Re: Request for Information (RFI) Docket ID No. EPA-HQ-OA-2022-0859

Dear Administrator Regan, EPA Staff, and Members of the Environmental Finance Advisory Board,

Green For All welcomes the opportunity to respond to this RFI to provide feedback on the EPA's implementation of the greenhouse gas reduction fund.

Green For All is a program of Dream.Org, a national advocacy nonprofit founded by Van Jones. We fight for a world that is green for all, not green for some. We work at the intersection of the environmental, economic, and racial justice movements to advance solutions to poverty and pollution. We bring unlikely allies together to push for common ground common sense solutions that all Americans can get behind. We advocate for strong, resilient, and healthy neighborhoods through policy work that ensures as the clean economy grows, it brings good jobs, better health, and opportunity to underserved communities. Learn more at www.Dream.Org.

Dream.org has partnered with seven of the best and brightest Black and Brown green entrepreneurs and innovators in the country to form the Green for All Business Council to create pathways for diverse talent to transform clean tech and sustainability. Together we're working to prevent the worst effects of climate change by removing social and financial barriers that limit

Black and Brown entrepreneurs' success in developing solutions and transitioning to a global economy that's green for all.

On behalf of 2,559 constituents, Dream.Org, and the Green For All Business Council, we applaud the Biden Administration for championing the Inflation Reduction Act and allocating 27 billion towards a Greenhouse Gas Reduction Fund. This capital will be the catalyst that can enable the rapid deployment of clean energy technology, support green, and energy-efficient projects, and most importantly, address our country's environmental injustices.

Our response will address the following components:

- Vision - Banking on Effectiveness
- Efficiency - Developing a Transformational Financial Ecosystem.
- Justice - Targeted Flexibility is a springboard for a just transition
- Responsibility - Flexibility doesn't have to come at the expense of accountability

Banking on Effectiveness

As indicated in statute, the EPA has 180 days to deploy and award GGRF funding to deserving grant recipients. Under such an accelerated timeline and the perils of an uncertain political future, we're concerned that the EPA might lack the necessary capacity and resources to intentionally account for environmental justice communities.

Historically, large federal investments have excluded impacted communities from the policy implementation process, and given such a short timeline to avert further climate consequences, we must be strategic with the resources provided and rank environmental injustices as a top priority when championing a just transition.

We find it imperative that we reinvest GGRF into a cost-effective tool that can build a self-sustainable financial system.

This is why we call for the EPA to use at least $20 billion in GGRF funding to create a National Green Bank. We believe this will allow us to maximize the overall impact and lifespan of every public dollar allocated towards this fund. We ask that the EPA develop the National Green Bank as an independent non-profit organization to accelerate the deployment of these ambitious goals and further encourage partnership with the private sector.

Unlike a grant program, a National Green Bank can circumvent the fund's time limitations and cast a wide net over the ecosystem of entities that can benefit and properly deploy onto relevant projects and or investments.

Developing a Transformational Financial Ecosystem

The IRA allocated $27 billion to the Greenhouse Gas Reduction Fund to fund green and energy-efficient projects, however, with an unabated climate crisis, costs are only expected to grow; this is why the EPA must thoughtfully determine how to most impactfully spend its resources.

A traditional grant program is insufficient to address this challenge; a National Green Bank can create a transformational financial ecosystem. This ecosystem will allow us to address the multitude of obstacles that prevent an equitable transition from taking place because it can maximize the impact of every dollar invested into our green future.

Green banks have demonstrated their effectiveness in building regenerative financial systems that can recycle capital to address our collective social, environmental, and economic goals. They are financial institutions that know how to efficiently leverage a limited amount of public resources to attract a significant amount of private capital toward clean energy projects such as energy efficiency, renewable energy, etc.

According to the Coalition for Green Capital, this was made exceptionally clear in 2020 when green banks collectively used $442 million of public capital to mobilize $1.69 billion in private dollars toward clean energy adoption.<sup>1</sup>

A grant process cannot create a system that can recycle public dollars the same way a National Green Bank could. If we spend the public resources effectively we can efficiently and equitably complement the current efforts underway by other green financing institutions across the country and strategically address the disproportionate impacts of climate change.

This proactive approach provides the US with the ability to develop a self-sustaining and resilient financing system that can equitably fund the green transition.

Targeted Flexibility is a springboard for a just transition

BIPOC, low-income and rural communities endure disproportionate public health exposure and economic consequences from the harms of climate change.

However, in the past, most energy and infrastructure investments have rarely addressed these environmental injustices or mobilized investments toward the communities that need it the most because of the perceived risks.

To meaningfully reduce greenhouse emissions and adequately address the climate crisis, we will have to transform our energy sector on a much larger scale than attained. Although many investments toward a green transition have been made, environmental justice communities have inadequate access to those benefits such as green jobs and reduced energy costs.

We must use this critical opportunity to reach the communities that have the least resources to sustain capital, invest in the solutions that are needed to fight climate change, mitigate its consequences, and create economic opportunity and clean-energy wealth creation.

This is why it's imperative the EPA take a targeted and flexible approach into consideration when allocating the GGRF resources because a 27 billion dollar investment is minuscule in comparison to the crisis we're trying to mitigate and the current impacts communities face.

A National Green Bank can take a targeted approach and provide us with the flexibility we need to mobilize investments toward distressed communities, by using a variety of financial tools, like leverage to attract more private capital and eliminate the perception of risk when approaching critically impacted communities.

Even though research has demonstrated that an equitable transition benefits everyone, the systemic perception of risk marginalizes distressed zones from transformational system-wide change.

By using the GGRF resources to build a National Green Bank, we can create an effective tool that utilizes financial principles like leverage to fill critical gaps in accessing capital in all stages of development and stimulate clean energy investments in both frontline and fenceline communities.

This new independent institution will complement and expand the work current state and local green banks, CDFIs and other similar entities have done in disadvantaged communities. This approach will also provide state and local governments with more control over their green investments.

Under such a strenuous timeline, the EPA might be limited in its resources and capacity to address the structural biases embedded in the grantmaking process, and therefore, unintentionally obstruct access to capital by failing to include diversity and equity in the conversation.

Flexibility doesn't have to come at the expense of accountability

The GGRF is a national investment that can fund ongoing and future local and state-wide solutions, and having one single independent non-profit can give us the flexibility we need to quickly mobilize alongside the transition and intentionally procure resources for the communities that need it the most.

With a National Green Bank, this flexibility wouldn't come at the expense of accountability because this would act as an intermediary institution between the stakeholders; EPA, Congress, and relevant entities and recipients. This dynamic is essential to just accountability because it would ensure no one is alienated from the process, and guarantee that the term agreements set forth are being executed, deployed, and properly implemented, meeting all the IRA requirements, and EPA standards.

This approach would ensure that investments are truly targeted and tailored around the community's needs because it would empower other entities such as local and state wide-green banks, local CDFI's, venture capitalists minority depository institutions, and other nonprofits to make their own region-specific decisions and investments while still maintain a direct line of contact and support from the National Green Bank.

Unlike the EPA and any other government agencies, this would be an independent non-profit that can use its expertise in green financing and relationship building to drive greater resources into targeted communities and projects. Government-related agencies do not always have that luxury, because they're inherently tied to the unsteady political environment of any given administration.

These dynamics create limitations and narrow our abilities to connect with outside entities, carve a pathway for them to access resources, and even alienate additional outside capital. All of which are consequential in our shared goal of ensuring the rapid deployment of climate-related resources in distressed communities.

A Green Future Starts Today

We're at a critical point in history and our ability to mitigate the extended consequences of climate change is shrinking by the day. This makes the Inflation Reduction Act monumental; it provides us with a stepping stone to mobilize individuals, entities and sectors, together, alongside the transition instead of against it.

And the Greenhouse Gas Reduction Fund supports the groundwork for a just transition to take shape. We believe that if we are strategic with our public capital, we can maximize the impact that $27 billion dollars can have on the distressed and marginalized communities that have been disproportionately impacted by our crisis.

By reinvesting limited public capital into a regenerative financial system like a National Green Bank we would be able to effectively deploy our resources, harness our solutions, and encourage unity that can build a green future that isn't just green for some, but green for all.

EPA: We Need a National Green Bank

RE: Docket ID EPA-HQ-OA-2022-0859

We the people believe that we need a National Green Bank to ensure climate funding reaches the communities that most need it. Please use at least $20 billion in GGRF funding to create a National Green Bank that would:

- Cut costs
- Ensure no one is left out of the process
- Build investments around community needs
- Increase efficiency of climate investments
- Improve equity by unlocking funds for minority businesses and Black and Brown communities

Thank you for your attention to this important issue. Our climate future depends on it.
