McConville Sworn-In as Putnam County Sheriff on New Year's Eve

By Abby Luby

Kevin McConville was officially sworn-in as the new Putnam County Sheriff Friday in front of Carmel's historic courthouse where about 70 people gathered.

Swearing in McConville was Putnam County Clerk Michael Bartolotti, who initially addressed the crowd. "It is a great day for all of us to gather here to usher in new leadership in the Putnam County Sheriff's Department so that they can keep us all safe," he said.

After the swearing in ceremony, McConville thanked his wife, Janice. "She is my rock and my foundation," he said, while also acknowledging his children and grandchildren who were present. Putnam County Executive MaryEllen Odell was also thanked by McConville for her support during his campaign.

"It's always a privilege to swear in a new official on these steps of the historic Carmel courthouse," said Odell. "And we are here today to swear in Kevin McConville as Putnam County Sheriff."

Odell went on to quote the late Senator Bob Dole for inspiring her and claiming Dole was integral in shaping the country. Among the many Dole quotes she shared was: "Always plan not just to win, but to win big. Yes, you may try and fail. But you will not fail to try."

Among those in attendance were six officers from the Sheriff's office and Putnam County Legislators Paul Jonke, Toni Addonizio, Ginny Nacerino, and Amy Sayegh. Also at the swearing in were Putnam District Attorney Bob Tendy and Tony Scannapieco, Republican Commissioner of the Putnam County Board of Elections.

Pat Madigan, Republican chair for the Town of Kent, remarked, "McConville won with such overwhelming support. It shows that Putnam County is looking for new leadership at the Sheriff's Department."

This was McConville's third time running for Sheriff on the Republican/Conservative line. He faced Democrat incumbent Sheriff Robert Langley. McConville won with 12,222 votes to Langley's 9,074 votes. McConville introduced his new command staff, which included Thomas Lindert, James Schepperly, Kevin Junjulas, Michael Knox, Captain Grossi and James Greenough.

McConville addressed the six Putnam Sheriff Department officers who attended the ceremony. "To the good people in the Sheriff's Department, we will learn from you on how to keep each and every person of Putnam County safe."

In his final statement to those gathered around the courthouse steps, McConville remarked, "You have no better friend than the Putnam County Sheriff's office. We will be front and center. On Saturday, January 1, we will begin a better future for law enforcement here in Putnam County. We will hit the ground running."

McConville said that he and his new team has an agenda. "You will see strong professionalism in the Sheriff's department as we get up to speed. As the new Putnam County Sheriff, I will ensure all of you a fair and balanced application of the law."

Schmitt Reflects on 14 Years of Service as Carmel Supervisor

By Abby Luby

If you ask former Carmel Supervisor Ken Schmitt what his future plans are, he will assure you he's not going far and that "the wheels are turning."

At 14 years, Schmitt holds the distinction of having the longest tenure ever held by Carmel's top elected official. Schmitt did not run again after losing the GOP primary to former police chief Michael Cazzari, who ran unopposed in November.

Schmitt said he has been committed to the Carmel and Mahopac communities for his entire life. Born and raised in Mahopac, he joined the Mahopac Fire Department when he was 16, worked for the New York Police Department as a young adult and then returned to become a sergeant with the Carmel Police Department for 26 years before running for town supervisor in 2007.

"Public service is what Kenny Schmitt is all about," Schmitt said of himself as he reflected on his long stint as supervisor. "I have a passion for it and I'm a hands-on guy. I've been out in the field a lot, getting in the trenches, operating machines. I get involved in everything."

As supervisor, he accomplished some milestones for Carmel. Among those was supporting the Carmel Police Department with federal and state funding. "One of the most important things you can do for law enforcement as a supervisor is provide the police with the resources they need to do their jobs," he said. "That includes the highest level of training and the latest equipment. It's what the department needed to protect the community and it's why we are ranked 23rd among the safest towns in the country for our size."

Most challenging for Schmitt was dealing with the COVID-19 pandemic. When the country shut down in March of 2020, Schmitt said his town board and town employees realized the enormity of the public health crisis and they took immediate action.

"I started meetings with the Putnam

Department of Health, participated in daily zoom calls and shared what we needed to do here with the town," he said. "It was very difficult dealing with the pandemic early on because it was evolving so quickly. We had to learn how to keep people safe while providing services to the residents."

Schmitt said they reduced the town workforce 50 percent and kept what they deemed essential workers. He said Councilman Frank Lombardi was key in helping coordinate new protocols while keeping the town running.

"It was a very tragic and sad time and probably the most difficult time of my tenure," Schmitt said. "We are still dealing with [COVID] now but we have the protocols in place such as testing our officers and having our staff wear masks."

One achievement Schmitt said he was extremely proud of was building the 9/11 memorial in Carmel to commemorate the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on four

Brewster High Career Skills Class Partners with Amazon Program

The Brewster High School Career Skills class is giving back to the community with Bear Essentials, a donation program to help community members in need. Collaborating with an Amazon donation service, the class receives boxes of goods every two to three months. Donations include everything from diapers and detergent to dehumidifiers and kitchen tools.

The program began when teacher and technology specialist Donna Schneider connected with a former classmate and Brewster High School graduate and learned about her Arizona school district's partnership with Amazon. The Career Skills class already had a connection with Amazon, as teacher Denise Galgano's son Teddy, a 2014 Brewster High School graduate, is Amazon's PCF Senior Operations Manager in Windsor, Connecticut. He was able to get Bear Essentials approved for the donation program within a couple of days.

Schneider, Galgano and teacher Sarah Barnes pick up donated items in a U-Haul and students help to unload, unpack boxes, and sort, organize and inventory the products in their very own stockroom at the high school.

"Our students are all gaining some warehouse experience," Galgano said.

Donated items go to those in need. Counselors, teachers or families can fill out a Google form requesting available items. Students then fulfill the orders and get them ready for pickup or delivery. When Bear Essentials opened up its donation form to the community, the service received 65 orders in just two days.

"It's really helpful for people in need," said Mason DellaValle, who was busy pulling orders with classmate Max Michinko. Mason's favorite job is to pack the food products.

"I like to get the school supplies that people request," said Michinko.

Donations also make their way to clothing kiosks that students have painted and refurbished themselves as well as charitable organizations that use the donated items as prizes for raffle baskets. Items are also incorporated into a "sunshine cart" that brings a little cheer to district staff members who may be having a bad day. Overflow donations go to Putnam CAP, WIC and the community food pantry.

"Our mission is to care for our den, one essential at a time, while teaching our students necessary job skills so that they can be employable when they leave us," Schneider said.

major American sites, including New York City's World Trade Center. Schmitt's hope is that future generations will acknowledge the countless innocent lives that were lost. "I took that on and we started the project in 2010 and completed it in 2012. We used artifacts from Ground Zero. I felt strongly that we needed something to remind people of that tragic day," Schmitt said.

Actively advocating to upgrade the infrastructure for Carmel's Water District #2 was always extremely important, said Schmitt. "We always have to make sure the infrastructure is capable of delivering quality water to residents and that means re-aligning and replacing water mains in the hamlet and upgrading to a micro filtration plant. It was also important to meet with the community to keep them informed."

Schmitt said the total cost to upgrade the water district would probably be around $35 to 40 million. "You have to pay attention to infrastructure needs because it could be costly if all of the upgrades have to be paid for at the same time. That's why we have a long-term improvement plan to deliver quality water at the tap," he said.

Taking the initiative to add an extra layer of security in town hall, four years ago Schmitt created a small, visible police force known as Special Police Officers (SPOs). "At the time there were people who didn't like government and we saw attacks and threats against government agencies. The SPOs are retired cops who are in the town hall lobby five days a week to protect the staff and the public," he explained.

Schmitt plans on being as helpful as possible in passing the torch to Cazzari. "I will be meeting with Mike to brief him and update him, show him all the files and discuss the ongoing projects," he said.

Exiting public life is unlikely for Schmitt. "The voters had a lot of trust and support in me and I had a great run and met so many wonderful people, some of whom became my lifelong friends. I'm not saying goodbye and although I'm leaving town hall, I might be back at some point, who knows?"

With his background in municipal government and law enforcement, Schmitt said he still had much to offer. "There's going to be another chapter after I leave here, but I can't discuss that part of my journey. But with my four decades of experience, it makes for a very attractive resume."

State Struggling to Contain COVID Surge as Hospitalizations Rise

By Martin Wilbur

Gov. Kathy Hochul has instituted additional steps in hopes of slowing the spread of COVID-19 fueled by the Omicron variant that continues to cause the state's hospitalizations to balloon.

With a statewide positivity rate of just over 23 percent on Sunday, Hochul is asking hospitals to begin tracking this week how many patients are being hospitalized for COVID-related symptoms, not just those who have tested positive for the virus and might have been admitted for other reasons.

This is on top of halting all non-essential elective surgeries at hospitals that have hospital bed availability at less than 10 percent. As of Sunday, there were 21 hospitals in the state that had dipped beneath that threshold; however, that was down from 32 a week earlier, Hochul said.

"We're not in a good place. I'll be really honest with you," Hochul said during her Monday briefing. "This is the winter surge we predicted. We know that particularly after families gathered Dec. 25 over that weekend, another weekend holiday we just completed with New Year's, there's a lot of human interaction. And what happens when humans gather? They spread the virus, and we fully anticipate on top of the surge that's already ongoing that there's going to be another wave that's coming as a result of these holidays."

While the number of hospitalizations is about half of what it was during the height of the initial wave in spring 2020, the 9,563 statewide number that was reported on Saturday has now surpassed last year's fall and early winter surge of 9,273 on Jan. 19, 2021.

That is of concern because available hospital beds in some areas of the state are disappearing. Hochul said facilities could be under greater pressure unless the outbreak begins to dissipate soon.

What has been encouraging is that for the number of cases the state has seen, which included more than 85,000 on Dec. 31 alone, the hospitalizations have thus far been relatively manageable, she said. Whether that's because of the state's high vaccination rate, a less virulent Omicron variant or a combination of both, it is a hopeful sign, the governor said.

"These numbers are rather shocking when you think about where we are, but as we have to remind everyone, this is not the first strain of COVID-19, it is not the Delta variant," Hochul said. "People are testing positive, which is a much higher rate, but the severity of the illness is far less than what we've seen before."

She once again urged all those haven't been vaccinated and are eligible to do so to arrange for their doses. For those who were fully vaccinated and it's at least six months since their last shot, it's time to get a booster, Hochul advised.

"We know what to do, but it's about getting vaccinated, boosted and wearing our mask," she said, "and again, people who are sick, please stay home."

Last Friday, the governor cited the state's statistics that New York's hospitalization rate is 30 per 100,000 for those who are unvaccinated but just 2.1 per 100,000 for the vaccinated population. She said that while plenty of vaccinated people have tested positive for COVID-19, the likelihood of serious illness, hospitalization or death is significantly diminished if inoculated.

"That is why this situation is 100 percent preventable," Hochul said.

Through Sunday, 95 percent of New Yorkers 18 years old and up had received at least one shot, with 83 percent having completed the series. For 12- to 17-year-olds, 76 percent have received one shot with 66 percent had two.

For children in the five- to 11-year-old category, 29 percent have received the first dose statewide.

Mask Mandate to Continue

On Dec. 31, Hochul announced that the statewide mask mandate for indoor public spaces will continue until at least Feb. 1.

The governor put forth a mask requirement effective Dec. 13, and it was initially scheduled to last through at least

Jan. 15.

Meanwhile, the state is now requiring that all SUNY and CUNY students receive their booster by Jan.15 to attend classes for the upcoming spring semester, Hochul said.

"We are putting on an additional requirement in order (for a student) to return to your college campuses," Hochul said. "You need to be boosted."

The state is also requiring all SUNY and CUNY faculty to be vaccinated for the upcoming semester as well.

St. Christopher's Names New Chief Executive Officer

The Board of Directors of St. Christopher's, Inc., a growing human services agency specializing in youth residential treatment and comprehensive care management services in New York, announced the appointment last week of Dr. Sarah Ruback as its chief executive officer.

She will assume her role as CEO this Wednesday, Jan. 5, upon the retirement of Dr. Donald Antonecchia, who led the agency as CEO for four years.

"Dr. Ruback brings to her new role as CEO a well-rounded background in youth residential treatment services, employee growth and advancement and new business development, expertise crucial to St.

Christopher's as we continue to expand our agency's human services offerings," said Larry Carbone, St. Christopher's chairman of the board.

Ruback joined St. Christopher's in 2016, where she has held positions of increasing scope and responsibility, currently serving as assistant executive director of residential services and intra-agency programming. In this role, she has been responsible for shaping and articulating the agency's strategic vision and providing leadership, management and services to more than 200 employees and residents in treatment.

She is also leading the Dobbs Ferry campus's transition into a therapeutic and healing arts center, where movement and dance, writing, visual arts, drama, music, gardening and other therapeutic techniques are being used to enhance the well-being of residents.

"St. Christopher's highly experienced and caring team is powered by purpose and that purpose is to help youth and families with special needs build better, stronger and more stable lives, and they deliver on that commitment every day," Ruback said. "They are the reason I am excited and honored to assume the leadership of St. Christopher's at this moment in time, when our trauma-informed care and services are needed more than ever, and our journey as a human services agency is evolving."

Ruback holds a doctorate in education from Fordham University and master's and bachelor's degrees in fine arts from Yale

Dr. Sarah Ruback will take over as chief executive officer of St. Christopher's on Wednesday, replacing Dr. Donald Antonecchia.

University's School of Drama and Illinois Wesleyan University, respectively.

St. Christopher's uses evidence-based, therapeutic approaches to help young women and men, 12 to 21 years old, pursue their studies, interests and passions, move beyond past traumas and move forward with their lives as happy, healthy and connected members of their communities. It is also a Health Homes Care Management Agency and helps families with children between the ages of 6 and 21, who receive benefits through Medicaid and have specific, serious and/or chronic health conditions, access the healthcare, mental health and social support services their children need to get well and stay healthy.

Board of Legislators Makes History as Borgia, Barr Named to Lead

The Westchester County Board of Legislators made history Monday night by electing women for its chair and vice chair positions to lead the 17-member body for the 2022-2023 legislative term.

Veteran Legislator Catherine Borgia (D-Ossining) is the new chair while lawmaker Nancy Barr (D-Rye Brook) will serve as vice chair.

Borgia is only the second woman to lead the board, following the late Lois Bronz, who served in that role 20 years ago.

She becomes chair after a long career in public service, including working in the state Assembly as a staffer for several years, serving on the Ossining Village Board and then serving two terms as supervisor of the Town of Ossining before being elected to the Board of Legislators in 2012.

"I am humbled by the support and confidence of my colleagues who elected me as chair of the Board of Legislators," Borgia said. "I look forward to working with the county executive, our new leadership team, the entire legislature and our partners in federal, state and local government to lead Westchester through this pandemic and on to better days. We will continue to provide the resources needed to help every resident of Westchester thrive."

Borgia served as chair of the board's

Government Operations Committee in 2012-2013 and then as the Democratic Majority Leader for the 2014-2015 and 2016-2017 terms. She championed historic legislation including the Immigrant Protection Act, Employee Earned Sick Leave, Safe Leave, the Fair Chance to Work Act, Co-op Disclosure and the Wage History Discrimination Law.

She also served as chair of the Budget and Appropriations Committee for the 2018-2019 and 2020-2021 terms. During that time, she worked with the administration and her colleagues to pass budgets that cut the county's property tax levy and rebuilt its reserve funds while investing in infrastructure and providing much-needed services for county residents, especially during a global pandemic.

Barr comes becomes vice chair after having served on the Blind Brook Board of Education for six years, including as president and vice president. Barr was first elected to the Board of Legislators for the 2018-2019 term.

Barr said she was honored to have been selected.

"We are fortunate to have a board comprised of many intelligent and dedicated individuals and I am looking forward to working with all of them to improve people's lives in Westchester County," she said. "I am especially excited worked diligently on environmental issues, including passage of a ban on expanded polystyrene food containers and advocating for the expansion of the county's compostable waste program. She has worked to protect county residents by introducing and passing the Wage Theft Law and backing the creation of the Advisory Board on People with Disabilities. She was instrumental in raising the age to purchase tobacco from 18 to 21 years old.

Barr has served as chair of the Law and Major Contracts and Environment and Health Committees, and represents the legislature on the Airport Advisory Board, Soil and Water Conservation Board and the Farmland Agriculture Board.

Following their election, Barr followed the swearing in of all 17 legislators. Those sworn in include new Legislators Erika Pierce (D-Katonah) in District 2; Jewel Williams Johnson (D-Sleepy Hollow) in District 8, and James Nolan (R-Bronxville) in District 15.

Legislator Christopher Johnson (D-Yonkers) will serve as majority leader. Legislator Jose Alvarado (D-Yonkers) will serve as majority whip and Legislator Margaret Cunzio (C-Mount Pleasant) will serve as minority leader. Legislator James Nolan will serve as minority whip.

to serve with Chairwoman Borgia, as she has been an exemplary role model for me over the last four years. I believe that together we will be strong advocates for a safer, stronger and more sustainable Westchester."

Police Blotter

Croton-on-Hudson Police Department

Dec. 22: A Cook Lane resident reported at 1:30 p.m. receiving a scam call from a male pretending to be her grandson stating he needed money after being involved in a car accident. The resident knew the person on the phone was not her grandson and hung up. No further issues were reported.

Dec. 25: A Whelan Avenue resident who had reported on Dec. 7 that items had gone missing from her home, reported at 11:15 a.m. that some Christmas gifts she had purchased have been taken. She did not know when or how that occurred. Patrols responded to make sure everything was secure and reported there was no sign of entry into the house and all appeared secure. The case report was completed; an investigation is continuing.

Kent Police Department

Dec. 25: Officers responded to a Cottage Road residence at 7:30 p.m. on a report that Yeferson Rivera Cruz, 18, of Patterson, was upstairs in his room with a knife. Officers gave commands for Rivera to exit his bedroom and were able to handcuff him without incident. Upon speaking with Cruz's girlfriend, police were advised that a dispute occurred between the two, escalating to Cruz pulling a knife both on his girlfriend, and her mother Carmel. Cruz was arrested and charged with two counts of second-degree menacing and two misdemeanor counts of endangering the welfare of a child. He was processed headquarters and arraigned in front of Judge Curtiss. Cruz was issued an appearance ticket to return at a later date.

North Castle Police Department

Dec. 23: A caller reported at 8:36 a.m. that a catalytic converter was apparently stolen from one of his vehicles sometime overnight on North Broadway. An officer responded and a report will follow.

Dec. 25: A call was received at the desk at 10:44 p.m. for what appeared to be a domestic dispute that occurred in the past. However, the caller was unable to elaborate on what occurred and kept stating "I don't know" when asked why she was calling. After several attempts, it was ascertained that there was an altercation that took place with her mother and she was outside the house on Bedford Banksville Road. She was advised to wait outside for the officer's arrival.

Dec. 26: A male caller reported at 4:41 p.m. that an Uber driver is stuck on his lawn on Valhalla Place. The driver called for a tow truck about an hour ago and it hadn't arrived. The caller requested an officer respond to assist. The responding officer requested Empire Towing take the call; the vehicle was removed.

Dec. 29: A complainant reported at 7:32 a.m. that the North Castle Highway Department is conducting millings removal from their yard before the previously agreed to 8 a.m. start time. The highway foreman on duty stated two truckloads of millings were removed for a separate contract, which is different from what the caller is referring to. The foreman also reported that the Town of North Castle is exempt from any noise ordinance. The complainant was advised.

Pleasantville Police Department

Dec. 31: Report of harassment at the Raw Cloud Smoke Shop at 5:40 p.m. Youngsters are causing a disturbance. The youths' guardians were called.

Jan. 1: Report of a fence knocked over by a truck on Skytop Drive at 11:44 a.m. The matter was civil in nature and a report was filed.

Jan. 1: The traffic light at Grant Street and the Saw Mill Parkway was reported to not be functioning at 10:19 p.m. due to a power outage. Westchester County and Con Edison was called. The street was blocked off with road cones and the traffic signal was fixed.

Jan. 2: A call was received at 9:45 a.m. about road cones remaining on Grant Street after the traffic light was fixed. The cones were removed.

Yorktown Police Department

Dec. 24: Wilmer Macas, 22, of Danbury, Conn. was charged with driving while intoxicated and given several traffic infractions after an officer located a vehicle at 6:16 a.m. that was parked on Route 35 halfway in the lane of travel and halfway on the shoulder. Following an investigation, it was alleged Macas was operating a vehicle while intoxicated by alcohol and driving without a license. He is due in Yorktown Town Court on Jan. 6.

Dec. 25: Seon Tim, 45, of Brooklyn, was charged at 2:24 a.m. with driving while intoxicated, unlawful possession of cannabis and other violations following a report of an erratic operator. An officer located the vehicle on Route 132. An investigation also revealed Tim was driving with a revoked license and the vehicle was unregistered and uninsured.

Peekskill Man Pleads Guilty to Stalking Multiple Victims

By Rick Pezzullo

A Peekskill man could face up to five years in prison after pleading guilty last week in White Plains federal court to stalking multiple victims between October 2019 and August 2020.

David Kaufman, 27, is scheduled to be sentenced before U.S. District Judge Nelson Román on Mar. 16.

According to Damian Williams, the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, Kaufman self-identifies as a member of the "Incels," or the "Involuntary Celibate," which refers to a group of individuals, typically heterosexual, white males, who adhere to a violent and misogynist ideology of male supremacy. Incels believe they are entitled to sex with women and to women's bodies, and they blame women for refusing to have sex with them, authorities stated.

Incels have an active online community, and over the last seven years it has also committed acts of violence against women around the world, including in the United States.

"As he admitted in court, David Kaufman is an adherent of the Incels who stalked and terrorized two victims, not only harassing them by impersonating them online, but also graphically threatening to murder them," Williams said. "Thanks to the FBI, the NYPD, the state police and other law enforcement partners, Kaufman is in custody and awaiting sentencing for his admitted crime."

Kaufman's "overt hatred of women and sickening threats to harm potential victims" caught the attention of the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Force in New York, said FBI

Assistant Director Michael J. Driscoll.

"We know acts of violence among those in the Incel community have increased in recent years," he said. As Kaufman's guilty plea brings this topic closer to the forefront, we want the public to know the law enforcement community is aware of the threat and working together to confront it."

According to the indictment, beginning around October 2019, Kaufman sent two victims, among others, violent and threatening messages using various social media accounts. In those messages, Kaufman self-identified as an Incel and expressed his hatred of women.

Kaufman, who also went by the names "David Khalifa," "John Marray" and "Big Man," also created social media accounts using the first and last names of the two victims and impersonated them online.

In the summer of 2020, law enforcement officers approached Kaufman and told him to stop harassing the victims. On about July 14, 2020, an order of protection was issued in Westchester County ordering Kaufman to, among other things, refrain from communication or any other contact with the victims.

Notwithstanding the order of protection and warnings by law enforcement, Kaufman continued to send harassing and threatening messages to the victims through August 2020, the U.S. Attorney's office stated. On or about Aug. 16, 2020, Kaufman posted a picture of himself licking a photograph of one of the victims.

Kaufman also conducted online surveillance of the victim's residence and researched how to illegally purchase a gun and assemble a semi-automatic rifle.

Yorktown Officials Join Harckham in Calling for FDR Park COVID Testing

By Rick Pezzullo

Yorktown officials have written to Gov. Kathy Hochul asking to open a mobile testing site in FDR State Park to help fight the latest spike in COVID-19 cases that have ravaged the state.

Hochul has announced that the state plans to open more testing sites to combat the surge. Of the 18 new sites that the governor disclosed Friday and Monday, two are located what has been considered the seven-county Mid Hudson region – at the Grace Baptist Church in Mount Vernon and at Patriot Hills Golf Club in Stony Point, Orange County.

"As we continue to fight this pandemic, we need to utilize all of the resources and tools available to us, and we know that testing is a crucial component in stopping the spread," said state Sen. Peter Harckham (D-Lewisboro), who on Dec. 26 made the initial request to Hochul.

"I urge the governor to promptly open a site in the Hudson Valley region and recommend utilizing FDR State Park as a testing site. It's large enough to easily accommodate a drive-thru testing site, and it's easily accessible off the Taconic State Parkway and Route 202."

Yorktown officials made the same request, noting the state used FDR State Park as an emergency staging ground after Tropical Storm Isaias.

"Our local healthcare system and regional hospitals are under extreme stress as testing demand remains at an all-time high," Yorktown Town Board members wrote in their letter. "Patients are traveling from as far as Long Island in a desperate attempt to get a test at our local urgent care centers. The strain has caused our local police department to assist with crowd control at times."

As of Dec. 29, there were 6,961 confirmed cases of COVID-19 in Yorktown, with 1,252 active cases, according to the Westchester County COVID-19 dashboard.

Two vaccine clinics in Yorktown are slated to be held this week where both the Moderna and Pfizer vaccines will be available. One clinic will take place on Tuesday, Jan. 4 from 1 to 4 p.m. at John C. Hart Library in Shrub Oak. The second clinic is scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 6 from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. at the Albert Capellini Community Center in Yorktown Heights.

Putting on a Mask is a Small Sacrifice That Everyone Can Make

I like to patronize local businesses. Small businesses are the heart and soul of every community.

So, when I shopped at three local Putnam Valley businesses recently, I was appalled to see not only customers but staff not wearing a mask, or wearing the mask below their nose or on their chin, which is basically not wearing a mask at all.

I realize it is hard to enforce the law on customers, but you can enforce it with your own staff. Whether you like our governor or not, it is a law to wear a mask inside. A law that was put in place to save lives, not suppress our freedom. As a good citizen we do not pick and choose which laws we want to follow. Yes, maybe try to change laws if we disagree, but not ignore them. Therefore, I will not shop at any local business that does not try to keep our community safe.

There is an expression, "Freedom ain't free." This expression is used to show how grateful we as Americans are to our brave men and women in the military who have sacrificed during a time of crisis to save our lives and protect our freedom. Well, with millions of Americans dead and infected with this virus aren't we in a time of crisis? Can't we ask people to sacrifice and wear a mask to protect our freedom to live a healthy life? We are all sick of COVID-19, masks, vaccines and hearing about this damn virus. Even though we are done with COVID, COVID is not done with us.

I think about the analogy of not wearing a mask to smoking inside an establishment. Smoke has volatile chemicals that can cause harm to your body. Smoking inside can cause harm to someone else's body. If the smoker wants to cause harm to his own body that is his right. But he does not have the right to harm other people's health.

By not wearing a mask inside that is basically what you are doing. People have health issues and this virus could cause them to become severely ill or die. People who are infected with COVID can be asymptomatic days before they know they have it. People who are infected with COVID can release particles and droplets of respiratory fluids that contain the virus when they exhale, breathe, speak, sing, cough or sneeze.

Transmission of the infected droplets can occur in distances of more than six feet. These particles from an infected person can linger in the air in a room for hours. If we do not start taking precautions, this virus will continue to mutate and eventually evade our current vaccines.

I have heard people say, "if you get COVID from the Omicron variant it won't make you too ill, especially if you are vaccinated and boosted." No one knows the long-term effects from this virus. Think about chicken pox and shingles, polio and post-polio syndrome. These diseases can remain dormant in your body for years then come back with a vengeance.

I know the good people of Putnam Valley and Putnam County care deeply about one another. I see it in our first responders, the brave, wonderful law enforcement officers, the town boards, the folks who volunteer their time at our fire and ambulance departments, food pantry and the neighbors who look out for one another every day.

So please, as a good citizen, caring person and a fellow American, let's protect each other. Please do the right thing. Wear a good tight-fitting mask that covers your nose and mouth, and hopefully get vaccinated and boosted. Thank you.

Have a happy, healthy New Year. God Bless.

Astorino Should Re-think Mask Mandate Opposition After COVID Positive

I wish former Westchester County executive Rob Astorino a total and quick recovery from his COVID-19 diagnosis. I hope that Mr. Astorino will re-think his public opposition to mandatory mask mandates that would curb a spike in COVID-19 cases and his opposition to vaccine mandates.

Mr. Astorino is sure to recover from COVID, thanks in part to his contacts and stature as a former county executive. Not everyone is as lucky as he is. There are many New Yorkers who aren't wearing masks inside stores, supermarkets and at work. Mr. Astorino's public comments might make some people think that it's OK to be careless and irresponsible. By not wearing masks not only are Astorino admirers jeopardizing their own health but they are also increasing the odds of infecting others.

Over 800,000 Americans have already died from COVID. And many more are expected to die in the coming weeks and months – thanks, in part, to irresponsible statements from people like Rob Astorino.

Mythical Unicorn or Real-Life Trojan Horse

Developers are having the hardest time selling the average Yorktowneer (non-politician) that irreversibly changing their community is in their own and children's best interest. Developers speak volumes about their efforts increasing Yorktown's tax base but neglect to mention all the hidden long-term financial and quality-of-life costs that will inevitably be paid by our town's residents. Not a single word regarding how many millions they'll rake in for themselves, complements of our politicians granting generous zoning concessions and tax breaks.

Business-as-usual "adopt-a-developer programs" don't sound to be quite fair to taxpayers.

In last week's article on Love Holds Life Children's Cancer Foundation's donations to families, it was incorrectly reported that Amanda Dumont's daughter Zoe, one of the families helped by the nonprofit, had battled cancer. Dumont received $1,000 as part of an effort to help families in need. The Examiner regrets the error.

Local Bird Population Have a New Addiction

A gang of crows as tightly organized as a motorcycle crew flies onto the Pleasantville High School track every morning before school, their feathers blacker than the blackest coal, crowding the blue sky and looking like an invading army of winged monkeys from "The Wizard of Oz."

It's time for breakfast. There's a lot to eat.

Students from the middle and high schools seem to have left lying around on the running track and lacrosse and soccer fields empty, open bags of Doritos Cool Ranch chips, Lay's Potato Chips, Keebler Thin Stripes Minis, Chips Ahoy, Nilla Wafers, Kool-Aid Jammers pouches, Go-GURT strips, Air Heads candy, plastic food wrap, plastic bags, plastic spoons, forks and yogurt cups, pint milk containers, soda cans, granola bars, lollipop sticks, used face masks, pencils in various states of decay, and on one occasion, a paper clip.

By Michael Gold

I have also seen a few remnants of orange peels, apples and tomatoes.

The kids tend to deposit plastic water bottles on the ground, many of them not even consumed. I collected 14 water bottles on a mid-December morning. All the plastic from the bottles is equivalent to 56 ounces of oil (four ounces per bottle).

All the debris signifies the triumph of the men and women who have worked so many long hours to market these brand names. They have broken through all that advertising clutter and made a deep impression on youngsters' minds. Their products are good enough to leave as litter on the ground, where the crows and local squirrels can get at them.

The crows, whose black eyes gleam against the light of the sun, walk slowly and carefully, with their heads down on the synthetic grass and rubber surface track, like the people you see at the beach with their metal detectors, looking for gold and other valuables left behind by tourists.

The birds peck at bits of chips, cookies and candy left in random trails on the ground. I have also seen one or two jump on top of the garbage cans set out in the area and stick their heads inside. On occasion, they pull out cardboard lunch trays and other garbage and toss the stuff on the ground with their beaks, so the rest of their little crowd can eat the leftovers of some kid's lunch.

I once saw a crow dig its beak into a chocolate milk container on the track. I saw another lick a piece of hard candy. They've become addicted to sugar and salt, like us humans.

The crows scatter when a human approaches, taking refuge on the bleachers. Some sit on the top bar of the back row. Others clatter against the metal surface of the stands with their claws as they walk. Many of them fly to the roof of the middle school and wait for the intruder to pass them by. They squawk at each other like cranky grandfathers.

Sometimes a seagull will fly in, desperate for a bite to eat. But he always looks out of place among the sea of black birds, and he usually leaves quickly.

The squirrels don't like to miss out either. They dive into the garbage cans, too. I recently saw a grey squirrel take command of a giant chunk of blueberry muffin on the track. He only left his prize with the approach of a walker doing laps. After his brief escape, he hopped back to the meal and chipped away at the mound with hyper-nervous speed.

I've gotten friendly with the middle school maintenance man, who arrives before school to pick up the litter with a mechanical claw. We say hello to each other. He brings me plastic bottles sometimes, so I can recycle them properly.

Recently, I saw him picking up small pieces of junk on the track and putting them in his bucket. I asked him if it was food. I was briefly worried he would be depriving the crows and squirrels of their meal.

No, he said, it's glass. I took a closer look and saw the fragments on the ground shining in the low morning sun.

The maintenance man was worried a kid might cut his foot on the shards of glass. It was the middle of December, and this seemed like a remote possibility. Who would walk barefoot on the freezing running track this time of year? But, the maintenance man, looking out for the kids as carefully as any parent would, wanted to make sure it never happened.

As the students walk onto the grounds to start the school day, the crows know it's time to leave. They fly up into the nearby trees, high above the school buildings and sit on the bare, cold branches, waiting for their next chance to eat.

Construction of Health Care Facilities Today Requires Highest Standards

By David Campbell

In this COVID-19 era where risk is everywhere, yet unseen and often unknown, construction crews have an even greater responsibility to their clients.

As the National Institutes of Health reported, "The pandemic has had a dramatic impact on the construction and renovation of healthcare facilities, and likely will lead to increased use of engineering controls, designs, and planning to mitigate risk of exposures."

Indeed, innovative engineering, prudent planning, elite-level materials and the highest quality workmanship are now driving the construction industry in new ways. Health care, hospital, laboratory and pharmaceutical organizations – looked to for life-saving care and solutions on levels rarely seen before – require elevated safeguards to protect their patients, staff, researchers and others.

Therefore, construction crews working at health care or research centers must strategically incorporate the highest standards of health, safety and cleanliness into their regimens.

LeChase Construction Services is boldly transforming to do just that. It has created an Infection Control Risk Assessment (ICRA) Training Center at its New York metro office in Armonk. The center, which provides specialized approaches to contain pathogens, contaminants, dust and noise, is believed to be one of the first in the country developed by a private company.

The center will be used to train LeChase employees and subcontractors in the specialized skills needed to safely perform construction and renovations, while protecting health care providers and scientists working nearby in settings.

For example, workers will learn to use temporary hard barriers to contain construction work areas, high-efficiency particulate air (HEPA) filters to remove dust and other contaminants, and techniques for personal protection and cleaning. The barrier walls, made of plastic and aluminum and filled with insulation, reduce sounds by 50 percent, enough to deaden loud, sharp noises.

HEPA filtration removes a very high percentage of particulates and creates negative air pressure that draws air into the enclosed construction area, rather than allowing potentially contaminant- or dust-laden air to escape into the occupied areas of a hospital or laboratory.

Trainees also will learn procedures to clean themselves of dust with HEPA-filtered vacuums before leaving an enclosed construction area, and use sticky mats to safely secure dust and particulate matter from boots.

LeChase has already successfully applied these systems and techniques at several health care centers in the New York metropolitan area, and will continue to explore approaches to provide even safer work environments for its clients and staff. Responsible contractors, and the construction industry as a whole, must prioritize such safeguards when helping organizations enhance and expand their facilities.

David Campbell is vice president at LeChase Construction Services. Learn more at LeChase.com. For a video that showcases the LeChase ICRA Training Center, visit <https://player.vimeo.com/video/654658948>.

New Organization Helps to Ease the Plight of New Refugees in W'chester

By Martin Wilbur

With a constant need to resettle refugees from around the globe, members of four Westchester communities have formed a new organization to help make newcomers' transition to living in the United States a little easier.

Ossining for Refugees, a nonprofit established in October, is on the verge of helping to resettle its first federally-sponsored evacuee, an Afghan woman who fled the Taliban in August and whose cousin and family live in town.

A wide range of volunteers from Croton-on-Hudson, Ossining, Briarcliff Manor and Pleasantville, including houses of worship and their congregations and more than 20 community organizations, helped Ossining for Refugees get off the ground. In the short amount of time since the onset of the crisis in Afghanistan, enough volunteers have lent their time and efforts and raised enough money to have a furnished apartment ready for her to move into, arranged for online English classes and lined up other services.

While volunteers from the four communities have been pouring time, energy and resources into the effort, Ossining, one of the most diverse and relatively affordable places in northern Westchester, has become the home base for the organization. It also helps that the Mount Kisco-based Neighbors Link, which helps integrate immigrants into the community, and Open Door Family Medical Centers each have a location in Ossining, making the community the logical Ossining Supervisor Dana Levenberg is one of the co-founders of Ossining for Refugees, a new non-profit that will be welcoming its first refugee to Westchester. The organization is helping to integrate refugees into society by raising money for housing, English classes, health care and other needs to make the transition to America easier.

choice for the organization to include it in its name.

"We're more than ready," said Dana Levenberg, Ossining's town supervisor and one of the co-founders of Ossining for Refugees along with Ted Buerger, Eric Thielking and Sofia Bator, herself an Afghan immigrant who lived in Ossining. "We want her to come to Ossining so all can embrace her."

The incoming refugee, who is only being called F to protect her identity, has been having her case processed by federal authorities as she and thousands of others from Afghanistan have been waiting at a U.S. Army refugee center in New Jersey, said Peter Russell, a Pleasantville resident and one of the key participants of the group.

But for those wanting to make life easier for a new arrival and properly executing the effort, it takes hard work, training and covering a multitude of issues such as housing, jobs, health care, transportation, English classes, social orientation and other tasks.

Russell said Ossining for Refugees gelled very quickly this fall, with about a dozen volunteer-staffed teams that concentrated on each of those categories.

There is an apartment ready for F to move into and a welcome guide that has been translated into her native Dari. The goal is to help the refugees to integrate into American society within six to 12 months, Russell said. That includes making sure they learn English if they don't already know the language, discovering their skills and interests and seeing if they are entitled to any social services.

Since shortly after arriving at the refugee center, F has been taking an online English course through Westchester Community College, which members of Ossining for Refugees assisted in her enrollment.

"A lot of importance is attached to helping the residents get up to speed as fast as possible with the English language because that's the gateway to so many other things," Russell said.

The volunteers also received guidance from the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society (HIAS) and Catholic Charities, among other organizations, because there are strict requirements for community-based organizations to follow to help settle refugees such as culturally-appropriate food, said Cathy Dreilinger, part of Ossining for Refugees.

It also received mentorship from members of Hearts & Homes for Refugees, one of the leading community sponsorship organizations in Westchester.

"There are very strict rules and in the case of this particular evacuee, we weren't supposed to make her the face of the story," Dreilinger said. "The face(s) of the story really is the community stepping up in such numbers so quickly and being so willing to help and create this organization."

Bator, who contacted the offices of Greenburgh Supervisor Paul Feiner, Rep. Mondaire Jones and U.S. Sen. Chuck Schumer, said she is gratified that the community has stepped forward and is ready to help refugees.

"I am amazed by how quickly volunteers offered to help and by their personal concern for these evacuees. It is a special community," Bator said.

Levenberg said one of the overriding goals is to make sure the refugees are provided the proper tools so they can become self-sufficient as quickly as possible.

Briarcliff Synagogue Joins to Help Local Refugee Resettlement Efforts

By Martin Wilbur

The images of thousands of Afghan citizens trying to flee their country last August was heartbreaking for many to watch.

But the developments halfway around the world spurred congregants at Congregation Sons of Israel (CSI) in Briarcliff Manor to help out anyway they could.

After talking to a synagogue member who had been involved in refugee resettlement during the Syrian crisis and the congregation's rabbi, Steven Kane, Abbe Marcus and Julie Peskoe launched the CSI Refugee Resettlement Committee.

Working with other community groups, including Ossining for Refugees, they have joined a growing number of grassroots efforts around Westchester to help families who might otherwise have difficulty transitioning to life in America.

"Especially in the Jewish community and the CSI community, we are keenly aware that our grandparents or great-grandparents and the struggles and challenges they had coming here," Marcus said of the motivation. "So, we are driven by our values and principles and our collective narrative."

During the fall there had been a Zoom meeting with other community organizations that were also preparing their efforts. The committee's kickoff meeting was Nov. 21 with each person in attendance sharing their family's immigration story, Peskoe said.

Since then, the Refugee Resettlement Committee created eight smaller committees each taking on a separate task, such as housing, employment, education, transportation, community orientation, finance and to help with furnishings, clothing and personal care needs, she said.

The hope is that the committee can help one Afghan refugee family in the first part of 2022. With an estimated 54,000 refugees who have fled, many are or will be in need of community assistance, Peskoe said.

"Some of them, as we understand it, some don't need the help of community," Peskoe explained. "They have family members of friends here and have the ability to get themselves jobs and are independent. But there are a significant number that do need a community sponsorship model."

Marcus said that their committee's relationship with the other community organizations has been key in instituting best practices in addition to receiving invaluable mentoring. She said the biggest challenge has been housing given the cost of finding a suitable residence.

However, the Refugee Resettlement Committee is off to a good start in obtaining initial funding. An anonymous donor from the congregation pledged a $10,000 matching donation, which has been accomplished, so that money is in place. Plus, community members who aren't part of the congregation want to help, Marcus said.

"We are happy to accept donations from outside the community and for them to volunteer," Peskoe said.

Marcus explained that the long-range plan is to have a consistent effort so whenever the need arises to help a family, the CSI Refugee Resettlement Committee can be counted on.

"Our long-term goal is that we create a really strong structure and that we can continue on and continue to help families in the future, and we know there will be many, many more Afghan families that are going to need our support," she said.

For more information on the committee's efforts, visit <https://www.csibriarcliff.org/resettlement>.

to make sure that you're safe, that you're happy, that you're healthy and we know that that's what makes our community stronger," she said.

But the efforts do not come cheaply. To help settle the average family in a Westchester community costs about $20,000 to $30,000, Russell said. Costs can vary based on the size of the family. The website, www.ossiningforrefugees.org, includes a tab to donate, and volunteers are always needed.

Toward that end, Ossining for Refugees has partnered with Neighbors Link and Films on Purpose, a Pleasantville-based community organization that periodically holds film screenings related to social issues, to tentatively schedule its first official fundraising event on Feb. 17. The time and location have yet to be determined.

Russell said he sees the organization as an ongoing commitment and to continue even after most of the Afghan refugees have been settled. There are large groups of refugees from Congo, Myanmar, Ukraine, Venezuela and Syria.

"It is not for us to say where the next refugees will come from," he said. "We will be happy to receive whoever they are."

Levenberg said it is fitting that Ossining and several of its neighboring municipalities partner to try to make a difference for today's immigrants.

"Ossining is a community that was built on the backs of immigrants and continues to be a place that welcomes our immigrant communities and where people can make it in America and they feel that they're welcome and they feel they are supported," Levenberg said.

Why the Holidays Can Be the Best Time to Be a Homeowner

Another holiday season, another checklist of planned activities around the home.

As a homeowner, that magic time between Thanksgiving and New Year's Day has always been my favorite time of year, each and every year. Others may prefer spring when the garden is awakening and we may be spending most of our time outside, or mid- or late summer when the flower and vegetable gardens are in full bloom, or perhaps the fall when the rich colors of nature can take our breath away.

But for me, I have always been most grateful for my home and the pleasures it affords in the dead of winter. When I owned a single-family home, as opposed to a condo, that was always the time when, finally, that stubborn groud weed that plagued my property was in remission for the season, the leaves had been raked and composted and my time was suddenly expanded exponentially for other duties inside the house.

Those duties might have included anything from refinishing that horrible floor in a guest room that had been hidden by a rug for many years to tiny chores like gluing on the knob to an antique chest that fell off 10 or 12 years earlier to disguising all those furniture scratches that have accumulated over time with Old English Scratch Cover. (When my wife and I owned an antiques shop early in our marriage, Old English was the single most important defense mechanism in our bag of tricks to make our furniture inventory look twice as good as when we bought it at auction, short of refinishing.)

By Bill Primavera

In recent years, our holiday time has not included tackling major projects in the extra time that had been gifted us by those Fridays off after Thanksgiving or around Christmas and New Year's because we are fortunate enough now to live in a maintenance-free home. Or rather, if any maintenance is needed, someone else does it.

But whether in a single-family home or condo building, the holiday season has always been the time when our homes never looked cleaner or better with decorations, ready to receive guests.

For many years, I wrote about my journey as a homeowner planning to sell my home and all the preparations that went into it. It gave me a lot of material to write about. Now comfortably ensconced in a place that is as settled in as can be imagined, I can only relate my homeowner history, or write about others' experiences.

My wife and I are at the stage in life where we no longer anticipate that next big home project, and thankfully so. Now, all of our time at home can be spent enjoying the fruits of many years of joyful labor and living.

So especially this season, we really enjoyed utilizing our extra holiday time to appreciate our home and the many memories it holds.

Promoting Equality and Justice Through the Art of Photography

By Martin Wilbur

A new Yorktown-based education and photography exhibit organization dedicated to advancing peace, equality and justice will have its debut show starting later this week.

The Capa Space will open on Friday featuring an exhibit of images by well-known photographer William Abranowicz. The show, entitled "This Far and No Further," is a collection of contemporary pictures from Abranowicz's trip in 2018 to ordinary places in the South that helped shape the civil rights movement.

Founder Elise Graham said with nearly everyone today carrying a camera when they leave home and able to post picture for others to see, it's not just world-renowned photographers capturing iconic images that can have an impact in the 21st century.

"Our mission is to kind of inspire the community to get involved in photography and see it as a powerful tool for their own engagement with social action and advancing peace and equality and social justice, feelings about the community, how they can help and how photography can do that," Graham said.

The Capa Space recognizes Robert Capa, a highly acclaimed Hungarian-born photojournalist and considered the world's best war photographer during his time. He was killed covering the French-Indochina War in Vietnam in 1954. His brother, Cornell Capa, while less well-known, was a major photographer for Life magazine and established the International Center for Photography in New York. Cornell Capa also promoted his brother's work after his death.

The inspiration for Graham wasn't just that Robert Capa gave his life documenting some of the biggest military conflicts of his day, including the D-Day invasion at Normandy, but captured how war destroyed lives and property as well as the survivors who tried to overcome unimaginable adversity.

Graham decided to work toward launching an organization that embodied the spirit of the Capas after she discovered that Robert and Cornell are buried in the Quaker Meeting House Cemetery in the Amawalk section of Yorktown, although having no apparent connection to the area when Robert was alive.

After Robert Capa was killed, his family didn't know where to bury him. They eschewed an offer of a military burial at Arlington National Cemetery because he was a man of peace, Grahama said.

Although the brothers were Jewish, John Morris, co-founder and a member of the Quaker Meeting House in Purchase at the time, heard of Capa's story and suggested to his family that he be buried in a Quaker cemetery. There were no available plots in Purchase, but there was space at the cemetery in Yorktown.

When Capa's mother, brother and sister-in-law passed, they were also buried at the cemetery.

Photographer William Abranowicz will be the first exhibitor offered by The Capa Space, an education and photography group. The first show will be at the Bethany Arts Community in Ossining starting on Friday.

"When I discovered that, because I've lived in this town for over 30 years, I'm an artist myself, and there was never anything here for the community that was looking for that kind of thing," Graham said. "Lots of sports and lots of other kinds of things in Yorktown but no real cultural institution or place where like-minded people can kind of come together and see things and do things that they would enjoy and benefit from."

The Capa Space's first exhibit, which will run through Saturday, Jan. 29, will be at the Bethany Arts Community in Ossining. Moving forward, Graham said she would like to find a permanent home for The Capa Space closer to home.

"We want to find a space in Yorktown, but first we need money and we're just starting the process of fundraising, and that's going to be a big effort for us," Graham said. "We have a board, not a complete board, but we're working on a board and we do have other things planned."

The organization will also offer discussions, films and classes that support the artistic and documentary endeavors of the community.

The exhibit will be open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Bethany Arts Community is located at 40 Somerstown Rd. in Ossining.

After Indian Point

A community in economic and environmental transition as decommissioning begins

For nearly six decades, Buchanan residents lived with a nuclear power plant operating in their backyard. Indian Point, which generated approximately 25 percent of the Lower Hudson Valley and New York City's annual electricity consumption, powered off its last remaining nuclear reactor last April.

The decision, despite being four years in the making, was described as a dark day for the community. While environmental activists saw the plant's closure as the culmination of 50-plus years of mounting pressure, others viewed it as a short-sighted, even reckless decision.

Now, as Holtec — the New Jersey-based company that bought the plant from Entergy — oversees the decommissioning process, Buchanan, Cortlandt, and the surrounding area are left in a period of financial transition.

As the largest employer in Buchanan and Cortlandt, Indian Point not only provided 1,000 jobs at its peak but also gave millions in revenue to the local community.

Buchanan stands to lose 47 percent ($3.5 million) of its annual operating budget, while the Hendrick Hudson School District will lose $24 million annually. Cortlandt is estimated to lose $800,000, according to Town Supervisor Linda Puglisi. The Verplank Fire District is also estimated to lose $372,703, 64 percent of its annual budget.

"We had an agreement with Entergy that we will live here with the risk of a nuclear power plant in exchange for lower taxes," says Joseph Hochreiter, Superintendent of the Hendrick Hudson School District.

"One of the hardest things to acknowledge was that when the plant stopped making nuclear power, and therefore it wasn't as great of a risk, the other end of the deal had to go with it."

Until last year, Indian Point provided 30 percent of the school district's total annual budget. Hochreiter says the district has had to raise its taxes and reduce expenses to counteract the financial impact Indian Point's closure will have on the district.

"When the school district looks at reducing expenses, it's usually two things: you reduce programs, meaning opportunities for kids, or you reduce the number of people you staff," Hochreiter says. "Those are really emotional and tough conversations to have."

Starting this September, the district is reorganizing its elementary students, which will save anywhere between $1.5 and $2 million annually.

"A direct result of Indian Point closing is that we had to make some very significant and important changes to where students go to school so we could save money," Hochreiter says.

For eight years in a row, the district's average tax increase was 1.04 percent — rising less than the cost of living ...

Is Community Medicaid the Right Decision for You?

New Yorkers take pride in their ability to find a better way to accomplish something.

Wasting time or money is not just an inconvenience. Assets are finite, and if they are squandered, bad results usually follow.

When illness becomes a fact of life, our resourcefulness is tested in a variety of ways. Health care is a minefield of insurance obstacles, overburdened providers and poorly understood rules. Guiding an ill loved one through this process requires education first and patience second.

Nowhere is this more evident than the long-term health care system.

Long-term care refers to an individual's ongoing need for supervision due to an illness, injury or chronic condition. Feeling sick and following a treatment plan with antibiotics is not long-term care. Degenerative diseases such as dementia, Parkinson's, ALS and MS are illnesses that require long-term care.

Falls or injuries leading to loss of mobility also require long-term care. It may be essential for slow recoveries from heart attacks or cancer treatments to manage activities of daily living.

Though nursing homes provide necessary long-term care for those who are unable to remain at home, receiving care at home is the stated goal for many clients.

Supervision at home, in a long-term care context, means home health aides and caregivers providing physical support, feeding, dressing, bathing and other related assistance. Paying for supervision can involve private pay directly from the consumer, long-term care insurance payments or Community Medicaid. Medicare has limited short-term coverage for home health services.

The two most common approaches for paying for care is private pay and Community Medicaid. Privately paying for home health aides is an expensive proposition; costs can run north of $26 per hour.

Long-term care, as the name implies, can last for a long time. Illnesses with slow trajectories may take years to reach a critical juncture but still require regular paid supervision. Spending thousands of dollars each month on care that probably was not budgeted will put a financial strain on any family.

Community Medicaid has eligibility requirements plus an enrollment process with assessments and paperwork. Once approved, Medicaid will pay for home health aides for the approved hours assigned to the ill individual.

Medicaid also has a Consumer Directed program in which certain family members or other chosen friends and neighbors who agree to be caregivers can be paid by Medicaid. Consumer Directed has become increasingly important in the Hudson Valley. The need for home health aides has outpaced the supply of available workers in our area. Establishing even an informal caregiver network to provide some coverage could mean the difference between safely remaining in the home or not.

Some families can weather a crisis financially better than others.

Privately paying for long-term care is sometimes necessary before a proper plan is formulated. Once families realize that Medicaid can subsidize the cost of care at home then additional flexibility can be achieved.

Contact the professionals at Sloan & Feller to review long-term care options.

Nothing Like a Hearty Tavern Meal to Kick Off Dining in the New Year

There is nothing that brings out the true local color of a community than your friendly local pub or tavern. Comforting venues to sort out the past year and bring in the new.

Here are a few of my favorites in Westchester, some of whom have been filling those pints for decades and offer the best dining deals.

Dunne's Pub

Dunne's is a neighborhood treasure, an authentic Irish tavern with all the traditional Gaelic accoutrements intact.

New owner Declan Farrell, who also operates Vintage on Main Street in White Plains, has upgraded the premises but has taken great strains not to get caught up in the modernist mode. It is a friendly, home-style place with a good kitchen, dishing out generous servings of traditional Irish-American fare at prices that will leave some money in your wallet. Declan and his staff also know how to pour that pint of Guinness while keeping the crowd in spirited conversation.

Try kitchen favorites such as their fabulous corned beef Reuben sandwich, Plain Jane Burger served on a Kaiser roll, beer-battered fish 'n' chips, grilled Irish bangers and cheddar cheese meatloaf served with Irish beans and mashed potatoes.

Oktoberfest is celebrated the first Thursday of every month all year. Irish music sessions. Open seven days for lunch and dinner, along with Sunday brunch. Municipal parking is free in the evenings.

Dunne's Pub, 15 Shapham Place, White Plains. Info: 914-421-1451 or visit www.dunnespubandrestaurant.net.

Squire's of Briarcliff

Proprietor Kurt Knox has been serving patrons since 1967. No easy task in this business, for sure. When I entered the bar/lounge area for the first time, I was made to feel right at home, the way it should be in the hospitality trade.

Why do I enjoy old venues like Squire's? The stories, history and memorabilia on the walls in the bar and dining room walls.

I recall hearing of their award-winning burgers year after year in the local media. So that's what I wanted on this visit. I zeroed in on the Squire's Burger, topped with bacon and cheese and served on a soft bun with a mountain of fries. Their basic burger probably has not changed in years and has withstood the test of many palates over time. Mine, too, I am pleased to report. It was a retro-delish indulgence.

I did notice prime rib listed on the menu on weekends. Not too many places serve it these days.

Squire's, 94 N. State Rd., Briarcliff Manor. Open daily. Free parking. Info: 914-762-3376 or visit www.squiresbriarcliff.com.

McShane's Public House

Edmund Cleary had worked for Dunne's Pub for many years, a personable barkeeper who knew how to keep the crowd buzzing. Vincent Furey tended bar at Davy Byrnes in Port Chester. Longtime friends, they partnered to open McShane's Public House, converting a former Latin restaurant into an Irish gastropub with a wraparound bar, original tin ceiling, table and booth seating, a free-standing community table and plenty of TVs to keep up with daily events.

The best news of all is the menu offers above average gastro-fare loaded with flavor. Have their overstuffed corned beef Reuben, a winner for its tender corned beef, pickled cabbage, stout mustard and Gruyere cheese, or try their chicken tenders, plump juicy burgers and McShane's Fish & Chips.

McShane's Public House, 123 N. Main St., Port Chester. Info: 914-937-7800 or visit www.mcshanesportchester.com.

The Barley House

A warm, friendly greeting from the staff was a welcoming start to my recent visit to The Barley House on Commerce Street in Thornwood. The wraparound bar with its barnwood accents and high tops looked inviting. There is a good craft beer selection posted on the wall in artsy fashion.

There is another dining room on the side of the freestanding house and an open-air deck. Watching several dishes emerge from the eclectic American kitchen caught my attention. Portions were very generous and nicely plated, too. A couple near me ordered a giant homemade soft pretzel with dipping sauce. That was just for starters.

Then there were those overstuffed sandwiches. My pastrami Reuben with Swiss, coleslaw and Russian on rye, served with fries was decadence on a plate. Their burgers are prepared with a blend of short rib, brisket and chuck, served on a brioche bun.

Owners Bobby Harris and Rob Nugent also operate The Barley Beach House in Rye and the seasonal Barley on the Hudson in Tarrytown.

Horsefeathers

The storied towns and trails that make up the Sleepy Hollow area are loaded with fables and tales, and there are some dining venues dotting this landscape along the Hudson River that bring out the best of it.

One must certainly be Julia McCue's popular Horsefeathers on Route 9, a pub and restaurant that has been part of the local scene since 1981. You are greeted by a convivial staff ready to serve you. The menu offers a copious selection of more than 100 specialties.

The vintage metal-topped wooden bar is lined with cozy mini booths. The larger dining area is highlighted by a large wall mural depicting a cross section of famous authors, from Hemingway to Vonnegut, with readings from each.

The Knickerbocker, their 10-ounce burger topped with "rolled in" caramelized onions and horseradish cheddar on a soft bun, is served with hand-cut steak fries. Their Cobb Salad, with chicken, cheddar, bacon, tomato, hardboiled egg and croutons, is served with a side of blue cheese.

Duck Inn

Proprietor Paul Collins has been at the helm for 20 years, but the place has been operating in one form or another for a century. If you've been in Mamaroneck, you must have noticed it across from Harbor Island Park on Boston Post Road. The façade is strewn with ducks, and there are duck artifacts inside, too.

It is housed in what used to be part of Mamaroneck's historic George Washington Hotel that used to be a Pony Express route. It is said that Al Capone even ran booze through here during Prohibition.

Well, the cozy bar is strewn with memorabilia and the friendly barkeepers make sharing a brew or two most congenial. Please note, there is no food. You are a short walk from some good eateries, though. This is a true pub where spirited conversation takes center stage. It is just around the corner from the Emelin Theater and the Mamaroneck Public Library.

BETTER NEWSPAPER CONTEST

A Virtual Wine Trip, Vicariously Coping With COVID's Vicissitudes

By Nick Antonaccio

Here we are, heading toward our third year of living in COVID hell.

So...what's in store for us going forward?

I don't know, you don't know, the government doesn't know, the scientists don't know, the politicians don't know.

Living in the present is full of uncertainty. Allow me in this week's column to revel in those relatively certain pre-COVID times, when we traveled freely and without restrictions.

Herewith, in the following paragraphs, I reprise a wine trip to the Burgundy region of France, which provides a bit of escapism to help me endure the melancholy mood I'm in as I pen this column. Perhaps it will hearten you to plan for better times ahead.

The pungent aromas wafting through the air in the subterranean cellars of the winery were like no others I have ever experienced. Yes, I've visited many wine cellars in my travels over the years. But here, at this moment, in this time and place, I was inundated with a barrage of complementary and contradictory aromas and air moisture, slippery floors underfoot and the faint but ever-present sense of the ghosts of past vintners.

Generations of winemakers had plied their trade within the four walls that bore the history of the winery, laboring through the best and worst vintages over the centuries. All of these components filtered through my senses and into my psyche as I shuffled through the dark passageways amidst scores of barrels containing multiple vintages of fine wine, quietly resting as they continued their uninterrupted maturation.

I was living the dream. I was in Burgundy.

My mantra on this trip through French wine country has been "to taste barrel samplings deep in hand-carved wine caves, to caress grape-laden grapevines in sun-drenched vineyards, to sample ripe grapes as they were being prepared for the harvest crush, to rub soil and rocks between my fingers to understand the nutrient-poor stress placed on grapevines."

And here we were, in late September on a cloudy early morning, as the sun cast its scant rays on the eastern slopes of ripening clusters of Pinot Noir and Chardonnay (the hallmark grapes of Burgundy), eagerly walking amongst grapevines. My friend Rick and I had abandoned our car on the lower slopes, with their paved roads, and had trudged along rudimentary narrow trails of mud and rocks to sample the near-harvest grapes deep in the commune of Vosne-Romanée in the Cotes de Nuits subregion.

I chose this time of day to elude the crews who toiled in the vineyards as the harvest date drew closer. I knew we would have been shooed away, and rightfully so, if we interfered with their time-worn process.

My intent on this trek into my vineyard nirvana was to validate the claims of many before me: the terroir of Burgundy is unlike any other in the world. Geologically and meteorologically, each plot has unique attributes. The overwhelming majority of the vineyard plots are small and Mother Nature has created microcosms in which plots just a few meters apart have characteristics unlike any other nearby plots.

With my experiment in mind, Rick and I sampled grapes from vines across the narrow dirt path from one another and grapes on differing gradients on the long gentle slope on which we were treading. Individual vineyards were indistinguishable from one another. In some cases, just a cloth rag, dangling from a small stake in the ground, separated a few rows of vines from the next owner's few rows.

True to Burgundy's reputation, each of the berries we sampled was distinct in its tannin, acidity and fruit levels. I had not experienced this before; these were not refined subtleties, but obvious differences. We inhaled and then tasted differing aspects of soil minerality, complex sugars, tannins and flavor profiles. After six or seven of these field experiments, we finally understood the mystery and reputation of Burgundy.

So there you have it, and yes, it was uplifting for me.

I welcome living vicariously through your pre-what-the-heck-is-going-on-with-my-life travel adventures. Please send them. I'm certain they will provide the sustenance I need to endure these times.

Girls' Hoops Notebook

Hormazabal Dishing, Swishing for Front-Running Hornets

By Tony Pinciario

Some five years ago, Lakeland High girls' hoops Coach Miranda Mangan realized immediately that she had a major player in then eighth-grader Tyler Hormazabal, so the decision to move her up was easy.

"We only take up middle school kids if they are going to play and contribute," Mangan said. "We knew she was something special from the start. Even though Tyler was the youngest on the court, she played with no fear and a ton of passion. She always wanted to know what she could do to get better. It's been a pleasure to watch her grow into the player and fantastic young woman she is today."

Hormazabal has developed into one of Section 1's premier players as she has been instrumental in Lakeland's 8-0 start, best in Class A. The five-year varsity player is averaging 23 points per game, 7.6 rebounds, 5.6 steals and three assists per game this season. Hormazabal does all this while playing/embracing the team concept.

"Tyler would be the first one to tell you that a big part of her success is because of her teammates," Mangan said. "We have a lot of talented girls on our team this season, but Tyler is definitely the glue that holds us together. Tyler is extremely unselfish and will always do what is best for the success of our team."

Hormazabal consistently fills up the stat sheet despite being the opponents' defensive focus. Opponents have learned that despite her offensive prowess, Hormazabal is just as effective as a facilitator.

"It all starts with my teammates," Hormazabal said. "We open up the floor and move the ball around. Our goal is to put the pressure on the defense by wearing them down so they make a mistake. I know it's a team game where everyone participates and contributes."

Being an eighth-grader on junior varsity is difficult enough, but making the major leap to varsity is intimidating and also scary. Hormazabal recalled her first year on varsity and how the upperclassmen helped her make the transition. As a result, Hormazabal has been that guiding force when newcomers, especially underclassmen, join varsity.

"It was a great feeling to make varsity but I was also very nervous and I ended up putting a lot of pressure on myself to do well," Hormazabal recalled. "My teammates were great and very supportive, but I wish I would have told myself to relax and enjoy the moment. I want them to have fun and relax. I remember being in their position and I want them to enjoy the moment and the fact that we are winning. I try to lead by example by putting a lot of effort into practice, always having their backs, and continuing to support them."

Even with her individual success, Hormazabal is happier with the team's fine play. She said it can be traced to a couple of factors.

"We've been very focused from the beginning of the season and came in with a positive attitude," Hormazabal said. "We are all sensitive to the pandemic conditions and we are trying to make the best decision for the team to continue to be successful. I really love our team defense and the overall team effort has been a pleasant surprise. We are optimistic about our chances and Coach Mangan has done a great job of keeping us grounded."

Mangan has had the pleasure of coaching Hormazabal for five years and her senior captain has left a lasting impression.

"Tyler truly is the type of student-athlete coaches wish they had on their team," Mangan said. "She is coachable, disciplined, resourceful and self-motivated with a passion for excellence that you just can't teach kids. She is the hardest-working player I have ever coached and she is extremely determined."

It's Better to Have Limped Than Not Walked at All

By Ray Gallagher
Examiner Sports
Editor @Directrays

We've all seen it on the news. Everybody with a platform is pushing renewed COVID-19 fears and concerns with the recent statewide spikes, and rightly so, to a certain extent, because it's real, people are still getting very ill and/or dying and it's not going away anytime soon.

Consequently, educators, administrators, town officials, et al., were pushing the pause button on Section 1 and recreational sports as we went into the holiday break, despite the obvious mental and physical setbacks to student athletes who cannot deal with another dose of this hide-and-hope-for-the-best mentality. Wisely, we mustn't venture down this road again, or risk the built-in depression our children have dealt with for nearly two years now.

"I know in our district, the administration wants our student athletes to experience a full season with no interruptions," Somers girls' hoops Coach Marc Hattem said. "Athletics have really been such a special thing to have back during the craziness of the past 20 months, and we certainly want to keep that going. With that being said, the district has been very clear about following protocols and guidelines that are in place. We have adapted to those rules along the way, and I am sure that will continue.

"If we get to a point where the safety of our kids, coaches, staff and officials becomes an issue, and a pause or stoppage needs to happen," he added, "I believe that getting back on the court and/or fields will not be delayed when we are clear to start again because the value and importance of high school athletics will be, and should continue to be, an integral part of the high school experience for all kids in Section 1."

I get the recent pauses; it's the holidays and we all needed to gather safely, so better safe than sorry in this particular instance #PostponeOutOfCaution. I did the same thing in the recreation leagues I run in Putnam Valley on account of Grandma and Grandpa. Pausing before the holidays made sense on account of the recent spikes in the Omicron variant throughout the region, but – for the sake of our student athletes – let's try to make some sense of this before school administrators cancel the winter sports season on account of some very basic common cold or flu-like symptoms from the latest variant.

"I don't know how sports resume," one Section 1 bigwig admitted prior to the holiday break. "Any basketball team that claims to not have exposure (to COVID and its variants) is just lying."

Lying, bending the rules or blatantly ignoring the mandates have been par for the course, so what did we expect without the imaginary "COVID police" enforcing the "optional" rules we put in place across Section 1?

"It's going to be a challenge for sure, very messy," Panas boys' hoops Coach Mike Auerbach admitted. "It's a shame we're still dealing with this and letting it disrupt the learning and playing experience for kids."

We simply can't deny our student athletes the opportunity to share magical moments by shutting down varsity sports like we did last winter.

Like many local programs, COVID has wrought havoc on Auerbach's Panthers since their last game on Dec. 15. The Panthers had been unable to practice or play games since Dec. 20 until they gathered with six eligible players last Thursday (Dec. 30).

"It was our first practice since Dec. 20," the coach said. "We have a few more players who can filter back in over the weekend, but I'm not sure how this goes with two league games and then White Plains the week back from break."

I've been to a handful of varsity basketball games this winter season and well over 30 outdoor varsity games during the course of the fall. It's almost impossible to comfortably compete at this level with a mask on. The mask mandate has been a running joke; not that I'm calling for stricter enforcement because I see very little actual proof that face coverings work when dudes are face to face, knockin' snot in competition. Yet I wonder why we impose these mask mandates but don't authorize actual enforcement after the school's closing bell.

If there are 10 kids on the basketball court at one time, I'd wager two of them are properly masked up while the other eight are wearing useless chin straps. Y'all know I'm spitting facts. But I'm not sure we can take that approach right now based on the decision-making process. Administrators and school boards are beholden to things many of us don't quite understand, like big-picture safety, political persuasion and answering to the masses, including the teacher's union.

"The return-to-play process isn't easy either," Auerbach said. "Doctors' appointments and notes are needed. Try getting into a doctor's office or urgent care on short notice right now."

Been there, done that! But the protocols, which need to be explicit and enforced, are vital if we're to get to a sectional tournament format this winter with some semblance of normalcy. However, normalcy seems light years away when you hear this: "I wish that I knew the answers," Putnam Valley School Superintendent Jeremy Luft said. "We are struggling just to get the kids back in school. There were 1,200 positive cases in Putnam County just yesterday (Dec. 29)."

Many of which were asymptomatic or minimal in complications, especially among teenagers, so it seems like a situation we can navigate, though there will be many issues for coaches to contend with, including a lineup that comprises 12th player as a pivotal part of the equation at times.

"I doubt Section 1 or the state athletic association (NYSPHSAA) is going to make any decisions, so I suspect teams will play and just limp through the season with positive cases and quarantine orders," Luft added. "All of that is contingent on schools being able to reopen next week. Hopefully, the fuel burns out and this variant will fade away."

It's better to have limped, than not walk at all. In the meantime, coaches will be put to the test. Some will be hit hard by the surge in COVID-related cases, some will be spared the myriad complications. Players will be rusty. Sets will seem out of sorts at times and coaches will fume and burn timeouts in an effort to find proper synchrony.

"I think we'll get the season in, but there has to be some uniformity across the section on what the expectation is," Auerbach said. "Very few teams will be fortunate to be at full strength from now until March. If you can field six or seven players, play the game. We've all coached plenty of offseason games shorthanded, and you lose some games to teams you shouldn't lose to because you're forced to play with kids who don't normally play as much. I think if we keep trying to postpone and reschedule games, we're just going to lose games completely in the long run."

And if you don't think politics aren't a part of this, I can't help you. A portion of this pandemic is political, and we all know it. Let's put politics aside for the good of the children, which, in New York State, we hadn't done until nearly a year into the pandemic.

We better put our best foot forward if we're going to combat this pandemic; lest we find ourselves back in the same boat we were in 2020 when high school sports were canceled altogether and kids were stuck at home.

Let's get out in front of this now and continue to #AdvocateForOurYouth! Happy New Year, y'all!
