A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

DEAR BEREA ALUMNI AND FRIENDS,

I am pleased to present this year's President's Report on Philanthropy and commend it for your review. Though a global pandemic has delivered us unprecedented circumstances, our financial position has remained strong and our sources of support have remained steadfast. Thanks to supporters like you and those featured in this report, Berea College continues with its historic mission despite a challenging environment. Working toward a world shaped by the power of love over hate, human dignity and equality, and peace with justice is as essential and urgent today as it has ever been. You have joined us in this mission, and for that, we are eternally grateful.

The stories in this report reflect the mission envisioned by the Reverend John G. Fee when he founded Berea College as an interracial institution aimed at promoting the equality of the races. He did so at a time when such a vision was unthinkable to many around him. Yet, he clung to his biblical foundation, reciting for those who opposed him that God has made of one blood all peoples of the earth (Acts 17:26). At the close of the Civil War, Fee recruited Black soldiers from nearby Camp Nelson to come study alongside white students. Back in town, the families in Berea lived in a "checkerboard" arrangement with alternating Black and white homes. The Fees' mission, above even education, was that people come to an understanding of their kinship with one another and that each and every one of them was a conduit for God's impartial love.

Racial equity, healing and justice have always been at the heart of the Berea College story. We have not always fully realized this goal, and there have been setbacks that lasted for decades, but the conviction that we are all of one blood has always been key to our identity and continues to inspire us today. Recent events have made it clear there is still a long way to go in terms of race relations in our country, but these same events move us to renew our commitment to interracial education and to building a beloved community that fosters understanding between people. It is not always popular, but it is always right. The Berea College story of tomorrow, within which you play a critical part, will be a tale of equity and healing as we reach out to one another with dignity and respect.

Thank you for being a part of that story. Your support of Berea College has enabled us to continue Reverend Fee's mission even into the 21st century. Thanks to you, we surpassed our goal for the Berea Fund, which completes the tuition scholarships we give to each aspiring student with capable mind and willing hands. Thanks to you, we have been able to offer a complete education to students who otherwise would not be able to afford it. And thanks to you, we have been able to share a message of true kinship with all we encounter. Without your support, the Berea College story would fade into history. Instead, we move, ever faithful, into a more just and equitable future.

Warm regards,

Lyle D. Roelofs

A MESSAGE FROM THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR ALUMNI AND COLLEGE RELATIONS

In 2006, when trying to land my dream job at Berea College, I met a person who had once worked there. I was trying to learn as much as I could about the College, and I'll never forget what she told me.

"Well, it's important for you to know the impact of Berea's founder," she said. "The ghost of John G. Fee wafts in and around the mighty oaks on the campus. His is a presence that is still felt on a daily basis."

I remember thinking that I'd never been part of an organization where the ghost of a founder continued to exert a guiding influence. But she was absolutely right, and I often explain to friends and donors how hard we work each day to bring us closer to attaining the founders' vision. The enduring mission of John and Matilda Fee and other early Bereans, manifested in the Great Commitments, makes Berea a college unlike any other.

We work so untiringly that were the Fees able to return to campus today, they would be very proud of what they would see. Those oaks have only grown more majestic, along with the campus. And while they would see Acts 17:26 in action, they might wonder what Zoom, email and masks are all about.

Perhaps most important, I'm sure their hearts would be gladdened by our students today—all peoples of the earth, really—and how in recent years our student diversity more closely resembles the mix of students in the 19th century.

I would hope the Fees would take approving notice of the myriad ways Bereans connect the present and future to the past to make the power of love over hate, human dignity and equality, and peace with justice possible. Our effort is continuous, and the work of Berea's founders is just as relevant 165 years later on the same little ridge in the foothills of the Appalachian Mountains.

And wouldn't it be thrilling to take the Fees into the archives to show them lists of all those alumni and friends who contributed to Berea since Rev. Fee's death in 1901? Or for a stroll past the Legacy Wall to read the names of those who left the College a bequest from their estate? Each name from the past, and every one of the names today emblazoned in this inspiring report, would likely fill the hearts of the Fees beyond capacity.

All Bereans are also working to make you—a person who has invested in lives of great promise—proud. If you haven't been to campus in a while, or if you have never been to campus, we invite you to visit as soon as the pandemic recedes. Just as the Fees would be, I venture that you'll be just as inspired by seeing a place where mission and values are put in action every day.

Sincerely,

Chad Berry
Vice President for Alumni and College Relations

ONE BLOOD

DONOR PROFILES

Founded from the beginning on the belief that God has made of one blood all peoples of the earth, Berea College was a rare oasis of equal opportunity, racial justice and community like no other place in the South. At a time when slavery was still legal in Kentucky, when it was illegal to educate enslaved people throughout the South, John and Matilda Fee dedicated their lives to ending that evil institution. They also believed in the right of all persons to education, women or men, Black or white and especially those of limited means. And as southern abolitionists, they also risked their lives as they sought to realize their vision. These foundational beliefs still ring true today at Berea College and are the reason so many of our generous donors faithfully support our mission. As you enjoy this report, please join us in celebrating our donors and their commitment to the goal of fostering kinship and to emphasizing understanding and equality among Blacks and whites as a foundation for building community among all peoples of the earth. ■

THE TEST OF TIME

BY TIM JORDAN '76

CHARLES & EDWENA CROWE

Charles Crowe's first day at Berea College might have been his last. "As I was moving into my room, this white guy comes in and announces that he was my roommate, and that immediately changed the tone of everything," he recalled. "I told my parents, 'I'm not staying here.'"

Growing up in an African American community in Johnson City, Tenn., during the Jim Crow era, the prospect of sharing a room with someone so different unnerved Crowe. He was ready to leave—right then—and go home. His father sternly said, "No!"

His parents' insistence that he stay at Berea College turned him around.

"It forced me into a situation where I finally understood that we were all the same," Crowe said. "That's one of the things Berea students carry away that students [elsewhere] do not get. When you look at what's going on today, you have to listen and learn and be open minded to actually bring cultures together. It takes courage, and Berea has a history of stepping out there. This is not something new to Berea. To do the right thing is where Berea has always stood tall."

After graduating in 1970, Crowe realized the value of what he gained at Berea. "I was not intimidated by being the only one (minority) in an all-white environment," he explained. "I understood that if I competed, it might require doing my job like everyone else, but I could be successful."

Success for Crowe included a 30-year career with the U.S. Department of Energy at Oak Ridge, Tenn. William Ramsey, Berea's then dean of Labor, had developed a training program for one of the nuclear facilities there, and Crowe had worked with Dean Ramsey at Berea.

"The minute they saw on my résumé that Dean Ramsey had been my supervisor, that was huge," he recalled.

Experiences like these changed Crowe's life and led him to a lifelong commitment to the College. Not only has he received the Distinguished Alumnus Award and served on the Alumni Executive Council and as an alumni trustee for six years, he and his wife, Edwena, have chosen to support the College financially through regular donations. They also have included Berea in their wills.

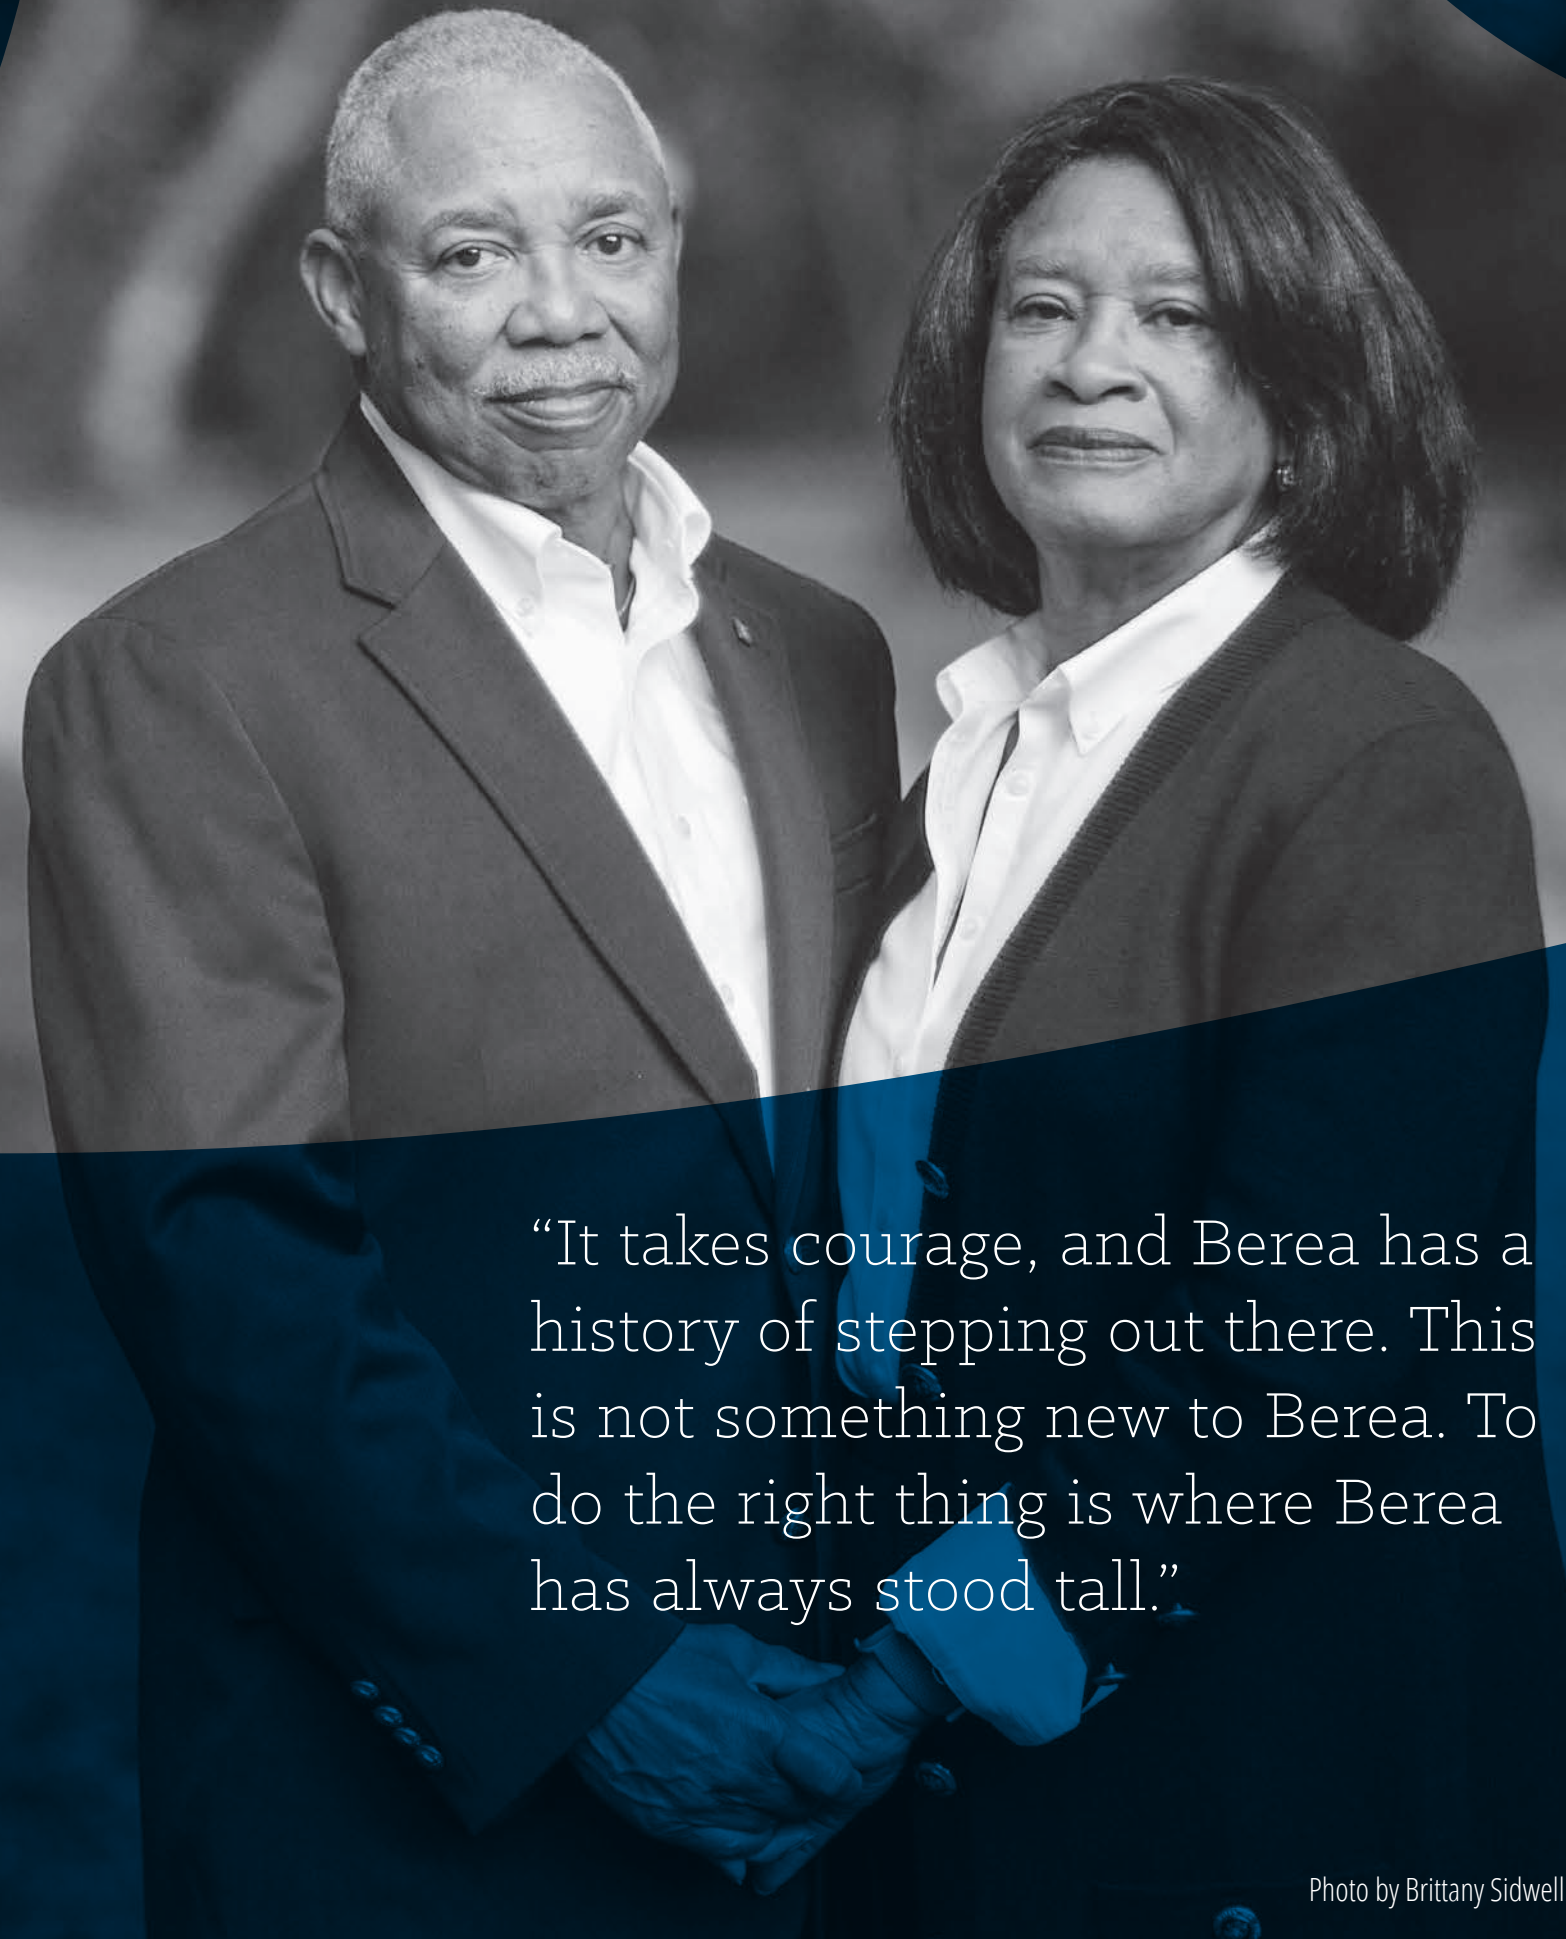

"Giving to Berea, you know where your donations are going, and who and what they are supporting," Edwena Crowe said. "It's that group of kids who, otherwise, might not have gotten to go to college. There are kids we have pointed in the direction of Berea."

"It changes their lives," Charles Crowe added. "There's a student there right now who came from a very, what I'd say, poor background but has just blossomed there. I think that there's nothing more important than youth development."

That commitment to youth development—at Berea College and in their community—led Crowe and two of his friends to establish the Men of Tomorrow Foundation for underprivileged youth in Oak Ridge. What began with a small group of African American young men has expanded, and 31 years later it serves a diverse population including women, white people, Latinx people and others from surrounding counties.

Their foundation serves students in grades six through 12 to develop a good self-image, provide positive role models, emphasize academics, and encourage career and cultural development. Successful participants receive a $1,000 scholarship to the school of their choice and a laptop computer.

"We are quite proud of those kids," Crowe said, noting that several attended Berea and others organized satellite foundation chapters in areas across the U.S. "We've seen where they come from and what they've turned out to be." ■

"It takes courage, and Berea has a history of stepping out there. This is not something new to Berea. To do the right thing is where Berea has always stood tall."

“I WON’T BE SILENT”

BY KATIE GRINDSTAFF

TONI MCNARON

Toni McNaron is an educator, memoirist and lesbian feminist critic now living in Minnesota. But her memories and motivations will always be rooted in Alabama.

“I grew up in Alabama at the worst time possible,” she recounts. “Bull Connor, dogs, hoses, George Wallace—I was at the University [of Alabama] when Autherine Lucy tried to go, and they forced her to leave. My path is so entangled with the educational shutout of Black students.”

In 1955, McNaron recalls that when Lucy was escorted the morning classes began, the street was lined on both sides with white men who worked in Tuscaloosa, Ala. Given a paid day off from their jobs at the paper mill and the rubber plant—two jobs they could hold without a high school education—they gathered in numbers, petrified that the education of a Black person would put them out of work.

“They did not have enough money to buy guns,” McNaron remembers. “But they had bricks and bats and boards, and they were there to get Ms. Lucy. It seemed to me that there were hundreds of them, maybe 200, and only one of her.”

The president at the University of Alabama was asked by the board of trustees to expel Lucy; however, both her grade point average and psychological test proved that she was more than fit to attend. The board gave him an ultimatum—expel her by the next day or resign. Lucy was gone by the weekend and the president resigned over the controversy.

That moment in time continues to impact McNaron’s life. As an avid reader and teacher of literature, she cites Toni Morrison and Alice Walker as important influences in her education.

“Certainly my reading history is tied to interracial education and my ignorance and desire to become more informed,” she said. She currently is reading Ibram Kendi’s book, “How to be an Antiracist.”

“His whole premise, which is helping me understand what’s going on presently, is we have to stop talking about bad people and talk about bad policies,” McNaron said. “I think that’s tied to what [Berea is] doing educationally, because you’re exposing students who come there to knowledge that makes it less and less possible for them to hide from the policies and the policy makers that are then causing people so much pain, trouble and anger.”

She shared that Berea College’s commitment to diversity, especially in terms of its student body, is particularly compelling to her and motivation for her giving. Since beginning her support of Berea, McNaron funded the uncovered portion of scholarships for Berea students but has recently decided to establish an endowed fund for an African American student.

“When I was at Alabama with Ms. Lucy for five days, I didn’t know anything,” she said, growing emotional. “I just knew I was scared of these guys and that she must be scared. I could have tried to find her, I could have tried to say hello—I could have done a number of things. But to [establish a scholarship at Berea] means that some African American student will get a wonderful education, and then I won’t be silent, and I won’t be invisible, and that feels really important to me.”

To prospective donors and those who may not know much about Berea College, McNaron says, “Trust these people and give ‘til it hurts.” ■

“When I was at Alabama with Ms. Lucy for five days, I didn’t know anything. I just knew I was scared of these guys and that she must be scared. I could have tried to find her, I could have tried to say hello—I could have done a number of things.”

TOGETHER IN SPIRIT

Even though we couldn't physically be together for Summer Reunion this year, we can still come together to support our alma mater and remember Berea in our hearts.

Berea is looking for enthusiastic volunteers to lead a class giving campaign in honor of those celebrating a reunion in 2021 and 2022.

If you're interested in volunteering for your upcoming reunion, visit <https://www.berea.edu/give/chair/> for more information.

BETWEEN BLACK AND BLUE

In September, Counseling Services sponsored the event Perspectives on the Relationship between Black and Blue. Felony investigator John R. Campbell and Atlanta attorney Tifanie McMillan Owen '02 joined other guests who work with and within the judicial system and have insight into helping people understand the law and how it works. The group virtual discussion was intended to help students of color grow their understanding of the law. To listen to a recording of this virtual conversation, visit www.berea.college/BlackandBlue.

“I left it in God’s hands, and He came through with Berea.

It was on me to make the most of it.”

– Anthony Myrks-Brewer '17

Anthony’s story is yet another reminder of the good your gifts do for outstanding students who simply need a hand. Please make a gift so Anthony can tell his students that no matter where they call home, Berea’s arms are always open. Please make your gift at www.berea.edu/give, or by sending a check in the enclosed envelope. Read more of Anthony’s story at www.berea.edu/give/anthony.

INTERNALIZING OUR COMMON HUMANITY

BY JASON LEE MILLER

DR. FARAMARZ ISMAIL-BEIGI

When asked what was compelling about the mission of Berea College, Dr. Faramarz Ismail-Beigi '62 offered a one-word answer: humanity. He went on, then, to reference a large carpet that hangs on the wall of the United Nations building in New York, and its inscription of "Bani Adam," by 13th-century Iranian poet Saadi Shirazi.

The poem begins:

*Human beings are members of a whole,
Since in their creation they are of one essence.*

Dr. Ismail-Beigi reflected on the words and mused about their similarity to the biblical verse that forms the motto of Berea College: God has made of one blood all peoples of the earth.

"All of humanity is connected to one another," he said, "and humans are all from one blood. It is that universal value that is the most important, that inclusive value. It's not where you're from, what you look like, what your skin color is. It's that human beings have value, no matter what. If we have everybody listen to that, we would be in a better place."

He spoke from Cleveland, where, as a doctor and professor, he divides his time between teaching at Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine and caring for veterans at the Cleveland Veterans Affairs Medical Center. It's at the latter, where he finds patients who are often sicker and less financially able than the patients he encounters at the university hospital, that his sense of common humanity is strengthened.

The same humanitarian impulse drove Ismail-Beigi to establish a scholarship at Berea College in 2017 for women in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) majors. Though the gift is recent, the idea to invest in the students of his alma mater is not new.

"It's been with me for 40-some years," he said. "Berea was a wonderful experience, not only educationally, but in every other way. I didn't just learn chemistry or physics. I learned what it means that God created all people from one blood."

One incident in particular has etched the idea into his consciousness. As a young man, Ismail-Beigi came from Iran to Kentucky two years after his older brother, Farhad '60. When Ismail-Beigi arrived in the late 1950s, he encountered what he describes as "an ocean of segregation." Berea College was an integrated island within this ocean, but he felt the effects of racial tensions when he left campus with the soccer team. After three hours on the bus, the integrated team arrived in northern Tennessee, where they received a rude welcome.

"We got off the bus," he said, "and they said they didn't want to play with us. And because of that, we didn't want to play with them, either. That was a defining moment, one where we valued each other and a commitment to racial equality. We all got back on the bus and rode three hours more."

Ismail-Beigi has applied what he learned at Berea throughout his life and career, treating people with empathy and without judgment. Berea's Great Commitments had not yet been articulated when Dr. Ismail-Beigi attended, but upon review, he felt he had internalized them from his experiences in college.

"Berea College made me a much better person," he said. "It's good for the students to have people from different parts of the world and different races at Berea so they can see that people are the same. It's a living example of what the school's motto is—if you want to listen to it, if you want to take it in." ■

HELP FOR GENERATIONS

BY ABBIE TANYHILL DARST '03

DR. JAN PEARCE

In a field where women have slowly dwindled from earning 37 percent of undergraduate degrees in 1985 to 18 percent in 2019, Dr. Jan Pearce has blazed a trail in developing Berea's Computer Science department since she arrived in 1992.

Citing examples like Margot Lee Shetterly's book "Hidden Figures," Pearce explained how early on the field of computing was populated by both women and African Americans. As those numbers have fallen nationally, Pearce and her colleagues in computer science have sought to raise interest and engagement among women and minorities in Berea's computer and information science major.

"Our department is very committed to research-based pedagogy that is inclusive," said Pearce, pointing to studies that show such research resonates with students from underrepresented minority communities. "We are proud that we are serving a diverse group of [students]. We work hard to create a strong, diverse community. It is something we believe in."

Berea's mission won Pearce over while she was searching for a teaching position in 1992. She was just completing her doctoral degree in mathematics at the University of Rochester while teaching at Nazareth College nearby. Her thesis professor offered to assist her in finding a post-doctoral research position, but having done undergraduate research at her alma mater, Augustana College, Pearce knew that teaching and doing research with students at a small liberal arts college was the right direction.

"His eyes went wide," Pearce recalled about her thesis professor's reaction to her desire. "But, I don't know anyone at small liberal arts colleges," he told me. And 1992 was not a good time for job-seekers in higher education. So he told me to apply everywhere."

Pearce cast a wide net and received multiple offers, but Berea quickly captured her attention.

"I had not heard of Berea College before I started my job search," she said. "When I started looking at schools, I read Berea's mission and found it completely compelling."

Pearce has spent the past 28 years supporting Berea's mission in the classroom. She was hired, in part, to shepherd the computer science minor that was then housed within the Mathematics department. In 2007, computer and information science was approved as a major, and today Pearce sits as the Computer Science department chair.

She leads her department with intentionality, both in reaching a diverse group of students to show them how this major and career field is open to them, as well as intentionally diversifying the faculty in the department to reflect Berea's student body. The 2020-21 computer science faculty is composed of five department professors and one who teaches some courses for the department. Of those six, three are women and two are African American.

"When we recruit faculty, we don't just put out an ad, we go to conferences and look for those we think would be a good fit," Pearce said. "We want to find the best people for Berea, for our students."

Pearce's passion in the classroom and her motivation for financially supporting the College always goes back to the students she serves, she said.

"What makes me a donor is how deeply our mission impacts our students," she said. "You can donate to other schools and you're going to help students' education, but at Berea your donation will help for generations—the students, their families and their children. It's kind of an amazing thing to change someone's life for the better. That's what we give them at Berea. We give them opportunity." ■

"We are proud that we are serving a diverse group of [students]. We work hard to create a strong, diverse community. It is something we believe in."

CONTINUING TO FIND THE LANDING SPACE

BY MICHELE PEKOLA

CARL & DEBORAH THOMAS

Two young students from Birmingham, Ala., found their landing space at Berea in the 1970s, and continue to grow and develop that space for countless others today. Carl and Deborah Thomas exemplify lessons learned at Berea through their role as alumni and donors, and through Carl's former role with Berea College admissions.

Carl '78 came from a large family of boys and developed a strong work ethic early in life. As a high school student, he happened upon an event held at school that featured an admissions counselor from Berea College.

"The more he talked about Berea, the more Berea fit in line with my interests and things I wanted to do," Carl said. He liked that at Berea he could help pay for college room and board through the labor program, that Berea was academically strong and that it was affordable. Deborah Byrd Thomas '80, a fellow high school classmate of Carl's, was admitted to the University of Alabama as well as Berea College. The free tuition was a significant pull for her to attend Berea.

At Berea, Deborah appreciated the dignity of the labor program as well as exposure to people from different cultures and backgrounds. Living with people from diverse backgrounds was significant for her. She enjoyed having the opportunity to learn about people who were different from herself and for them to learn about her, Deborah noted.

[Berea College founder] John G. Fee was doing something that we are trying to get people to do today," Deborah said. "He saw that all people matter because he didn't establish Berea College for just one kind of people. He saw that there was a need for everybody to learn, to be engaged in an environment that would free them to be active and productive citizens."

Carl believes one of the greatest advantages of attending Berea is the opportunity to learn with and about the diverse members of the College community. "You break bread with people who are different than you," Carl said. "If you break bread with somebody, conversations are going to happen, and you are going to learn something about that person."

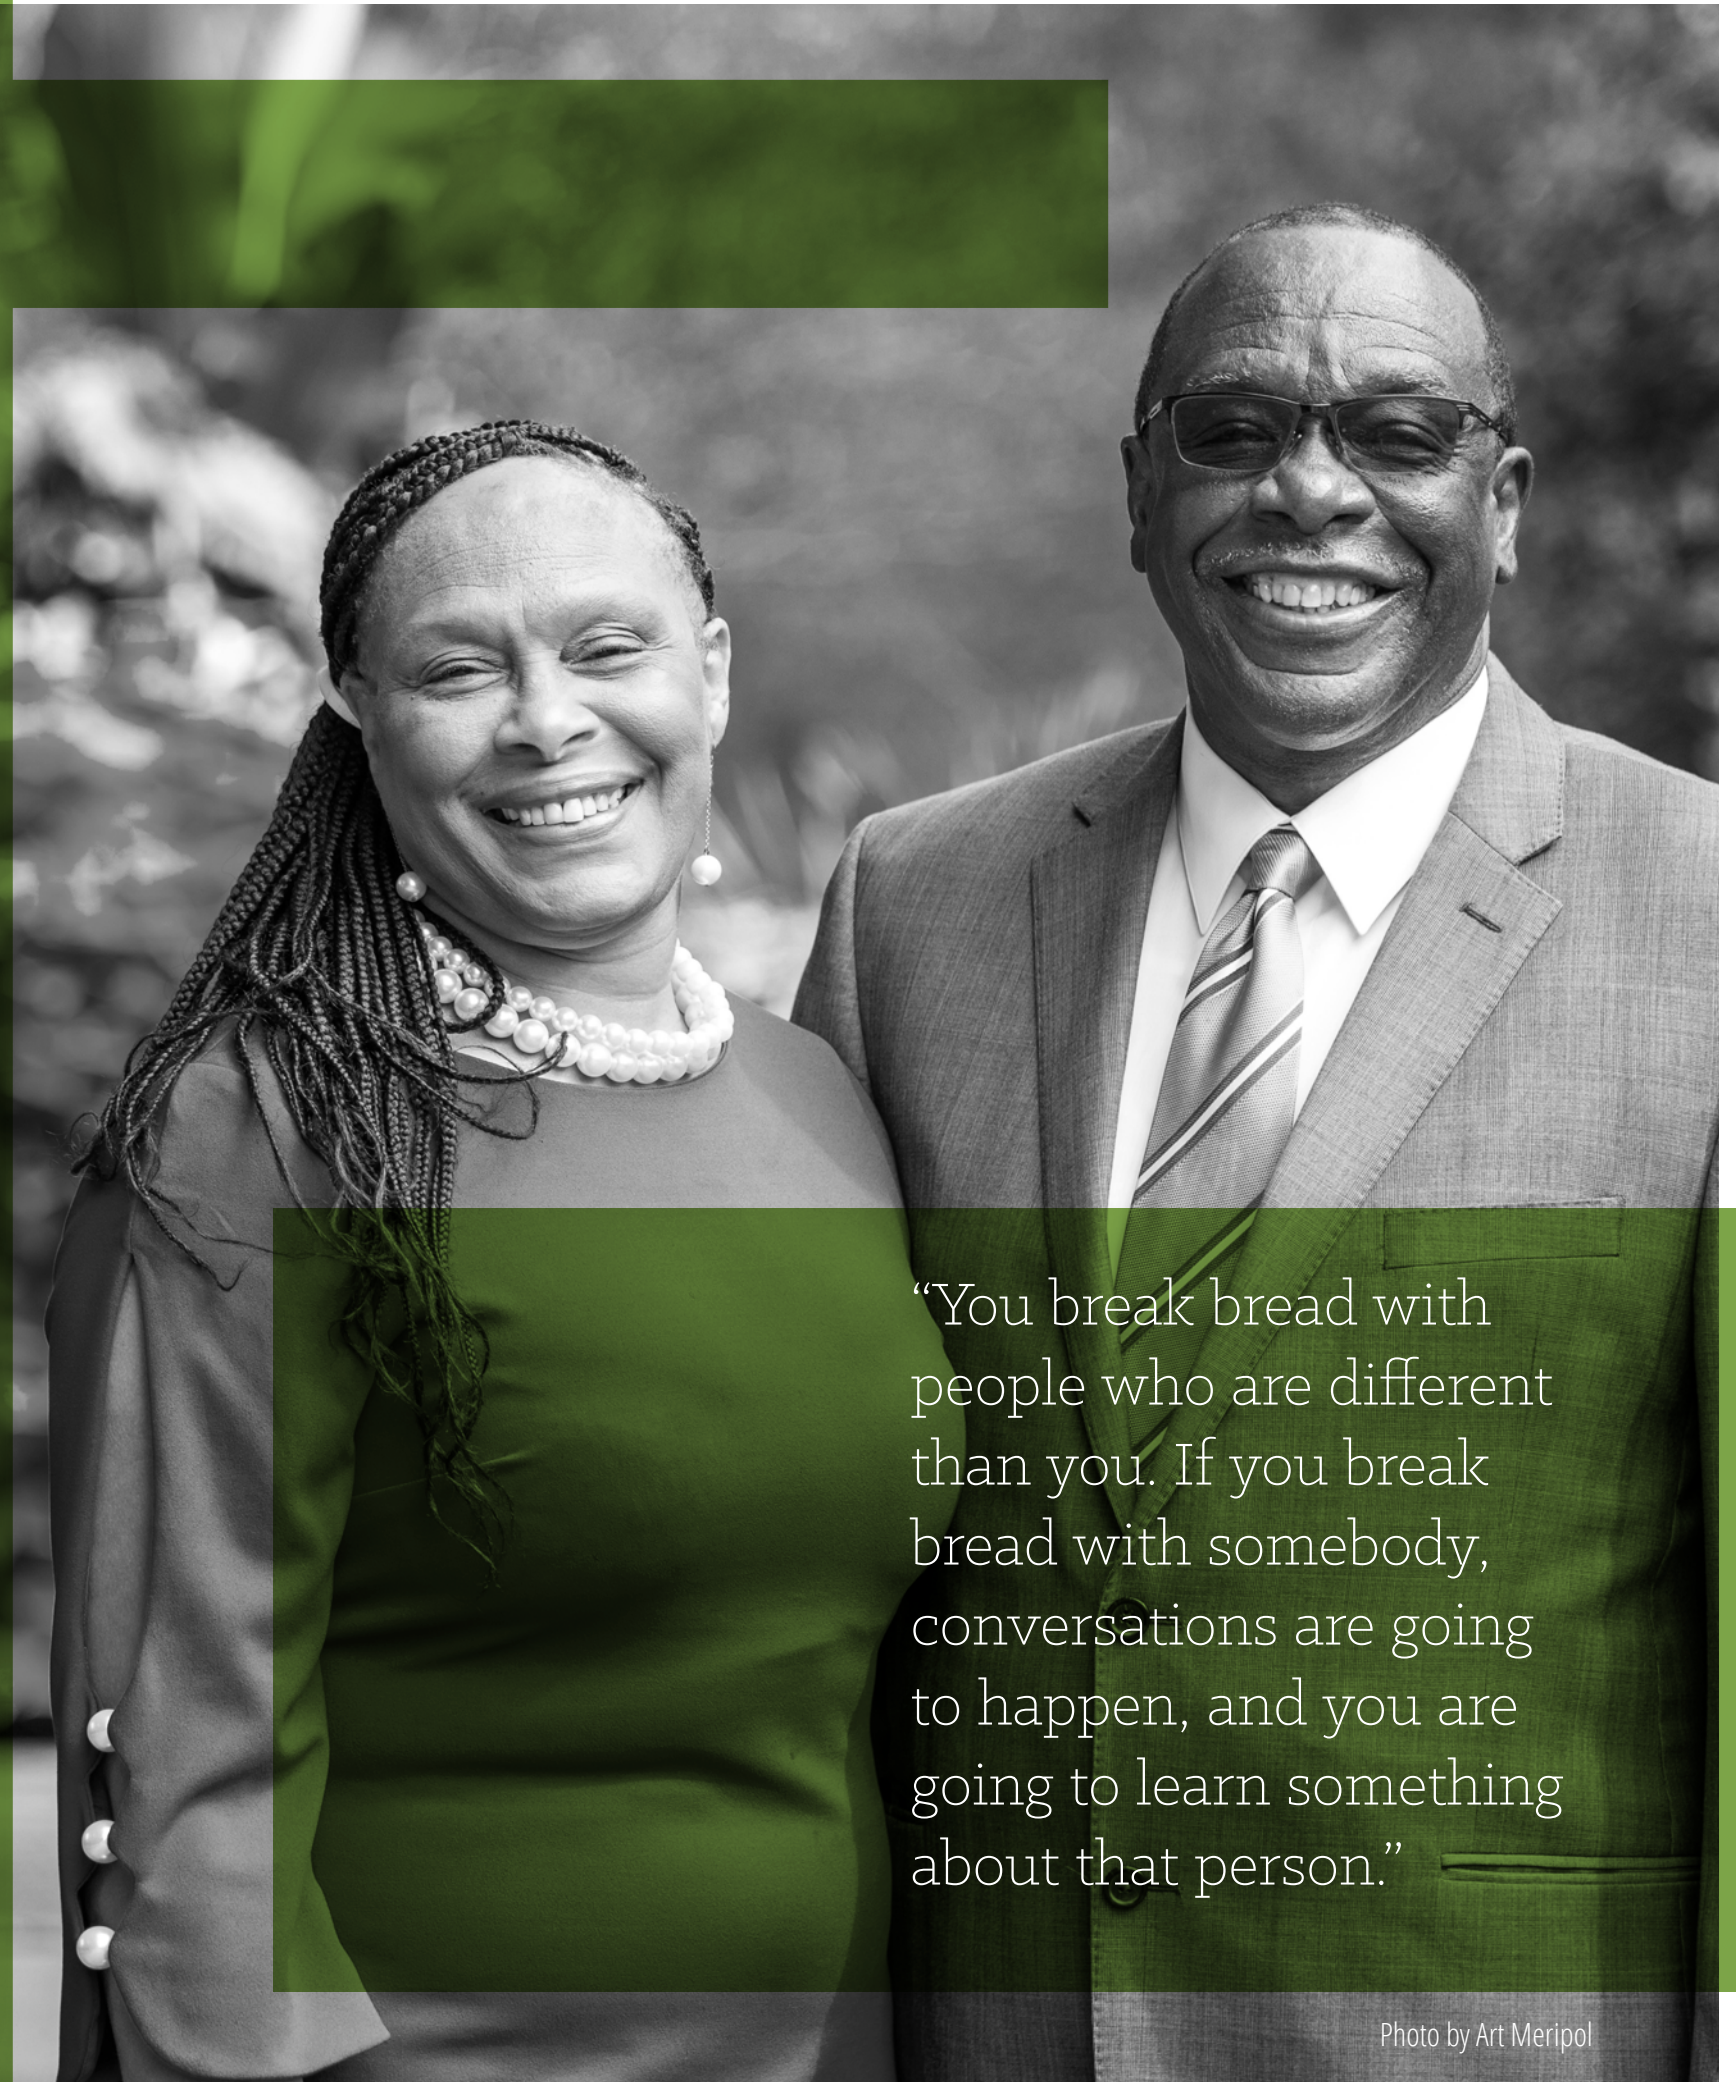

Carl's Berea experience was so transformative that he became an admissions counselor for the College immediately after graduating. He served the College in various admissions roles for 40 years, splitting time between Berea and his home in Birmingham for most of that tenure. Throughout that time, Carl and Deborah welcomed students and their families into their home to tell them about Berea's many opportunities and to learn more about the students' backgrounds and stories. Carl also made numerous family visits in his role. Both were invested in the life of each student and had a strong desire to help them find their own landing space at Berea. That 40-year investment in Berea students earned the couple the President's Medallion, presented to them by Berea College President Lyle Roelofs in 2017 for their exemplary service.

Upon retirement, Carl asked himself, "How can you continue this legacy?" He and Deborah wanted to see the continuation of programs that had helped them successfully transition at Berea. They created the Carl and Deborah Thomas African American Opportunity Endowment Fund, which helps provide programs that attract and support African American students.

"It was important for me to continue to provide a space for African American students when they come to Berea, a landing space so that they would feel comfortable and then migrate out to the rest of campus," Carl said.

As Bereans live and work together on campus and share their experiences beyond their time as students, Carl contemplates how all people can choose to work together. "I think it is good to have the conversations we are having right now, but we also must do what John G. Fee and others did, to take action, to stand on your belief that all men are created equal. That it is not just idealistic, but that it is actually a reality." ■

"You break bread with people who are different than you. If you break bread with somebody, conversations are going to happen, and you are going to learn something about that person."

ONE BLOOD STORIES

JOE SALEEM '08

COLLIS ROBINSON '13

DAYJHA HOGG '23

OUTSIDE OF THE BUBBLE

Hometown: Georgetown, Ky.
Profession: Women's Soccer Coach, Berea College

JOE SALEEM '08

As a professional comedian, soccer coach and former Residential and Campus Life program coordinator at Berea College, Joe Saleem '08 has always enjoyed being around people, making them laugh and bringing out their positive potential. Originally from Georgetown, Ky., he wasn't too far from home when he came to Berea in 2003. But his experiences in life, especially while at Berea, exposed him to many different cultures, races and religions that he has used to broaden his mindset and the way he thinks about those around him.

"I've been exposed to white people my entire life; I've been exposed to Native Americans my entire life by going to Cherokee, N.C., and interacting with people," Saleem explained. "I've been impacted by Africans and South Americans—my spectrum is huge. I've met people from all over the world, so I understand people from all over the world to some degree.

"I think that's something that Berea stands for and does a good job fostering in a lot of us," he continued. "But some of us have a tendency to leave here and go right back into a bubble instead of actually getting to know other people who are different and from different backgrounds."

But growing up as a biracial child in America had already prepared Saleem for how to negotiate identity and find his place in daily life.

"Anybody who has ever been biracial at some point has probably had somebody go, 'What are you?'" Saleem explained. "As biracial people, we are constantly trying to define what our identity is and what's acceptable. Because sometimes we're not Black enough for our Black friends, and sometimes we're not white enough for our white friends. And sometimes we're watered-down Black. And sometimes people try to parade us as their Black friend—there is so much that goes into our identity and making sure that we are grounded and understand who we are."

Saleem says he was lucky to have older brothers who helped him learn how to deal with the issues he faced growing up—from being asked where he was adopted from by a school teacher, to being repeatedly pelted with the N-word by the opposing coach's son while he played goalie in a middle-school soccer game.

"They were able to give me a head's up and tell me, 'Hey you're going to deal with a lot of this stuff and sometimes you have to make light of it and joke about it and let it roll off your shoulders,'" Saleem said about his brothers' advice. "Other times you have to be a little more confrontational. Sometimes you just ignore it."

Saleem's experiences with racial issues and biases, of course, did not stop with school. He's had racial slurs yelled at him from passing trucks while standing at crosswalks on Berea's campus. He's been surrounded by five officers, questioned and searched just because he slid off an icy road and actually called law enforcement for help. It is experiences like these that Saleem says he wishes he could share with his white friends and family members who dismiss his personal encounters.

"If I want to go hang out with the Berea Police, and I say, 'Hey I want to do a ride along,' the chief will put me in a car, and I'll ride along so I can understand what that officer goes through," Saleem said. "I wish there was a way to do that for some people who just don't believe that racism exists or that the country has gotten better.

"You would see that sometimes when I'm in a store in eastern Kentucky, I get followed," he continued. "Or that I've been pulled over just because of what I look like, and they've been able to see me. I've been followed in a town in Arkansas because I hugged my wife while she was doing an internship there, and they didn't think it was right for someone who looks like me to be hugging my white wife and then getting in a car.

"So I think if you experience those things," Saleem said, "and are able to see what actually happens, maybe you'd have a little more compassion." ■

JUST PICKING UP A PACKAGE

Hometown: Greenville, S.C.

Profession: Associate Dean of Student Life, Berea College

COLLIS ROBINSON '13

For Collis Robinson '13, coming to Berea College in the fall of 2009 from the diverse and large community of Greenville, S.C., was a big culture shock and, initially, he struggled to find his place on campus. At the time, the Black Cultural Center had a peer-mentoring program where upper-division students were paired with first-year students. Robinson was paired with Triston Jones '11, an upper-division student also from Greenville.

"He helped me stay on track," Robinson said. "He made sure I would get to the writing center. He requested to see all of my papers before I would turn them in. That was really helpful—him encouraging me and being there."

Robinson said programs like peer-mentoring, having professors who truly cared, support from his labor supervisor and his involvement with the Campus Activities Board allowed him to find success throughout college.

But as a young Black man in a predominantly white town, Robinson still experienced challenges outside of campus.

"As I came into the community, one of the things that would always make me nervous was being outside of the College campus," Robinson recalled. "I knew that when I walked into stores I would not see many people who look like me. And that always made me nervous. So I usually went with a friend."

Like a majority of Black Americans, Robinson's experiences with racial tension, profiling and unequal treatment have been many and varied throughout his life. One such experience Robinson recalls happened to him in Winchester, Ky., about two years after he graduated from Berea. He had begun teaching in Montgomery County, about 30 minutes east of Winchester. Because of his daily commute, he chose not to have packages delivered to his apartment, and instead picked them up at a local UPS store, he said.

"I will never forget walking into the UPS Store, and a lady that I hadn't seen before looks up at me and says, 'What are you doing here?'" Robinson recalled. "And I was like, 'I'm here to pick up my package.' And she said, 'Well, I've never seen you in here before.' And I thought what does that have to do with me picking up my package?"

"She obviously was upset, and she began to say things like, 'Get out of my store,' 'You are not allowed to be in here,' 'I'm calling the police on you.' And she did—she called the cops on me," Robinson continued. "So, I immediately remember that moment because of the fear that went through my heart. She could have told them anything. I don't know what she told them. She wanted me out of her store. So, I immediately left the store."

Worried of appearing as if he were fleeing a scene, Robinson returned to his truck and remained in the parking lot until the police arrived.

"Afterwards, the police said to me, 'We get complaints from the store all the time similar to this,'" Robinson said.

"The police officer understood, and he did let me go. But the fact that my license was run, everything was written down—it was like, first, let me see if you have a record, and then I'll decide how we're going to deal with this.

"So I made a commitment to myself that I was going to do something about it," Robinson continued.

Because of experiences he had earlier in life where he felt powerless and without options, Robinson decided this time he would not accept this treatment and just move on. He called the corporate office to file a complaint and was able to make contact with the general manager of the location, who apologized and assured Robinson that the employee's behavior was unacceptable, and she was released from her position.

After a week of dealing with this situation, Robinson finally was able to go back and retrieve his package.

"And it was there," Robinson emphasized. "That was the other piece that I missed sharing. In the argument, she claimed my package was not there. And so I went an additional week, while I was waiting on corporate, and my package was there the entire time.

"That was in 2015," he continued. "It just shows that there's still work to do. All I was doing was just getting off work and trying to go get a package. I'm reminded that no matter how nice we are, no matter how professional I speak, I could still be taken as a threat." ■

FINDING MY VOICE

Hometown: Whitesburg, Ky.

Profession: Berea College student

DAYJHA HOGG '23

Growing up in Whitesburg, Ky., Dayjha (Carter) Hogg '23 was influenced by very little in the way of Black culture, but she and her three siblings knew they didn't quite fit in with the town's predominantly white community either. Despite the small-town feel where, Hogg said, everyone knows everyone, as a biracial child there were times she felt shunned because of the differences in her appearance.

"There has always been this inclusion, but at the same time, I realize as I have gotten older, there was a lot of institutionalized racism and oppression that I didn't even realize I was being put through," Hogg said. "It made it very hard at times for me and my brothers. We've been raised here, and we expect everyone to treat us the same, but then we go to certain places, and we're getting stared down. I think that's something I've always had to keep in mind around here—that's how people were raised, very closed minded."

Hogg said her mother helped her understand the world around her and served as her biggest advocate.

"My mom was there to facilitate conversations and to let us know the positive end of it," Hogg said. "Honestly, I feel extremely grateful that we had that voice of positivity always in our ear, especially considering she was raised in a family that was very racist. My mom realized this is going to be a battle for the rest of their lives, and thought, 'I have to be their No. 1 ally.' And I'm so grateful because if she hadn't done that, I wouldn't have that sense of self-worth because no one else was saying it but her."

Attending Berea College her first year, Hogg's confidence was boosted further, she said.

When it came to speaking out, Hogg said her Berea classes and experiences prepared her. "They gave me the education. They gave me the vocabulary. But mainly they gave me the confidence to stand up for what I believe in and not be afraid of what happens afterwards."

This past summer that self-assurance was tested in the wake of George Floyd's killing at the hands of Minneapolis law enforcement, which Hogg described as lighting a fire under everyone. Though initially timid to speak out, Hogg, along with her husband and a close friend, decided to organize a protest in Whitesburg.

"I thought if no one else shows up, it'll be us four—she and her husband and me and mine, holding hands with our hands in the air," Hogg said.

But they were not alone. To Hogg's amazement, about 200 people turned out in support of the protest, in a town of approximately 1,800. But shortly after the protest, the local county judge-executive posted disparaging remarks on his Facebook page about the protest and its organizers. These posts prompted Hogg to attend a fiscal court meeting that same week and speak up about the racism she had experienced growing up.

"At the end of the day, there's a momentum in this fight, and it is here right now," Hogg recalled thinking in the moment. "I can't let this moment pass by because when else is a room full of people going to sit and listen to what I've been through?"

"I told them about a few experiences that happened in school, and I said, 'I'm having to get up here and rip open scabs and dig into old wounds just to prove to you that there is racism here,'" she continued. "That hurts. I don't want to think back to all these different things. Of course I don't care to share my story because I know that's how you use your voice. But you all are making me do this, so at least listen. At least try to hear us out, hear where we are coming from and to understand, and don't just dismiss it."

Hogg credits Berea for giving her the confidence and tools to stand up and speak out in her community, and she looks forward to returning to Berea for the fall 2021 semester, after the pandemic has subsided.

"Going back, after all this, I can appreciate all the resources Berea has to offer and use them," Hogg said. "I can join some clubs and be a part of things that contribute, not only to the college and community, but to society." ■

YEAR AFTER YEAR, YOUR GIFT MATTERS

Berea's annual giving societies recognize those generous friends and alumni who give each year, often to the Berea Fund, helping the College meet the need not met by the endowment. These special individuals are noted in the Honor Roll with a 🌿 symbol.

“If we are ever going to really have equal opportunity, it probably has to start with equal opportunity for education, and that’s what Berea is certainly working toward.”

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

BY KATIE GRINDSTAFF

DOUG ROSENTHAL

A partner in the internationally recognized law firm of Constantine Cannon LLP in Washington, D.C., Douglas Rosenthal has 40 years of antitrust and international litigation experience. Born in New York to Jewish parents during World War II, he cites the importance of American ideals in fighting for equality as an important part of his upbringing.

“I remember hearing on the radio the voice of Franklin Roosevelt, and for me, Franklin Roosevelt was like a member of the family,” Rosenthal said. “So that was very important in my idea of what American democracy was.”

Rosenthal earned his bachelor’s degree in politics and economics, graduating summa cum laude from Yale College in 1961. He went on to earn his LL.B. from Yale Law School in 1966, and his Ph.D. in political science from Yale University in 1970.

For years Rosenthal had been aware of Berea College as a liberal arts college ranked highly by college rating services, but he knew very little about its history and mission. When his late wife, Erica, a retired attorney with a passion for English literature, passed away, he reached out to Berea. He and his wife had accumulated about 7,500 books over the years, and he wanted to give them some place to be useful. After calling to inquire about making a donation, he began to realize there was more to Berea’s story than he originally thought.

“We are living in a time where this is a compelling opportunity to really make significant progress,” Rosenthal said. “We are all of one blood, and that is an urgent and powerful message for this time in history.”

He soon made plans to visit Berea in person. “I was just so impressed by the commitment of everybody to make this work,” he said, reflecting on his visit and conversations with students, faculty and staff. Thinking back on his own college experiences made Berea’s commitments even more important to Rosenthal.

“I realized how deeply the problem existed, even in the North, where people were proud that there was no ‘prejudice,’” he said. “There was a lot of prejudice, and we have now seen it abundantly as we’ve been much more attuned today.”

Berea’s commitment to interracial and coeducational opportunity is a driving factor in Rosenthal’s philanthropy. “If we are ever going to really have equal opportunity, it probably has to start with equal opportunity for education, and that’s what Berea is certainly working toward,” he explained. “You can’t get into Berea even if you were to offer a million dollars to be taken as a student. I like that very much.”

Not only does Rosenthal admire how Berea places students on a more level playing field in terms of financial support, he also believes that Berea fosters an environment in which students of different races and nationalities can see their commonality with each other, put aside prejudices and emphasize a bond. He is particularly impressed with the work of the Carter G. Woodson Center for Interracial Education in facilitating discussions meant to provide support and break down barriers.

“It has led me to think,” he said, “that what we need is about a hundred or a thousand more Berea Colleges.” ■

EQUITY AND BELONGING

BY JASON LEE MILLER

JESSIE BALL DUPONT FUND

To hear Mari Kuraishi, president of the Jessie Ball duPont Fund, describe her philanthropy's mission is to catch a distinctly American ethos at work.

"This country was founded on the idea that all men, women included, are created equal," Kuraishi said. "The idea is not that we have equal endowments. Some of us are tall. Some of us are short. You are limited by the accident of your birth in so many ways, but we believe education is the great equalizer. It allows someone who is motivated and willing to rise above their circumstances."

Berea College, therefore, with its mission to educate regardless of circumstance, is a natural fit. Jessie Ball duPont, an educator who wanted to help people go to college, made her first gift to Berea College in 1946 and directed that her support should continue after her death. Today, the Fund prioritizes academic and social supports that help underrepresented populations succeed.

That success, according to the Fund, depends on a sense of belonging. The Fund's mission to foster belonging among various groups finds a home at Berea, where belonging has been an essential component since its founding. This too, is fundamentally American to Barbara Roole, the Fund's director of equity. She describes Berea College as a melting pot.

"There's this sense of belonging with Berea," Roole said. "Berea has a really diverse group of students. You have African American students, white students, Latino students, international students, students from all over. When they get to Berea, we want those students to feel like they're coming home. We want them to feel like they belong in the place because once they have that sense of belonging, we know they are going to stay and graduate."

The feeling that one belongs, though, comes in different ways for different groups of people. For this reason, the Fund prioritizes programming specific to a particular group's needs. The Jessie Ball duPont Fund has sponsored the Latino Male Initiative to encourage belonging and success among this population. More recently, the Fund provided support for F.A.B.U.L.O.U.S. (Fierce Appropriate Beautiful Unique Loving Outstanding Understanding Serious) at the Black Cultural Center, a program geared toward improving retention and graduation rates of Black female students at Berea.

"These are things that make students feel like they are a part of a community, where they feel they are accepted and thereby belong on this campus," Roole said. In the case of F.A.B.U.L.O.U.S., "these young women were doing great academically, but they were struggling with the social part of being at a predominantly white institution. Often, students of color need spaces to support each other."

The Fund also provides support for the Yahng Discovery Center in Berea's Margaret A. Cargill Natural Sciences and Health building because it extends science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) education to the community outside the College.

Kuraishi says duPont's support of these programs and Berea College, in general, offers the Fund a chance to "double down" on its mission of equity. "Because Berea doesn't charge tuition, it's focusing its entire educational mission on students who would not otherwise be able to afford it," she explained. "Berea is about making the promise of this country come through." ■

in 100}

100 YEARS AGO,
Berea College designated all unrestricted bequest gifts to its permanent endowment. Thanks to this bold decision, generations of college dreams have come true because of the generosity of others.

100 YEARS FROM NOW, your name could be among the 100 people this year who made college a possibility for the next generation of students.

LOYAL TO LOYALTY

BY SAM MILLIGAN

ROBERT PHILLIPS

Imagine sitting at a dinner table with 20 friends who are so close they're family. You've grown closer to each of them with each passing decade, and all of them are equally happy to see you. If you can remember—rather than imagine—this scene, then you are a very lucky person, or you are Berea College alumnus, Robert Phillips '90.

Like anything worthwhile, Phillips' circle of friends and fellow alumni didn't appear overnight, and it doesn't thrive without his frequent contributions. While Berea College may have brought them together as students, Phillips makes a concerted effort to text, visit and open his home to the ones he loves. Investing in friendships wasn't easy while Phillips climbed the corporate ladder at State Farm for more than 30 years, supported his extended family and began volunteering on Berea's Alumni Executive Council. But now, as his retirement approaches, Phillips says, "putting in the time and dime really paid off. I'm fixing to grow older with my best friends in the world."

A college fair at Phillips' high school in Pike County, Ky., introduced him to Berea College, but his basketball coach and racially diverse Mountaineer teammates made Berea feel like home. The College's Black student population was much larger than back home in eastern Kentucky, where Phillips' loving white grandparents raised him among only a handful of other Black residents in their county. So, at Berea, Phillips enjoyed seeing more people that looked like him and not having to deal with some of the anti-Black racism he dealt with back home, at least not on campus, Phillips said.

"You'd get some locals making threats, sometimes acting on them, but I always knew I had backup," he said. "I didn't have that when I was 15, riding my bike, when a white guy pulled up beside me pointing his gun out the window. But I had backup at Berea, and I still do."

These experiences of solidarity deepened Phillips' connection to Berea's founding mission of accessible interracial co-education. This drew him closer to his friends, and he became known among his friends as the guy to talk to about money.

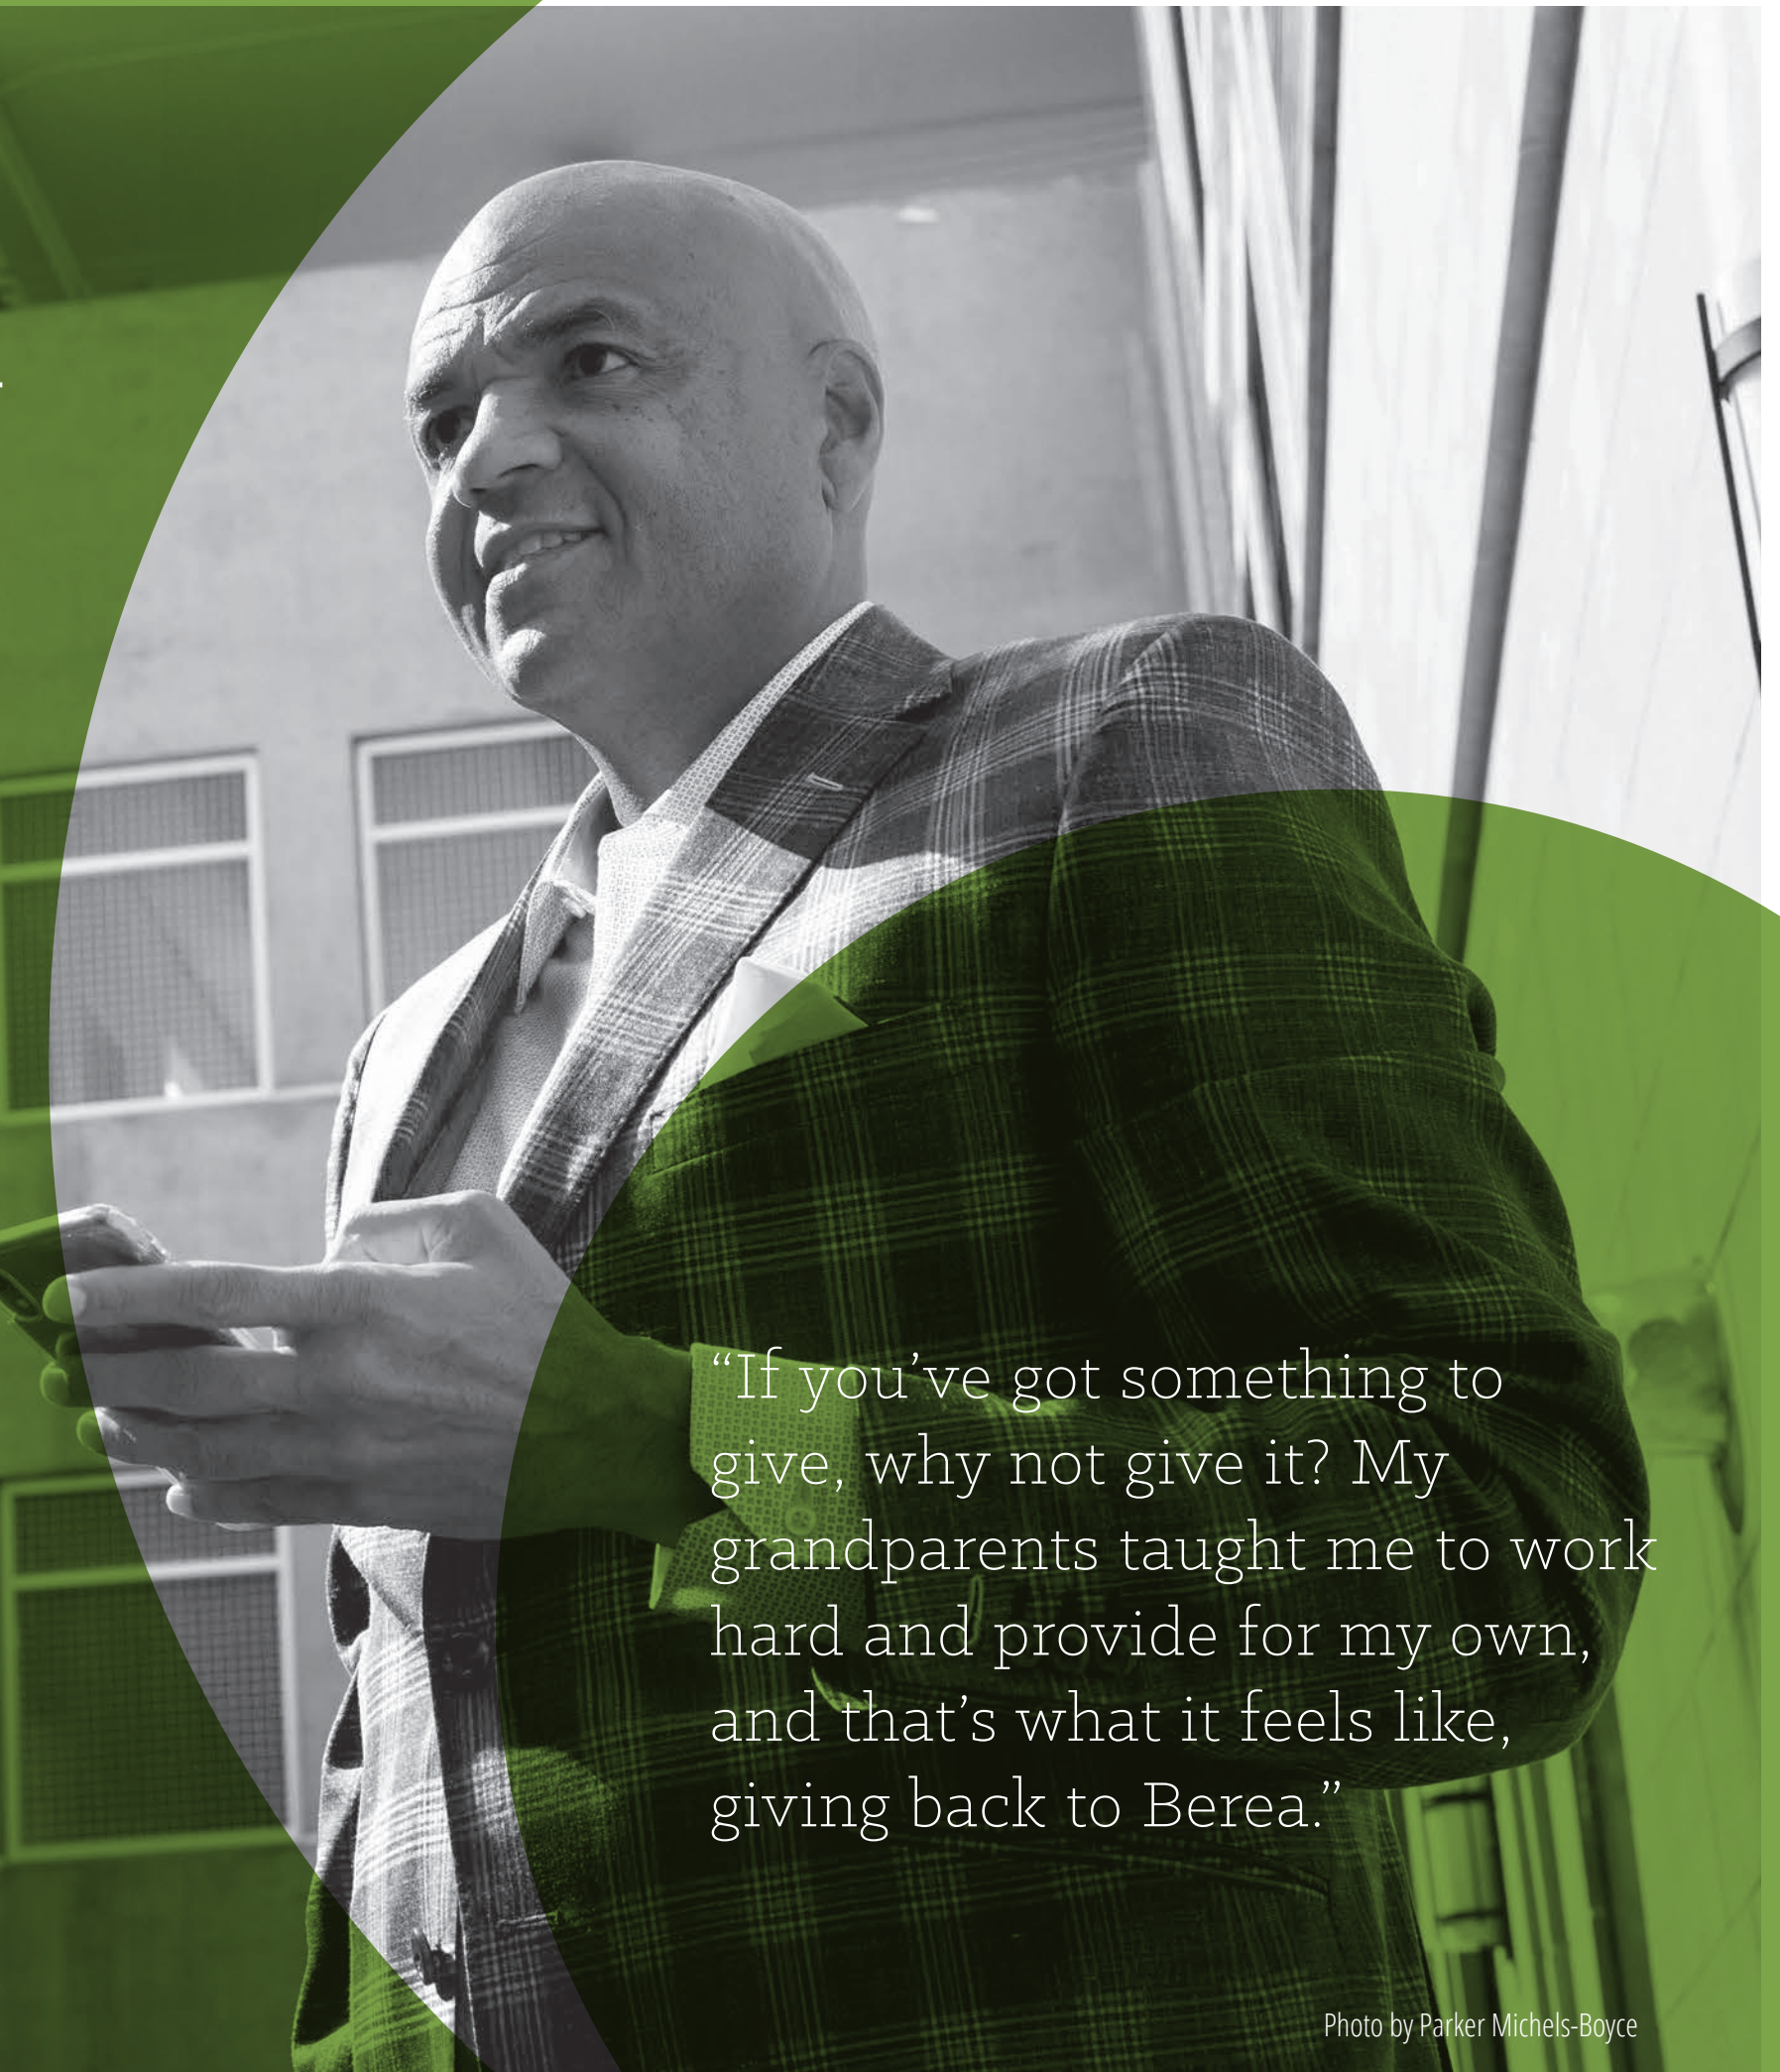

"Everybody has something to give, and all I had to give back then was financial advice," Phillips said. "Through his general store, my grandfather helped folks stay afloat back home by selling staples on credit. Since I was 8 years old, he had me running the cash register and keeping the credit accounts current, so I saw exactly how much debt he just forgave.

"With those skills I tried to help my buddies in Berea not blow their whole labor paycheck in one week," Phillips continued, laughing. "They did it anyway, but I'd give them a loan, and I kept good tabs."

Now, Phillips continues this helpful tradition by giving to Berea College; encouraging his friends to give; and providing free budget, debt repayment and retirement advice to single parents and other individuals he has encountered throughout his career.

"If you've got something to give, why not give it?" he asked. "My grandparents taught me to work hard and provide for my own, and that's what it feels like, giving back to Berea. It's what I tell my nephews and anybody who will listen: just be generous to others because somebody was generous to you." ■

"If you've got something to give, why not give it? My grandparents taught me to work hard and provide for my own, and that's what it feels like, giving back to Berea."

KINSHIP AND SERVICE TO OTHERS

BY MICHELE PEKOLA

JOE & GERRY SCARDO

While attending Berea College in the 1960s, Joe '66 and Gerry Scardo '64 were high-achieving students who valued not only the opportunity to receive a tuition-free education, but also the immersive community that encouraged them to engage with and learn from others.

Gerry, from a large family in Virginia, was raised by parents who strongly believed in education and encouraged their children to attend college. Gerry's mother passed away during her senior year in high school, and her father was disabled because of a severe back injury, making financing higher education impossible. Gerry was familiar with Berea College because her brother and uncle, as well as several people from her hometown of Meadows of Dan, Va., had attended. It was her best and likely only opportunity, so she eagerly applied and was accepted.

While at Berea, Gerry met Joe, a fellow biology major who made his way to Berea as a transfer student from Clinch Valley College, now known as the University of Virginia's College at Wise. Together, Joe and Gerry studied, participated in the labor program, and developed a life-long commitment to service as well as an appreciation for human dignity and a strong belief in the kinship of all people.

In March 1965, Joe joined 58 students and faculty who traveled to Selma, Ala., to march with thousands of others to Montgomery, Ala., for voting rights and equality. Joe and Gerry were amazed earlier this year when they found the itinerary for that historic trip.

"That was the paper that was meant to be found," Gerry said.

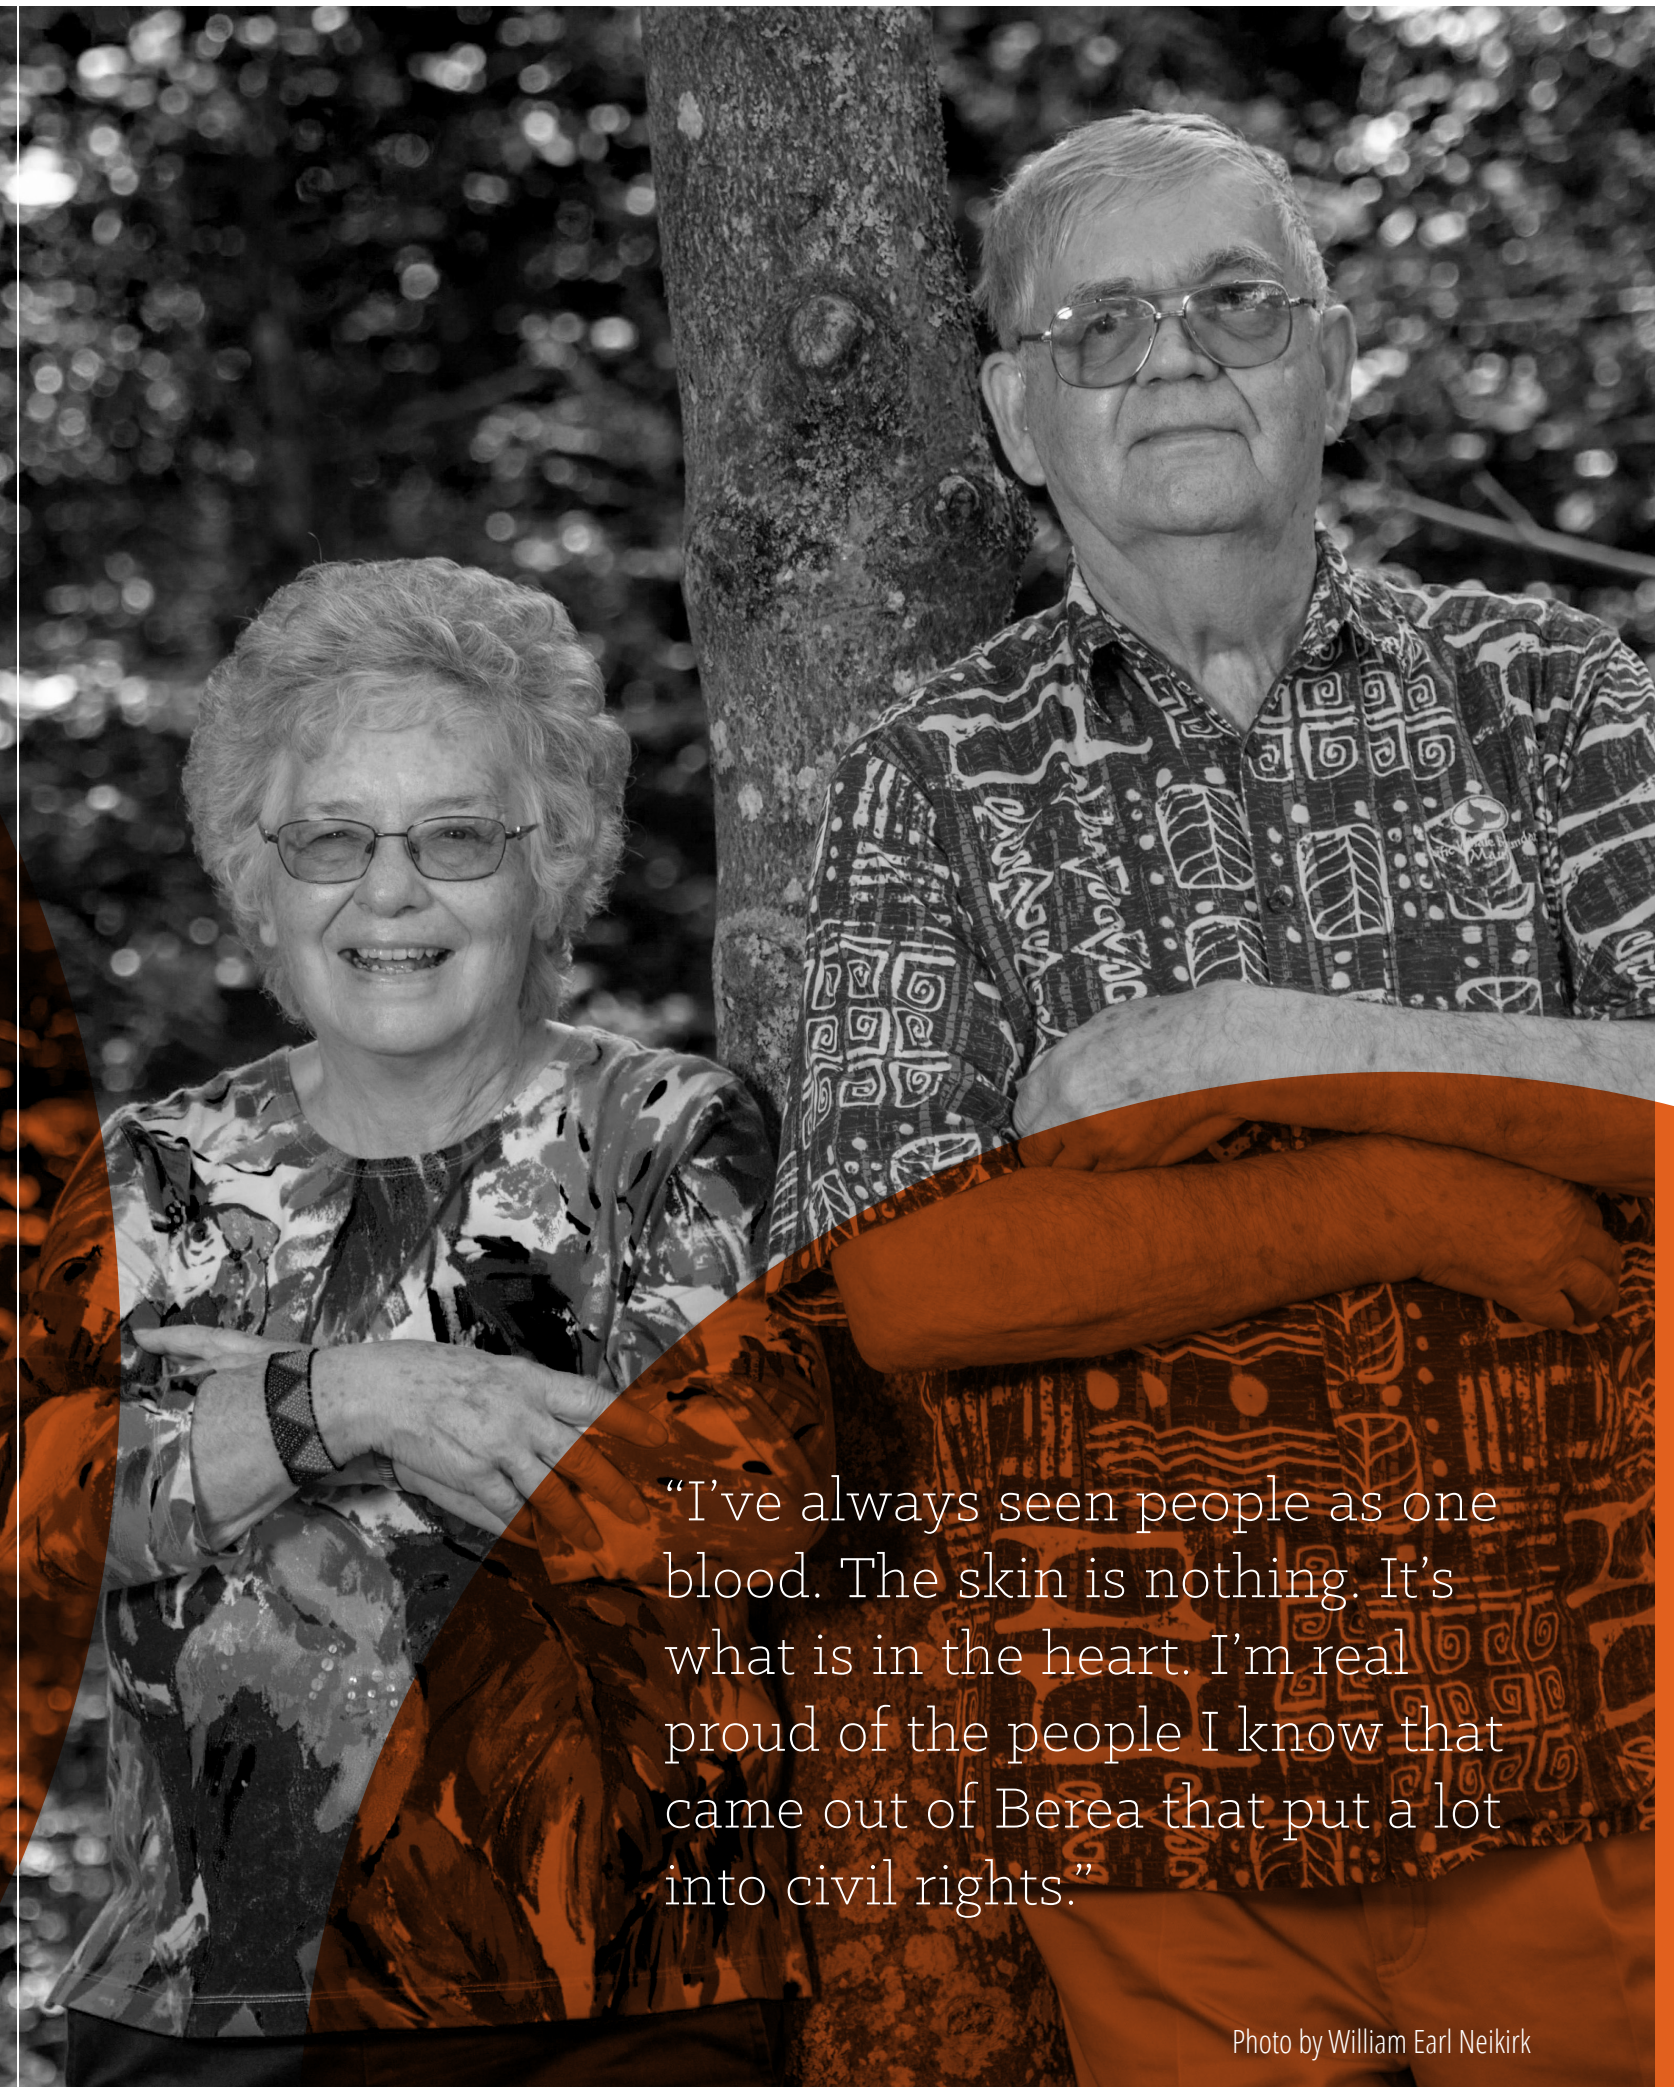

The itinerary showed that the group from Berea left campus at 5:15 p.m. on March 24 and was scheduled to arrive in Montgomery between 7 and 9 a.m. on March 25. This long journey resulted in a scheduled rendezvous with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and many others, who marched to the capitol building in Montgomery. That march took place just 18 days after "Bloody Sunday," so named because of the vicious attacks that had been leveled at peaceful marchers in Selma. The violence, all of which had been aired on television, shocked America and the world. According to Gerry, Joe was not afraid; he wanted to go. The two have often spoken about that critical time in American history and how it impacted them.

"I've always seen people as one blood," Gerry said. "The skin is nothing. It's what is in the heart. I'm real proud of the people I know that came out of Berea that put a lot into civil rights."

The ideal of kinship to others is the basis of their commitment to service; Joe and Gerry have both volunteered their time and energy to help others. Joe spent 20 years as a volunteer fireman, served his local Kiwanis Club and provided leadership in bringing a mental health facility into their county. Gerry has focused much of her time on civic and environmental efforts.

"All my work is ahead of me, not behind me," Gerry said, referring to her continued volunteer efforts. She retired last year.

Their time and experiences at Berea and the lifelong commitments they learned also inspire them to support the College. "We really treasure Berea," Gerry said. "Seeding the mountains and the country with people with knowledge and skills is needed. There's just so much we can do, and everybody can't do a lot, but it sure can add up when everybody does a little bit. It's the best investment [donors] could make in these young people." ■

"I've always seen people as one blood. The skin is nothing. It's what is in the heart. I'm real proud of the people I know that came out of Berea that put a lot into civil rights."

INSPIRATIONAL

There's no better word for 52 years of consecutive giving to Berea College.

Berea Trustee Elizabeth Culbreth '64 began giving back to her alma mater in 1965. Her faithfulness and love of Berea inspire us—that's why we recognize all those who make consecutive gifts to Berea by welcoming them into the Elizabeth Culbreth Society. Gifts must be made in five or more consecutive years for membership.

Elizabeth Culbreth Society members are noted in the enclosed Honor Roll of Donors with a symbol.

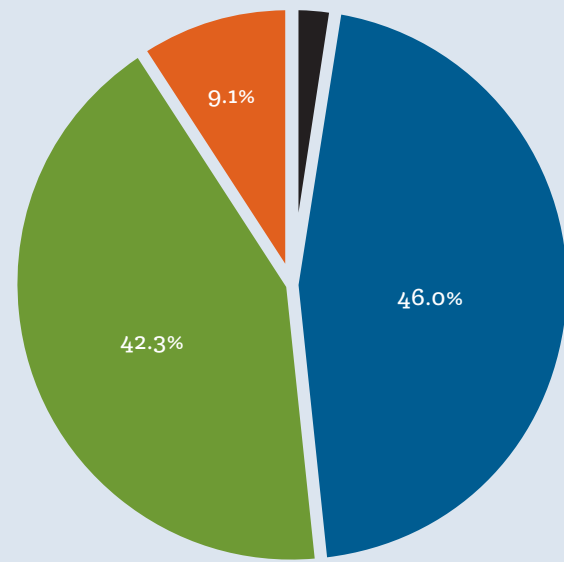

You and all those who follow Culbreth's shining example sustain the Berea mission.

SETTING A NEW PACE

The Carter G. Woodson Center for Interracial Education launched a new program called PACE, which focuses on four pillars of scholarship: Poverty, Anti-Racism, Coalition building and Education. Each academic year the center will bring speakers associated with these pillars to present to the campus and community. The first speaker for this inaugural year was Dr. Karsonya Wise Whitehead with her talk titled, "How to Get in Good and Necessary Trouble Right Now: Strategies for Redeeming the Soul of America."

Whitehead is an educator, author, radio host, speaker and documentary filmmaker who is known as the #blackmommyactivist. She is an associate professor of Communication and African and African American Studies at Loyola University in Maryland. She is a three-time New York Emmy-nominated documentary filmmaker. Listen to her PACE presentation at www.berea.college/PACE-Whitehead.

A PLACE TO BELONG

BY ABBIE TANYHILL DARST '03

VERONICA MAURATIC

Veronica Mauratic '22 spent her childhood constantly moving—never feeling settled, never feeling like she belonged. She homeschooled herself through middle school and finally landed in Somerset, Ky., where she attended high school and was taken under the wings of caring and invested teachers. As a strong student, Mauratic drew the attention of Educational Talent Search, which identifies and assists low-income students who have the potential to succeed in higher education. Early in her junior year, one of her teachers introduced her to the idea of Berea College and brought her for a tour.

“The second I stepped onto campus, I knew this was exactly where I wanted to be,” Mauratic recalled.

During her tour, the student tour guide was stopped by a professor who genuinely knew the guide. Their friendly interaction captured Mauratic’s attention.

“That was important to me because having moved around a lot, I didn’t have a lot of people who I felt connected with,” she said. “I was really needing somewhere where I was going to be able to connect with people, and they were going to actually want to know who I was rather than just exist there.”

Mauratic graduated high school in only three years and came to Berea ready for a fresh start. Although her first job working at the student café wasn’t exactly what she’d wanted, and her roommate never showed up—leaving her with a room to herself—she made the most out of each situation. She formed great friendships with her coworkers, hosted game nights in her room and enjoyed the simplicity of having a room to herself for the first time ever, she said.

Initially an education major with an emphasis in math with hopes of becoming a teacher, Mauratic has since switched to a double major in child and family studies (CFS) and math. “I want to go into some sort of non-profit and help children in that way,” she explained.

She also began working with the Office of Student Success and Transition, where she relishes her ability to meet and help first-year students as they learn to navigate college. Experiences with these students and classes such as GSTR 210, an identity and diversity writing seminar course, helped Mauratic appreciate how Berea’s unique commitments impact her life.

“I love the equal opportunity—the idea that everyone on campus has worked hard to get here,” she said. “It is not something that has been handed to them. That’s important to me because I was never handed anything.

“My GSTR 210 and my intro to education class dealt a lot with race, and we talked about white privilege,” Mauratic continued. “Because of my economic status, I never thought of having any type of privilege. But now I don’t look at things with a shield over my eyes like I used to. With the Black Lives Matter movement and tensions, it’s been really beneficial to be at Berea and have that education and a better understanding of what is going on. It’s sad that there are so many people who don’t have the desire or even hint of wanting to understand what it means or to even listen to people about any of it. I’m very fortunate to have had that experience in my education courses at Berea.”

All of Mauratic’s experiences at Berea have led to her role as a Berea Patron—a group of students who give back to the College from their work assignment earnings.

“I’m willing to do even the tiniest thing I can to help Berea give this opportunity to someone like me,” she said. “I wouldn’t be anywhere else if not for Berea. The money situation was just not something I was ever going to be able to overcome. It is important to give back in that way. It feels fulfilling to give someone the opportunity to attend Berea.” ■

“I love the equal opportunity—the idea that everyone on campus has worked hard to get here. It is not something that has been handed to them.”

BY THE GRACE OF GOD

BY SAM MILLIGAN

SAM & STEPHANIE SAN

For Berea College alumnus Sam San '94, his alma mater's mission to improve lives with love over hate has always been entwined with his Christian faith, starting with learning of Berea through his childhood pastor.

As high school graduation approached for Sam's older brother, Manuel San '92, their pastor recommended Berea, where their faith, work ethic and immigrant status would be most welcome. The chance to live, learn and worship together at Berea without paying tuition sounded perfect, so perfect they could hardly believe it.

"We thought it was a scam," Sam said, smiling. "So my father wrote a letter to (math professor) Dr. J. P. Lee in our first language—Chinese—asking about Berea. To our surprise, Dr. Lee wrote a very detailed reply, in Chinese, telling us all the great things Berea does. He said it was all real."

After Manuel chose Berea, Sam set his sights on following him there to study mathematics. The brothers had leaned heavily on each other growing up as ethnic minorities in the Dominican Republic. Sam was only 7 when his family left Taiwan to make a new home in the island nation, where their native language is spoken by less than 0.5 percent of the population. But at Berea, the brothers felt a sense of belonging founded in Berea's fifth Great Commitment to "the kinship of all people...as a foundation for building community among all peoples of the earth."

To this day the brothers still live and work near each other in St. Louis, where Sam's kindness and faith have led him to serve the elderly as the chaplain for an assisted-living facility. His faith also led him to his wife, Stephanie, when the two met at a church in Virginia, where Stephanie had studied and worked since leaving Taiwan at age 19. Sharing a native tongue and unshakeable faith drew the two together, and through their love, Stephanie's appreciation of the liberal arts education Sam earned at Berea College has deepened with each passing year. She attended George Mason University for a bachelor's and earned her master's degree at American University.

"Classes for my computer science degrees were so focused on technical issues, the job side," Stephanie said. "But as I got close to Sam, I learned how well-rounded he and his education are—and he got his degree in math. I love how Berea focuses on humanities, too, which I think gives a good perspective to go with job skills. It's really wonderful."

The broad worldview Sam honed at Berea College, along with his experience as an international student, give him an even deeper appreciation for how the College allocates resources for international and out-of-state students while maintaining its commitment to low-income Appalachian students.

"Berea invests locally, but it makes a place at the table for out-of-state and international students like my brother and me," Sam said. "This is why we trust Berea as a channel for the blessings God has given us. Through Berea, our money helps people who truly are in need."

"That's why I have given to Berea ever since I graduated 26 years ago," he added. "Like God's grace, which I was not entitled to, He gives it freely. If we can pass His grace on to others, we always will." ■

CYNTHIA & JAMES HICKS

Although their time at Berea overlapped, Cynthia Hairston '79 and James Hicks '76 did not know each other as students. They were introduced by a mutual friend at a homecoming reunion in 1983, and the rest is history. The Hickses have been supporting the College for nearly 40 years. Both agree that Berea's commitment to interracial education is as pertinent as ever.

Cynthia grew up in a family with seven children, and her mother had every intention of sending each one of them off to college. The prospect seemed more and more out of reach as financial aid resources remained scarce—that is, until they found Berea. Four sisters went off to college. When it was Cynthia's turn, she became the fifth daughter in her family to attend Berea College.

Before Cynthia stepped foot on campus, she knew from her sisters' experiences that Berea was a special place. While she studied psychology, child development and education, she was blown away by the commitment to culture and diversity on campus.

"At Berea, it is an even playing field," said Cynthia, who worked in Kentucky-Talcott residence hall for her work assignment with facilities management. "We all come there with whatever we have. Once you're there, you see the different cultures and races of people that are there. Everyone is valued, no matter who you are, and you have the opportunity to include others in your world."

Cynthia pursued a teaching career after Berea and explained that she lives out Berea's commitments in her everyday life. While most are supportive of her identity as a Black teacher, not everyone is.

"God has commissioned me to be an educator for those students," she said. "Living out this commitment is just integral to my role as an educator. I have to be true to each child who steps through my door."

James was first introduced to the College by a teacher at his school in Stewartsville, Va., who asked him if he had ever heard of Berea. Once he was accepted and moved in, he knew he had made the right choice. He worked at Boone Tavern all four years of college as a desk clerk and a bellhop, among other duties.

James fondly remembers his time as a student, balancing school, labor and athletics. He was an exceptional asset to the College's track team for four years in a number of events and even set the school record for long jump in 1976. His major in business administration would set him up to work in New York as a financial analyst after graduation, and later as a mortgage processor for Bank of America. He is currently working with the Charlotte-Mecklenburg (N.C.) Schools system as an in-school suspension assistant.

Throughout his life and career, James has carried the message of Berea College.

"We are all one people. The fact that we can go to school together and live together in peace and harmony—I think if the world could really see Berea, it would be a better place," James said.

The Hickses acknowledged that there have been issues in the past and present that challenged the College's dedication to equality, but the institution has always remained true to its commitment. "God is love," James said, "and you find that at Berea." ■

"We are all one people. The fact that we can go to school together and live together in peace and harmony—I think if the world could really see Berea, it would be a better place."

A SANKOFA JOURNEY OF DISCOVERY

The biennial Civil Rights Seminar and Tour began in 2013 as a counterpart to the College's Appalachian Tour. The former revisits the work of civil rights activists, many of whom had connections to Berea College. For faculty and staff, the weeklong experience is both a physical journey from Kentucky to parts of South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee and Georgia and a spiritual journey of study and life-changing discoveries.
