Webdewey

WebDewey is the electronic version of the Dewey Decimal Classification (DDC) system. It is a full representation of all published numbers, plus other mappings and new terms that have been approved by the Dewey Editorial Policy Committee (EPC). It puts the power of the world's most widely used library classification system in the hands of metadata managers to efficiently organize their collection(s).

The WebDewey database includes the most current version of the DDC (DDC 23 and all updates since its publication in 2003), plus supplemental data. It is updated quarterly and mainly contains records for Dewey numbers from the schedules and tables, records for entries in the DDC manual, the DDC Relative Index and the Library of Congress Subject Headings (LCSH) associated with Dewey class numbers.

The first electronic version of Dewey was created in 1993. On the Dewey blog of 1 August 2017, it was announced that the printed format would be discontinued in June 2018. Updates would continue to be published via WebDewey, but would no longer be posted to the Dewey Services update page. For this reason institutions and cataloguers who up until now preferred the printed format, would have to consider changing to WebDewey

This is not as daunting as one tend to think as will be demonstrated in this presentation.

The screenshot shows a web browser window with the address bar displaying "www.dewey.org/webdewey/login/login.html". The page content includes a header "Web access to the Dewey Decimal Classification (DDC) System" and a large orange "WebDewey" logo. Below the logo are input fields for "Name" (containing "100-243-850") and "Password" (containing "*"), followed by a "LOGIN" button. Three orange buttons are arranged horizontally: "HOW TO SUBSCRIBE", "FREE TRIAL", and "CATALOGER'S DESKTOP". A "Dewey Services" section contains a list of links: Home, Introduction, Glossary, Relocations & Discontinuations, New Abridged Numbers, Dewey Blog, and Privacy Policy. The footer includes copyright information for OCLC and a disclaimer about trademarks.
