INTRODUCTION

THIS guide has been compiled by Barningham parishioners in the hope that it proves of interest to fellow villagers and local historians, and helpful to anyone researching their family history. A further, more detailed record of each memorial, including photographs, is available for inspection in the church.

The notes on church history are based on articles written by J Merryne Watson for the Barningham Parish Magazine in the early 1970s but not included in his excellent history of Barningham, As Time Passed By (1997). Additional comments by the editor are shown in square brackets.

The list of memorials amends and updates a list compiled by the Cleveland, North Yorkshire & South Durham Family History Society in 1989, with further research by the late Alan Railton. We are grateful to the Society and Mrs Doreen Railton for their help in completing the list. Thanks are also due to the staff at Durham County Records Office for their cheerful assistance.

If you are searching for information about someone buried at Barningham, start with the A-Z of all burials. If the person is mentioned on a memorial, you will find a grave number and a reference to the grave's position on the maps at the end of this file. Look up the grave in the list of memorials, where you will find details of the memorial, its inscription, and other information.

A note on dates: until 1752, New Year's Day was March 25 and the parish registers reflect this. This should be born in mind when you see dates between January 1 and March 24, which are recorded in the registers and in this booklet as being in what we would now regard as the previous year: an entry dated 28/02/1712, for example, is in fact February 28th 1713 by today's calendar.

We have made every effort to make sure these lists are accurate, but do get in touch with us if you have suggestions for corrections, amendments or additions.

BARNINGHAM'S CHURCHES

By J. MERRYNE WATSON

THE SAXONS: Canon Gough's lost stone

IT is a reasonable assumption that no church was standing in Barningham at the time of the Domesday Survey in 1086. Had there been one, I feel sure that the detail-conscious commissioners would have recorded the fact as, for example, they did in the case of Startforth.

The lack of any mention in Domesday does not imply that there had never been one there before the great survey. It is possible that there existed a Saxon church which was subsequently destroyed by Scandinavian invaders during the long wars before Canute won the throne.

In 1816 when Dr Thomas D. Whitaker, author of the History of Richmondshire first published in 1823, visited Barningham he inspected the site of the old church and the progress in building the present day structure. He wrote as follows:

“When I saw Barningham in 1816 the parish church had been pulled down, and fragments of strong groutwork were lying in large coherent masses, displaced with difficulty to make room for the flimsy erection of the present day; but amongst these had just been turned up a Saxon cross with its characteristic scrollwork, which had been buried in the groundwork of the last fabric... Such crosses as these are always antecedent to the conquest... It will follow that the cross in question had survived the Danish rampage; but, when the church was rebuilt after the time of Domesday, having perhaps been thrown down and afterwards neglected, this ancient relic had been tumbled into the deep foundation of the later work.”

The cross which Whitaker saw in 1816 was illustrated by an engraving in W. Hylton Langstaffe's Richmondshire, its Ancient Lords and Edifices, first published in 1852. Langstaffe writes: “There is... a coffin-shaped stone, about four feet long, and as far as accumulated soil and grass enabled me to judge, not more than three and a half inches to four inches thick. It is covered with bold knot work, and is perhaps a Saxon coffin lid.” (The scale provided for the engraving appears incorrect, suggesting a length of nearly eight feet).

In the Rectory files there appears a detailed pen and ink sketch of a Saxon stone coffin lid, which was clearly copied from this book. The complex scroll work is clearly shown but I can see no suggestion of a Saxon cross in the design. A portion of the pattern near the head of the coffin lid is shown in the sketch as being worn away. It appears as a narrow path, frequently used over the ages, and it suggests to me that the lid once formed part of the floor of a church. Then above the sketch, in Canon Gough's hand, appears the sad note: “I have not been able to discover the coffin lid. It must be buried by grass. August, 1892.”

W. G. Collingwood comments on the gravestone in his Anglian and Anglo-Danish Sculpture in the North Riding of Yorkshire, published by J. Whitehead and Son in Leeds in 1907. Reproducing an article which first appeared in the Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, he says: “A ‘Saxon’ coffin lid was found in 1816, mentioned by Whitaker and engraved in Longstaffe's Darlington, p 215, 4ft long bearing a thick strap interlaced with a narrow strap; not now at Barningham.”

Frederick Burgess, writing about cross slabs in his English Churchyard Memorials (Lutterworth Press, 1963), says: “The majority of our native slabs are rectangular, have slightly curved sides, varying from three to six feet in length bearing long-shafted crosses with plain or plaited-work backgrounds... others have no cross, but a continuous spread of interlace, such as Barningham (found in 1816 but since lost).”

At a much later date, 1927, the head of a cross was exposed during grave digging operations. The circular section on which the cross is carved, eleven inches in diameter, is of crude and utilitarian workmanship. This relic is now carefully preserved in the south side of the sanctuary. Although first believed to be Saxon, it is now more likely to have been set up in the churchyard during the early years of the church’s history, possibly during the 12th or 13th century.

The discovery of these relics does point to the existence of a Saxon church, serving an old ecclesiastical area known in Saxon times and onwards as a parish, possibly not dissimilar to the present-day parish of Barningham. Further it would seem that the site of this church coincided, or very nearly so, with that of the old church which was demolished in 1816, that is, a little to the south of the present building.

It would have been very small, the population being few and widespread, possibly constructed of timber, and probably of characteristic Saxon design – two rectangles of unequal size linked by an arch, with the smaller rectangle to the east. I will not hazard a guess of the date of its foundation, but if the church was destroyed by hordes of heathen Danish jarls then this tragic event must have taken place before Canute ascended the throne in 1016.

In Canon Gough’s memorial gravestone (in the south-west section of the churchyard) the Saxon memory is perpetuated. It is a tall and graceful Saxon cross, the front decorated with abstract interlacing carving, while the circle around the arms of the small cross introduces the Celtic symbol for Eternity.

[In a later note, Merryne says that he should properly have referred to ‘Anglian’ rather than ‘Saxon’ remains: it was the Angles who colonised North-east Britain from East Anglia to the Firth of Forth, while Saxons conquered southern Britain. He also admits that his earlier belief in a pre-Norman church was based on ‘very slender evidence’ – the coffin slab “Anglian in all probability”, discovered in 1816 and now missing for well over a century.]

THE NORMANS: The first known church

IN the Domesday Book (1086) entry against Barningham, after brief reference to areas of cultivable land and forest, appears the ominous remark: “It is waste”.

At the time of the survey the Northern countryside had clearly not recovered from Norman William’s ‘harrying of the North’ in 1069 as a reprisal for the rebellion of the Saxon Earls Edwin and Morcar. Between York and Durham he left no house standing and no human being alive that his horsemen could search out. The Conqueror’s curse was truly upon the North.

It would have taken a number of years before the growth of population coupled with the expansion of agriculture could have warranted the building of a church and the exact date of its foundation is not known. However, from the available records it is apparent that in 1186 Roger de Mowbray was the Lord of part of the feudal Manor of Barningham and that one of his tenants was Walter Bardolph, who included in his tenancy the Church of Barningham. Roger, as an act of piety, granted to the Prior of Guisborough all those lands which were leased to Walter and this grant would have included the advowson [the right to recommend or appoint clergy] of Barningham Church.

Roger died in about 1188. In 1213 Hugh Bardolph, nephew of Walter, claimed the right of presentation of Barningham from the Prior of the Gilbertine Priory of Malton, founded between 1147 and 1154, but in 1214 Hugh relinquished his claim to the advowson which then passed to the canons of Malton. Then, as though by a pre-arranged plan, it was transferred to the Prior of Guisborough, in whose hands it remained until the Dissolution.

From this feudal labyrinth of land law and custom it is clear that the church at Barningham must have been built before 1188 when Roger de Mowbray died. Henry II came to the throne in 1154 and reigned until 1189. He brought law and peace to the country after Stephen, whose reign has been described as a chaos of pillage and bloodshed and therefore not the most opportune time for church building, although a hundred new monastic foundations were made. I favour the view that the church was built during the reign of Henry II, possibly about 1170.

In one of the documents dated 1213, a rector of Barningham is mentioned by name for the first time, William de Ridale. He may possibly have been the first rector, but I rather suspect there was one or possibly two before him although their names have not been recorded.

Although the church was in use for over 600 years, it does not appear to have been depicted either in a painting or an engraving, nor has it been described in print. That it was in a very parlous state towards the end of its existence in 1816 is made evident from the churchwarden's account books which date back to 1732. Although no doubt between 1170 and 1816 the church underwent many modifications, it is possible to obtain an idea of some of its more outstanding features from a careful study of the churchwarden's records.

There is mention of repairs to a steeple; almost certainly this was a small bell-cote which after 1690 at the latest housed two bells. One of these is dated 1690 and carried the inscription "R. Pake. T. Appleby. Jonathan Lowe Rector". The other, probably of the same date, is uninscribed. Both these bells are now in the tower of the present church but only one is now in use. The purchase of new bell ropes and repairs to the bell 'swaipe' (the swiipe or bell lever) are frequent entries in the accounts and this suggests they were outside and exposed to the weather, as would be the case with a bell-cote. During the 15 years 1732-1747 the churchwardens found it necessary to purchase 12 new ropes.

In 1733 there was an important meeting of the churchwardens to decide the action to be taken over the roof, which apparently was in a very poor state. It was finally agreed to undertake extensive repair work and to this end 1453 lb of lead were purchased. At 7 lb per square foot, this amount would cover approximately 207 sq ft, so it is evident that there was no question of replacing all the lead of the old roof. In 1813 the advisability of selling the lead and replacing it with slates was considered, and this suggests that despite the repairs carried out 80 years previously the roof still presented a problem.

In 1776 a sundial was attached to the south wall, possibly over the door. Outside, too, there was a mounting block which does not appear to have been particularly robust.

Within the church there was a gallery which together with its stairs demanded the frequent attention of the carpenter, who was also called in at various times to repair the clerk's pew, provide a sounding board over the pulpit, make a reading desk and a stand for the Homily Book. The interior appears to have been very plain and austere, one of the few decorations, if not the only one, being a framed list of the 'Degrees of Marriage', the table of Kindred and Affinity. The walls were whitewashed at regular intervals and afterwards the interior received a thorough cleaning at the hands of the sexton's wife. An examination of the outer walls of the present church reveals a number of individual whitewashed stones. These, of course, were originally part of the interior walls of the old church, and that they still carry a visible coating of whitewash after some 160 years' exposure to the weather speaks highly of both material and workmanship.

I very much doubt that the church was heated at all, although in 1785 a vestry chimney was built and after that date there are the occasional payments for coal for the vestry, eg "paid for two ass loads of coal for the vestry, 2shs, 8d". This suggests that the vestry at least was supplied with a fire towards the end of the life of the church.

In the churchwarden's accounts no reference is made to any form of musical instrument and from this I conclude that all singing was unaccompanied.

From all these brief references to various features of the church we can build up a picture of a small, rather unpretentious but not unattractive building in semi-Norman style, with a short bell-gable at the West end designed to take two bells, a few narrow windows glazed with plane glass and a flat-pitched lead roof. Within, austere whitewashed walls, a small rickety gallery, box-pews, utilitarian church furniture, probably an aisle-less nave and possibly a Norman arch between nave and chancel. It may have had a flat ceiling but I think not.

FRESH START: The new church, 1816

IN the early years of the 19th century it became all too apparent to the rector, the Rev Dr Samuel Swire, his churchwardens and parishioners that the time had arrived to take drastic action over the dilapidated condition of their church.

To this end two architects, Mr Ralph Chambers of Greta Bridge and Mr Addison of Raby, were invited to prepare plans both for the repair and restoration of the existing church and for the building of a completely new edifice. At a meeting of the churchwardens and parishioners, with the rector in the chair, held on February 14th 1814, the plans of the architects were considered and afterwards by a majority opinion it was decided that, as it was about £80 cheaper to repair the old church, to adopt this course.

However, it is clear from the minutes that there was an element of doubt as to whether they had made the correct decision, so it was unanimously agreed to hold a further meeting to finalise the matter at a later date. Then at a meeting on September 5th 1814 it was agreed with one accord to reverse the decision of the previous meeting and to build a completely new church, accepting the offer of Mr Chambers to undertake the work for £610. By 1816 the old Norman church was but a heap of rubble. As far as I can tell from the minutes of the vestry meetings, the last service to be held in the old Norman church was on Christmas Day 1815. Thereafter for the next 20 months or so, while the new church was under construction, services were held in "Mr Milbank's new granary". By July 1817, with the exception of minor details, Mr Chambers had completed his task and an entirely new edifice, erected on a site a few yards north of the old church, awaited its congregation.

Even in 1817, it is surprising that £610 provided such a substantial building, although the historian Dr T. D. Whitaker who saw it in the course of construction in 1816 considered it "a flimsy erection". As the restoration of 1891 did little to alter the outer fabric of the church I consider his criticism invalid.

It is possible to obtain a clear picture of the church before 1891, both the interior and exterior, from a few photographs taken by E. Yeoman of Barnard Castle in 1890, which now hang in the vestry [2009 note: only one pre-1890 photo remains, showing the exterior. The picture of the old interior has been removed and its whereabouts are unknown].

The outward appearance was very similar to today but more simple in detail. For example, the battlements on top of the tower less elaborate, there were no gargoyles, and there was no gable cross at the east end. The six windows of the nave each consisted of three lights as at present but they were devoid of tracery work. There were no windows in the chancel except the large plain east window divided into five lights by four mullions.

The first stage of the tower was lit by particularly large windows, presumably to provide light to those climbing up the tower stairs to enter the small gallery (when full it held 27 persons). The entrance door was on the west side of the tower – surely inviting draughts to enter the body of the church. It was certainly a wise move to place it on the south side. There were two small arched windows in the west wall of the nave, one on each side of the tower, to provide light to the back of the gallery.

The interior suggests that the architect believed in the law of restriction: anything more than is necessary is too much! It was essentially very simple, and due to the ceiling almost hall-like. The chancel and the nave were both on the same level, the chancel being ten feet shorter than it is at present. The arch between the two appears to be particularly narrow and greatly restricting the view from the nave to the altar.

All the walls were plastered and distempered in a light shade and there was a frieze consisting of religious quotations running round the top of the walls of the nave and around the window arches. On the north side of the east window there appears to be a large frame which I suspect enclosed the ten commandments. The only stained glass windows were the Johnson window on the east and the Hutchinson window in the centre of the south wall. The tracery which adorns the upper part of these windows was added in 1891.

In the nave, box pews to seat 169 persons were provided, each one identified by a brass number (a gift from Mr James Todd). Access was from a central aisle and two narrow aisles on the north and south. The allocation of the new pews required understanding and tact and the Vestry meeting invited the Rev Gibson of Brignall, the Rev Bowness of Rokeby and Mr Thomas Lax of Kirby Ravensworth to undertake the assignment.

The church furniture was provided by Mr Chambers and was of a very utilitarian design; the churchwarden's accounts include the purchase of a basin for the font at a cost of 1sh 6d. The makeshift vestry was tucked away in the south-west corner of the chancel.

During the first 55-odd years of the church's life I suspect that the singing of the congregation was led by a violinist: how else to explain the purchase of violin strings in the accounts? The first record of payment to an organ blower is in 1875 and this provides a hint as to when the first organ was purchased. When the present fine organ was installed in 1899, the old instrument was advertised for sale as a small organ suitable for use in a mission church or chapel.

I hope I have not given the impression of a drab featureless church, as this is very far from my intention. I think that when it was new and in a good state of repair it must have possessed abundant charm and character, its basic simplicity and neatness greatly contributing towards this. That over the years it was allowed to fall into a shocking state of neglect and dilapidation is beyond dispute: the photograph provides ample evidence of this. There is no simple explanation for this negligence, but Barningham was certainly not a unique case. However, when drastic action became necessary, the boundless enthusiasm of Canon Gough took up the challenge with the result that is familiar to us all. Before restoration in 1890 the interior of the church was described as lacking any architectural features. Nevertheless I believe that had it been restored to its 1817 condition and had it received the same standard of maintenance and care that the church at present enjoys, then today it would have been regarded as a rare and unique gem of an early 19th century country church.

MAKING GOOD: Restoration, 1890

CANON Gough, rector of Barningham 1889-1924, recorded that when he took over the church it was “in a very dilapidated and dirty condition”. He immediately initiated a Church Restoration Fund and plans for restoration work were presented to and approved by a Vestry meeting in September 1890. Services moved temporarily into the school room and work began the following November.

The man responsible for the restoration was J. P. Pritchett, a distinguished Darlington church architect who had built up an enviable reputation, his most notable work being the church of St Nicholas, built 1857-58 in the Market Place of Durham City. His plans did not affect to any marked extent the exterior appearance of the church; indeed, the roof of Westmorland slate was not removed. It was the interior which underwent a complete transformation.

Briefly the changes were as follows:

1. The gallery was dismantled;
2. The ceiling was removed and the central sections of the cross beams cut away and replaced by curved braces and hammer beams, thus converting it into an open roof of the perpendicular or 15th century period;
3. The chancel was narrowed by the erection of walls to form vestries and an organ chamber at the sides and at the same time increased in length by ten feet, with a large open arch between it and the nave;
4. The nave was similarly narrowed by erecting pillars and arches so as to form a narrow aisle at each side, and the floor of the chancel was raised by stages, placing the altar table five steps above the nave;
5. The old high-backed box pews were replaced by low and open seats of yellow pine, stained and dull varnished dark oak (the wood from the old pews was used to panel the sides of the nave) and new chancel stalls and a prayerdesk, with carved poppy heads, all in Austrian oak, were provided;
6. The very plain windows were replaced with somewhat larger ones and tracery added. Two new stained glass windows were added to the north wall while the remaining windows were decorated with cathedral tinted glass. The east window was reduced in height and a reredos in Austrian oak placed below;
7. The church was provided with a hot water system.

The total cost of restoration, purchase of fixtures, bank charges, etc, was £1,708.15.1d and the parish was faced with the very formidable task of raising this amount. However, the fund was substantially boosted by donations from Sir Frederick Milbank and his relative the Duke of Cleveland, and, in the words of the Teesdale Mercury, “from the peer to the peasant, everybody gave of his substance freely and the whole body of the parishioners took the liveliest possible interest in the work of restoration.”

A mammoth two-day sale of work in Barnard Castle raised £295 (the North Eastern Railway offered a travel discount to anyone with an advance ticket for the sale) and by May 1894 the rector was able to make the gratifying announcement that the fund was completely clear of debt. On Saturday September 26th 1891 the church was reopened for worship, the sermon in the first service being delivered by the Lord Bishop of Ripon before a large congregation and many clergy from surrounding parishes.

Only one major item was now required. In 1897 the Church Jubilee Fund was launched for the purpose of purchasing an organ worthy of the new church. By July 1899 sufficient funds had been collected to allow Messrs Foster and Andrews of Hull to commence installation of a fine instrument complete with two manuals and separate pedal organ. On August 14th it was dedicated by the Bishop of Richmond and by the end of the year the total cost, about £280, had been raised.

FITTING TRIBUTES: The Furnishings

ALMOST all the furnishings were provided in the form of gifts around the time of the restoration and although there is little of great historical significance they exhibit good taste in design and display considerable artistic merit and skilful workmanship. They include:

Octagonal marble font. This bears the legend: "In memory of John Edward Johnson Esq, died Nov 15th 1868, aged 64 years. President of the Royal Hospitals of Bridewell and Bethlehem, JP and DL for the County of Surrey." Johnson belonged to a Newsham family. The font was one of the few items in the church before the restoration.

Carved oak pulpit. A small brass plate states: "To the Glory of God and in memory of the Rev Thomas Collins Rector of this Parish from April 1816 to May 1829. Given by his five surviving daughters." Collins was the first rector to officiate in the new church.

Litany Desk. Engraved in memory of Edwin Spencer Gough, rector 1889-1924.

Carved oak lectern. Given by James Midgley of Leeds, probably a friend of Canon Gough from his days in Leeds. The two brass candle brackets were given in 1923 by Mrs Thompson of East Boldon in memory of her father.

Hymn Board. "In memory of a beloved sister Easter 1910. E.J.G.". Given by Miss E J Gough, sister of the rector, in memory of their sister Mrs E M Lowen.

Carved oak screen. Erected in memory of Frederick Acclom Milbank, first baronet, by his family and dedicated in 1898.

Credence table. Made by Charles Brown, Barningham estate carpenter in 1926.

Brass chandelier. Inscribed "Mark Milbank Esq, 1738". Mark was the son of Acclom Milbank who in about 1690 settled in Barningham Park, acquired from the Tunstalls of Scargill. The only son of Acclom to survive into manhood, he did not marry and on his death the estate passed to his cousin Mark of Thorp Perrow.

Brass altar cross. Given by Mrs Powlett Milbank at the time of the church restoration. Daughter of Sir Richard Green-Price of Presteign, she became Lady Milbank when her husband became the second baronet in 1898.

Brass standard candlesticks. In memory of Powlett Charles John Milbank, second baronet.

Brass altar desk. Presented by Elizabeth Jane Gough in memory of her parents Ann Sarah and Godwin Twizell Gough, 1891.

Chancel curtains. Given in 1891 by Powlett Charles John Milbank.

Communion Plate. 1. Silver chalice and paten inscribed 1671. Made by John Plummer, silversmith of York; 2. Silver chalice dated 1792, the gift of the Rev William Moore; 3. Silver credence paten, marked IC (Isaac Cookson of Newcastle) and year-marked for 1730; 4. Private communion cup of Indian silver, bought by Canon Gough in Bombay in 1903 and presented to the church; 5. Silver flagon inscribed (in Latin) as the gift of rector's wife Elizabeth Swire in 1820.

Altar Service Book and Book of Common Prayer. Given by Sir Frederick and Lady Milbank to mark their 50th wedding anniversary 1955.

Lectern Bible. Given in memory of Sir Frederick, died 1964, by his wife Dorothy.

Litany Service Book. Given by the children of Canon Gough, c1924.

Millenium Wall Hanging. Created in 2000 by parishioners of all ages and ability from Barningham, Newsham and Scargill to mark the new century, this pictorial map hanging on the west wall shows many features of the area, with the names of those involved in the project embroidered upon it. It was dedicated on May 27th 2001 by the Bishop of Ripon and Leeds.

STAINED GLASS WINDOWS

North Wall. Centre bay: in memory of Henry Milbank, died 1862; given by his brother Frederick 1891. East bay: in memory of George Whitaker 60th Rifles, died Gibraltar 1890; given by his cousins Alice Dale, Minnie Milbank and Harriet Everett Gray 1891.

South Wall. Centre bay: in memory of William and Ann Hutchinson of Earby; given by their children 1872. Below is a tablet commemorating ten Hutchinson children born between 1801 and 1818. East bay: erected by Emily Johnson in memory her husband Edward, died 1868, and his sister Maria, died 1879.

South Wall. West bay: added 1891 or later: no record of donor.

East Window. Erected by Frederick and Powlett Milbank in memory of Harry Vane Milbank, a noted duellist who married the legendary beauty Alice Sidonie de Belleruche and died childless in 1892, predeceasing his father.

Porch. The original window, badly in need of repair after a century and more of wind and rain penetration, was replaced in 2008 with modern stained glass. The theme chosen was Christian marriage, the porch being where the bride stood awaiting her wedding and the west window the one she and her new husband saw as they walked down the aisle afterwards. It was designed by Joanna Hedley, using floral details symbolizing marriage, and paid for by the generosity of many people who had married in the church and other patrons and friends, It was dedicated on October 8th 2008 by the Bishop of Knaresborough.

THE CHURCHYARD

FEW gravestones date back more than 300 years but there are a number of interesting and curious features.

The gateway at the village end of the walled passage to the churchyard is surmounted by a stone archway commemorating Lady Augusta Henrietta Milbank, who died in 1874 (see photograph on Page 6).

At the churchyard end of the passageway, on the western side, part of a small stone grave slab bearing the outline of a cross has been used as a coign stone in the wall.

Inside the churchyard, to the west of the gateway, four early 18th century headstones lean against the wall. These are discussed later on.

Beyond them are two wedge-shaped slabs propped against the wall. The larger of the two, lying on its side, is now quite featureless but no doubt at one time bore some kind of inscription. It is undoubtedly very old, possibly 13th century.

The other, standing upright, has at some time been broken and the lower third is missing. It is some 18 inches across and 37 inches in length, the outer edges being chamfered. The unusual six-armed floral cross in relief is easily recognised within the panel at the head of the slab and the upright of the cross clearly continues in outline to its base.

It is now impossible to decipher the inscribed symbols on either side of the cross upright. Fortunately some years ago [around 1945] Mr R.H.Eddlestone FSA made rubbings of this and two other stones and published illustrations in the journal of the Teesdale Record Society.

From the rubbing of the floral cross it is evident that on the right there is the outline of a sword, while on the left there is a strange hammer-like symbol, possibly a spade or mattock, with the thick handle bending towards the cross upright.

A grave slab bearing a floral cross and sword, almost an exact replica of the above but showing considerably less wear and therefore probably not quite so old, has been used as a coign stone in the south-east corner of the house known as Sunnyside. It is probable that the better preserved slab once covered the grave of the son or grandson of the individual at one time buried beneath the slab now in the churchyard.

It is quite impossible to give a date to these grave stones, probably about the 14th or 15th century. [P.F. Ryder, in notes accompanying his drawings of this stone and others in the parish magazine of November 1986, said the cross form was of a distinctive local type and also seen at Wycliffe, Thorpe Hall, Kirkby Ravensworth and Scruton; he suggested all might be the work of the same mason and gave a date of around 1300.]

A few yards to the north lie a group of three grave slabs (pictured overleaf) which have clearly been collected together and placed in their present position sometime in the past. The two outer stones are very similar in shape, being slightly rounded at their heads (west), about 29 inches in width, tapering to 24 inches over a length of 76 inches. It is just possible to make out part of a cross in relief on the slab on the south of the group. The middle stone is narrower and more prominently wedge-shaped but is now devoid of any markings.

Mr Eddlestone describes the slab on the north side as “very uncommon”. Standing at the east end, the cross with its long upright is clear but the three steps at its base representing faith, hope and charity are fast disappearing. On the observer’s left is a sword with a shield, just below its hilt, over it.

At the base of the cross are what appear to be two dogs with floppy, rather spaniel-like ears and wide collars round their necks. Longstaffe thought they were bears “perhaps the pun of some de Barningham” (the village name being derived from Anglian words meaning the hamlet of the people of the bear) but the rubbing clearly shows not only the ears and collars but some very unbear-like tails. The strange design in relief over the upper part of the cross upright consists of a gloved left hand holding a falcon, the bird facing westwards, its tail – very similar to that of a fish – pointing to the east. The design can best be viewed from the south side of the slab.

Mr Eddlestone believed this to be the grave cover of a falconer, possibly of the 13th century. Mr David Cobham, son of a former rector, a producer of wildlife films for television and a student of falconry, told me the appropriate bird for a falconer with the social status of a knight or an esquire was the male peregrine or tercel, which the bird on the slab appears to be (the female, or falcon, somewhat smaller than the male, was assigned to a person of higher social rank).

Mr Ryder commented that similar birds occur on other Teesdale cross slabs at Aycliffe, Middleton St George and Winston. Mr Eddlestone noted that this grave “is on the site of the nave of the old church”; if this is correct, then when he saw it it must have been some yards further north-east that it is now.

Immediately north of, and adjacent to, the large rectangular Milbank tomb to the south of the church is another rectangular stone slab, its longer side running east-west, and I suspect it occupies its original position in what was once the chancel of the old church. That it covers the grave of a priest is very evident as the outline of a chalice with its base towards the east can still be recognised. At the west end there is a narrow panel containing two lines of lettering, little of which remains except the deeply incised strokes of the letters.

Mr Michael Kirby [former curator of the Bowes Museum] has been able to recognise a number of words and where the letters have been completely eroded away has interposed appropriate words so that his final rendering is in the format of a typical inscription found on a priest's tomb of that period. Mr Kirby's interpretation is:

HIC REQUESCAT THOMAS MESSAGE QUONDAM RECTOR HUIUS ECCLESIAE QUI OBIIT ..... ANNO MDIII CUIUS ANIMAE PROPRIETUR DEUS

(Here lies Thomas Message, sometime rector of this parish, who died... 1503, whose soul belongs to God).

There is conclusive evidence that a Thomas Message was rector in 1488. The space where the day and month of death would normally have been written is very worn and to insert any details would be flagrant guesswork. The space, also very severely worn, between the O of ANNO and the digits III can only accommodate two Roman numerals. The first must be M for 1,000; the second can, therefore, only be D for 500, making the date 1503. This contradicts both Longstaffe, who states that the slab covers the grave of Thomas Messenger, rector who died in 1394, but I can find no reference to such a rector. Eddlestone gives the date "c1477".

One final point: the lettering on the tomb is read from the west end and from this position the chalice appears upside down.

Readers may find it difficult to understand why it is that there are only six memorial grave slabs associated with the long period from the foundation of the church to the end of the 17th century, a span of 50 years. Some grave slabs were undoubtedly filched for wall building and house construction, but the real explanation is that very few persons, indeed only the most eminent, were honoured with an incised grave slab and such would have usually been interred within the church walls. In a small township such as Barningham, the occasion when a man of distinction and great social status was to be buried in the church would have been very rare.

The three most interesting grave slabs, the floral cross and those of the priest and the falconer, appear to have deteriorated more rapidly in recent years. It could be that they once covered the graves of persons buried in the church and were therefore protected from the weather until the church demolition in 1816.

From the early 18th century the churchyard developed as we know it today and the use of gravestones, particularly the upright headstones, spread to all those who could afford it. The greater proportion of them, certainly up to the 20th century, are in the form of upright monuments with rounded tops or variations on this basic design.

One of the earliest headstones, if not the earliest, is among the four propped against the south-west wall. I suspect all these stones were once standing on the south side of the old church, and moved when it was demolished. It was erected to the memory of a young woman, Elizabeth Rudd, born in 1683, who died in 1707 aged 24. The melancholy epitaph is not easy to read, particularly as the engraver, perhaps a somewhat inexperienced local mason, had no hesitation in splitting a word of one syllable if he was unable to fit it all in one line.

Engraving on both sides of a tombstone is not very common. An interesting example is that of Robert Moss (1829) of Scargill, his wife Emma and family. If the seven children who died in infancy are included, the tombstone commemorates 16 persons. Another example is that of George Hawden (1799) and his family, which included three teenage children who all died in 1819.

The table tomb and the chest tomb came into vogue in the latter half of the 18th century and there are some of both in the churchyard. The imposing table tomb with its rounded ends, each bearing a brief epitaph, erected to the memory of George Heslop (1768) is a fine example of the first type.

The remains of four one-time prominent Barningham families – Fryer, Hanby, Newby and Todd – were placed in chest tombs, all very plain and unadorned.

A large raised rectangular tomb built of stone with coping along its edges commemorates all the members of the first family of Milbanks to live at Barningham. It stands approximately on what was once the chancel floor of the Norman church and was, presumably, built in 1816 or shortly after, either to house the relics from the family vault which existed in the old building but was likely to have been severely disturbed at the time of demolition, or merely to cover the site of the family burials exposed to the open air with the disappearance of the old church.

The inscribed stone on the flat top of the tomb is, I suspect, contemporaneous with it but the wording would appear to have been copied from the original vault cover. It commemorates Aclam Milbank (1704), listing his two wives and 11 children. His second wife, Anne Davidson, was only about 15 when she married and sadly was destined to supplement the family vault almost as regularly as she replenished the cradle: only one of the eight children she bore her husband survived childhood. The sole survivor, Mark, was a somewhat eccentric individual, and insisted that no relations, only servants attending his body, were admitted to his funeral in 1758.

In the Victorian era, churchyard monuments in the neo-classical style made their appearance but there are only two examples at Barningham, both urns, one draped – urns are emblematic containers of ashes – perched on the top of tall pillars.

Another form of memorial associated with the Victorians is the horizontal tombstone, an imitation of the gothic style rising in a series of steps and having a cross with narrow arms and long upright lying on the top. There are nine such monuments; in the western section a group of four marks the burial of the Holmes family, while to the east of the path to the church two Glovers are commemorated. A third nearby marks the grave of William Littlefair, who served the Milbank family for over 50 years.

The dignified plain Latin cross, frequently mounted on a pedestal of three steps and then known as the Calvary Cross, belongs to the end of the 19th century and to modern times, and crosses are most numerous in parts of the churchyard last to be used for burials. There are a few examples of modern representations of the Celtic cross in the churchyard, including the memorial over the grave of Canon Gough, a combination of the small Anglian cross and the Celtic circle of eternity.

The War Memorial cross occupies a commanding site on the western side of the churchyard. It was unveiled by Sir Frederick Milbank on June 15th 1920 before a very large gathering, including many relatives of the 15 Barningham men who gave their lives in the 1914-18 War and whose names appear on the base. In 2009 parishioners raised funds to add the names of those who sacrificed their lives in the 1939-45 conflict. There is a memorial on Newsham village green recording their losses in both wars.

It was not until the 20th century that the area immediately north of the church was used for burials. In medieval times this section of the churchyard, in the shadow of the church and receiving little sunshine, was regarded as the perquisite of the powers of darkness and therefore shunned as being improper for Christian burial.

However, as space elsewhere ran out and superstitious fears diminished, the area was finally brought into use, and by the 1980s it was clear this, too, would soon be full. As a result an overflow burial ground was created in 1987 in the small triangular field north of the churchyard, land given to the church by Stan Maude in memory of his parents James and Mary Jane. Its first grave was that of Joan Smith who died in 1988. A score of others have since joined her, including, it has been noted, three former local publicans resting close together.

...AND THE REST

THERE have been 3,895 recorded burials in Barningham since registers began in 1582 – an average of about nine a year. Of these, 890 are mentioned on memorials to be found today: the other 3,005 graves went unmarked or had memorials that have since disappeared.

BARNINGHAM BURIALS A-Z

BELOW is a list of everyone recorded as being buried in Barningham since surviving burial registers began in 1582, plus the names of people mentioned on graveyard memorials but not, as far as is known, actually buried there.

The list is organised as follows:

Surname	First name	Memorial number	Graveyard grid reference
DEPAR,	Ted	99 2/4/1719 Bar	†523 #F-8 [f Fred; Innkeeper]
Age at death	Date of death or burial	Abode at time of death	Details of parents, occupa- tion, or other information

Surnames in brackets indicate a maiden or married name. BWM indicates a name on the Barningham War Memorial, NWM a name on the War Memorial at Newsham.

Question marks indicate missing information, and a single asterisk (eg *1) indicate extra details given as footnotes at the end of the list. Double asterisks after a burial date indicate a cremation. BD1823 indicates a reference in Baines's Directory of 1823; BD1890 a reference in Bulmer's Directory of Trades and Professions for 1890.

If you are trying to trace a grave, find the name in the list. If a grave exists (shown by a †), note the number and the grid reference (#), and then check its location on the graveyard maps. People often used grandparents' or maiden surnames as second Christian names for their children, and it may be worth trawling through the list for further links. Check, too, for alternative spellings of surnames: Kipling, for example, appears also as Keplane, Keplen, Kipling and Kyplin.

GRAVEYARD MEMORIALS

HERE they lie, the great and the good, lords and their labourers, parsons and paupers. We have new-born babies and aged crones, young men who gave their lives in South Africa and on the Somme, old soldiers who came home to die after distinguished careers among Gurkhas and Punjabis. The remains of powerful families – the Hanbys and the Milbanks, the Newbys and Todds – rest in elaborate tombs; lesser mortals make do with slabs of stone or simple wooden crosses.

Others were buried without any permanent memorial, and are lost forever beneath the grass. A glance at the churchyard map shows many areas which must once have been used for burials but have no visible graves today.

The earliest date on a memorial is 1503, on the supposed grave of Thomas Message (†367 – see notes on Page 19). Next is 1683, the year in which Elizabeth Rudd (†063) was born, but by the time she was buried in 1707 (“in her prime when death snatched her away”) Bartholomew Hawdon (†067) had been in his grave for seven years. He claims the distinction of being the first person whose year of death can be clearly seen in the graveyard, beating Aclam Milbank (†198) by four years. There are a handful of others from the early 18th century (†193 and †222, for example) but it was 50 years or so later before memorials starting appearing regularly.

There is no mention of any centenarian in the graveyard, but there are a fair number of people who lived into their 90s. The oldest recorded is Jessie Storrow (†285) who died in 2007 aged 99. Next is the Rev Thomas Silvester (†154) who was 98 when he died in 1910.

The number of children who went to an early grave is depressingly high; some families such as that of Robert Moss (†103) suffered so many such deaths that all were lumped together under a general “likewise of 7 children they died in infancy” note on the family memorial. Not all were from the poorest families: Aclam Milbank (†198) had seven sons and four daughters by two wives by the time he died aged only 37 in 1704, but only one boy survived to adulthood.

Some headstones hint at terrible personal tragedies. George Wilkinson of Newsham (†336) lost his first wife at the age of 28 in 1900, remarried and lost his second aged 27 three years later, and died himself, just 32, in 1905. John Coates (†129) of Park House lost his 26-year-old son in 1865, his 30-year-old second son in 1866, died himself in 1867, and was followed to the grave two months later by his 21-year-old daughter.

Deaths of teenagers and young adults were common: William and Elizabeth Hind (†197) saw all four of their daughters pre-decease them, aged 10, 15, 19 and 35, in the second quarter of the 19th century. John Siddle (†140) of Scargill buried children aged 15, 16, 17, 28 and 30 – and his wife – between 1865 and 1872. What struck down the three children of John and Jane Dodds (†231) who died aged 12, 15 and 18 in the space of 18 months between 1763 and 1765?

And what happened to Londoner John Jackson's two young sons (†240) who both died at Barningham over Christmas 1807 – were they boarders at the Academy who couldn't survive the combined rigours of a Yorkshire winter and a Yorkshire schoolmaster in the Wackford Squeers mould? They weren't the only such youngsters to die here, either: between 1764 and 1787 no fewer than ten other unfortunate schoolboys were laid to rest in the churchyard.

MEMORIALS LIST

THE numbering order is based on the list compiled by the 1989 survey by the Cleveland, North Yorkshire and South Durham Family History Society, which began with memorials inside the church (numbers 001 to 030) and then covered the churchyard.

The outside list started at the northern gateway, criss-crossing north-south towards the western boundary four times (031 to 096) before moving to the north-west corner and criss-crossing north-south back towards the church until it reached the War Memorial area (097 to 173). It then continued from the south gate, criss-crossing south-north towards the eastern boundary and then taking in the few memorials then present on the north side of the church (174 to 358). We have then added a handful of memorials the 1989 survey overlooked (359 to 372), post-1989 additions on the north side (373 to 397), memorials in the new graveyard in the field to the north (398 to 416) and Newsham's war memorial (417).

Because of erosion, some inscriptions are incomplete. Partially erased but decipherable words have been enclosed in brackets, with question marks where there is any uncertainty. Indecipherable portions have been replaced by dotted lines. To save space, some words and phrases have been abbreviated (eg b for born, d for died, a for aged, dau for daughter, otp for of this parish, ota for of the above or of the above named); other words have been omitted (eg aged 77 years is shown as a 77). BR indicates a reference in the Burials Register. BD1823 indicates a reference in Baines's Directory of 1823; BD1890 a reference in Bulmer's Directory of Trades and Professions for 1890.

Surnames are given below in capital letters to ease identification. Map grid references (eg #D-7) are given where appropriate.

A detailed description of each memorial, including information about size, shape, condition and in some cases a sketch or photograph and background information about persons named, is available as a separate file which can be consulted upon request. Some of these details are included below.
