Food safety is serious business and Jordano's takes a proactive approach to verifying reputable vendors and manufacturers. Here are some of the ways we stay on the forefront of food safety.

IN-HOUSE EXPERTISE: Karrie Reeves-Gilbraith, Jordano's Manager of Food Safety and Compliance, has more than 15 years' experience in food safety inspection, consulting and auditing from farm to fork. She has a degree in Environmental Resource Management, is a Preventive Controls Qualified Individual (PCQI) and holds a number of additional certifications. She and the risk management team actively review criteria requirements of Jordano's suppliers to ensure compliance. She also works collaboratively with all other Jordano's associates to continue the food safety chain by monitoring sanitation and temperature control in Jordano's warehouse and delivery vehicles.

TRAINING PROGRAMS AND CERTIFICATIONS: All Jordano's warehouse associates, drivers, and account executives—everyone on the team that handles food and the packaging that touches it—receive food safety training. They know how to spot something that is not safe and stop it from going further down the line. Jordano's voluntarily undergoes a Good Distribution Practices third-party audit certification annually to further verify real-world implementation of our food safety policies and protocols.

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS AND PROCEDURES: Jordano's maintains a transparent and traceable supply chain program. We know where all our products come from and can always provide customers with pertinent information. # WORLD VIEW

Turkey carries global flavors while keeping things familiar in modern sandwiches

Menu mentions of the BANH MI are predicted to grow 25% over the next 4 years.*

PROTEIN POWER

Turkey is ranked among the TOP THREE most menued proteins in the sandwich category.*

The sandwich category is seeing incredible flavor innovation today. Propelled by the demand from consumers who need the convenience and portability of handhelds, operators are menuing trend-forward builds that give them a competitive edge. Global flavors are a natural go-to with sandwiches, delivering adventure in a friendly format.

Of course, protein plays a crucial role in sandwich development. As a lean protein that carries flavor, turkey is an ideal choice when developing modern global sandwiches. Chefs can rely on Butterball Foodservice for their turkey-centric builds.

This Turkey Banh Mi delivers the big flavors of the incredibly popular Vietnamese-style sandwich with the wholesomeness and approachability of turkey.

SANDWICHING TRENDS

Using the sandwich as a way to translate global dishes and flavors is a tried-and-true strategy. The challenge is landing on the right protein and the most appealing flavor combinations. The Pavo Saltado (pictured) offers a great case study. Its build demonstrates a deft balance between adventure and comfort, leveraging a global profile and featuring a familiar protein—all tucked into a beloved format, the sandwich. Here, the familiarity of lean turkey breast eases the diner into the experience of trying the flavors of Peruvian saltado, a craveable stir fry that typically features marinated meat, red onion, tomato and french fries.

This Pavo Saltado moves the craveable flavors from the traditional Peruvian beef stir fry to a signature turkey-centric sandwich.

CLOSER TO HOME

Adding high-impact ingredients from the global pantry is a sound approach to sandwich innovation. So is making a simple tweak to a global sandwich that is already familiar to Americans. Cat-Su Sando, a new Japanese-inspired takeout/delivery-only sandwich shop in Chicago, riffs on the popular turkey club with its Club Sando, which sports turkey, Spam, provolone, mustard-ranch jam, lettuce, bacon and hot peppers. Daytime eatery Middle Child in Philadelphia adds a global accent of blueberry-masala jam to The Surfer, its turkey sandwich with Swiss cheese, arugula and mayo. And Butterball's Turkey Cubano (pictured) signaturizes the Cubano, an approachable global handheld, by switching out the traditional pork, ham and pickles with turkey ham, grilled turkey breast and pickled red onions.

Menu mentions of the CUBANO are predicted to grow 15% over the next 4 years.*
