Introduction

Common names (or vernacular or popular names) of grasses, as with most plants, are far more used by the general public than scientific names. Common names, however, may vary considerably from region to region, causing substantial communication barriers and erroneous species identification. Although scientific names (or taxonomic or botanical names) are standardised names for specific taxon's, most land users find them difficult to acquire and often display some resistance towards them. To improve grass identification, and communication during grass related discussions, two comprehensive lists of South African grass common names are provided here, one with the scientific name first and one with the common name first (both in alphabetic order).

These name lists aim to include all previously published common names of South African grasses in one document. Not all grass species, however, have common names (a privilege given to common grasses only). This document includes common names for 528 of the roughly 950 grass species of southern Africa. Some species have only one common name (in one language) while others may have multiple names in multiple languages. A good example of the latter is Cynodon dactylon, which has 68 common names. Some important literature sources used to compile these lists do not indicate the specific language of a certain common name and could therefore not be indicated here.

The grass scientific names used follow the nomenclature published in Fish et al (2015). Although much effort was done to include all published common names, these lists are undeniably incomplete. This project is therefore a work in progress and anyone with sources, verified names not included, or errors noticed, may contact the author at frits@alut.co.za.
