FROM THE DESK OF RABBI RAVSKI

In Judaism there is a long standing discussion about the concepts of Keva and Kavannah in prayer. Keva is the concept of fixed prayer. It is argued that having fixed, or standardized, prayer is important so that, among other things, we say the proper blessings and it allows us to engage in regular community prayer. In Pirkei Avot, Shammai stresses the importance of each individual making their prayer life fixed, making sure that each day we pray and set aside a regular time for the study of Torah. Kavannah, intention, on the other hand, is the idea that we must say our prayers with feeling and emotion, not just by rote. In the same paragraph as Shammai's defense of Keva, Rabbi Shimon warns that prayer must be infused with intention and emotion, and that we should be wary of rote prayer.

Next week, with the onset of Elul, the month preceding the High Holy Day season, we begin to turn our minds and hearts towards the theme that dominates the season, repentance. Each year on Rosh Hashanah we are asked to examine our actions of the past year and ask forgiveness of those we have hurt. We know that on Yom Kippur our fates for the coming year are sealed, hopefully for good, in the Book of Life. Every year we experience this rhythm in this season; its familiarity can give us comfort, as we recognize how our lives have changed and concern ourselves with what could happen in the coming year. But there is a sense that we have done this before, that the familiarity and comfort we have with this process runs the risk of our losing sight of the importance and significance of doing real Teshuvah at this time of year, because our approach the High Holy Days has become too habitual and too easy. In this way, the great, ancient debate of Keva and Kavannah spills over into our actions as well, whether concerning doing Teshuvah at this time of year or at every other time we perform a mitzvah during the year.

Jewish tradition is keenly aware of the tension that exists, and it is concerned that the way we do Teshuvah might become too fixed, too repetitive and lose the kavannah that makes our commitment to change in the coming year heartfelt. To address this problem, we turn to the ancient practice of Selichot.

Selichot is a prayer service that takes place in Elul; it dates back at least to the time of the Talmud, around the 7th and 8th century. It is composed of various penitential psalms and poems, and it is said each night leading up to Rosh Hashanah. It is unique in its design in that, unlike every other prayer service we have, it has no fixed liturgy. Throughout history there have been at least 13 different Ashkenazi traditions, and countless more Sephardi ones. In the Jewish world today, around 185 different psalms and poems are used to form the different Selichot liturgies.

Ashkenazic communities tend to start saying Selichot about a week before the High Holy Days, starting on the Saturday night before Rosh Hashanah (or like this year, two Shabbatot before, so there is a full week of saying it). Sephardim say it beginning at Rosh Chodesh Elul, for a full month.

Selichot is an inspirational and aspirational way to begin the High Holy Day season. The words of the psalms and poems are fixed, but which are included in the liturgy, in each service, is entirely unique depending on the day, the year and the community. It is symbolic of how we approach the High Holidays and Teshuvah each year, and especially this year. Once again we are faced with finding a balance of our desire to be together and the need for safety. This year we are in a different place, the world is in a different place, vaccines are available and most of all we have grown, our relationships with each other and with God are more developed. Like the Selichot service, this year will be an amalgamation of new and old, a balance of togetherness and caution.

At the same time, spiritually, this past year was different from last year. Selichot helps us to begin the season of repentance by recognizing that we are traveling the same path as years past, but that even in that well travelled path there are infinite varieties of ways to approach life and how we address our need to grow, to repent and often to repair relationships.

As we begin approaching the High Holy Day season this year, we can use the history of the Selichot service to help us find meaning in the different aspects of the liturgy and rituals and with the shadow of COVID still looming. We can find beauty having keva (fixed) prayer, that has been said by countless generations before us, and find meaning in the kavannah (personal and intentional) prayers we add. Most importantly, let Selichot remind us that there is no one way to do Teshuvah, but rather that for each of us, the new year is an opportunity to explore different and meaningful ways to repair and strengthen ourselves, our relationship with God and with others.

CONGREGANTS CORNER

HELP US REACH OUR GOAL OF TREES

Synagogue Emanu-El is partnering with MyTree in Israel for a unique program that connects you directly to an Israeli farmer by adopting an olive tree in their grove. After the November harvest, they will produce boutique kosher extra virgin olive oil for you. There is no middle man, farm to doorstep!

We encourage you to place your order as early as possible since that is the essence of the program: supporting and promoting Israeli farmers, and it is helpful for the farmers to know as early as possible that their olive oil has been purchased. This fundraising effort benefits Synagogue Emanu-El, Israel and Israeli farmers. A portion of the proceeds will go directly to Emanu-El, and the farmer can now work in his grove with confidence that the fruits of his labors will be sent to you at the end of the year.
