BY KAREN HEINSELMAN THE DAILY IOWAN

Nearly 1,000 UI students will laugh, sweat, dance, eat on their feet, and do just about everything but sit down for 24 hours for this

With dancers packed shoulderto-shoulder in the IMU Main Lounge, and with more than 100 new pairs of feet dancing the morning, afternoon, and night away, event organizers hope to set a fund-raising record for the Children's Hospital benefit.

Waving as its banner "Where the heart leads, the feet will follow," more than 1,000 students signed up to dance from 7 p.m. today until 7 p.m. Saturday in an effort to beat last year's figure of $519,990.70. This year, Dance Marathon sponsored more than 220 families, and organizers expect as many as 600 family members to turn out for the celebration — dubbed by some past participants as "better than Christmas.

Veteran dancers say they survive the 24-hour soirée by feeding off the energy, adrenaline, and inspiration exchanged among the dancers and the families they have come to know and love. Freshman Lauren Brett said she is looking forward to joining that tradition.

"Dance is my favorite thing in the world," said Brett, who has studied ballet for 13 years. "This is the perfect opportunity to do something I love for a good cause."

The mission of Dance Marathon is to "help out in little ways that make a big difference,' said Beth Foster, the executive

Missing frosh tells of armed abduction

BY TONY ROBINSON THE DAILY IOWAN

A UI freshman was allegedly kidnapped from campus at gunpoint by an unknown man and taken to an Illinois residence Tuesday before escaping on Wednesday night, her father told The Daily Iowan.

Tiffany Culp, 19, disappeared from campus while taking break from class outside the Art Building at 11:45 a.m. on Tuesday. Her family filed a missing person's report after losing contact with her for 19 hours.

"This is a tragedy," UI Associate Professor Kennith Culp said solemnly Thursday night while describing what happened to his daughter and pleading for anyone with information to step forward.

Iowa City police and UI Police refused to comment on the alleged kidnapping. But Kennith Culp said neither department had anyone in custody as of Thursday.

According to Kennith Culp:

Tiffany Culp had exited a class to get a breath of fresh air outside the Art Building when a man approached her and poked her in the side with a concealed handgun.

He directed her to her vehicle, where she was then blindfolded and forced into the back seat of her 1997 Hyundai Elantra, which has dark-tinted windows

The man then drove her vehicle to a house in Rock Island County, Ill., in what Tiffany Culp told her father was a "dark and frightening ride." After arriving at the home, her alleged assailant drugged her and held for approximately 33 hours before she was able to escape the house through a basement window about 9 p.m. on Wednesday.

Her father said he suspects that someone in the house assisted Tiffany Culp in her escape because she heard an argument take place upstairs while she was being held in the basement. He also said "materials," the nature of which he refused to elaborate on, were left behind for his daughter.

Tiffany Culp found her car parked at the home and immediately drove to a phone and contacted her sister, who knew the area, and navigated her way back to Iowa City, where Kemp, an executive producer of Catch Me If You Can, chose to study theater at the UI over Northwestern University after graduating from Fort Dodge High School. The 1971 UI graduate was involved in acting, directing, and set design in the theater department, but he said writing was his primary focus.

He wrote and directed a main-stage play, The Simpson LeGray Preservation Society, as well as a musical, No Room in the Inn. He also met his wife, Maggie, an actress, in Iowa City. Though they knew each other beforehand, Kemp said, he and his wife connected when they were co-leads in the play The Ghost Sonata.

In the days before the Old Capitol Town Center was built, Kemp said he frequented a number of downtown hangouts, such as Joe's Place and the Airliner. He also said he loved going to football and basketball games. However, Kemp spent most of his time in the Old Armory, a facility torn down in 1985 that housed, among other things, the Studio Theater, dressing and rehearsal rooms, the TVbroadcasting and film-editing studios, and, in the front part

That love for the Old Armory in May 1970 led some theater students and instructors, along with geography grad students and a professor, to set up a vigil outside the building one night during the week of the Kent State protests. The night before, the Rhetoric Building had burned down, and everyone's nerves on campus were on edge.

Kemp said that in order to make sure no one attacked the building, he and his fellow students and professors stayed up all night, eating pizza and dressing up in clothing from the costume department to keep warm.

UI athletics oversight may be unique

BY JEFFREY PATCH THE DAILY IOWAN

The UI administrative structure for athletics, now under criticism in the backwash of the Pierre Pierce case, is very unusual and perhaps the only of its kind in the Big Ten, officials

UI General Counsel Mark Schantz has been the university's administrative liaison to the Athletics Department since a one of the school's vice presidents resigned in 2000. He took over the role as the interim head and continued when the vice-presidential position was eliminated.

Last week, a committee that probed the university's response to the Pierce case recommended restructuring the administration, saying Schantz's dual roles as the attorney representing the university and the official overseeing athletics — were not ideal and should be split.

The committee recommended looking at how other schools run their Athletics Department, a suggestion later endorsed by interim President Sandy Boyd.

Big Ten university officials acknowledge that university administrations and general counsels often work hand in hand with athletics departments. But in most cases, the athletics directors report directly to the university presidents.

Several officials interviewed said they have never heard of an arrangement like the UI's.

Schantz was criticized by members of the university community for his handling of basketball player Pierce's legal issues. Schantz denies any allegation that he faced a conflict of interest.

"I was not participating in any proceeding — a hearing or a trial I didn't draft any documents that you would need a lawyer to draft, and I really wasn't asked for specific advice," he said.

A report from the Board in Control of Athletics last week recommended that the two positions Schantz fills be split.

Schantz says he conferred with Athletics Director Bob Bowlsby on the Pierce issue; however, "it wasn't anything I needed to do some legal research or analysis on," he said.

Schantz issued a six-page statement responding to the report Jan. 30.

"I didn't have any quarrel with [Boyd's] letter," Schantz "The recommendations seem like ideas that should be seriously considered. [Incoming President] David Skorton should think seriously about how he wants to structure his administration."

At Northwestern University, Athletics Director Rick Taylor reports directly to the president; however, officials said no matter how the chain of command flows, students are treated equally. "The key is that our studentathletes are students first," said Ken Kraft, Northwestern's senior associate athletics director.

"There's a pretty strong record that we don't treat athletes any differently from other students.'

At the University of Michigan, the general counsel's office has no oversight of the Athletics Department. The athletics director reports directly to the president, just as at Northwestern.

"The reporting line for compliance is straight to the athletics director," said Matt Stolberg, Michigan's assistant athletics director for compliance. "No one reports to the general counsel."

Indiana University has an interim athletics director, Harry Clapacs, who also serves as the university's vice president, but there is no involvement from the general counsel other than basic legal advice.

"Our chain goes from the athletics administration directly to the university administration," said Jeff Fanter, Indiana's assistant athletics director for media relations. "There's been no other chain of command.

He said the athletics office interacts with the office of the university counsel daily for legal advice, but "it doesn't have any authority through our standard reporting line," he said.

Schantz admitted that situations occasionally arise where the allegation of a conflict of interest is understandable.

"There are times when I can't do all of the lawyer's roles," he said, citing faculty-dispute proceedings as an example, "Any time I'm deeply involved in an initial decision, I may not be the person who can advise everybody."

The Iowa attorney general steps in if Schantz determines that a bias exists, he said, which happens around once a year.

Schantz earned a salary of $169,835 in 2002. His salary was not increased when he added the position of liaison to the Athletics Department, and he does not receive bonuses for either position.

Saying he would cooperate if Skorton decided to replace him as athletics administrator, Schantz asked sarcastically last week: "Do you really think I can afford to forego the huge bonuses I get from taking on this extra work?"

Schantz spends around 60-70 hours per week working both jobs. He said he only spends about a day-and-a-half, or 25 to 30 percent, of his time working as the athletics liaison.

One place where Schantz's legal expertise and knowledge of athletics have come in handy: negotiating contracts for coaches.

He helped negotiate - and signed off on - contracts with men's basketball coach Steve Alford and football coach Kirk

Schantz said he continues to work both of his jobs, saying he's busy filing paper work for the athletics position.

"I just have to try to get my job done," he said.

CITY BRIEF

UI, city to pay for utility study

The UI and Iowa City will jointly pay $35,514 as part of a study examining the feasibility of a locally owned utility company.

The university and Iowa City are negotiating the share of the costs.

... the feasibility study results will have significant general applicability to both entities," said Andy Matthews, an assistant city attorney, in a Feb. 4 memo to city officials.

Approximately 18 lowa communities have expressed interest in joining the $161,539 study, which will be conduced by Latham and Associates Inc. of Cedar Rapids. The cities, including West Des Moines, Keokuk, Kalona, and Vedic City, have until Feb. 21 to decide whether to participate in the three- to fourmonth study.

The Iowa City City Council will vote on Feb. 18 whether to join. Councilors have allocated $50,000 for the study in the proposed fiscal 2004 budget. Each participating city must pay a $4,000 base fee in addition to a fee of 50 cents per resident.

If the study determines that creating locally owned electric company will save money, city officials could hold an election to let voters decide whether to establish a municipal utility.

Interest in municipal utilities has increased because, on average, private utilities are 36 percent more expensive than municipal utilities, such companies transfer approximately 6 percent of their revenues to other city funds, and citizens are able to exercise control over rates, according to the Iowa Association of

A representative from the architecture company being sued for negligence in connection with the November 2001 Old Capitol fire said Thursday that his company was not bound by contract to monitor safety violations that ultimately led to the disaster.

"There were no secrets about what was going on," said Tom Hayden, the president of Shive-Hattery Inc., 2834 Northgate Drive, one of two companies listed on a lawsuit filed Wednesday by Renaissance Restoration, Inc.

The Galena-based contractor and its insurance carrier, West Bend Mutual, also targeted Enviro Safe Air in a claim for $120,000 in compensation for scaffolding equipment that was destroyed in the Nov. 20, 2001, fire.

"Charges and counter-charges will emerge regarding who knew about safety issues," said UI General Counsel Mark Schantz, who said the university and its insurance carrier, FM Global, will likely seek to recuperate a portion of the estimated $5.6 million in financial losses within the next 60 days.

Schantz said the university will likely seek a lawsuit against Enviro Safe if arbitration proves unsuccessful.

State fire officials said the blaze started while Enviro Safe employees were using openflame torches to remove asbestos from the 163-year-old building.

The university had separate contracts with each of the companies. The UI hired Enviro Safe to remove asbestos from the building, and Renaissance was going to restore woodwork. Shive-Hattery was the architect and engineer that oversaw the Court records show Renaissance employee Fritz Miller corresponded once with Old Capitol Museum Director Anne Smothers and three times with Shive-Hattery employees warning about the dangers of the removal method.

Smothers was unavailable for comment.

"On a restoration job of a historical building, a large, open flame is a big no-no," said Renaissance President Terry Cole, who added that portions of the building were charred by the torches prior to the fire that destroyed the building's cupola and golden dome.

Hayden said he forwarded the warnings to the university, asserting in a press release Thursday that the separate contracts exempted his company from responsibility for safety precautions.

He declined to comment when asked if he felt the university should have forced workers to stop using blow torches on the building.

Records from a progress meeting held three weeks before the blaze reveal that Shive-Hattery employees said no open-flame torches would be used on the Old Capitol.

Bill Bulger of the university's Facility Services Group, who oversaw the project, said he did not know open-flame torches were still being used at the site after the meeting.

A phone call placed to Enviro Safe in North Sioux City, S.D., went unanswered. The company's attorney, Mikkie Schiltz, was unavailable for comment on the lawsuit.

Telecom panel pushes regulating Mediacom

BY JESSE HELLING THE DAILY IOWAN

A recently released report suggests the Iowa City City Council adopt new regulations for Mediacom, Iowa City's cable TV provider.

The Iowa City Telecommunications Commission on Wednesday submitted its triennial review report, which recommends that the council consider several items as the provisions of a new franchise agreement are hammered out.

The current 10-year agreement between the city and Mediacom expires in February 2006.

Negotiations should take into account "a need for all subscribers to be educated on an ongoing basis with regard to Mediacom's services, packages, and costs," the report said.

"Longer notice periods when the franchisee changes services, programming, or costs should be considered when renegotiating the franchise," it said.

We've talked about what we want to accomplish for most of the past year," said Cathy Weingeist, the vice chairwoman of the telecommunications panel.

The commission also recommended requiring more reports on when cable service goes out over a large area. Under the current franchise, Mediacom is required to submit a major outage report annually. The report also calls for ensuring that cable is buried at a minimum longer notice periods be required when the company changes services, programming, or costs of the system. The report comes in the wake of discord between Mediacom and the city. In September 2002, city officials threatened to fine Mediacom $73,500 because of the confusion caused by advertising material that, city officials said, implied subscribers must upgrade to digital service to receive premium channels. A settlement, in which Mediacom agreed to introduce a new pricing structure for premium service, was approved by the City Council in December 2002.

In March, basic family rates are scheduled to rise $4, from $36.95 to $40.95, a move that is sure to cause grumbling among subscribers, said Jon Koebrick, the director of government relations for Mediacom.

"It's easy to be unpopular as a cable provider," he said Koebrick, citing increased costs of programming as the reason behind the rate increase

He said he is confident his company will secure a new franchise agreement.

Mediacom already follows most of the suggestions included in the report, Koebrick said, adding that the city can request outage reports and complaint records at any time.

"Our system is more than 99.9 percent reliable as it is," he said. E-MAIL DI REPORTER JESSE HELLING AT.

Bush's budget not quite what it seems, critics say

BY DANA MILBANK WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON - Several new programs that President Bush proposed in the buildup to his fiscal 2004 budget have turned out to be somewhat smaller than they first

On topics including AIDS funding, mentoring, and homeland security, Democrats have accused the president of misleading the public. But Bush aides say the president's budget proposals, released Monday, back up his promises.

Thursday, Bush burnished his green credentials by promoting an initiative to produce hydrogen-powered cars. "I'm asking Congress to spend $1.2 billion on a new national commitment to take hydrogen fuelcell cars from the laboratory to the showroom," Bush, echoing his State of the Union address, said after examining fuel-cell technologies at the National Building Museum.

But a fact sheet distributed Thursday by the White House stated that $720 million of the $1.2 billion is in "new funding." The rest - 40 percent - is the government's existing fuel-cell pending.

Democratic lawmakers accused the president of repackaging existing programs to conceal his preference for expanded energy drilling. Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., a Democratic presidential candidate, called the counting of existing funds "a shell game," adding: "Rumors of this administration's commitment to hydrogen fuel cells are greatly exaggerated.'

Amy Call, a spokeswoman for the Office of Management and Budget, defended the administration's consistency. The president has made clear his priorities, outlined them, and his budget reflects them very clearly," she said.

In his State of the Union address, Bush proposed spending $15 billion to combat AIDS overseas over five years. He said that $10 billion of that would be in new funds.

His 2004 budget plan, however, called for spending $1 billion - of which $450 million would be new funding, OMB said. The increase was partially offset by a reduced commitment to another foreign-aid program. The budget proposal fell approximately $400 million short of the $1.7 billion that Bush had pledged for his Millennium Challenge Fund.

Call said the $1.7 billion "was an illustrative number" and that there is "not a tradeoff" between the two foreign-aid

In his televised address, the president said his budget "will propose almost $6 billion" to build up antidotes to bio-tertorism agents. But overall spending for the National Institutes of Health, which handles much of the bioterror research and which Bush visited Monday to highlight his budget, would receive no increase in funding in 2004 when adjusted for inflation.

In December, Bush said the AmeriCorps national service program was "expanding mightily," and his address to Congress urged passage of his Citizen Service Act. But Bush's budget proposes $962 million for all national-service programs in 2004, a reduction from the administration's request of $1.03 billion in 2003.

A spokeswoman for Bush's service initiative, Lindsey Kozberg, said that the 2004 request represents an increase from what was actually spent in 2003 and that the program would reach its goals of increased membership with less money than it anticipated.

Two weeks ago, Tom Ridge, Bush's Homeland Security chief, said, "there was a thousand percent increase in first responder money, up to $3.5 billion." Earlier, Bush said his $3.5 billion first-responder request - for police, firefighters, and so on - compared with "about $250 million" before Sept. 11, 2001.

The 2004 request for first responders is indeed $3.5 billion, the same as it was in 2003. But Democrats say that 2000 spending for relevant lawenforcement assistance was $4.05 billion - Bush's 2004 proposal is for $2.32 billion and that does not include grants for firefighting.

Bush also proposed "a $450 million initiative" to bring mentors to disadvantaged children and children of prisoners. Though he did not state it in his speech, the administration said that pledge is over three years. In 2004, Bush proposes spending $50 million for prisoners' children, up from a request of $25 Democrats fuel-cell initiative, Bush proposes spending $182 million of the $1.2 billion total in 2004. Environmental groups, though backing such technologies, called the plan misleading. "It doesn't guarantee that a single fuel-cell car goes on the crummiest buildings on campus, but it meant a lot to us," he said. "In spite of the seriousness of the situation, we had a lot of fun."

Cosmo Catalano, a professor emeritus of theater, said he remembers Kemp's UI days.

"I liked and enjoyed Barry as a student," Catalano said. "He was writing while he was here, and he also acted and directed."

Following his graduation from UI, Kemp spent five years in Phoenix working two jobs while "honing the craft of writing." He produced a play in Chicago, and Kemp said little things kept him encouraged until his big break. Jerry Van Dyke, who would later star in Kemp's sitcom "Coach," met the budding screenwriter and was impressed with his material. Van Dyke passed Kemp's work on to Jim Brooks, producer of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," who hired him as a writer for "Taxi" in 1977.

Today, there are more and more Iowans in the entertainment business, and Iowa has a much higher profile in the industry because of its writing program. However, as an Iowan in Hollywood in the late-70s, Kemp said, he faced questions from industry peers.

"I seemingly came from nowhere," he said. "Invariably, questions would come up in meetings like, 'Where did you come from?' and, 'How did Jim Brooks find you?"

His three years on "Taxi" led to Kemp's next project - the creator of "Newhart" in 1982. The series "Coach," centered on fictional football coach Hayden Fox, followed in the late '80s. Despite speculation that the character was a reflection of the UI's Hayden Fry, Kemp said, the character was not based on the football coach, and he simply liked the rhythm of Hayden Fry's name.

Kemp eventually made the transition to film, forming Bungalow 78 Productions, which produced Romy and Michele's High School Reunion and Patch Adams, for which he received a Golden Globe nomination.

Writing and producing both carry challenges, Kemp said.

While writing demands that one formulates an abstract thought into something concrete, Kemp said, producing requires one to bring all those involved with a picture together to see a common vision.

"If you accomplish what you wanted to accomplish at the beginning of the film, you have succeeded as a producer," Kemp said.

Jill Bowles, an executive assistant to Kemp who has held her current position for the past 10 years, and has worked in the entertainment business for 25 years, said it is a joy to work with him.

"I've worked with other producers in the industry, and they pale by comparison," she

The three to four years leading up to production of Catch Me If You Can consisted of writing various script drafts and putting the pieces together. The project, which Kemp said was "very exciting" was initially delayed because of a writer's strike and Leonardo DiCaprio shooting The Gangs of New York.

"It falls into the category of sailing upward each time," Kemp said.

Kemp's most recent projects include producing a prequel to Romy and Michele, to air in March or April, and a pilot for Fox starring "Saturday Night Live" alum Norm MacDonald.

Kennith Culp would not comment on how she obtained her car keys.

"She was in a state of shock," Kennith Culp said, explaining why his daughter did not immediately contact law-enforcement authorities.

UI police officials refused to disclose any details Thursday; they said they hope to release a statement today.

After arriving in Iowa City, Tiffany Culp's parents took her to the UI Hospitals and Clinics late Wednesday. Her father said she was traumatized by the incident, but he would not comment on the nature of her injuries. The Iowa City native was released from the hospital three-and-a-half hours later. UIHC records verify that Tiffany Culp was treated in the emergency room and released Thursday morning.

"She's doing well," Kennith Culp said of his daughter's current condition.

Kennith Culp also said he wants to put to rest the rumors he has heard that his "emotionally stable" daughter was attempting to gain attention with a hysterical act. He said the university needs to improve campus security for students after his daughter was allegedly kidnapped in broad daylight, fewer than 500 yards from his office in the Nursing Building.

... I'm not planning on sending her back [to the university]," he said.

UI graduate student. Diana Behl, who was working in the Art Building late Thursday, echoed Kennith Culp's sentiments, saying that the university should beef up security.

"I feel very threatened as a woman. More needs to be done for the safety of women on campus," she said after learning of the alleged incident.

Although police have not arrested anyone, Kenneth Culp said that his daughter saw the alleged assailant's face clearly while being directed to her car.

Tiffany Culp has described her alleged assailant as a 180pound white male with brown hair, brown eyes, and a goatee. On his right wrist, he had a tattoo of a snake facing his inner arm. Kennith Culp urges anyone with information to come forward.

Chuck Green, the UI assistant vice president for Public Safety, refused to comment directly on the case Thursday, noting that it is still under investigation.

"The only thing I'll say right now is that we're just happy she's home safe and sound with her parents," he said.

Anyone with information about the incident is urged to call UI police, (319) 335-5022. E-MAIL DI METRO EDITOR TONY ROBINSON AT.

U.N. weapons inspectors take a lunch break on Thursday as they inspect a missile-storage facility at Al Habania, some 50 miles west of Baghdad.

1st Iraqi scientist talks to inspectors

BY RAJIV CHANDRASEKARAN

BAGHDAD, Iraq — An Iraqi biologist acquiesced to a private interview with U.N. weapons experts Thursday night, becoming the first scientist linked to the country's arms programs to agree to confidential questioning sought by the Bush administration and the United Nations' top inspector, U.N. and Iraqi officials said.

The concession, one day after Secretary of State Colin Powell assailed Iraq for hindering the inspectors and flouting U.N. resolutions, appeared to be an effort to gain the confidence of the chief weapons inspector, Hans Blix, who is scheduled to deliver a report to the Security Council on Feb. 14. Although Powell argued that inspections were not working, Blix's assessment could prove crucial in determining whether such countries as France and Russia support a new resolution authorizing war or insist that the inspections continue.

A senior U.N. official involved in the inspections said Blix has been led to believe that President Saddam Hussein's government will soon relent on two other key issues: a guarantee that Iraq will not try to shoot down U-2 reconnaissance aircraft flying over the country at the inspectors' behest, and a commitment to enact legislation permitting a long-term presence of inspectors in Iraq. The official said Blix hopes to announce agreement on those issues after meetings with Iraqi officials in Baghdad this weekend.

Blix is coming here with the hypothesis that the three items are already there," the senior official said, referring to private interviews, U-2 flights, and the legislation.

Still unresolved but crucial to Blix's assessment is additional evidence that he is seeking to better understand Iraq's weapons programs and to support its contention that it destroyed tons of biological and chemical warfare agents produced in the 1980s, the official said. "He expects the transparency to go beyond these [three] items," the official said. meeting British Prime Minister Tony Blair, Blix said: "We hope at this late hour they will come to a positive response. If they do not, our reports [Feb. 14] will not be what we would like them to be." The chief U.N. nuclear

said Iraq must make a "drastic change" in its level of cooperation with the inspectors. U.N. and Iraqi officials released few details of the scientist questioned Thursday, but they suggested he was not one of Iraq's senior arms specialists. Lt. Gen. Amir Saadi, Saddam's top weapons adviser, said only that the man's name was Sinan and that he was involved in past biological-weapons programs. The senior U.N. official said the scientist now works with Iraq's National Monitoring Directorate, the body that supervises the work of the inspectors.

The interview, conducted at the Baghdad hotel in which the inspectors are staying, lasted for three hours and 32 minutes, a U.N. spokesman said. U.N. officials refused to characterize the session.

"The importance of this particular interview is that they finally started giving in on something under the pressure that was put on them," the senior U.N. official said. "We don't know if this is just one attempt and afterwards we will get stuck again or this is a precedent."

The Nov. 8 Security Council resolution authorizing the latest round of inspections requires Iraq to provide "private access" to anyone the inspectors wish to interview. But when the inspectors asked to conduct confidential interviews, every scientist they approached insisted on having a government official present. Iraqi officials said the scientists were worried about having their testimony mischaracterized.

U.N. and U.S. officials contend Saddam's government prevented scientists from speaking in private out of fear they might spill secrets about banned weapons programs. Although Iraqi officials had promised in January, during Blix's last trip to Baghdad, to encourage its sci-

Key allies still skeptical about going to war

BY KEITH B. RICHBURG WASHINGTON POST

PARIS — France and other key U.S. allies declared Thursday that Secretary of State Colin Powell had not made a compelling case for an early armed strike against Iraq in his presentation to the U.N. Security Council on Wednesday. France immediately began a diplomatic campaign to shore up opposition to going to war soon.

There is no change in the French position, no change at all," said Prime Minister JeanPierre Raffarin, whose country has been one of the most forceful voices for giving U.N. weapons inspectors in Iraq more time to work

French President Jacques Chirac spoke by telephone Thursday with counterparts at other Security Council countries: Vladimir Putin of Russia, Vicente Fox of Mexico, Ricardo Lagos of Chile, Paul Biya of Cameroon, and Bashar al-Assad of Syria.

He told them that France refuses to accept that war is inevitable and that this view is widely shared in the world, according to spokeswoman Catherine Colanna, news services reported. He and Putin agreed that their governments would continue to work for a diplomatic solution to the crisis. France has not ruled out supporting a war but argues that peaceful means have not been exhausted. Dominique de Villepin, the French foreign minister, said it was premature to discuss a new Security Council resolution authorizing a strike. "A second resolution? We are not at the time for that right now," de Villepin told Europe 1 radio in an interview. France holds a veto in the Security Council.

Meanwhile, in Washington, President Bush declared Thursday that "the game is over" for Saddam Hussein and urged skeptical allies to join in disarming Iraq.

SEOUL, South Korea - Preemptive attacks on North Korea's nuclear facilities would trigger a "total war," the communist state warned Thursday after Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld labeled the North's government a "terrorist

The White House said North Korea's talk of war was a "real cause for concern." Presidential spokesman Ari Fleischer said the United States had "robust plans for any contingencies," including military action.

The harsh rhetoric came a day after North Korea said it was putting the operation of its nuclear facilities on a "normal footing," triggering fears it was about to produce weapons materials. South Korea said it had no sign that the North had reactivated its nuclear facilities, but officials said the North's statements were unclear and that they were trying to clear them up.

"When the U.S. makes a surprise attack on our peaceful facilities, it will spark off a total war," the state-run newspaper Rodong Sinmun said in a commentary carried by North Korea's official news agency,

Ri Pyong Gap, a deputy director at the North's Foreign Ministry, told the Guardian of London that the impoverished country was entitled to launch a pre-emptive strike against the United States.

The United States says that after Iraq, we are next," the paper quoted Ri as saying. "But we have our own countermeasures. Preemptive attacks are not the exclusive right of the U.S."

In Washington, Fleischer iterated that President Bush believes the standoff can be resolved peacefully, but he said the United States was preparing military contingencies.

U.S. officials have spoken before about their ability to respond to any potential hostile action by North Korea, in part to dispel any hopes Pyongyang may have about taking advantage of Bush's focus on Iraq. The nuclear standoff with North Korea, which intensified last fall, has complicated Bush's efforts to rally the nation and skeptical world leaders behind his bid to disarm Saddam Hussein.

Rumsfeld said Wednesday that restarting the nuclear program would give the North a troubling option - making nuclear weapons for itself or selling them to any other country.

rorist regime. It's a regime that has been involved in things that are harmful to other countries."

North Korea announced in December it would reactivate its nuclear facilities, frozen since 1994, but statements Wednesday left it unclear whether it has already done so.

In an English-language statement, North Korea said Wednesday that it "is now putting the operation of its nuclear facilities for the production of electricity on a normal footing after their restart."

However, a Korean-language statement monitored by South Korea's Yonhap news agency referred only to "our process to restart nuclear facilities for generating electricity and normalize their operation.'

Both North Korean statements were carried on KCNA, the North's official news agency.

HawkSearch founder deserves to stay at UI

The UI has the authority to expel a student who set up a campus file-sharing program out of his dorm room. However, that does not mean officials should take such drastic measures simply to make an example of someone.

In September 2002, UI freshman Jeff Nylen used the Ethernet access in his Mayflower dorm room to create a network server that would allow residents of the dorms to share and download files between computers at high speeds. The service, called HawkSearch, received around 30,000 hits a day.

However, HawkSearch was shut down earlier this week following an investigation inspired by a complaint from a party within the university. Information Technology Services cited a number of violations of the ResNet Acceptable Use Policy in shutting the service down, focusing primarily on the issue of illegal sharing of copyrighted material.

Nylen met with officials Tuesday to discuss the violations and their consequences. The university's policy on the issue is clearly stated in the ResNet Acceptable Use Policy. Users are not allowed to distribute or obtain copyrighted materials. It is also prohibited to link a Web address to a university IT address, run servers and chat rooms, and to run businesses using the residence halls' Internet access.

The policy says consequences as severe as 'probation, suspension, or expulsion" could possibly result for serious violations. Although the policy clearly grants the university the authority to kick Nylen out of school, such an extreme reaction from officials would be ridiculous.

HawkSearch was no more illegal than other file-sharing programs that are widely in use. Bringing down Napster did nothing to stop the practice of sharing music and movie files, and shutting down HawkSearch will not make a dent in the practice on this campus.

Furthermore, Nylen's service was limited solely to those who accessed the Internet from the dorms. It simply made it easier for those residents to share and borrow among themselves, just as if they were lending and borrowing CDs or DVDs. HawkSearch was not a business. Nylen did not profit from it in any way; he ran it simply as a service to his peers.

Nylen said he was never warned about his violations and that he had even contacted ITS with questions regarding policy.

Although it is understandable for officials to be concerned with the legality of file sharing, it is a practice that is extremely difficult to police and one they are powerless to stop. Now that HawkSearch has been shut down, students will simply return to using up precious bandwidth with KaZaA or another such program, something that HawkSearch actually helped to reduce.

Expelling Nylen will not serve as any example or deterrent; it will, considering his talent in setting up the service, will only cut short what promises to be a bright and colorful career at the UI.

Letters to the Editor ——

HawkSearch had to go

While I am sure that many of my fellow students are seething over the shutdown of HawkSearch and directing much anger at the university, there are some factors that I feel many people have not considered. While I may hold a very unpopular opinion, it may help many people realize why the university is acting the way it is.

The Digital Millennium Copyright Act was passed in 1998, and one of the unfortunate results of that act was an increase in the liability of Internet Service Providers (i.e., the UI) have for the things that their users do online.

Sharing copyrighted works such as movies and music is illegal despite what Jeff Nylen said on his Web site. It is also illegal to create a network that allows copyright theft to occur, even if that network only houses a "link" or "index" of the files. This precedent was handed down from the Napster case in which the file sharing network was essentially sued out of existence.

If the UI were to allow HawkSearch to continue, it would be condoning piracy on its own network. Hypothetically, the university could then be implicated in a lawsuit for copyright infringement. Lawsuits are expensive, and I would very much like to avoid paying for one through a tuition increase.

Nylen should try not to sound so surprised that HawkSearch was stomped out. He is obviously smart and talented - he built and developed HawkSearch - but I find it hard to believe that he never once thought "maybe this is illegal" or "maybe the UI will have a problem with this.

Basically, this isn't about controlling users, it's about the university trying to avoid being the target of a landmark copyright lawsuit. Many universities are finding themselves debating how much liability to bear versus how much autonomy to give their users in their network connections. If the UI were really to try to make people behave and to stifle online fun, it would have blocked KaZaA, BearShare, etc., long ago.

Those interested in learning about the copyright act and its effects on their rights online can find learning and activism resources at the Electronic Frontier Foundation (www.eff.org).

Compassion for Indigo

Being an enormous Indigo Girls fan, I came from California to follow Amy Ray and Emily Saliers on their Midwest tour. I, like University of Northern Iowa student Betsie

Driscoll, was disappointed to see that the show was canceled However, I believe that Driscoll's quote was incredibly inappropriate (DI, Feb. 4). She said, "I still like the Indigo Girls. Not only is "sticking it out" an unrealistic request in this scenario, but Driscoll (and everyone else quoted in the article) shows a complete lack of compassion for Saliers' health. Touring is hard work. And hard work is something that Ray and Saliers have perfected Not only do they often play more than 200 shows per year, this year, they are also embarking on a speaking tour with Winona LaDuke, and they have plans to record and release a new album by the end of the year. In addition, Ray and Saliers are fervent activists who devote endless time and money to social causes.

People get sick. Shows get canceled. Life goes on. In this case, Saliers came down with laryngitis, and it would have been impossible for the show to go on. The Indigo Girls appeases its fans above and beyond the call of duty already. A little compassion would have been

KURASEK

"I'm proud to be an American, I'll tell you. What a program and what a place and what an experience.

Charlie Duke, Apollo 16 lunar module pilot, as he stood saluting the American flag planted on the Moon.

Our space program is a mark of distinction for our country in which we all should take special pride. We were first to the Moon, and we remain one of only two countries with manned space programs (Russia being the other).

But our program means much more than international one-upmanship. In the face of tragedy and setback, we hold steadfast in our dedication to the pursuit of science for the sake of advancing our understanding of the universe — not for narcissistic gain, for the benefit of all humanity. Despite enormous costs, fantastic risks, and little potential for short-term returns on our investments, we continue to shoot our brightest scientists and most gifted engineers 200 miles into the blue in the name of progress. Many times we bring the world along astronauts from Russia, France, Israel, and Japan, to name a few, have hitched rides on our rockets. We do it because we are curious; and because we are Americans and human, we do it because we can.

It is remarkable that such an inquisitive, benevolent bunch could ever be called "ignorant." But that is exactly what Dominique Chagnollaud, a professor at the Sorbonne in Paris, calls Americans. Chagnollaud undoubtedly speaks for more than a few Europeans. And following the recent actions and statements of the French government, you would be forgiven for assuming Chagnollaud was stating official French policy. (As France has come to the realization that it is no longer a real world power, it has developed a serious case of ED: European deflation. France has begun treating its ED with the U.N. equivalent of Viagra - its permanent seat on the Security Council. You cannot blame the French for using it to stroke their ego at our expense as often as possible.) Our transatlantic allies (and I use that term loosely) fault us for not caring or paying enough attention to their wants, needs, and cultures. They are enlightened, we are not.

In 1945, rocket science pioneer Wernher von Braun escaped the enlightenment of the Third Reich and fled to the intellectual and cultural wasteland of the United States. In the United States, he was put to work by the government build-ing rockets. Unlike in Nazi Germany, where the rockets he was building for the government were designed to destroy, the U.S. rockets were designed to explore. How uncivilized.

One of the United States' greatest assets is our isolationist tendencies born of our isolated geography. We are surrounded by the four greatest natural buffers in history the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, Mexico, and Canada. Taken with the political stability provided by our republican government and diversity of thought, the United States has become a breeding ground for self-absorption and the ability to be. Thinkers are free to think, writers are free to write, scientists are free to experiment, and children are free to dream.

Von Braun clearly could not have pioneered space exploration in tumultuous and unstable Europe. Could Edison have invented the light bulb if instead of being able to tinker in his workshop all day he had to fight wars? Could the Internet have been developed if the DARPA scientists had to stand in line every day for staple food items? Could the Wright brothers have created the first airplane if they had been killed in ethnic fighting over ancient disputes? The answer to all of these questions is most definitely, no.

The point of all this is that the average American's relative (stress relative) lack of engagement with the affairs and cultures of other countries is something that should be celebrated instead of chastised. If American citizens were as entangled in foreign affairs as Europeans, we would lose our unique freedom to explore and think to the detri-ment of the entire world. Our isolation is fertile ground for the human mind to flower. Would the world have been better off had Jonas Salk spent his time embroiled in international political conflicts rather than in the pursuit of finding a polio vaccine?
Indeed, the source of Europeans' disparagement really is not malice; it is jealousy. They resent that we have usurped their historic role of global leadership in thought, international affairs, and economics in a relatively short timeframe. They resent that our achievement comes precisely because we are not entangled with them, rather than because we are.

What they really resent has nothing to do with the level of American interest in the cultures of foreign astronauts in our space program - it is the fact that they have to go up in an American shuttle.

With the dying family farms, the black dirt, and the ribbons of highway stretching flat to the horizon, for Letterpress Opry, Iowa is more than a state. In the hardened vein of Springsteen's New Jersey and Giant Sand's Southwest canvas-pieces comes the Opry's Americana Gothic, the band's first full-length CD.

Throughout the 70 minutes of music, the Iowa City locals have woven Iowa into the album as much as a tangible character as a motif.

In the middle of a snowstorm on Feb. 3, the band gathered in the home of fiddler Annie Savage and her husband, lead singer/guitarist Stacy Webster - a two-story cottage-style house in Goosetown, a historic section in northern Iowa City built by the Czech immigrants. The tin roof has seen more than a hundred years of weather. The hardwood floors are made from broad slats of white pine, trees that have since been used up in the region. The house creaks from the cold.

It's clear, as the band talks to The Daily Iowan about Americana Gothic that, for the fourpiece formerly known as the Mayflies of Johnson County, just living in Iowa is enough to influence the sound and direction of Letterpress Opry's dust-caked and often mournful music.

"After you've seen enough little tiny farms under this enormous sky," said drummer James Robinson, "you get the sense of people striking out into a landscape that is much bigger than they are. It still looks like a frontier - it really does and there is a tension between that and how settled it is. But that sky is so huge that something could come along and unsettle it real fast."

"The rural Midwest is a place unto its own," added Webster while trying to explain why the landscape of Iowa is so haunting. "All the old English and old Irish death-river songs from all the people who have come here from around the world [are still here] and [can be heard] in the broken barns, the browness of the land in the winter, the barrenness of it."

Of the four band members, only Berklee-trained fiddler Annie Savage was born in Iowa (Mount Pleasant). Bass player Patrick Brickel was born in Los Angeles, Robinson was born in the Pacific Northwest, and Webster is originally from San Pablo, Calif. In many ways, the three adopted Iowans are fit practitioners of music so deeply rooted in the culture of immigrants who settled the land and now rest in farmland plots behind abandoned homesteads, graves overgrown with blackberry vines.

For all the funeral music this inspires throughout Americana Gothic, there are also more traditional moments. The barn-raising hoedowns of "Suppertime," "Fishing Song," and the straightforward love songs "One Fine Day" and "Water of Your Love" are enjoyable on an individual basis, but they are far behind what the band is capable of. The grievous theme that winds so darkly throughout Americana Gothic overwhelms any attempt at the upbeat and Copland-esque.

The darker elements are hewn to place with the four violin dirges composed by Savage that provide the pillars of the album as well as prefacing such songs as "Funeral" and "Wapsipinicon." Fiddle-driven, and peddle-steel laden, Letterpress Opry seemed to have pulled the songs and arrangements straight from the soil.

But if Americana Gothic is bleak, it is understandably so. Family farms are disappearing, top soil is washing and blowing away, and these days, Midwest fields seem to grow strip malls and gas stations more frequently than corn or soybeans. Looking over the flat expanses of farm country from a gravel road, follow Letterpress Opry's lead, and take a moment to pay your respects to a dying way of life.

UI Writers' Workshop graduate Lewis Robinson's debut collection, Officer Friendly and Other Stories, is a sharp and no-nonsense look into the strange and obscure moments that his mostly male characters can find themselves living - sometimes without even realizing it.

Robinson will read from the tightly worded, sharply imagined worlds that are his stories. His characters range from teenage boys to married men and the women they are involved with. The stories grab your attention because in all of them there is a sharp edge, a threat, that Robinson uses to strike the vulnerable spot in all of us.

Set in and around the seaside town of Point Allison, Maine, the stories speak universally to anyone willing to pick up the collection. Be forewarned: Once you pick it up, you may not want to put it down.

One element to Robinson's work is the surprisingly little space he gives himself to work with. In "The Diver," the first story, we can grasp how a sim> ple interaction between men can turn foul in a moment's notice. Set on a man's yacht in the middle of the ocean, his wife and child on board create an air of danger that only adds to Robinson's genius.

His gift allows him to use the paranoia and neurosis from that first story and let it linger until the end. "The Toast" tells the story of a young man returning home for a birthday. As Roger gets more acquainted with his stepfather, alcohol, and a pistol, the reader becomes more unnerved, raising concerns about the fine line between sanity and insanity.

Robinson, who seems to be less interested in the gore of life and more interested in the narrow escapes of it, does not leave us in a bloodbath in any of these stories.

"Fighting at Night" gives us a prime example of how his characters live on the edge, striving to be heard. Every character makes a plan of survival, a strategy to become the person they thought they were going to be. From the title story, in which two teenage boys almost run a cop to his death, to "The Edge of the Forrest and the Edge of the Ocean," in which walking the catwalk of a bridge becomes a metaphor for life, Robinson's humanity convinces us that it is possible for these characters to become the people they want to be. Robinson never loses his sense of what makes his characters tick, and he will never lose the talent to gain a reader.

SPACE CENTER, Houston -A day after all but ruling it out as a leading cause, NASA said Thursday that investigators are still considering whether a piece of insulating foam that struck Columbia's wing during liftoff was enough to bring down the shuttle.

Shuttle program manager Ron Dittemore said that even though the possibility appeared remote, investigators must remain open to every option as they put together a so-called fault tree into what caused Columbia's fiery breakup just minutes from its scheduled landing Feb. 1.

"The foam that shed off the tank and [hit] the left wing is just one branch, and we are pursuing that," he said. "Even though we scratch our heads, we're going to pursue it, and we're going to pound it flat."

Eighty-one seconds into launch, a 21/2-pound, 20-inch chunk of foam from Columbia's external fuel tank broke off and slammed into the underside of the shuttle's left wing.

The accident investigation board, led by retired Navy Adm. Harold Gehman Jr., arrived at Johnson Space Center on Thursday and met with Dittemore and other shuttle officials. NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe pledged from Washington that "every single piece of evidence, every fact, every issue" will be checked, and the board's conclusions will be final and absolute.

Before ruling the foam out as

Ron Dittemore, the NASA shuttle program manager, pauses to listen to a question during a news briefing Thursday in Houston. Dittemore said investigators must remain open to every option about what a culprit, NASA will test its impact on the thousands of fragile thermal tiles that cover each space shuttle. In addition, the entire analysis that was conducted during Columbia's flight is being redone "to see if there was anything that we missed,"

On Monday, NASA officials caused Columbia's fiery breakup Feb. 1. had said the foam may well be "the leading candidate" for the cause of the accident. Two days later, Dittemore all but discounted the theory that it was the main cause, saying NASA computer simulations had shown the debris hit was not severe and could not have been the sole cause of the disaster.

NASA looks at foam again Drug can prevent premature births, researchers discover

BY JANE E. ALLEN AND THOMSAS H. MAUGH II LOS ANGELES TIMES

Obstetricians have identified the first medical treatment that can prevent pre-term births in many high-risk pregnant women, a discovery that could halt the spiraling increase in early deliveries in the United States.

A nationwide team of researchers has found that administering a form of the hormone progesterone weekly during the later stages of pregnancy can reduce pre-term births by a third.

The drug proved so effective that the clinical trial was halted early to provide the treatment to all participants, Dr. Paul Meis of the Wake Forest University Baptist Medical Center told a San Francisco meeting of the Society for Maternal-Fetal Medicine on Thursday. He and his associates have already begun using the drug for high-risk women in their regular practice, he said.

"This is an exciting breakthrough," said Dr. Nancy Green, the medical director of the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation, which just last week announced a new program aimed at reducing premature births. "This appears to be the most effective treatment to reduce the risk of pre-term delivery for any one woman."

Doctors were particularly excited because the treatment worked as well for blacks, who are 50 percent more likely to suffer pre-term births, as for whites. "Pre-term labor and prematurity and the racial disparity have been plaguing us throughout my entire career," said Dr. Fredric Frigoletto of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. "Every so often, there has been a new cure on the horizon, and it has amounted to nothing ... But this appears to be a very effective intervention."

One in every eight babies in the United States (approximately 476,000 per year) is now born prematurely —before the 37th week of gestation — a proportion that has grown 27 percent over the past two decades. The increasing age of mothers and use of in vitro fertilization, which often leads to multiple births, is a major risk factor for premature births. In most other cases, the precise cause is still unknown.

Whatever the cause, premature births can have devastating effects on infants. It is the leading cause of babies dying in the first month of life. Those who survive have lifelong effects, including lower IQs, learning disabilities, and neurological problems, as well as a higher risk of blindness, retardation, lung diseases, and cerebral palsy.

BROMMELKAMP THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa's 75-55 victory over Penn State Wednesday evening not only ended the Hawkeyes' threegame drought in Big Ten play, but could serve as a much-needed momentum boost as the team continues a grueling road swing.

The Hawkeyes (12-6, 4-3) travel to Michigan Saturday to face the surprising Wolverines in an 11:17 a.m. tipoff.

A trip to Ann Arbor didn't look as if it would be too daunting of a task at the beginning of the season, but to the wonder of almost everyone around the league, the Wolverines have been a force to be reckoned with. After beginning the season with six-consecutive losses, the Wolverines rattled off a remarkable 13-game string of victories before dropping their last two contests to Illinois and Minnesota.

Coach Tommy Amaker has had an entire week to prepare his team for the Hawkeyes following its 87-80 loss in Minneapolis on Feb. 1.

"It gives us a chance for the first time in a while to reflect a little bit," Amaker said. "I'm hoping this gives us a little renewed spirit."

He also hopes the extended period of rest helps Bernard Robinson Jr. clear his head. Robinson has struggled in Michigan's two losses, shooting just 6-17 from the field. Robinson's struggles have shown just how much of the Wolverines' success hinges on his play alongside LaVell Blanchard.

"When you look at our team, and I've said it from day one, it's been obvious to all of us that when LaVell and Bernard play up to their potential our team is significantly better," Amaker said.

"And when we can't get the contributions out of either one of those two guys, let alone both of them at the same time, then we're not a very good basketball team."

Robinson and Blanchard were a combined 5-22 from the field against the Gophers, but even when they are not playing to their potential, the Wolverines have plenty of options. That concerns Iowa coach Steve Alford.

"They're very athletic and very deep," he said. "It's going to be a great challenge for us."

Double Digits

Calhoun sets career high in Big Ten victory

BY MICHELLE YONG

THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa women's basketball team won its first, much needed, Big Ten road game on Thursday night.

The Hawkeyes traveled to Ann Arbor and defeated Michigan, 65-57. Iowa jumped out to a 49-29 lead to begin the second half, before the Wolverines went on a 11-0 run, to cut the lead to nine.

Iowa coach Lisa Bluder remained calm and called a timeout to assure the Hawkeyes they would be fine. "I'm really proud of our players sustaining Michigan's late scoring run in the second half," Bluder said. Jennie Lillis and Kristi Faulkner led the Hawkeyes in scoring with 18 points each. lowa point guard April Calhoun scored in double digits for her third-straight game and put up a career-high 14 points.

Jensen said Calhoun lost some of her confidence on the last road trip, when the Hawkeyes lost all three of their games by 30 points or more, but has seen the point guard improve in the past few games.

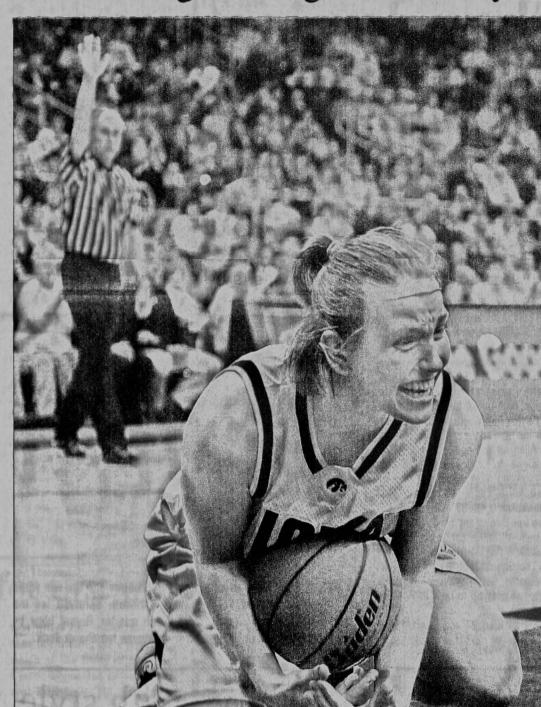

"April played an exceptional floor game," Jensen said. "She's coming in the gym every day and she's getting a sense of her confidence back. She is doing a great job battling back.'

Tabitha Pool led the Wolverines in scoring with 19 points, going 8-of-15 from the field.

The victory was key for Iowa because they are still fighting for a top spot in the Big Ten. Bluder and the Hawkeyes wanted to get a win in the first game of their three-game road trip.

"We are ecstatic for this road win," Bluder said. "This is a very important win for our program. This victory will help our mentality going into our next two road games.

The Hawkeyes continue their road trip on Sunday at Illinois. The Illini handed Iowa their first home loss, 82-72 on Feb. 2.

April Couhoun reacts to a foul called on her in the second half of the Hawkeyes loss to Illinois Sunday. She had a career high 14 points in Thursday night's game against Michigan.

Gymnastics differs from most sports. Iowa women's gymnastics coach Mike Lorenzen proved that when he spoke of what his team's upcoming competitors Michigan State would bring to the table when they come to Iowa City on Saturday for the Hawkeyes' first Big Ten competition of the season.

"I have no idea," Lorenzen said. "I don't read scores. I don't look at polls. I don't look at results. I have no idea what they've done this year."

Obviously in a majority of sports, planning strategy for specific opponents is crucial, but when it comes to gymnastics, the athletes have to focus on themselves.

"It's irrelevant for us," Lorenzen continued. "From a coaching perspective there is nothing we can do to prepare for another team. I'm not going to change my coaching strategy, and we're not going to change what we put out on the floor.

We have a simple goal every week and that's to perform at the very highest level we can, and to improve our execution

Another strange aspect of the sport is the ranking system. The Hawkeyes lost each of their three meets so far this year; however, they are the No. 18ranked team in the country.

The GymInfo poll only takes into account a team's average score for its meets, not its record. Iowa has an average score of 194.533 on the 200point scale.

Besides getting a chance to see what the Hawkeyes have to offer in their second of three home meets this season, the

No. 2 Hawkeyes to take on No. 14 Spartans BY JEROD LEUPOLD

The next four out of six regularseason duals for Iowa wrestlers are away from the comfy confines of Carver-Hawkeye Arena. But after a two-week break, coach and crew are ready to be

Jim Zalesky

road warriors. "On the road, we can't be sluggish," he said. "We've gotto be ready to wrestle - build momentum."

Current No. 3 Cliff Moore is looking forward to the action. "It was nice for a little break," the 133-pounder said. "We're ready to keep it rolling. The Hawkeyes kick off this weekend today at No. 16 Michigan State. Even though the Spartans are ranked 14 spots behind Iowa in the team polls, they bring an arsenal of trouble. Gray Maynard leads the team in national rankings in the Wrestling Mall polls at No. 5 against No. 6 Joe Johnston. The largest advantage Michigan State wields in rankings is No. 6 Nik Fekete over No. 13 Ryan Fulsaas. Both Nick Simmons and Eric Keith hold No. 8 and will challenge No. 6 Luke Eustice and No. 11 Luke Moffitt. The rest of the rankings favor the Hawkeyes, except unranked Jason D'Agata battling either Arsen Aleksanyan or Charles Sageman, both of whom are also unranked.

Two days later, Iowa faces the maw of Penn State.

During the team's respite from competition, Jessman Smith and Steve Mocco competed in the Cape Cod Potato Chip/NCWA All-Star Classic Feb. 3. Mocco beat opponent Pat Cummins, 6-2. The two will reunite for a second go at Penn State.

Smith didn't fare as well; he was pinned by his No. 2ranked opponent, Clint Wattenberg of Cornell.

"I was on shot going for a finish on a take down," Smith said. "He just stepped over and landed on top of me. I'm not happy about it, but my confidence isn't shot. That's the only way he's going to get me, when I'm off-balance."

Smith will need more than composure when wrestling in the marquee matchup of the night with No. 3 Mark Becks. Becks boasts a 13-0 record, and his team touts bragging rites over Oklahoma — a team Iowa lost to after tie-breakers were enforced.

Jordan keeping the legend alive with style

BY KELLY BEATON THE DAILY IOWAN

In the midst of a series of black eyes for the NBA - during which Ron Artest resembled a reincarnated Dennis Rodman and coaches Pat Riley and Jerry Sloan looked like Bobby Knight after missing a couple days' dosages of Ritalin - classy moves by a couple of the league's superstars were overshadowed.

Both Allen Iverson and Tracy McGrady offered to relinquish their starting positions in Sunday's All-Star Game as a testament to the man they grew up idolizing, Michael Jordan.

Incidentally, Vince Carter declined to free up his starting spot for Jordan, saying, I owe it to the fans' who selected him. That's odd - if you're so adamant about giving the fans what they want, why are you skipping out on the Dunk Contest, V.C.?

Jordan humbly declined the offers of his predecessors, Iverson and McGrady, commenting "I would rather let them play and me come off the bench. Who are we to argue with the wishes of perhaps the most recognizable figure in the history of sports?

KELLY BEATON

columnist

Besides, not only would Jordan's requests be granted by him starting the game on the Phillips Arena bench, but surprisingly, those of the majority of fans as well.

Jordan finished third in All-Star fan voting at the guard position for the Eastern Conference. This provides clear evidence fans want to see spectacular dunks in the NBA's mid-season classic rather than pull-up jumpers. I tend to agree with those fans who prefer the All-Star Game to be a showcase of the players' astonishing raw athleticism.

When I think of "His Airness," I prefer to think back to the days when he actually could "fly" like the day he floated over the hapless Craig Ehlo to release the shot that ousted Cleveland from the '89 playoffs and gave us our first glimpse of an oncoming dynasty.

Watching M.J. nowadays is still a privilege, but it's more like witnessing a traveling memorial to a player who once was a man among boys and now is simply a solid player.

Nevertheless, Jordan should be at the All-Star Game — just not as a starter. Fans clearly still enjoy bearing witness to a living legend, as evidenced by the nearly three-and-a-half minute standing ovation he received from Chicago fans in his Jan. 23 return to the United

The way Jordan so eloquently addressed the fans' adulation on that night back in his hometown is evidence of exactly what endeared him to his fans all these years.

We've watched the man go through so much - whether it be the way he broke down in tears after winning his first NBA championship soon after losing his father in 1991, carrying the Bulls on his back despite playing through a serious bout of food poisoning in the '97 Finals, or how he has dealt with accusations of gambling debts and rumors that his recent separation from his wife was precipitated by unfaithfulness on his

The way Jordan has dealt with these situations and often admitted he made mistakes such as with his gambling history - proved he's not afraid to admit he's human, and man enough to do what's right.

His decision to pass up a starting spot in Sunday's All-Star Game is testament to that.

In an era where there are far too many Keyshawn Johnsons, Shannon Sharpes, and John Rockers - players who are far better at speaking of their greatness off the field than they are playing on it - Jordan's humble, respectful, and professional nature marks a dying breed.

So, when the All-Star lineups are announced Sunday, even though Jordan won't be announced as a starter, join the rest of his fans everywhere and join in the ovation.

I know I will. E-MAIL DI REPORTER KELLY BEATON AT BEATONKELLY@NETSCAPE.NET

He's back: Tiger to start swinging again next week

BY DOUG FERGUSON ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's time for Tiger Woods to get back to work.

Woods, who spent the last two months recovering from knee surgery, will end the longest layoff of his career next week when he returns to the PGA Tour in San Diego.

10 DAYS

"Things are progressing nicely, and I will officially enter the Buick Invitational on Thursday," Woods said on his Web site.

In a conference call last week, Woods reported no pain in his left knee. He played 18 holes for the first time Tuesday with his father and shot 66.

"The real test comes next week at Torrey Pines," he said. That's when I will find out how the knee holds up in competition and what, if any, effect walking the course has on it."

The Buick Invitational is a good spot for him to return.

Along with having an endorsement deal with Buick, Woods won the tournament in 1999 and has never finished vorse than fifth.

Plus, it will give him a chance to visit with Phil Mickelson, one of his chief rivals who caused a buzz this week by saying Woods has "inferior" clubs and is the only player "good enough to overcome the equipment he's stuck with."

Mickelson later said his comments to Golf Magazine were taken out of context and that he meant to explain Woods' talent.

"I heard it was said in fun and jest, but until I talk to him, I really don't know," Woods said. "Quite frankly, questioning my equipment is foolish. I'm not going to play with anything that is going to hold me back. My career will be judged on how much I've won."

No one has won more than Woods among active players. He has 34 victories on the PGA Tour, and has an 8-0 margin on Mickelson in the majors.

"I really don't worry about other players or what they think," Woods said. "The real measuring stick on the PGA Tour is how much you win, and that is what drives me to compete at such a high level."

Woods has never missed more than five weeks since turning pro, but recurring pain in his left knee forced him to have arthroscopic surgery Dec. 12 to remove fluid and benign cysts that caused his ligaments to swell.

Doctors cleared him to practice without restriction on Jan. 25, and he reported no pain. Woods said his knee hurt so much at times last year that he felt sick to his stomach and sometimes took painkilling injections.

"I haven't been my best for a couple of years now, so that part I'm really excited about - not waking up every day ... having to look forward to the day of walking and playing because my knee's hurting so bad," he said.

Woods has hardly been idle. He has been riding exercise bikes, running, and lifting weights during his rehabilitation, and said his stamina is good.

The only question mark is rust, although Woods historically has played well following four- and five-week layoffs.

O'Neil finds her groove at ISU

BY CHUCK SCHOFFNER ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMES - Anne O'Neil's success at Iowa State was not quite as instant as she had hoped.

Big things were expected from O'Neil when she transferred after one season at Illinois. She had been an All-American at Cedar Rapids Kennedy High School, set the state's career scoring record, and became an immediate starter at Illinois.

She could handle the ball like it was an extension of her arm, shoot from the perimeter, and beat a defender off the dribble with drives to the basket.

But the combination of a knee injury last spring, a year away from competition, and learning a new system left O'Neil unproductive at times and often frustrated early in the season. Now, though, things finally are starting to click again for the 5-11

"I figure it's just about that time," O'Neil said. "They always say, well, it will be about a year before you're 100 percent. You can see a difference when you finally get to work out and get better at all the little things and your quickness.

The difference shows in her

O'Neil has scored in double figures in seven of the last eight games, with a high of 23 in a double-overtime loss at Baylor.

She has averaged 13.9 points in that stretch and has a 17point average in the last four games. O'Neil averaged 9.1 points in the Cyclones' first 12 games and had six points or fewer in five of those games, hardly what had been expected.

"She's had some good games for us lately," Iowa State coach Bill Fennelly said. "I think she feels more comfortable. She knows she's out there for the duration, and that's helped."

It's tough enough to get back into the swing of things after sitting out for a year, which O'Neil was required to do after transferring. Her transition was complicated when she tore a knee ligament in a pickup game May

Instead of working on her shooting, ballhandling, and conditioning, O'Neil spent the summer riding a stationary bike and doing leg lifts to strengthen her knee

She can ride that darn stationary bike forever, but that's not going to get you in shape to play a basketball game," Fennelly said. "She's a kid who needs to work and likes to work. There hasn't been a kid I've been around who works any harder than Anne does at the game.

"When she can't do that, it's going to set her back. She doesn't have lightning quickness. She's not a great jumper. She's a basketball player, and when you're a basketball player, you need to play basketball; you need to work on your game."

O'Neil also got assistance from her father, Terry. After she scored only two points on 1-6 shooting in an 86-55 loss to Missouri, Terry O'Neil drove over from Cedar Rapids to shoot with her and offer some encouragement.

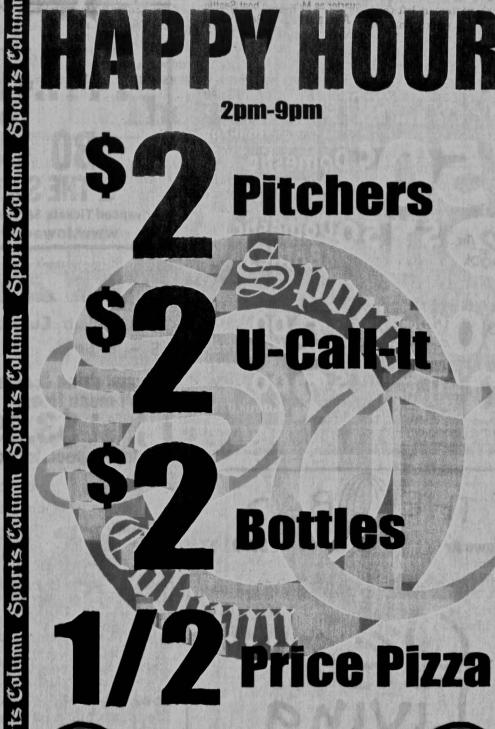

"It wasn't like he told me anything new," O'Neil said. "It was just a good release for him to come up here and say, 'Hey, you've been playing this game your whole life, just let it come to you. Keep having fun and be confident."

Since then, O'Neil has strung together games of 14, 18, 23, and 13 points. Evidently, her dad knew exactly what to say. Always excited just to be a part of the Iowa State program, O'Neil now is bringing some consistent production, too.

"It still feels great," she said. "Because you never know how many games you have left in the season. You can get hurt, just like I found out. You have to go into every game with your head up and try to give your best

Georgia Tech has doubles trouble

BY KATIE LOW
THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa women's tennis team will face another tough test when it travels to Atlanta today to take on No. 18 Georgia Tech. Last weekend, the Hawkeyes were unable to contain two ranked opponents, No. 8 Vanderbilt and No. 56 Tulsa.

This weekend will be a revenge, of sorts.

"Their kids compete very well," Iowa coach Paul Wardlaw said. "It'll be a tough match, but it's definitely doable."

The Yellow Jackets enter this weekend's competition 2-1 after defeating Georgia State, 7-0, and Auburn, 5-2. Their only loss was to Southern Alabama in a close, 4-3 match.

Jamie Wong leads Georgia Tech and is ranked No. 33 in the country in singles. Other ranked players include No. 59 Catherine Gunn and No. 115 Mysti Morris. As a doubles team, Wong and Morris are ranked No. 27, and Gunn and Marie Nieto hold down the No. 51 position.

Freshman Kelly Anderson was also named ACC Player of the Week this week for winning all of her matches in singles play last weekend.

"The threat that they pose is their entire team," Wardlaw said. "They are a very good team practice."

He said he has been working with each doubles team this week in practice in order to prepare the pairs for the weekend.

"Our strategy is to focus on doubles play," sophomore Jennifer Hodgman said. "We've been working on it all week. We're trying to improve our doubles by getting the teams more comfortable working together."

Sophomore Gloria Okino seems to have picked up on this strategy. At the Hawkeye Invitational Jan. 24-25, she was the only Hawkeye to go undefeated. She was also the only Hawkeye to pick up two wins last weekend against Tulsa.

"We're going to have to be very competitive as a team in all positions in doubles and singles," Hodgman said.

Wardlaw said the Hawkeyes will use these meets as a way to gear up for the Big Ten season, which will begin for the Hawkeyes next weekend when they host Illinois and Purdue.

It is fitting that in the Iowa men's swimming team's last meet before the Big Ten championships, the Hawkeyes should face Big Ten rival Northwestern.

Davey said there was one distinctive advantage the Hawkeyes have over the Wildcats that could give them the edge this weekend - depth.

"Our guys are very comparable with each other, whereas Northwestern doesn't have quite as much depth," he said. "They have some good top guys, and then the depth drops off pretty quickly."

The Hawkeyes exhibited this depth in their romp over Truman State on Feb. 1, in which a diverse group of eight Iowa swimmers nabbed individual first-place finishes.

But the individual events aren't what Davey is emphasizing this weekend.

he said. "However the relays go, that will dictate how the meet goes. If we're able to win at least two of the relays, we've got a real good shot of beating them.

"It all depends on the relays,"

"It's going to come down to who wants it more."

Senior and team co-captain Chris Brunson agreed.

"I think it will be an incredibly close meet," said Brunson, who finished first in the 200 breast against Truman State. "It might be the closest meet we've had all year. It could come down to a few points."

After the meet, the Hawkeyes have two-and-a-half weeks off before the Big Tens.

Brunson said the meet against Northwestern would be a good warm-up for intense competition Iowa will face in three weeks.

"It's a nice way to end the season," he said. "And a good segue to Big Tens."

Depth key to Iowa victory | Going to the Big Show

BY KELLY BEATON THE DAILY IOWAN

The Hawkeyes are flying to Las Vegas.

There won't be many trips to the MGM Grand or to see Siegfried and Roy, though; this is a business trip.

Four members of the No. 5 ranked men's gymnastics team will test their skills in the U.S. Gymnastics Association Winter Nationals at the Las Vegas All-Sports Arena starting today at Seniors Cameron Schick and Ryan Meeks will participate in the meet along with freshmen Michael McNamara and Michael Reavis. Meeks will compete as a pommel-horse specialist, while his three teammates will compete in the all-around.

The winter national is an individual meet that allows collegiate-level gymnasts a chance to qualify for the U.S. National Team.

"It's an opportunity for experience on the national level," said Iowa coach Tom Dunn. "Also, if we have someone per-form really well, he could possibly make the team."

The chance to make the national team is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. The magnitude of the event is not lost on the men taking part.

"This is my first national championship, and I'm extremely excited," Meeks said.

This is my first national championship, and I'm extremely excited.

While the winter national will be the first meet of its kind for most of the gymnasts, heralded Hawkeye freshman Reavis will be making a return appearance. He said he realizes the lights will be shining even brighter on him this time.

"I competed at the same event last year, but competing at the true senior level is still new to me," he said.

The Hawkeyes won't need to look far for help dealing with the tension of a meet laden with the elite gymnasts from throughout the land. Assistant coaches Alex Kolyvanov and Dmitri Trouch both represented their countries in the Olympics and performed in numerous national competitions throughout their careers. Kolyvanov was a member of the Unified team that took gold at the 1992 Barcelona Olympics and performed in several national tournaments early in his career, winning the Junior National Tournament in the Soviet Union at age 13.

Trouch helped lead Russia to gold in the 1996 Summer Games, and he also won the All-Around National Championships in Russia that same year.

"I consider myself very lucky to have coaches who have been through the stress of competing at pressure-packed meets, and I know they'll help me in whatever way they can," Reavis said.

Despite the intense businesslike nature of the winter national, the brevity of the trip will also be a factor in allowing the Hawkeyes few chances to soak in the bright lights of the Vegas Strip. Though Dunn said he doesn't want his team to miss school, the gymnasts promised to sneak in a few sights during their trip.

"I'm sure there will be many exciting opportunities, but my initial and primary focus is on our meet," Meeks said.

The week off for the majority of the Hawkeye gymnasts will provide ample time to polish routines after a narrow victory over Minnesota on Feb. 1, along with a chance to mend injuries, such as the sprained ankle suffered by junior co-captain Eric Block.

The Hawkeyes will return to their dual meet schedule Feb. 14 at Oklahoma.

Calhoun's prostate removed

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) - Albertsen said. Connecticut basketball coach Jim

Calhoun had his cancerous prostate removed Thursday; a full recovery is expected.

The 60-yearold coach will be released from the hospital this weekend and will be able to resume

Calhoun coaching in three to four weeks, Dr. Peter Albertsen said.

Albertsen, Calhoun's urologist, said there were no problems during surgery at John Dempsey Hospital.

"Coach Calhoun's cancer appears to be confined to his prostate,"

The coach was diagnosed with cancer Jan. 31, and doctors said they caught the disease early.

Calhoun is in his 17th season at Connecticut; assistant George Blaney is coaching the team in his absence.

Calhoun has led the Huskies to national prominence, capped by an NCAA title in 1999.

With a career record of 637-290, including 14 seasons at Northeastern, he is among the top 10 active Division I coaches with at least 600 career wins.

The 18th-ranked Huskies (13-5, 4-3 Big East) are coming off a 95-74 loss Wednesday at Virginia Tech.

Licensing Associate - Program Associate I

The University of Iowa Research Foundation (UIRF) is the designated institutional manager of intellectual property for the University of Iowa. It manages a comprehensive intellectual property program, including identification of inventions, discoveries and software; prosecution, marketing and licensing of patents; and the development of relationships with commercialization partners. The UIRF is also responsible for managing outgoing biological material transfer agreements, confidentiality agreements and negotiating intellectual property clauses in research contracts, and receiving and distributing license revenue.

In FY 2002, the University of Iowa (UI) received about $341 million in research funding and the UIRF received 88 invention disclosures, and filed 77 U.S. patent applications. The UIRF is seeking an individual with business, legal and/or technology management experience, combined with a demonstrable understanding of science and engineering.

1188-5as The responsibilities of the Licensing Associate will range over management of patentable inventions and creations covered by copyright. Such responsibilities will include the following: · Gather new invention disclosures from faculty and staff

· Evaluate new invention disclosures for possible patenting and/or commercialization · Interact with external counsel on patent timing and strategy

Monitor relevant deadline dates for patenting and patent prosecution and maintenance activities

· Wherever applicable, identify potential licensees for new technologies or marketable patents

 Prepare non-confidential summary of technical information for marketing purposes · Negotiate terms in option/license agreements and materials transfer agreements

Follow up and monitor licensee performance complex transactions are essential.

· Review UIRF's obligations under research funding and undertake appropriate invention reporting The Licensing Associate, characterized as Program Associate I, will report to the Executive Director of the UIRF, though additional guidance will come from the Associate Director of the UIRF. Candidates for this position should have a Masters degree or equivalent experience. Additional desired qualifications include educational or professional experience in science, engineering, business, or research administration. Strong Salary will be commensurate with experience and qualifications. The successful candidate will become an employee of the UI assigned to the UIRF. UI offers an excellent benefits package.

horoscopes

Friday, February 7, 2003 by Eugenia Last ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will intrigue others with your ideas. If you aren't self-employed, you should consider starting your own business. You have what it takes to become successful.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take it easy when dealing with an unpredictable person who might resort to harsh words or violence. Arguments will only lead to frustration and anxiety. Choose your battles carefully.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may be taken advantage of if you don't read agreements thoroughly. Legal advice may be required if you don't fully understand the implications being made.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You will be faced with uncertainties where relationships are concerned. Make plans to get together with friends who understand your frustration. The break will do you good.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You need a challenge in your life that will get your mind racing. Your ability to listen to others and to rely on past experience will enable you to make the right choices. The future looks bright.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Rest should be your goal today. If you overdo it, you will make mistakes. Take one thing at a time, and don't push the envelope even if someone is putting pressure on you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Listen, but don't take everything you're told as being the truth. Do your own investigation, and get the answers you're looking for. Avoid idle gossip. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone may have a greater interest in you than you realize. Be careful not to let this person get the wrong impression. Think carefully before giving financial assistance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your best outlet will be physical activity that gets your heart pumping and your juices flowing. Take a stand on issues you believe in. If a leader is needed, consider yourself a candidate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Love interests will develop today if you are single, or you can infuse new life into the relationship you're currently in. A greater sense of who you are and what you want will make you very attractive. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't lose sight of your goals. Mistakes will be made if you don't pay close attention. Don't leave anything to chance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Concentrate on doing things that create the freedom to work alone so that you don't have to deal with other people's incompetence. You can make progress and experience the satisfaction of completing things all by yourself.

What is the University of Iowa Dance Marathon All About?

The University of Iowa Dance Marathon works in association with the Children's Miracle Network and is the largest student-run philanthropy in the Western United States.

- Its mission is to create special projects to provide emotional and financial support to families treated by the Children's Hospital of Iowa at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics, with an emphasis on the Division of Hematology/Oncology.

Money raised by Dance Marathon benefits these children and their families in numerous ways, such as paying patient bills, providing Friday breakfasts at UIHC, and distributing "Comfort Kits."

- In addition, Dance Marathon recently had the opportunity to be an instrumental contributor to the renovation of the Pediatric Blood and Bone Marrow Transplant Unit at UIHC. Due to its large donation of $500,000.00, the unit has been named after the University of Iowa Dance Marathon.

The Selfless Voice of a Generation

Excerpts from a letter written by Mike Garvin, a Dance Marathon Father, after Dance Marathon

If you were lucky enough to be involved in the UI Dance Marathon, you already know what a magnificent success it vas. Yes, it did break all records by raising well over $500,000 for programs that benefit the children afflicted with lifethreatening illnesses. Those who were there know that it was nuch more than that

2DOU2OL2

The Garvin Family

As a father of a 5-year-old daughter who is a leukemia survivor, I know that the Dance Marathon was much more than the money raised. There is an indescribable feeling when you are on a stage with 600 children and family members, and in front of you is a pulsating sea of young people cheering as if the Hawkeyes had ust won their second Big Ten basketball tournament. When my ittle girl asked me who they were cheering for, I said, "For you and all of the other kids who had to fight this disease." She vigorously waved to the adoring crowd.

Dance Marathon is one of the most selfless, wonderful experiences these young people may ever have in their lives. I think my faith in them is greater than that. I believe this is just the beginning for these fine young people. So move over Woodstock Generation, I've seen this next generation. They have comething to say and I, for one, think they have it right.

> A grateful father, Mike Garvin
