Beirut attacks add to fears of major war

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — A French peace-keeping soldier was killed and another wounded in an ambush today and a lone assassin shot and killed a ranking Druze religious leader in his west Beirut apartment.

The attacks came amid escalating violence that threatened to plunge Lebanon into another round of civil war between Druze Moslems, Christians, and the Lebanese army.

"A lone gunman was allowed into Sheikh Halim Takieddine's apartment by his maid," said a Druze community spokesman. "The man asked to see the sheikh and on entering the room, fired a few shots from a silencer-equipped pistol and killed him."

Takieddine was the head of the Druze religious courts — a title that ranks second to that of community's religious leader, Sheikh Mohammed Abu Chakra.

The noon assassination came a day after intense artillery battles between Druze and Lebanese army in the mountains east of Beirut forced the Beirut airport to close and sent shells slamming into Christian areas. The airport remained closed today.

Only hours earlier today, gunmen ambushed a French peace-keeping patrol in what Lebanese security sources said was a reprisal for French air strikes against pro-Iranian targets in central Lebanon, a French military spokesman said.

The French soldier killed was the first to die since the Oct. 23 suicide bombing that leveled a French barracks in west Beirut and killed 58 French soldiers. In all, 76 French soldiers have been killed since the French first arrived in August 1982.

French warplanes retaliated for the suicide bombing Nov. 17, striking pro-Iranian targets near the central town of Baalbeck.

The French spokesman said the ambush occurred at 5:50 a.m., surprising the routine patrol in Beirut's Tayyouneh region near the city's southern Shiite Moslem neighborhood. The Lebanese army fired back at the attackers.

"The Lebanese army was very courageous. Without their rapid intervention, the patrol would have suffered greater casualties," the spokesman said. "Two of our soldiers were wounded. One of them died on the operating table. The second is slightly injured."

Druze leader Walid Jumblatt warned in an interview published today by the Kuwaiti newspaper Al Watan that a new war could trigger a confrontation between the superpowers.

"The Americans and the Soviets are facing each other, and a single wrong shot could start a war Please turn to page 10

Jobless rate is at 4.5 %

WETHERSFIELD — The unemployment rate in Manchester for October was 4.5 percent — about one-fifth of 1 percent under the unadjusted state average of 4.7 percent, which was a four-year low, according to figures released by the state Labor Department Wednesday. There were 1,264 town residents unemployed during the period.

The rate in Coventry was even lower — 3.6 percent, with 179 unemployed — while Andover hovered almost two percent above the average at 6.3 percent with 82 unemployed, a Labor Department spokesman said today.

The unemployment rate for Bolton was 4.6 percent, with 103 residents unemployed, she said. Seasonally adjusted figures put the state unemployment rate at 3 percent, down two tenths of 1 percent from the adjusted September rate. Those were the lowest figures since November 1979, Labor Commissioner Joseph Ferraro said.

Unadjusted figures showed that unemployment dropped from 4.9 to 4.7 percent during the period.

Statewide, 76,400 residents were out of work in October compared to 79,100 in September.

New records were set in the economy with Connecticut residents earning an all-time high of $4 billion, the department said.

In October 1982, the state's unemployment rate was 7.7 percent, with 110,700 people unemployed, the department said. The national seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for October dropped to 8.8 percent from 9.3 percent in September. A year ago, the national unemployment rate was 10.5 percent.

The department said there were 406,400 jobs in the manufacturing sector, an increase of 1,800 jobs since September and 400 more jobs than existed in October 1982.

The department also reported 4,449,700 non-agricultural jobs, up by 7,600 from September.

Improvements were scattered throughout the apparel, printing, publishing and metal industries, said Labor spokesman C. Richard Ficks.

Burns wants complete removal of toll booths

HARTFORD — The state Department of Transportation proposed today that the state remove all tolls from the Connecticut Turnpike at the same time instead of phasing out the controversial levies as advocated by lawmakers.

DOT Commissioner J. William Burns proposed that the state stop collecting tolls on the 129-mile turnpike on Dec. 31, 1985, and begin work to tear down the eight turnpike toll plazas on Jan. 1, 1986.

Burn's recommendations, in a report mandated by the Legislature, differed from the toll removal plan approved earlier this year by lawmakers and signed into law by Gov. William O'Neill.

The law mandating removal of tolls from the turnpike and three Hartford-area bridges already has come under fire, however, and lawmakers already are talking about repealing it in their next session, which begins in February.

Opponents of toll removal claim the $57 million collected annually at toll plazas is needed to finance highway and bridge repairs.

Opponents of tolls, on the other hand, claim toll plazas pose safety and health hazards and that tolls are discriminatory in that they are concentrated in the southern part of the state.

The toll removal law approved this year required Burns to initiate removal of the tolls from the turnpike and bridges in the Hartford area by Oct. 1, 1985, with the work to be completed by Jan. 1, 1987.

Under the plan submitted by Burns, collection of the turnpike tolls would end on Dec. 31, 1985, with the removal of the toll plazas expected to be completed by Sept. 30, 1986.

The Legislature did not mandate nor did Burns recommend a plan for removal of tolls from the Merritt and Wilbur Cross parkways.

Women testify vs. doctor

HARTFORD (UPI) — The Connecticut Medical Examining Board has not decided whether to revoke the license of a Connecticut doctor, now practicing in Florida, accused of sexually molesting several patients.

The board heard testimony Wednesday from five women in their 20s who said Dr. P. Gary Stern fondled and seduced them and photographed them in the nude in his office and Bloomfield home while practicing in Connecticut more than three years ago.

Department investigators said it has taken them three years to obtain statements from the patients and convince five of them to testify.

The state Department of Health Services listed 44 charges against Stern, including prescribing narcotics to known drug addicts and failing to keep proper drug records.

Stern now lives in Coral Springs, Fla., where he practices medicine in several hospitals with a Florida license he obtained before leaving Connecticut in July 1980.

Members of the board said they would review the evidence presented during the day-long hearing before making a decision.

Stern, a specialist in gastroenterology, gave up his narcotics license in August 1979 and surrendered his medical license when he left the state after practicing for more than 10 years. He was in his late 30s.

The accusations against him first surfaced in 1980 after Women Against Medical Abuse issued a survey reporting 18 cases of sexual abuse by doctors, dentists and other health professionals in the state.

Stern did not attend Wednesday's hearing, but his lawyer Gerald A. Roisman of Hartford, objected to the proceedings, saying Stern no longer held a valid Connecticut license and should not be subject to the revocation action.

The state argued Stern's alleged actions show he "is unable to practice medicine with reasonable skill and/or safety" and should have his license revoked permanently. Without the proceedings, Stern could obtain a license in Connecticut or another state, with no record of his past behavior.

Roisman said Stern gave up his Connecticut practice voluntarily after the allegations were raised and sought psychiatric help.

"He never tried to excuse his behavior. There never was an attempt to cover up or whitewash anything," said Roisman, describing his client as "tremendously remorseful."

His attorneys did not attempt to refute the testimony of the five patients or deny he had been sexually active with his patients.

A 29-year-old woman said she was a drug addict when she first visited Stern in 1976 for gastrointestinal problems. She said she was "stunned" when he made advances. "I didn't know how to react," she said.

Stern continued the advances and sent or prescribed prescription drugs for the next two years when she was living in and out of the state. She finally told psychiatrists at St. Francis Hospital about the incidents after attempting suicide in 1978 while on narcotics prescribed by Stern.

Columbia didn't reply

SOUTH WINDSOR (UPI) — Forty-two first graders tried today to talk to astronauts aboard the space shuttle Columbia as it orbited earth for the 47th time.

Dr. Owen Garriott did not respond.

Columbia was 155 miles over the Avery Street School when Sally O'Dell, a ham radio operator and mother of a student, tried to make contact with Garriott, one of six aboard the space lab who became an amateur radio devotee in high school.

"Kilo Bravo One Oscar at Avery Street School, calling W5LSL," Mrs. O'Dell said repeatedly into her microphone. At 10:47 a.m. an incoming voice broke up due to interference and was unintelligible. The only other voice heard was one saying "what's your call, please. This is W5LJ. I'm in Holyoke, Mass."

"Well, we tried. That's what's important we tried," Joan Jansen told the class.

Negotiations resume next week

Negotiations between teachers at five area Catholic high schools and administrators will resume next week, after a month-long halt and talk of a strike.

State mediator Rido Comarco notified both parties Wednesday afternoon that talks will resume the following Wednesday. Greater Hartford Catholic Educators Association President Thomas Dickau said this morning that Comarco made the move "because he feels there's some flexibility, evidently, in our positions."

"We're looking at this positively, certainly," Dickau said. "We're going back to mediation in a good-faith attempt to reach a settlement."

Union members, up until now, have been harshly critical of the administration's refusal to make concessions since talks were recessed Oct. 9. But officials at the Diocesan School Office have said the archdiocese simply cannot afford to offer teachers any more money and benefits.

The Rev. Henry Frascadore, assistant superintendent for archdiocesan secondary schools, has said the administration's offer amounts to a 35 percent pay increase over three years. But union members have said that offer actually represents a 30 percent increase, and a poor fringe-benefits package.

As a result of the callback to the bargaining table, which was unexpected, union members have canceled a meeting planned for tonight. At that meeting, Dickau said, teachers might have considered taking a vote on whether or not to strike.

Feldstein, rebuked for criticism, insists he's 'team player'

MARTIN FELDSTEIN warned to stop dissenting

NEW YORK — President Reagan's top economic adviser, warned bluntly to stop criticizing his boss's policies, insists he is a "team player" who supports the administration's economic program.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes indicated earlier that Feldstein's job might be in jeopardy. "It's not correct to say he's about to be fired," the official said. "It is correct that some would prefer that he would be a better team player."

Fantasia's friends urge mercy, judge gives him 9-year sentence

By Sarah Passell Herald Reporter

Richard Fantasia, the 28-year-old Manchester man convicted last month of possessing 30 pounds of marijuana with the intent to sell, was sentenced to nine years in prison Wednesday in Manchester Superior Court.

Robert L. Butler, 27, of Hartford, was scheduled to go on trial Tuesday afternoon when defense attorney Michael J. Devlin struck a deal with the state's attorney Peter Ponziani.

Butler is scheduled to be sentenced Dec. 14. He could face up to 15 years in prison on the two charges to which he pleaded guilty.

Police refused to give further details about the incident. Hartford State's Attorney John M. Bailey is investigating charges that Fantasia tried to tamper with the jury that sat on his case.

Manatt's mistakes may hurt candidates

WASHINGTON — For several months now it has been obvious to everyone — everyone, that is, except Charles T. Manatt — that the national Democratic Party was going to be obliged to yield to Iowa and New Hampshire in the running argument over 1984 presidential primary and caucus dates.

Jack Germond and Jules Witcover
Syndicated columnists

The problem, of course, is that Manatt is the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and the one who was going to have to yield to avoid a politically debilitating confrontation over an essentially trivial issue. So far, he hasn't done that. On the contrary, Manatt has seemed to go out of his way to harden the lines between the DNC and the two state Democratic organizations. The result is that there has been an unpleasant little internal row among Democrats in Iowa and the spectacle, in both states, of a party that can't manage a two-car funeral without mishap.

But in deference to historical precedent, Iowa was given permission to hold its precinct caucuses 15 days before that period, on Feb. 27, and New Hampshire to hold its traditional first-in-the-nation primary one week before the window, on March 6.

The issue is less than momentous. When the DNC adopted its new delegate-selection rules for 1984, it specified that all primaries and caucuses except those in Iowa and New Hampshire would have to be held in a 13-week period — a "window," it was called — beginning March 13. The idea was to shorten the presidential campaign, which was considered — for some reason or other — a desirable goal.

But in deference to historical precedent, Iowa was given permission to hold its precinct caucuses 15 days before that period, on Feb. 27, and New Hampshire to hold its traditional first-in-the-nation primary one week before the window, on March 6.

Laugh. What Manatt has overlooked all along is the fact that, in either party, the national committee and the national chairman are just functionaries who handle party housekeeping — and only at the sufferance of elected officials or, in this case, whoever wins that presidential nomination.

Manatt doesn't think politically, a professional who has worked closely with the DNC chairman said. "He doesn't understand that what he has here is not a rules problem, it's a political problem."

Manatt has now conceded that the candidates' views are a "factor" in what the DNC finally allows. What a

Tensions high over gulf war

WASHINGTON — Behind closed doors, President Reagan's advisers are bitterly divided over U.S. policy toward the 3-year-old war between Iraq and Iran. Advocates are calling for a "pull" toward one side or the other.

This would pull the administration away from its declared policy of neutrality in the Persian Gulf conflict, a confrontation that could ignite the oil fields that pump 8 million barrels a day.

The president's more militant advisers, such as Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, favor a pro-Iraq policy as retaliation for the Beirut bombing.

But the neutralists and pragmatists argue that emotion is a poor guide for national policy, and insist that Iran's strategic importance far outweighs its revolutionary leadership and the desire for revenge.

Rights veto a wrong move

Statements by the Reagan administration on human rights have long had a hollow ring to them, especially those concerning El Salvador, where the United States is tied to a regime whose brutality becomes more apparent with each passing day.

On Wednesday, the administration's tacit approval of continued killings by right-wing death squads in that country was, once again, reinforced by the president when he used a "pocket veto" to kill the link between military aid to the Salvadoran government and periodic congressional certification of improved human-rights performance.

Even with the 1981 legislation, which was reapproved two weeks ago by Congress, the case of the Salvadoran guardsmen who are acknowledged to have raped and murdered four — ostensibly because of legal technicalities. More likely, the lack of resolution is due to a simple fact: The powers on the right in Salvador's constituent assembly would prefer to see the murders remain unsolved.

The administration's "silent pressure" human-rights policy has achieved little, if anything, in El Salvador or other countries where it is said to have been applied, such as the Philippines and South Korea. It should be dropped.

Let us hope he was also correct when he said Congress would override the president's decision.

Jumbblatt said Lebanon's Christian militias still were hoping for Israeli intervention to restore their authority over the Druze in the mountains east of Beirut.

Lieberman vows fight

HARTFORD (UPI) — The state will go to court to try to stop Springfield, Mass., from dumping up to 80 million gallons of raw sewage into the Connecticut River, Attorney General Joseph I. Lieberman said today.
Lieberman said he believed a decision last week by regional officials of the federal Environmental Protection Agency to allow the dumping over an eight-day period next March was "shortsighted, and I believe illegal."

English was his style
A friend I hardly knew died last week. I read about it in the paper, his paper.
I say he was a friend because, although I almost never saw him, I relied on him and argued with him often in the pages of a book he wrote.

THERE ARE THREE books I go to when I have a problem with grammar or usage, and Lewis's book, "Manual of Style and Usage" is one of them.
It always seems wrong that as a professional writer I should have as much trouble with usage and grammar as I do, but I do. It's more a question of consistency than it is of actually deciding what's right. A writer should be consistent even when he's wrong.

FOCUS / Family

Hailing Hanukkah

For the Springers, it's a home kind of holiday

It is Monday — two days before Hanukkah. But at 37 Highwood Drive, three generations of the Springer family are preparing for the Jewish Feast of Lights.
Henry Springer, the grandfather, stands at the kitchen stove, pouring batter from a plastic bowl into a small skillet. The pungent odor of potato latkes sizzling in hot oil reaches all corners of the house.

Each of the families will bring its own menorah, Shira says, and each will choose a family member to light the candles. Four or five of the candlesticks will burn on the dining room table as the extended family sings.
Games will be played later. A popular Hanukkah game is Dreidel, which is played with a small top spun to reveal Hebrew letters on each side.

Advice

Listen up Mom, here's your chance

DEAR ABBY: The younger generation was asked to submit 10 tips on how to be a good kid, right? Well, I'm a 15-year-old girl who put together 10 tips on how to be a great mom. Here they are: 1. Don't yell at your kids in front of everyone. Wait until you get home. 2. Don't compare your kids to other siblings. ("Joe never did that at your age" and "Karen always got A's in math.") 3. If your teen-agers are at a party, roller rink or the movies and the curfew is 11 p.m., don't run in screaming at 11:05 to tell them they're late. 4. Don't take things away for the wrong reason. Example: If your son didn't mow the lawn, don't take away his concert ticket; make him mow the lawn. 5. Don't make your kids wear clothes they hate.

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'm embarrassed to be different from my friends. I don't like your kids' friends, don't try to keep them apart. It will just make them more determined to get together. 7. Don't snoop around in your kids' rooms, reading diaries or personal letters. (How would you like them to do that to you?) 8. If your children have messy rooms, don't tidy them up — let them do it, and if they don't, they will have to live in them — not you. 9. Don't say "yes" to something one day and "no" the next. It's embarrassing for us to tell our friends that Mom has changed her mind. 10. Tell your children that you love them. They need to hear those words. TERRI ON LONG ISLAND

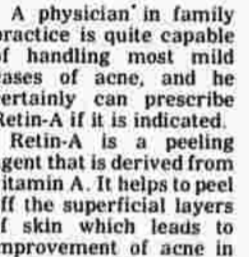

Consult family doctor about acne

DEAR DR. LAMB: My daughter has acne. It is mild but it troubles her so much. We went to see a doctor, but he charges $600 to solve such problems. I was wondering if there were doctors who would give her a prescription for Retin-A and tell her how to use it.

Your Health Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

Is there anything you can help her with along these lines? Will your Health Letter on acne help? Also, what kind of doctor should she see who won't charge an arm and leg to help her? Her life is almost destroyed because of this and we have tried everything. DEAR READER: Not everyone who has a mild case of acne needs to see a specialist, and I would be surprised if a specialist charged that kind of fee. Have your daughter see her family doctor.

Side effects of depression drugs?

DEAR DR. BLAKER: My mother has been undergoing chemical treatments for severe depression for several months now and they have helped her a great deal. Whereas she once slept, cried and wandered aimlessly, she is now able to lead a semi-normal life. I am very curious about the biological effects of these drugs and why the use of ECT (electroconvulsive therapy) is still considered useful in the treatment of depression even though medication is so effective. DEAR READER: It is very difficult to explain the effects of the drugs your mother is on without knowing the particular type she is taking. However, assuming the medication is one of the tricyclic anti-depressants, currently the most commonly used, a brief description of what is known about their effects. The cells in the brain, sense their chemical messages to one another by means of chemicals.

Ask Dr. Blaker Karen Blaker, Ph.D.

called neurotransmitters. These chemicals are released from one cell to another through a small space called the synaptic cleft. In this area, much can happen that will affect the flow of these chemicals. There are many different neurotransmitters in the brain. At present, there are approximately 33 known, identified neurotransmitters. The one that is now under study in the case of depression is histamine. It is thought that the anti-depressants block the ability of the receptor cells to receive the neurotransmitter from the sending cell, thereby affecting the propagation of a signal throughout the brain.

When it rains, the family arguments pour

We've been having a little discussion at our house lately. Actually, discussion is putting it mildly. How about knock-down, drag-out battles? The warriors: one girl, 13, and one of her unidentifiable friends. The issue: raincoats. To wear them or not to wear them. That is the question. The mother is an old-fashioned type. She thinks, heaven help her, that people should wear boots when it rains, gloves when it's cold, and raincoats when it rains.

Connections Susan Plesse Herald Reporter

happening and maybe I won't notice it, either. The old stick-your-head-in-the-sand trick. "Yes, it's raining. Get your raincoat on," I said. I got a long look. "But it's embarrassing," she said. "You're only walking down the street," I said. "That's why it's embarrassing," she said. "Who do you expect to run into?" I asked. No answer. Daughter sulked off, and threw the raincoat and a dirty look over her shoulder. I watched as she walked out the door. As soon as she reached the corner, she ripped the offending garment off, and jammed it into her bookbag. Her little brother, attired in a snappy yellow slicker that reached his ankles, grinned at her wryly. "What's a trench coat?" my son asked. "That's what flashers wear," said my daughter. "Does that mean I'm a flasher because I wear a trench coat?" I asked in horror. I always thought I wore a trench coat because I'm a reporter. Reporters have to wear trench coats, you know. I forgot that trench coats are also the garment of choice for flashers. "Oh, no," she said. "Flashers always wear socks." "What's that mean?" I asked. "Flashers always wear socks. I'm off the hook. There is no chance that I would ever be mistaken for a flasher. I never wear socks in public. Not even when it's 10 below zero and the wind is coming from the north and there's a snowstorm predicted. Socks are good for stuffing in my dresser. They're good for wearing only under very tall boots. They're good for sitting around the house and pulling off the minute company comes to the door. I never wear socks in public. They're too embarrassing."

There's no such thing as a hopeless romance

but never forgot my Frenchman. In the latter part of 1856 I decided that I had to know what had become of him. Was he still in the French army? Had he been injured or killed? Was he now a family man, married with children?

over a year. I wrote to the government of France and to the officials and generals of the French army. Six months later I was advised by the French authorities that his division had been in Algeria for over two years and that, after diligent searching, he could not be accounted for as presumed dead. "I was stunned beyond words.

No! Not possible! He was indisputable. He was a tower of strength, wise beyond his years in the art of survival. I could not and would not accept this news as final. I wrote to French army officials again and again, pleading — insisting — demanding that they continue the search for him or obtain some conclusive evidence of his death.

Finally, my prayers were answered. My letters caught up with him in Laysan, near the Tunisian border, and the Frenchman was asked by his sergeant to respond to the dozens of letters addressed to him from the girl in the United States. I will never forget the day I received my first letter from him with pictures of him in uniform.

The following year he was discharged with honors from the army and returned to his home in Douai, a small town in northern France near the Belgian border. He invited me to come to France to meet his family and so, finally, in July 1858, this now 29-year-old Baltimore girl married the handsome Frenchman in his hometown. The entire town joined in our wedding festivities, which lasted for three days.

In July of this year that Frenchman (long since a naturalized U.S. citizen) and I celebrated our 25th wedding anniversary. We've been through some tough times over the years, struggling to maintain our household and raise a daughter. French-American and beautiful now in college.

Reagan stand may hurt aid to Salvador

By Robert Shepard
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Congressional approval of military aid to El Salvador may be threatened by President Reagan's refusal to condition arms shipments and the stationing of U.S. advisers on progress in human rights.

Key members of Congress, stunned by Reagan's veto of the link, said they would seek to reimpose the law next year or shut off U.S. aid to the Central American nation.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill termed the veto a "tragic error" and Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, said, "I am concerned that this veto sends a confusing signal to El Salvador just at a time when we are trying to send a strong, clear signal that political violence must cease."

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said he will try to block any further U.S. military aid to El Salvador next year until a new human rights law is passed to replace the one Reagan killed.

Reagan Wednesday vetoed a bill that would have required him to report on El Salvador's treatment of its citizens every six months. Under the law, adopted in 1981, the reports were required as a condition for continued U.S. aid.

Secretary of State George Shultz, speaking to the Congress July 20, said El Salvador's human rights record met the legal requirements but "falls short of the broad and sustained progress" sought by Congress and the administration.

Shultz told reporters at a breakfast meeting Thursday he "agonized" over the last report because certification was a "close question."

He said, "If I had to do one by mid-January, it would be very difficult to sign a certification."

Reagan said the congressional requirement hampered his efforts to improve the human rights situation in El Salvador.

O'Neill said, "I simply do not understand why the president would do this at a time when right-wing death squads are brutally murdering innocent Salvadorans despite the warnings of our own ambassador there."

Percy, R-Ill., noting the old law "had the strong support of Congress," said he expects new bills will be introduced when Congress reconvenes next year.

The certification represented "an agreement between the United States and the Salvadoran government that we can provide support to El Salvador if they pursue certain economic, political and humanitarian goals," Percy said.

Dodd, a sponsor of the original certification law, said "it could have been worse" without the pressure of the reports.

"Until certification language once again is law, I will take whatever steps are necessary to block any supplemental aid requests for El Salvador," he said.

Five groups dealing with civil liberties and human rights announced Thursday they will prepare their own "certification report" on El Salvador to replace the one the administration will not do.

Soviets still cold on talks

By Louise Branson
United Press International

MOSCOW — The Kremlin warned President Reagan and other NATO leaders Friday not to expect Soviet negotiators to return quickly to the suspended talks in Geneva on medium-range nuclear missile deployment in Europe.

Official Soviet media also reiterated warnings by ailing Soviet President Yuri Andropov of countermeasures in response to the impending deployment of new medium-range NATO missiles in western Europe.

The Soviet Foreign Ministry said a rare news conference would be held Monday for Western reporters, with Marshal Nikolai Ogarkov and Deputy Foreign Minister Georgi Kornienko spelling out the Soviet stand on missile deployment.

The media reports contained warnings to the West that it was being overconfident about the future in the aftermath of the breakdown of the Geneva talks on reducing medium-range missiles in Europe.

"There is a concerted effort in the West to present the breakdown of the Geneva talks on limiting nuclear weapons in Europe as an occurrence of little consequence," the Novosti news agency said.

But the breakdown of the Geneva talks should be seen as a serious setback to limit and reduce nuclear arms.

Despite the Soviet warnings, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger predicted the Soviet Union would resume the suspended Geneva talks on medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe "in some months."

Judge says PZC acted improperly

By Alex Grell
Herald Reporter

The Planning and Zoning Commission did not follow regulations when it granted Kenneth Burkamp a special exception to put a restaurant in the Manchester Mall because it did not have an adequate traffic study and did not consider conditions necessary to protect public health, safety, convenience and property values, a Superior Court judge has decided.

The judge, Frederica S. Brennan, ordered the commission to hold further proceedings in accordance with the decision.

Burkamp, who learned of the decision Friday afternoon, said he will hire a traffic consultant to testify to the commission.

At the moment no restaurant is planned for Burkamp's mall. Originally he had negotiated with Playpen Restaurant to lease the space, but Playpen apparently has lost interest in the mall.

THE SPECIAL EXCEPTION was granted by the commission in January and was appealed to the court by a group of neighboring business persons.

The decision also says the record of the hearing a traffic report "sufficient in scope" to enable the commission to make an assessment of the effect on traffic of the establishment of a restaurant in the building should be approved, the judge said.

She said that the record in fact suggests at least the possibility of intermittent traffic congestion.

The decision also says the record of the hearing shows no evidence relevant to "conditions necessary to protect the public health, safety, convenience and property values."

A use that needs more than 60 parking spaces under the terms of the regulations requires a special exception. Restaurants have to have one parking space for each 25 spaces should be approved, the decision concludes.
