CELEBRATING 8 YEARS OF Painting with Lights

WILL YOU HELP KEEP IT GLOWING?

Each year from late November to early January, Painting with Lights illuminates buildings around Oskaloosa's historic downtown square and throughout the city. The 300,000+ brilliant LED bulbs brighten our community, draw visitors from near and far (including almost all 50 states), and help boost spending at local shops, restaurants, lodging, and attractions. It's the first display of its kind in Iowa and is the result of countless volunteer hours and generous donations from individuals and businesses. It also requires year-round planning and fundraising for the $30,000 needed to install, maintain, remove, and store the lights each year.

Our dazzling display cannot continue or expand without financial support from the community—including our annual Painting with Lights raffle, which last year raised $11,000+ for Painting with Lights!

We need your support to keep the lights glowing and to continue growing the lights in 2023 and beyond!

FURTHER REVIEW

By Charles Apple | THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW

Comic books about Bruce Wayne — who, at night, transforms himself into Batman to fight crime in Gotham City — has been around since 1939. Fifty years later, what had become a campy cartoonlike character was remade into a gritty film with plenty of appeal to grown-up comic book fans.

Fast forward nearly another two decades, to July 18, 2008 — 15 years ago — when Hollywood again worked its magic on Batman giving him a remade villain who was truly terrifying.

"The Dark Knight" was the second of a trilogy of Batman movies directed and co-written by Christopher Nolan and starring Christian Bale. For this installment, Nolan had Bale's batsuit redesigned with a separate headpiece, which allowed Bale to turn his head. In previous Batman movies, actors were forced to turn their entire bodies in order to face a different direction.

Aaron Eckhart played Gotham District Attorney Harvey Dent, who is disfigured by a bomb set off by the Joker and takes the law into his own hands in order to extract revenge. Nolan originally wanted Matt Damon to play Dent, but Damon was tied up filming the movie "Invictus." Morgan Freeman — who co-starred in that film with Damon — does appear in "The Dark Knight."

The new batsuit consisted of 200 separate pieces of rubber, fiberglass, metallic mesh and nylon and used elastic banding for a tight fit. The gauntlets contained retractable razors. Bale admitted that he loved the suit because it was leaner and more flexible than the one he had used in "Batman Begins" in 2005, so he didn't feel compelled to pack on as much muscle weight for this film or its sequel.

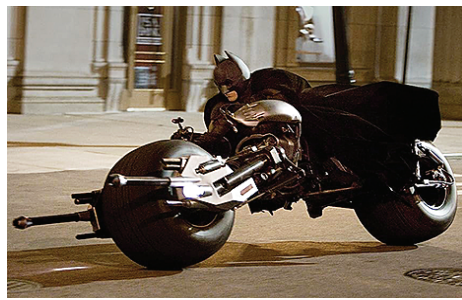

Heath Ledger played the Joker as a mastermind of chaos and anarchy. Ledger said he was aiming for a mix of punk rocker Sid Vicious and the character Malcolm McDowell plays in the Stanley Kubrick film "Clockwork Orange." Co-star Michael Caine said he found Ledger's performance so terrifying the first time they filmed a scene together that it caused Caine to forget his lines.

Bale has taken quite a bit of ribbing from fans and critics for the grotesque growl he uses when acting as Batman in this film and the next. In fact, the change wasn't all Bale's choice — this was something Nolan had sound engineers tinker with during post-production. The result was a lower, creepy-sounding rasp that has been ridiculed ever since in various internet videos and memes.

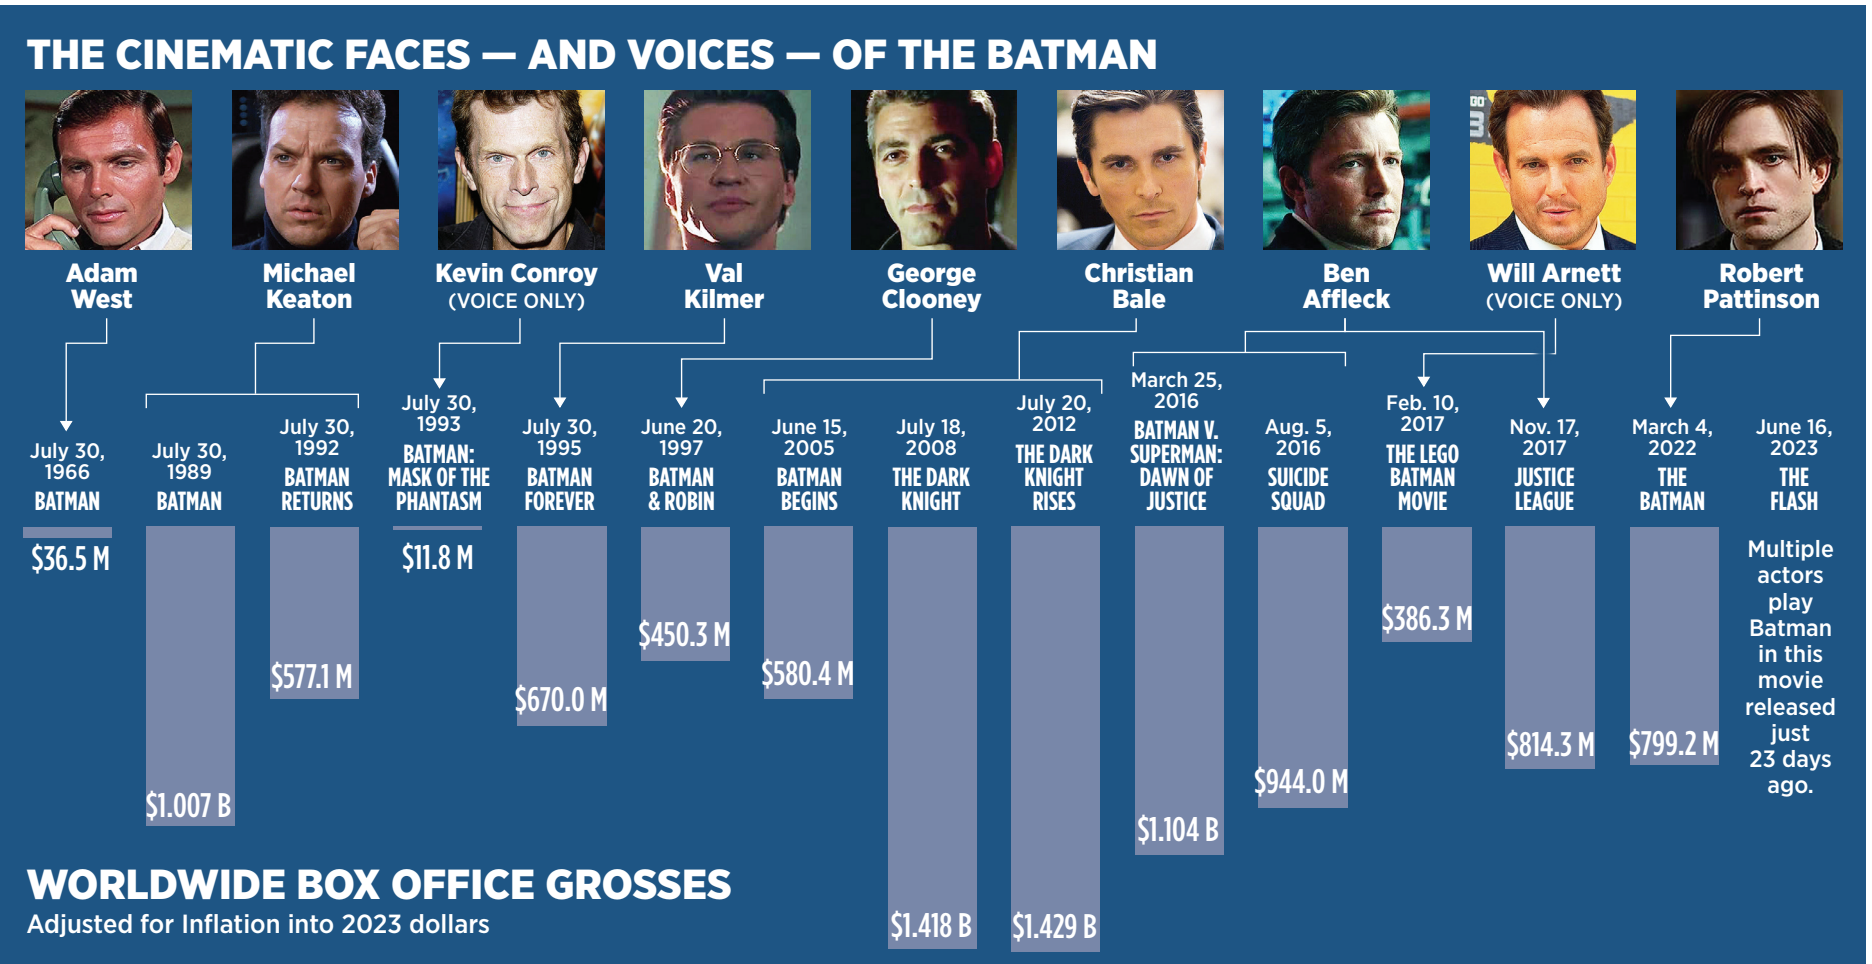

Ledger spent six weeks living in a hotel room, developing the look, voice and odd tics of the Joker character. His makeup was made of three pieces of silicone and took less than an hour to apply before shooting each day. Ledger died of an accidental overdose in January 2008 while the film was in post-production. Ledger became the first actor to win an Oscar playing a comic book character.

One of Bale's biggest regrets was that he wasn't allowed to ride the Batpod, the high-tech motorcycle Batman uses in this film. The Batpod weighed 600 pounds, so only stuntmen were allowed to operate it. Nolan was afraid Bale would catch his cape in it. At one point, "Batman" comic book writer Mark Millar visited during production and decided to sit on the Batpod. Security caught him and escorted him off the set.

"The Dark Knight" made $100 million in its first two days and was the fourth Batman movie — after "Batman" in 1989, "Batman Returns" in 1992 and "Batman Forever" in 1995 — to break the record for opening weekend receipts. "The Dark Knight" was the first comic book movie to gross more than $1 billion worldwide. Its eight Academy Award nominations were the most for a comic book movie until "Joker" in 2019.
