No Legal Wrongdoing by Port Commission Member Peter Lahmann Found After Investigation

INQUIRY: Firm Suggests Port Update Its Ethics Code in Final Report

By Owen Sexton

owen@chronline.com

After launching an external investigation into a possible conflict of interest violation by Port of Centralia Commissioner Peter Lahmann, third-party attorneys looking into the matter found no legal wrongdoing.

Haggard & Ganson LLP, the third-party law firm out of Bothell that handled the investigation, issued an 11-page report, noting while it found no legal wrongdoing, it recommended the port amend its ethics code.

The investigation began after Port of Centralia Auditor Amy Graber raised concerns in a memo mainly about Lahmann's requests to utilize apprenticeship programs in port construction projects, which were made in four different port meetings going back to February 2021. Lahmann currently serves as the Washington Department of Veterans Affairs (WDVA) apprenticeship program specialist.

"There is insufficient evidence that Commissioner Lahmann violated the port ethics

HUMAN-CAUSED: Crews Will Work for 100% Containment of Blaze That Started in Campsite and Was at 17 Acres as of Friday

By Isabel Vander Stoep

isabel@chronline.com

Sandwiched between red and white Forest Service trucks, reporters with The Chronicle were escorted through the Iron Creek Campground off Forest Service Road 25 in Randle on Thursday.

On Saturday, June 3, a human-caused fire forced swift evacuations. As of Friday morning, the fire had impacted 17 acres of the campground, which has 98 sites split into various rings.

Field Operations Chief Pete Suver said on the first day he arrived, crews heard trees falling several times an hour. It's going to be a long time before the campground opens.

The official word is "closed for the foreseeable future," but canceling reservations for the summer of 2023 may be a safe bet.

It's among the Gifford Pinchot National Forest's most popular stays; comparable in popularity and size to Packwood's La Wis Wis, which is also closed for upgrades this summer.

Few pieces of infrastructure have been affected by the fire at Iron Creek, but the burn path is riddled with hazard trees, some

Lewis County Animal Shelter to Hold Emergency Dog Adoption Event

By The Chronicle staff

In an effort to help more dogs find their forever homes, the Lewis County Animal Shelter is holding a special dog adoption event — with extended hours and reduced adoption fees — the week of June 10.

The shelter's hours for Saturday, June 10, and Tuesday through Saturday June 13-17 will be 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and the fees for adopting adult dogs those days will be $100, a 50% reduction from the usual fee. The shelter will be closed Sunday, June 11 and Monday, June 12.

The goal of this one-time, emergency, reduced-fee adoption event is to encourage the public to adopt dogs that have been living at the shelter for an extended period of time, Lewis County stated in a news release.

As of Thursday, adoptable dogs included a husky named Ana, a mastiff mix named Ace, a Beauceron mix named Stitch and several others.

A majority of the dogs in the shelter range in age from 3 to 5 years old.

"It is well known that from Memorial Day to the end of June is the busiest time of year for people to move, as schools are getting out for summer break," Lewis County Animal Shelter Manager Joseph Henderson stated. "We are receiving calls daily from Lewis County residents who are moving and cannot take their dogs with them."

The animal shelter is operating at or near capacity and would like to open up space for people who need to surrender their dogs, Lewis County stated in a news release.

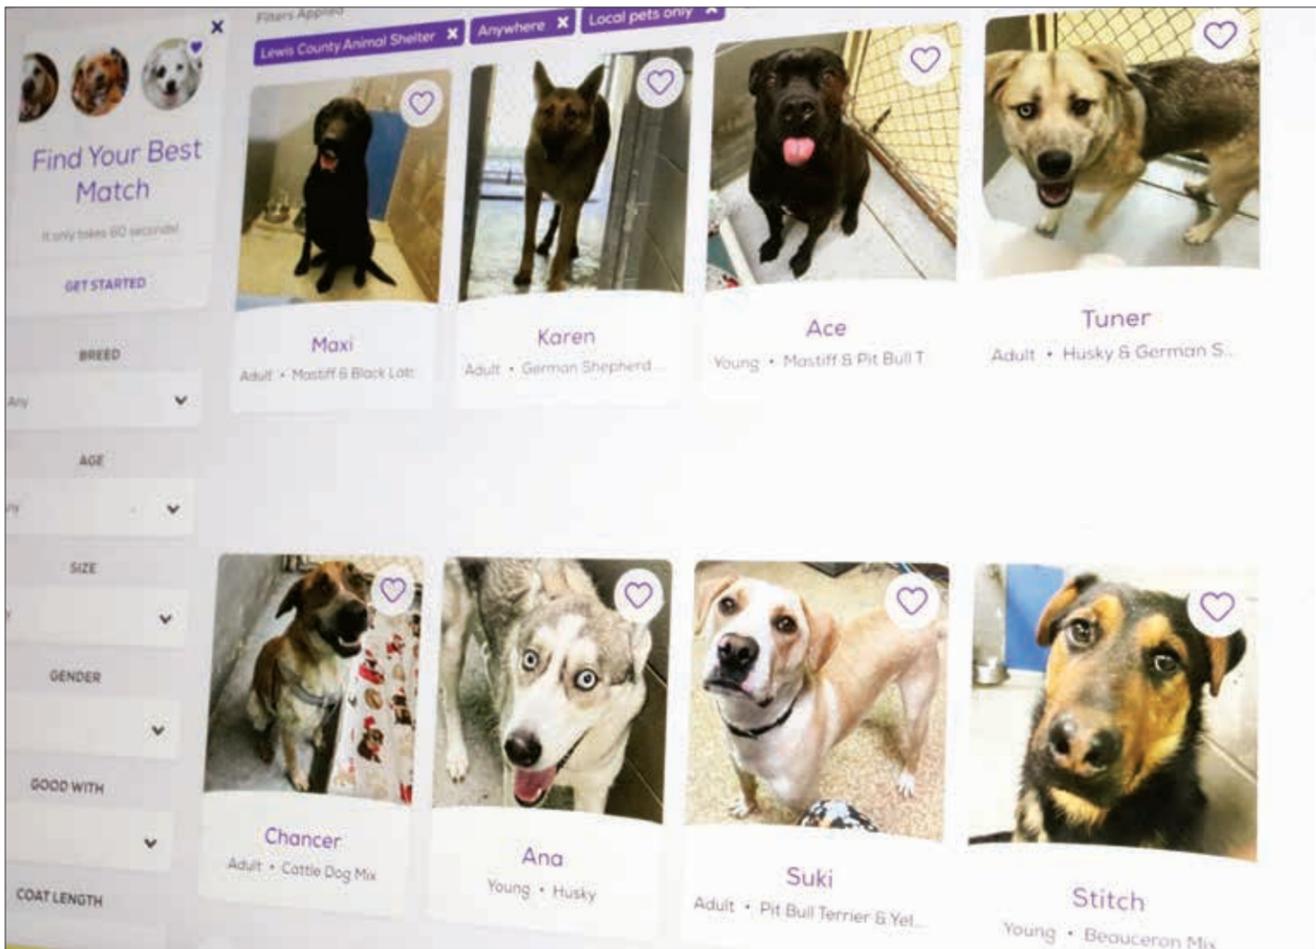

"For us to be able to take in dogs, we need to adopt dogs," Henderson told a Chronicle reporter on Thursday. "For me, it's about trying to get these dogs into really good homes."

To see the dogs available for adoption, visit <https://tinyurl.com/57t9p9br>.

Cat adoptions are not eligible for reduced adoption fees during the event, but cats and kittens will be available for adoption throughout the event.

To contact the Lewis County Animal Shelter, email animal.shelter@lewiscountywa.gov or call 360-740-1290.

The shelter is located at 560 Centralia Alpha Road in Chehalis.

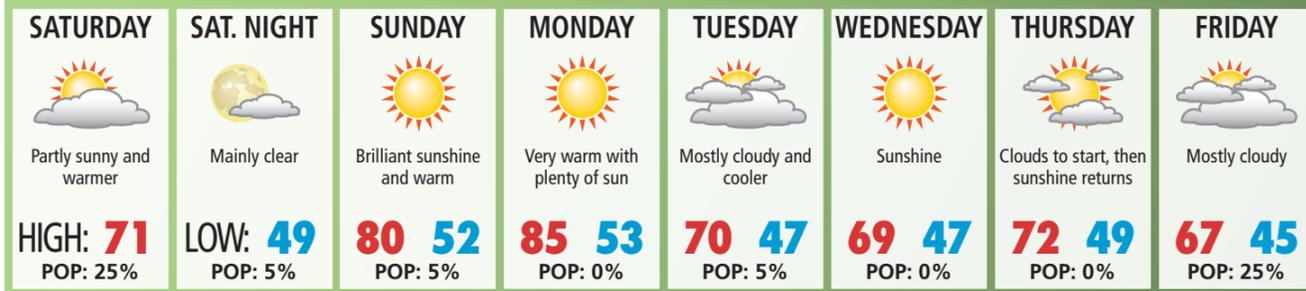

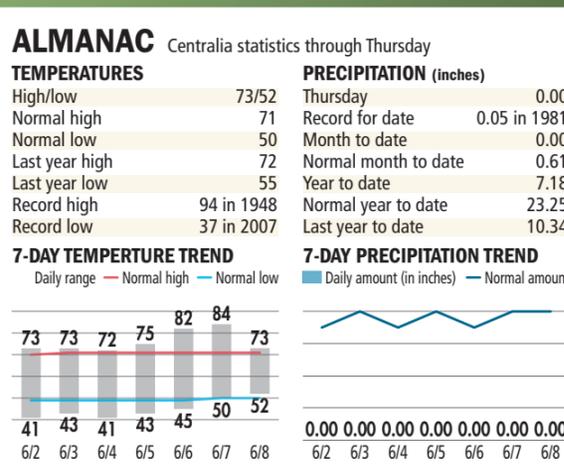

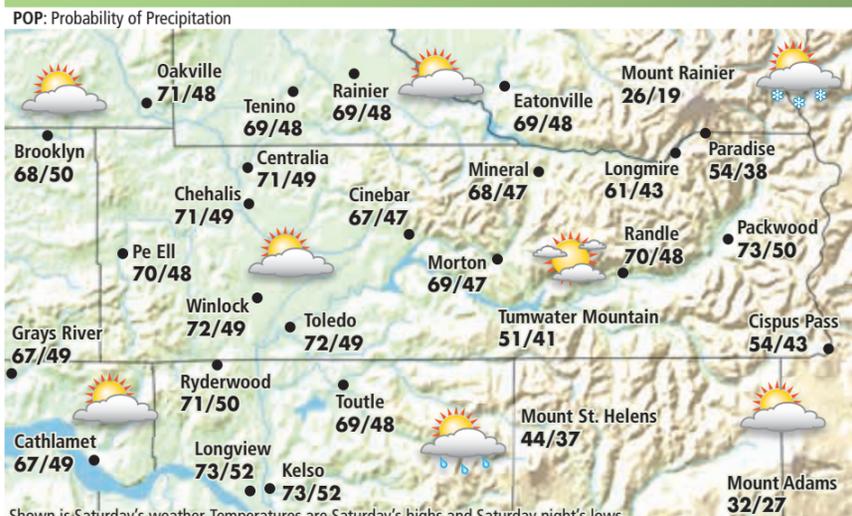

Dogs available for adoption from the Lewis County Animal Shelter as listed on PetFinder on Thursday, June 8.

Ana, left, and Stitch are two of the dogs that will be available for adoption at an upcoming emergency event at the Lewis County Animal Shelter.

City of Tenino Installs Pump Tracks at City Park

By Emily Fitzgerald

emily@chronline.com

Combine a skatepark with a BMX bike track and you get the pump track: a series of bumps, dips and curves a variety of wheeled devices — including bikes, skateboards, scooters and wheelchairs — can ride through.

The concept has proven popular within the Tenino community, as the City of Tenino's first pump track, a beginner course designed for all ages and abilities, has seen almost constant use since the city finished installing it at Tenino City Park on Monday, according to Mayor Wayne Fournier.

"The thing has been used non-stop since we put that straight track in," Fournier said.

Workers had just two panels left to install on a second, intermediate pump track at Tenino City Park as of Thursday. Once that is fully installed, the city will turn its attention toward installing a third, advanced pump track at the park ahead of a scheduled Saturday, June 17, grand opening ceremony for all three tracks.

The idea of building pump tracks in Tenino began four years ago when Fournier and his then-7-year-old daughter were visiting a park in Olympia that featured a portable pump track.

"She was able to ride on it with her little Razor scooter, and there it just seemed like a really nice crowd of families that it was attracting," Fournier said of the Olympia pump track.

He and his daughter later found another pump track at a park in Leavenworth that had a different design than the one they visited in Olympia, he said, which prompted him to start researching the different types of pump tracks.

Then, about three years ago, a tree fell on the playground equipment at Tenino City Park.

"Instead of just repairing what we have, we used the opportunity ... to kind of leverage that loss into a request of the Legislature for enough money to just build it out," Fournier said.

The City of Tenino initially considered installing a pump track in a different part of town, but when the state Legislature allocated some funding for Tenino's playground, the city switched gears and incorporated the pump track build into the new playground design.

"We got a lot of support from Representative Peter Abbarno's office (and) we somehow pulled this major rebuild off," Fournier said.

The pump tracks themselves were a separate item in the city's budget, with some American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) funds going into the purchase of the equipment from the Pacific Northwest-based company Highwire, which also sold Tenino its new playground equipment.

"They're dream clients, really, because they're just so open and enthusiastic, but no nonsense too. I've never seen a more capable group," said Highwire owner Peter Tammetta of the City of Tenino.

The pump tracks themselves are a product of a Swedish brand, Parkitechts, which designed the tracks to fit into an urban landscape.

"I would say Parkitechts, their design, is very much at the forefront of that movement to the roller sport world, so it's exciting. It's the first in the nation of its kind," Tammetta said.

Featuring a fiberglass surface and steel structure, "it's got better curves and it's kind of a better surface area than, say, a plastic one ... and the ones that are built into the ground, they don't flow as well," Fournier said.

The June 17 grand opening ceremony for the pump tracks will run in conjunction with the Raise For Rowyn 5K, which begins at Tenino City Park at 10 a.m. For more information on the 5K, visit <https://www.raise4rowyn.org/run>.

The event will feature food vendors at Tenino City Park and professional BMX riders are set to perform stunts on the new tracks.

City of Centralia Fills in Pearl Street Pool to Avoid Liability

By Owen Sexton

owen@chronline.com

Following the Centralia City Council's decision in February to permanently close the Pearl Street Pool, city workers began filling it in with dirt to avoid "attractive nuisance liability," according to Centralia City Manager Rob Hill.

"A vacant pool is the definition of an attractive nuisance, which by law is not a good thing," Hill said. "So we absolutely cannot continue to have that liability sitting there just waiting for an incident to happen. I think we're very fortunate we didn't have one in the last 12 years."

While Washington state's premises liability laws say property owners are generally not liable if a person trespasses and is injured on the property, an exception is made for children under the attractive nuisance doctrine. This exception allows child trespassers or their parents and legal guardians to sue property owners for injuries caused by an unsafe object on the property as long as the object "attracted" the child onto the property.

Considering the added risk of drowning when the pool would fill up with rainwater on top of possible injuries sustained by someone falling in, Hill decided it was time to finally fill in the pool with dirt.

"I stood there a couple weeks ago on the edge of that pool and it was half full, and the only thing more dangerous than a full pool is a half full pool, that's the honest truth. If you fall in, you can't even grab anything to get out," Hill said.

Hill added he is still saddened by the pool's closure, especially with the efforts of the Save The Outdoor Pool (STOP) group, which has been leading efforts to reopen the pool ever since it was closed by the city in 2011 due to maintenance issues and budget constraints.

Jared Wenzelburger / jared@chronline.com

Workers begin to fill in the Pearl Street Pool in Centralia Wednesday afternoon after the Centralia City Council decided against putting a measure before voters to potentially pay for its repair or replacement in February.

STOP group members have repeatedly spoken out at Centralia City Council meetings asking the city to reopen the pool.

During its efforts, the STOP group raised more than $100,000 and obtained approval for several grants. The group presented plans for pool restoration in the past, but their efforts weren't enough to match the ever-increasing cost required to either renovate the existing pool or completely build a new one. The grants were eventually lost as the City of Centralia could not produce the funds to match them in order to keep them.

Hill also said that during the pool they have discovered other issues, such as leaking return lines, which would have added to renovation costs.

"The poor thing, it was just worn out and had timed out," Hill said of the pool.

As for what will replace the pool in the future, a variety of options are still being debated, including extending the splash pad to a playground, but nothing has been decided yet.

Originally built in the 1950s as a war memorial, the pool was owned and operated by the city until the early 1980s when it was first closed.

In 1984, it was reopened due to the efforts of Friends in Need, a local nonprofit that operated the pool until 2008 when the city resumed ownership until 2011, when it closed the pool again.

The Pearl Street Pool is located on the southwest corner of the intersection at West Hanson Street and North Pearl Street in downtown Centralia.

The Pearl Street Pool is pictured at about the time of its opening in this photo submitted by Dan Duffy for The Chronicle's Our Hometowns books.

CENTRALIA POLICE DEPARTMENT Attempt to Contact

• Officers were asked to contact two people sleeping in front of an attorney's office in the 100 block of North Rock Street just after 7:10 a.m. on June 7. The subjects left the scene before officers arrived.

Assault

• A 19-year-old Chehalis man was arrested in the 100 block of South Silver Street at approximately 10:35 a.m. on June 7 and was booked into the Lewis County Jail for fourth-degree assault, domestic violence.

Burglary

• A burglary involving the theft of a Stihl chain saw was reported in the 1100 block of Caviness Drive at approximately 5:10 p.m. on June 7.

Theft

• A Harley Davidson motorcycle was reported stolen from the 1200 block of West Walnut Street at 9:20 p.m. on June 7. The case is under investigation.

• A cellphone was reported stolen from a shelter in the 100 block of North Gold Street just after 7:10 a.m. on June 8.

• A government-issued phone was reported stolen from a shelter in the 100 block of North Tower Avenue just after 7:10 a.m. on June 8.

Drug Violation

• Officers contacted two homeless men from Aberdeen who were passed out in a vehicle at a park in the 2000 block of Borst Avenue just after 9:15 a.m. on June 8. Citations for drug violations were issued.

DUI

• Officers responded to the 1600 block Windsor Avenue to assist the Lewis County Sheriff's Office with a civil dispute report just before 8:05 p.m. on June 8. While there, officers learned that Todd J. Dodge, 51, of Kelso, was involved in the dispute and was under the influence of alcohol. "Officers warned Mr. Dodge not to drive while under the influence and advised him he would be arrested if he did," according to the Centralia Police Department. A short time later, officers observed Dodge attempt to depart in his vehicle. Dodge was arrested and booked into the Lewis County Jail for DUI.

Malicious Mischief

• An 18-year-old Oregon man was arrested in the 1000 block of Harrison Avenue just before noon on June 8 and was booked into the Lewis County Jail after he allegedly kicked a car door during a dispute and resisted officers' attempts to arrest him.

Dispute

• A verbal dispute between two homeless people from Santa Cruz, California, was reported in the 700 block of E Street just before 2:20 p.m. on June 8. The two reportedly told officers "they came to Centralia on the advice of friends because Centralia had better housing services."

Criminal Trespass

• Officers were dispatched to the Park and Ride in the 900 block of Old Airport Way just after 6 p.m. on June 8 for a report of "an aggressive and unruly male passenger who refused to get off the Twin City Transit bus." The passenger, a homeless man from Centralia, cooperated with officers and was trespassed from Twin Transit.

• Officers were asked to move along a man sleeping in his car on private property in the 1700 block of Central Boulevard just after 6:55 a.m. on June 9. The man, 49, of Chehalis, left without incident.

• Officers were asked to move three homeless people off of private property in the 600 block of North Tower Avenue just before 7:45 a.m. on June 9.

Defecation

• At approximately 7:55 a.m. on June 9, a citizen called to report that an unknown male came onto their property in the 400 block of West Plum Street and defecated near a covered area. "They described the male as wearing a black hooded sweatshirt and riding a small black bicycle," according to the Centralia Police Department. The male was gone when officers arrived, "however, he left corroborating evidence behind for the resident to clean up," according to the police department.

CHEHALIS POLICE DEPARTMENT Disorderly Conduct

• A woman was reportedly "yelling and screaming" in the 400 block of North Market Boulevard at 10 a.m. on June 7.

• A man was reportedly "throwing rocks onto the road and at vehicles" from a walking trail at the intersection of Northwest Louisiana Avenue and Airport Road just before 10:25 a.m. on June 8.

Criminal Trespass

• A man who repeatedly tried to steal items from a business in the 1900 block of South Market boulevard in front of an employee just after 11:15 a.m. on June 7 was trespassed from the business.

• A case of criminal trespass reported in the 1700 block of Northwest Louisiana Avenue just after 7:50 p.m. on June 8 is under investigation.

Theft

• A subject was cited for shoplifting in the 1700 block of Northwest Louisiana Avenue just before 5:45 p.m. on June 7.

• A case of shoplifting was reported in the 1400 block of Northwest Louisiana Avenue at approximately 12:20 p.m. on June 8.

Hit-and-Run

• A hit-and-run was reported in the 1900 block of Northwest Louisiana Avenue at 5:25 p.m. on June 7.

Disputes

• A verbal dispute was reported in the 10 block of Southwest William Avenue just after 10:25 p.m. on June 8.

• Just after 10:50 p.m. on June 8, a male caller asked officers to assist him in enforcing the parenting plan he has with a woman in the 200 block of Hidden Meadows Drive. Dispatch was reportedly on the phone with the male caller while he possibly went to the woman's home, rang the doorbell repeatedly, screamed at her to open the door, then advised officers he was "about to break the door." He reportedly advised law enforcement he had a gun on his person, advised "he has been drinking heavily tonight" and reportedly said "if he doesn't get the kids back he (was) gonna do something he will go to jail for." The call reportedly dropped several times, with law enforcement repeatedly trying to confirm the caller's location. No arrests were made.

Vehicle Accident

• Injuries were reported after a two-vehicle collision in a parking lot in the 1600 block of Northwest Louisiana Avenue just before 6:50 p.m. on June 7.

Child Abuse

• A case of possible child abuse that occurred two years prior was reported in the 300 block of Northwest Chehalis Avenue at 10:30 a.m. on June 8.

News in Brief

Souede threw out the charges halfway through the criminal trial against Gibson, 39, and Schultz, 53, ruling that video evidence showed the two had engaged only in heated rhetoric while others hurled drinks and brawled outside the Cider Riot patio in Northeast Portland.

In the new lawsuit, Lee argues that police, prosecutors and political leaders orchestrated the charges to suppress Gibson's rallies, which frequently spiraled into left-versus-right street fights.

He also pointed to a protest prosecution policy instituted by Schidmt after the 2020 murder of George Floyd, which ordered his staff to stop prosecuting riot cases unless paired with other allegations such as theft or use of force. Schmidt's office said the policy wasn't retroactive.

Five Arrested, Charged for Trying to Access Power Vault for 911 Communication Tower in Pierce County

By The News Tribune

Five people have been arrested for trying to break into a Tacoma power vault that supplied energy to a South Sound 911 communications tower, according to charging documents.

A spokesperson for the Tacoma Police Department said she couldn't speak to why the group tried to break into the vault Monday. It is near a closed golfing range in the 4500 block of South Tyler Street. Wendy Haddow said she didn't know whether they were trying to access material inside or if it was a larger plot against the infrastructure.

Richard Dewey Edvalds, Karly Kristine Johnson, Megan Nicole Mistretta, Michael Thomas Vaughn and Dana Andrew Woolsey were each charged Tuesday in Pierce County Superior Court with second-degree burglary and third-degree malicious mischief.

All but Vaughn were arraigned Tuesday afternoon, and Commissioner Craig Adams set a different bail amount for each defendant, between $10,000 and $50,000. Police said Vaughn was transported to a hospital after he was detained because he appeared to be having a seizure when he was in a patrol car. Court records don't show when he might be arraigned.

Two of the defendants, Edvalds, 59 and Woolsey, 46, were recently employed by R&R Recycling, a scrap metal recycling company on Pacific Avenue in Parkland, according to a pretrial services report. Edvalds is the owner, according to the report, but state business license records show R&R is led by another man with the last name Edvalds.

Two phone calls to the business Wednesday afternoon rang 10 times before the line dropped. A phone number for Richard Edvalds listed in the pretrial services report went straight to voicemail.

Edvalds' criminal history includes 10 convictions in Superior Court between 1998 and 2008, including convictions for trafficking stolen property, drug crimes and forgery. Woolsey's prior convictions include 11 in Superior Court between 1998 and 2023. The other defendants also have criminal history.

According to charging documents, police were called to the power vault at about 7 p.m. after security saw five people on camera trying to gain access. Police were told one person had a gun on his hip.

Sign R-101 to Protect Parents' Rights and Kids' Safety

This year, the Washington Legislature passed a controversial bill that will allow runaways to evade their parents and stay under state custody if the children are looking for abortions or sex change medical procedures.

Until now, state law has required the state to notify parents within 72 hours when runaways showed up in shelters — ideally within 24 hours if possible. The only exception was if the child would face abuse or neglect if the parent were notified.

Senate Bill 5599 changes that.

Now, the state has a “compelling reason” to hide the whereabouts of children from their parents if the minor is seeking or receiving reproductive health care services (including abortions) or “gender affirming treatment” — an

By Brian Mittge

Orwellian term that essentially means hormones or surgery to change their appearance to resemble the opposite sex. As per RCW 74.09.675, referenced in this year's bill, runaway minors must be hidden from their families if they want to undergo facial feminization surgeries, tracheal shaves, mastectomies, breast reductions, breast implants or any combination of so-called gender affirming procedures.

If a child runs away to get these medical treatments, the state will hide them under SB 5599.

“I keep trying to come up with a word to adequately describe how heinous this bill is,” said Dawn Seaver, a parent in Vancouver who is part of a group leading a referendum to overturn SB 5599.

“Here you've got a gender confused kid who runs away from home and then undergoes these life-altering treatments while being cared for by a stranger. Meanwhile, they're being deprived of their biggest advocates, the people who know and love them most, their parents.”

The effort to overturn the bill is called Referendum 101.

They need to collect 200,000 signatures by July 15 to get the referendum on the ballot to give voters the chance to reject SB 5599.

Learn more, order petitions, donate or get information on signing events at www.reject5599.com.

Seaver has been active on these issues since 2015. At that time, she said she was “just a mom” who happened to read in the newspaper about a decision to allow men who identify as women into locker rooms and bathrooms for girls and women.

“My daughter was 14 and that didn't work for me,” said Seaver, who went on to co-found Informed Parents of Washington and Washington Parents' Rights in Education.

She has since collected data on transgender issues that add nuance to a discussion that is usually seen as a simplistic “we must immediately affirm someone's stated gender identity and allow them to explore gender even at a young age.”

What Seaver found is that the majority of trans kids will later identify with their biological sex if simply allowed to go through puberty. About 80% will desist from a transgender identity before adulthood.

“If you look at that one stat alone, why are we transitioning kids at all?” she said. “The majority of them will come out the other side. Some of them will be gay. If we let them start going through transition almost 100% of them go the whole way. Once they start down that path, they become lifelong medical patients who are sterile, who can't enjoy intimacy. I can't come up with the words to describe how awful it is.”

Supporters of the affirmation philosophy say that trans youth are at heightened risk of suicide.

But that tragic fact needs context, too. What Seaver found is that about 75% of children identifying as trans have one or more comorbidities like anxiety or depression — and that trans people have the same suicide rate as non-trans kids with those mental health issues.

And a long-term study in Sweden — a country with a long history of support and affirmation for trans identities — found that adults who had transitioned had a suicide rate 19 times the general population.

Trans issues are complex. The science is unsettled and the impacts are clearly significant. Whatever position one has, it's clear that allowing the state to hide children who are in the midst of gender confusion from their parents is wrong.

Signing R-101 and rejecting 5599 is the right response.

Lewis County Special Olympics Is a Cause Worth Supporting

Despite the lingering pain in my knees and back, plus the constant reminder from my son that he ran all 19 miles and “beat me,” I have only great feelings and memories of this year's Lewis County Law Enforcement Torch Run to benefit the Lewis County Special Olympics and our amazing athletes.

“No pain, no gain” is what I tell myself before each Torch Run and Polar Plunge to benefit the pride of Lewis County and Washington state.

This year's Torch Run route started at the Napavine Police Department and weaved its way to cheering students at Napavine, Chehalis and Centralia schools. Almost every step was met with cheering community members, honking cars and laughter from the runners and supporters. It was another reminder that we live in a very amazing community.

Although formally the Special Olympics was established in 1968, the real origins began more humbly and organic. The Special Olympics began as Camp Shriver. In 1960, Eunice Shriver, a parent from Bethesda, Maryland, was having trouble finding a summer camp for her child with intellectual disabilities. Mainstream camps were not accepting her child, public education was not equipped for children with special needs and summer-after-summer came and went without activities for her child and countless other children with disabilities.

That is when Eunice Shriver contacted other parents and schools with special-needs children and started Camp Shriver, with 34 children and 26 high school and college-aged counselors. They learned to swim, played baseball, shot baskets, rode horses and had summer fun. The camp grew. Soon, the Special Olympics was born in 1968.

Today, the worldwide Special Olympics has six million athletes, one million coaches and volunteers and over 100,000 competitions every year. Thousands of those athletes, parents, coaches and supporters are right here in the state of Washington.

Sadly though, the story of Eunice Shriver continues in many families unable to find adequate programs or afford to provide the summer camp and Special Olympics experience for their child or family member. That is where our local Lewis County Special Olympics organization steps up to help.

Each year, I am proud to volunteer and work alongside some very amazing people to plan the Polar Plunge at Mayfield Lake in the winter and the Law Enforcement Torch Run in the summer.

Concern Over 'Hub City Loves' Banner

I wanted to express my concern over the message being sent with the “Hub City Loves” banner hanging over Pearl Street downtown. While I do agree that it is important for everyone to know that they are valued and loved, the message that is sent with the rainbow colors only communicates that those who agree with the LGBTQ+ lifestyle are valued.

The flag and what it represents absolutely does not include everyone, especially those who are morally opposed to the LGBTQ+ lifestyle. Would not a better message to send be, “Hub City Loves Everyone,” with colors that are representative of Centralia and not just a particular sub-group of people?

As a Christian, I have strong moral objections to the lifestyle promoted by the LGBTQ+ agenda, and I definitely do not feel like the banner that is currently hanging up downtown communicates that Hub City appreciates me or those who share a similar view as me. But, while I definitely do not support that lifestyle, I believe those who subscribe to it deserve to be shown the same respect and courtesy as any other person.

So, instead of just complaining about something and not providing a solution, I would propose that the same words can be used, but instead of the rainbow colors (again, only representative of a small sub-group of people) colors should be selected that represent Centralia (such as the school colors of Centralia High School). I believe that would be a better representation of what Centralia stands for — that the Hub City cares about everyone, not just a select few.

Beak of the Week Musings

Regarding your recent Beak of the Week entry with an evening grosbeak, we have been happily viewing a pair of them out our window. This pair seems to be a mated pair and has been together all spring.

Do you know if that's the case, bonding as a mated pair? That has advantages for both, but I hope that they can live long together. There was a case in New England involving a pair of swans where some teen jerks broke into the enclosure in the town where the swans lived, murdered the male and stole all the signets. The female was absolutely inconsolable. I trust that our neighbors would never do that. Anyway, in this case the teens were found and the signets were retrieved but the parents were busy eating the male swan. Disgusting! Lucky they don't live in England where all the swans are owned by the King. There they'd be fined, imprisoned or both.

In Response to School Levy Failure

Responding to Lisa Grant, Superintendent of Centralia School District letter May 31, 2023, I can feel her disappointment that the school levy didn't pass, but I believe that the school superintendent doesn't fully understand what this school levy would have cost property owners like me.

The funds raised at these events and donations throughout the year help make the Special Olympics a reality for so many athletes and families. Uniforms, travel expenses and equipment all cost money, so any amount of assistance can help make an Olympic dream come true.

Every athlete deserves an opportunity to be successful and do what they love. Athletics and competition is healthy, therapeutic and social and promotes our communities in the best possible ways. I am honored to support the Special Olympics and proud of our athletes competing and Pacific Lutheran University June 9 through June 11.

Thank you in advance for your support, and thank you to Centralia Officer Ruben Ramirez, Branda Pagett, Sara Sons, the Centralia Police Department, the Napavine Police Department, Chehalis Tribal Police, the Lewis County Sheriff's Office and all those volunteering, organizing and supporting the 2023 Law Enforcement Torch Run.

A special congratulations goes to all the runners and the four brave runners that completed all 19 miles, including Antonio Abbarno, 10, Lewis County Commissioner Sean Swope, Royal Sons and Centralia Police Sergeant Dave Clary.

To support our Lewis County Special Olympics Athletes, consider a contribution to the Centralia Police Officers Association, c/o Law Enforcement Torch Run, 118 W. Maple St., Centralia, Washington, 98531, or visit www.LewisCountyLETR.com. And, consider plunging with our Lewis County Icicle Brigade team this winter.

Divine Intervention and America's Founders

A recent letter suggested that Divine Intervention in earthly affairs was regarded by America's Founders as “nonsense.” The writer is evidently unfamiliar with The British Enlightenment's divide between the school of thought populated by such as John Locke and the one led by such as Edmund Burke. The principle distinction between the two was the view by Burke that no social contract could long endure without the recognition of the role of “Divine Providence” in the fortunes of a given society of freemen. This belief would win the day and is the basis from which America's founders drew their inspiration.

Centralia Public Works Releases 2022 Water Quality Report

By The Chronicle staff

The City of Centralia Public Works Department released the city's 2022 water quality report in May.

Of the more than 100 contaminants the city tested for, the water did not exceed any state or federal contamination limits, according to the report.

Centralia's water is classified as groundwater, meaning it is sourced from drilled wells. Underground aquifers being tapped by the wells are susceptible to contamination from above-ground activities.

Lead, arsenic, copper, radium 228, nitrate, total trihalomethanes and haloacetic acids were among the contaminants tested for.

There are both natural and human causes for many of these contaminants, including erosion of natural deposits into local aquifers, corrosion of plumbing systems, runoff from fertilizer use or being byproducts of the drinking water chlorination process.

Other contaminants include microbial matter from broken sewer lines, leaking septic systems, livestock operations and wildlife as well as inorganic matter from industrial and domestic wastewater discharges, oil and gas production, mining, farming or stormwater runoff containing salts and metals.

The public works department uses three treatment methods for Centralia's water: air stripping, chlorination and fluoridation.

Air stripping involves large volumes of air being forced through the water to remove dissolved gas and volatile substances. It is also the main method used to reduce copper and lead levels in the water by increasing the water's pH level from 6.7 to 7.7, the report stated.

Despite these results, the report still shared this warning from the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) concerning lead and copper contamination:

"Infants and children who drink water containing lead in excess of the action level could experience delays in their physical or mental development. Children could show slight deficits in attention span and learning abilities. Adults who drink this water over many years could develop kidney problems or high blood pressure. Some people who drink water containing copper in excess of the action level over a relatively short amount of time could experience gastrointestinal distress. Some people who drink water containing copper in excess of the action level over many years could suffer liver or kidney damage. People with Wilson's Disease should consult their personal doctor."

Chlorination is used to disinfect the water supply and sits at between 0.2 and 1.2 parts per million (ppm) in samples tested, according to the report. The EPA established the maximum residual disinfectant level for chlorine in water at 4 ppm and the maximum residual disinfectant level goal at 4 ppm.

Fluorination is used to aid in tooth decay prevention. Fluoride levels are maintained at levels between 0.5 and 0.9 ppm, according to the report. The EPA established the maximum contaminant level goal for fluoride at 4 ppm.

Public Works personnel are also trying to help conserve water. They fixed a total of 109 leaks throughout both main and service lines in 2022.

To help prevent contamination, the report asked residents to properly dispose of used oil, gas, pesticides and other hazardous chemicals instead of dumping them on the ground or down sinks and toilets.

For more information on hazardous material disposal, call

Chehalis Resident, 18, Airlifted to Harborview Medical Center After Being Struck by Semi on U.S. Highway 12 Early Thursday Morning

By The Chronicle staff

An 18-year-old Chehalis resident was airlifted to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle early Thursday morning after being struck by a semi-truck on U.S. Highway 12 near Mary's Corner, according to a news release from the Washington State Patrol.

Latrell A. Hughes was standing in the roadway when he was struck by a 2022 Mack Anthem driven by Richard R. Smegelski, 66, of Tumwater, according to the state patrol.

The incident occurred just after midnight, according to the state patrol.

The state patrol has listed the cause of the crash as pedestrian in the roadway.

Girl, 10, Found After 24 Hours Lost in Kittitas County Wilderness

By The Seattle Times

After spending 24 hours missing in the Cle Elum River Valley, 10-year-old Shunghla Mashwani was reunited with her family on Monday. The night before, she slept between some trees in the dense wilderness after being separated from her family Sunday afternoon, according to the Kittitas County Sheriff's Office.

On Sunday, Shunghla and her extended family gathered at the Cathedral Pass Trailhead on Fish Lake Road and were playing in the woods near the Cle Elum River.

When the family crossed a footbridge over the Cle Elum River to break for lunch, they noticed Shunghla was missing.

Around 20 adults in the group immediately started searching for her. There was no cell signal in the valley. The group searched for nearly two hours before someone on a utility terrain vehicle drove by and offered to use a satellite phone to call 911.

Shunghla's family reported her missing shortly before 2 p.m. The sheriff's office launched a search. At approximately 3 p.m. Monday, just over 24 hours after Shunghla's family reported her missing, two search and rescue volunteers found her alive with only minor scrapes.

The Mashwani family — who came to the U.S. from Afghanistan two years ago — told searchers they like to spend time in the high backcountry because it reminds them of home.

The sheriff's office said Shunghla proved "an extraordinarily resourceful and resilient 10-year-old."

IN LOVING MEMORY OF

JoAnn Lovgren

1931 ~ 2023

JoAnn (Dagny Marie) Gjøl/Jull, Grandorff, Witt, Lovgren, 91, passed away May 30, 2023, at Silver Acres Adult Family Home in Chehalis, Washington. She was born Oct. 23, 1931, in Montesano, Washington, to Kristian and Dagny (Hansen) Gjøl.

JoAnn attended school in Montesano, moved to Oakville after her junior year and graduated from Oakville High School in 1949. She met and married John W. Grandorff in April 1949 and they had six children. John passed away in October 1965 at the age of 35 after an illness. She married James D. Witt in March 1967 and they had a daughter together.

Jim passed away in December 1998 at age 64 after heart surgery. JoAnn married Richard W. Lovgren in 2004 and gained four stepchildren. Richard passed away at age 90 in July of 2016.

JoAnn was a homemaker but, in her 60s, worked at the Antique Mall in Centralia and loved fixing window displays. She loved to dance (especially the jitterbug), spent many Saturdays at Swede Hall in Rochester and later started square dancing. She enjoyed gardening, sewing, and traveling, including a trip to Norway, where her parents were born.

JoAnn was preceded in death by her parents; stepmother, Gunvor; brother, John Jull; sister, Margaret Marche; and her son, John W. Grandorff Jr.

She is survived by daughters, Susan (Larry) Haugh, Judi (Bill) Wamsley, Nancy (Erik) Hegg and Julie (Marc) Herr; sons, Bill (Gloria) Grandorff and Tom (Jody) Grandorff; 18 grandchildren; 17 great-grandchildren; two great-great-grandchildren; and numerous nephews and nieces.

JoAnn spent her last years at Silver Acres, where she received excellent care, even when she was a little grumpy. Also, thank you to the Hospice individuals.

JoAnn requested — no, adamantly stated — she did not want a service of any kind, only graveside with immediate family.

by hauling hay to Western Washington. While in Ellensburg, he found the love of his life, Barbara "Barb" J. Blue. They were married in Ephrata on June 2, 1947, and had three children. After a few months, Don and Barb moved to Western Washington where they lived, worked and raised their children in Tenino and Lacey during the years until their retirement. For almost 40 years, Don drove trucks of any kind with any kind of load (hay, logs, dynamite, gasoline or beer). The final 20 years of his career were spent working for Santry trucking, hauling Olympia beer. No other driver for the company could match Don's record of having over two million miles without a chargeable accident.

After retirement in 1983, Don and Barb sold their home in Lacey and took on a fun new chapter in their life. They moved into their RV full time and became RV wagon masters. Working for Tracks to Adventure and Points South, they led over 100 caravans on trips to places in Mexico, New Zealand and along the full length of the Oregon trail in addition to over 25 trips to Alaska. During the '80s and '90s, the citizens band radio (CB) was the most common form of communication among caravanners. Don and Barb's call sign was ROVER 99. In 1996, they bought a home in Centralia, although for several years they continued to travel to Alaska in the summers and to Arizona in the winter.

In July 2019, after 72 years of marriage, Don was preceded in death by his wife, Barb. His death was also preceded by his daughter, Donna Jean; his granddaughter, Jennifer Lynne Grate; and step-grandchildren, Robert "Bobby" Lund and Mary Lund.

Don is survived by his daughter, Carol (Dave) Lund, of Centralia; son, Allen Hayward, of Tumwater; and his brother, John Perrie. He has many grandchildren, great-grandchildren, great-great-grandchildren, nephews and nieces.

Don's family wants to express their thanks and appreciation for the care and compassion shown to our father by the staff of Providence SoundHomeCare and Hospice and to the helpful staff at Olympics West.

In lieu of flowers, if desired, memorials may be made to the Veterans Memorial Museum in Centralia where Don had a lifetime membership.

Don and Barb are now reunited in their travels for eternity as ROVER 99.

A private inurnment will be held at Mountain View Cemetery in Centralia.

of them are labeled “KILLER TREE” with bright orange tape marked by a skull and crossbones.

Firefighting, especially in the jagged terrain of Cascadian forests, is both costly and dangerous. The understory is thick. Right now, it's also dry. Burnt trees create stump holes that can be several feet deep. Plus, the old growth trees that are Iron Creek Campground's crown jewels, Suver said bluntly, “would not feel good if they fell on you.”

The same thing that makes people love camping in the Northwest forests is what makes its fires a challenge, he said.

Several times, Mike McMillan, a U.S. Forest Service public information officer on the fire, called the burning area “treacherous.”

Earlier in the week, a crew of expert tree fellers made their way through the campground to identify and topple as many of the “killers” as they could. A second evaluation by a hazard tree specialist on Friday will help the operations team outline their game plan going forward.

Currently, teams have set a perimeter around the fire with hoses and sprinklers. Within that perimeter, wherever they can't safely reach could burn. Rain on Friday morning is likely to aid the work.

The Lewis County Fire Marshal has imposed a burn ban, effective Friday. Despite the rainfall, a news release from the Forest Service stated, ground fuels remain dry, and “the public is urged to use extra caution with all potential sources of ignition.”

Community On Edge

Jeania Colman, 72, of Randle, has spent summers at campsite C55 all her life.

She and her 2-year-old cocker spaniel, Ruggins, love the hiking trails and how, despite its popularity, the area stays peaceful, quiet and private.

“I love my Iron Creek. It's tradition. I camp all summer. But it's OK. We'll figure something else out,” Colman said. “We'll get over there, I just don't know when.”

She's trying to be optimistic, but with Iron Creek and La Wis Wis closed, her top pick is North Fork Campground, which lacks the privacy and trail system she and Ruggins long for.

It's been a challenging year for East Lewis County. The community is on edge. Group chats and Facebook posts are buzzing with questions on the Iron Creek Fire, and the crews are keenly aware.

Last summer, east county residents lived through the Goat Rocks Fire. Caused by lightning in early August 2022, the blaze swelled to more than 6,000 acres toward the end of summer less than two miles from neighborhoods, prompting evacuations and a miserable early fall for Packwood under a blanket of smoke.

But Iron Creek is different, Suver said. He worked on the Goat Rocks Fire, and because it was naturally-caused, plans for management had flexibility. The “containment” percentage never mirrored the growth in acres.

Every decision is made with safety as a priority, and the cost-benefit of utilizing resources next.

Natural fires are just that, and agencies don't always extinguish them.

But the Iron Creek Fire originated in a campsite. Crews will work until the fire is 100% contained.

When a reporter clarified the definition of “100% containment” by asking if a person could “go out and stick your fingers in it?” Suver chuckled and said, “That's what the guys do.”

Investigators are still working with witness statements and examination of the scene to determine the exact cause.

“We certainly don't know if it was intentional, we don't know if it was accidental, but it was human-caused because there was no lightning,” said McMillan, later adding, “The firefighters, typically, we focus on the fire. We almost don't even care how it starts. We're lucky to have work and we like our job. When we come to a fire, our job is to put it out.”

McMillan, who has a degree in journalism, was once a “smoke jumper” who parachuted into hard-to-reach spots for firefighting.

With the thickness of the canopy in Western Washington's forests, sometimes, that's what it takes to get fire off the ground. Earlier this week, the Department of Natural Resources provided air support at Iron Creek. But with the canopy preventing water from reaching the understory, McMillan said, continuing with the helicopters would be “pissing in the wind.”

On the first few days of the fire, it was climbing trees. Once it reached the top of one, McMillan said, embers would essentially “rain” down to the ground, creating a “mosaic” of fire. Now, with elimination of a lot of the fuel, there are very few flames as it continues to smolder.

Unlike the Goat Rocks Fire, the geography is in the firefighters' favor. Three natural barriers, crews are fairly sure, will keep it under control; the campground is surrounded by Iron Creek, the Cispus River and Forest Service roads 25 and 76.

During Goat Rocks, teams at various fires across the state and beyond were fighting over crews. After 110 were working on the fire earlier this week, Iron Creek will only need a couple dozen for the current work.

“You don't wanna be the guy that just sits on everything just in case you need it,” Suver said, later adding, “The complexity drives the number of resources, which tells you how big a team you need.”

The Cowlitz Valley Ranger District will be the final decision maker when it comes to opening the campground. Even once the fire is 100% out, though, there will be plenty of clean-up work.

“We just encourage people to go find other beautiful places. That's the unfortunate part of a wildfire like this that is human-caused. It's more understandable when the lightning strikes. You know, you can't get too mad at that. But this one was —” McMillan said.

Suver chimed in, “It was preventable.”

code. I do not have evidence that he dishonestly represented his own opinions as the Port's official position; made unauthorized promises; obligated the Port to a course of action that was counter to official policy; caused an OPMA (Open Public Meetings Act) violation; or made statements that were detrimental to the Port's litigation position,” Attorney Kathleen Haggard said in the report.

Haggard went on to say Lahmann's conduct could still cause problems even if it doesn't violate the port's ethics code.

“When he represents himself, or allows others to represent him, as a port commissioner at public appearances, this blurs lines, creates distrust and discord among the staff and other commissioners, and calls into question Lahmann's commitment to the collaborative process,” Haggard said.

She believed this issue was problematic as Lahmann had failed to disclose appearances to the port in the past and because he disagreed with other commissioners on policy matters.

Additionally, Haggard said in general there was tension and disruption within the port stemming not only from its own commissioners and employees, but outside sources as well.

She brought up a Facebook group, Centralia Citizens for an Open and Honest Port, and how it is often critical of how the port conducts business while being supportive of Lahmann.

The group, now a little over a year old, is at 768 members and frequently calls for more transparency from the port in its business dealings, access to port documents and real estate listings and more accessible public meetings using Zoom. Additionally, the group has raised concerns over port construction projects and budget issues.

Haggard also noted that union leaders and community members routinely attend port meetings and vocally support Lahmann and call out “perceived wrongdoing by the port.”

Haggard then recommended making six amendments to the port's ethics code including:

- A requirement to keep the port from incurring Open Public Meetings Act liability by having commissioners give the port commission and administration advanced notice of intent to attend other public events and not attending those events if doing so would create a quorum. As the port only has three commissioners, any time one is not present, a quorum exists.

- A requirement for port commissioners to state when they are giving their own opinion and not speaking on behalf of the port.

- A prohibition on promises not supported by official port policy.

- The creation of “prescribed talking points for high-risk matters, such as ongoing litigation.”

- A requirement to maintain reasonable decorum and refrain from attacking staff.

- The creation of formal committee and liaison assignments for commissioners who remain reasonably free to participate in non-port activities.

Haggard recommended these changes to try to help the commissioners work better as a collaborative body. Haggard ended the report by saying “voluntary cooperation with the above-listed guidelines could be a good place to start.”

In a statement released by Port of Centralia Commissioner Kyle Markstrom, he sought to assure the community and stakeholders that allegations of ethics violations are taken seriously and thoroughly investigated “to ensure the public's trust in our operations.”

He believes Lahmann's actions still had the possibility of creating the appearance of impropriety and stated that public servants should ensure their actions are beyond reproach and uphold the highest ethical standards.

“Moving forward, we will take the findings of the investigation seriously and work towards strengthening our ethical framework,” Markstrom said in the statement. “The port commission remains committed to promoting transparency, fostering trust within the community and upholding the values that underpin our operations.”

In a news release sent to The Chronicle, Port of Centralia Executive Director Kyle Heaton stated, “While the investigation concluded that there was not enough evidence to refer this matter further, Commissioner Lahmann's actions were very close to, if not over, the line. Going forward, the port will consider new ethics rules to ensure that no commissioner can use their position for their own personal advantage.”

In Haggard's report, though, she added that Lahmann “receives no bonus or additional compensation for connecting workers with apprenticeship opportunities” in his work with the WDVA apprenticeship program.

Lahmann was contacted for comment but could not respond before press deadline due to other work constraints. His response will be published by The Chronicle at a later date.

Additionally, the WDVA opened up its own, separate investigation into Lahmann's work as the WDVA apprenticeship program coordinator when the port launched its own.

The Chronicle reached out to the WDVA for comment on its investigation but did not receive a response before press deadline.

Port of Centralia Commissioner Julie Shaffley was also contacted for comment but did not respond before press deadline.

According to Markstrom, the total cost of the port's third-party investigation was $10,237.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF

JoAnn Foster went from this world to the arms her Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, on June 1, 2023 at the age of 88. She was kind, loving, and generous, the best mother and grandmother her family could have had. She was very dearly loved.

She was born December 9, 1934 in Winlock, Washington to her parents, Darwin “Hooney” and Estena Fletcher. She was delivered by Dr. Marsh, who delivered babies in a home on 1st Street. JoAnn was later joined by sisters Kay and Sharon. She was a joyous and loving child and that spirit never left her. She spent her childhood days in a series of houses in the town of Winlock and then in the surrounding countryside in her teenage years. She loved large family gatherings on the Fletcher and Ward sides of her family.

In 1952 she married Paul Foster, the love of her life, and they had sixty-seven wonderful years together before Paul's death in 2020. Their slogan as a couple was “Sweethearts Forever” and they set an example for their family of loving commitment, respect and adoration. They build their home together on a foundation of faith in God and trusted him for all things in life.

They welcomed children Sherri, Debbie, Melody, and Brett and were thrilled when, later in life, grandchildren and great-grandchildren were added to the family.

JoAnn was Paul's helpmate and support in years of logging and farming and she cooked many a dinner for hay crews on hot summer days and sheep shearers who came to work for the day. Her cooking was legendary and her family has so many fond memories of her Sunday roast beef dinners, her holiday meals and her camping cast iron kettle fare. She was warm and gracious, always ready to make food for someone, and invited all to her home with a welcoming smile and cheerful greeting. She was happy to have fifty or more people in her house at Christmas as the family grew and those days were her greatest joy.

She will be greatly missed. Her love for each of her family members was a guiding light and warm comfort in this life.

“Her children arise and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praises her: many women do noble things, but you surpass them all.” Proverbs 31: 28,29

JoAnn is survived by her four children, Sherri (Tom) Kretz, Debbie (Ron) Zucati, Melody (Sam) Zucati, and Brett (Dayla) Foster. She is additionally survived by her grandchildren; Bryan Kretz, Daniel Kretz, Julia Cambe, Anthony Zucati, Lauren Zucati, Reid Zucati, Zachary Zucati, Andrew Zucati, Brittany Martin, Spencer Zucati, Jessica Brock, Alexis Gage, Matthew Foster, Seth Foster, and 38 great-grandchildren.

JoAnn was preceded in death by her husband Paul, parents, her sisters Kay Luhn and Sharon Backman, brothers-in-law Neil Luhn, Milford Backman and Kirk Foster and great-grandson Nathan Zucati.

The family wishes to thank Silver Acres II in Centralia for the excellent care Mom received in her final months. Thank you to caregivers Shelly, Tigera, Christian, Tucker, Lauren, Michelle and Jahnel. The love, compassion, and kindness you showed Mom was outstanding and very much appreciated.

There will be a private family graveside service.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF

ROBERT MCINTURFF

1934 ~ 2023

On Wednesday, May 24, Robert R. McInturff beloved husband, father and friend, passed away at the age of 89 years. Robert was born on March 28, 1934 in Walla Walla, WA. After graduation from Walla Walla High school in 1952, Robert attended Washington State University. After leaving WSU, Robert served in the US Military from 1955 – 1957, serving in the intelligence service in Germany. After completing his military service he met and married Karen B. Duus of Chilliwack, BC. They married on November 24, 1960 and had been married 62 years. They raised two sons, David and Robert Jr.

Robert owned and operated Centralia General Agencies from 1966 through 1993. His passion was for the outdoors and he was a member of the Washington Mountaineers. During his time with the Mountaineers, he summited all the major peaks in Oregon and Washington and holds the 6 peaks pin. In later life, he continued to love hiking with friends, enjoying natural scenery and finding joy in the contemplation of nature. Robert also enjoyed art, especially carving. His carved artwork often reflected northwest native American themes.

Robert was known for his laugh and sense of humor and his compassion for others. Robert is survived by his wife, Karen, his two sons, David and Robert, and three grandchildren: Sophia, Wallace and Stuart. In lieu of flowers or gifts, the family requests donations be directed to the Centralia Salvation Army. A Celebration of Life service will be held at 11:00 am on July 1, 2023 at the Borst Chapel in Borst Park. In recognition of his military service, Robert will be interred at Willamette National Cemetery.

By The Chronicle staff

The Centralia-Chehalis Chamber of Commerce held a ribbon-cutting event at downtown Centralia's newest business, Saddle Bum Western Store, on Wednesday.

The event came after the business held its soft opening on May 20. It's located at 328 N. Tower Ave. in the lobby of the old Wilson Hotel. To start, it will be open from Wednesday through Saturday from 10:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Jeannie Gluck, a Lewis County resident for most of her life, told The Chronicle last month she wanted a store that offers western-style clothing along with cowboy hat cleaning. After Rock-in R Hats in Centralia closed, she decided to open her own store.

Her goal is to create a family-oriented store with a laid-back atmosphere.

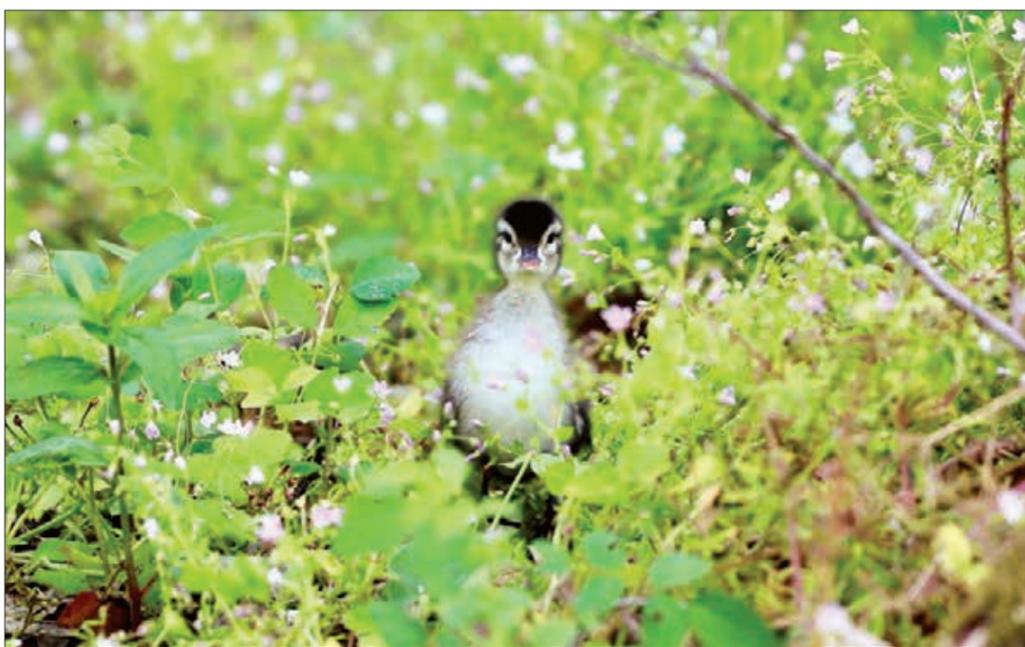

"Your kids can play here and it will not be odd to see my grandson running amok because he'll be there every day," Jeannie Gluck said last month.

For more information, email shopsaddlebum@gmail.com. Follow the business on Facebook to stay up to date on products and events.

As Historic Smoke Blankets the East Coast, Northwest Leaders Hope Congress Will Wake Up to the Wildfire Threat

By Orion Donovan-Smith

The Spokesman-Review

WASHINGTON — The nation's capital woke up Thursday to the impact of catastrophic wildfires — perhaps in more ways than one — as smoke from nearly 10 million acres ablaze in Canada blanketed the East Coast.

The District of Columbia was under a "code purple" alert on the U.S. Air Quality Index — higher than code red, indicating it had "very unhealthy" air — when the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources convened a well-timed hearing Thursday morning on the federal response to wildfires. Senators on the panel from Washington and Idaho said they hoped the eye-stinging haze would spur Congress to act on proposals aimed at addressing a problem that has at times been treated as too parochial to be a federal priority.

"I think America is waking up, at least on the East Coast, to this problem," said Sen. Maria Cantwell, D-Wash. "We certainly have known all about it on the West Coast for some time now, and I think that it is a time and opportunity for us to really break down the barriers that are prohibiting us from having a faster response."

Sen. Jim Risch, R-Idaho, echoed that sentiment, and called on his colleagues to pass several bills he has sponsored to accelerate prescribed burns and other forest management practices that have been shown to reduce the risk of extreme fires.

"For those of you who live on the East Coast, welcome to our air in the West," Risch said. "This is common. I don't remember a summer in Boise when we haven't had smoke."

The Washington Nationals

postponed their game Thursday, and the White House delayed a Pride Month celebration as smoke drifted across the Northeast. More than 100 million Americans were under Air Quality Index alerts, according to the White House, due to the smoke from one of Canada's worst wildfire seasons on record. More than 425 active wildfires had burned nearly 10 million acres in the United States' neighbor to the north, 17 times the country's average over the past two decades.

The National Interagency Fire Center was sending more than 600 federal and state wildland firefighters and support personnel to help control the fires in Canada, the White House said. With the U.S. fire season just beginning, Cantwell showed the committee the latest assessment from the Boise-based agency, which projects that nearly all of Washington state will be facing "above normal" risk of wildfires by July.

While Democrats emphasized the role climate change plays in worsening fire seasons and Republicans stressed the need to ramp up timber projects and other forest management practices, the hearing highlighted areas of bipartisan agreement. One proposal with support from both parties in the House and Senate would expand the "Good Neighbor Authority" program that lets states, tribes and counties remove trees and other fuels from federal land with the federal government's approval.

As they questioned witnesses from the Interior Department and U.S. Forest Service, Democrats also called for Congress to fully fund President Joe Biden's budget request for those agencies, which would give wildland firefighters a permanent pay hike and provide additional funding for their mental and physical health. It would also fund affordable housing for those workers and increase funding to the Forest Service and Interior Department.

Jeffrey Rupert, the director of the Interior Department's Office of Wildland Fire, told the senators hotter climates have dried out wood and other fuels, which his agency wants to remove more of through prescribed burns, timber harvesting and other methods.

"We go through these periods of extreme drought," Rupert said. "That absolutely is a huge part of driving these catastrophic mega-fires that we're experiencing."

Cantwell urged federal agencies to adopt communication technologies that could help speed their response to wildfires. She also advocated more prescribed burns, noting that opposition to setting small, controlled fires to remove fuel can be counterproductive.

"People were like, 'Well, there will be some smoke,' " she said, describing opponents of the practice. "Well, because we're not doing prescribed burns, we're getting a whole lot of smoke, OK? So the point is, let's change our management system response so that we can reduce fire risk. This summer is telling us we need to do that now."

Risch, who earned a bachelor's degree in forestry from the University of Idaho, urged Congress to change regulations that environmentalists have used to slow or block timber projects and noted that wildfires are a natural part of the landscape of the West.

"For years, we have focused on putting out fires," he said. "And by being successful at it, we've caused the problem that we've got."

In the House, Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers, R-Spokane, released a statement Thursday calling for Congress to act.

"The wildfire smoke blanketing the East Coast of the United States is an unfortunate reminder of what we have dealt with in Eastern Washington — every single summer — for decades," she said. "With this issue getting more national attention, it is a call to work together on solutions like supporting proactive and collaborative forest management, which I've led on for years, to prevent catastrophic wildfires in the United States. Ensuring our forests are healthy is the key to keeping our communities safe and helping shield everyone from the harms of poor air quality."

JBLM Helicopters Shot at by Man Posing as 'Peace Officer,' Charges Say

By Peter Talbot

The News Tribune

A felon posing as a "peace officer" Wednesday evening at American Lake — complete with a badge, handcuffs and gun — fired gunshots at two military helicopters from Joint Base Lewis-McChord, according to charging documents.

No injuries or damage to the aircraft have been reported, JBLM spokesperson Gary Dangerfield told The News Tribune. Court records say Chinook helicopters carrying 31 service members were conducting training exercises.

Andre Wright Jr., 45, was charged Thursday in Pierce County Superior Court with first-degree assault, second-degree unlawful possession of a firearm and possession of a stolen firearm.

At arraignment Thursday afternoon, defense counsel requested that Wright undergo a competency evaluation. Commissioner Craig Adams ordered the defendant held without bail pending its completion.

Court records show Wright has prior convictions for felony criminal mischief with a deadly weapon, failure to register as a sex offender and forgery. Prosecutors wrote in charging papers that Wright had felony charges dismissed in 2016 and 2019 due to competency issues. In each case, he was reportedly referred to Western State Hospital for civil commitment and later released.

"He assured the officers that his 'personnel number' would be in the cockpit of the helicopters that were flying overhead."

prosecutors
charging documents

Lakewood Police Department officers responded just after 8 p.m. to a park on the lake's north shore, according to the declaration for determination of probable cause. Multiple callers had reported that a person shot twice at military helicopters. One caller stayed on the line with dispatchers to update them on the shooter's location.

Arriving officers saw a bystander pointing to the suspect described in 911 calls and approached him. Records state he was on the phone and wearing a multicolored shirt and sunglasses. Officers detained the man, identified as Wright, and frisked him for weapons.

The man had a concealed Glock handgun on his hip, two metal "security" badges and handcuffs in a holster, according to the probable cause document. The gun, which was loaded with 14 rounds, was later confirmed stolen out of Tacoma. Police reported that by the way he had his gear on his belt, Wright appeared as if he was trying to portray himself as "some sort of official peace officer," records state.

Wright allegedly claimed to be a Lakewood police officer with its "special operations unit." Police reported he had a detailed story — he also claimed to be the "air commander" of a Pierce County Sheriff's Department helicopter unit and a commander of an airborne military unit.

"He assured the officers that his 'personnel number' would be in the cockpit of the helicopters that were flying overhead," prosecutors wrote in charging papers. "The defendant then said that he worked for the 'Department of Defense and Offense' and was involved with the Marine Corps and said that American Lake was a 'recently purchased Marine Corps artillery range.'"

Video shot by a bystander showed at least five Lakewood police patrol cars responded to American Lake Park's public boat launch. The park appeared busy. The video also showed the two helicopters flying low over the water and then departing.

The criminal investigation is ongoing, and prosecutors wrote in charging documents that additional assault charges would be filed once the service members in the helicopters are identified. Dangerfield said JBLM's Criminal Investigation Division is working with Lakewood police.

SIERRA PACIFIC FOUNDATION 2023 SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS

The Sierra Pacific Foundation is awarding over $521,000 in scholarships to 169 students as they attend colleges, universities, and trade schools during the 2023-2024 school year.

"It is both an honor and a privilege for our family to continue to offer this ongoing support for these students," said Carolyn Emmerson Dietz, Foundation President. "We remain committed to helping and to investing in tomorrow's leaders and in the generations to come."

The Sierra Pacific Foundation grants scholarships to qualified, dependent children of Sierra Pacific Industries' employees. Recipients are eligible for the scholarship for four years, with some granted a fifth year based on their school and finalizing their undergraduate degree or trade school program.

The Sierra Pacific Foundation is the philanthropic organization founded by the Emmerson family in 1979. Over those years, it has donated over $9.3 million dollars in scholarships. In addition to scholarships, the Foundation contributes to youth activities and other organizations in the communities where Sierra Pacific Industries operates. In 2022, the Foundation contributed over $5 million to organizations in our local communities.

Experiences With Homelessness Shared as Friends Without Homes Hosts its Second 'Myths and Facts' Forum in Chehalis

By Owen Sexton
owen@chronline.com

With the nationwide homelessness crisis showing no signs of ending, Friends Without Homes certified peer specialist Lisa Striedinger organized and held the second in a series of forums addressing the "myths and facts on homelessness" last Tuesday at the Vernetta Smith Chehalis Timberland Library.

Friends Without Homes is a nonprofit organization focused on providing outreach and resources to those experiencing homelessness.

Around 20 people were in attendance, including Chehalis Mayor Tony Ketchum and Centralia City Council member Elizabeth Cameron. Cameron currently heads up Centralia's Homeless Task Force after former council member Leah Daarud, who proposed the task force's creation last November, resigned in April.

As for the current homelessness crisis, there are a litany of causes according to Striedinger, ranging from the lack of affordable housing to inadequate drug or medical rehabilitation services.

Having struggled with homelessness herself, Striedinger chose to study the issue and become a counselor to help others escape homelessness. In her opinion, one of the biggest causes of the increase in homelessness is the general apathy most people seem to have toward those experiencing it.

One of the biggest myths Striedinger sees is that many believe those who are homeless remain homeless simply because they don't want to get a job, when in reality, some can't.

"If you don't have the documentation when you're out on the street to get that identification, then you don't get identification, you don't get the job and you don't get housing," Striedinger said.

She added many on the streets are employed but don't make enough money to be able to afford housing that's currently available due to the affordable housing crisis, while simultaneously making too much money to qualify for housing assistance programs.

Kristina Sawyckj, a representative of King County's Health Care for the Homeless governance council, spoke and shared her own experience being homeless. Sawyckj was a U.S. Navy corpsman who was attached to a Marine Corps platoon and injured during Operation Iraqi Freedom. She suffered a spinal cord injury, which ended her military career.

"With my injuries, my brother took care of me and then he went to Afghanistan. Within two weeks of returning from Afghanistan, he committed suicide. I had been living with my brother with my seven children at the time," Sawyckj said.

She moved from Colorado Springs where her brother was stationed at the U.S. Army garrison in Fort Carson to the northwest as the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) told her the best spinal cord injury recovery program was in Seattle.

"We were here and within two weeks the VA closed that program in Seattle," Sawyckj said.

She had sold most of what she owned just to move from Colorado and was left living in her van with her family.

Living in a van was no easy challenge, especially while attempting to receive treatment for a spinal cord injury, she said. Her children were eventually taken away by Child Protective Services. Her marriage also ended.

Following those events, she fell back on alcoholism, but she met Striedinger and other friends who encouraged her to go back to school. Sawyckj obtained her nursing license and is now currently pursuing her master's degree in public health at the University of Washington.

"I became active in the community as a nurse, out on the street with people who are suffering, who are struggling with addiction, who are struggling with medical and mental health conditions," Sawyckj said.

Aside from substance abuse issues, many who Sawyckj works with who are homeless right now face severe physical and mental health issues, including diabetes, dementia, schizophrenia, kidney failure and several clients who are fighting end-stage cancer. Each person she comes across has a different story.

"The lady who I just love who maybe has, I would say less than a month left, who refuses to go into housing because she has seven animals, cats and dogs, that she's in her camper with," Sawyckj said. "That's how she wants to die, with her loved ones, which are her pets. She had to give up her housing to pay for chemotherapy because she wasn't old enough to get Medicare."

She said the lack of affordable housing is the major issue fueling not only the homelessness crisis, but many mental health issues. While Sawyckj did suffer from PTSD stemming from her time in the service, she said she didn't face suicidal depression until her time living on the streets.

"It's always assumed that these individuals are struggling with severe addiction or severe mental health conditions. I always say, 'Well, whatever their severeness is, they need a place to live because they're not going to get better out on the street,'" Sawyckj said.

Even those coming out of recovery programs Sawyckj works with who are working full time and going to school can't find housing. Housing for those with disabilities is even harder to come by.

Another homeless veteran Sawyckj works with is living with disabilities while having a felony on his record from 30 years ago for stealing a car. Despite serving his time and trying to work as a diesel mechanic and truck driver with a bad back, he's still living on the streets.

"Upstanding citizen, great Republican, awesome person, I love him to death. But I can't find housing for him," Sawyckj said.

The forum's final speaker was "Big" Steve Nelson, who after spending the majority of his life on the streets has now been housed for nearly a year. While he was homeless, Nelson helped build the Quixote Village in Olympia, a community of tiny homes.

He echoed many of Striedinger's comments on the general population's apathy toward those experiencing homelessness.

"I've spent almost my entire life in the homeless crap because everybody turns their heads," Nelson said.

Suffering from addiction himself, the apathy didn't help as all he had to turn to then were his drug dealers. Despite people ignoring his plight, he refused to give up, a sentiment he says is shared by many still currently experiencing homelessness.

"Not all homeless people are bad. There are some that sit there and fight every single day. I fought every day and I'm an ex-drug addict and alcoholic," Nelson said.

With Striedinger's help, he was finally able to overcome his addictions and has now been living in an apartment complex in Olympia for almost a year.

Striedinger intends to hold more forums at other Timberland libraries in Lewis County, though the next one hasn't been scheduled yet.

Timberland Regional Library Staff Recommend Moving Amanda Park Library Branch to Randle

By Rolf Boone
The Olympian

The latest idea for a little-used branch in northwest Grays Harbor County is to move it to Lewis County.

That was the topic of discussion that kicked off this week's facilities committee meeting, which included Timberland Executive Director Cheryl Heywood recommending that the Amanda Park branch be moved to the town of Randle in Lewis County.

"Our recommendation is for you to consider moving that building," she said, adding that alternative library services would then be offered in the area.

Mobile library services are already planned for the area, or what Timberland calls its "anywhere library services," plus library patrons would be offered services by mail, said Deputy Director Kendra Jones during the Tuesday meeting.

Pacific County Trustee Toni Gwin asked a key question: What does it cost to move a building?

Operations Director Brenda Lane estimated that cost at between $200,000 and $250,000.

Surprisingly, Timberland is not a stranger to moving buildings. The Hoodspert, Mason County, branch was created by using the old North Mason library in Belfair, which was then moved by barge to Hoodspert in 1996, according to Timberland information. Similar to Hoodspert, the Amanda Park branch would be cut into pieces and then reassembled in Lewis County, Lane said.

"We may not get a whole lot of groundbreaking information."

Kendra Jones
library deputy director on value of potential in-person meeting

Another reason for moving the Amanda Park branch is that Timberland has plans to build a new, 2,800-square-foot branch in Randle at a cost of about $1.8 million. But instead of building new, the branch could be relocated and expanded, she said. The cost of the move, the architects and the additional site work would cost about $1.2 million, she said.

Randle is already home to a Timberland library branch, but it's in leased space, according to library information.

Trustee Gwin also inquired about community input as part of the relocation process. Heywood said Timberland has previously held zoom meetings with the community of Amanda Park that were well attended.

"I think this needs to be in person," Gwin said.

Thurston County Trustee Mary Beth Harrington agreed.

"People need to feel like they are at least heard," she said.

Deputy Director Jones warned the trustees that an in-person meeting may be nothing more than hearing from those who don't want the branch to move.

"We may not get a whole lot of groundbreaking information," she said.

Still, both Gwin and Harrington said that meeting needs to happen.

As for when the branch might move is still to be determined, although Lane stressed the need for urgency, saying Timberland has to decide soon on whether to build in Lewis County or move the Amanda Park branch.

She said a decision may need to happen as early as July.

Neo-Nazi Flyers Appear in Grays Harbor County

By The Daily World

Many central Grays Harbor residents — including The Daily World — woke up Tuesday morning with something left on cars and lawns even less welcome than animal droppings — flyers from a white supremacist organization.

The police's response is simple: "Just throw it away," said Cmdr. Steve Timmons of the Aberdeen Police Department.

The flyers, distributed in sandwich bags of rice, possibly to keep them from blowing away, were seen in Aberdeen, Cosmopolis and Hoquiam, according to the police departments. The Aryan Freedom Network, a Texas-based neo-Nazi group, is identified on the flyers.

"I don't think this is anybody local, personally," said Chief Heath Layman of the Cosmopolis Police Department in an interview. "I think someone from out of town made a trip in and spread their hate."

Messages on the flyers varied, from anti-immigrant to anti-LGBTQ to anti-minority, all with a link to a misspelling-laden white supremacist website. Layman said that investigating the website did not turn up any obvious reason the flyers had appeared in Grays Harbor.

"We as an office looked and saw zero correlation to the Harbor," Layman said.

The phenomenon is a first, officers from all three departments agreed.

"This is new to us," said Lt. Brian Dayton of the Hoquiam Police Department in a phone interview. "I've been here 24 years on the first and this is the first time I've come across them."

The flyers appeared late Monday or early Tuesday, Timmons said, first spotted by officers coming on shift early Tuesday morning.

"Early morning, a couple patrol officers saw throughout the town, on sidewalks and porches, and they scooped 'em up," Timmons said. "They were proactive and threw them away."

Layman speculated that houses displaying decorations for Pride Month may have received extra attention from the nocturnal flyer-posters.

"We had one reported. I heard a rumor there was more," Layman said. "They know what steps to follow to not violate constitutional law and city ordinances."

While the flyer-posting this week is not illegal, no matter how loathsome the content of the flyers, police say they'd like a chat with those involved in littering their odious message about the area.

"We'd like to have some more information," Dayton said. "If it's someone local, we can have a conversation with them and see what their agenda is."

Anyone who might have camera footage that could identify those responsible for strewing the flyers about the region is asked to contact their local police departments.

Centralia Man Charged for Alleged Sexual Assault of Girl

By Emily Fitzgerald
emily@chronline.com

Bail was set at $50,000 on Thursday for a Centralia man accused of sexually assaulting a girl under the age of 15 repeatedly between August 2019 and August 2021.

The abuse was reported to the Lewis County Sheriff's Office in October 2022. The sheriff's office conducted an investigation and referred charges against the suspect, Robert Daniel Vaughan Jr., 32, to the Lewis County Prosecutor's Office.

When questioned, Vaughan allegedly admitted "some inappropriate things occurred between him and (the victim)" and "admitted there were videos and that their messages had gotten weird," but he denied sexually assaulting the victim, according to court documents.

He did allegedly admit to some of the sexually abusive actions described by the victim in her reports and he reportedly claimed the victim "tried" to give him oral sex," according to court documents.

Vaughan was arrested and booked into the Lewis County Jail on June 7 and prosecutors filed seven rape of a child and child molestation charges against Vaughan in Lewis County Superior Court on June 8.

"These are serious allegations," Deputy Prosecutor Scott Jackson said of Vaughan's case on Thursday.

Jackson asked Judge J. Andrew Toynbee to set Vaughan's bail at $100,000 due to concerns for community safety risk and concerns about the allegation other minor children were present for the alleged abuse of the victim.

Defense attorney Rachael Tiller, however, asked Toynbee to set Vaughan's bail no higher than $25,000 due to Vaughan's lack of criminal history, his strong ties to the community, family support and his financial status.

Toynbee opted to set bail between the two requests, at $50,000.

He additionally approved Jackson's requests for a no-contact order protecting the victim and conditions of release prohibiting Vaughan from having any contact with minors or going anywhere minors are known to congregate.

Toynbee did allow Vaughan to maintain contact with his own biological children if he is released, "but only under eyes-on supervision," he said, clarifying that another adult must be present at all times.

Arrestment is scheduled for Thursday, June 15.

Lewis County Enacts Burn Restrictions Amid Dry Spell, Fire Risk

By The Chronicle staff

The Lewis County fire marshal on Thursday announced restrictions on outdoor burning for unincorporated property. The new restrictions took effect Friday.

Lewis County is experiencing unseasonably dry conditions and an unusual amount of runaway burn piles, according to a news release from the county.

"After careful review of the current and extended weather forecast, the Lewis County commissioners, community development director and fire marshal have determined that current

"After careful review of the current and extended weather forecast ... (it was) determined that current weather conditions within Lewis County have created substantial fire danger."

weather conditions within Lewis County have created substantial fire danger," Lewis County Fire Marshal Doyle Sanford stated in the release.

Recreational campfires in designated campgrounds and on private lands are still allowed if:

- The campfire is no greater than 3 feet in diameter inside a ring constructed of metal, stone or brick 8 inches above the surface.

- The campfire has an area at least 10 feet around it cleared of all flammable materials and at least 20 feet of clearance from overhead flammable materials or fuels.

- The campfire is attended at all times by a responsible person with the ability to extinguish the fire with a shovel and a 5-gallon bucket of water or garden hose.

If building a campfire, the fire marshal stated it's important to completely extinguish the fire by pouring water or moist soil in them and stirring with a shovel until all parts are cool to the touch.

The burning restriction applies to applicants with a current open burning permits, which expired at midnight Friday.

The burn ban will be in place until the conditions improve. All land clearing, residential and silvicultural burning will be restricted until further notice.

For further information concerning outdoor burning and the restrictions, contact the Lewis County fire marshal at his office inside the Lewis County Public Services building at 2025 NE Kresky Ave. in Chehalis or by phone at 360-740-2696.

News in Brief

Lewis County PUD Provides Wood Chips to Local Farm That Serves the Community

By The Chronicle staff

The Lewis County Public Utility District (PUD) recently teamed up with a Glenoma farm by recycling wood chips to help serve the community, according to a news release.

Mark and Noël Bates of Rainy Glen Farms and Bates Family Foods serve the entire east Lewis County area with farm fresh vegetables and wholesome, nutritious foods. They also give back to their community, according to the county. In 2022, the farm donated 2,000 pounds of fresh produce to the Randle Food Bank.

“The PUD serves the community through delivery of safe, reliable, at-cost electricity, which means a significant amount of work keeping the power lines free of vegetation growth and other environmental hazards,” PUD stated in the release. “The PUD’s tree trimming crew’s work is never-ending, but one crew, led by Kodie Baker, found an opportunity to add additional value to the community by providing the Bates with a half dozen wood chip drops derived from vegetation management work along the highway and other nearby roads.”

Mark Bates thanked Lewis County PUD for its assistance.

“When we explained our needs to Kodie and his crew, bam, it happened. Chips appeared! This is a perfect example of an ideal customer-service based model of public and private partnership,” Mark Bates said in the release.

The Bates family said they learned about the functionality of wood chips for water conservation and their ability to reduce noxious weeds as mulch on their farm fields and orchards at a small farm symposium last year run provided by a Washington State Noxious Weed Control Board expert.

According to the Bates, they can now grow more food because of the wood chips the PUD provided.

“It’s stories like these that make me proud to be a commissioner for such a great organization that always embodies being there for the community and being at your service,” said PUD Commissioner and Board President Ed Rothlin. “This is just another example of how our crews’ hard work benefits everyone they work with.”

The Bates said they look forward to working even more closely with the PUD in the future.

Sierra Pacific Donates $2,000 to Twin City Youth Football League

By The Chronicle staff

The Twin City Youth Football League on Thursday announced a donation received from the Sierra Pacific Foundation in the amount of $2,000.

“With this donation Twin City Youth Football was able to purchase new equipment for use in the 2023 football season,” League President Logan Ferrier stated in a news release. “Sierra Pacific Foundation has generously supported Twin City Youth Football for many years and is a great asset to our community.”

Registration is now open for the 2023 season for cheerleading, tackle football and flag football.

For more information, visit www.twincitiesyouthfootball.com

Twin City Youth Football is a nonprofit organization that has served the youth of Centralia, Chehalis and surrounding areas for over 50 years.

The league offers an opportunity for kids to learn and play the game of football, or participate in cheerleading, with a focus on skills building, safety and sportsmanship.

Elderly Man Saved by Boaters in Cowlitz River

By The Daily News

An older man was rescued by two strangers Wednesday morning after falling into the Cowlitz River while fishing near Lion’s Pride Park.

Officers were dispatched around 10:30 a.m. to the 1300 block of Huntington Avenue South to learn a man had tumbled down the bank while fishing, according to the Castle Rock Police Facebook page.

Police say the man was partially submerged and, due to pre-existing medical conditions and the terrain, was unable to climb out of the river.

Two men on a boat pulled the elderly man out of the water and onto their ship. After they reached the beach, the victim was met by first responders.

The man didn’t suffer from any major injuries but did have a mild case of hypothermia. After being evaluated, he was released to his friend, police say.

Abandoned House and Outbuilding Destroyed in Wednesday Night Fire in Centralia

By Emily Fitzgerald
emily@chronline.com

An abandoned residence and an attached outbuilding in the 1200 block of Centralia Avenue were destroyed in a fire Wednesday evening.

The house was unoccupied at the time of the incident and no injuries were reported.

Crews with the Riverside Fire Authority, the Chehalis Fire Department, Lewis County Fire District 6 and the West Thurston Regional Fire Authority were dispatched to the blaze at 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday, June 7.

Firefighters remained at the scene fighting the flames until 10:55 p.m. that evening.

A commercial building south of the burning residence sustained some minor heat damage, according to Riverside Assistant Chief Kevin Anderson, but “the fire was prevented from extending into that building,” he said.

The cause of the fire was still under investigation as of Thursday morning.

MVP: Adna's Karlee VonMoos Caps Stellar Career With State Title

By The Chronicle staff

Less than a week after getting shut out against an upstart Ocosta team in the 2B District 4 title game, and a year after falling in the 2B state title game in 2022, the Adna softball team got its redemption when it mattered most at the 2B state tournament in Yakima in 2023.

Led by All-Area MVP Karlee VonMoos, who was also an all-area selection in both soccer and basketball this season, and a Central 2B League MVP in each sport, the Pirates defeated Ocosta in the state semifinals — with VonMoos going 3 for 4 with a double and a triple — and then smacked Forks in the state title game to return to the 2B softball mountaintop.

Though VonMoos made state in each sport she played this school year, she hadn't ended a season on a win until softball, and helped Adna to its first softball state chip since 2019, when she was helping to run bases as an eighth-grader.

"It feels really good to say we did it," VonMoos said. "To actually get to do it and be a big part of it feels great. Emotions were running really high afterwards, it was just a great way to finish my senior year."

VonMoos guided the Pirates at the plate all year as its 3-hole hitter, finishing the season with a .630 batting average, a 1.859 OPS, 10 home runs, 46 RBIs, 49 runs scored, and 10 stolen bases.

In three games at state, VonMoos went 10 for 14 with three doubles, two triples, two home runs, nine runs scored, and nine RBIs.

"It took a lot of sacrificed weekends," VonMoos said. "Going to extra softball practices, tons of time in the batting cage and pitching, countless hours with my dad sitting on a bucket catching for me."

Brooklynn Loose, her teammate since kindergarten and Central 2B League co-MVP, has witnessed VonMoos' hard work since a young age. Both were on Adna's last state championship team as eighth-graders, and Loose has seen VonMoos grow as both a player and a leader on the diamond over the years.

"It's really special," Loose said of her friend. "We've been best friends since kindergarten, and growing up playing tee-ball, we were best friends throughout and hung out every single day. Karlee brought not just skills but a lot of leadership. She was the best leader on our team, she got everyone to do what they were supposed to and she just brought a lot."

VonMoos also operated as Adna's second pitcher, behind another All-Area selection in Ava Simms, pitching 45 innings with 70 strikeouts and batters hitting just .165 against her.

The Adna senior — finishing her career with a state chip and two state trophies this season after a sixth-place finish in hoops — was an three-time All-Area selection this season, and made five All-Area teams in her high school career.

To go along with that, VonMoos finished as the C2BL's back-to-back co-MVP in softball, and finished her career as one of Adna's most decorated girls athletes in school history.

The senior will graduate and play next year at Lower Columbia Community College — along with teammate Brooklynn Loose — in both basketball and softball.

The Chronicle's All-Area Softball Team

Hailey Brooks, Mossyrock

Possibly the most feared hitter in all of 1B softball, Mossyrock's slugger — committed to play D-I ball at Cal State Bakersfield next spring — was walked in over third of her plate appearances. When she did get something to hit, she usually did, working up a .689 average with eight homers, nine triples, and seven doubles.

Makayla Chavez, Centralia

Centralia's junior at shortstop hit an even .400, with 10 doubles, 15 runs scored, and 21 RBIs, helping lead the Tigers back to the state tournament for the first time since 2011 and earning first-team all-EvCo honors.

Layna Demers, Rochester

Rochester's sophomore in the circle turned in yet another solid season, striking out 99 batters in 99 ⅓ innings. At the plate, she had all four Warriors' home runs this season and drove 15 runs in.

Brielle Etter, W.F. West

Etter hit .418 this season with 21 RBIs and 32 runs scored, while also drawing a team-best 21 walks. Pairing up with Avalon in the middle of the W.F. West infield, she committed just seven errors at second base.

Ella Ferguson, Tumwater

Tumwater's sophomore ace got all but eight outs for the Thunderbirds this season, throwing 141 ⅓ innings and piling up 240 strikeouts. Opposing batters managed just a .184 batting average against her, and she finished the season with a 1.83 ERA, earning 2A EvCo MVP honors for her efforts.

Lisa Liddell, Onalaska

The only Logger on the all-C2BL first team, Liddell announced herself as one of the best arms in the league as a sophomore, striking out 152 and only walking 30 batters in 14 games.

I-5 Toyota Mountain Dew Drops Home Opener to Kelso Premier

By The Chronicle staff

Playing in its first game of the AA American Legion season at Ed Wheeler Field in Centralia, the I-5 Toyota Mountain

Dew baseball team lost its home opener to Kelso Premier Tuesday afternoon, 15-3.

I-5 was held to just two hits, with Cal Bullock knocking in two runs on a single, and Ashton Demarest hitting a double that scored a run to round out a tough day at the plate earlier this week.

On the bump, Brady Sprague got the start and absorbed the loss, pitching 5 ½ innings with eight hits allowed, eight runs — with just four earned — with two walks and four strikeouts.

I-5 took on Lower Columbia's AAA squad on Thursday at Story Field for its next contest.

NFL

Seahawks Minicamp Ends With a Twist: Devon Witherspoon Moves to Inside Slot DB

By Gregg Bell

The News Tribune

It's the best thing an NFL team's coach or talent evaluator can say about a top rookie draft choice.

Especially the fifth pick of the entire draft.

"He's as advertised," Seahawks assistant general manager Nolan Teasley said Thursday.

He was talking about Devon Witherspoon.

This week, the first cornerback taken in last month's draft that everyone around the Seahawks has been talking about was even more than advertised.

The team on Thursday ended its three-day, mandatory minicamp and essentially the most extensive on-field work until training camp begins July 26. During the three practices, Witherspoon often was an inside, slot cornerback as coach Pete Carroll tried defensive combinations.

The standout for attacking passes in the air and tackling at the University of Illinois did so from outside cornerback. He had been Seattle's starting left cornerback from rookie minicamp through the whole-team organized team activities of May into June. The Seahawks made Witherspoon their highest-selected cornerback in a quarter century, since Shawn Springs went third overall to Seattle in 1997 — to start at left cornerback.

Outside, that is.

But Thursday you could almost hear Carroll, a former defensive back, salivating from the middle of the practice field at his idea: Witherspoon possibly playing along with 2022 Pro Bowl cornerback Tariq Woolen, last season's nickel defensive back Coby Bryant, plus 2022 starter Michael Jackson or promising 2021 draft pick Tre Brown in unique match-up alignments this Seahawks season.

Carroll went out of his way to declare Jackson the best Seahawks player of OTAs and minicamp this spring.

Woolen said after watching another practice Thursday he feels great following his ar-throscopic knee surgery last month. He and Carroll said he's on track to be practicing at the start of training camp.

The 6-foot-1, 193-pound Bryant sprained his foot late last month. That kept him out of the last couple weeks of offseason training — and opened the door for Carroll and defensive backs coach Karl Scott to try Witherspoon at slot cornerback inside.

"He's capable of playing in there," Carroll said.

"I talked to him about it way back when, and he was all excited: 'I can learn it all. I can get it.' He was really positive about it, so when we gave him the chance he jumped right on it.

"He is a really good football player. He gets it, man. It makes sense to him, and he does things naturally very well. That expedites the process (of learning inside). So, we'll see. This will be a really good film today again to check him out.

"But we've seen him pretty much in charge of the position. So, we'll see how it goes."

Witherspoon's reaction to the experiment?

He'd walk across Lake Washington to Mercer Island if Carroll and the Seahawks asked him to.

"It's been very cool. It's an unreal feeling, just a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," Witherspoon said of his first Seattle practices. "I just try to take it all in coming out here with the guys.

"I'm just coming in here to compete, represent the Seahawks, and just have that Seahawks on my helmet. There's a lot that plays into it. But it's a feeling that you can't describe."

Carroll, general manager John Schneider and Seahawks scouts including director of college scouting Aaron Highline saw Witherspoon play some slot defensive back for Illinois. But that was to get Witherspoon in match-ups against a top opposing receiver more than any Illinois defensive scheme of Witherspoon as a nickel back inside.

"He wasn't a nickel in their defense, but he wound up inside. We've seen him play on slots," Carroll said.

"It didn't matter where he was playing. He covered everybody.

"He's a special cover guy. His quickness and his instincts...really lend him to he can be an effective player there (inside)."

Carroll said Bryant hasn't needed surgery for his ongoing foot issue.

"No," the coach said, "we haven't heard that yet."

Carroll said Bryant will take all of the seven weeks between now and the start of training camp July 26 to rest the foot in hopes of him being back on the field for the start of the pre-season.

Defensive Backs Galore

Witherspoon's experiment at inside, slot corner is proof Carroll believes he has many cornerbacks and safeties that can play effectively in his techniques, and in new schemes.

So many, Seattle's defense may often have only one linebacker, Bobby Wagner, on the field in games this season.

"This is as competitive as we've been (in the defensive secondary) in a long time," Carroll, the creator of Seattle's onefamed "Legion of Boom," said.

These spring OTAs and minicamps showed glimpses of what Carroll's overhaul of the defense may look like this fall.

Dre'Mont Jones, the team's uncharacteristically expensive free-agent signing at $51 million from Denver, joined brought-back Jarran Reed and rookie nose tackle and Cameron Young as the three starting down linemen with hands on the ground in a three-point stance.

Those appear to be the run stoppers to begin the 2023 season — especially with Carroll saying Thursday nose tackle Bryan Mone is a long way back from his season-ending injury late last year.

That's one more true defensive linemen than the Seahawks often had on the field last year. That was with inside edge pass rushers Uchenna Nwosu and Bruce Irvin running straight upfield to quarterbacks. The result was the NFL's 30th-ranked rush defense in 2022.

Nwosu, entering the final year of his contract after a 9 1/2-sack season, and 2022 second-round pick Boye Mafe were the starting outside linebackers rushing off edges in these off-season practices. Wagner and new arrival Devin Bush were the inside linebackers.

But when the Seahawks went to extra defensive backs in pass-defense drills, Wagner was at times the only linebacker dropping into coverage. Nwosu and Mafe rushed the passer.

Carroll said Wednesday the team's not ruling out safety Jamal Adams returning for the start of training camp. But that still seems unlikely. Adams is coming back from a tricky torn quadriceps tendon he got in last season's opener.

When and if Adams returns, Carroll's plan is to play Adams, Pro Bowl free safety Quandre Diggs and 2022 New York Giants captain Julian Love as a three-safety base defense. Adams is poised to be closer to the line of scrimmage to blitz quarterbacks and stop the run, as he did while getting 9 1/2 sacks for Seattle in 2020 to set an NFL record for defensive backs. Love, who has played all positions in the secondary in the NFL, and Diggs would stay back in pass coverage.

That's five defensive backs — with Witherspoon and Woolen the cornerbacks — plus five linemen/outside linebackers across the line of scrimmage. That would leave Wagner as the 11th defender, the lone linebacker inside.

Witherspoon's, Love's and Bryant's versatility give Carroll options of playing essentially a 5-1-5 within his 3-4 scheme. That is, if you count outside backers Nwosu and Mafe rushing the edges as fourth and fifth players along the line.

Such a unique scheme would give opposing offensive play callers — including creative run-pass maestro Kyle Shanahan of San Francisco, the team Seattle must conquer to win the NFC West — something new to think about for Seahawks games in 2023.

All this is whether or not Jordyn Brooks, the Seahawks' starting inside linebacker last season when Wagner was away playing for the Rams, comes back anytime this season. He tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his knee in January. October would be on the early side of a typical return from an ACL surgery.

Zach Charbonnet Impresses

Pete Carroll on rookie running back Zach Charbonnet from UCLA, the Seahawks' second-round pick: "Zach does everything well...He's just a complete ball player."

Don't be surprised at the playing time and opportunities Charbonnet gets with returning 1,000-yard rusher Kenneth Walker in Seattle's backfield this season.

Undrafted rookies Sutherland, Bobo gain

Carroll said "two, three or four" undrafted rookies could be competing to play this season.

The first two he mentioned: safety Jonathan Sutherland from Penn State and wide receiver Jake Bobo from UCLA.

Sutherland was getting some reps with the starting defense as Seahawks coaches tried different combos.

Bobo's size at 6-4, 207 is intriguing. Coaches were on him a lot this spring, a sign they want him to develop. "BoBO!!!" calls from teammates were a daily staple of OTAs and minicamp practices.

Doug Baldwin, Graduation Speaker

Retired Seahawks Pro Bowl and Super Bowl-winning wide receiver Doug Baldwin will be Seattle University's undergraduate undergraduate commencement speaker. The graduation ceremony is Monday at Climate Pledge Arena.

A Stanford graduate with a bachelor's in science, technology and society, Baldwin will receive an honorary doctorate degree from Seattle University.

Baldwin was the commencement speaker at Bellevue College in 2021.

NFL

DK Metcalf 'Overstepped Boundaries' Leading Seahawks Vocally, Will Now Yield to Geno Smith

By Gregg Bell

The News Tribune

Last year's noticeably more vocal DK Metcalf?

Not the true him. So he's not doing that anymore.

New from Metcalf for 2023: He says he's giving Geno Smith the stage to lead the Seahawks. Loudly.

Metcalf says "I overstepped some boundaries" on the field and in the locker room during the 2022 season. It was the 25-year-old wide receiver's first year in the NFL without Russell Wilson as his quarterback, and without departed Bobby Wagner as Seattle's co-captain and co-team leader.

It was also Metcalf's first season after signing a $72 million contract extension last summer.

With Wilson long gone to Denver in a trade, Wagner back after a year away with the Rams and Smith entering his second season as Seattle's starting QB coming off a record-setting Pro Bowl season, Metcalf says he will return to leading by example. He's going back to not speaking so loudly around the team in 2023.

He's going back, he says, to being himself.

"When you lose guys like Bobby and Russ, you try to force yourself into roles that you think that you can fulfill," Metcalf said Wednesday. "That just wasn't my role."

Metcalf said he doesn't believe his forced leadership affected his play last season. He had a career-high 90 catches, seven more than he had in his Pro Bowl season of 2020. He had his second 1,000-yard receiving season in three years. His six touchdown receptions were half his total from 2021 with Wilson.

He also had eight penalties against him last season. That was the most among all NFL wide receivers. Three were for unsportsmanlike conduct, fouls he's had over recent seasons. In 2022, he was flagged for shoving San Francisco's Dre Greenlaw after a play, for headbutting Rams cornerback Jalen Ramsey, plus for rather tamely disputing a no-call by an official on contact by a Tampa Bay Buccaneer on a pass play to Metcalf in a November game in Munich.

He was fined more than $40,000 by the league last season for his unsportsmanlike fouls.

So being less vocal on the field can help Metcalf and the Seahawks in multiple ways this season.

Geno Smith's Time to Lead

Metcalf says he is ceding the vocal leadership to Smith — as it should be.

"That's Geno's role, to be a vocal leader. He's the quarterback. He's the one calling the plays. He's the one saying 'Hut!'" Metcalf said.

For him now?

"It's me just fitting into my role of just bringing up a young guy, just showing him what it takes to be a professional," Metcalf said after the second practice of Seahawks minicamp. "Just things I've learned from guys like Bobby and Russ. Instead of just vocally saying it, just knowing, myself — and if they want to do it along with me, they can. And if not, they can find their way."

Smith is entering his 11th season. But this is his first spring since 2014 he's known he is his team's full-time starter for the coming season. The last time was when he was entering his second year in the league with the New York Jets.

Metcalf gladly yielding a primary, vocal leadership role meshes with what Smith believes has been his biggest area of growth since this time last year.

"I think in every aspect of my life, every aspect of being a quarterback, being a leader (I've grown most)," Smith said. "Obviously it was kind of different for me this year than it was last year or 12 months ago, but I think the most growth for me is just perspective. Just gaining more perspective and just learning, growing, just trying to be better every single day."

This all points to teammates likely voting Smith as the offense's captain for the coming season, perhaps a co-captain with Lockett, the ninth-year veteran. Lockett was the offense's captain last year.

Carroll sees this spring, summer and coming season as Smith's time to assert himself as a leader.

"There's nothing like that playtime that he just had," Carroll said of Smith in March, the day the 32-year-old quarterback signed his three-year, $75 million contract extension that will greatly boost Smith's leadership platform this year. "There's nothing like coming back with DK, Tyler, the fellas, the tight ends, and running backs to put this thing together to the next level that's out there for us."

DK Metcalf's New Mentoring

Metcalf has many young guys to mentor is his own, quieter way this summer into fall and winter.

He is entering his fifth NFL season since Seattle traded up to select him from the University of Mississippi and his hometown of Oxford in the second round of the 2019 draft. Tyler Lockett is the only wide receiver on the Seahawks' 90-man roster with more NFL experience.

Last month the Seahawks made Jaxon Smith-Njigba the 20th-overall pick in this year's draft. With his smooth route running and sure hands that consistently catch passes away from his body and defenders, Smith-Njigba is on his way to immediately becoming — as in, the opening game Sept. 10 — the third, slot receiver inside Metcalf and Lockett, a role Seattle's been seeking for years.

Wednesday, Smith-Njigba sprinted past Devon Witherspoon, the Seahawks' new starting cornerback and fifth-overall pick in round one last month, down the left sideline on a straight go route. Smith's perfect pass landed onto Smith-Njigba's hands for a long touchdown.

The team has wide receiver Dee Eskridge, sidelined most of his first two seasons by injuries, entering his third year.

Cody Thompson is two years older than Metcalf. But Metcalf has played in 70 NFL games in his career. Thompson's played in one.

Big, physical Dareke Young is entering his second season; the Seahawks drafted him in the seventh round last year out of Division-II Lenior-Rhyne. Former Washington State receiver Easop Winston is back after spending time on Seattle's practice squad last season. Cade Johnson played in three games last season and is back on the team.

Seattle has four undrafted rookie wide receivers on the roster seven weeks before training camp begins: Matt Landers from Arkansas, John Hall from Division-II Northwood, Jake Bobo from UCLA and Tyjon Lindsey from Oregon State.

Metcalf said he's doing with Smith-Njigba and all these younger Seahawks receivers what Wagner did with him when he was a rookie in 2019.

"He didn't pretty much tell me anything. He just let me know — he told me that he was going to work out. I was either going to show up, or not," Metcalf said.

"So that's what I'm doing with the young guys, showing them what helped me my rookie year, to help them."

That way, this year, is Metcalf's more comfortable way of leading.

He now says last year, he was far outside his personality.

"I mean, I'd never done it," he said. "So, it was fairly new to me. And I didn't do it for a reason, leading up to that point."

"I'm a guy that works hard, and leads by example."

"I overstepped some boundaries (last year), where if I was just going to lead by example those boundaries are never touched."

Seahawks Safety Jamal Adams Doing 'Everything' to Get His Leg 'Right'

By Bob Condotta

The Seattle Times

RENTON, Wash. — The end of the Seahawks mandatory three-day minicamp Thursday also meant the last time the team will see many of its veteran players until training camp begins in late July.

While many of the younger players will stick around for three more OTAs (organized team activities) next week, which coach Pete Carroll described as akin to a passing camp, many veterans were free to leave once Thursday's practice and meetings concluded, not due back until training camp which is expected to begin on July 26.

As the team breaks for the summer, one big question remains — will safety Jamal Adams be ready for the start of the regular season?

Carroll reiterated Thursday what he's said throughout the offseason — the team hopes so, but it remains unclear.

Both Adams, rehabbing from a torn quadriceps muscle, and linebacker Jordyn Brooks, recovering from an ACL injury, attended the minicamp, the first time they had been in town during the offseason. Each will return to the Dallas area to continue their rehab.

"Both those guys are competing and racing for camp," Carroll said. "We'll see what happens."

Carroll said seeing each in person allowed the team to get a better idea of where each is in their recovery.

But Carroll still couldn't say if Adams will be ready for the start of the regular season.

Asked if he had any concerns that Adams wouldn't be ready for the start of the season, Carroll said, "No, not yet. We'll see. Let's get to camp and see what happens. It may be too much to ask, Seahawks safety Jamal Adams leaves the practice field Tuesday afternoon during minicamp at the Virginia Mason Athletic Center in Renton on June 6, 2023.

I don't know. We'll see."

Adams was injured in the regular season opener last September against Denver while Brooks was injured against the Jets on Jan. 1.

The timing of those injuries indicates Adams is closer to returning. But Adams' injury has been described as a particularly tricky one from which to recover.

That's one reason the team has been OK with him staying in Dallas to rehab where he can work with his own trainers and stay on his specific workout plan, as well as also being with his doctors who can regularly examine him.

Each also has attended meetings virtually throughout the offseason.

"Only get so much out of the Zoom thing," Carroll said. "So them being here has been really valuable."

Without going into detail, Carroll said there are some specific benchmarks Adams will have to pass before getting the OK to return to the field.

He said Adams appears to have good range of motion but that the task now is getting all of his strength back in the leg.

"It's just time (that Adams needs)," Carroll said.

Adams has the highest salary cap hit on the team in 2023 at $18.11 million, part of a four-year contract worth up to $72 million that he signed before the 2021 season, when he was coming off his first year with the Seahawks in which he made 9.5 sacks in 2020 in helping lead Seattle to the NFC West title.

He has played in just 13 games since.

Seattle gave itself some insurance in case Adams doesn't make it back by signing free agent safety Julian Love. Love worked alongside Quandre Diggs as the starting safeties throughout the minicamp and the offseason program.

But the team hopes for a full return by Adams to work him into a three-safety scheme the Seahawks had hoped to deploy last year before he was injured, one that would typically put Adams in positions to make the best use of his pass-rush ability.

"He's going to do everything he can to get it right," Carroll said. "As soon as he can be right, he's going to be right."

Here's more of what Carroll said following the last day of minicamp.

Coby Bryant Battling Toe Injury

Carroll revealed that second-year cornerback Coby Bryant, the team's primary starting nickel corner last season, has been battling a sore toe, which is why he has been sitting out recently.

Carroll said the injury will not require surgery and was "not a bad injury" but that it was bothering him enough that the team decided to rest him after he had taken part in many of the early practices and walk-throughs.

"He'll need the break to get back," Carroll said.

Bryant being out compelled the team to try rookie Devon Witherspoon, the fifth overall pick, as a slot corner during minicamp.

"It gave us an opportunity to take a look at 'Spoon inside,'" Carroll said.

Witherspoon played some inside at Illinois, and Carroll said he seems to take to it naturally — "we've seen him pretty much in charge of the position."

But the move isn't permanent — Witherspoon played some at left corner and some inside during Thursday's practice — as Carroll said the team just wanted to use the chance to get some film of Witherspoon at the slot corner spot heading into the offseason.

Michael Jackson Has Best Camp, Carroll Says

Speaking of the cornerback spot, Carroll said there was an obvious MVP of minicamp — cornerback Michael Jackson.

Jackson started last season at left cornerback. But as noted, the team has also had plans to play Witherspoon there, with the thought he would team with Tariq Woolen as the starting boundary corners.

Woolen suffered a knee injury the week before OTAs began that required arthroscopic surgery, which opened the door for Jackson to take over as the primary starter on the right side during minicamp.

"Michael Jackson had the best camp of anybody," Carroll said. "Had a great camp. He stepped up to the challenge of it. Just had a really productive camp, almost a dominant camp for us. That was great to see that. We need it."

Woolen was present for camp and in a brief conversation with reporters said he'll be good to go for training camp.

Carroll confirmed that, saying "yes" when asked if Woolen will be ready for camp. "He's looking really good."

Other Personnel Notes

- Carroll said it remains unclear when nose tackle Bryan Mone or edge Alton Robinson will be ready. Each is rehabbing knee injuries suffered last year. "Both those guys aren't right yet," Carroll said, adding "they are not able to do any running yet." Mone would be ticketed for a key role as potentially the starting nose tackle if healthy. In his absence, rookie Cameron Young worked with the starting defense there.

- Carroll said rookie guard Anthony Bradford, a fourth-round pick out of LSU, had a "fender-bender" recently in which he "just bonked his head a little" so the team held him out of minicamp.

- Outside linebacker Darrell Taylor was held out the last two days with what Carroll said was "tightness."

If Jokic and Murray Continue Like This, the Heat Are Cooked in NBA Finals

By Dave Hyde

South Florida Sun-Sentinel

MIAMI — Say what you will about the Heat's culture and the full roster's effort lacking in a Game 3 performance that had all the lackluster feel of a back-to-back game in January.

Out-rebounded. Out-hustled. Out-and-outdone by Denver.

Say what you will about all that — and Heat coach Erik Spoelstra will say a lot leading into Friday's Game 4 of the NBA Finals, just as a good coach should.

There's still a more troublesome truth right now for the Heat: Nikola Jokic and Jamal Murray have been the two best players through the three games this series. It was no contest Wednesday in Game 3, when they became the second teammates to record triple-doubles in NBA Finals history.

If this narrative continues through Game 4, that's it for the Heat. They'll be down 3-1 in the series. They're not beating this team three straight, including two in Denver, no matter how good a story they are or how much they've overcome.

So, you can talk about hustle and rebounds and any other number you want — the 3-point shooting is a telltale statistic of mine — and you're just gumming up the central truth of this series.

If Jokic and Murray keep playing like this, the Heat are sunk. And let's be honest here: Jokic is a two-time league Most Valuable Player who was voted runner-up this season only because no one wanted to make him a three-time MVP when so few casual fans really see him.

So, Jokic is going to be the best player in this series unless some surprise is coming. He had 32 points, 21 rebounds and 10 assists in Game 3. It was his record 10th triple-double of the playoffs. He may look like an oaf on first impression, the guy you'd never take first in a pickup game, but he has a golden game that elevates him to an all-time great.

The question then, the one the Heat needs a good answer for, is if Jimmy Butler and Bam Adebayo can be the second- and third-best players out there. If, in short, they outplay Murray. Yes, both of them.

That's what is demanded. It's really simple to pick the best team in basketball. Tell me which team has two of the top three players. That's usually the winner.

It's great that Duncan Robinson had 10 points in the fourth quarter of the Heat's Game 2 win, and Caleb Martin scored 26 in Game 7 against Boston. Winning teams have one or two of the cast members step forward in a nice way like that. Rookie Christian Braun had 15 points for Denver in Game 3. Nice, but not the reason they won.

Championship teams win with their best players playing their best. It's not hard to understand that. The Heat once had The Big Three. San Antonio had the Three Amigos. Golden State had The Splash Brothers. Great teams have that identity.

That's Jokic and Murray for Denver. And it's Butler and Adebayo for the Heat. The Heat's duo were good again in the box score in Game 3. Butler had 28 points. Adebayo had 22 points and 17 rebounds. But these weren't game-changing numbers. They were just an accountant's record-keeping as Denver was never challenged in the second half.

The Heat, too, often need an add-on to win, and there wasn't one coming Wednesday. They shot a frigid 11 of 35 on 3-pointers. They can't win against this team doing that.

We're at that stage where good sometimes isn't good enough. You have to be great, as Butler has been at times. He dominated the Milwaukee series. Remember his 56 points in Game 3 and 42 points in Game 4?

He hasn't been dominant since. It's like Playoff Jimmy is missing a gear. Something, it seems, is off. Maybe we'll find out at series' end.

Adebayo probably can't be asked to do much more than he is through three games. He's the prime pick-setter up top for an offense predicated on him doing that. He's being aggressive on offense in a manner he sometimes isn't. He's Mr. Versatile on defense. All good. Not great.

Butler smothered Murray on defense in Game 2. Denver coach Mike Malone figured how to get Murray loose with simple pick-and-hand-offs to him in Game 3. The result was Murray scored 34 points with 10 rebounds and 10 assists.

There is another stat to Murray that Spoelstra will seize on leading into Game 4. He had seven turnovers. Maybe that's something to mine coming up. Maybe. Possibly.

Here's the larger picture: Jokic and Murray aren't Boston's Jayson Tatum and Jaylen Brown. Tatum went a couple of games without taking a fourth-quarter shot and Brown couldn't carry his part of the deal. Boston sunk primarily because they sunk.

The Heat no doubt caused Tatum and Brown to look troubled at times. It's like they've given up trying to trouble Jokic and need a Plan B on Murray.

So much talk will be about the Heat playing harder and closer to their identity. That's needed. But don't overthink all this. Butler and Adebayo need to find another gear for the Heat to muster four wins. If Jokic and Murray remain the best two players, Game 4 will be the final home game of the Heat season.

New Washington State Post Isaac Jones Takes Long Road to Pac-12

By Colton Clark

The Spokesman-Review

PULLMAN — Four years ago, Isaac Jones thought his basketball career was over.

Now, he's in line for a starting role at Washington State.

The 6-foot-9 post from Spanaway, Washington, took a roundabout route to the high-major ranks.

"I had to work so hard to get here, and I have to keep proving myself," Jones said recently by phone.

After an underwhelming prep career, the Orting High grad stepped away from the sport and joined the workforce. Jones spent a year employed at Puget Sound Pipe & Supply.

"I didn't think I was going to play after high school," Jones said. "I liked basketball, but didn't love it, and I didn't have the best high school career. After my senior year, I didn't have any offers. ... I started paying bills and helping my mom out."

But a fortuitous opportunity brought Jones back to the court in 2019 at Wenatchee Valley College.

Jones' friend — fellow Spanaway product Joseph Lowe — was searching for a playing offer at the junior-college level. Lowe got in contact with Wenatchee Valley coach Jeremy Harden.

"I got a cold call from another prospective student-athlete who wanted to be a part of our team," Harden said. "I told him, 'We're looking for some size, so if you know anyone who's 6-8 or bigger, then I could possibly have a spot for you.'"

"(Lowe) said, 'My best friend is 6-8.' He sent me some video, and it was Isaac. I ended up taking both players."

Harden was intrigued with Jones' potential — his size and 7-3 wingspan stood out — but knew it'd take some time to trim pounds and knock off the rust. Jones weighed about 280 pounds when he first arrived at Wenatchee Valley, and several elements of his game were "unstable," Harden said.

"But he hit the ground running and ended up figuring it out," Harden said. "He was in the gym for early mornings and late nights. He realized he had some potential and could do this. His work ethic was good. He had good length, big hands and long arms, and not many of those guys walk into the gym. When we started playing a little bit, he handled the ball pretty well."

It was a "leap of faith" for Jones, who had to get back in shape and rededicate himself to basketball.

"I wasn't very good when I got there," he said. "I was really overweight and I had never really lifted (weights) before. Then I started getting more athletic and explosive, and that changed everything. Once I started developing a little bit, I was like, 'I think I have a shot.'"

Jones captured a starting job as a freshman in 2019-20 and put up averages of 10.6 points and 7.9 rebounds per game. When the COVID-19 pandemic hit in early 2020, Jones decided to stay in Wenatchee and focused on honing his skills.

"That was huge for him," Harden said. "He was able to be in the gym, getting a lot of shots up and getting a lot of conditioning. He made a big jump between his freshman and sophomore year. I knew (Jones had a future in basketball) when I saw his dedication."

Jones posted per-game averages of 18.9 points and 12.6 rebounds during the coronavirus-shortened 2020-21 season.

"I had some Division II interest, but I decided to come back and that's the year I blew up," Jones said.

In 2021-22, Jones became a Northwest Athletic Conference star. He claimed NWAC Player of the Year honors after averaging 25.3 points and 13.2 rebounds per game while shooting 69.6% from the field — all conference highs.

A few years prior, playing for a Division I program may have only been a dream for Jones. But D-I offers started pouring in after his productive third season.

His offer sheet included a few high-major programs — WSU, Iowa State and Oregon State among them — but Jones chose the University of Idaho.

His mentor, Harden, had taken a job as an assistant with the Vandals. And Jones' hometown friend, guard Divant'e Moffitt, was headed to Moscow.

"He saw it as an opportunity to play with his best friend and also to be able to play under myself again, and have some more development at a higher level," Harden said. "The stars aligned and we were fortunate to do it together."

Jones wound up on the All-Big Sky second team and earned the conference's newcomer of the year award.

Jones finished second in the Big Sky in scoring (19.4 ppg) and set a season high with 42 points. He placed fourth in the conference in rebounding (7.8 per game) and first in blocks (1.13 per game). Jones also led the conference and finished ninth nationally in field-goal percentage (62.9%).

"I wanted to make an immediate impact," Jones said. "I wasn't necessarily surprised by what I did, because I knew how hard I'd worked. I feel like I proved that I can compete at any level. It was a jump that I had to make, and I plan on doing it again, but even better."

The Vandals had parted ways with coach Zac Claus late in the season, and Jones opted to enter the transfer portal in late April with one season of eligibility remaining. He earned a four-star transfer grade and was the No. 9-ranked big man in the portal, according to 247Sports.com.

Jones signed with the Cougars in mid-May, choosing WSU over the likes of Villanova, Memphis, Arizona State and Clemson.

"I wanted to represent my home state for my last year," Jones said. "I love the coaches here. It was a perfect situation for me."

WSU coach Kyle Smith said last month that he expects Jones to adopt a starting role in the Cougars' frontcourt and offset the loss of All-Pac-12 center Mouhamed Gueye, who is hoping to hear his name called in the NBA draft later this month.

"I watched Mouhamed play last year and I was like, 'I can play like him,'" Jones said. "I took some stuff from his game. (WSU coaches) wanted me to replace his production and his minutes, and we're kind of similar in some areas."

Jones said he specializes in "getting to the basket, getting downhill."

At 240 pounds, Jones said he "uses my long arms to get shots over people."

"I don't think there will be too much of an adjustment (to the power-conference level)," Harden said. "The biggest adjustment will be on the defensive side, but offensively, he can play against anyone from any conference. I think he's more than ready. He's a confident kid who has put in enough time and effort."

Smith sees Jones as a "great fit for the offensive scheme." Jones, like Gueye, can function as the centerpiece of the Cougars' offense and open doors for his teammates.

"I can draw double teams and make crosscourt passes," said Jones, who averaged 1.7 assists per game last season at Idaho. "I think my passing will stand out a little more this year, because we have dudes who can really shoot the ball."

Becoming a more productive shooter from midrange and 3-point distance is a priority for Jones, who shot 6 of 19 from beyond the arc last season.

"My jumper is getting better and better, and I think it's going to surprise a lot of people," he said. "(Smith) talked to me about how I'd develop here. Shooting was one of the aspects I needed and this is a great place for it."

Now living in Pullman with his fiancée, Jones is settling in with his new team. The Cougars conducted their first offseason practice earlier this week — and taking nothing for granted.

"I'm gonna give it all I've got," he said. "I want to come in and hit the ground running, get into the best shape of my life and keep polishing my game. I've always had to prove myself. I just have to keep the mindset that I haven't proven anything yet."

Brooklyn Loose, Adna

The other C2BL Co-MVP finished her Adna career with a bang, going 4 for 5 with her 10th home run of the season in the 2B state title win over Forks. That put the cap on a senior season that saw Loose rack up a .592 batting average and a 1.795 OPS, smacking nine doubles, driving in 37 runs, and scoring 53 more.

Lauren Matlock, PWV

Pe Ell-Willapa Valley's lead-off hitter batted an even .500 with 12 doubles on the season, and ended her year with a bang, going 10 for 17 at the 2B state tournament with three of her four triples and two of her three home runs in four games.

Avalon Myers, W.F. West

W.F. West's sophomore shortstop got hot as the spring wore on, hitting five of her team-high eight home runs after May 1. She also led the Bearcats with 43 hits, 40 RBIs, and 40 runs scored, hitting .506 on the season.

Quyn Norberg, Toledo

Norberg led the Riverhawks with a .772 slugging percentage, smacking nine doubles, four triples, and a pair of home runs in a season where she hit .481. She also drove 27 runs in and swiped 10 bases.

Payton Peterson, PWV

One of two seniors on Pe Ell-Willapa Valley's roster, Peterson led the way from behind the dish with no errors, while also hitting .453 with six triples and 32 RBIs.

Ava Simms, Adna

Simms' 48 RBIs led the Pirates, and she hit .534 with six home runs. But the sophomore shined brightest in the circle, pitching Adna to a state crown with a 14-1 record in the circle, 157 strikeouts, and a 1.42 ERA.

Brooklynn Swenson, Rainier

Swenson hit .541 with team highs in hits (40), doubles (11), triples (seven), and RBIs (40). She also bombed three homers to finish the season with a 1.575 OPS, earning first-team all-C2BL honors.

Zoey Theophilus, Black Hills

One of two Black Hills players to make the all-EvCo first team, Theophilus struck out 131 batters in 110 $\frac{2}{3}$ innings, while also hitting .500 with eight doubles, seven homers, and 33 RBIs in her senior season.

Judy Vallejo, Centralia

The senior all-EvCo first-teamer committed just one error all season managing the Tigers' pitching staff, while also driving in 16 runs at the plate and managing at least one hit in every game of the postseason.

Soccer Legend Lionel Messi Says He Intends to Play for Inter Miami

MIAMI (TNS) — Lionel Messi is coming to Inter Miami, rejecting a $500 million deal from Saudi Arabia and a sentimental pull to return to FC Barcelona, where he spent the first 21 years of his career. His highly anticipated decision puts to rest an endless trail of rumors that circulated around the world for years and dominated soccer social media the past few weeks.

In an exclusive interview on the Mundo Deportivo website, a Barcelona sports outlet, Messi said he really wanted to go back to FC Barcelona. He was with Barcelona in 2021, but the team's financial issues forced a trade to Paris Saint-Germain. He didn't want to see his future up in the air.

"I have taken the decision today that I'm going to Miami," Messi said in the interview. "I still don't have it sealed 100%.

There are a few things that we are still working on. If it wasn't going to work out in Barcelona, I wanted to leave Europe, take the focus away from myself and focus more on my family."

Messi owns a vacation home in South Florida, visits frequently, and has said on several occasions that the idea of playing in the United States and experiencing the Miami lifestyle with his family appeal to him.

The 35-year-old Argentine superstar and reigning World Cup champion instantly becomes the highest paid and highest profile athlete not only in South Florida, but in the entire United States.

Messi ranks No. 2 on Forbes' Highest Paid Athletes list at $130 million, just behind Cristiano Ronaldo. In 2023 he earned $65 million in salary from Paris Saint Germain and an additional $65 million in endorsements.

He has 468 million Instagram followers. NBA star LeBron James, by comparison, has 154 million, and Odell Beckham Jr. tops the NFL with 17 million.

Mariners Extra: Five Lingerin' Questions as M's Approach Critical Stretch

By Adam Jude

The Seattle Times

After an off day Thursday, the Mariners close out this road trip with three games in Anaheim over the weekend, starting with a marquee matchup Friday night between the Mariners' Luis Castillo and the Angels' Shohei Ohtani.

This is must-see TV ... as long as you remember your Apple TV+ password. (Call it a QWERTY game.)

Ahead of this critical series, here are five questions facing the Mariners right now:

1. Can they flip the switch again?

At 30-31, the Mariners are already 10 games back of the first-place Rangers in the AL West. They were embarrassed in Texas to open this road trip last week, and they can't afford a similar showing this weekend against another divisional rival in Anaheim.

It was mid-June last year when the Mariners hit rock bottom, falling to 29-39 following a loss to the Angels in Seattle on June 19.

If you're inclined to have a glass-half-full outlook, well, the Mariners haven't dug themselves that big of a hole this season. There is still time for a turnaround, and there are still encouraging signs that this team is capable of that (you just have to squint sometimes).

From a pessimistic point of view, well, the Mariners haven't exactly played inspiring baseball over the past week. They played maybe their best all-around game of the season in a 4-1 victory at San Diego on Tuesday, only to get blasted 10-3 on Wednesday afternoon.

That 24-hour swing nicely encapsulated the up-and-down extremes of the past month.

The Mariners can't bank on another 14-game winning streak to save their season. That's not realistic. But their pitching is too good and their offense has too much potential for them to be this maddening and this inconsistent, and they need to have a sense of urgency to get things turned in the right direction soon ... or this season could get away from them quickly.

2. Will they ever get the strikeouts under control?

Mariners hitters rank third in MLB in strikeouts, with 592 entering Thursday, behind only the Twins (641) and Giants (612).

Team officials entered the season cautiously optimistic that this new "balanced" lineup would cut down on Seattle's strikeout rate of 22.8% from 2022. Instead, the strikeout rate has increased to 25.9%.

Four of Seattle's hitters rank among MLB's top 10 strikeout leaders: Teoscar Hernandez (first, with 83), Jarred Kelenic (fifth, 76), Eugenio Suarez (sixth, 75) and Julio Rodriguez (10th, 72).

You could live with some extra strikeouts if the payoff was some pop ... but the Mariners rank just 21st in MLB in home runs with 63 (only one more than the lowly A's).

So, yeah, it seems like a pretty obvious statement: The Mariners need to revive their offense, and the best way to do that is to put more balls in play.

3. Teo Time?

Julio is looking more like himself over the past two weeks.

Could Hernandez be the next Mariners bat to break out of his early-season slump?

The Mariners' prized offseason acquisition, Hernandez has not lived up to the billing so far, and he's been dropped down to the bottom third of the lineup at times over the past couple weeks.

But he has shown some flashes of a potential breakthrough, hitting .389 with a 1.117 OPS in the first five games of this road trip, with three consecutive multi-hit games (and he's even drawn two walks this week).

Better yet for the Mariners, Hernandez has a strong track record in the second half of the season. Here are his career OPS numbers by month:

- March/April: .752
- May: .670
- June: .845
- July: .871
- August: .814
- September/October: .872

An encouraging sign of what's to come? If the M's are going to turn things around offensively, that's exactly what they need.

4. George Kirby needs to walk some dudes. (Uh, really?)

Yes, really.

It would be prudent for the Mariners' 25-year-old budding star to throw fewer strikes. That's a weird statement in a lot of ways — Kirby lives to throw strikes, and throwing strikes is a big part of the Mariners organizational pitching ethos.

Kirby, in fact, throws more strikes than anyone in MLB — exactly 50% of his pitches have been a strike this year — but that's not always a good thing. Hitters, at times, appear to be too comfortable in the batter's box against him, knowing there's a very good chance they'll get a pitch in the zone to swing at.

And, indeed, Kirby ranks No. 7 in MLB in opponents' swing rate, at 52.8%, according to FanGraphs.

That figure wouldn't be so troubling if Kirby induced more swings-and-misses. But he only ranks in the 14th percentile in whiff rate, per Baseball Savant.

Case in point: Facing the Padres' Gary Sanchez on Wednesday, Kirby got ahead in the count 0-1 on a slider, and then threw an elevated fastball that caught too much of the plate — Sanchez was ready for it and hit it out for a game-changing three-run homer.

It was the second time in three starts that Kirby has been lit up (sandwiched around a masterful performance against the Yankees last week).

You've no doubt heard the phrase "effectively wild" to describe some pitchers with erratic control. Well, Kirby is the exact opposite — at times, he's become ineffectively in command.

So, yes, one humble suggestion here is for him to stop being so predictably in the zone. Challenge right-handed hitters inside more regularly — in off the plate if necessary. Take advantage of your reputation as a consistent strike-thrower and see if you can get hitters to chase pitchers just out of the zone from time to time.

Kirby is a future ace, and you have to love his fearless approach. That's what makes him great. His next step: Don't be afraid to issue a walk every now and then.

5. Can the bullpen be even better going forward?

The Mariners bullpen was good without Andres Munoz over the past two months, ranking third in MLB in FanGraphs WAR (3.0). But it should be even that much better with Munoz back from a long stint on the injured list because of a strained shoulder muscle.

One of the best relievers in baseball in the second half of 2022, Munoz pitched a scoreless eighth inning on Tuesday. He struck out two of the three batters he faced, including Fernando Tatis Jr. on a 100-mph fastball.

Paul Sewald ranks among the most effective closers in baseball right now, and the surprising successes of Justin Topa, Gabe Speier, Tayler Saucedo and Trevor Gott (currently on IL) — to go along with Matt Brash's incredible strikeout rate — give Seattle a deep and dominant pen that should give the Mariners confidence they can rediscover the one-run magic that has been their calling card the past two seasons.

Stat of the Week

96: Shohei Ohtani's 96 strikeouts, in 71 innings, are the third-most in MLB this season (behind Kevin Gausman and Spencer Strider, with 113 each). Luis Castillo's 82 strikeouts for the Mariners rank 14th in baseball this season.

PROSPECT WATCH: Emerson Hancock pitched six scoreless innings for Double-A Arkansas on Tuesday, allowing just four hits and one walk with seven strikeouts. The Mariners' 2020 first-round pick has a 6-2 record with a 5.44 ERA in 11 starts this season and a 57-to-27 strikeout-to-walk ratio in 46 1/3 innings.

WHO'S HOT: Over his last three starts, Castillo has allowed only one run in 19 innings, with 24 strikeouts and five walks.

WHO'S NOT: Over his last two starts, Bryce Miller has allowed a combined 19 hits and 15 earned runs (over seven total innings) in back-to-back losses to the Yankees and Rangers. The rookie right-hander is scheduled to start Sunday in Anaheim.

State Traffic Safety Commission Announces Motorcycle Safety Patrols During Spring Opener Near Randle June 23-25

By The Chronicle staff

In a continued effort to reduce fatal motorcycle crashes, increased safety patrols will be visible June 23-25 during the ABATE Spring Opener near Randle, the Washington Traffic Safety Commission announced Friday.

The patrols will focus on illegal driving behaviors by both motorcycle riders and other vehicle drivers, according to the Washington Traffic Safety Commission.

"Lewis County Sheriff's Office and the Washington State Patrol will be working overtime focused on drivers and riders who commit traffic safety violations," the commission stated in a news release.

More motorcycles travel on Washington's roads in the summer months than any other time of the year, and officials are concerned that fatal motorcycle crashes continue to increase in Washington, according to the news release.

"The increasing number of motorcycle rider deaths is very concerning and we know that we can all work to prevent these deaths," stated Shelly Baldwin, director of the Washington Traffic Safety Commission. "Drivers can watch out for motorcyclists. Riders can improve their skills through training. All of us can respect speed limits and ride and drive sober."

From 2018 through 2022, motorcycles made up just 3 percent of the registered vehicles on Washington's roads but accounted for 16 percent of all traffic fatalities (492 of 3,076), according to the news release. In 2022 alone, preliminary data shows 132 motorcycle rider fatalities in Washington, possibly the most in a single year in the state's history. This was a 43 percent increase over 2021, per the release.

While about two-thirds of fatal motorcycle crashes involved another vehicle, illegal and dangerous actions by the rider including speeding, losing control in corners and curves, improper passing, and riding under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs were the main contributing factors cited in these crashes.

"Summer events can bring thousands of people together from across our state," Baldwin stated. "We want to ensure that everyone enjoys the weekend and arrives back home safely."

In June 2022, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) released a study supporting the effectiveness of law enforcement patrols in reducing unsafe driving behavior and crashes.

"The Washington Traffic Safety Commission and participating law enforcement agencies condemn profiling. Trained and commissioned law enforcement officers will be conducting these patrols enforcing traffic violations as defined by Washington State laws," the commission stated in a news release.

These and all extra law enforcement patrols sponsored by Washington Traffic Safety Commission are part of Target Zero — striving to end traffic deaths and serious injuries on Washington's roadways, according to the news release.

Opioid Settlement Dollars: Lewis County OK's Up to $55K for Narcan

By Isabel VanderStoep

isabel@chronline.com

In a Wednesday meeting this week, Lewis County commissioners approved up to $55,000 to buy Narcan for first responders, jail staff and other county departments.

Thanks to the Washington Attorney General's Office settlements between companies the office previously said have "played key roles in fueling the opioid epidemic," Lewis County is set to receive $2,317,136.16. The first payment of that came in on Dec. 1, 2022, and the commissioners asked their budget administrator to crunch the numbers on stocking county departments, including fire districts, with Narcan.

For the Riverside Fire Authority, a joint service between Lewis County and City of Centralia fire districts, the funds from the settlement will be cut between the two local governments.

A name brand of the generic medicine naloxone, Narcan can be administered nasally to rapidly reverse the effects of opioid overdose, often preventing death. With the county outpacing any previous year's drug-related death rates, according to the coroner, and with what many local law enforcement agencies have called an increased prevalence in the highly-potent opioid fentanyl, the purchase could increase local officials' abilities to save lives.

In the Lewis County Jail, said Ross McDowell, deputy director of emergency management, demand for Narcan has spiked. Though it wasn't clear if he meant specifically in the county jail, McDowell said "the record right now is 12 (Narcan) doses on one person" in order to successfully reverse the overdose.

While the medicine is easily accessible over the counter, there are more charges for responding agencies to obtain it, he said.

"It is about quadruple, or four times over (the cost) if you're going to buy it (as an individual)," McDowell said. "We are on what's called 'state bid.'"

When presented with the $53,000 total, the commissioners balked, but did eventually vote unanimously to approve the expenditure.

"If I'm doing the math on that, Ross, it's almost $24 per dose, is that right?" Commissioner Scott Brummer asked.

Commissioner Lindsey Pollock responded: "Highway robbery."

Commissioner Sean Swope said the "easy solution is to just go and take out the cartels. Five dollars a pill, $24 to save a life."

Despite shortages in the nasal spray version of the medicine, the county is hoping to secure that over the intravenous Narcan. Both doses are equally effective, McDowell said, and the nasal spray is much easier to administer, especially for non-law enforcement county employees who will soon have the medicine on-hand in their day-to-day jobs. Whether they choose to administer the medicine in the event of an overdose, Lewis County Public Health & Social Services Director Meja Handlen said, is up to them.

With the proper access and training, they get to make the decision.

McDowell now includes Narcan in his county employee first-aid training, he said.

News in Brief

and our volunteers, hate has no place here," she said.

Reached Tuesday, Fayed said he never intended to insult anyone but stands by his statements. He said he'd planned to resign beforehand because he didn't have time for his commissioner duties while running his businesses. He's the owner of Tanoor, a Lebanese restaurant with locations in Sammamish and Seattle.

"I resigned because I just didn't want to cause any additional issues, but at the end of the day, even in my business, I have people who have been working for me who are openly part of the LGBT community, so we don't discriminate," Fayed said. "I have never discriminated against anyone."

The city added a disclaimer to the planning commission video, putting in a bar across the screen that says Fayed's comments reflect his personal views and not those of city leadership.

"While we acknowledge the Commissioner's right to free speech, we were shocked to hear the comments made and we strongly condemn them," the city wrote in a statement. "These comments do not represent our city or community. The City of Sammamish is committed to fostering a welcoming and inclusive environment where hate has no place."

Fayed said during the meeting that he was speaking from his perspective as a Muslim person and felt it was his duty "when I see certain things that are not appropriate and not right, to at least speak about it." At the end of his comments, another commissioner thanked him for speaking and building on their diversity training. The seven-member commission then moved to the next agenda item.

Dozens of people attended and spoke at Tuesday's City Council meeting; Clark said she had never before seen that many attendees pack into the meeting room. Residents became emotional as they spoke against Fayed's comments.

"When he attacked the LGBTQ+ community, he attacked my family, my friends, my loved ones," resident Gestin Skaggs said.

Some praised city officials, though others were critical of the city and commissioners' immediate response.

Hayley Gudgin, the president of Plateaupians for Peace, was joined by more than a dozen other members of the organization as she spoke during the meeting. She said the city should have addressed the statements immediately and questioned why no one spoke up during the Thursday meeting.

"Silence condones these attitudes and causes untold damage to those targeted, and we cannot afford to stand by as our community members are attacked," she said.

Kerry Bosworth, a planning commissioner, said she was in shock and that while her thoughts were "running a mile a minute, my voice was not." She said she expressed her disappointment after the meeting. Deputy Mayor Amy Lam said they've received apologies from commissioners.

Woman Accused of Torturing Four Children Charged With Nearly a Dozen Felonies

By The Bellingham Herald

The Blaine woman accused of torturing four children over several years has been officially charged with nearly a dozen felonies and could face life in prison if convicted.

Tana Perkins Reneau, 51, was formally charged Tuesday in Whatcom County Superior Court with four counts of second-degree child assault (domestic violence); three counts of first-degree incest (domestic violence); one count of first-degree child rape (domestic violence); one count of second-degree child rape (domestic violence); one count of third-degree child rape (domestic violence), and one count of second-degree assault (domestic violence), all related to the years-long physical and sexual abuse of four children, according to court records.

Each of the 11 felony charges includes at least three aggravating factors that would allow prosecutors to seek an exceptional prison sentence for Reneau above the standard range for her crimes.

For each of the felony charges

Reneau is facing, prosecutors allege that Reneau's conduct during the crimes manifested deliberate cruelty to the victims, that the crimes involved domestic violence and that the crimes were part of "an ongoing pattern of psychological, physical, or sexual abuse of a victim or multiple victims manifested by multiple incidents over a prolonged period of time," the court documents state.

Each of the assault charges state that Reneau intentionally assaulted the four children, which caused bodily harm greater than transient pain or minor temporary marks, to each of the children. The charges also include allegations that Reneau had previously engaged in a pattern or practice of either assaulting the children creating bodily harm greater than transient pain or agony "that is equivalent to that produced by torture," the documents state.

The abuse of the children is alleged to have occurred from January 2020 through May 2023, according to court records. Three of the four children are Black and Reneau, who is white, called them racial slurs, the court documents show.

Reneau has six children, four of whom are adopted.

Reneau, who is a former teacher and current candidate for the Blaine School Board, is currently incarcerated in the downtown Whatcom County Jail in lieu of $500,000 bail, jail records show.

Washington State Planning Commissioner Resigns Over LGBTQ+ Comments

By Paige Cornwell

The Seattle Times

SEATTLE — A Sammamish planning commissioner who said LGBTQ+ people are "poisoning our kids," among other statements, has resigned amid condemnation from the city and residents.

Wassim Fayed said in comments that drew fire after a Thursday meeting that LGBTQ+ people "spread diseases" and "are not a minority people who are disenfranchised." His roughly six-minute-long remarks, he said, were in response to diversity training the commission had received.

Fayed resigned Monday from his appointed position.

City officials and residents denounced the comments Tuesday at the City Council's regularly scheduled meeting, following the city's strong rebuke issued Monday as Fayed's remarks continued to circulate on social media.

Mayor Kali Clark, the city's first out LGBTQ+ council member and mayor, said she felt empowered by the solidarity and outpouring of support from the community.

Trump Indicted on 37 Charges, Including Violations of Espionage Act, in Classified Documents Probe

By Tribune News Service

Former President Donald Trump was indicted on 37 charges, including 31 counts of violations of the Espionage Act, as part of special counsel Jack Smith's investigation into the mishandling of classified documents from the Trump White House.

The 49-page indictment, released Friday by the Department of Justice, details that Trump stored boxes containing classified documents in various locations at Mar-a-Lago, his Florida estate, including a ballroom, a bathroom and shower, his office, his bedroom and a storage room.

According to the indictment, among the classified and top secret records were details on foreign nations' nuclear capabilities, as well as information regarding defense and weapons capabilities of both U.S. and foreign countries, U.S. nuclear programs, potential vulnerabilities of U.S. and allies to military attack, and plans for possible retaliation in response to an attack.

Trump is charged with willful retention of national defense information; conspiracy to obstruct justice; withholding a document or record; corruptly concealing a document in a federal investigation; scheme to conceal; and false statements and representations.

In a brief televised statement, Smith urged the public to read the indictment and said he was aiming for a speedy trial.

"The men and women of the United States intelligence community and our armed forces dedicate their lives to protecting our nation and its people. Our laws that protect national defense information are critical to the safety and security of the United States and they must be enforced," Smith said.

The indictment details two 2022 instances in which Trump allegedly shared classified information with people without security clearances. The indictment also confirms a CNN report on the existence of a recording in which Trump indicates understanding that he cannot declassify records after leaving office and acknowledges he possesses a classified record.

The investigation began after the National Archives found classified records in a batch of documents Trump returned a year after leaving office. Justice Department officials sought a subpoena demanding that Trump return any other classified material in his possession.

Former President Donald Trump speaks during a press conference at the Trump National Golf Club Bedminster on July 7, 2021 in Bedminster, New Jersey.

The indictment cites notes from a May 23 conversation between Trump and his lawyer Evan Corcoran in which Trump questioned whether he had to fully comply with the subpoena, including making the statements, "I don't want anybody looking through my boxes. I don't want you looking through my boxes," "Wouldn't it be better if we just told them we don't have anything here?" and, "Well look, isn't it better if there are no documents?"

Trump's legal team ultimately produced about three dozen additional documents and a letter stating that a diligent search had turned up nothing more. But the indictment details that Trump's lawyers didn't have access to all of the records for their search.

The indictment states that between May 23, 2022, and June 2, 2022 — during the window after the subpoena was issued but before Corcoran could review the documents — Trump's personal aide Walt Nauta, at Trump's direction, moved 64 boxes out of the Mar-a-Lago storage room to Trump's residence so the former president could personally go through the contents and that Nauta brought back only 30 boxes to the storage room. This was hidden from Corcoran, according to the indictment.

The Justice Department learned of the move and possibility that classified documents remained at the estate and sought judicial approval of a search warrant. More than 100 documents with classified markings were found during an FBI search of Mar-a-Lago in August 2022.

Nauta was also indicted alongside Trump on charges of conspiracy to obstruct justice, withholding a document or record, corruptly concealing a document in a federal investigation, scheming to conceal and making false statements and representations.

The former president defended Nauta, a Navy veteran who was frequently by Trump's side in the White House, in a Truth Social post before the indictment was made public.

"He has done a fantastic job! They are trying to destroy his life, like the lives of so many others, hoping that he will say bad things about 'Trump,'" the former president said of Nauta.

The special counsel's investigation has focused in part on Nauta, who is reportedly seen on surveillance video helping a maintenance worker move boxes from the storage room before the FBI executed a search warrant at Mar-a-Lago.

According to the indictment, Nauta's false statements include that he was not aware of Trump's boxes being brought to the residence for review before 15 boxes were sent to the National Archives, he did not know how boxes taken to the National Archives truck got to the residence, and, when asked whether he knew where Trump's boxes had been stored before they were in his residence, Nauta falsely responded, "I wish I could tell you. I don't know. I don't — I honestly just don't know."

Trump announced in a social media post Thursday that he had been indicted in connection with his handling of the records and was ordered to appear in federal court in Miami on Tuesday afternoon. The indictment comes nearly a year after more than 100 documents with classified markings were found during the FBI's search of Mar-a-Lago in August 2022.

The case appears to have been initially directed toward U.S. District Court Judge Aileen Cannon, a Trump appointee who handled his lawsuit last year over the FBI search.

Trump has repeatedly denied any wrongdoing and claimed again late Thursday that he was innocent. On Friday he announced that he is shaking up his legal team, replacing attorneys Jim Trusty and John Rowley with New York-based Todd Blanche and a firm to be named later. Blanche is assisting with Trump's other indictment on 34 felony charges related to an alleged hush-money payment made to porn actor Stormy Daniels in the final days of the 2016 campaign.

Trusty and Rowley said in a joint statement that they resigned, calling it "a logical moment" to leave because the case had moved to Miami.

Trump and his allies quickly framed the new indictment as an attempt to diminish a political opponent, with some such as Sen. Josh Hawley, R-Mo., misrepresenting the legal process.

"If the people in power can jail their political opponents at will, we don't have a republic," Hawley, a lawyer and former state attorney general, tweeted.

Such claims disregard that it was a grand jury that recommended the charges based on evidence presented to it, and it will be a jury that decides Trump's guilt or innocence on the charges based on the evidence provided in court.

DeSantis Faces Balancing Act in Backing Trump, Experts Say

By Tribune News Service

Given the chance to pounce, Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis is instead backing his rival Donald Trump, accusing the U.S. Department of Justice of partisan bias in charging the former president.

For political analysts, DeSantis' unwillingness to attack Trump over his legal problems showcases the influence Trump retains with Republican voters, who are siding with him as he faces criminal charges in two different jurisdictions.

DeSantis must challenge Trump for the GOP presidential nomination but not in a way that will alienate Republicans who voted for him for president, said Gregory Koger, a political scientist at the University of Miami.

"From his point of view, it doesn't necessarily make sense to come out swinging at Trump but rather let the sheer fact of the news itself and the attacks of other candidates do the work he does not want to do," Koger said.

DeSantis joined other Republicans in criticizing the federal indictment over Trump's handling of classified records as a partisan witch hunt, rather than going after a candidate who now faces criminal charges in two jurisdictions and could be politically wounded in a general election.

"The weaponization of federal law enforcement represents a mortal threat to a free society,"

DeSantis tweeted just hours after news of the federal criminal charges broke Thursday night. "We have for years witnessed an uneven application of the law depending upon political affiliation. Why so zealous in pursuing Trump yet so passive about Hillary or Hunter? The DeSantis administration will bring accountability to the DOJ, excise political bias and end weaponization once and for all."

DeSantis, who is reportedly on a Texas fundraising trip, did not address in his tweet accusations from prosecutors that Trump hid sensitive documents and misled investigators.

The classified materials involved military secrets and issues of national security, such as a document detailing the nuclear capabilities of a foreign country, according to the indictment unsealed Friday.

The former president says he has done nothing wrong.

Koger expects Trump will see a short-term benefit from his latest legal troubles as supporters rally behind him and donations pour in.

But as time passes, Republican voters may start to question whether Trump can defeat President Joe Biden as a twice-indicted candidate, although a "sizable" base will stick with him no matter what happens, Koger said.

Privately, DeSantis told donors last month that he is the only candidate who can beat Biden, according to a report by The New York Times.

"The weaponization of federal law enforcement represents a mortal threat to a free society."

Ron DeSantis
Florida governor

"They just want a vehicle they can get behind ... but ... there's just too many voters that don't view Trump as that vehicle," DeSantis said on a call that a Times reporter listened in on.

Defying conventional political thinking, getting indicted is actually helping Trump with Republican voters who see the charges as political and without merit, said Aubrey Jewett, a political scientist at the University of Central Florida.

"I think DeSantis is aware that is where the Republican base is. ... If he were to attack Trump over this, it would probably hurt him, not help him," Jewett said.

Trump widened his lead over DeSantis after he was charged in March in Manhattan with falsifying business records, he said. That case involves accusations that Trump paid $130,000 in hush money to an adult film actress before the 2016 election.

DeSantis took a similar approach to those charges, attacking Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg. But DeSantis also said he couldn't speak to "paying hush money to a porn star to secure silence over some type of alleged affair," a comment perceived as a slight by some Trump supporters for which DeSantis took some heat.

Trump also is facing an investigation into potential election interference in Georgia.

Even if he is convicted, no legal obstacles would stop Trump from continuing his campaign, Jewett said.

"Theoretically, he could even be in jail and be elected president," Jewett said.

The socialist Eugene V. Debs received nearly 1 million votes for president while he was in prison in 1920 for urging people to resist the military draft.

The 14th Amendment does disqualify any person from serving as president who previously held public office, swore an oath to the U.S. Constitution and "engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof."

That provision was applied in the aftermath of the Civil War to former Confederate officials and can be lifted by a two-thirds vote of each house of Congress.

As a leading candidate facing criminal charges, Trump is taking the country into "undiscovered territory," Koger said.

"Can you be president from a New York state jail? I'd like to think we'd never find out — that the Republican Party would not nominate someone in that situation," Koger said.

Other GOP contenders took a different approach than DeSantis. Former Arkansas Gov. Asa Hutchinson called on Trump to end his campaign, saying the ongoing criminal proceedings will be a "major distraction."

Former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, a Trump ally-turned-critic, said he would reserve judgment until more facts are revealed while adding "no one is above the law."

Other candidates, such as former South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley and Sen. Tim Scott, took a strategy similar to DeSantis.

Biden and former Vice President Mike Pence also had classified documents at their homes, but their representatives say the documents were promptly turned over to the authorities when they were discovered. The Justice Department informed Pence it won't charge Pence, while a special counsel is investigating Biden's handling of classified documents.

Pence, who is seeking the presidential nomination in 2024, said he didn't want to see his former boss charged over the records.

HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 2023

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)
Consider all financial possibilities. Invest in your skills, qualifications and home. A physical push will backfire, causing a rift between you and a close friend or family member.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)
Joint financial ventures will cause uncertainty and possible regret if you don't set down ground rules. Changing how you manage your money won't please everyone, but it should protect you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
Pay attention to what you spend and how much you owe. Don't discuss your plans with someone prone to stealing your ideas or taking control. If you want to be competitive, work alone. A self-improvement project will turn out well.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
You'll accomplish the most if you approach others with encouragement and charm. Offer unique ideas, but don't push what you want on others. Change begins with you. Be ready to compromise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
Share information if it helps you assess your options and get things done. Don't limit what you can do. Forge ahead with a positive attitude and a plan. Self-improvement projects will build confidence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
You will be misconstrued. Listen, observe and choose your words carefully. A change will require connecting with someone you can trust to finish things on time. Follow your instincts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
You've got the energy to execute your plans. Refuse to let anyone distract you from reaching your objective. Align yourself with like-minded people, and you'll find it easy to stay on track.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
Focus on the changes you want to implement, but don't lose sight of your budget. A cost-efficient change will ease stress and help you remember what's important.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
Share your thoughts with someone knowledgeable. Work alongside people who are good at taking orders. A change at home may not be welcome, but it will prove to be relaxing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)
Make slow progress. A physical response will send the wrong message. Don't force change when you aren't ready to make a move. An impulsive act will lead to disappointment. Keep a steady pace.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)
Take care of money matters and documents that need updating. Handling your affairs promptly will help build a good reputation. Concentrate on maintaining healthy habits.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
Do your best to get along with friends, relatives and colleagues. Don't let your emotions take the reins, revealing something you'd rather keep secret. Don't give up or give in prematurely.

TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 2023

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)
Consider what makes you happy, and gravitate toward the people, places and pastimes that bring you joy. Distance yourself from indulgent people. Share your feelings and adjust your lifestyle.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)
Keep your thoughts and plans to yourself. Be observant, and you'll dodge someone trying to exploit you. Look for an endeavor that will help you raise your earning potential.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
Refuse to let what others do stand in your way. Stick to the most efficient path, and you'll get to the finish line on time. Don't let anyone persuade you to follow rather than lead.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Money matters will not be straightforward. Avoid joint ventures and shared expenses. Learn through observation, but follow your heart when it comes time to decide what to do next.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
Chitchat will spark ideas and feed your imagination. Distance yourself from people who cause emotional problems or try to stand in your way. Fix your surroundings to suit your needs.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
Put your wallet away. If you want to donate to a cause, offer your time, not your cash. Set a good example, and an unexpected offer will spark your interest. Prepare to act.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
Simplify your plans to suit your needs and budget. Reach out to someone who can contribute what you require to make your life and work more efficient. Avoid the slipshod or nonsensical.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
Rethink your strategy and budget wisely. Changing how or where you live will help lower your debt load and make your goals easier to pursue. Trust your instincts, do your research and make big moves.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
A cheery disposition will work well for you when trying to drum up interest in your plans. The more energetic you are, the more enthusiasm you will encounter. Love is on the rise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)
Take care of yourself and your reputation. Honor your promises and obligations. Think outside the box, and the plan you devise will stand the test of time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)
How you handle money, contracts and medical issues will stand out. Refuse to let anger set in when discipline and common sense are your tickets to success. Distance yourself from anyone trying to use emotional blackmail.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
Partnerships, communication and discipline are necessary. Don't take on too much or overreact to the decisions others make. Do what's best for you, and avoid anyone asking for too much.

Rare, Endangered Sunflower Sea Stars Found on Oregon Coast

By The Oregonian

It's always exciting to spot a sea star in the tide pools of the Oregon coast, but one recent discovery in particular has researchers especially thrilled.

Oregon Coast Aquarium staff recently discovered a group of 25 critically endangered sunflower sea stars in Yaquina Bay, the Newport aquarium said in a news release Thursday, giving hope for the species future in Oregon.

Like the more common ochre sea stars (which are related but have far fewer arms), the sunflower sea stars were decimated by a deadly wasting disease that spread across the Oregon coast between 2013 and 2017. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration estimates 90% of the population fell to the disease, the aquarium said.

In Yaquina Bay, researchers found one adult and 24 juvenile sunflower stars, the largest measuring six inches across. Adults can grow up to four feet across with as many as 26 arms.

Sunflower sea stars are considered a keystone species, the aquarium said, helping keeping urchin populations in check and therefore preventing the destruction of kelp forests that act as nurseries for other marine life.

Oregon Coast Aquarium aquarist Tiffany Rudek, who was on the team measuring the stars, has spent years working on treatments for sea stars suffering from wasting disease. This discovery is just one part of the research she's been conducting with other organizations.

"To come across not one, but twenty five sunflower stars?" Rudek said. "It's incredible. It's unprecedented. I am so excited about what this could mean for the species."

1,000 Misdemeanor Cases to Be Dismissed After Demise of Seattle Community Court

By The Seattle Times

The latest iteration of Seattle Community Court was meant to quickly resolve low-level misdemeanor cases, connect defendants to social services and require public restitution by way of community service.

It took 2 1/2 years for Seattle Municipal Court judges, the City Attorney's Office and King County Department of Public Defense to a hammer out a deal creating the collaborative court — and roughly the same amount of time for it to fall apart.

The COVID-19 pandemic and resulting jail booking restrictions appear to have been the main culprits in the demise of what's commonly referred to as Community Court 3.0. Launched in August 2020, the court was premised on the idea that eligible defendants would be released from jail after opting into the program and resolve their cases within 60 days of arraignment.

That largely didn't happen. Why it didn't happen, the effectiveness of the program and even the number of participants are points of dispute.

But what's clear is that under the Community Court's operating agreement, any of the parties could pull out at any time — which is what the City Attorney's Office did last month, signaling the end of the once-promising alternative to lockup.

That decision was driven by the City Attorney's Office's findings that most defendants "fail to engage with court resources, fail to resolve their cases, and never perform even the minimal 6 hours of community service" central to the agreement, the office's criminal division chief said in a May 26 letter to Municipal Court judges and Public Defender Anita Khandelwal.

Over the nearly three years the court has operated, "Seattle has seen a marked increase in misdemeanor crimes such as theft, trespass and property destruction — all crimes that are mandated to be diverted to Community Court under the existing agreement," says the letter from the City Attorney's Office, which prosecutes misdemeanor and gross misdemeanor crimes in Seattle. The King County Prosecuting Attorney's Office handles felony cases.

The five-page letter — authored by Natalie Walton-Anderson, the criminal division chief — served as notice that come Monday, no new cases will be routed to Community Court, and any outstanding cases that can't be resolved in the next three months will be prosecuted in mainstream Municipal Court.

Going forward, city attorneys will shift to a pre-filing diversion model for people considered most likely to engage with service providers. Four organizations signed contracts with the city last week to provide social services to those eligible to have their cases diverted out of traditional court.

City attorneys will also dismiss roughly 1,000 misdemeanor cases filed before Jan. 1, 2022, the date City Attorney Ann Davison took office after defeating her predecessor, Pete Holmes, who held the role for 12 years.

Fisherman Finds Dead Body Tied to Pierce County Missing Person Case in Lake, Police Say

By The News Tribune

A fisherman found a dead body Thursday morning in Waughop Lake, according to the Lakewood Police Department. Police said they believe it's connected to a missing person case in the city.

Police issued few details about the incident. The cause and circumstances of the man's death are not yet known. In a Facebook post, the police department said its Major Crimes Unit and the Pierce County medical examiner are investigating.

After the remains were discovered, police and West Pierce Fire & Rescue crews responded to remove them from the water. The Fire Department responded to the lake shortly after 6 a.m. Police said the man looked to be in his 30s. He has not been publicly identified.

It's unclear what missing person case the body is thought to be tied to, or what the connection is. A police spokesperson was not immediately available to comment. Waughop Lake is an approximately 30-acre body of water in Fort Steilacoom Park, just off of Steilacoom Boulevard Southwest.

Longtime Sen. John McCoy, Champion of Indigenous Rights, Dies

By The Seattle Times

OLYMPIA — Former state Sen. John McCoy, a Democrat who during his 17-year tenure in the Legislature worked to boost K-12 education, protect the environment and expand the rights of Indigenous people, died Tuesday. He was 79.

Born on the Tulalip Reservation in the midst of the second World War, McCoy would grow up to embark on a military career that took him around the world.

But in the 1990s, he returned to Washington, serving his community first in tribal government and eventually in the state Legislature, where he championed Native peoples' rights and other needs of his constituents.

"Everybody asks, what's your toughest job?" McCoy said in a speech in 2009, six years into his legislative career. "My toughest job is serving two sovereigns. And if, at the end of the day, if I did no harm to either, I've had a great day."

He said he was committed to representing his district beyond the Tulalip Reservation.

"People like to label me the representative from Indian country," McCoy said. "I think I've proven that I represent all the citizens within my district."

Teri Gobin, chairwoman of the Tulalip Tribes, said McCoy was "a great advocate" for tribes locally and throughout the country. She said he took the time to listen and share his knowledge with his colleagues in the Legislature.

"That was what made a difference," Gobin said. "He would listen and he would hear the challenges facing Indian country and treaty rights, and bring us forward so he could make others understand it, where usually it was us from the outside trying to go in and explain it to representatives or senators."

"But having him there helped bring our issues forward a little bit better," she said.

McCoy was born in 1943, the eldest of five children. His father was in the Navy, and in a March 2022 interview for the Tulalip History Project, McCoy recalled attending 14 different K-12 schools throughout his childhood. The day after his high school graduation, his cousin drove him back to Washington, where he worked as a fisherman.

"As you know, fishing around here is hard work," McCoy told "Hibulb Conversations" host Mytyl Hernandez in the Tulalip History Project interview, adding, "And quite honestly, I got tired of being cold and wet all the time."

But a strong work ethic would propel him through decades of public service, which began in November 1961, when he joined the U.S. Air Force, working in Texas, Turkey and Germany in the following years.

Proud Boy Accused in Jan. 6 Attack Says Antifa and 'Left Wing' Groups Are to Blame

By The Tri-City Herald

The lawyer for a Pendleton Proud Boys member accused of aiding in the Jan. 6 attack on the U.S. Capitol is saying the blame should actually fall on antifa and other left-wing groups.

In a 93-page response filing in the District of Columbia's civil suit, California attorney John M. Pierce makes the case that Jonathanpeter Klein, 23, and other members of the Proud Boys and Oath Keepers did not come prepared to cause violence, but were instead anticipating it from left-wing agitators.

He also denies that an attack on the Capitol building or insurrection by Pro-Trump groups ever took place.

Klein, who is also facing separate criminal charges, is accused of participating in the riot as part of an organized attempt by Proud Boys and Oath Keepers to stop the certification of the 2020 election.

Pierce, who has been described as Pro-Trump and MAGA attorney, is representing more than a dozen people in the District of Columbia's civil suit against the organization. He was previously in the spotlight after being fired from Kyle Rittenhouse's defense team.

The filing is one of many received by the court recently, after senior leadership of the Proud Boys were convicted of seditious conspiracy in May.

Members of leadership of the Oath Keepers, including founder Stewart Rhodes, also were convicted of seditious conspiracy in late 2022 and early 2023.

Klein's Alleged Role

Klein is awaiting trial in a federal criminal case, along with his brother, Matthew Klein, 26. His brother also is charged in the attack, but is not part of the civil suit.

Earlier filings described Klein as an active participant, who helped Proud Boys, Oath Keepers and other rioters breach the Capitol building. He is a self-admitted member of the Proud Boys, a far-right organization that has gained notoriety for violence at protests.

Court documents say Klein was using a police barrier as a makeshift ladder to help others scale the wall of the building away from the main staircase.

"After pushing their way past another barricade, Proud Boys member Defendant Klein obtained and used the police barricade to help others climb the Capitol walls and gain access to an external stairwell," said the initial complaint documents.

In the filing Klein largely denies participation in, or knowledge of, most of the the District's complaints, to the point of stating "Klein is unaware of a January 6th Attack" in one instance.

The document is broken down into responses to each of the hundreds of paragraphs in the complaint, with denials or admissions of statements in each section.

Seven Men Arrested in Stevens County for Child Sex Crimes

By The Spokesman-Review

Seven Washington men were arrested over the course of several days in Stevens County on child sex charges as part of an operation involving several law enforcement agencies.

The Stevens County Prosecuting Attorney's Office will review the cases to determine which criminal charges should be filed. The primary crimes investigated are attempted child rape, communication with a minor for immoral purposes, sexual exploitation of a minor and attempted commercial sexual abuse of a minor, according to a press release from the Stevens County Sheriff's Office.

Law enforcement arrested Thomas Riehl, of Ellensburg; Spencer Voice and Matthew Roque, both of Colville; Scott Jackson and Kaleb Grimm, both of Addy; Travis Hiibner, of Spokane Valley; and Jason Frank, of Spokane, the sheriff's office said.

"Offenders who prey on children are some of the most difficult and heinous crimes we face, and going after these specific cases can carry a heavier burden," Stevens County Prosecutor Erika George said in the release. "But these law enforcement agencies face that head-on and are relentless and dedicated to sending the message that the exploitation and abuse of children will not be tolerated. The Stevens County Prosecutor's Office will continue to support these operations to ensure the safety of children in our community."

The operation was spearheaded by the Stevens County Sheriff's Office, Homeland Security Investigations, Washington State Patrol's Eastern Washington Missing and Exploited Children Task Force and Internet Crimes Against Children affiliates. The prosecutor's office, U.S. Border Patrol Colville Station and Othello, Spokane and Caldwell, Idaho, police departments were also involved.

"Internet crimes against children are at an all-time high and targeting the individuals that prey on our youth is an absolute high priority for the Stevens County Sheriff's Office," Sheriff Brad Manke said in the release. "This operation was aimed at protecting our vulnerable children and making our communities safer."

Anyone with information on the suspects or information leading to the identity of potential victims is asked to contact the sheriff's office at 509-684-5296 and ask for Detective Denis Yunin, or email Yunin at dyunin@stevenscountywa.gov.

Amazon, Starbucks Face Washington Class-Action Lawsuit Over Customer Data

By The Seattle Times

Two Seattle giants — Amazon and Starbucks — have been accused of collecting customers' personal information without first notifying them, in a lawsuit filed Wednesday in Seattle.

The proposed class-action lawsuit alleges Amazon and Starbucks have violated a New York City law that requires companies to post signage near store entrances if the businesses are collecting customers' biometric data, like fingerprints, handprints or the shape of a person's body.

Amazon and Starbucks teamed up to open two contactless checkout coffee shops in the city during the past three years. The stores feature Amazon's Just Walk Out technology, which uses machine learning paired with a network of sensors and cameras to track what customers pick up and charge them when they walk out, skipping the checkout line.

In January 2022, New York City enacted the Biometric Identifier Information Law, which requires businesses to tell customers if they are collecting personally identifiable information. Now, three New York residents are accusing Amazon and Starbucks of violating that law in a legal action they hope will grow to include most of the stores' customers.

The lawsuit focuses on Amazon and Starbucks because the partnership is one of the most prominent cases of Amazon's contactless checkout technology in the city, said Peter Romer-Friedman, an attorney based in Washington, D.C., and representing the plaintiffs in this case. Amazon is promoting the use of this technology throughout the country.

"At a minimum, we think Amazon owes its customers an explanation about how it's operating these systems before people enter — so that people can decide for themselves whether they want to provide measurements of the size and shape of their body as a condition of getting a sandwich," he said.

Amazon said its technology does not collect biometric data that can be used to identify a specific shopper. Instead, it relies on broad, distinguishing features to differentiate between shoppers in the store at one time, the company said.

Amazon added that customers who use an app to enter the store agree to a privacy policy that allows Amazon to use cameras, sensors and other technology to gather information about their activity in the store.

The same parties sued Amazon and Starbucks in the Southern District of New York earlier this year. The proposed class-action lawsuit filed Wednesday is a consolidation of those cases. The parties filed in the Western District of Washington because both companies are headquartered in Seattle.

In May, Amazon filed a motion to dismiss the lawsuit brought in New York. "Put simply, the [Just Walk Out] Technology does not even implicate the law under which Plaintiff has filed suit," Amazon wrote in its motion.

Starbucks declined to comment for this story.

Dancers at Oregon Club Aim to Form Second Strippers Union in U.S.

By The Oregonian

Dancers from the Magic Tavern strip bar in Northwest Portland aim to become just the second unionized group of strippers in the U.S.

The strippers, now formally employed by Magic Tavern, say after repeated and ignored demands for a safer workspace, they've filed a petition for a union election with the National Labor Relations Board through the Actors' Equity Association — an established union that typically represents stage actors and performers.

"We want to be able to go and do our jobs. We're very good at it," a dancer who uses the stage name Daphne told The Oregonian/OregonLive. (The dancers declined to be identified by their legal names due to safety concerns and the stigma associated with their profession.) "We deserve to work in a safe environment, and we deserve to not receive retaliation or discrimination."

Dancers allege Magic Tavern, which opened in November, is a workplace plagued by unsafe conditions, a lax attitude toward dangerous patron behavior, and unfair terminations.
