A Brighter Future

The future is looking brighter, friends.

If 2020 taught us anything, it is a lesson of resilience, humility and gratitude. I am so proud of how Greenbelt adapted in this difficult year. Global pandemic, historic wildfires and a journey of reckoning with the conservation movement's role in racial injustice were all a part of this lesson. Through it all, we came out of 2020 stronger, more connected with our community and invested in a future focused on equity and inclusion.

This year has also reinforced how essential the natural world is to people, which gives me hope for the work ahead. Our community sought refuge in the outdoors, finding a sense of calm and a connection to nature when they needed it most. The Valley's natural lands clean our air and water, capture carbon and protect biodiversity. We recognize more than ever that they also provide people with peace and wellbeing in trying times. We are connected through this out

We are so grateful for the solid foundation you have helped set at Greenbelt that can weather tumultuous times and for your voices and faces that keeping us strong and shining through!

Financial Summary (10/1/19-9/30/20)

Conservation success depends on organizational effectiveness. At Greenbelt Land Trust we carry out our work with a deep commitment to accountability and transparency to our members, volunteers, and partners.

We seek to make use of every dollar donated to Greenbelt Land Trust with careful attention to effectiveness and efficiency.

A Look Back at 2020

1) Cellist Anne Ridlington plays to an online audience at Fitton Green during one of three virtual Symphony on the Land events. 2) Working remotely and meeting on Zoom, sometimes with a great view, became our new norm in 2020. 3) Run for the Hills went virtual and selfies were encouraged! Over 60 people participated, including Maureen Puettmann and her trail partner pictured here. 4) Newly-restored vernal pools at Evergreen Creek burst with wildflowers in May. 5) Catastrophic wildfires displaced thousands of people in the state and across the Willamette Valley, leaving destruction, loss, and a resilient community ready to rebuild. 6) The Confluence center takes shape in downtown Corvallis, the future home of Greenbelt and environmental partners. 7) Staff relish getting outdoors together for a masked walk in a year when they largely worked from home.

25 Years Later

Reflections on the 1996 Flood

25 years ago the Willamette Valley experienced its worst flooding in modern history. From Springfield to Portland, floodwaters swelled across miles of farmland and forest, and into multiple communities. Although the severity of 1996's "hundred year flood" was such that flooding was inevitable, decades of channelization, revetments, and development of floodplain habitats has severely diminished the Willamette's ability to absorb and store floodwaters, with a corresponding loss of vital fish and wildlife habitat.

“ Our floodplains are the lifeblood of the Willamette Valley, contributing to our sense of place, providing refuge for fish and keeping our rivers running clean. - Matt Blakeley-Smith ”

Did you know?

Oregon chub is a small minnow which is endemic to the Willamette River and its tributaries, and depends on off-channel systems in the Willamette floodplain to survive. 22 years after it was listed as an endangered species due to massive floodplain habitat loss, the Oregon chub was delisted in 2015, largely due to habitat enhancements in the floodplain on private lands like Harkens Lake.

Restoring floodplain habitat and function has been a priority for Greenbelt for the last decade. We've planted half a million native trees and shrubs in former agricultural fields at sites like Harkens Lake, Little Willamette and Horseshoe Lake. From bare roots planted in 2011, some trees now reach 20 feet in the air, with roots sunk deep in the soil. These sites are better able to store flood waters during high-water events, while providing refuge for fish and wildlife.

The 1996 flood impacted the lives of everyone in the Valley. At Greenbelt, we see it as our responsibility to develop more resilient landscapes in our community, where the Willamette River touches everyone. We drink from it, we recreate on it, and we love it. With your support, Greenbelt is working to protect this river and all who depend on it.

Groundwater Recharge

This is the process of rainwater moving downward from the surface into the ground, replenishing the groundwater supply. This groundwater feeds our wetlands, rivers and lakes, making water available when people, plants and animals need it most.

VOLUNTEER OF THE YEAR

PAUL ADAMUS

Paul has been a Greenbelt member for almost 30 years, having first been inspired by hearing the founders speak about their early efforts to preserve important natural lands in the Willamette Valley. Paul retired from a career as a wetland scientist and went right to work as a volunteer for Greenbelt, conducting monthly bird surveys and documenting the increasing diversity and abundance of birds at our restoration sites in former agricultural fields along the Willamette River.

Originally asked to compile a simple list of bird species at each site, Paul expanded on the task, breaking down species presence by habitat type, and counting individuals using each habitat.

Pressed for a favorite among the several sites he regularly monitors, Paul lands on Harkens Lake, "Being next to the Willamette River, it's ecologically a very dynamic and productive system. It's regularly used by eagles and other raptors as well as supporting thousands of ducks, geese, and swans that spend the winter here and must fuel-up again in the seasonal wetlands before departing in spring for their nesting grounds in Alaska and northern Canada." We'd have a hard time choosing a favorite among our dedicated volunteers, but we've definitely been impressed with Paul's outstanding work for us. Thank you for everything, Paul!

BUSINESS OF THE YEAR

SKY HIGH BREWING COMPANY

For Paul Harwood, Head Brewer of Sky High Brewing, when it comes to making good beer, "You get out what you put in. Quality local ingredients, attention to detail, and patience - if you can put those aspects into practice you will have some real consistency."

We can relate to this recipe for success. At Greenbelt we start by identifying high quality local natural lands, and through a careful process of evaluation, planning, and a whole lot of patience find ways to protect these special places forever, for nature and for people.

We have more in common with Sky High Brewing than just this recipe for success. Sky High has been a longtime supporter and sponsor of Greenbelt Land Trust, partnering with us in many ways over the years, including "Beers Made by Walking" tours to discover brewing inspiration and ingredients on nature walks with our members, hosting Pint Night fundraisers at their sustainably built four-story downtown Corvallis brewpub, and co-hosting our first virtual event post-Covid shutdown to welcome new members and talk local food and craft beer. We are so thankful for the support and partnership of Sky High Brewing and we look forward to brewing more quality adventures together in the future!

AWARDS

CHARLES ROSS AWARD

RICHARD AND DORIS WARING

Richard and Doris Waring exemplify all that the Charles Ross Award recognizes. As 30 year members they were 'early adopters' in Greenbelt Land Trust - helping shape who we are today.

Beyond Greenbelt, the contributions that Dick has made to the understanding of forest resilience in the face of climate change have transformed science. In 2020 Dick was one of 3 researchers who shared the international Marcus Wallenberg Prize for developing a revolutionary computer model to predict forest growth in a changing climate.

Steadfast champions for conservation, Dick and Doris are leaders who make our world a better place.

“ Dick and Doris are humble leaders in conservation, committed to service and science, all with a sense of community and camaraderie. ”
- Jessica McDonald

Dick was colleagues with Greenbelt founder Charles Ross in the Forest Research Lab at OSU, and they also both participated in a Corvallis-area Toastmasters Club. Dick reflected on a talk that Charlie once gave in the 1990s, titled "A Flat Surface Will Soon Be Covered". The title applied both to Charlie's desk and, he feared, the Willamette Valley. Years later, this message sits with Dick, speaking to the urgency of conservation actions to preserve critical natural areas before 'the surface is covered'.

For their commitment to Greenbelt - and for their contributions to the greater conservation community ... thank you, Dick and Doris!

THE CONFLUENCE

The Confluence center is coming together! We are proud of the building's commitment to sustainability, led by the vision of owner and builder Alan Ayres (right). With an anticipated move-in of summer, 2022, Greenbelt and the partners of The Confluence are hard at work putting the final details of this inspiring community space together.

More info, including The Confluence website, coming soon!
