The President's Message

While the Olympics were going on in Atlanta I spent several days with Daniel Boorstin, the former Librarian of Congress, and his wife, Ruth. Boorstin made a point in our discussion that I found rather powerful. He talked about the concept of professionalism and the creation of the professions — law, clergy, medicine. But instead of championing the cause of professionalism, Boorstin made an impassioned plea for amateurism.

This surprised me because we sometimes use amateur in an almost derogatory way. We think of the amateur as someone who dabbles. Boorstin pointed out, however, that the word amateur comes from the French “amateur” which means to love something. He urged all of us to be amateurs — people who act out of love and are motivated by love of what we are doing.

It is the spirit of amateurism that makes us appreciate the Olympic participants, and it is this same spirit that motivates our work on behalf of Willamette. Whether we are a student, faculty member, graduate, trustee, administrator or friend, I know that each of us strives to do our best for this institution because we believe in it — we are amateurs in the finest sense of the word.

The President's Message

As the 1995-96 academic year came to a close I watched the finishing touches being made to the F. W. Olin Science Center and the frenetic beginning of the renovation of E. S. Collins Science Hall — a year's worth of work that we sought to complete in a busy summer. I looked on with pride and gratitude, mindful of the many people who had contributed their very best to see our dream of a new science center become a reality. I was reminded of the many strengths that characterize our academic community.

Willamette is an institution committed to academic excellence, and while this has certainly contributed to our success, it is not our only strength. We are a community of people able to dream and act collectively. Even more, we are a community willing to stay the course until we get the job done.

When plans for a science facility were first developed in 1992 the F. W. Olin Foundation topped our list of potential donors. Some of you may remember that we were one of three finalists who received a site visit from the foundation that year. But the Olin directors chose not to reward us with a new building. Instead, we received a $100,000 grant for academic excellence and an invitation to reapply the following year. With program revisions and new drawings in hand, we tried again, this time taking the $7.1 million grand prize. We stayed the course.

I want us to remember the process leading to our new science center because it speaks to the tenacity that has long characterized Willamette's success. Just after our Olin grant was announced in 1994 I took the opportunity to review some of our oldest records on the foundation. I was surprised to discover correspondence, now more than 30 years old, between G. Herbert Smith and the Olin trustees.

There is much to be said for staying the course; and victory is always sweeter when the challenge has tested our stamina as well as our skill. The Willamette community was faced with many challenges this past year including natural disasters and the tragic deaths of two students during the academic year. My own illness, which kept me away from the campus for most of the winter, paled by comparison with the challenges faced by the other members of our community. Through all of this, Willamette kept its goals in sight and its dreams alive.

Because so many of us have given of ourselves, Willamette is today an academically ▶ and financially superior institution. During the past year alone we added 12 new tenure-track faculty to the College of Liberal Arts — faculty in philosophy, politics, anthropology, biology, English, environmental science, exercise science, computer science, education and Japanese. Of these, seven were new tenure track appointments, including two endowed chairs established during our Sesquicentennial Campaign.

It has been said that the difference between progress and growth can be likened to the difference between "leaving things behind us ... and leaving things inside us." I enjoy this metaphor because growth is essential to the life of an institution. Institutions are not static — they grow, change and evolve much like the people who shape and define them. Like people, their evolution is continuous. As I consider the changes we have made at Willamette over the past 16 years I recognize and applaud their continuity. We have not merely progressed, nor changed, we have grown.

Certainly, growth and change have not been uncommon at Willamette over time. Examples abound from every age, but I have always enjoyed the story of G. Herbert Smith, who stepped onto Willamette's campus in the midst of WW II, faced with a dwindling student population and the very real threat of Willamette's closure. When he left 27 years later, Willamette's enrollment and faculty had more than doubled, the physical plant had expanded dramatically, and the endowment had increased by five times. Looking back even further, we can see similar growth during the years of Carl Doney's and Bruce Baxter's presidencies.

During the past two decades, as always, Willamette has been guided and fueled by vision, love, dedication and tenacity. Programs like World Views, Community Outreach, Undergraduate Research, Science Collaborative Research, the Hewlett grants program, the Center for Dispute Resolution, the Master of Arts in Teaching Program, the School of Education, Tokyo International University of America, and additional off-campus studies programs did not exist until we dreamed they could happen and set a course to create them. Some of these are so much a part of us now that it is difficult to imagine life at Willamette without them.

It is equally difficult to imagine our campus without the Hatfield Library and Smullin Hall — two facilities which are now a vital part of our intellectual community. One day

Goudy Commons, the University Apartments and the E. W. Olin Science Center will be equally rooted in campus life at Willamette. Even imagining Waller Hall and the Collins Legal Center as they were six or seven years ago is a stretch.

It has been an honor and a pleasure for me to serve as the president of Willamette University these past 16 years. And even though I continue to prize professionalism, I am keenly aware that I have always been an amateur in my efforts on behalf of Willamette. That is, I have striven for perfection and I have done so out of love. We should all be amateurs in the cause of Willamette, and in so doing we can be confident that the state of this university will remain strong and healthy. ◀

► Editor's Note

President Jerry E. Hudson has announced his plan to step down at the end of the 1996-97 academic year after 17 years as president. He will be greatly missed.

Henry Hewitt, chairman of the Willamette University board of trustees, remarked on the success of the president's administration: "Under his direction, Willamette has made a quantum leap, with tremendous improvement in the academic program, in the size and caliber of the faculty, and in the credentials and experience of the students. The University's quality has been recognized regionally and nationally." And as Hewitt cautioned the search committee beginning the process of identifying candidates for the presidency, "We will find a successor to President Hudson, but we won't find anyone to replace him." ◀

FACULTY SABBATICALS

Robert Art, College of Law, fall, lectured at the University of Sofia in Bulgaria on a Fulbright Scholarship.

C. Russell Beaton, economics, full year, began research for a book on the topic of "Economics and Sustainability." This general topic has long been an interest of Beaton's, stemming from research and teaching in the areas of environmental economics, energy economics, regional economics and land use planning. In conjunction with this, he traveled to New Zealand to examine the workings of legislation passed in 1991 which requires all major development proposals to be justified according to sustainability principles. He plans to integrate these research activities with a movement within Oregon State Government to incorporate sustainability principles.

Maria Blanco-Arrejo, foreign language, spring (on leave during the fall), completed revisions on two papers on Latin American women writers and also wrote about the short fiction of the Argentine writer Julio Cortazar. She redesigned her course on the Latin American Contemporary Novel and Short Story to include one of Cortazar's short story collections.

FACULTY SABBATICALS

Christina Brink, chemistry, full year, designed and implemented a science outreach program based on the newly created Webber Science Scholarships. The structure of the outreach program includes having the four Webber scholars present a three-month-long series of weekly science classes, demonstrations, and experimental projects to a class of fifth and sixth graders. For this first year, the project was piloted at Abiqua, a private K-7 elementary school located in Salem. By the 1997-98 academic year, the program will be rotated among the various public elementary schools in the Salem-Keizer district.

David Cameron, College of Law, fall, worked on a treatise entitled "Federal Taxation of Intangible Assets," which will be published in 1996 by Warren, Gorham and Lamont.

Roger Hull, art, full year, studied Pacific Northwest regional art, particularly the work of Constance Fowler and Carl Hall, both of whom taught at Willamette, and the Lincoln County artist Ruth Grover. He cataloged the Constance Fowler papers and wrote an article about her to be published in the magazine ARTIFACT. He is also at work on a book-length manuscript about Carl Hall. Artworks by Fowler, Hall and Grover are included in the University art collection, and part of Hull's sabbatical was spent in collections development—cataloging current holdings and seeking acquisitions. He wrote a report envisioning a university art museum, having spent the month of October in New England studying historic architecture and visiting regional and campus art museums.

Richard Iltis, mathematics, full year, worked with a senior statistician, Tony Olsen, at the Environmental Protection Laboratory in Corvallis, Ore., learning better ways of applying statistics to real world situations. His projects included devising a grid for the globe in which to record satellite data, designing visual displays of data and maps concerning ecoregions of the U.S., and developing sampling procedures for studies of stream healthiness.

James Levenick, computer science, spring (through fall of 1996), began three projects: ECHO, a simulation package for modeling ecological systems; MIRROR, a demonstration of artificial intuition which he hopes will demonstrate that a simulated agent in a simulated world can utilize a combination of innate drives like hunger and thirst and an artificial neural network to learn to effectively meet its needs without explicitly encoding information about its environment; and a proposal for an introductory C++ textbook.

SABBATICALS, RETIREMENT, IN MEMORIAM

Robert Lucas, history, spring, studied the influence of Aristotle on late medieval French political theory.

David McCreery, religion, full year, spent most of his time in Jordan working on his project, "Analysis and Publication of the Tell Nimrin Excavation Data."

Sharon Rose, biology, full year, wrote a book on the natural history of Minto Brown Island Park which has been submitted to the Oregon Historical Society for publication, continued her research at the Salmon River Estuary and Deer Creek Park for a presentation at the International Conference on Mycorrhizae, took an advanced systematics class at Oregon State University, was invited to and attended a National Science Foundation regional meeting at Portland State University on the future of science and national funding priorities, attended a meeting on natural resources and conservation at Oregon State University, wrote and submitted research proposals to the Murdock Charitable Trust, the NSF for equipment and the Charles A. and Anne Morrow Lindbergh Foundation. She received funding from the Murdock Charitable Trust and the NSF, and is waiting to hear from the Lindbergh Foundation.

Carlton Snow, College of Law, spring, did research on the impact of personality type on arbitral decision-making.

Leroy Tornquist, College of Law, spring, spent his sabbatical updating the cases used in the book Trial Diplomacy which he co-authored. The book was originally published in 1971, with a second edition in 1974.

Retirement

Walter Gerson, sociology, had taught at Willamette since 1973. He earned his B.A. and M.A. from the University of Montana, and his Ph.D. from the University of Washington.

STEWARDSHIP

Financial Highlights

The 1995-96 fiscal year presented a number of changes in the way Willamette University accounts for and reports its financial condition and operating results. Willamette, along with most of the not-for-profit sector, adopted several new accounting standards which moved the University away from fund accounting and made its financial statements more closely resemble those of commercial entities. The University's equity is now classified in three categories: permanently restricted net assets, temporarily restricted net assets, and unrestricted net assets, based on uses specified by donors. Gifts to the endowment, for example, are classified as permanently restricted because they are to remain perpetually invested with only their income being used.

Willamette's net assets now total $203,203,000. That figure is $48,882,000 greater than the total fund balances figure reported at the end of the last fiscal year. Of that increase, $24,467,000 or about half of the apparent growth is due to changes in accounting. The most significant of those accounting changes were the restatement of invested securities from cost to market value and the recording of unconditional pledges as assets. The other half of the increase is real growth resulting from investment gains, new gifts and a modest operating surplus.

During 1995-96 the total market value of Willamette's endowment and life income funds grew from $118,195,000 to $141,538,000. That excellent outcome resulted from Willamette's investment advisors taking advantage of favorable securities markets and from the University's donors contributing nearly $8,000,000 to endow scholarships and other important investments in Willamette's future. ♦

THANK YOU

Willamette University is grateful to the donors who have made contributions during the 1995-96 fiscal year. Matching gifts from employers have been included when determining the appropriate giving society memberships. Titles have been omitted wherever possible to save space. If you are a donor, but your name does not appear in the 1995-96 President's Report, one of two things may have happened:

- 1) your gift may have been received after Willamette's fiscal year ended May 31, 1996; or
- 2) in the process of generating the annual report lists, your name was inadvertently excluded. Inquiries or requests for further information should be directed to: Marnie Noble, Director of Donor Relations and Special Events, Willamette University, 900 State Street, Salem, OR 97301 (503) 370-6340.

Two decades ago Virginia Furtwangler, who writes as Ann Copeland, began her writing career in a broom closet under a chapel, with a lamp, a card table and a five-year deadline for the production of a book.

After receiving her Ph.D. from Cornell University and being well prepared to teach, Furtwangler found herself in a small town in Canada with a baby and no job. She wanted very much to write, and had her 13 years in the religious life as a subject. What she didn't have was a place to do her writing. Luckily, the chaplain at the university where her husband was teaching found her the small room under the chapel, where she spent two mornings a week. In 1978, within the five-year goal she had set for herself, she succeeded in publishing her first book, At Peace, with stories directly from her experience of life in a religious order. At Peace was followed by The Back Room in 1979, and Earthen Vessels was published in 1984. In 1989 The Golden Thread came out in both the U.S. and Canada. Strange Bodies on a Stranger Shore, with stories featuring the same main character as The Golden Thread, came out in 1994. A book on writing fiction titled, appropriately, The ABCs of Writing Fiction, was published in April of this year, followed this fall by Season of Apples, another book of short stories. Furtwangler is also a contributing editor of The New Brunswick Reader, a Sunday magazine for The St. John Telegraph Journal, where she writes a page on writing called "Writer's Cramp."

Furtwangler has received numerous awards for her writing, including two National Endowment for the Arts grants and an Ingram Merrill Award, and was invited to give some readings of her work in Vancouver, B.C., and at the International Writer's Breakfast in Victoria, B.C. She will also give some readings of her work in November at the International Authors Festival in Toronto.

R. A. BOOTH SOCIETY

The R. A. Booth Society was established in 1990. Members have affirmed the University motto "not unto ourselves alone are we born" by establishing planned gifts which benefit the University. In the spirit of the society's name-sake, these members will provide for future generations at Willamette University through bequests, life insurance policies, life income trusts and life estates.

If you have named Willamette University as a beneficiary in your will or a life insurance policy, but are not listed, please let us know. We would like to express our thanks. At their request, some members' names are not published here.

In the summer of 1996 alone James A. R. Nafziger, Thomas B. Stoel Professor of Law, could be found in Finland, Ecuador, England, China and Mexico. His interest and expertise in international law have taken him around the world to tackle some of the most critical legal issues faced by the world today. In Mexico City he spoke on protecting intellectual property at an international conference on Western Hemispheric relations. In Helsinki, Finland, at the biennial conference of the International Law Association, he helped draft and negotiate a set of principles to assist persons who have been displaced within their own countries by war and natural disaster.

Nafziger was in China to direct the College of Law's Summer Study in China, which has completed its 13th year, and in Ecuador as administrator of the school's new semester study program.

International law is an important area of study for law students, Nafziger said, because of the globalization of the profession. "We have an increasing need to know and understand other systems," he said. International legal studies also provide a wonderful contrast, he added, for testing the student's own understanding of the American system.

"Lawyers have civic responsibilities," Nafziger added, "and what we ought to be doing is preparing them for a role as community leaders who are equipped to explain and act intelligently upon the global issues of the day, from Oregon timber sales abroad to clear-cutting in Brazil."

"The worst we could do," Nafziger said, "is take students filled with idealism and dreams and put them in blinders with a narrow vision of professional responsibility. Part of our job is to try and harness the power of their dreams productively."

It will take that combination of idealism and professionalism, Nafziger said, to solve some of the great problems which fall under the umbrella of international law, such as human rights, environmental degradation, massive migration and war.

G. Frederick Thompson Jr. is the Elmer and Grace Goudy Professor of Public Management and Policy Analysis at the Atkinson Graduate School of Management. In that position he teaches courses on government, business and society.

Part of what he hopes students will take away with them when they graduate is an understanding of the relationship between business and government. Business owners and managers need to know how government works and how it will affect their organization, he said, and they also need to know how to influence government policy — not just to protect their interests, but also to promote sound public policy. Those in the public sector also need to understand how business works to be effective.

One of the more satisfying projects on which he has worked recently — although his part, he asserts, was a minor one — involved serving as an advisor to the Secretary of Defense's Base Realignment and Closure Commission. In that assignment he helped develop the criteria used to select bases for closure. This procedure was intended to give the military departments an incentive to close facilities that could be easily transferred to better or higher-valued uses. Thompson said it was important to consider closing those bases that would serve the community better if they were closed. He used Fort Ord as an example of a camp that was closed and put to a better use. "Here was a low-value eyesore in a rapidly developing, high-priced area," Thompson said, "which has been transferred to a variety of higher-valued uses, including a new campus for the California State University and College System."

Lane C. McGaughy has been the George H. Atkinson Professor of Ethical and Religious Studies since 1981, when that endowed chair was inaugurated.

McGaughy said he still occasionally meets people who tell him that they received their education at Willamette thanks to George Atkinson, for whom the chair was named. For many years Atkinson offered to pay for the education of any student who faithfully attended his Sunday School class at the Burlingame Unit¹ Methodist Church in California.

And after holding this position for 15 years, McGaughy feels as much as ever that ethics is an important part of a liberal arts curriculum. "Students today need to be clear on what their values are," he said. "We want to help students be more self-critical of the decisions they are going to be faced with. Some issues are so new and unprecedented they don't always have the tools for thinking about how to make these decisions."

Some of the issues McGaughy mentioned as important for students to think about include the environment, biomedical issues, violence in society and how acceptable it should be, and what it means to be accepting of others. "It's really helping them with the ability to think critically," he said. "My job is not to indoctrinate in a particular point of view, but teaching them how they can think through these issues having thought through what their principles and values are."

Linda Jacobs spent the 1995-96 academic year at Willamette teaching both faculty and undergraduate courses for the first year of the World Views program on the Middle East. Her interest in the Middle East could have easily sprung from her Lebanese background, she said, and many people assumed this was the case. But it was not.

"In graduate school I had an offer to go to Iran on a dig and I just fell in love," she said. "Digs are absolutely wonderful." Jacobs had her bachelor's degree in art history and went on to earn a Ph.D. in Near Eastern Anthropology and Archaeology from the University of Oregon.

This was in the 1970s, she said, while the Shah was still in power and she hasn't been back since. "I would love to return," she said. "I think things have gone from bad to worse since then."

As much as Jacobs loved archaeology and working on the digs, she turned more and more toward anthropology. "I found myself wanting to spend more time talking with people," she said. Much of her work lately has centered on women in the Middle East, and this was the topic of the course she taught for faculty.

Outside of the classroom, Jacobs is the chair of the Jacobs Family Foundation and serves on the board of Polytechnic Institute of New York. She is also founder of the Organization of Arab-American Women. "I know this all sounds work-related," she said, "but it's also a lot of fun."

J Frederick Truitt, Helen Simpson Jackson Professor of International Management, feels that Salem is an ideal place to teach international business. "We're a small state compared to many others — like California or New York — when it comes to international trade," he said, "but in the past five years, trade has been one of the fastest growing segments of Oregon's economy. Not surprisingly, the growth hasn't been in the traditional areas of agriculture or timber, but rather in the high tech areas — as anyone who tried to drive on Highway 217 lately knows."

"Much of the growth we are seeing in the Oregon economy," said Truitt, "is caused by increased foreign trade and by foreign investment." Until recently, Daimler-Benz of Germany and its investment in the Freightliner operation was the largest foreign investor in Oregon, Truitt said. Now companies from Asia — particularly Japan — are doing more and more investing.

Along with economic growth, Truitt said, international business can create controversies relating to different wage scales, working conditions and rules. "Take for example the protests at Nike," he explained. "Issues like those surrounding Nike's subcontracting production at plants in Indonesia, none of which are actually owned by Nike, can boil to the surface and spill over."

Although the U.S. companies have often been criticized by U.S. workers for taking jobs to foreign countries with lower wages, American workers are no longer alone on this issue. Japanese workers are beginning to voice the same complaint against Japanese companies as they move to China, Southeast Asia, and the Southeast region of the U.S., Truitt said. "Wage rates and benefit packages in Japan, and in Germany too, are higher than those for U.S. industrial workers," he said, "so now we might find Japanese workers resentful that Japanese companies are moving production here."

As we become the recipients of foreign investment, Truitt said, we may celebrate the economic growth it brings, but we become apprehensive as well. There are concerns about whether the environment will be respected; there are the problems of increased congestion, noise and pollution that come with increased growth; and there's the hope that foreign companies making their home in Oregon will be stable, contributing members of the community, doing their fair share to protect the livability of the state.

George S. McCowen, Willamette's E. Jerry Whipple Professor of History, remembers Jerry Whipple as a very caring person, one who was concerned and interested in students and respectful of faculty. "He was greatly admired as an administrator," McCowen said, adding that he felt honored to hold a chair named for someone he respected very much.

Having an endowed chair in history ensures a strong place for history in the curriculum, McCowen said, and allows him to do some creative things that would not be possible otherwise. For example, last year he brought Ken Lockridge, author of A New England Town: The First 100 Years, Dedham, Massachusetts, 1636-1736 to campus as a guest lecturer. McCowen had used Lockridge's book, written in 1970, as a text in one of his classes. "It was exciting to have the author of the text in class, looking back on his own work after several years of additional research."

John Peel, Willamette's composer-in-residence and Irene Gerlinger Swindells Professor of Music, began playing the clarinet when he was an eight-year-old boy in Texas. He moved on to the oboe when he was 12 and the piano when he was 16. As Peel tells it, his "Pauline conversion" — that moment when he knew he wanted to be a musician forever — came while he was in high school, singing in the chorus of Gounod's Faust with the Fort Worth Opera. Shortly thereafter, while still in high school, he began taking private lessons in composition, a love he has pursued ever since.

In graduate school Peel studied at Columbia and Princeton universities with such musical luminaries as Pulitzer Prize winners Milton Babbitt and Charles Wuorinen.

At Willamette, Peel teaches composition and also holds a series of lectures and concerts which focus on 20th Century music each year. When Peel began his New Music Series, he said that people were sometimes surprised by the repertoire of sounds. "They didn't realize it would be so dramatic or lyrical," he said. "People have such stereotypical views of modern art, and somehow imagined modern music as strident, sterile or cerebral. I hope that has been laid to rest."

Peel describes "New Music" as having grown out of the avant-garde tradition of the 20th Century as found in the work of Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Bartok, Babbitt, Carter and Boulez. Some of the lecturers, conductors, performers and composers brought to campus through the New Music Series include soprano Susan Narucki, the Quarteto Latinoamericano, conductors Christopher Kendall, Anthony Korf, Stephen Mosko, and composers Milton Babbitt and the late Stephen Albert. "A side benefit of having such renowned musicians come to campus," Peel said, "is that they go away knowing about the strength and quality of Willamette's music program."

Willamette's commitment to undergraduate research is one reason J. Gary Tallman chose to occupy the Taul Watanabe Chair in the Sciences. "I have spent my career building undergraduate research programs," he said. "Too often in the past students just learned the results of science, but didn't learn the process. Being able to do research gives science education a whole new dimension."

For much of the past two decades, Tallman's research as a plant cell biologist has been the study of guard cells, cells which are responsible for opening and closing the small microscopic valves in a leaf in response to light. Not only can these cells tell when the sun rises in the morning, but they also have the ability to sense the color of the light and its intensity, the amount of humidity in the air, the temperature and the amount of carbon dioxide within a leaf. What Tallman wants to know, and is dedicating his life to finding out, is how all that works at the cellular level.

Although Tallman calls science a great adventure, it's more than adventure that drives him. There's a practical purpose for his research as well. "If you have a plant that cannot live and grow in a dry environment," he said, "you could theoretically alter its guard cells and it could grow under much dryer conditions. You could conceivably cut water usage in half for many crops."

"As methods get better, creative people alter our paradigms and destroy them and then replace them with others; it's very exciting," he said. "And it's thrilling when you look at something no one has ever seen before."

Guy F. Atkinson was a third-generation contractor who joined his father at the age of 19 to help build one of the largest construction firms in the United States. Working with his father and later his sons, Atkinson built structures all over the world, including Grand Coulee Dam, McNary and other dams on the Columbia River, and public works in Japan, the Philippines, Greece and Australia. His interest in Willamette began in the late 1920s when his children enrolled in the College of Liberal Arts, and for many years he gave generously to benefit the University.

In 1939 Atkinson's son, George, joined the board of trustees where he served Willamette for 39 years. In 1972 the George H. Atkinson Graduate School of Administration (now the George H. Atkinson Graduate School of Management) was named in his honor. A few years later the Guy F. Atkinson Professorship was established by members of the Atkinson family; the Myrtle L. Atkinson Foundation, which Guy Atkinson founded; the Atkinson Foundation; and the Guy F. Atkinson Company of south San Francisco, Calif.

Stephen H. Archer was hired in 1973 as dean of the Atkinson Graduate School, which at that time was only in the planning stages. His responsibilities included curriculum design, recruiting students and consulting on the building design. Shortly thereafter, he was named as the first Guy F. Atkinson Professor, a position he has held for almost 20 years. In December Archer plans to retire and do some writing. He also plans to travel — "just enough to get it out of my system" — perhaps returning to Italy where he went in 1982 as a Fulbright Scholar.

What he will miss most when he leaves Willamette are the students. "I think that's what I like best," he said, "interacting with the students and watching them progress."

Robert C. Art, professor of law, traveled to Bulgaria in 1995 on a Fulbright Grant to teach and do research at the University of Sofia. His time in Bulgaria began with a 12-hour wait at a police station while the internal passport Bulgaria requires was processed.

"It's a poor country in the European sense," he said. "People have a place to live, but there is very little disposable income. Things are quite expensive and even a dean at the university might have trouble scraping by on his $80 a month salary."

There is a great deal of corruption, Art added, and to the extent that private enterprise has sprung up, it's primarily the same people in power as before, former party members. "The state safety net which had been in power under the Communists is dismantling," he said. "There is no longer a right to a job and many have been laid off. And there are no 'volunteer' work parties to clean up the cities."

The young, Art said, see Communism as the failed past, but the older people tend to believe that life was more equal under Communism. There is a vast disparity in thought.

Although Art didn't find Bulgaria an attractive place to live, he was impressed with the students he taught. "The young people have a lot of talent," he said, "and that is Bulgaria's hope. Still, those bright young people are trying to leave the country to escape what they see as bad prospects."

REQUESTED MATCHING GIFTS

Many individuals are eligible to have their gifts to Willamette matched by an employer or a spouse's employer. The University deeply appreciates the additional support, which increases the impact of individual gifts while counting toward a membership in the giving societies. The date on which a matching gift is granted may not coincide with Willamette University's fiscal year. This is a listing of donors who requested during 1995-96 that their gifts be matched; donors for whom matching funds were received during the fiscal year are denoted with a * else, where throughout the Annual Report.

When Susan L. Smith decided to apply for a Fulbright Grant, she chose Australia because of her interest in environmental criminal laws. "Australia had some interesting reforms in their laws relating to environmental crime," she said. "Theirs are much more stringent than ours in a couple of respects and I wanted a chance to research the effectiveness of those laws."

Smith was hosted at the University of Sydney where she taught environmental law in a master's program. She published two articles which arose from those lectures, and lectured throughout Australia on American environmental law.

The more lasting side effect of that time in Australia on her career was her introduction to the work of her host professor at Sydney, Ben Boer, Corrs Chambers Professor of Environmental Law, who is also affiliated with the World Conservation Union, an international environmental organization committed to fostering sustainable development.

"He got me interested in that concept," she said, "and the international implementation of sustainable development. I started to look at U.S. law and recognize how far behind the U.S. is and how far behind we are in understanding the relationship between the environment and economy."

Smith has become involved internationally in the area of sustainable development, and in May she attended a conference on sustainable development sponsored by the Dutch government. She also plans to do some follow-up work for the Dutch government which will facilitate the international exchange of information.

It will depend on the efforts of scholars and policy makers to help implement national laws for sustainable development, Smith said, adding, "The last two years have been very unproductive. Our efforts nationally have been to protect the laws we have now that are working well. I don't think that will be true in the long term; Americans are committed to the environment and do want stronger, not weaker, environmental protection laws."

David W. McCreery, professor of religion, was in Jordan when Israeli prime minister Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated and during the time that Israel was plagued with suicide bombings. It was, he said, a rare opportunity to witness history being made.

"There was a lot of ambivalence in Jordan about the assassination," McCreery said. "Up until just a few years ago, Rabin had a reputation among Arabs of being very hawkish; he had been a pretty brutal enemy. On the other hand, there was a genuine feeling of sorrow."

McCreery was in Jordan during the 1995-96 academic year on a Fulbright Grant which allowed him to continue work at the excavation at Tell Nimrin where he has worked for a number of years and to analyze and publish the data he has collected there. Tell Nimrin is located in the Jordan Valley, just north of the Dead Sea and about six kilometers from the Jordan River. "It was like going home," McCreery said. "We already had friends there — friends of more than 20 years."

Tell Nimrin was a large settlement and was continuously inhabited for four millennia, except for a period of 500 years when the site appears to have been abandoned in the Late Bronze/Early Iron Ages. The site has been excavated since 1989 by a team headed jointly by McCreery, James Flanagan, a professor from Case Western Reserve University, and Khair Yassine, University of Jordan.

When he left Jordan this year, McCreery was praised by the Jordan Times for carrying out a volunteer salvage operation at Bab Edh-Dhra, an Early Bronze Age cemetery. Illegal excavations and looting of the site have been an ongoing problem for more than 70 years and McCreery, alarmed by evidence of recent looting and the opening of 39 new shaft tombs in a previously unexplored area, requested and was granted permission from the Department of Antiquities to conduct a four-day emergency salvage project to map the site, document what had been left behind in the tombs and collect representative pottery, wood and bone samples. The samples he brought back are being studied at the Yarmouk University Institute of Archaeology and Anthropology.

In the summer of 1993 Robert C. Dash, professor of politics, participated in a Fulbright program that was established to introduce about a dozen faculty from the U.S. to the structure of higher education in the Latin American countries of Ecuador, Chile, Uruguay and Colombia.

Dash has had an interest in Latin America for a long time and this wasn't his first visit to the area. "This is a part of the world that resonates with me more than any other place," he said. Someday, he adds, he would like to return to Chile or Ecuador.

Dash's Fulbright summer generated enough material of academic interest that two special issues of the journal Latin American Perspectives, of which Dash is associate editor, will be published. Nevertheless, one of Dash's most memorable lessons was more personal, and came after a disastrous trek into the Amazon jungle. "Our trek was to take about an hour," he said. "It ended up taking much longer. We walked through knee-deep mud, forged rivers in the pouring rain; it was something." Dash said that the group was to have been picked up by airplane that evening, but because of the weather they spent a night in the mission boarding school in a small village. "We ate boiled yucca plant, which tastes a lot like boiled cardboard, and some of the members of our party were bitten so badly by insects that they required a trip to the hospital."

Rather than seeing this as a negative experience, Dash said it was a sobering and humbling reminder of the differences between the American experience and the experience of others around the world. "We had gone to observe the people in this small village and I feel pretty sure they were watching and studying us just as closely," he said. "We anticipated we could just go into a hostile environment with little preparation, but we learned how ill-adapted we were."

In 1835 David Friedrich Strauss, a 19th century Swiss theologian, wrote a life of Jesus that suggested that the stories in the New Testament were myth. His views led to his dismissal as a tutor at the Protestant seminary at the university in Tübingen, Germany. In 1839 he was appointed to a position at the University of Zurich, a new university established in 1833 by the Canton of Zurich, but conservative Christians there established grassroots committees at every church and petitioned the government to withdraw the appointment. The government's refusal to dismiss Strauss set off a wave of political anger throughout the conservative community that included a public demonstration in which 14 demonstrators were killed. Strauss was dismissed and the liberal government that had appointed him collapsed.

The liberals were back in power in four years, but it took them a decade to make an appointment in theology in the spirit of Strauss. The theologian they chose was Alois Emanuel Biedermann, a Swiss who was deeply influenced by Strauss.

While in graduate school, Douglas R. McGaughey, associate professor of religion, became interested in Biedermann through the writings and biography of Strauss and wanted the opportunity to read more of Biedermann's writings. Biedermann is very influential in Swiss Protestant circles, McGaughey said, but is hardly known at all in the U.S. "Perhaps one of the most intriguing and controversial of Biedermann's notions," said McGaughey, "is his suggestion that we experience the eternal in consciousness (spirit) now, which is the key to human freedom over nature (matter), and his denial of personal immortality in a next life as irrelevant."

Only two of his books are available in North America. In order to read more of Biedermann's work, and thereby learn more about the religious theories of Strauss, McGaughey spent a year in Germany in 1992-93 for the purpose of research.

During that year, McGaughey was able to get through most of Biedermann's more than 60 publications, and has written an article in English on Biedermann which is under review.

William Smaldone's doctoral dissertation, completed in 1995, was on the German Socialist leader Rudolph Hilferding. When he decided to turn that dissertation into a book, he applied for a Fulbright Grant to complete his research in Germany. He received the grant and his book, Rudolph Hilferding: The Tragedy of a German Social Democrat, is now finished and at the publisher. Writing biographies is interesting, he said, because it gets the author into a number of different fields. In this case Smaldone was able to approach the life of Hilferding from several different directions — economic theory, social history and political history.

Smaldone said he had always been interested in the history of European labor movements and Hilferding was one of the most important people associated with those movements. "No one had written much about him," Smaldone said, "and yet his book on finance capital was one of the most important works in Marxist theory after Capital. He was one of Marxism's leading theorists." Smaldone added that Hilferding had been an important figure politically as well. "The Socialist Party reached its height in the 1920s and '30s," Smaldone said, "and was one of the greatest opponents of the Nazi Party in Germany. Hilferding was one of the primary political leaders of the party during those years."

Hilferding fled Germany in the 1930s and in 1940 the French arrested him and turned him over to the Gestapo. "It's a very tragic story," Smaldone said.

It was also a difficult story to write. The public record left by Hilferding was extensive, Smaldone said, but the private records were few and scattered. "It was hard to get at the personality of the man," he said. "I had to scrape around to find out about the man — the person."

When Todd P. Silverstein, associate professor of chemistry, went to Norway on a Fulbright Grant, one of the first differences he noticed in the labs was the international personnel. "There were Norwegians, Brits, Germans, Americans," he said. "It made for some very interesting interchanges."

In Europe he found more scientists doing research in other people's labs and a lot of Pan-European scientific exchange. "It's very different than in the U.S.," he said. "In Europe people tend to go off for a year, then come back to finish their Ph.D. in their own lab."

Silverstein said he learned that Norway was a fiercely independent country devoted to their culture. "The people would wear their national costume on independence day there," he said. "There was a patriotic fervor and connection to folk music that I think is stronger than here." He noted that their devotion to nationalism made them a strong country socially, but it also makes them suspicious of the outside world.

It was a very positive way to visit abroad, he said, and would encourage anyone to apply for a Fulbright Grant. "It was a well-run, well-organized program," he said, "and meetings were arranged with other Fulbright scholars and I enjoyed that."

Since she was a child, Maureen Callahan VanderMay, professor of law, had been interested in living abroad someday. In 1993 she was able to do that, and she was also able to pursue her legal research and scholarship thanks to a Fulbright Grant.

At the time she applied for the grant, she thought it would be good to go to Russia, or some other country of the former U.S.S.R., but constitutionalists, she found, go to India. "There are some interesting problems in India's constitution," she said. Although the constitution of India was modeled on the U.S. Constitution, there are a number of differences which are, she said, usually played out in the area of individual liberties.

It was the experience of a lifetime, VanderMay said, and both the beautiful and the ugly have stayed with her. She was able to complete her research and still see most parts of the country. A camel ride across the desert near the Pakistan border was one of the highlights of the trip. "It was right out of Lawrence of Arabia," she said. "There were brilliant colors of clothing against the white sand and sun during the day, and the deep red and pink of the sand dunes at sunset."

But not everything she saw was so beautiful. "Some of the horrifying things I saw will stay with me forever," she said, describing the condition of some of India's poorest citizens.

Ronald P. Loftus became interested in the culture and language of Japan in the 1960s. "I felt then that Japan was going to become a very important country," he said. "Also it was a challenging language to learn and had a society and culture that was very difficult to penetrate. It was very rewarding to me."

In the 1990-91 academic year, Loftus went to Japan as a Fulbright Scholar to do research at the University of Tokyo. He worked within a unique department within the university, the department of comparative cultures and literature, and participated in seminars held in that department. He also did a presentation near the end of his time at the university.

At that time Loftus was interested in studying women's autobiographies, so he participated in a reading group at Ochanomizu, a women's university, on contemporary feminist issues. A few times, when the group was reading works by Western women, he had the opportunity to present.

One of the highlights of his trip was the opportunity to work with the well-known Japanese professor Sukehiro Hirakawa, who was his advisor. "I still draw on what I learned during that time," he said. "Without the help from Fulbright, a sabbatical experience like that just wouldn't have been possible."

CENTER FOR DISPUTE RESOLUTION AFFILIATES

Center for Dispute Resolution (CDR) Affiliates are leaders in their fields and visionaries who support the work of conflict theorists. Affiliates keep the CDR program personnel informed about issues and new developments in dispute resolution practice and submit disputes as raw materials for academic discussion. Affiliates provide financial support to the CDR program and are included as principal guests at every CDR event. The CDR Affiliates program was founded in 1993.
