The CH-47D. Meeting schedules to meet the need.

From the beginning, the Army's new CH-47D Chinook helicopter has met or beaten every developmental schedule... cost, time, performance. First flight was under budget and ahead of schedule. Developmental program completion continued the pattern. And prototypes met or exceeded every design goal.

Now, production is underway, upgrading Chinook As into new, high performance, high reliability models. It will continue until the entire fleet of 436 A, B, and C models is remanufactured with more reliable engines, new transmissions, fiberglass rotor blades, and modern electrical, hydraulic, and avionics systems.

Not only will the Army be getting the increased performance it needs at lower operating costs, but American taxpayers will be saved millions of dollars in investment cost. Upgrading this well-conceived and thoroughly proven design means the Army's workhorse helicopter will continue to serve with distinction into the next century. Most importantly, it means the ground commander will be getting modern, effective, logistical support. It's the result of teamwork... Boeing and Army commitment to meeting tomorrow's needs with the right equipment at the right time. The Chinook CH-47D. Meeting schedules to meet the need.

King who?

King Radio, the cost efficient company. We keep our organization lean, with a non-committee atmosphere. So decision making is timely and effective.

Our work force is stable and motivated. Our facilities, purposeful. You may not see expensive accouterments or an elaborate boardroom at King. But you will see a highly sophisticated laboratory for the manufacture of custom designed LSI chips.

And our high-volume production, strategically based in the Midwest, keeps our operational costs about the lowest in the industry.

Because at King, we believe in a single minded sense of purpose. Simply, producing high quality avionics that meet both your specifications and your cost requirements. That's why our programs are delivered within budget, without sacrificing quality.

Ask us about our military programs capability. We'll get right to the point. Write Dan Rodgers, Director Special Programs Department, King Radio Corporation, 400 North Rogers Road, Olathe, Kansas 66062. Or call (800) 255-6243. TELEX: WUD (0) 4-2299. Cable: KINGRAD.

WHEN we think about all the things that affect READINESS, training jumps to the top of any list. No one disputes the fact that fully trained personnel and units are essential to aviation readiness.

Last month, I wrote about some training challenges we will face in fielding our Advanced Attack Helicopter (AAH), and about general aviation training challenges today. You may already know my views on training. They basically concern those chain of command responsibilities necessary to effect successful individual and unit training, which include:

- .. the planning of a demanding program,
- .. reserving maximum time for actual training,
- .. fighting off "detractors" that have a tendency to ruin a good program,
- .. realistic execution,
- .. and good supervision and leadership involvement in all phases of the program.

This requires considerable resolve to overcome the many difficulties confronted in actually doing this on a day-to-day basis. Certainly we have been moving in the right direction with such programs as the Aircrew Training Manual, which links readiness directly to effective training. We must continue our efforts, if we are to measure up to what is required of us in Army Aviation.

Fortunately, we have a wealth of supporting programs in the Army that allow us to train to a level of effectiveness that does produce readiness. Most of these programs are included in one or more of the areas listed below:

AVIATION SYSTEMS: We work hard to develop, defend, and wisely spend our share of the Army budget. This allows us to conduct the research, development, acquisition, and management programs to produce and field the best possible fighting systems.

DOCTRINE DEVELOPMENT: TRADOC and their proponent schools, along with help from the entire Army, develop the doctrine and tactics to fight our systems in a manner that best counters the threat we might expect on the next battlefield.

FORCE STRUCTURE: The Division 86 and Army 90 studies evidence the Army's continuing concern to build tactical and support units that can execute projected missions.

LOGISTICS: Our efforts to provide our forces with logistical support capable of providing timely maintenance and resupply as far forward as possible is integral to every program in Army Aviation.

PERSONNEL: We continue to evaluate and improve the personnel management policies that provide for personal and professional development while offering an opportunity for every individual to make a significant contribution.

STANDARDIZATION: In the last few years, we have documented our standardization program in manuals that pertain to and are available to every Army Aviator. Improvements continue due to the recognized need and the extensive participation of every individual in the program.

SAFETY: Safety consciousness and safe practices must be integrated into every aspect of our lives and actions as we prepare to fight on the next battlefield.

All of these areas must be integrated to support training. They are the tools necessary to accomplish the TRAINING that results in READINESS and enables units to function as full members of the combined arms team.

This is the first in a series of articles in this magazine that I hope will serve to keep you updated on what is happening in Army Aviation and how current actions in each of these areas serve to enhance our training capability.

My intent is two-fold: first, to provide you with my overall perspective on the key elements of our aviation program, and secondly, and even more importantly, to use this medium to convert what may appear to be disjointed information into helpful ideas on how we can focus our efforts in training and working together to be ready to fight.

FT. RUCKER—The last L-19A model in the Army's inventory is shown at Guthrie Field prior to Army Aviation Museum exhibit preparations. The plane was flown from Ft. Lewis after a 34.7-hour trip by CW3 Minard Thompson, pilot, and CW3 George Pfromm, Ret., co-pilot. The Army trainer and observation aircraft of the '50's had been on loan to the Ft. Lewis Flying Club prior to Museum turnover.

The DA Aviation Officer

I would like to start this series by describing how I see my role as the Army Aviation Officer.

Unfortunately, it is not my only — or even my fulltime — job. I have many other responsibilities as the Deputy Director for Requirements, ODCSOPS that do not allow me to devote all the time I would like to aviation.

For some time now we have not had an Aviation Directorate on the Army Staff (ARSTAF). The responsibility for areas once concentrated in the Aviation Directorate is now scattered throughout the ARSTAF, or they are delegated to HQ TRADOC, the Aviation Center, and the other proponent centers at Forts Knox, Benning, Sill, Bliss, Huachuca, and Eustis.

Rest assured that I attempt to keep my finger on the pulse of all that is happening, and try to be an effective ARSTAF coordinator and representative for all of Army Aviation.

In addition to working directly with the Aviation Team in the Combat Division of Requirements Directorate, I meet with LTG James H. Merryman and his directors as they carry out their research, development, and acquisition responsibilities; with MG Guy S. Meloy, III on training; BG William C. Roll and BG Thomas E. Carpenter regarding personnel management; and with Mr. Joe Cribbins on all aviation logistics matters.

I see and coordinate frequently with MG Carl H. McNair, Jr. and BG Richard D. Kenyon at the Aviation Center and key aviation representatives from every major command.

With their input regarding what is happening in the field — supplemented by my own trips out to see you in action — I believe that I have good advice in almost every area. Because of this, I feel I am better able to advise the DCSOPS and the Chief of Staff on all aspects of Army Aviation.

An effective forum

A particularly effective forum that we can use in resolving key aviation issues is the U.S. Army Aviation Policy Committee prescribed in Chapter 6, AR 95-1. I am the executive chairman of this committee which includes representatives from the ARSTAF, each MACOM, and other key aviation organizations.

We meet annually to review the policies which constitute our flight standardization program, and this year we will meet in November at Fort Rucker. I encourage you to submit items for consideration to the policy committee through your local flight standardization board.

In addition, I recently established an informal "team" of the key aviation players in the Washington area. My purpose for doing so was two-fold.

First, I believe it is important for those of us who are responsible for carrying out the ARSTAF aviation functions to meet periodically and update each other on current activities, share our best thoughts and ideas on where we are — or should be — headed, and coordinate the myriad of actions for which each member is responsible. Secondly, these meetings keep me informed across the entire spectrum of aviation issues.

At our first meeting last month, I shared with the aviation "team" some of my personal concerns for Army Aviation which I also would like to pass on to you.

First, we are fortunate in that Army Aviation has the unflinching support of the very top leaders of the Army. This has been extremely visible to those of us on the ARSTAF in the past few months. As we execute our specific jobs and responsibilities, we need to "measure up" if we are to be worthy of that support and the significant part of the Army budget that funds aviation.

Secondly, we have some critical personnel policy issues that need resolution, particularly in our management plan for our current and future company grade aviators.

STOP-OVER—Some of the 185 helicopters of the 101st Abn Div, Ft. Campbell, KY, rev up at Ft. Rucker's Shell Field while en route to Eglin AFB, site of Bold Eagle 82, a joint Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps exercise. The aircraft were refueled and the crews rested during their stop at Shell Oct. 23.

We must work together to resolve the uncertainties that remain in the career program.

Thirdly, my experience as a field commander and recent impressions from talking to many of you is that we need to keep you better informed regarding what is happening in Army Aviation, where we're headed, and how we hope to get there — while at the same time seeking your ideas and suggestions.

I plan to tackle that through this medium and all others that are available to me — and I want to hear from you, too.

Lastly, but perhaps most important, we must always remember that progress is achieved through unity of goal and effort. Our strength comes from pulling together, and I will do my part to make that happen.

Toward total readiness

Looking ahead, I see specific challenges that aviation will be facing in several areas. However, I remain confident that by working together and acting with unity of purpose, we will continue to move Army Aviation toward total READINESS.

Next month I will update you on our Army Helicopter Improvement Program (AHIP) for our Scout aircraft. As you may have heard, Bell Helicopter was recently awarded the contract to produce a new Scout aircraft, and we in the aviation community are very excited about it.

ESTABLISHING an Aviation Branch requires some effort to be sure but it is certainly not impossible; otherwise, we would not have the dozen or so other branches that have popped up since World War II.

An obvious obstacle that will have to be overcome will be the temptation to conduct an infinite number of studies concerning what an aviation branch should look like. I do not believe this would be necessary if we were to remember just one simple tenet:

Today's threat requires a fully integrated Army effort that is capable of using the dimension of the battlefield in order to fight, survive, and win.

Not a secondary specialty

To accomplish this requires professionals who consider Army Aviation as their primary specialty. Considering aviation as a task that can be managed as a secondary specialty or just an additional skill is obsolete. The demands of today's complex weapon systems and the pace of modern war require far more.

To overcome some of the inertia, I offer the following ideas on what I feel an Aviation Branch should look like.

First, I would access those young officers who express a desire to accomplish the Army Aviation mission. Since all entrants do not graduate from flight school and an appreciation of the basic structure and missions of the other combat arms is desirable, I would then enroll equal proportions of newly commissioned second lieutenants into the basic infantry, armor, artillery, and air defense courses.

The old requirement of detaching regular officers out for a two-year tour gained them valuable experience in the procedures and tactics of leading troops, but it did not get them on board soon enough in the development stage of their careers as combat aviators.

However, other shorter, equally valuable opportunities exist. In all my career schooling, I have never seen a more valuable experience in developing leadership, teamwork, tactics, and stamina under duress than that offered by the Army's Ranger Course.

I feel that attendance at this (and/or the Airborne School) with their fellow "combat arms" officers should be highly encouraged . . . and then be followed by flight school.

Once these officers have completed their basic schooling, it's imperative to place them in section/platoon leader slots in TOE units — either in the ACAB or in the Air Assault Division. As lieutenants, they need time to develop their skills as aviators and just as important, gain an appreciation of the key role played by aviation warrants, the NCO's, and enlisted personnel in the latter's performance of those daily operational and maintenance activities characteristic of a well run aviation unit.

At this stage of their training, it's a fundamental responsibility of each of us who serve as their mentors to make certain they receive the proper guidance and development that will insure they do not lapse into the "garrison airfield syndrome."

Developing a sense of responsibility in our young leaders to provide only the most timely, combat effective integration of Aviation will be our greatest challenge.

The U.S. Army/Hughes AH-64A "APACHE's" on-time, on-schedule completion of the Army's Operational Test II milestone proved its troop compatibility with hands-on operation by Army personnel.

During this final demanding three-month long test, in hot (temperatures up to 114°), dusty conditions, the AH-64A demonstrated outstanding mission reliability. With all maintenance performed by Army personnel, maintenance-man-hours per flight-hour and other operational characteristics significantly bettered the stringent requirements for the Army's new anti-armor system.

In OT II Army pilots logged over 400 flight hours in day/night operations of AH-64A's, bringing development flight test time to over 3,200 hours. The APACHE . . . fully tested . . . transitioning to production.

THE intent of this article is to voice support for and concurrence with Major Michael V. Stratton's viewpoint expressed in the 30 June 1981 issue of Army Aviation Magazine.

Major Stratton expresses a concern deeply felt by many of our officers who, by virtue of their acquired technical and tactical Aviation expertise, are no longer associated with or managed by any Branch.

For the past several years, it has been recognized that Aviation officers require management independent of previously acquired branch associations. They are being managed by a separate section of the Combat Arms Division with supposedly equal status but without branch designation.

The Bottom Line

With recognition as a combat arm, a separate but equal management structure, acceptance as an initial entry specialty, and "branchless" status, the question we all should be asking is not "Why have" but rather "Why not have an Aviation Branch?"

With the exception of branch intensive schooling, we have an ideal situation for

SCIENCE/SCOPE

Not even the darkest night will help enemy troops hide from the U.S. Army Cobra attack helicopter, once an infrared sensor is added to the helicopter's telescopic sight unit. The sensor is a forward-looking infrared (FLIR) receiver, which creates TV-like pictures by detecting small differences in temperatures of objects in a scene. It gives the gunner a clear, bright picture -- despite darkness, smoke, camouflage, or haze -- so he can accurately fire TOW anti-tank missiles, rockets, and guns.

Hughes developed the unit, called the FLIR Augmented Cobra TOW Sight (FACTS), using the Army's FLIR common modules. The next step for FACTS will be a full-scale engineering development program.

Airborne TOW anti-tank missiles scored 100 percent hits in 11 firings from a West German BO-105 CB helicopter. The tests, held at the West German armed forces firing range at Meppen, were designed to evaluate the TOW sight control. The helicopter was flown by Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blohm pilots. Two company technicians acted as gunners after only two hours of airborne instruction. One had never fired a weapon before.

Firings were made from as far away as 3200 meters, well under the maximum range of 3750 meters. Hughes has delivered more than 1000 airborne TOW (Tube-launched, Optically tracked, Wire-guided) systems for installation on eight types of foreign and U.S.-built helicopters.

"Train More": Increasing training rates would provide a solution but, after study, was not really practical. The high cost notwithstanding, it was unrealistic due to the limited training facilities. Fort Rucker was already at near capacity, and the limited expansion that could be accomplished would infringe on the "reserve" space that has been set aside pending the outcome of negotiations between services to have Fort Rucker assume the training role for Naval helicopter pilots.

"Recall More": When loss projections showed the decline in the AWO population, the aviation MOSs were open to recall of retirees and prior service pilots. The initial forecasts, however, were soon tempered by reality. The retiree recall program was short term in nature and the pool of those interested and qualified was limited.

The remnants of the 1960's aren't getting any younger and, coupled with the restricted training during the '70s, have resulted in a small population available for voluntary recall.

In all, both of these programs have fallen short of target goals and have provided an interim solution at best.

"Retain More": Retention was the most viable course open to the Army.

The incentives necessary to make it work were available. Most importantly, retention offered a way of saving the experience and skills of the aviation warrant officer . . . experience that could only be gained over problem. Their findings substantially confirmed what the Major Commands and the Army had "known" but were unable to prove (Figure 3). Finally then, we had an outline of the specific concerns, irritants, and dissatisfiers that could be linked to warrant officer retention . . . a starting point for action.

The first steps

The initial thrust of the programs developed were aimed at the top ten factors influencing aviation warrant officers to leave the service. Since the

the years and skills that training alone could never equal.

A starting point

Once the Army was committed to retention, some questions had to be answered.

What was causing our aviation warrants to leave the service?

What actions could we reasonably take to stem the attrition of our aviators?

In answer to the first question, the Commanding General, U.S. Army MILPERCEN, wrote a letter to all Major Commanders soliciting their views. A list of seven major irritants was compiled from their responses. This list provided a good starting point, but more detailed substantiation was required.

The Army Research Institute was then tasked to study the aviation warrant officer retention stated purpose of the study was to determine why losses were occurring, the initial programs had to reflect the Army's concerns and provide some immediate results that would demonstrate the Army's commitment to the Warrant Officer Corps.

WARRANT OFFICER INITIATIVES INITIAL PROGRAMS

FACTOR UNEQUAL FLIGHT PAY (WO VS COMMISSIONED)

PROPOSAL STAFFED IN DOD. INCLUDE IN 82 BUDGET

STATUS EQUALIZATION PASSED, EFFECTIVE 1 OCT 1981

"Flight Pay Equalization": Prior to the publication of the final ARI results, flight pay equalization emerged as the single leading issue. This single factor was a strong emotional issue, far surpassing the monetary considerations. Credibility of the retention effort dictated that one of the first initiatives taken should be directed at resolving this pay inequality.

An October 1981 law

Following DOD staffing, this key proposal was included in the recent Military Pay Bill and subsequently became law in October 1981. We had a lot of help on this one, in particular the Nat'l Board of the Army Aviation Association of America (AAAA) helped to advance the equality by working informally within the Army family.

Many thanks are due to folks in AAAA like John Marr, MG George Beatty, MG Carl McNair, Art Kesten, LTG Harry Kinard, and LTG Bob Williams. The individual who probably did the most was CW4 Jerry Yates, in the Office of Congressional Legislative Liaison (OCLL). Thanks to all!

"Leadership and Supervision": By far, the majority of concerns expressed reflected the AWO's concern with leadership and supervision at all levels. Much of the detailed explanation that supported these "general dissatisfiers" reflected on the assignment process and those at Department of the Army who were charged with career management.

Factors such as a lack of concern for the individual, a lack of opportunity for desirable installation assignment, and a lack of predictability of a future in the Army could be addressed. A review of management practices within Warrant Officer Division showed many "in-house" factors.

Reorganized by MOS

In an effort to resolve these issues, the Aviation Assignments Branch was reorganized to control assignments by military occupational specialty (MOS) rather than geographically. This action oriented the assignment managers on people rather than on installations.

Along with this, replacement personnel coming into MILPERCEN were chosen from experienced personnel within the MOS being controlled. This enhanced credibility by insuring that when a COBRA pilot, for example, called to talk with his career manager, he would be talking with someone who had spent an entire career in the same business.

The second phase of reorganization was the restructuring of the Professional Development Branch. Prior to this, professional development equated to "schooling". Under the reorganization, the Professional Development Branch will deal with future plans and programs. This will include a Warrant Officer Continuation Model to accurately predict the life cycle of the Corps, developing a five year promotion plan, and increased emphasis on automated data processing.

In other words, we'll do a better job of meeting future requirements instead of reacting to these requirements annually. (More details on this may be found in this issue's related article "Warrant Officer Division: More Than A New Look").

"Inadequate Pay": At the time the Army Research Institute study was conducted, the military as a whole was struggling under the results of several years of capped pay. This was clearly an issue over which Department of the Army had little control.

Soon after the study was completed, the Nunn-Warner Pay Bill was passed, providing some relief to all ranks. As of 1 October, a substantial pay raise was voted in by Congress. The results of these actions have, in essence, resolved this issue in the near term and no other actions are contemplated. (Figure 5).

"Aircraft Tracking": The idea of spending an entire career in a single aircraft was a source of irritation for those AWO's perceived "better treatment" being given to AWO's flying cargo and fixed wing aircraft. This perception was particularly held by those pulling repeated tours in attack or utility aircraft.

In tackling this issue, the main consideration was our continued ability to meet the needs of the commanders in the field while developing a program which addressed the aspirations of the individual. As a result, a program was developed to allow "top file" aviators the opportunity to apply voluntarily for CH-47 or fixed wing transition training.

In these instances, applicants are selected by a five member Department of the Army Board. If selected, they are scheduled for attendance at the appropriate school. However, acceptance in this program does not guarantee that attendees will never return to their primary aircraft, but the program does allow for rotational utilization between aircraft.

"Position Grading": Getting the right man in the right job has always been the key to job satisfaction. Of all the issues, this one IS the key to retention!

Several studies have been conducted on the grading of warrant officer positions — each with the same result, i.e., the disadvantages far outnumbered the gains made.

Adopting a graded position system would mean strict limitations on grades authorized leading to reduced promotions. Since many of the key positions are located overseas, this would also mean that with the recognition of a person's accomplishments in the form of promotion, we would "award" our senior warrants with a one-way ticket overseas until retirement.

It was obvious that this was not a solution. An alternative to grading all warrant positions which addresses the job satisfaction issue more directly is the Warrant Officer Senior Course graduate assignment system. Since distribution of our Warrant Officer Senior Course (WOSC) graduates would be equitable, there would be a "fair share" of graduates assigned to all commands, and allow normal tour rotations and a variety of challenges in the 61 warrant officer specialties. The system employs an additional skill identifier (ASI), 4A, to be awarded to each WOSC graduate.

Key positions identified

Key positions within each major command are being identified that will provide challenges to those who eventually fill them and will also be coded for this ASI. The "first cut" has been forwarded to the Major Commands and the Service School proponents for their input. It's expected that the final listing of some 1,200 positions can be coordinated soon after the first of the year with the first assignments being made by mid-1982.

Continuing progress

Many of the related issues could not be directly addressed. Attitudes held by both the warrant officers and their commissioned counterparts had been developed over long periods of time. How do you change attitudes overnight? The answer is: You don't!

Yet, these were the changes that needed to be made. A program to increase the recognition of the warrant officer and to insure that his professional development continued to meet his personal needs and the needs of the Army was started. In capsule form, the programs include:

"Concurrent Travel": Since May 1981, CW4's receive concurrent travel enroute to Europe. This aligns the senior warrant officer with the top commissioned and enlisted grades.

"Field Grade Housing": Since the CW4 is predominantly a more mature officer, his peer group's life style and family makeup at the upper years of service are vastly different from those of the younger, company grade officers.

Starting in July 1981, CW4's have been eligible for field grade quarters at all overseas stations and most CONUS installations.

"Department of the Army Staff Representation": The Warrant Officer Management Officer of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel has been redesignated for fill by a warrant officer. Established in September 1980, this position allows direct input on matters affecting the entire Warrant Officer Corps at Department of the Army Staff level.

"Presidential Appointments": The Army is currently the only arm of the military service that does not provide for "commissioned" warrant officers. A legislative change has been drafted to correct this, providing for presidential appointments of Army Warrant Officers at the grade of CW2.

This change will provide Army Warrant

Officers with the ability to administer oaths, swear people into the service, and serve as Commanders with UCMJ authority.

"The Warrant Office Orientation Course": Since the majority of warrant officers are directly appointed from the enlisted ranks, they learn their responsibilities as officers through trial and error. In March 1981, the two week Warrant Officer Orientation Course was started to provide for the transition from enlisted to officer status.

"Additional Warrant Officer Advanced Courses": Two major changes are currently working that will affect the warrant officer advanced courses. Prior to this year (Fiscal Year 1982), 17 warrant officer MOS's did not have an advanced course.

Between appointment, training, and selection for attendance at the Warrant Officer Senior Course, major changes can occur in any given field. The addition of advanced training for these fields fills this gap and insures that our warrants will stay up to date and provide the best service to the Army.

Following a review of all advanced courses, it was determined that only 50% of those selected attended due to PCS constraints. We're actively seeking funds for the 1983 fiscal year to allow TDY and the return of warrant officers so that eventually, 100% of our warrants will attend the advanced course.

Looking to the future

As I stated at the beginning of this article, the Army Warrant Officer has been serving since 1918. Progress has been slow in the intervening 63 years. The gains made over the past two years represent a new commitment to the warrant officer and to his future in the Army.

In particular, the Aviation Warrant Officer has proven himself to be a vital part of Army Aviation and the combat arms team. The changes represented in these programs are not static, rather they are a part of an ongoing program to strengthen the WO Corps and to preserve our aviation expertise to meet the demands of tomorrow.

WARRANT OFFICER DIVISION ORGANIZATION (PRIOR)

warrants to view the DA manager as an adversary — someone who was unwilling to help. Since many of the more desirable installation assignments called for fixed wing aviators, many saw the similarity between those making the assignments and those getting the "better" jobs as an in-house club. This further estranged the general aviation warrant from his branch.

"Lack of Predictability of a Future in the Army": Since its initial formation in 1975, Warrant Officer Division has been lagging behind the commissioned officer assignment divisions in many areas.

"Lack of Predictability of a Future in the Army": Since its initial formation in 1975, Warrant Officer Division has been lagging behind the commissioned officer assignment divisions in many areas.

Warrant Officer Division had limited historical data upon which to base any future projections and were relegated to reacting to changing requirements and forecasting the future on a "best guess" basis. Many inquiries from the field could not be answered with any certainty: "When will I be eligible for promotion? . . . for schooling? . . . for advanced or senior course selection?"

Even the future of the Warrant Officer Corps concerning accessions, retention, and all the other basic information necessary to plan for a future were cloaked in uncertainty. The subsequent inability to support what the future looked like struck a nerve among the warrant officer population.

Close evaluation of the specifics that caused many of our aviation warrants to separate from the service led to a careful review of the organization of the Warrant Officer Division (Figure 1).

Many of the concerns raised valid questions. The time had come for action, not reaction. Changes were carefully planned and in January 1981 were implemented.

Aviation Assignments Branch

Many of the concerns expressed revolved around aviation assignments and the organization of the career managers. In order to more effectively meet the needs of the aviation population, each position within Aviation Assignments Branch was reviewed to determine the functions

AVIATION ASSIGNMENTS BRANCH (REORGANIZED)

necessary to effectively manage the force.

Since the career needs of the aviation warrants are relatively unique in comparison to the majority of the Corps, the first step taken was to encapsule aviation assignments as a separate branch within Warrant Officer Division.

The senior warrant was designated the Branch Chief and tasked with the job of overall coordination. Credibility of the Division equated to consistency — this was one of the major functions of the newly designated Chief, Aviation Assignments Branch.

His goal was uniform application of assignment policies, insuring equal opportunity for assignment locations, tour rotation, adherence to written internal and external policies, and, most importantly, insuring that the internal functions of the branch reflected the consonance of action that was necessary to manage the aviation warrant officer population.

His secondary function, equally important, was to oversee strength management. As the overall coordinator, he was in the best position to insure that each major command received their full share of not only personnel, but also the requisite skills needed for full effectiveness.

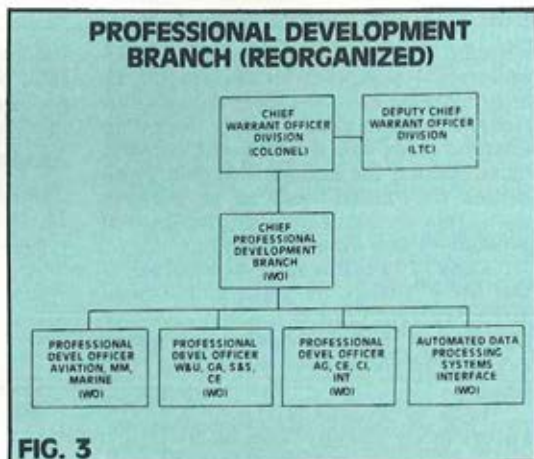

This centralization of strength management relieved the individual career manager of this time consuming task and freed him to devote more time to the professional outlook of his client population.

The career managers were reorganized to control assignments by military occupational specialty (MOS). The single exception was the 100B (Observation/Utility Helicopter Pilot) population which was extremely large. This group was divided between two adjacent managers, one controlling overseas assignments and the other CONUS assignments.

Through close coordination, both managers maintain a working knowledge of each other's functions so that either can answer queries from the field. Each manager now has the responsibility of looking after his personnel for all career needs:

utilization and assignments, voluntary indefinite status requests, civil schooling, and functional training requests. Currently, CH-47 (Cargo Helicopter) qualification course and Fixed Wing Multi-engine qualification course requests are DA Board actions. While the career manager has no direct input, he is the action officer for insuring that individual requests are considered in a timely manner and, for those selected, that the appropriate functional training is scheduled.

The involvement of the career manager with his population is central to the credibility issue. For this reason, the career manager is included in all actions which pertain to individuals he controls. From reviewing personnel action requests such as compassionate reassignments and entrance to the Exceptional Dependents Program to personally reviewing each efficiency report, the career manager gains a "whole man" portrait of individuals in his account.

This expanded picture of each person aids in understanding individuals in his account. This expanded picture of each person aids in understanding the needs of the individual and allows for the most effective use of each individual's strengths.

Equally important, as the sole supervisor for a career field, each manager becomes intimately familiar with the types of organizations that he must support. This unique combination of knowledge — knowing the man and knowing the requirements — allows for the blending of needs and desires to project the most favorable assignment and utilization of the individual aviator.

Under current limitations, the end result is not necessarily the envisioned goal. Aviation warrant officers are still assigned to "the front door" of installations. Closer coordination, through the addition of warrant officer aviators in personnel management positions at major installations, is a step in providing the needed involvement at the organization level to insure long range job satisfaction.

Individual interaction sought

Personal communication is encouraged between the career manager and the individuals who he controls, for it is the individual interaction that will insure the fulfillment of the personal needs of the aviation warrant officer and the needs of the Army.

PIOTRKOW TRYBUNALSKI (Delayed)—COL John W. Oswalt, Ret., center, Manager of the U.S. Helicopter Team, holds the Team Trophy that was presented to the U.S. for National Team—First Place. He's assisted by Roy Mann, left, USHT coach, who'd just received symbolic flowers in a previous ceremony. The managers of the British and German Teams are shown in the background.

The second step in meeting the needs of our aviation warrant officers was to carefully screen prospective replacements to insure that each major portion of the aviation community was represented. The idea of each manager having "walked in the shoes" of his managed population strengthens credibility and, more importantly, provides the manager with an in depth understanding of the desires and needs of his people.

When, for example, a 100E (COBRA pilot) calls and his manager's orientation is based on 15 years' experience as a cargo helicopter pilot, the lack of appreciation and experience for each other's background increases the likelihood of misunderstanding. This disparity can lead to false perceptions by both parties.

Since January 1981, the individual career managers who have been assigned to Warrant Officer Division reflect this positive movement. The experience and background of the career directors truly represent the people whose careers they control.

The transition to this new organization was completed in February 1981. Initial reactions and feedback from the field support the feeling that Warrant Officer Division is on the right track.

Profess'l Development Branch

Having made positive strides in the present, Warrant Officer Division next moved to new realms by focusing on the future. Concurrent with the formation of the Aviation Assignments Branch, the Professional Development Branch was reorganized and restructured. Prior to this change, professional development consisted of civil and military schooling . . . in many cases as an after thought in the assignment process.

Little thought was given to utilization or meeting the desires of the individual or the needs of the gaining unit. It was not uncommon for an aviation warrant to receive functional training, such as an instructor pilot course, only to arrive at his new unit and find that he was one of six IPs on hand.

The skills that he had gained were necessary to Army Aviation . . . but NOT at the location at which he ultimately arrived.

This dichotomy of projecting assignments and training, each being made in relative independence of each other, was inefficient and a source of frustration to the aviation warrant officer who lived with the reality of such a system.

The function of selection for training has been passed to the career manager who has the knowledge of the unit's needs and the individual's needs, and has contact with the personnel managers to coordinate the fulfillment of the assignment goal: placing the properly trained person in the right job.

Training space coordination

To provide for responsiveness to the career managers and a central point for coordination of training spaces to insure maximum utilization of available training, the control of the training allocations has been retained in the Professional Development Branch.

No longer involved in the selection process, Professional Development Branch has the sole function of insuring that sufficient training spaces are available to meet the requirements of the Army in both aviation and non-aviation skills.

Professional Development Branch's new missions are to look to the future of the Warrant Officer Corps by developing new programs to insure that the warrant officer of tomorrow is ready to meet any new challenges, to insure that newly established programs are followed up so that the results match the goals, and to insure that the information needed to plan for the future is available.

With the restructuring of the Branch to functional subdivisions, Professional Development Branch has been expanded from three to five officers. A highly visible change has been the conversion of the Professional Development Branch Chief position to a warrant officer position.

A primary part of the professional development function is supplying information to the field on the warrant officer program and separating the fact from fiction on what a warrant officer is and what role he plays in the Army.

With the Professional Development

HONORED BY AAAA—CW3 John B. Sauser, the Distinguished Graduate of Aviation Warrant Officer Advance Class 81-2, holds the wall plaque he received from the Army Aviation Ass'n on his graduation on Oct. 9. He is the son of COL and Mrs. Clare W. Sauser of Phoenixville, PA.

Branch performing as the spokesman of warrant officers at Department of the Army level, it was decided that when the warrant officer program was to be briefed, then warrant officers would do the talking. This has led to warrant officers becoming an integral part of the current professional development review being conducted at proponent Service Schools.

The restructuring of the Professional Development Branch was made along functional lines. Three professional development officers, chosen as representative of the 13 career fields in which warrant officers are divided, were designated as the single points of contact for specific MOS's.

This provided the field with specific persons to address problem areas and request information from concerning each career field. Through close involvement with proponent service schools, new programs can be accessed and channels of communication opened to continue the forward progress of the warrant officer program.

Information provided during reviews include in depth information on personnel, training, promotions, problem areas, and solutions. The resulting dialogue has led to innovations within many fields.

An example is the current proposal to establish a training program for the reclassification of grounded aviators into the marine operations field.

While still being formalized, this program has been accepted and details are being finalized. This action will provide expanded alternatives for the grounded aviator and fill a critical need of the Army.

A separate internal element of the Professional Development Branch provides a new orientation and direction to the Division. The assignment 741A, Automated Data Processing Technician, has allowed Warrant Officer Division to begin seeking answers to the future questions.

Current projects include projecting a five-year promotion plan to accurately predict what future requirements are, what the zones will be, and how we can meet our grade authorizations.

Also being developed is a continuation model so that basic questions relating to accessions and separations can be answered so that the future Army requirements can be met. Critical to the career satisfaction issue of the aviation warrant officer is the projection of additional skill requirements.

The need to determine what Army Aviation will require tomorrow in terms of safety personnel, maintenance officers, flight instructors, and instrument examiners is paramount in programming personnel and requirements to meet those needs. Developing new information and control systems is equally important so that future assignments can be controlled to reflect the needs of these skills and not simply in response to a request for some primary MOS.

More Than A New Look

Warrant Officer Division has undergone major changes in the past year . . . changes that impact on both today and the future of the Warrant Officer Corps. Not a cosmetic change, Warrant Officer Division has re-oriented itself on the people it supports while seeking to fulfill the Army's mission needs.

The changes that have been made are active . . . and are designed to reflect the positive progress of the warrant officer program. It reflects professionals dealing with professionals.

ESTABLISHING A BRANCH

incorporating our Aviation Officers into a new Aviation Branch.

Aviation technology is exploding. The UH-60 is arriving in field units. The CH-47 modernization program is underway. The YAH-64 will become a reality in the near future. Deficiencies in our Scout helicopter have resulted in the Near Term Scout Helicopter (NTSM) and AHIP.

These and other major advances in technology will dictate large changes in Aviation operations. Tacticians and logisticians will be required to respond with new tactics, incorporating ever increasing Aviation capabilities, to better integrate Army Aviation into the combined arms team.

A need for aviation expertise

Aviation officers have been and continue to be well trained, in detail, in technical areas of great importance to individual branches; but only remotely directed towards aviation tactics, functions and operations.

As a brief example; the correct methods of employing indirect fire support means in support of a Joint Air Attack Team (JAAT) is important to Aviation Units. However, the details of artillery fire direction, firing battery, and survey are best left to those fully vested in the Artillery, the branch responsible for those procedures.

ACTIVATION—Shown at the October 1 activation of the Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Chapter of AAAA where he was guest speaker, MG Carl H. McNair, Jr., is flanked by Jack Cosgrove, right Chapter President, and Dick Derr, Senior VP. The turnout for the initial meeting of AAAA's newest Chapter was excellent with 42 attendees hearing General McNair's update.

Our Aviation officers do not need to be experts in artillery gunnery, but they do need, for instance, to be educated in AIMI management, budgeting, aircraft maintenance, and trained in the employment of the JAAT.

Branch material Aviation Basic and Advanced courses would concentrate on Aviation matters essential to managing and training Aviation units while still being able to insure general knowledge of the pertinent operational functions of other branches. The result would be a capable Aviation officer, well versed in other branches who is able to efficiently integrate Aviation into the Combined Arms Team.

Need for an equal footing

Army Aviation, a combat arm, is growing in capability and must be integrated into the combined arms team whose charter is to fight and win. In order to best select, train, and use the officers who will integrate Army Aviation to the best advantage of the combined arms team, there must be an Aviation branch established on an equal footing with the combat branches, complete with the required schooling essential to fully train our aviators for both aviation command and staff positions.

Army Aviators are justifiably proud of their accomplishments, excited about their increased capabilities, and anxious to do their part to insure the Army's success in land combat. They deserve their own branch as surely as do their combat arms associates.

TEAC offers congratulations to Bell Helicopter Textron, recent winners of the Army's NTSH contract, with their proposal for refurb and update of their OH-58 Scout Helicopter.

Next step—let the Air Crew combine the value of real-time scouting observation with the safety of re-masked analysis, the latter via Airborne Video Tape Recorder; and retain for "seconds-after" debrief when the mission is over.

AAAA: For the pro's

"Support it!" urges MG Carl McNair, USAAVNC Commander

AFTER a good year of sustained AAAA membership growth in 1980 and a spirited competition among Chapters, we are now midway towards our April 1982 National Convention in St. Louis where our Chapters will again be recognized for their performance in 1981.

Results are heartening in some cases as Chapters have registered increases of over 50%. In fact, of all Chapters worldwide, 23 have gained in total membership.

The bad news is that 19 Chapters have lost members. But on the plus side, two more Chapters, Stuttgart and Mount Rainier (Ft. Lewis), have moved into the Large Chapter category with over 150 members — so there is real progress being made.

During the year, we have seen renewed emphasis and interest at many posts and six Chapters have been rejuvenated due to the enthusiasm and initiative of the aviation units and personnel there.

A forum for communications

I have had occasion to visit a number of these installations and activities and find that AAAA has given them another forum for communications and professional development.

Not only do Chapter activities provide a social setting among a group of aviation personnel, but more importantly, the AAAA Chapter provides a setting and medium for professional presentations and dialogue. Such sessions are what can make or break a Chapter.

Those with good programs consistently draw good attendance and new members. Conversely, those Chapters that have stagnated and do not hold any professional sessions quickly lose their membership and their very purpose for being.

Into which category does your Chapter fit, a growing one or a dormant one?

There are many tremendous and exciting things going on in Army Aviation and many ways to keep abreast of them. AAAA Chapter meetings are one way.

Personnel, Materiel, Operations — all lend themselves to Chapter programs. The DARCOM Project Managers and the TRADOC Systems Managers (TSM) are anxious to keep you informed on the latest status of their programs.

The AHIP contract award, the AH-64 APACHE OT II, UH-60A the BLACK HAWK fielding, and CH-47D production all have a special interest to each of us.

Meanwhile, each of the contractors involved in long range research and development of new systems and subsystems have an interesting message to tell on what they are doing to support our future needs — one man cockpit displays, advanced composite aircraft, advanced technology demonstrator engines and a myriad of other new developments.

And how about the great success of the U.S. Helicopter Team in the World Championships in Poland? Our Army members of that team have a real story to tell about how they trained for and won that Championship. I have heard their briefing and it is a real experience worth sharing with our Chapters at every opportunity.

So take a look at your Chapter programming for the next few months and see if your programs are meeting the needs of your membership.

Beyond these mentioned, there should be a family event once a year, such as a picnic, Air Fair, or outing and perhaps a husband and wife dinner program to keep the spouses informed and involved.

Each Chapter has its own unique personality by virtue of its location and personnel, hence what works and interests one may not be equally appealing to another, but the Chapter officers are well prepared to make those determinations. The key is to be active, to be visible, and to be professional.

Army Aviation will be well served by your actions and initiatives to keep our aviation force, both military and civilian associates thereof, well informed and moving ahead.

Membership in AAAA is only a small part of our overall professionalism equation, but certainly an outward sign and a very visible indicator of the support our profession enjoys from within and without.

When is the last time you asked a fellow aviator, crewmember or civilian associate to join the AAAA or attend a meeting with you?

Try it soon! You will find there will be a lot of folks out there who will be "Glad you asked!"

With your support and cooperation, good Chapter programming, and continued member enthusiasm, AAAA should have another banner year.

With your help, every member get a member, we will break the 10,000 member mark for 1982.

OBIGGS (ON BOARD INERT GAS GENERATING SYSTEM)

TODAY'S TECHNOLOGY FOR BATTLEFIELD SURVIVABILITY

An inert gas unit program for U.S. Army helicopters has been jointly initiated by the Aircraft Survivability Equipment Project Office, Advanced Attack Helicopter Project Office, with the Applied Technology Laboratory as the lead agency.

The Army awarded Bendix Instruments & Life Support Division a contract for system design and fabrication of three prototype generic fuel tank inert gas units.

Over the past 15 years, Bendix I&LSD has carried out a continuous series of development programs relating to aircraft on board gas generating systems. This effort has resulted in contracts for on board oxygen and inert gas generating systems programs for the Army, Navy and Air Force. For information concerning inert gas generation contact:

HI-TEX—the superior structural carbon fiber from HITCO.

HI-TEX® is produced in Regular Grade and also in a superior High-Strength Grade of top quality structural carbon fiber.

In composites, HI-TEX offers highly balanced fiber properties through HITCO's advance fiber and resin technology. The result is exceptional translation values. For example, the HI-TEX High-Strength Grade exhibits a strain-to-failure minimum of 1.5%.

HITCO is ready

After 7 years of successful development in pilot facilities, HITCO is ready. A new full-scale California plant is devoted to production of regular and high-strength grades of HI-TEX structural carbon fiber. Attention to quality control helps assure a superior product you can depend on.

We are also proud that HI-TEX is the only structural carbon fiber completely developed and produced by Americans. We are ready!

HI-TEX is a new product of HITCO Materials Group, produced by its Structural Carbon Fibers Division and marketed by its Materials Division: Dept. HM-131, 1600 W. 135th Street, Gardena, CA 90249. 213/321-8080, Ext. 407.

any other combat arms career course would be taught, with the same branch representation on the faculty, but with the instruction keying on the development of the tactics, doctrine, and skills required to integrate combat aviation effectively into any task force commander's tactical plan. (Note: I did not say ground commander.)

At this stage in their Army careers, i.e., as graduates of the Aviation Advanced Course, they'd have the necessary background and expertise to serve in an extremely effective manner as aviation platoon leaders, operations officers, and battalion staff officers.

As they matured in the management of our aviation assets through their experiences as flight leaders, air mission commanders, and ground liaison officers, we would have groomed in them the prequisites of a company commander, an extremely critical position.*

The aviation commander — more than any other individual — guarantees the safe, professional application of the principles of Army Aviation in order for it to be a recognized, effective member of the total force.

As majors and graduates of the various command and staff schools, their contributions would continue, either in the aviation field or in their alternate specialty.

Like their fellow combat arms officers, their presence would continue to provide those skills required to meet the Army's requirements — as battalion commanders, higher level staff officers, logisticians, project managers, future ACAB members, and ultimately as generals in the highest echelons of the Army.

*The idea of permanent TOE, O-3 slots for company-sized units, using them in the manner of Air Force FAC's when in direct support, should be given serious thought . . . CBC.

This top-ranking military jetprop is volunteering for more special missions.

Beechcraft's rugged C-12 jetprop has earned its military stripes as a hardworking military transport. Its turboprop economy has been saving money for the Army, Air Force and Navy and Marines all over the world. In addition, the C-12 has gained an enviable reputation for reliability.

Now it's ready for more special assignments.

With available installations for aerial surveillance, tactical field support, ECM, photography, Infra-Red,

Side Looking Radar (SLAR), remote sensing, and many others, this versatile aircraft offers a broad range of mission capabilities.

And because many of these special equipment packages can be quickly removed or converted, one C-12 airframe can be used to fill the roles of several special missions aircraft.

In addition, the comprehensive Beech logistics support program now assumes total responsibility for all on-site maintenance, crew training, parts inventory, and worldwide technical service. As a result, the C-12 continues to deliver operational readiness rates well in excess of 90%.

If your command could use a special mission support system with this kind of multi-role capability, write Beech Aircraft Corporation, Aerospace Programs, Wichita, Kansas 67201.

"We aim to win!"

SECRETARY Marsh, General Meyer, distinguished Army members of the United States World Championship Helicopter Team, ladies and gentlemen.

The decision to participate in international competition is easy if a victory such as you earned in August at the Piotrkow Trybunalski Aerodrome is assured beforehand. Guarantees like that are not possible, however.

Hence, the decision to compete involved the risk of not placing well, and, therefore, the decision generated a lot of pressure on every member of the team because when Americans decide to compete, we aim to win.

In your preparation you had to compensate for the fact that this nation does not maintain special schools or continuous training geared explicitly to competition — as some other nations do. This was our first entry into the World Helicopter Championships, and the learning curve had to be steep.

"A piece of cake"

Today, there is a lot of confidence out there in the Army. For many of you I know this was always "a piece of cake."

Innate abilities, however, even of the variety that exist in Army Aviation — "earning its wings every day" — can be upset by inattention to detail: the specifics of the contest rules, the on-the-spot judgments on the finer points of each day's trials, the tension of the grading process itself. An organization's poise and performance are continually challenged.

The U.S. Team met that challenge. Your
