macedonia. MAL = Malta. MIS = Egypt. NOR = Norway. ÖST = Austria. POL = Poland. POR = Portugal. SCO = Scotland. SRB = Serbia. SUO = Finland. SUR = Syria. SVE = Sweden. TKM = Turkmenistan. TÜR = Turkey. WAL = Wales. YSR = Israel.

The following abbreviations are used for geographical subunits within each country (followed by the usual English translation): cant. = canton, Kanton, cantone (HEL) = canton; cit. = città metropolitana (ITA) = metropolitan city; co. = county (ENG, SCO, WAL); dép. = département (FRA) = department; pol. = pólīs (ELL) = city or town (used in preference to the larger dímos [municipality] because it more frequently contains the modern version of the name in question); dist. = distrito (POR) = district; epa. = eparchía (KYP) = district; fyl. = fylke (NOR) = county; grad (HRV) = city; il (TÜR) = province; län (SVE) = county; Land (DEU) = state; maa. = maakond (EES) = county, = maakunta (SUO) = region; meg. = megyek (MAG) = county; meh. = mehoz (YSR) = district; muh. = muḥāfazah (MIS, SUR) = governate; opš. = opština (MAK) = municipality; per. = periféreia (ELL) = province; pil. = pilseta (LAT) = municipality; pod. = podela (SRB) = division; pow. = powiat (POL) = district; prov. = provincia (ITA, ESP), = provincie, province (BEL) = province; reg. = regione (ITA), = região (POR), = region (DAN) = region; reğ = reğjun (MAL) = region; rég. = région (BEL) = region; wel. = welayat (TKM) = region; woj. = województwo (POL) = voivodeship, province; žup. = županija (HRV) = county.

No First Name

[2662.0] _____, died in the house of Ademarus Aubert at Avignon, cleric of Avignon, died before May 1355: 1340

[2663.0] _____, abbot of S. Clemente Castel del Monte or Castiglione a Casauria [prov. Barletta-Andria-Trani or prov. Pescara, ITA] (dioc. Bari or Penne-Atri), predecessor of Petrus de Cortuciis, died before Feb 1346: 1341

Benefice Note: The record suggests that we are dealing with an abbot of San Clemente in the diocese of Bari. There is not now, nor, so far as we can tell, has there ever been an abbey of San Clemente in the diocese of Bari. The abbey in Castel del Monte, which is now in the diocese of Andria, but was probably in the diocese of Bari at the time, was dedicated to Santa Maria. Perhaps the best known abbey of San Clemente is in Castiglione a Casauria (prov. Pescara, historically in the diocese of Penne-Atri). The record is wrong either in its indication of the diocese or in its indication of the name the saint to whom the abbey was dedicated. The former seems more likely.

[2664.0] _____, preceptor domus S. Antonii [not found], dioc. Béziers [dép. Hérault, FRA], died in Curia before Sep 1369: 1342

Benefice Note: This was a hospital dependent on Saint-Antoine-en-Viennois, a monastery of Augustinian hospitallers (dioc. Vienne). We have been unable to locate it other than that it was in the dioc. Béziers. It may have been in the city itself. A number of smaller hospitals were consolidated there in 1481, of which this may have been one. See Archives départementales de l'Hérault, Hôpitaux de Béziers (1337–1968).

[2665.0] _____, prior of S. Fulgence Bourges (OCSA) [dép. Cher, FRA] (dioc. Bourges), died before May 1371: 1343

[2666.0] _____, abbot of Madonna della Basilica (OSB) [now in Villa Santa Maria, prov. Chieti, ITA] (dioc. Chieti), died before Aug 1344: 1344

- [2667.0] _____, abbot of S. Reparata Marradi (OVall) [cit. Firenze, ITA] (dioc. Faenza), died before Aug 1372: 1345
- [2668.0] _____, abbot of Santa Maria di Cerrate (OSBasil) [now in Lecce, prov. Lecce, ITA] (dioc. Lecce), died before May 1346: 1346
 Benefice Note: Although administratively in Lecce, the site of the abbey, which is of considerable interest to art historians, is located some distance from the city on a road that connects Squinzano to Casalabate. Although there is little doubt that the abbey was founded or refounded by Tancredi, king of Sicily and count of Lecce, for Orthodox monks in the 12th century, the facts that Enzensberger, "Der ordo Sancti Basilii," does not list it among the Greek monasteries in Italy in this period and that the head of the house is called "abbot" not "archimandrite" suggests that the house may have been of the Latin rite in this period.
- [2669.0] _____ Aubert, prior of Bénévent (OCSA) [now Bénévent-l'Abbaye, dép. Creuse, FRA] (dioc. Limoges), brother of Audoinus Aubert, died before Dec 1348: 1347
- [2670.0] _____, prior of S. Saviourin Marseille (OSB) [dép. Bouches-du-Rhône, FRA] (dioc. Marseille), died before Dec 1342: 1348
 Benefice Note: The priory of Saint-Saviourin was located in the diocese of Cagliari, but was dependent on Saint-Victor in Marseille.
- [2671.0] _____, abbot of the monastery of S. Gennaro [not found], dioc. ?Napoli [cit. Napoli, ITA], died ca. 1363: 1349
 Benefice Note: There are numerous churches dedicated to San Gennaro in Napoli, but none, so far as we can tell, has monastic origins. There is an Abbazia di San Gennaro in Cervinara (prov. Avellino), but it does not seem to have attained abbatial status until late in the 18th century. See Parco regionale dei partenì, Abbazia di San Gennaro a Ferrari. Besides, it is today in the diocese of Benevento, and almost certainly was so in the 14th century.
- [2672.0] _____, abbot of Pinerolo (OSB) [cit. Torino, ITA] (dioc. Torino), died before Jul 1373: 1350
- [2673.0] _____, abbot of S. Maria di Ripalta (OCist) [now in Cerignola, prov. Foggia, ITA] (dioc. Troia), died before Apr 1346: 1351
- [2674.0] _____, prior of Aurel (OClun) [dép. Drôme, FRA] (dioc. Valence-Die), died before Oct 1406: 1352

- Note: G. is recorded as abbot of S. Sauveur only in 1361, the year in which he died. Gallia Christiana 6:604–605. His predecessor is recorded as being alive in 1348. Id. 6:604. Since the entry in no. 24 is dated in 16 Dec 1348, it is quite possible that the predecessor died and G. became abbot in the course of the year. It certainly seems that the “Guillelmus abb. mon. Lodonen.,” who “manualiter” paid 1500 florins to the Camera on that date is not Guillelmus de Leschemel abbot of S. Guillem du Desert (no. 534) who died 17 Mar 1348.
- [918.0] Guillelmus, abbot of Aniane (OSB) [dép. Hérault, FRA] (dioc. Maguelonne) before 28 Mar 1332, successor of Guido de Canilhac (no. 432): 432

Benefice Note: It would make sense if the abbey involved here were the same as that involved in no. 3646. The fact that it is called “de Muro,” however, is puzzling. There is a small Byzantine chapel, said to date from the Byzantine reconquest of Southern Italy, in Muro Leccese (S. M. di Miggiano), but we have been unable to find a Greek abbey, or any other kind of abbey, there. Perhaps “de Muro” is a mistake.

- [1464.0] Joannes Fournier, brother of Petrus Fournier, died before Jan 1376: 743
 Note: Joannes is called dominus, with nothing more, in the case. That honorific could be secular or religious, and the case gives us little to go on. Frater Petrus, however, who is said to be Joannes' brother is clearly a religious, and is probably monk of Semur-en-Auxois, a dependency of the abbey of Flavigny-sur-Ozerain (both dép. Côte-d'Or). Dominus Joannes may be a recently-deceased abbot of Flavigny. One cannot be sure; the fasti of the abbots of Flavigny in this period are lacunose. That the composition – a round 1000 fl., appropriate for a bishop or an abbot – is to be paid to Chaise-Dieu is easier to explain. Gregory XI had just become pope; his uncle, Clement VI, was buried at Chaise-Dieu (dép. Haute-Loire). The latter had attempted to endow Chaise-Dieu by testament, but the assets in his estate fell short of the endowment needed.

[2209.0] Petrus Tizon, bishop of Périgueux [dép. Dordogne, FRA] ca. 1372, predecessor of Elias Servient at Périgueux (no. 303), successor of Petrus Dupin at Périgueux (no. 1041), died 11 Aug 1380: 1110

Note: So far as we are aware, all episcopal lists of Périgueux combine Pierre Tizon (Tison) and Pierre Dupin (Pin), sometimes assigning one surname sometimes the other. Eubel also combines them, but, perhaps because he knew that something was wrong, does not give a surname. Our records make it clear that there were two Pierres who were bishop of Périgueux in this period. It is possible that Pierre Tizon was not provided to the see because there seems to be no record of his provision.

Benefice Note: It would make sense if the abbey involved here were the same as that involved in no. 3646. The fact that it is called "de Muro," however, is puzzling. There is a small Byzantine chapel, said to date from the Byzantine reconquest of Southern Italy, in Muro Leccese (S. M. di Miggiano), but we have been unable to find a Greek abbey, or any other kind of abbey, there. Perhaps "de Muro" is a mistake.

- [2630.0] Thomas de Negrepont, OFM, archbishop of Thiva [pol. Thíva, per. Stereá Elláda, ELL] from 1387, papal nuncio in Colossi in Rodos [presumably now pol. Ródos, per. Notíou Aigaíou, ELL], collector of Colossi in Rodos [presumably now pol. Ródos, per. Notíou Aigaíou, ELL], administrator of Nisyros [dímos Nisýrou, per. Notíou Aigaíou, ELL], died before Aug 1403: 1321
- Note: For a full account in the Introduction of the background of Case no. 1321, see Index of Proper Names, s.n. Brancacci. There is not now nor, so far as we can tell, has there ever been a place called Colossi in Rodos. The name may be synecdoche with the Colossus of Rodos, a way to distinguish the city name from that of the island, coupled with confusion and perhaps transfer with a change in gender of Colossae (near Honaz in modern Turkey).
- [2631.0] Thomas Paston, LL.D., guarantor: 1319
- [2632.0] Thomas Racani, OFM, M.Theol., bishop of Assisi [prov. Perugia, ITA] from 1369, successor of Jacobus Annibaldi (no. 655), died ca. 1374: 655

Note: Canons of the cathedral of Benevento in this period were called 'abbots'. They are not to be confused with the abbot of the Benedictine monastery of S. Sophia in Benevento, of whom there was only one at a time.

[2637.0] Thomasius Pucci, archpriest of Roseto [prov. Avellino, ITA] (dioc. Ariano), bishop of Marsi [prov. L'Aquila, ITA] from 1348, died before Oct 1363: 1323

Trasmundus

[2638.0] Trasmundus, bishop of Alife [prov. Caserta, ITA], died before 27 Sep 1345: 1324

Note: None of the episcopal lists of Alife have this man, the reality of whom and of his position can now hardly be doubted despite the fact that the papal register of 8 March 1346 appoints one Thomas to succeed one Nicolaus upon the latter's death.

Trondus

[2639.0] Trondus Gendari, archbishop of Trondheim [fyl. Trøndelag, NOR] from 1371, successor of Olafus archbishop of Trondheim (no. 957), died ca. 1381: 957

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The references in the Introduction, the Cases, and the Index of Persons use short forms that are designed to allow one to find the full references here. The numbers that follow the references are normally to columns, pages, or folios, but are to item numbers where the work uses such numbers. Where necessary, volume numbers precede such references followed by a colon. In the Bibliography, medieval and sixteenth-century authors are alphabetized by their first names, and many works that would normally be alphabetized by their titles are alphabetized by their editors to correspond with the short forms in the Introduction. Similarly, where we have used a short form in the Introduction or in the Cases that does not include the author's name, e.g., Aubert Calendar, the item is alphabetized here under the short form.

STATISTICAL TABLE

The Statistical Table is derived from an Excel spreadsheet. It may be viewed online ordered by case number, year, or diocese. The spreadsheet can also be downloaded from http://amesfoundation.law.harvard.edu/papal_spoils/2d%20ed%20STATISTICAL%20TABLE.xlsx and manipulated however the user wishes, but the source document cannot be changed.

The columns headed “diocese – region – sovereignty” tell where the burden of paying the value of the spoils presumably fell in each case (its “local incidence”); this was usually the diocese where the named person held his latest principal benefice. In some cases a patriarch or archbishop of one see was said to be “in administration,” that is, receiving the revenues, of another, more profitable or more accessible see, and the latter is usually seen to contribute the major share of the spoils.

When it appears that all or most of the person’s wealth was found at his death in the Roman Curia, or presumably came from his curial or cameral office, the region is named Curia, and the sovereignty is Papal.

A diocese which was in one of the Papal States in the fourteenth century is assigned to that State as its territory: in Italy, Campagna & Marittima (not to be confused with the modern region of Campania), Patrimony (of S. Peter in Tuscany, to include Sabina and Terra Arnulphorum), March of Ancona, Duchy of Spoleto, Duchy of Benevento, Romagna; in modern France, Comtat Venaissin. But Orange, although it lay within the boundaries of the Comtat Venaissin, was an independent principality, feudally subject to the Empire.

In the kingdom of France the boundary between Languedoc, where the popes had extensive customary privileges, and northern France, where the royal government was stricter, was somewhat vague in the fourteenth century. We divide the country coarsely, between “France south” and “France north.” The regions given for France are the twenty-two official (pre-2016) regions.

Some of the names given under sovereignty were overlordships only vaguely or theoretically. On the other hand, the dukes of Burgundy were theoretically vassals of the king of France, but we show the House of Burgundy as the practical sovereign of the territories of Flanders and Burgundy (not to be confused with Bourgogne, a region of France north, or with Franche-Comté in the Empire).

We place the metropolitan see of Bourges in France north, but all its 14th-century suffragan sees are given to France south. The twelve dioceses of the ecclesiastical province of Bourges were divided among three collectories. Bourges and Limoges made one collectory. Fairly close to each other but a considerable distance south-southeast of Bourges, the dioceses of Clermont, Le Puy, Mende, and Saint-Flour were in a second collectory. Even farther to the south and south-southwest of Bourges was a third collectory including Cahors, Tulle, Rodez, Albi, Castres, and Vabres.

In the Italian peninsula, the regions given the names of the twenty modern official regioni, whether in the Kingdom of Naples, Sicilia citra Farum, or in the changeable political mosaic of northern Italy; but the Papal States are the regions designated for the dioceses within them.
