'Harvest' embraces world of agriculture, agribusiness

A letter from Co-publishers Chris Wood and Jeff Nuttall

Agriculture or agribusiness?

Individuals not in the industry might have a tough time distinguishing between these terms, both of which have a major impact on our Northern Colorado economy.

Agriculture, dealing with cultivating soil, harvesting crops and raising livestock, helps to drive our economy, employing thousands of people and bringing in billions of dollars.

Agriculture drives agribusiness, which encompasses not only farm production but also the manufacture and distribution of agricultural equipment and supplies, and the processing, storage and distribution of commodities.

(Thanks to Webster's Third New International Dictionary, from which the above definitions are paraphrased.)

Both terms are embraced in Harvest, a directory prepared by the staff of the Northern Colorado Business Report. This directory includes analyses of the latest trends in the region's agribusiness/agricultural sector, as well as about 1,200 listings of ag-oriented companies. Data collected includes name, address, phone, fax, e-mail, Web site, revenues, number of employees, year founded, products and services, etc.

We've also included some key agricultural statistics that help demonstrate the magnitude of the industry in Larimer and Weld counties. Articles prepared by our staff and freelancers help to round out the publication.

In all, it's a wealth of information, crammed into a few dozen pages. We'd like to particularly thank our research staff, including Vicki Bastian and Mishelle Baun, who spent many hours on this project, both in updating existing records and in ferreting out those new companies that should be included.

We've expanded our categorical listings by further subdividing our farm and ranch category, adding organic and dairy categories. Check out our new events/conventions category, and let us know when you have something you'd like to include.

It's always wise to remind readers that a research project of this magnitude inevitably will include errors and omissions, though we strive to keep those to a minimum. If you spot something incomplete with your company's listing, or if you know of a company that was omitted, please contact our research team at (970) 221-5400, ext. 227, to let them know. You can also reach them at research@ncbr.com.

Contents of this directory are available on CD-ROM in Microsoft Excel or tab-delimited formats. Or go online to www.ncbr.com and click on "NCBR Store" to download this and other databases using our DataBank system. Additional print copies of the directory are available at local chambers of commerce and economic-development agencies, as well as at our office.

We'd like to thank our cover sponsors, including Bi-State Machinery Co. Inc. and the Greeley Stampede.

Finally, watch for our other directories during the course of the year.

In the meantime, enjoy this edition of Harvest!

Organic farming growing to meet consumer demand

Colorado a leader in number of acres certified 'organic'

By Danielle M. Casteel, dcasteel@ncbr.com

Organic farming is one of the fastest-growing sectors of agriculture in the United States. Although organic farming accounts for only 2 percent of total agriculture in this country, this area of cultivation grew 20 percent last year and is expected to continue to expand.

Don Gallegos, administrator of the organic program with the Colorado Department of Agriculture, said organic products are well received by everyone. The organic industry is “not controversial as far as consumers and producers,” he said. For these reasons and because some consumers seek out organically produced food, there is great potential for growth.

Colorado has a very active organic industry, and the state tends to finish consistently in the top 10 nationwide for organic production, Gallegos said. The state is second only to California in organic acreage: More than 70,000 acres have been certified organic, and over 2,000 acres are in the transitional phase of becoming organically certified. There are more than 350 certified organic farms in Colorado.

Gallegos said the certification process is all-inclusive. “We look both at what a farm does and doesn't do.”

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the process consists of five steps: requesting approval, State Organic Program review and evaluation, a decision and notification of approval or disapproval. In turn, the state program is reviewed by the USDA's National Organic Program at least one every five years, according to the USDA's Web site.

The Colorado Department of Agriculture has been certifying farms as organic since 2002. The department certifies produce, livestock, livestock products and other packaged foods. The requirements for certification reflect what the consumer is expecting, Gallegos said.

What producers are expecting from certified organic farming systems, according to the Economic Research Service of the USDA, is “a potential way to lower input costs, decrease reliance on nonrenewable resources, capture high-value markets and premium prices and boost farm income. Organic farming systems rely on ecologically based practices, such as cultural and biological pest management and virtually exclude the use of synthetic hormones in crop production and prohibit the use of antibiotics and hormones in livestock production.”

According to Val Manning, official spokeswoman of Grant Family Farms, the largest organic farm in Colorado, “organic farming is the utilization of natural agricultural practices in the production of safe, wholesome food.”

Unlike conventional farming operations, which rely heavily on synthetic herbicides and pesticides, she explained, “the organic farmer relies on maintaining a biologically diverse environment that discourages pests, weeds and disease while maintaining and replenishing soil fertility. This is done with careful crop rotation, the introduction and maintenance of beneficial bugs, strategic planting of cover crops and application of natural fertilizers.”

Synthetic herbicides and pesticides allow conventional farmers to accomplish their production goals with a minimum amount of time and labor, Manning said. “The organic farmer is also able to accomplish the same goals but must extend his soil fertility, weed, pest and disease prevention programs throughout the entire year, and (this) generally requires more manual labor.

“While conventional farming practices are very successful, the use of some of the synthetic herbicides and pesticides has taken its toll on the environment and public health,” Manning added. “Once applied, these chemicals are stored in the harvested food, the soil, the groundwater and, ultimately, in those who consume the food.”

All foods in the United States are monitored for chemical levels, and nearly all are considered safe, Manning said. However, they are not consistently tested, and what is considered safe for a 180-pound grown man differs from what is safe for a child who weighs 35 pounds.

According to Manning, organic agriculture promotes safety on many levels. “(It) provides a safe food supply, a safer working environment for farm workers and a safer environment in which we all live,” she said. “At the same time, the organic farmer protects and improves the soil in many ways, including reduced erosion, soil structure and fertility.”

Organic grocery sales increase by roughly 20 percent annually, reports the USDA. In 1980, retail sales of organic products earned roughly $78 million. In 2004, organic products accounted for approximately $11 billion in sales.

“In recent years, there has been a new movement away from chemicals and artificial additives toward naturally produced and organic products,” Manning said. “This movement has increased the demand for organically produced (foods), and there is a willingness of the consumer to pay a premium for a certified organically grown product.”

Kelly Patterson, a resident of Northern Colorado who shops almost exclusively for organic items, said she does so for her health. “I buy organic products as much as possible, as I want to nourish my body with natural foods,” she said. “I want my foods to be as free as possible from pesticides, antibiotics and chemicals.”

This demand has increased supply of organic foods to more mainstream grocery stores, according to the USDA. From 1991 to 1995, 70 percent of organic sales were from specialty natural product stores, such as Wild Oats and Whole Foods Markets. By 2000, organic grocery sales were shared between these specialty stores and regular supermarkets, such as Safeway and King Soopers.

Patterson said she feels blessed to live in Northern Colorado where organically certified products are readily available. “It is pretty easy to eat in the ‘light,’ free from refined, processed foods that make my body feel like a car running on cheap gas.”

'Wild, wacky world' ahead for agriculture in 2006

With costs up, and most prices steady, not a banner year

By Carroll Arnold, news@ncbr.com

It seems 2006 will not be a banner year for agriculture in this region. But before you fold your pennant and take it home, remember there is enough uncertainty to keep your hopes alive.

Those old bugaboos of agriculture will be at work again next year: higher input costs in fuel, fertilizer, chemicals, feed, seed, interest rates, water, and the weather.

But the good news is that Northern Colorado agriculture has good managers who do an excellent job of adapting to change, and farmers who can weather some adversity without falling apart.

"We're not overly concerned or panicked about 2006. We have a more optimistic than a pessimistic outlook," said Mike Flesher, vice president of Farm Credit Services in Greeley.

"Scary" is the one-word description for the 2006 farm outlook for Buddy Truesdell, owner of B&G Equipment in Greeley. "It is real funny, different than in any other year. A lot of people act like they want to go (purchase equipment) but they don't go. A lot haven't put a pencil to it.

"It's a wild, wacky world," Truesdell said.

Ron Lonneman, owner of Ron's Equipment Co. Inc. of Fort Collins concurred. "I think we've got our work cut out for us. This is not going to be a banner year. I do not see farm income improving in 2006." He mentioned corn, beans and hay as crops with particular challenges next year.

Flesher, too, admits it may be uphill for farmers in 2006. "But I don't want to say the sky is falling. We have good managers out there today who have done a good job of leveraging their operations. But you can't turn a blind eye to the situation," Flesher cautioned.

Higher costs all around

Gary Ludlow, Greeley branch manager for Bank of Colorado, pointed out the farmer is struggling now with fuel costs, lack of water, higher interest rates and low commodity prices.

"Other than that, life is good. The cattle market is wonderful," he observed.

Farmer-rancher Kenneth Miller of Fort Lupton farms 520 acres of cattle, corn, hay, and pinto beans.

He said corn seed is up 8 percent this year, and fertilizer will be much higher as will fuel, chemicals and water costs. But cattle, Miller said, is the single exception and will stay up in price.

Kent Pepler, a Mead farmer for 26 years, works 500 acres of flood-irrigated land for corn, wheat, barley, alfalfa and sunflowers.

"I see more of the same. I don't see major changes. Things are a little tighter," Pepler noted.

He is more optimistic about the quality and quantity of the wheat crop next year because of fall moisture this year.

Union Colony Bank's Paul Webber, Kersey branch president, farms outside Gilcrest. He said drought-resistant crops such as sunflowers and beans are becoming more popular, as are soil preparations like no-till and low-till.

"The cattle market is strong right now — if you have calves to sell," he added.

Some lenders, such as Centennial Bank of the West's Kenny Stumpf of Eaton, just hope for a "break-even" year. The Eaton branch president is upbeat on cattle and sugar beets in 2006.

"If we have water, we're going to do O.K. But we are going to have to get thrifty with our money."

Family farmers grow houses, too

Governor's Ranch mixed development homegrown project

By Carroll Arnold, news@ncbr.com

Five years ago, John Leffler went from growing crops to growing houses. And he is still growing both in Eaton.

With brothers Charles and Russ, John Leffler is the force behind Governor's Ranch on the west side of Eaton, where one day there will be 400 homes that sell in the $325,000 to $600,000 range along with offices and retail stores.

Fewer than half the 400 homes are completed and sold at this time, but the professional park with six office spaces is already filling up, with two doctors affiliated with Banner Health and a dentist in residence. Curves, a women's exercise salon, and the Coffee Den are up and running as well.

The Lefflers continue to run a diversified irrigated farming operation a half mile west of Eaton on 2,000 acres. They grow sugar beets, silage and green corn, alfalfa, wheat and pinto beans. They finish 2,000 to 3,000 head of beef cattle a year on the land and rent about 1,000 acres.

The family, including father Vic and mother Elizabeth, started out renting land in the 1940s.

"Then I thought we should develop another venture. Farming has not had a good return for a number of years. We thought we would help out our farm enterprise," John Leffler recalled. That is when Governor's Ranch was born.

"Eaton is not a fast-growth area. Maybe that's good. But it is one of the best kept secrets for a small town that there is."

Governor's Ranch has been "a big undertaking." But it has allowed Leffler and his family retain control over their own destiny rather than selling to a volume builder and letting things spiral out of control.

Before Governor's Ranch, Eaton housing developments were on the east side of town with Hawkstone, Eaton Commons and then Maplewood. Then the Lefflers decided to initiate the west side development on their farmland, acquired from former Colorado Governor, irrigation pioneer and town namesake Benjamin Eaton. Eaton ran cattle and sheep on the land, and grew sugar beets.

"Eaton is on the verge of being discovered," according to Leffler. He touts the good reputation of Eaton schools, and notes that Governor's Ranch is the proud home of Benjamin

TALL CROPS — John and Brent Leffler at Governor's Ranch, a housing development on the outskirts of Eaton, has been converted from a farm operation. Benjamin Eaton, a former Colorado governor and the town's namesake, once owned the land. As Northern Colorado's population grows, an increasing number of farmers have sold their cropland to be used for subdivisions

Eaton School.

Leffler also speaks of the opportunities in Eaton represented by six acres zoned retail commercial at County Road 35 and Colorado 74. He is looking for a good anchor or someone with a good development plan for what he considers a prime location for the future.

Governor's Ranch, with its large in-town lots and price tag, "is not the cheapest place in town to live," Leffler admitted.

A lifelong Eaton resident, Leffler acknowledged that waiting for growth there may take some time, but it is important to retain control over the growth of Governor's Ranch and see what happens.

"Eaton is as big as it can get without more amenities," Leffler said. A bigger supermarket would be good as a starter to stimulate the economy and maybe sell some homes.

John Leffler and his son, Brent, a mechanical engineer, provide a full package deal for home buyers, retailers, professionals and others. Wife Jodie and daughters Cindy and Shelley are the other members of this "hands-on" family that carved a development out of good Weld County farmland.

'Big Four' anchor Colorado's agricultural crops

Hay, wheat, potatoes, corn worth 92 percent of crop value

By Sue Lenthe, news@ncbr.com

Hay, corn, wheat and potatoes consistently rank in the top four of Colorado's chief field crops, accounting for about 90 percent of the production value of all state crops, a list that includes barley, dry edible beans, proso millet, sunflowers, grain and silage sorghum and oats.

The combined production value of all Colorado crops in 2003 was estimated at $1.18 billion, according to the 2004 crop review published by the state agricultural statistics service. In 2003, Colorado's top four crops accounted for 92.2 percent — $1.08 billion — of that total value.

Weather and climate, markets and consumer demand and changing farm practices all can yield trends that affect this, say ag experts.

Evidence that the drought of recent years has loosened its grip is apparent in state crop statistics. Wheat, for example, typically a dryland crop, moved from fourth to third place in 2003. Total production value that year was $262.2 million, nearly double the $139.7 million the 2002 harvest brought, which occurred during the peak of the drought.

"Colorado winter wheat this year is forecast 87 percent above last year's production," said Tim Larsen, international marketing specialist for the Colorado Department of Agriculture. "It's amazing what a little rain can do."

Colorado weather conditions aren't the only climate factors that the state's wheat farmers face, however. "The wheat industry says most of our wheat is exported," Larsen said. "Eighty percent of all the wheat we grow in Colorado is ultimately exported outside the United States."

Thus, weather conditions in Canada and even far-off Ukraine can play a role in the market price of wheat in Weld County.

Larsen noted that in many cases, producers are seeking to take control of their destinies through market orders. "One thing I've always admired is agriculture's commitment to long-term development."

Take wheat, for example. The Wheat Administrative Committee collects about a penny per bushel of wheat produced. That money is used to grow the market for wheat.

"Our competition is not Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma" Larsen said. "Wheat is competing on the dinner plate against alternative starches such as rice or potatoes."

Then of course, producers often face food fads such as the low-carbohydrate, no-carbohydrate diets of recent years.

EARLY STAGE — This cornfield near Berthoud is shown in the emerging stage. Demand for corn in Colorado could increase with the development of ethanol plants in the region.

Larsen expressed guarded optimism that the popularity of such diets may be waning.

"One thing we know for sure in the U.S. is fads are just that, they're fads," he said.

Corn, too, has a check-off program that helps pay to market the commodity. Bernie Lange, communications and marketing director for Colorado Corn, said that ethanol is likely to be the next big market for corn producers.

Thanks to ethanol's potential to boost demand for corn, the crop isn't likely to relinquish its spot on the list of top crops.

Right now, corn in Colorado is grown primarily for livestock feed, Lange said. In fact, he noted, Colorado is a corn deficit state, meaning it must import some corn to meet its needs.

Corn production in Colorado probably won't increase as the crop faces increasing competition for water and farmland from the state's growing population. At this time, corn acreage is holding steady, he said.

Trends in declining water and farmland are challenges that engage ag researchers in Colorado. "The challenge for Colorado State University is to try to find crops and cropping systems that require lower amounts of irrigation or less water requirements and still maintain economically viable cropping systems," said Jerry Johnson, CSU extension specialist in crop production.

Water is a recurring theme when ag experts discuss crop trends, and no doubt a factor in recurring nightmares for farmers.

As water becomes scarcer in Colorado, production levels of irrigated crops are likely to decline in response, they point out.

Some Colorado producers are working to cultivate higher returns by producing high-value crops, such as organic vegetables, or selling their vegetable crops direct to consumers via farmers markets.

Both areas represent growing niches in Colorado, Larsen said. And both those trends are in evidence in Northern Colorado, where most communities have seasonal farmers markets and many have outlets for organic foods.

"Farmers markets have been rocketing up in success," Larsen observed. "Frankly, sometimes I think we don't have enough farmers to staff the number of markets communities want to have."

While there are trade-offs in terms of transportation and labor costs, farmers can collect much more for their harvests by selling at retail at farmers markets than wholesale, Larsen said.

The line-up of top crops regionally looks a bit different than the statewide list. Larimer County ranked seventh in the state for its production of barley, sugar beets and spring wheat in 2003. Its production of alfalfa hay ranked No. 14, other hay No. 11, corn for grain No. 19 and winter wheat No. 18. Potato production in Larimer County was not ranked in 2003.

Weld County, meanwhile, was the top county for alfalfa hay production in 2003. It was the top sugar beet-producing county in 2003, No. 2 for dry beans and other hay, No. 3 in barley and sunflower production.

Nationwide, Colorado's top four crops rank somewhat lower. Colorado ranks No. 20 for hay production, No. 15 for corn for grain, No. 16 for corn for silage, and No. 11 for wheat.

The state is the nation's top producer of proso millet, a type of birdseed. In 2003, Colorado ranked No. 3 in production of carrots, lettuce and summer potatoes; fourth in non-oil sunflower varieties and five for fall potatoes, storage onions, spinach, sunflowers for oil and fall potatoes.

Award-winning care.

In 2005, Poudre Valley Health System was honored with many awards. But our highest honor will always be serving you.

It was recently announced that for the third year, Poudre Valley Hospital is one of America's 50 best hospitals for orthopedic care, according to U.S. News & World Report. PVH ranks 42nd out of 6,000 hospitals in the U.S.

PVH was the only hospital in Colorado to receive the 2005 HealthGrades Distinguished Hospital Award for Patient Safety.

For the second year, PVH was ranked as a Top 100 Hospital by Solucient, an organization that monitors healthcare quality in U.S. hospitals.

PVH was honored for most improved care by Avatar International, the company that administers our patient satisfaction surveys.

We were also recently re-designated as a Magnet Hospital. The prestigious Magnet award for nursing excellence has been given to only 160 hospitals of the United States' 6,000 hospitals by the American Nurses Credentialing Association.

At PVHS, it puts a smile on our faces to know that these awards mean you and your family are receiving exceptional care. Congratulations and a heartfelt thank you to each and every PVHS employee, medical staff member and volunteer for your award-winning care.

BRINGING YOUR MESSAGE CLOSER TO YOUR MARKET

By providing in-depth, local business news and by forming solid ties with our community, we've developed unparalleled reader loyalty among the key business decision makers in Northern Colorado.

When you advertise in the Northern Colorado Business Report, your message is being directly delivered to the audience you most want to reach. Further, as a member of The Alliance, we can provide access to over 1.2 million business professionals in the U.S., Canada, Mexico, Puerto Rico and Australia.

Ted opened his plant here because the electric co-op gave him the power. And the electricity, too.

Unlike other electric utilities, your co-op exists to make sure your needs are always met, not to make a profit. And since every electric co-op is locally owned and operated, your co-op is always there with you, reinvesting in your community.
