BFBS is under fire

THE BFBS military radio and TV network is soon to become a victim of UK defence cuts, raising concerns that its reputation for unbiased reporting may be lost.

The British Forces Broadcasting Service, the prime broadcaster in the Falklands, is to be put out to tender, says The Guardian.

It claims the move would effectively "dismember" the 30-strong independent news team, raising fears that the "values and ethos" of the service would be lost because large military contractors with no experience of objective news reporting could bid to run it as a money-making scheme.

The Guardian says BFBS has a tradition of standing apart from government publicity agencies and PR machines and, while supportive of the armed forces, it aimed to provide credible and unbiased news from teams of dedicated reporters. The successful bidder is expected to take over in 2013.

British forces radio has its roots in North Africa during the Second World War, when the British army in Algiers set up an experimental radio station in a harem. After the war it moved to Hamburg.

Correction to fishing story

IN the printed version of last week's Penguin News and the early electronic version, reference was made in the front page lead story to the owners of the fishing vessel Baffin Bay being Consolidated Fisheries Ltd.

This was incorrect. British flagged F/V Baffin Bay holds licences for loligo and finfish in Falklands waters with Beauchene Fishing.

She is owned by Falklands company South Atlantic Squid Ltd, a Falkland joint venture company owned by local company Beauchene Fishing Co Ltd. The Penguin News apologises for any embarrassment or confusion this may have caused.

Chamber refused talks on telecoms

THE Chamber of Commerce has expressed grave concerns over the public consultation period for the Telecommunications Bill 2011, which ends today.

A request for both an extension to the consultation period and a public meeting on the subject – submitted by the Chamber on February 24 – was turned down by the Regulator, Andrew Newman, who is quoted as telling the Chamber last week: "Whilst I accept that there is only one week left of the consultation period, I cannot allow any extension to the consultation period."

"There is simply no scope for an extension at this stage."

"The time line for this bill in terms of coming before LEGASS is very tight. It also has a very important impact on several other ongoing areas of regulation of the exclusive licence holder that FIG is actively involved in."

"These areas have taken a larger amount of effort than this single amendment bill and therefore cannot be sidetracked or delayed as a result of extension of the consultation period on this bill."

But members of the Chamber have rejected the response, and claim elements of the bill are not only "unacceptable," but also raise concerns over the position of C&W (Cable & Wireless) as the monopoly telecoms provider.

"In our opinion, the intention of the bill should have been to encourage C&W to compete properly and, with its in situ advantage, be able to provide customers in the Islands with the best and most competitive service which they would then no doubt choose to use," the Chamber said in a statement issued to the Penguin News on Wednesday.

"We do not believe this has been achieved with the current wording of the bill. We feel that the bill further entrenches the position of the C&W monopoly and has implications on the human rights of all Falkland Islanders."

"It is unacceptable that the proposed Code of Conduct is unlikely to be completed by the time the bill is gazetted. FIG should ensure that the Code of Conduct is sufficiently robust to ensure that C&W are not able to abuse their position as the pass-through agent if the pass-through service is accepted. The Code of Conduct is where the key elements of protection will be most visible and where the 'detail' will be.

"The Code of Conduct has to be approved by FIG, so cannot be adopted by C&W unilaterally if FIG is not happy with it."

"Establishing the Code of Conduct is an essential part of the process as the proposal in the legislation and the Code of Conduct provide more layers of protection for the customer."

The Chamber's statement also questions the legitimacy of the pass-through service charge to be paid to C&W by people who have purchased their own V-Sat systems independently: "We reject the principle of the surcharge for the pass-through service, and feel that if it was to be applied, that 15% is far too high a figure."

"This fee is excessive for what is effectively an administrative charge. It is important to understand how the figure was arrived at, and more explanation of this is felt necessary."

FALKLAND ISLANDS

AS mentioned in the Legislative Assembly, this paper has shown a keen interest in immigration matters recently.

We regret the waste of hard-working people who leave here because they see no prospect of ever belonging, particularly as we believe – along with the Economic Development Strategy – that a substantial and fairly rapid growth of the workforce is necessary to avoid the future erosion of our quality of life.

It was disappointing to find that the amendments to the Immigration Ordinance passed last week were all about exclusion rather than inclusion. It is even more disturbing that the universally applauded retiring Attorney General allowed the drafting of some legislation which appears distinctly questionable and enormously difficult to administer fairly, because it is based, not on past evidence, but on supposition.

Let's roll back the clock to February 2009, when Falkland Islanders Peter and Daniel Biggs proudly posed beside a Falkland Islands flag on the summit of Mount Aconcagua. If this flag had been discovered in a backpack when they flew into Argentina, and if the immigration officials involved had enjoyed the powers now invested in their MPA equivalents by the newly passed Immigration Amendment Bill 2011, then their expedition might have gone no further.

Let us prohibit the entry into the Falklands of terrorists, criminals and the like by all means, but legislation banning people on the unverifiable supposition that things they might do or say could provoke others to commit offences, seems to me to be not only too subjective to be fair, but it also places an enormous burden on the officials involved in such a decision and makes us look naïve and childish as a country.

It is all very well for Cllr Short to seek to reassure "civil libertarians" like me that there are a series of tests that have to be applied and passed before these measures can be brought into bearing on a person. I remember being given a similar reassurance when a gun was placed on the fisheries patrol boat.

In reality, when the plane lands at MPA a decision about a suspect passenger has to be taken in the short space of time before it takes off again, or we end up accommodating someone for at least a week at the public expense.

Heroic run raises more than £500

DOG handler, RAF Police Corporal and ultra-runner Mark Ginger this week staked his claim as the first person to run from MPA to Stanley – and back again.

Setting off at 5.30am on Monday, he arrived six hours later at the Police Station in Stanley, and stopped for just an hour before heading back.

All in the name of Help for Heroes, he spoke to the Penguin News at the halfway point, and said the strength of support in town had helped keep him going. "People know what's going on and they've been out tooting horns and donating to the cause," he said. "I'd heard of people running to Stanley but, as far as I know, no one has ever run back in 24 hours, so I thought why not?"

The glorious weather was a surprise on the day. The dust was stinging eyes a bit but he was in high spirits about the route back.

Fundraisers Katrina Sullivan and Craig Bentley of the RAF MP dog handlers were rattling their bucket around Stanley on Monday. "The supermarkets were full of really generous people and we even got the Governor," said Katrina.

Mark finished his heroic effort in 16:05 hours, arriving back at the Joint Services Police Station in the early hours of Tuesday, and delighted with contributions totalling more than £500 from the people of Stanley helping surpass their desired total of £1000.

"The last nine miles were the worst. It was pretty cold and hard going," he said. A website link at www.justgiving.com/mark-ginger will remain open for a while if anyone else would like to donate to the cause. Donations can also be made at Stanley Police Station.

Drinking causes loss of previous good name

SAMANTHA Davies and Thomas Elsby, both of Stanley, were given conditional discharges for a period of 12 months by Senior Magistrate John Trevaskis on Wednesday.

Mr Trevaskis took the unusual step of sentencing and addressing both together, although they appeared before the court on separate charges.

Miss Davies admitted assault by beating on December 28, and Mr Elsby admitted committing an assault leading to actual bodily harm on January 30. In each assault, one partner in what was described as a "stormy relationship" had been a victim of the other.

It was obvious, said Mr Trevaskis, that the underlying factor in each case was the excessive consumption of alcohol, leading not only to a loss of control, but now to the loss of the previous good name of each young person.

IN a separate hearing, Delroy Kevin Leo, currently living at Hillside Camp, pleaded guilty in Wednesday's court to taking a military vehicle without either permission or insurance.

The court was told that on Sunday February 27, between 2.15am and 5.30am, Mr Leo had taken one of two Land Rovers kept for the use of military at the Mount Kent base where he was then employed as a civilian contractor, in order to go fishing at Estancia Creek.

Sentencing in this case was deferred until March 16 when Mr Leo is due to be sentenced for two other unrelated offences for which he is currently on bail.

Luxton: Argentina still waging a 'vicious war'

VETERAN Councillor Bill Luxton aimed a fierce broadside against Argentine government propaganda and pressure on the Falklands, supported by several colleagues at Friday's Legislative Assembly.

"Although their government seems to have given up murdering its own people for the time being, it is still conducting a vicious war with the Falklands on the economic and political front," said Cllr Luxton.

"So far we must seem to the outside world to have been somewhat supine, and I for one am fed up with it."

Earlier Cllr Glenn Ross said he favoured options that would "put us in control and make us more sustainable and independent." He continued: "We do at times like to play the defenceless victim. I think it is a time to be bold and assertive."

Cllr Dick Sawle also said: "I look forward to the time when we are no longer held to ransom by the illogical, irresponsible and downright absurd tactics of unfriendly nations."

No rise in airfares says ITT

FALKLANDS travel operator ITT says it has received no notification of any pending airfare increases, despite Friday's announcement by LAN that it would raise its international fares by between 8 and 12 per cent because of higher global oil prices.

Jennie Forrest of ITT told the Penguin News there had been no airfare increases from the Falklands, and that ITT "have not had any notification of fare increases," although a fuel surcharge increase had taken effect last week.

Mrs Forrest said: "There has been an increase in fuel surcharges and that increase currently stands at £17 each way between the Falklands and Chile."

"Fuel surcharges do move up and down according to the market price for oil; this is the first increase we have seen for a long time because the price of oil, until recently, has been static."

Mrs Forrest said airfares from the Falklands to Santiago ranged from £614-£846 return, and a return trip to London costs from £1627-£1923. All airport taxes are included in these fares except a departure tax of £22 from the Falklands, which is payable locally.

"Their constant antics have been useful to us in that they have effectively managed to destroy any bridges they have tried to build in the past through their own actions."

While it was apparent some form of action was being planned by councillors, the form such action might take was not made clear, nor was it clear whether the chosen arena for the fight would be political or economic.

However, Cllr Ross's statement gave some clues: "There are many issues being worked on, and it is a little frustrating that we are unable to say too much about them at this time."

"There are some exciting initiatives and opportunities and I hope the numbers fall in our favour. I would like to thank the Development Corporation and government officials for their work on these issues."

Cllr Gavin Short added: "A good deal of what is happening must stay out of the public's gaze for some time yet, and some of it may never see the light of day, but you can be assured there are great efforts afoot to try and ensure that our country has the tools to continue on its path of economic expansion."

Cllr Sawle continued in the same vein: "Many things are happening in the Falkland Islands and I hope that soon we are going to be able to announce plans to enhance our economy and reduce dependence on unfriendly countries."

Meanwhile, Cllr Luxton was in no mood to take Argentina's bullyboy tactics lying down: "I would like to see us go on the offensive, loudly and often, to counteract the lies and propaganda that emanates from the Casa Rosada from a president whose stability even the Americans seem to query at one stage," he said.

"Take note, Mrs Kirchner; we have more right to our country than you and your people have to yours, and many of us have probably been here far longer."

"Certainly there are families represented round this table going back many generations more than you."

New Bill to keep out undesirable visitors

"AS things stand now there is an almighty log-jam of good hard-working people who just can't make the grade."

These were the words of Councillor Gavin Short during a lengthy reference to immigration in his adjournment speech at the end of the Legislative Assembly meeting on Friday.

However, anyone in that log-jam who was hoping the Immigration Amendment Bill 2011 passed at Friday's meeting of LegCo might make help them "make the grade" was in for a disappointment.

The Bill, presented in anticipation of a more comprehensive revue of the Immigration Ordinance promised for later in the year, contained just three clauses designed to address what were described as "inadequacies, which had been recently identified."

It was not about letting the right people in, but all about keeping the wrong ones out.

While the previous Ordinance allowed the Governor to designate "categories of persons" whose entry into the Islands should be prohibited, the revised version allows him to prohibit the entry of particular individuals, in the name of the public good.

More power is given to immigration officers to prohibit the entry of individuals in a new Clause 5 to the Ordinance.

This power may be exercised where the presence of a person represents a threat to national security or the conduct of foreign policy.

More controversially, also listed by the Chief Executive as reasons for prohibition of entry under the new clause are cases where an individual might cause "activities leading to an infringement of the law," where their actions or "the expression of extreme views" might provoke others into committing an offence or result in civil unrest.

The previous legislation allowed for an application for a work permit or residents' permit to be turned down on the grounds that pre-existing medical conditions of an applicant or dependents might cause a burden on public resources.

The amended legislation now extends the grounds for such a refusal to include the applicant or dependent's educational needs.

Cllr Short said: "To quell any alarm bells that may be ringing with civil libertarians there has to be a series of tests that have to be applied and passed before these measures could be brought into bearing on a person; they can't just be made up and applied because we don't like the school they went to or something strange like that."

Legislative Assembly Diary

Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

IN spite of seemingly much more important political matters, missing and late mail continues to be the most frequent issue raised with me by Stanley constituents. Despite multiple assurances in recent months that there was no backlog, the message now is that the Post Office staff members simply do not know. Last week I received airmail dated July, November and December 2010 and January and February 2011 so perhaps we are seeing some results.

THE number of illex squid jiggers arriving in the harbour in recent weeks is encouraging. However, whether that translates into licence fees is dependent not only on the numbers and aggregation of squid, but on whether ocean conditions persuade them to bear left instead of taking a right as they approach our conservation zones. Policy for a good many years now has reduced our dependence on illex licence fees which, at their peak, used to raise the equivalent of the annual FIG salary budget. Now we have to regard such income as an occasional bonus. Likewise, I believe that the income generated by the current round of oil exploration must be treated as a windfall as there is no guarantee that it will continue. All this makes the budget round now underway as difficult as ever.

STRINGENT budgets apart, as a small country we ask much of our civil servants. Many work long hours to keep things moving. My concern about fairly spurious paperwork is not based on an aversion to proper appraisal and risk assessment but on the proliferation of plans. The Island Plan, once a simple outline, is now a very complex document with some targets which are unfortunately not just "aspirational," to quote a member of the previous Assembly, but unrealistic. A great deal of time is also expended on departmental business plans; do they mesh with the Island Plan and, more importantly, do they recognise the policy priorities of this Assembly? On balance I would prefer more time spent implementing the policies on which we were elected. A proliferation of meetings gives an impression of industry not always borne out by results.

Stanley's great vegetable heist

IF ever I had to be reminded of the parochial nature of community journalism, the saga of the Phantom Cabbage Snatcher of old Stanley town (as reported in recent issues of the Penguin News) did the job.

Covering this story has been a pretty serious business for PN and, in best tabloid fashion, the journos have reported speculation that the mysterious figure which wanders the streets of Stanley in the darkest hours with a sack and a garden spade might have been trying to sabotage other gardeners' chances at the Horticultural and Home Produce Show.

Indeed, there was evidence to support this theory, as some cabbages had been removed with their roots intact. Yes, the brassica burglar intended to replant them.

The police are taking it seriously. Apparently at least one house was searched ("just the sprouts, Ma'am") and a man was quizzed at the station for five hours ("for the last time, just admit it, you're a vegetarian").

I've often thought that Stanley is like Ambridge with attitude, and now I know it. This story would be gold dust to the people who write the Archers' scripts. Most of Shakespeare's best yarns were created from stories he'd picked up elsewhere, so why shouldn't the Archers scribes borrow the true tale of the Phantom Cabbage Snatcher?

When this plot line does appear, a pound to a penny it will be timed around the village vegetable show, and Burt Fry (that hoary-handed yeoman type who spends most of his time up to his elbows in David Archer's silage) will be nicking Linda Snell's prizewinning marrows. Linda, however, will exhibit her well-known noble-oblige and forgive Burt.

Will the good people of Stanley, whose runner beans have done a runner and whose turnips have turned-up in someone else's stew, be so generous?

They may take pity on and forgive the perpetrator, but punishment will be delivered in the form of public humiliation.

That's the inherently nasty thing about a small town: everyone knows everything about everyone, and an exposed veggie-nicker, even a contrite one, will forever be tarred with Tomorite.

A blockade it is

THERE is a rich history of people reaching for euphemisms when trying to avoid the emotion of the word blockade.

That's understandable, because it is such a powerful word.

At the time of the Cuban Missile Crisis, President Kennedy described his successful effort to stop Russian ships reaching Cuba as a

Bound Ungagged

Graham Bound, founding editor of the Penguin News, looks at issues at home and abroad

"quarantine." I believe the Israelis describe their naval blockade of Gaza as "trade controls" or something similarly mealy-mouthed.

I found the Penguin News's recent coverage of the difficulties and shortages caused by the Argentine "quarantine" and "trade controls" disturbing and, strangely, all the more dignified because that emotive word was avoided.

My friends in Stanley tell me that shops now frequently run out of essentials, like flour, making life in the Islands today sound increasingly difficult like that of the 1960s.

The shipping link with Britain remains untouched, of course, but it will take time to redirect trade away from Chile and back to the UK. And anyway, why should it be necessary? According to PN, Islanders are finding it increasingly difficult to stomach the Argentine action, and some at least want to take direct action, although I do not see what that might be. That emotion is very understandable.

The revolutionary Harrier Jump Jet

But they shouldn't play into the hands of Buenos Aires by doing anything like banning Argentine citizens from visiting, particularly the next-of-kin of those unfortunate young men who died for the sake of Galtieri's ego in 1982. Allowing these visits reflects well on Islanders.

A move to stop visits would allow the Argentine Government to don their halos and point at the Islanders as the unreasonable elements in the dispute.

The truth is that by convincing its neighbouring countries that they should forbid visits by British or Falkland ships travelling to and from the Islands, and insisting that all vessels travelling there must obtain Argentine permits, Buenos Aires is acting aggressively. This makes their proclaimed policy of pursuing their claim only by diplomatic means look very disingenuous.

If you impose a quarantine... oh, all right, a blockade on a people, you are denying them their rights of free travel and trade. There is nothing less diplomatic than that.

Back to the plot

IT occurred to me that there might be a connection between my two previous pieces. Is it not just possible that the Phantom Cabbage Snatcher is not a villain; rather he is simply a dad - perhaps even a mum - forced into nocturnal gardening, and ultimately the humiliation of discovery, by food shortages? I think I have a point.

Charity is in order. Would we blame a person from stealing some lowly spuds to feed his hungry family if he had no other option? No, of course not.

Harrier's home

SOME weeks ago in this column, I mentioned that that it might be possible to give a retired Harrier jet fighter a home in the Falklands.

I believe a static Harrier, with a permanent exhibition explaining its significance, would be an appropriate reminder of the role this potent plane played in liberating the Falklands. I did not hear from anyone after writing that, but then I was just floating an idea. Since then I have spoken to a few friends in the Navy Air Arm, who feel the MoD would give a Harrier to the Falklands. But we - if indeed a like-minded "we" can be brought together - would need to move fast.

These aircraft will be disposed of quickly, and the few survivors will be snapped up by museums in the UK. An aircraft could probably be acquired for a nominal amount, and it might be shipped to the Falklands cheaply or even for free aboard a Navy or RFA ship.

But we would need to know that people want it in Stanley, and there would need to be an early dialogue with the planning authorities if it was to be exhibited in the open air - perhaps at Stanley Airport.

The initiative would need an active committee in the Falklands and a few people at this end.

If, like me, you would like to see a Harrier given a home in the place where it cut its combat teeth, then please contact me at the email address below, or write to me at Lower Ground Floor Flat, 33 St Quintin Ave, London, W10 6NX. But please don't wait: act now.

Oh, and if someone, or a group of people, already has this in hand, then that's great.

Police, pay, Museum and SAAS deal before ExCo

KEEPING the police going in a legal direction, a minimum wage for 16 and 17-year-olds, support for the Museum's move to the Dockyard, and coming clean about the terms of FIG's financial support to SAAS were just some of the 22 items on the February agenda of Executive Council (ExCo).

Sitting last Thursday were Councillors Sharon Halford, Jan Cheek and Glenn Ross. This was also Attorney General David Pickup's final ExCo.

Remitted to the Legislative Assembly meeting of the following day was a paper detailing the supplementary appropriation of £1,172,750.

This was to be advanced from the contingencies fund as approved by Standing Finance Committee (SFC) at its meetings of October 20 and January 27.

Cllr Ross said £1 million of this figure related to "changes to the accounting treatment of funds allocated in support of shipping, so that they must now be appropriated from the Consolidated Fund as an operating subsidy rather than financed as a loan from the Capital Equalisation Fund."

This definition of FIG's assistance to the South American Atlantic Service (SAAS) as a subsidy rather than a loan accords exactly with the previously expressed view of many.

A paper setting the minimum wage level for 16 and 17-year-olds at £3 per hour was reviewed and approved by ExCo, who also agreed to the same inclusions and exclusions as presently exist for employees who are 18 years and over.

The relocation of the Museum to the Government Dockyard site and estimated funding to be included in the Capital Programme was supported by ExCo, who noted that there was an ambitious target for the move to be completed by June 2012. It was also agreed that funding was to be a grant rather than a loan as the Museum and National Trust received a subvention and the need for any repayment of a loan would likely result in an increase of that subvention.

When the permitted direction of traffic along Pencil Lane was recently changed it left the Royal Falkland Islands Police (RFIP) technically breaking the law if they drove straight out from their car park onto Ross Road.

They also were likely to be held up by vehicles off-loading children if they attempted to take the legal route onto John Street, if a call came at the beginning or end of the school day. ExCo therefore agreed a paper from the Legislative Drafter recommending that the Governor make an order amending the Stanley (Various Roads) One Way Traffic Order to allow a rapid response by the police.

An order aimed at making parking easier on St Mary's Walk for patients attending the King Edward Memorial Hospital was also agreed.

Outside the published agenda, ExCo agreed to allocate funds for the 2013 Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meeting to be hosted in the Falklands, and that football field fees should be waived for one week to enable a Festival of Sport to be held in March. It was hoped that this might become an annual event.

Tim Cotter and Christy Jefferson: happy as pigs in the Trough

An intimate encounter

ROCKING hard with three little Piggies, Christy Jefferson took to the stage at the Trough on Saturday with a mellow set of bluesy ballads, highlighted with an upbeat tale of a friend's runaway snail.

Supporting her strong vocals with guitar or piano, there were many tales behind each of her songs and the crowd became enthralled with each: how she married her husband after a "love at first sight" meeting in Starbucks, soldiers coming home from Iraq, pretending to be the lesbian lover of her best friend when they were confronted with the friend's boyfriend's secret girlfriend and how she's definitely not giving up ice cream.

A more intimate gig than the venue is used to, there were tables sporting wine, snacks and a mixed crowd of families and music fans to watch her play and pick up an album or two: "The reaction has been good from people and I'm so glad," Christy said between sets.

Christy visited the Community School and Stanley House, passing on tips as a vocal coach, and said she was also excited to be going to Volunteer Point and to soak up the life here a little too.

The Fighting Pigs Band then joined her on stage for a second toe-tapping set, closing with a rousing rendition of Ring of Fire.

Nurses in the ranks

TWO new nurses have begun work at KEMH after a successful recruitment campaign identified five who were suitable for appointment due to expiry of contracts. However, some of the GPs recently interviewed indicated they would not be taking up their offer of employment as planned, and further recruitment is ongoing.

Meanwhile, the position of Team Leader Social Services remains vacant. Health and Education Services Director David Jenkins reported to the Health and Medical Services Committee.

He said Social Services continued to be "pressured across the range of their responsibilities," noting that "the team have put a lot of time into preparing several draft ExCo papers that are passed to this committee for comment."

PAC man quits

THE Public Accounts Committee has announced the resignation of Mike Forrest with effect from March 31. Mr Forrest said he had a number of personal interests coming up and believed it was best overall to resign.

Members of the committee expressed their thanks for the important contribution he had made to its first year of business.

The Wanderer

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Dear Peat.

Thank you for your letter. Yes, I am taking my medication, but no, it's not the Duke of Argyle's, thank you very much.

Tell me, have you heard about the flying cows? I was told that they fly into MPA on a Saturday. This I took with a pinch of salt (I have a stash in case of shortage) until I found out that what really comes in is bits of cow for onward sale here. Some people have complained about this, but I think it's a good way of conserving our own stocks of beef for the future - "just in case." What do you think?

The Dockyard move as proposed by Shiny Shoes - you know the one that means the Museum shifts - is really making some of the lads in the yard a bit nervous. It seems they're not sure where they're going (they could be homeless!).

But maybe the plan is to use the big concrete pad down at Doggy Corner to put up new sheds for The Gang. By the way, I personally don't believe the rumour that FIG are about to try and muscle in, via their so-called commercial arm, on the OIL BIZ onshore, using the Harrier Landing Pad, when truly independent companies have invested a lot of money and time in providing a good service. How poor would that be!?

Did you hear Tango ranting at LEGASS last week? WOW! He got so carried away he even suggested the present Assembly couldn't blame the next one for things not happening!

Do you reckon the Libyan Wizard Colonel Gandafi may come here? Would he need planning permission for his tent? And what about his bodyguards? All lumpy jumpers!!! As for his sartorial elegance, I think he would give old Sherlock up in the Big House a run for his money!!

Roadworks not making sense

DRIVING to Fox Bay last week I was absolutely amazed to see capping progress happening on one of the best parts of the West roads.

The Chartres straight, as it is known, has never rutted in the winter and at the very worst gets a few minor potholes which can easily be avoided or dismissed by slowing slightly.

This section of West Falkland road has now changed tremendously, and surely not for the best value for money when there are so many parts of our roads that simply need a grading programme to make them safer to drive on.

This particular part of our spine road has now become a dangerous drive, as opposed to a part of our road we can do 40mph comfortably and safely.

It beggars belief that the powers that be have ignored advice from members of TAC and the contractor involved (who I am sure is doing the job to the specifications stated in the contract agreed), that there are many more sections of our roads that should be addressed individually rather than the seemingly rigid/non-flexible regime that appears to be coming out of PWD.

May I ask as someone whose livelihood relies on the road system, that those farms like Main Point and (while not speaking for them) quite possibly West Lagoons, Peaks, Westley, Shallow Harbour, Dunnose Head, Shallow Bay, Dunbar, Port North, Crooked Inlet, Port Edgar, Albemarle etc, feel the same and are not forgotten? Value for money simply must be key to the maintenance programme for roads, and I am not sure we are getting that.

Putting up with a little hardship

READING the Penguin News (February 25) and in particular the letters page prompted me to make comment.

First, Jenny Macaskill's comments do highlight the way in which our paper seems to give the noisy neighbours special place, and quite often one does wonder if local media is of any importance anymore.

It is just the kind of propaganda that the Argentines usually capitalise on, so maybe all future mention of Argentina would be better in the "almost can't see" section of your paper.

But the real reason for making comment is about another letter by Mr B Peck of the same issue

Public Consultation: Proposals for a Telecommunications (Amendment) Bill 2011

The proposed Bill would establish a new regime for satellite telecommunications services, including the use of VSAT systems.

The Consultation Paper contains a detailed analysis of the Bill and it poses a number of specific questions about the Bill and the proposals in it. However, the consultation exercise is not limited to those questions and anyone who wants to comment on the Bill may raise anything in their response.

Copies of the Consultation Document and the draft Bill are available from Gilbert House.

All comments must reach Andrew Newman, Head of Regulatory Services via post to PO Box 705, via phone on 27305 or via e-mail to anewman.civilaviation@sec.gov.fk by Friday 4th March 2011.

where he makes mention of the next visit of the Argentine next of kin, which ironically is also happening on the anniversary of their invasion day.

I have to agree with Burnerd on this one; it seems we are always grovelling to please the wishes of these troublesome neighbours and never in return have the other side recognised this act of kindness that we are always offering. More to the point we are gullible enough to be used on these occasions.

I strongly believe that we should treat like with like and refuse any further next of kin visits, ships and even Argentine tourists, until they stop their bullying tactics towards us. Those that go out of their way to accommodate these visitors obviously don't care about the feelings of the majority.

We can live without the need to succumb to their tactics even if it means losing the Chile air link, which apparently is only allowed anyway because the Argentines get to use it for their own needs.

Now is the right time to say enough is enough and source a new link in a completely different direction. There are still a lot of us about that lived through the old way and we can do it again.

Those that can't will be able to make their own choices as to whether they can do without a South American link, or leave.

It is crystal clear Argentina is never going to stop tormenting the Islanders in one way or another, so why are we putting up with it?

My belief is that it is to please certain areas of political interest with Britain. Don't rock the boat so to speak or take it on the chin. There are alternatives available so why are we not developing them?

Councillors seem to prefer not to use knee-jerk reactions but, to be honest, there appears to be very little coming from the council office in this area.

Could we be seeing history repeat itself as happened in the late seventies when the local council and British Government were naive enough to assume that the Argentines would do nothing more than blow a lot of hot air?

We should not be putting up with any more of their tactics, so come on Council, represent us in the way the vast majority elected you to do.

All they want is to find an alternative, no matter the additional cost, we are prepared to suffer a little hardship. After all, that is currently what is happening right now, don't you agree?

Editor's note: As Cllr Sharon Halford mentioned during last week's meeting of the Legislative Assembly, no one, including ITT, the LAN sales agents in Stanley, has heard of the next of kin visit mentioned by Mr Peck in his original letter. Unless Mr Peck's friend in Buenos Aires is privy to information not available to Government House, it seems certain such a visit is not going to happen.

First class from start to finish

I AM writing to pass on the thanks of all the runners from MPC to the Stanley Running Club for the Cape Pembroke Half Marathon.

It was an excellent event, run on a stunning cross-country route down to the lighthouse, and the organisation was first class from start to finish.

We'd also like to say thank you to everyone who turned out to support on the route and to the team of volunteers who manned the various water stations and marked the path. It all made a real difference to those who took part. The finishers' T-shirts were being worn with pride around the base on Sunday night. We're all very much looking forward to the full marathon next month!

Warmest thanks

AS a recent visitor with the HMS Glamorgan party to commemorate the memorial to our shipmates, may I through your paper send thanks to all the Islanders for their warm welcome, and particularly to those associated with all the organisation of our stay with the arrangements for trips, etc. There will be many abiding memories of your hospitality friendly Island.

Police Chief to look into smiley speed greetings

FILM fans, especially if also fans of baseball, may remember a film called The Rookie in which an ageing would-be baseball pitcher Dennis Quaid uses a roadside vehicle speed recorder to see if he can still throw a ball as fast as he used to.

It seems that when such a speed recorder was installed some years back on Ross Road West, it was seen by some feckless drivers as an invitation to see how fast they could go.

Clearly in neither case was the machine being used for the purpose for which it was designed. Memories of this abuse were no doubt fresh in the minds of the Police Committee at their meeting last month.

Members commended a proposed investigation by Chief Police Officer Gary Finchett into a similar scheme which rewards the legal driver with a smiley face, but does not give details of the excesses of speed committed by the illegal motorist. In response to a query also relating to speeding vehicles, Mr Finchett advised that, while he did not have the exact figures to hand, he would estimate that approximately half the number of speed checks were carried out within Stanley and half on the MPA Road. The majority of speed checks in Stanley were carried out on the Bypass Road and Ross Road.

Smile: you're on speed camera

MLA Jan Cheek said she had, on three occasions, seen the Police carrying out speed checks in the area between the Police Station and Philomel Street at lunchtimes.

when it was almost impossible for traffic to travel at speed, while she continued to see speeding vehicles on Ross Road East.

Mr Finchett assured her that speed checks were being carried out at Ross Road East

The latest Falkland Islands stamp release, on sale today

Stacks and bluffs ahoy

TONY Chater's illustrations of some of the least accessible spots in the Falklands are featured in the third series of "Stacks and Bluffs" postage stamps, released today by Pobjoy Mint.

Bird Island, about 4.5km to the south-west of Stephen's Peak, West Falkland, is captured on the 3p stamp.

The 27p stamp features Eddystone Rock, charmingly first described by Elizabethan explorer Sir Richard Hawkins in 1594: "At first wee had thought (it) to be a shippe under all her sayles; but after, as we came neere, it discovered itself to be a rocke."

This isolated stack is situated some 6.5 kilometres to the north-west of Cape Dolphin.

Round Island and Sail Rock, on the western side of Whale Passage, are on the 70p stamp, and the set is completed by the depiction of Direction Island on the £1.71 stamp. Privately owned by Joan Spruce, this rugged island is situated about 1.5 kilometres to the south of Bertha's Beach, East Falkland, and rises to a height of about 5 metres above sea level.

Tim gives it all in the final few lengths

Monster Muncher & Dashing Dancer Andreas and Thomas Short

TWENTY horses and nine jockeys contested the 19 flat races at the 2011 Darwin Harbour Sports Association meeting which was held at the Goose Green racecourse.

Dashing Dancer won the Governor's Cup for a fourth time and it was owner Maurice Davis who lifted the trophy this time recording an excellent double, following his victory at the Stanley meeting.

Dashing Dancer went on to record another three victories, in the Fitzroy Cup, Lafonia Plate and Ronnie Morrison Champion Cup FIB, but settled for second place behind perennial rival Zafonic in the Owners Up race.

Following early morning rain Tim Bonner decided not to enter any of the first morning events because of his concern over the possible danger of his horses slipping when pulling-up after a race. Accordingly there was no eagerly anticipated clash of his Zafonic against Dashing Dancer in the Governor's Cup.

When they did meet in the afternoon, it was Zafonic who quickly established a lead which he was never to relinquish, and Tim Bonner punched the air with delight as he crossed the line.

Zafonic recorded a 100 per cent record at the meeting with further wins in the North Arm Plate and Cantera Champion Race Open.

However, Dashing Dancer's 14 points from five rides gave the thoroughbred the title of Champion Horse, with Serendipity finishing 11 points ahead of Zafonic and Ballanchine, with nine apiece.

Serendipity had two victories at the meeting in the Stanley Services Stakes and Port San Carlos Prize while Ballanchine won the FIC Cup.

Arthur Turner's Monster Muncher took the opening event, the Maiden Plate, in fine style.

Bred from his champion mare See Me Do It and the imported stallion Puerto Pacifico, the Monster won easily, ahead of Raindance and Costa Rica which were ridden by two 15-year-old lads, Jean Rebelledo and Macualey Davis respectively.

Raindance went on to take the Bowles Trophy over 800 yards and no doubt will feature at the Stanley meeting later in the year, and the young Chilean jockey Jean Rebelledo, who now resides in Stanley, was also a winner in the Teenagers Chase on Miami Dude, and brought the same horses home to win the Riverside Plate.

Ron Binnie did not come away empty handed this time as his Southern Dancer took the Java Battery race with hot favourite Serendipity surprisingly back in third place behind Miami Dude (J Rebelledo).

In the Port San Carlos Prize where the jockeys have to be either under the age of 25 or over 50, Southern Dancer and Ron had to settle for second place as Serendipity turned the tables with Stefan Clarke on board.

The biggest shock of the Meeting came in the Triangle Y Chase when the previously unheralded Baby Love, ridden by Arthur Turner, romped home ahead of Thyroid and Thylanda.

Those lucky enough to back the Rincon Grande mare picked up £7 for a £1 ticket on the Tote.

Baby Love, bred from the Chilean mare Watcha, repeated the act in the FIB 400, this time beating the favourite Serendipity by a short head in an exciting finish. The pay-out on Baby Love was halved on this occasion.

Duane Evans was leading the Champion Jockey table after the first day's events with 15 points, but lost Thyroid to injury, and his challenge for the title faded away.

Tim Bonner (25 points), despite missing the first morning's races, just edged out Arthur Turner (23 points) to take the Cup, which was presented by the Family of the late A C Miller. Duane's 19 points gave him third place.

There is never more than half a length between these two evenly matched horses. Later in the meeting Tim Bonner brought Thylanda home ahead of Beagle and Spirit to win the Nick Taylor Race.

There was a distinct absence of trotting horses at the meeting, but in the premier trotting event young Tom Short from Swan Inlet easily won on Duke, beating Nancy Poole on Tulsa.

Earlier Glynis Newman had taken the Des Peck Memorial Ladies Trot on Tulsa.

Jack Alazia and Sean Sackett gamely entered all the foot events, despite the miserable weather, with Jack taking the One Mile Foot and the 100 yards and finishing third in the 440 behind Nathan Lowe and Kieran Nye.

Derryn Robson beat Jack and Sean in the 880 yards. Little Carly Davis won the Ladies 100 yards ahead of Logan Dickson and Lucianne Henry.

It was not the type of weather to encourage athletes to take to the field.

Patrick Watts won the Veteran Race for the fourth time but was fortunate in that Les Harris, who was leading, inexplicably slowed down as he "wondered why no-one had passed him!" Barry Ford, on a visit from Worcester, was third.

The Public are advised that in the event of an emergency where no other form of communication are available, that the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the following frequencies.

VHF 2 metre Band

146.625, Stanley to Mount Alice

147.825 (Duplex - 0.6).....Mount Alice repeater, covering the south of West Falkland.

Marine Band

156.800, Channel 16 (Stanley area)

2.182 MHz HF

In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

It must be stressed that calling the Royal Falkland Islands Police on any of these frequencies must only be done in the event of an emergency

Tony Mills, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands
The FMI has continued its upward trend that began early last week. This week the FMI has lifted from 1268 AU (Ag) to end the week at 1286 AU/kg (794 GBP/kg). This equates to a week on week lift of 44c/kg. The exchange rate has remained flat and ended the reporting week at AUD$1.62 per £1. With the exchange rate unchanged it shows more clearly the underlying trends, which has been upward lifts across most of the micron categories we report on.
The ever present Chinese continue to dominate the buying though they are being pushed by strong competition from European buyers along with some added pressure from India and Korea. Quality of the offering has played heavy on the market especially in the finer categories. Bivalve wools continue to benefit from the lift in fine wool prices and it would appear that strong wool types will benefit from the current difficult situation in New Zealand.

Stevie Dickson claims top dog win with May

STEVIE Dickson's May retained the position of top dog at the Darwin Harbour Sports Association dog trials on Monday.

Earning just one point less than last year's victory with 111, Stevie and May put on a great performance as the last handler and dog of the day, sneaking top spot from master dog handler Les Morrison with Kharn on a countback.

When scores are equal the points earned on the outrun are taken into account and this also occurred in the novice dog competition between Brian Aldridge with Coffee and Gilberto Castro with Puma, when not only the outrun but also the lift had to be calculated so close was the contest.

Stevie also stormed to victory with Jeff in the novice dog category, working as a team with his dogs to guide the somewhat fat and sassy sheep around course.

With 18 dogs taking part in perfect weather conditions the new course layout provided lots of entertainment for spectators who overlooked the penning area.

Chief Judge Sam Sinclair, who has claimed many a prize in the past and can relate the genetics of almost every dog to appear on the course, said the standard of the trials was overall very good. He said it was his opinion that with new farming practices most handlers seemed to keep fewer dogs which received more individual attention and benefited from it.

I look forward to next year to see if Stevie can continue to build on his dog trialling reputation and to see if he enters the 100 yards foot event. It's not only his dogs that are fleet of foot: he has an impressive turn of speed himself out on that course.

Stuart wins Alex Smith Trophy

AN excellent field of 18 players signed in for the Alex Smith Trophy last Sunday.

Alex was a former Secretary and Captain of the Golf Club who continued to sponsor an annual competition in his name.

Sadly Alex died recently, but the club decided to continue the competition which this year was kindly sponsored by FIOGA, the Falkland Islands Overseas Games Association. In spite of the cold and windy conditions some good scores were recorded under the stableford scoring system.

Stuart Haines came out top with an excellent 41 points to pip Ginny Forster into second place.

Ginny scored 40 points which was three points ahead of third placed Ady Lowe. Kevin Clapp won the best front nine prize with 20 points while Bob Gilbert won the best back nine.

Nearest the pin on the 4th was won by Jimmy Forster while Glenn Ross won the nearest the pin on the 17th. Troyd Bowles won the longest drive, and there were ten birdies on the day.

There were a number of handicap changes with both Stuart and Ginny losing a shot while Adrian

Stuart Haines with putter donated to the club by the late Alex Smith

Joshua, Drew Irvine, Jimmy Forster and Tony McMullen all gained a shot.

Many thanks again to FIOGA for their continuing support of this event. This Sunday will see the penultimate monthly medal.

ICC coach trains up Falklands cricketers

LAST month the International Cricket Council Regional Development Officer for the Americas, Wendell Coppin visited the Islands on a week long trip to help aid the growth of cricket in the Falkland Islands. He came straight off the plane on February 19 to the cricket ground at MPC to watch his first match in the Falklands.

Wendell previously played for the Barbados team at an early age, and over the years has progressed to cricket coaching. He now coaches one of the West Indian fast bowlers as well as working with the ICC to develop cricket in the Americas.

His week here was used to train a couple of local cricketers to becoming Level 1 Cricket Coaches, and also hold a few coaching sessions for the children at the Community School. The bulk of his time in the Islands was spent with the Falkland Islands Cricket Team, demonstrating various training exercises in preparation for the Division Three tournament in Costa Rica in a couple of weeks time. Wendell also helped coach a couple of cricket players based at MPC. The Joint Education Centre was used to complete the relevant theory to the course. One of the training sessions was held at the MPC oval, focusing on a mixture of scenarios, where the batsmen have a set number of targets which have to be met in order to complete the session.

Wendell was certain that cricket would continue to grow in the Islands, and hopes we can organise a competitive U17 team to eventually send away to play in internationally recognised tournaments around the Americas region.

The Falkland Islands Cricket Association would like to thank everyone who was involved during Wendell's visit. Special thanks go out to Alex Lloyd at the Community School and the Leisure Centre for letting the Cricket Club use their facilities.

David Hewitt
Cricket Development Officer

Message from Argentina
Goodbye to the "Club", welcome to the "Association" !
The Argentine members of the "Falklands / Malvinas Friends Club", a club which aims to promote a rapprochement between inhabitants of the continent and the Falkland Islands, believe that, with its coming of age, some kind of make-over is appropriate. First, a big thank you to all who have supported us during nearly eleven years as members of the Club, or as attentive observers. But thank you also to those who have been suspicious of our aims and remain wary of our work. You, at least, have forced us to think carefully and go on clarifying our ideas and expressions. Henceforth, we acquire new legal status and our "Club" becomes an "Association". As ever, we extend a sincere invitation to all who sympathise with our motto "Friendship and Mutual Respect" to join with us. All islanders can be assured a warm welcome and an equal respect. Next 11th of March, an important member of our Association, will be visiting Stanley. His name is Hugo Karplus. I wish him good luck on his travel to the islands. Arch. Ricardo Gómez Kenny, Rosario, Argentina, e-mail rgomezkenny@yahoo.com.ar

I refer to the article in the PN edition No.37 of 11 February 2011 "FIDF in South Georgia". A number of people have mentioned that some of the photographs and captions seem to suggest that the personnel were very close to the wildlife. In order to avoid any misunderstandings I would like to point out that the shore party were all familiar with the SGSSI Government guidelines regarding proximity to wildlife and observed best practice at all times, despite occasionally unavoidably being required to reposition quite rapidly to avoid moving animals. Any implied suggestion to the contrary in the article was a result of "in jokes" and other banter, coupled with what I now see to be unfortunately misleading camera angles. During our visit it was very evident that visitors to South Georgia give their wholehearted support to the wildlife and biosecurity guidelines, as we did, and nobody can fail to be impressed by the work that is being done to preserve the unique environment of the island. A Eurocopter Super Puma

BI loses chopper contract

AIRCRAFT spotters in Stanley, still recovering from the excitement of being buzzed by the South Georgia Heritage Trust's rat eradication helicopters, will soon have two new helicopters to add to their list.

But although they may display livery similar to that of British International, they will belong to a different company.

AGR Petroleum Services, who operate the Ocean Guardian drilling rig, are understood to have announced that the contract to supply helicopter services to the rig, currently operated by British International, will be going to the Canadian Helicopter Company (CHC). The new company will be operating from Stanley Airport.

British International's Base Manager at MPA, Ian "Sparky" Ewen this week told the Penguin News: "It was a bit of a blow considering all the work we have put into it, but we will soldier on."

According to Mr Ewen, the rig contract had always been "a two-month renewable package" which was an add-on to their ongoing contract to supply support services to MPA. Although it was disappointing to lose the business, he said it would make no difference to their operation in the Falklands.

Sources close to the oil industry in the Falklands say CHC will be sending two of its 49 Eurocopter AS332 Super Pumas to the Falklands. The Super Puma is a four-bladed, twin-engine, medium-size, 19-seat utility helicopter marketed for both civil and military use.

New entertainment centre to go ahead

STANLEY'S proposed family entertainment centre at the site of the former Beauchene Store could be up and running by August, following conditional planning permission granted on Friday.

The brainchild of business partners Grant Budd and Jo Ellick, the £200,000 centre will boast a two-lane ten-pin bowling alley, a children's play area, a café, amusement arcade and a pool and party room – and a new 40-50 seat cinema is also in the pipeline if the centre proves a success.

"The community has been asking for something like this for years," Mr Budd told the Penguin News. "We think we've got the mix right – and I think it's going to be the icing on the cake for the centre of Stanley."

The idea for the centre came about almost three years ago, when Energise owner-director Mr Budd and Seafish Falklands accountant Jo Ellick were both independently looking at similar possibilities.

"We decided to get together on this project and we've been working on it since April 2009," said Mr Budd. "I used to live in a city and you have everything at your door. Since I had my children I became aware that this was what Stanley is missing."

For Mrs Ellick the inspiration came from a wet and miserable Sunday afternoon, when she realised her children had little to amuse themselves.

"There isn't any indoor facility that kids can go to other than the Leisure Centre," she said.

Taking up about 70 per cent of the space occupied by the Beauchene Complex in John Street, the centre will open from 10am to 10.30pm seven days a week, and employ at least four full-time staff plus a manager.

The automated bowling alley, with flat screens displaying the scores, will be the "real McCoy," according to Mr Budd, who plans to import top-of-the-range equipment from China. Another first for the Falklands will be the indoor soft play park area, a two-storey high adventure playground featuring crawl tubes, a slide, a ball pool and soft apparatus, enclosed by two interior glass walls. Designed for children aged 4-12, it will also incorporate an area specifically for toddlers.

A ten-pin bowling alley similar to this is planned at the centre

A soft play park ball pit

"The centre is not only for young kids," said Mrs Ellick. We are targeting families and adults as well. And corporate groups can use it for team building exercises."

A small café will serve basic meals and snacks, together with beer, wine and cider.

But Mr Budd emphasised it would not compete with other food or drink outlets.

"We need something like that as a meeting place, for parents picking up their kids, for example.

Adults coming along to go bowling after work are going to want a drink. But this is not a pub, and we will not be serving bottles."

The application attracted two letters expressing a number of concerns, but most of these had been addressed, the Planning and Building Committee heard.

Environmental Planning Officer Antony Payne recommended it be refused on grounds of insufficient parking, but committee members agreed the proposed use should be encouraged, and granted conditional permission for the centre to go ahead.

Mr Budd and Mrs Ellick, who will operate the centre under the business name of Gojo's, say their next step is now to raise the necessary funds.

"I think it will be very important for Stanley," said Mrs Ellick. "It represents a huge injection into the economy, not just by creating an additional five jobs but also by bringing different cultures in our society together."

Mr Budd added: "If this is well supported there is every possibility we will change the remaining units in the complex into a cinema and, if it starts paying for itself, then we will look at something bigger, maybe on the edge of town."

"But it's really up to the community to support this. It is absolutely important."

FALKLAND ISLANDS

MUCH is made of the relatively poor provision in Stanley for youngsters and young adults in particular to amuse themselves.

Yes, the Leisure Centre is a terrific facility, and the jewel in the crown for those with fitness and sporting ambitions. But it is still not enough to satisfy the needs of a young population which demands variety as well as fun and games.

Some in the community, of course, have worked tirelessly in an effort to offer alternative outlets, most notably in recent years Stevie and Kate Burston's success in running the Shack youth club for under 15s, for which they deservedly were awarded the Queen's Certificate and Badge of Honour.

When they were presented with their awards, dozens of youngsters turned Government House into an upmarket version of the club in a glowing endorsement of their support.

The modest couple made such a positive impact on the young that one of those who nominated them for the award said: "Without their devotion, the young people of Stanley would have no place to go."

Now it seems the town is to take another leap forward with news that Grant Budd and Jo Ellick's proposed new family entertainment centre has been given the green light, subject to a few planning clauses and the necessary funding.

The difference here, of course, is that the Beauchene Complex has been earmarked as a centre not only for kids, but for everyone in the family, from toddlers to adults.

Mixing an infant "soft play park" with teenage-targeted amusement machines and a ten-pin bowling alley aimed squarely at the older generation is a bold concept.

But it is probably fair to say that neither element could work without the other, simply because a standalone play park or bowling alley would most likely fail to get off the drawing board.

The Budd-Ellick business partners say they also will add on a 40-50 seat cinema if the centre wins sufficient support, which would realise yet another long standing pipedream for many.

But let's not run before we can toddle. First, let's hope this centre earns sufficient backing to open its doors. Second, and most importantly of all, let's hope the community supports it.

Ros sets her heart on kidney funds

AMONG next week's participants in the Stanley Marathon is first-timer Ros Check, who has set herself a target of raising £5,000 for Kidney Research UK.

The huge effort is an investment in the future her best friend's son, Nick Chater, who is suffering from a debilitating kidney disease and has needed a replacement kidney from birth.

His parents Tom and Jane left the Islands for the UK before Nick was born. Just three years old, he undergoes daily dialysis, but is now large enough to undergo a transplant.

In a remarkable act of generosity, Ros offered her own kidney, but she was found not to be a match. Now she hopes to do the next best thing and raise valuable funds for research.

She said it was important to find better techniques to manage kidney conditions. Nick will need continuing donations as any kidney that is donated will have a limited durability due to the toxic medication needed for his body to accept the new organ.

We need to beef up for EU beef production

FARMERS will have to accept the need for a more rigorous identification system to be introduced if we wish to continue exporting beef to the European Union (EU). This was one of the conclusions of the two EU inspectors, who left the Islands on February 12.

While a written report from the inspectors is expected shortly, Senior FIG Veterinary Officer Steve Pointing provided the Agricultural Advisory Committee's meeting on Tuesday with a summary of their verbal conclusions.

The purpose of the EU mission was to evaluate public health controls over the production and processing of fresh meat intended for export to the EU. Mr Pointing reported that overall the inspection went reasonably well and that the inspectors did not find anything of such a serious nature as to compromise future meat exports.

However, they did identify a number of areas which were deficient and where significant extra work would be required.

The areas for improvement included a need for updating legislation, but the most significant concerned beef production, where a number of areas were identified as being unsatisfactory – both on the farm and in the abattoir.

The current cattle identification scheme is unacceptable for the identification of individual animals and will need to be looked at again, the committee was told.

Plus 15 jiggers all licensed to Falkland Islands Company Limited

An encouraging start as 88 take up Illex licences

FOLLOWING on from the appearance of what appears to have been more jiggers than normal in Stanley harbour recently, Director of Natural Resources John Barton says there are some 80 Illex jiggers licensed and fishing in Falkland Islands zones at present, and 88 jiggering licences have been issued.

He describes the level of interest as "encouraging," after what have been a couple of poor years, and some prior years when interest fell to as few as 40.

Catches have been variable so far, with some vessels reporting in excess of 50 tonnes per night, while others are reporting less than ten tonnes.

Although the average catch has gradually built up to around 20 tonnes per night, Mr Barton says it is still too early to forecast how the season will develop.

The limited presence of squid outside Argentina's exclusive economic zone has been of concern to their squid jigger fleet recently, according to the UPI press agency, which on Tuesday quoted Guillermo de los Santos, President of the Chamber for Jigger Fishing Shipowners of Argentina, as blaming Chinese and South Korean ships with fishing licences from the Falkland Islands for "destroying stocks of the resource," although catching very little.

A Korean jigger is inspected

In response to this criticism, Mr Barton told the Penguin News: "Any vessels fishing for Illex have the potential to impact on the stock. This includes vessels fishing on the high seas, in the Argentine fishery and in Falkland waters.

"It is for this very reason that we have advocated a regional fisheries management organisation and process for the Southwest Atlantic and Illex in particular.

"We were also supportive of the scientific work carried out under the auspices of the South Atlantic Fisheries Commission (SAFC) and the useful conservation work achieved through that process. That process could be continuing had Argentina not reduced her participation.

"Effective management of Illex will only work if management measures are applied to the whole stock with a co-ordinated approach throughout the region.

"Over the last five years the Argentine fishery has caught 763 000 tonnes of Illex, whereas 364 000 tonnes have been taken in FI waters over the same period.

"It is clear which fishery has the largest impact. However, there is no future in that style of argument, and the bigger game is having some regional conservation framework for the whole Illex stock.

"In its heyday the SAFC was well on the way to achieving that."

Minor assault

BEATRIZ Nchana (39) admitted in court on Wednesday to assault by beating of a minor but she was granted an absolute discharge, subject to £85 costs, by Chief Magistrate John Trevaskis. The court heard Mrs Nchana slapped a teenager across the head, but defence lawyer David Lang said the child was seen not to have been hit hard and that Mrs Nchana was emphatically sorry.

Twitterman acting like a big tweet

ARGENTINA'S Foreign Minister, Hector Timerman, who is referred to as "Twitterman" by some sections of his country's media, due to his propensity for sending messages, is reported as renewing the Argentine sovereignty claim in a recent meeting at the office of Argentina's ambassador to the United Nations.

Attending the meeting, which was apparently called to underline "the renewed significance Argentina attributes to G24" (the United Nations Decolonisation Committee) were ambassadors from Cuba, Syria and Sierra Leone, all of whom are reported as saying that they would continue working in support of Argentine sovereignty claims and rejected all forms of colonialism and occupation.

The G24 president, Ecuador's Francisco Carrion-Mena, had to travel "urgently" to Quito so he did not attend.

According to Mercopress, Mr Timerman was recently involved in the seizure of equipment on board a US Air Force transport, which strained US-Argentine relations. Mr Timerman personally checked the aircraft, made a list of what was found on board and allegedly not declared, and went as far as forcing open several locks.

Legislative Assembly Diary

THERE is nothing to stop any individual making further representations to MLAs on the forthcoming Telecommunications Bill right up to the May meeting of the Assembly when it will be considered. The formal consultation will result in a paper summarising comments and with recommendations to members. We may or may not accept those recommendations, especially if further evidence is produced to support the arguments of one side or the other. There was a serious attempt to rush the bill through the February Legislative Assembly but Executive Council, quite properly, instructed that it go to the May meeting to allow time for consultation.

PUBLIC comments thus far seem to indicate that both supplier and major business customers, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce, are equally unhappy. A cynical person might say that a perfect balance has been struck. As someone whose eyes glaze over when fellow members are holding forth on telecommunications I can take a genuinely neutral position on the subject.

TRAINING is an essential part of our succession planning policy and various FIG departments will be competing for funding despite the extra money set aside to make the policy a priority. Individuals will have to prove their commitment, whether to undertake additional study or to gain experience across departments or elsewhere. Distance learning could become an important part of the whole system for preparing people to take additional responsibilities. This brings back the question of efficient communications; can current systems support the usage requirements for distance learning at an affordable price?

GROUPS working on urgent issues report back to the Assembly as a whole later this week, and much of the work is already ongoing. Those of us who battled through the insecurity and threats to our country in the 1970s and early 1980s have been able to take a calmer view than those for whom the neighbours' sabre-rattling is a newer experience. I've had to reassure some overseas readers of the Penguin News that they need not send food parcels, thanks to the forethought and adaptability of local traders and their customers.

Seventy people boasting connections to Cornwall were treated to traditional pasties, leeky pies and a spirited rendition of the Cornish anthem, Trelawny, during a Government House reception on Friday night. Hosted by Governor Nigel Haywood, a Bard of the Cornish Gorsedd, and his wife Louise, the occasion marked the eve of the Feast of St Piran, the Patron Saint of Cornwall.

Bishop Stephen pays his fourth visit to Islands

This weekend, Christians based both at the Cathedral and at MPA will be among many others who'll give a warm welcome to Bishop Stephen Venner, whose fourth visit to the Falkland Islands promises to be a busy one.

Bishop Stephen is the representative of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and as such he undertakes two important roles - Anglican Bishop for the Falkland Islands and Bishop to HM Armed Services worldwide.

When in Stanley, Bishop Stephen will mingle with people from well beyond the Cathedral's congregation.

On Saturday morning he'll visit house-bound residents, take lunch at the Joint Churches' Lighthouse Seamen's Centre, attend an afternoon reception to celebrate the completion of recent work to the Cathedral Clock, and drop in on the evening Barn Dance at the Parish Hall. On Monday, he plans to meet MLAs and the Governor, before spending time with the Cathedral Council.

Rector of the Falkland Islands, Richard Hines, said he hoped the Bishop would gain valuable new insight to the contribution Christians make to the life of the Islands, and offer advice, guidance and encouragement.

"We expect our Songs of Praise service on Sunday evening to be one of the highlights of the visit and we look forward to what our Bishop has to say to us all," said Rev Hines.

While in the Islands, the Bishop also will spend time with BFSAI Chaplain Ruth Hake, and join worship at MPA's St Cuthbert's Chapel.

FI wedding coin minted

THE Falkland Islands will have its own commemorative coin to celebrate the royal wedding of Prince William to Kate Middleton on April 29.

Pobjoy Mint announced the Falklands would be one of the first countries to mark the occasion with the new crown coin, showing sculpted portraits of the couple. The obverse carries an effigy of the Queen, and it is available in cupro nickel and proof sterling silver.

The month when some liked it hot

IF you thought February was one of the best summer months for the Falklands on record, you weren't far off the mark. The month had above average temperatures, average amounts of sunshine, and it was the driest February since MPA records began in 1986.

Temperature

The mean maximum temperature was 16.5 Celsius compared with the monthly average of 15.1C.

The highest temperature recorded was 24.2C on the 9th and the lowest maximum was 8.5C on the 23rd. The mean minimum temperature was 7C, compared with the 6.5C average. The lowest minimum was 2.2C on the 1st and the highest minimum was 12.9C recorded on the 21st.

Rainfall

The total rainfall for the month was 18.6mm, far below the average of 49.9mm. The wettest day was on the 4th with a total of 6mm. More than 0.1mm fell on 15 days and 1mm or more fell on six days.

Sunshine

There were 185.5 hours of sunshine, compared with the monthly average of 182.6 hours. The highest daily total was 13.4 hours on the 10th.

Snow/Hail/Thunder/Fog

There were three days of fog, one day of thunder and no days with hail, sleet or snow.

Wind/Gales

The monthly mean wind speed was 13.3 knots, slightly below the average of 15 knots.

The highest hourly mean speed of 39 knots was on the 3rd, and the highest recorded gust of 51 knots was also recorded on the 3rd. Gales occurred on four days, and there were 18 days with gusts in excess of 33 knots.

Steve Massam's model offers a glimpse of how the Dockyard may look in the future

Breathing new life into historic heart of Stanley

With the move of the Museum to Stanley's historic Dockyard finally approved by Executive Council, Museum Manager Leona Roberts writes of her delight and the plans for the project...

TWENTY-FIVE years after it was first recommended in Sir Neil Cossens' 1986 development report, and after nine years of steady pressure, the Museum and National Trust was last week given the green light to begin the process of relocating to the Government Dockyard.

The project will see the Museum move from the now cramped conditions of Britannia House - a full mile from the Visitors Centre - to the picturesque and listed buildings of the Dockyard - "the historic heart of Stanley."

The relocation plan is ambitious and will be extremely challenging in several respects.

The Museum will have at least one building ready for an official opening to coincide with the 30th anniversary of Liberation, with the remainder to follow in time for the summer of 2012-13.

The aim is to achieve this goal as economically as possible, with a budget allocation of just £300,000 - a relatively small amount for a major project.

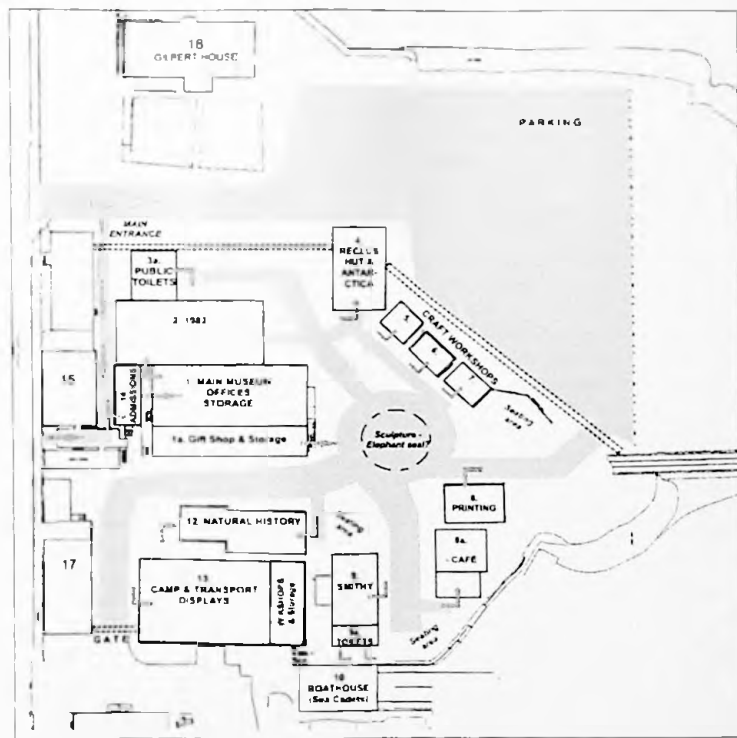

It is a long way from the £3 million rumours, but this £300k is a massive sum of money for the Museum and National Trust and we intend to use it well.

The majority of the buildings inside the Dockyard area will be used, avoiding construction as far as possible, although some buildings will require considerable work to make them suitable for housing exhibits.

Despite the relatively small budget, the Museum and National Trust is determined that the finished product will be of a high standard.

We want the Dockyard to be a site that Islanders can be proud of - something that we can all enjoy and that we will want visitors to come and see.

But it is of upmost importance that it is faithful to the Falklands and reflects the distinctive character and charm of our Islands and community. We really don't want a cold, modern museum that feels as if it could be just anywhere.

Plans for the historic Dockyard site now ready to be realised

An artist's impression of the approach to the new development

The Museum and National Trust is also setting out to raise funds through private sponsorship in an effort to avoid any possible overrun.

It is also hoped that as many people as possible will get involved and play their part in the development, whether it's in helping with the move itself, or by volunteering a little time to build fences, paint walls or pack boxes. All supporters will be recognised on a permanent roll of honour to be placed in one of the main buildings.

More details will follow, but it is not too early to register your interest with Museum staff.

This really is a community project and we want everyone to feel that they have a stake in the Dockyard - it is absolutely not something just for tourists.

We are absolutely delighted that MLAs have recognised the importance of this development and given us more than just verbal support.

Give us two minutes...

The Wanderer

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Peat...

Thanks for your letter. I'm sorry that my ramblings confuse you on occasion - I don't think you are alone in that!

To be clear, the "flying cows" tale was about beef being flown in for onward sale.

Of course, one of the big stories at the moment is the telecoms legislation that seems to be rushing through with little chance for any public discussion - not even a phone-in!

What was the beginning of that saying you told me? I only remember the "repent at leisure" bit at the end. I know you don't agree with me, but I still think that if a company's customer base is reduced enough then those that are left will end up paying more.

After all, if you had 9,000 sheep instead of 12,000 then your maintenance costs on your shearing shed wouldn't reduce would they?

You keep on about writing to the paper about the Saturday flight to the coast - not that you ever get around to it!

But if you do, please don't put in there that you are writing on behalf of the majority, as some do, 'cos it's rarely the case, as you well know.

By the way, yes, I do know that Junior Edwards is away on Gilbert Biz, doing the same as Dicky did last year. Very useful too, but hardly necessary!

I personally have no problem with it but, given that the school has flown someone down for cover, I'd be interested to know if the Education Department has changed its rules allowing staff to take time out.

I recall the last lot wouldn't even let learning support assistants (who themselves found experienced people for cover) take time off.

I can only guess they've changed the rules - after all what's good for the kelp goose must be good for the upland gander!

I don't believe that they would operate a dual system, so well done to the present Board of Education I say!

Ta Ta, JW

PS: Did you really think that the work going on at the cop shop was a new storey for PWD staff?

IT has been almost 57 years since Terry Walsh left the Falklands with his workmate Chris Anderson to seek pastures new in the UK, and now he is back in the Islands catching up with old times.

Terry was one of the faces featured in our Missing Links photo of September 17 - he is the guitar player fourth from right above - and he was happy to identify others in the group, pictured during VE Day celebrations in 1945 outside Alf Lee's house in Port Howard.

"I expect we did have a big party, but it was a long time ago," said Terry, who has been living in New Zealand since 1972, when he called into the Penguin News office last week.

Two years ago he returned to the Falklands for the first time, and this time he has brought his daughter Melanie, with his niece Bernadette Pring and cousin

Penguin News Missing Links

Bella Innes among those they planned to visit.

"It's changed a hell of a lot," said Terry, 82-year-old son of Jack and Esther Walsh. "You've got vehicles and roads now. In Stanley you used to walk everywhere.

"I used to work on the East Jetty, but nobody works there now. FIC was a big company then, it owned most of the East Island."

Lily Napier, who admits to be now "touching 75," believes she may be the subject of the photo which appeared in Missing Links on February 25 (centre right), although she is not 100 per cent sure. She said it would have been taken in the late 1950s or early 1960s.

Lynsey Sutcliffe was happy to identify herself as the young sea cadet on parade, featured in our March 4 edition (centre left). She thinks it was taken about 15 years ago.

An evident case of confusion

I REFER to the editorial last week which expressed surprise that the outgoing Attorney General had "allowed" the drafting of the Immigration (Amendment) Bill.

It seems to me that your concerns confuse two different issues.

Firstly, the nature of the powers contained in the legislation, which I can advise is no different from the sort of legislative framework used in other jurisdictions, including UK.

The second issue concerns the exercise of that power. That is a matter for the Principal Immigration Officer, and I would refer to the published ExCo paper which confirms that in exercising the powers available under the legislation FI immigration officers follow UK guidelines as a matter of best practice (publicly available on the UK Border Agency website).

It is also important to note that the exercise of the powers under the Immigration Ordinance are subject to challenge, either by appeal or judicial review; and a deci-

Merchant Navy remembers 1982

I AM organising an exhibition next year to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the Merchant Navy's part in the Falklands Conflict.

The exhibition will be held on HQS Wellington, in central London, supported by the Honourable Company of Master Mariners, whose floating livery hall this is, and also of the Wellington Trust, which owns the ship.

I am also writing a book to go alongside the exhibition which will be published by Seafarer Books. So far, I have been fortunate to have been lent diaries by seafarers who were there on various ships, and also meeting seafarers.

I had realised that little was known by the public in the UK of how the troops and their supplies actually got to the Falklands.

Although some may have been aware of the Canberra or the QE2, the other 70 ships, including those of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary, which were manned by the Merchant Navy, are unknown. I thought that it would be very appropriate if Falkland Islanders had a chance to recall their memories of the Merchant Navy at that time.

I know, for example, that the Fort Toronto had a barbecue on board for schoolchildren, because they wrote a thank you letter, which is to hang in the exhibition.

So, if any of your readers have any memories they would like to contribute, or photographs or documents that they could copy and send, I would be delighted to hear from them, either by email to john.johnson.allen@homecall.co.uk, or by post to the address below.

Applications granted at latest planning meeting

Flying into the sunset

ALL applications seeking planning permission were given conditional consent at this month's meeting of the Planning and Building Committee which was, as usual, chaired by Councillor Sharon Halford, who was supported by fellow MLA Jan Cheek with all elected lay members present.

Five members of the public attended, two of whom were there as part of their training in the taking of minutes, organised by committee secretary, Fiona Wallace-Nannig.

Most discussion took place over an application submitted by Grant Budd and Jo Ellick for a proposed change of use from retail outlet to a family entertainment centre at the Beauchene Complex on John Street.

The scheme had been recommended for refusal by the Environmental Planning Officer, Antony Payne, but it was the opinion of all committee members that the proposed use should be encouraged and conditional planning permission was granted (see separate story).

Details of the other ten applications receiving conditional consent are as follows:

- * Demolition of storage building and creation of new access to serve new parking area at the Tax Office Car Park off St Mary's Walk for Stanley Services Limited.

- * Erection of single-storey dwelling and garage with off-street parking on land to the rear of 3 Villiers Street for Joe Newell.

- * Permission in principle for housing development on land at Dairy Paddock and Sapper Hill for the Falkland Islands Company.

- * Erection of building for domestic storage at 1 Fitzroy East for Peter Short.

- * Extension to their offices for the Government's Computer Section located at the Lookout Industrial Estate (this despite a letter of objection having been received).

- * Permission in principle for the erection of a one-and-three-quarters storey dwelling for Mario Zuvic-Bulic on his KTV Site at Dairy Paddock Road.

- * Permission in principle granted to Ralph and Leeann Harris for the erection of a two-storey dwelling at 10 Dairy Paddock Road.

- * Relocation of the Foxtrot 4 Memorial from Lively Island to the west edge of Bertha's Beach on East Falkland for the Commander British Forces South Atlantic Islands.

- * Demolition of the existing sunroom and the erection of a larger sunroom at 25 Ross Road West for Jim and Janet Parke.

- * Demolition of three sheds and erection of dwelling at 12 Pioneer Row with frontage to Brandon Road for Mike and Jacki Summers.

Next on the agenda was the Building Adviser's report confirming his actions on nine applications for building permits. Nick Stephens followed this up with a reference to his proposals for updating the current Building Regulations and members agreed public opinion should be sought.

The meeting concluded with consideration of the statement prepared by Mr Payne following notice received from the Falkland Islands Yacht Club of their appeal against the refusal of permission for the siting of a Portakabin for use as a clubroom on the north side of the mooring area of the Canache.

The next meeting is scheduled to be held on April 7 at 8.30am in the Liberation Room of the Secretariat.

Epilogue for fighter

A BOOK commemorating the 25-year history of the Tornado F3 is to be published later this month, to coincide with the aircraft's retirement.

The Tornado F3 performed an uninterrupted stint of 17 years service in the South Atlantic, prior to the deployment to the Falkland Islands of its replacement, the Typhoon.

The 188-page book, described by its publishers Squadron Prints as detailing the story of what it was really like to "fly, fix and fight" the Tornado F3, while based at the Falklands and elsewhere, is launched on March 22, the same date that 111(F) Squadron (Tremblers) will disband.

It costs £19.95 (plus postage) and is available from <http://www.tornadof3.com>

Graeme Robson

New face of MPA's go-to guy

GRAEME Robson is the newly appointed Civil Military Liaison Officer for British Forces South Atlantic, taking up a role previously held by Ivan Morris and John Maskell-Bott.

He volunteered for the post, officially described as the conduit between the local community and military.

The unofficial title is the "go-to guy" for any questions or considerations from civilians or the military on each other's impact, such as "where not to fly and when?" or "they (military) forgot to shut my gate," said Mr Robson.

Any concerns or requests from the public are welcomed and, although they may not always be solved, Mr Robson said he could certainly raise serious concerns for consideration with the relevant body or at one of his twice monthly meetings with Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Originally from Newcastle, he has worked at MPA since his arrival in September 2009. He lives at Mount Pleasant with his wife Nicola and three children, and will be in the role until November next year.

Graeme can be contacted on emlo@mountpleasant.mod.uk or 76845 to raise any issues or requests for or about the military.

His Excellent open garden

It was a beautiful day to enjoy a beautiful garden on Saturday, when the Government House gardens showed off their best roots at a public open day.

The fragrant flowers were open too, and the vegetables showed their best colours to the visiting crowd. The polytunnels were more than a little warm but the Girl Guides were on hand serving tea, coffee and juice to prevent dehydration.

Head Gardener Jeremy Poncet, who works with Roy Ross and Odette Hirtle to keep the gardens in tip-top condition, explained it was not always easy to keep the gardens looking so bountiful.

He said it required a lot of patience "trimming the hedges, weeding and you need good knowledge of how to grow and store the vegetables." But he said with the right knowledge he believed that anything that could grow in the UK could grow here: "it's just as sunny here. It's the wind that's the battle."

Flowers are cut and displayed in Government House and any vegetables not used by the kitchens are donated to the hospital or other charities. Jeremy said it was better to have a plot with a surplus than one that was half full as it would be harder to maintain because it would need constant weeding.

Another pest is the ever more common earwig which has an affinity for sweetcorn. But Jeremy said they only sprayed pesticides in the polytunnels: "They get sprayed early in the season so they grow earwig and pesticide free by the time it comes to harvest them."

Karen Neely catches the bomb

FIVE days of beautiful weather graced West Sports participants.

Those that were lucky enough to arrive on Saturday enjoyed the first night knees up and, of course, the various boasts regarding sporting skills in foot events, shearing, peat cutting and gold cup horse racing, most of this coming from David "Turpin" Ford. However, as the results will show, their boasts did not turn into actual achievements.

Sunday saw the running of the foot events with Nuala Knight being master of ceremonies. Held in the field within the settlement it was a great day for laying in the sun and occasionally exerting yourself.

The results of the headline event were:

Mile foot event: 1st Drew Robertson 2nd Jordan Phillips 3rd Aiden Smith 4th Gareth McGee.

Ladies 1st Lisa Watson 2nd Kim Buckett 3rd Amanda McGhee (also 1st girl).

Ladies: 1st Kim Buckett 2nd Lisa Watson 3rd Amanda McGhee.

Boys: 1st Nial Evans.

There were a number of other fun events with lots of participants thanks to Nuala and her team's encouragement skills. This was followed by a scrumptious BBQ lunch cooked by Keith, Justin and Andrew. Lunch was followed by the customary all-out cheating and fighting, otherwise know as a rounders match, much hilarity and bruises and no doubt great entertainment to watch. Sunday evening saw the incredible fluke of Turpin Ford managing to get byes and soft games to win the darts competition, narrowly beating Mark Pollard in the final. In 3rd place was Boss and 4th Aaron Clarke.

Ladies competition results: 1st Louise Pole-Evans 2nd Pam Beggs 3rd Cathy Jacobsen 4th Marie Ross.

Monday saw the crowd move to Fox Bay West for the shearing competition. Arriving just in time was Lee "Claude" Molkenbuhr and Evan "Will not" Jones. There was a record number of entries in the beginners class (not shorn a sheep in the their lifetime), including visiting singer Christy Jefferson who later entertained at the Southern Cross Social Club after competing in the mechanical bull riding.

Of course rivalry between the various professional and part-time shearers was rife.

Judges Turtle and Turpin tried to maintain a resemblance of order. Some of the sheep will now have recovered from the trauma.

Molks, Best Framer Shearer Critta Lee.

Open Shearing Competition 1st Lee Molks 2nd Evan Jones 3rd Critta Lee 4th Stefan Clarke.

Farmer Shearer 1st Critta Lee 2nd Leon Marsh 3rd Ruben Harwood.

Hand Shearing 1st Lee Molks 2nd Ruben Harwood 3rd Daniel Ford.

Ladies Shearing 1st Faylan Alazia 2nd Louise Pole-Evans 3rd Sammy Hirtle.

Beginners Shearing 1st Lynn Forster 2nd Nuala Knight 3rd Vicky Collier.

Team Shearing 1st "Old Timers" Critta Lee, Tex Alazia, Leon Marsh, Iain Berntsen; 2nd "Claude's Babes" Lee Molks, Ruben Harwood, Ewen Bonner, Peter Nightingale; 3rd "Butter Balls" Willnot Jones, James McGhee, Shaun Evans Granny Knight; 4th "Stephanie's Slappers" Stefan Clarke, Andrew Newman, Justin Knight, Daniel Ford.

There was much crowd participation and hilarity at this event, which was complemented by beautiful sunshine and a BBQ lunch provided by Ben, Claire and Nuala.

The mechanical bull riding also provided side-splitting mirth as Claude and Willnot tried to outdo each other but, in reality, they were soundly beaten by most of the children. Andrew Newman's prize winning run was halted by the intervention of a rogue judge from Port Louis.

Open 1st Nathan Gemmil 2nd Gareth McGhee 3rd Glyn McKay 4th Jordan Phillips.

Ladies 1st Delen Montgomerie 2nd Sam Dodd 3rd Karen Neely/Pam Beggs.

Girls 1st Rhiann Alazia 2nd Darby Newman.

Boys 1st Gareth McGhee.

Tuesday required slightly jaded bodies to present themselves at the peat bank. Of course, by this stage rivalry was running pretty high and despite Willnot never having cut a sod of peat in his life he thought he could master the skill in 30 minutes of warm up. Obviously he did not.

Again participation was very high with many people keen to have a go in the interests of entertainment and to gain an understanding of the traditional fuel provision method!

Results were: Ladies 1st Louise Pole-Evans 2nd Marther Brown 3rd Faylan Alazia 4th Sam Dodd.

Novice 1st Glyn McKay 2nd Alistair Wilkinson 3rd Dan "The Man" Fowler 4th Daniel Ford.

Open 1st Lee Molks 2nd Andrew Newman 3rd Leon Marsh 4th Ben Cockwell.

There were some rosettes left over so they gave them to Lee Molks for Champion Peat Cutter and Neatest Peat Cutter.

The BBQ was held back in the Fox Bay East settlement, followed by the treasure hunt in which vehicles and motorbikes charged around the 17 clues scattered around the Fox Bay East settlement, some tied to buoys in creeks! The eventual winner was Team Karen Neely. It could have been Keith Knight but his vehicle appeared to get gout and fall on its haunches. The evening's Gold Cup horse racing provided some more quality entertainment and again Andrew Newman's chances of the red rosette were sabotaged by the interference of the cattle rustler from Port Louis. Well, that and finishing in last place.

Wednesday required all to travel the 20 minutes out to Leicester Creek Farm and Justin Knight's inaugural dog trials course. Incredibly the weather held and the crowd were able to watch in the sunshine.

The course was easy for the crowd to see and the handlers were in full view of the crowd at all times. The sheep provided a challenge for the dogs and handlers with none making the final pen.

The BBQ was prepared by Tex and Mandy and helpers in the picturesque area of the old track bridge. The afternoon was filled with the fun dog trials again in close proximity to the crowd and providing dogs and handlers with a challenge.

The children's sports was run at the same time allowing all the small people to have their moments of glory and enjoy a good helping of party food.

The evening event was dominated by the prize giving kindly carried out by Governor Nigel Haywood. This was followed by several hours of traditional style dancing.

Thursday is not normally an official sports day but, true to form, the West hospitality carried on with all invited on a Rover/bike rally around some of the Chartres Farm ground courtesy of Kenneth and Josie McKay.

Ten vehicles and nine bikes completed a very scenic trip of about eight hours with a two-hour spell for lunch at the head of the Chartres River. The vistas were stunning and the cloudless sky and sunshine made the day very memorable.

This completed a week of great hospitality and entertainment. Many thanks to the residents of the Fox Bay area for their incredible efforts to ensure the annual event went smoothly. Also the West Falklands Sports Association for the organisation of another memorable west sports.

Last but not least all the visitors who came for all or part of the fun - without you it would not be worth it. See you at Hill Cove in 2012!!

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report
4th March, 2011

Tony Mills, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands

The FMI has gained further ground from last week to end the selling week at 1307 A/c kg (811 GBP/kg). This equates to a week on week fall of 21c/kg or 17 p/kg. The slight dip in exchange rate masks the underlying trend of this across all categories.

Quality and good fibre strength was a constant theme for the reason behind the continual strength in the market. A large offering is scheduled for next week through analysis believe the market will hold firm across the board with the only exception being the finer lines.

It is worth noting that this is the highest FMI has reached in absolute terms with no adjustment made for inflation. A concern I made to make early this week when I reflected on my days (22 years ago) with one of Australia's largest wool brokers Dalgety Winchester F&C (now AWL Landmark).

Full house at Goose Green MotoX

ROLL cameras - action - it's Motocross Madness the sequel!

FITV captured on camera last Sunday's racing at the Boca in dramatic detail as high definition cameras and spectators alike witnessed a great day's racing with full line-ups from the PeeWees, Juniors, Ladies, Clubman and Experts classes.

The PeeWees were first off with Leo Benjamin screaming into the lead, followed by Jack Alazia, Adam Dickson and Connor Betts on his quad.

But little Adam, determined to prove himself on his first race, wore Leo and Jack down to take a well deserved win. The second race was all Leo's as he led from start to finish, Jack coming in second with Adam and Connor bringing up the rear.

The Ladies and the Juniors race ran concurrently, and was every bit as exciting as the PeeWee class.

Nathan Lowe delivered the hole shot with a hard charging Travis McGill who had a hard time passing him. However, once Travis overtook Nathan he gained a sizeable lead to take both wins on the day. Nathan came home second with James Tyrrell taking third place. Angeline Clarke and Sian Ferguson had a first place each but, as Angeline took the second win, she gained the overall placing on the day.

It was good to see first time racer Coral Betts in action in the second race putting in a good solid start to her new racing career.

With racing getting ever more exciting it was up to the Clubman to raise the bar for the TV crew, (Mario and Zoran), and they did not disappoint as Nathan Gemmill proved his dominance in this class.

Just behind, Jimmy Moffatt and Danny Cofre battled it out for second place. Mel Lloyd had a great day's racing, proving those of us that are of a mature age can still have fun on a bike.

Ben Hoyles, racing for the first time, took advantage of our superb medical team. Taking a tumble at the bottom corner, he was down that long I thought he had broken his leg. It turned out he was enjoying a leg massage off Janice, and cramp was his unlikely excuse (think I'll try that next time)!

The expert class made up of Jan, Jay, Stefen, Arthur and new racer Rudolfo lined up to give us the fastest racing of the day.

Jan took an early lead and proved unpassable as Jay struggled to find those extra horses needed to stay with Jan. Stefen, close behind Jay, continued to put in some great racing with Steady Arthur coming in fourth. Rudolfo did well considering it was his first race and he was shoved in with the experts!

Many thanks to Lifestyles Ltd for sponsoring the event, the lap counting ladies, medical team, marshals, track builders and Keith Alazia for letting us use such a fabulous piece of Goose Green.

Team's twenty20 date in Costa Rica

IN preparation for the ICC Americas Division 3 tournament in Costa Rica next week, Stanley hosted their final twenty20 match before leaving tomorrow for the week-long tournament.

The day looked like it was going to be spoiled by the weather but, after delaying the start by a couple of hours, the wind and heavy cloud cover soon cleared.

After the match, a barbecue had been organised for the players as a thank you from the Falkland Islands Cricket Club for a well-contested season.

The cricket team is set to play Mexico, Costa Rica, Peru, Belize and Chile, with the winners of the tournament promoted to the next division to play in a similar contest. So, in theory, if one team were to carry on winning matches, they could soon see themselves in the T20 World Cup finals in a couple of years.

The playing schedule is going to be quite difficult, as the Falkland Islands have to play five matches in only four days, meaning that two games are going to be played on the same day.

They will be used to this though, as the same situation happened in Mexico City last year.

The first match is going to be played on Monday and it can be followed live at www.icc-cricket.yahoo.net/the-icc/icc_members/americas/ courtesy of the ICC Americas website.

If you visit this address, just follow the links to ICC Americas Division 3 and you can follow the progress of the Falkland Islands throughout the tournament.

Stuart claims another victory on the greens

STUART Haines continued his fine form by winning the Décor Services sponsored March Monthly Medal held last Sunday.

After the glorious sunshine of the previous day competitors faced a cool mist coupled with a mild northerly wind.

Some excellent scores were recorded with several players beating their own personal bests.

Stuart broke 80 for the first time with a gross 78, and his net 61, six shots better than par for the course, was enough to win by two shots.

In second place was Sarah Bowles, who also carded a personal best of 73.

Stuart has had his handicap cut by two shots to 15 and Sarah is now into single figures with a handicap of 9.

Ian Stewart picked up three points in the Medal League and now has an unassailable lead in the competition with only one round to go.

With Sarah picking up nine points and Troyd not playing, the gap between the two has narrowed to just three points in the overall league standings.

Tony Rocke maintains a narrow lead in the eclectic. Glenn Ross also had a great round carding 70 including three birdies. Once again, many thanks to Décor Services for sponsoring the Monthly Medal.

The Matchplay is coming to a close with Darren Wade having defeated Adam Glanville in the last remaining quarter-final to set up a semi-final with Ian Stewart, with the winner playing Sarah Bowles.

This coming weekend will be the Standard Chartered Open which will also be the final two qualifying rounds for the Island Games. For Saturday's round please check in by 1.30pm. On Sunday there will be a barbecue after the prize giving.

The BUGBUSTERS committee have been investigating various methods of preventing the dreaded earwig coming into your home. Treating with a suitable long lasting pesticide around December/January and again in March/April each year appears to be the most effective method found so far. However treating as early as October and repeated every 3-4 months has also been found to be beneficial and ensures continued effectiveness.

It is important to treat the entire foundations of your house and ensure a good barrier between foundations and walls of house and foundations and ground. All entry points into the house, i.e. where the foundations meet the walls of the establishment should be treated as well as where the foundations meet the ground, which is where the earwigs are likely to hide during the day. The earwig is then prevented from crawling past the treated area and hence into the house.

Wicket keeper Ian Betts is foiled by a Belize batsman

Battlers to bow out

BATTLING Falklands cricketers are set to be bowled out of their international tournament after four brave but ultimately fruitless performances in Costa Rica.

Wednesday's nine-wicket defeat at the hands of Chile saw them with just one match remaining – against Peru last night – from which to retrieve any consolation in the ICC Americas Division 3 T20 competition.

Belize was the first nation to claim a Falklands scalp, winning by 132 runs on Monday after scoring 182/5. Mexico restricted the Islanders to 58 all out on Tuesday, and hosts Costa Rica piled on the agony in the afternoon, closing at 140/2, and the Falklands were all out for 75.

Captain Martin Collins told FIRS: "I think we've raised our game, but unfortunately we are playing some quality teams out here, and some of those have raised their game from last year as well."

He highlighted performances from David Phillips, whose fielding had been "fantastic," and from bowlers David Hewitt, Craig Paice and Kevin Clapp.

Abattoir is on track for a record year of production

THINGS are looking up at the Sand Bay Abattoir for the Falkland Islands Meat Company (FIMCo), where their new cold store has just become operational.

In just the first eight weeks of the 2011 season, FIMCo reports that more lambs have been processed than in any other complete season.

Recently updated projections show a total of 45,000-47,000 lambs and sheep will be processed this season, of which more than 26,000 are expected to be lambs. This represents an encouraging 11,000 increase from the budgeted figures for this export season.

The Falkland Landholdings Board heard on Tuesday that the company had supplied 10,000 animals to the abattoir so far this season, of which 9,000 have been new and old season lambs.

Cold Store No 2 came online late Saturday afternoon following a very tight project deadline of February 28.

Despite losing three to four weeks due to a combination of factors such as shipping, weather and demands on concrete supply from other projects in Stanley, hard work from all involved has meant the projected operational date only slipped in the end by two weeks. It is expected that the back-up refrigeration system will be completed within a week and other smaller areas of work after the season.

Since the Falkland Islands Government and the FIMCo Board rejected the high costs put forward by Morrison (Falklands) Ltd for Phases II onwards, FIMCo was confident it could both undertake the project management in-house and save FIG a considerable amount of money by using other local contractors.

This was approved by MLAs in July 2010 and work began on-site in early September. Although the final costs are awaited, John Ferguson, FIMCo General Manager and Project Manager for the Upgrade Works, is confident that Phase II, consisting of the new cold store, security fence and ground works, will be achieved within the reduced budget approved by FIG.

With the recent shipping issues and reduced voyages, the cold store extension couldn't have happened at a more vital time, as production was within one day of coming to a complete standstill until the SAAS vessel arrived with more reefer containers. The increased space will allow segregation of different products and regular use of 40-foot reefer containers for the first time.

Mr Ferguson said all credit went to Ian Stewart Construction and Energise F1 for their concentrated efforts and high standard of work.

With lamb numbers increasing far beyond the projections for 2011, and the skins market recovering strongly, the facilities at Sand Bay have been under severe pressure this season, so it is vital that the upgrade be completed as soon as possible.

A clear shift in the balance of sheep and lamb at this time of the year, while very encouraging, does present some practical problems for the abattoir.

The relatively fixed supply dates from the West, where there are more mutton than lambs, and the market-led need to give priority to yearling and new season lambs, means that the abattoir has sometimes been unable to process all the delivered animals immediately.

This in turn creates pressure on the availability of feed in the Sand Bay paddocks and creates extra work, but Mr Ferguson said he could not see any other solution at this time. If stock from the West is delayed there is a danger that not enough shipping slots will be available later in the season.

To help overcome difficulties caused by limitations on storage, lairage and skins preparation – all of which are due for expansion during the winter – production has been increased by an hour each day and full production is taking place on Saturdays. It also is planned to extend the export season by one week into early May.

Fortunately the market is still strong, and John Ferguson has been working closely with Greg Somervell from Simunovic SA to secure sales contracts for the additional product.

With the much improved export sales prices allowing increased livestock prices, and at just over the half-way mark of the 2011 export season, it is looking to be a very positive one for the Falkland Islands farming and meat industries.

This should result in considerably less than the projected level of operational subsidy being required from FIG.

Penguin News

FALKLAND ISLANDS

ALTHOUGH I know our readers normally feel the Penguin News should stick to covering local events, I hope that no one will mind if I mention the earthquake in Japan and the subsequent tsunami, with which tragic events Councillor Jan Cheek also leads in her diary column this week.

It has been impossible not to be affected by scenes of devastation such as have filled our TV screens during recent days: ships being swept across roads, entire areas of houses jostling together as they are swept out to sea, and the pulverised fragments of whole communities covering former agricultural land like a nine-foot deep crust, hiding who knows what horrors beneath.

It seems we have been inundated with natural disasters in recent months. In days gone by we might never have heard of some of them, or at least not until the dust of devastation had settled.

Now, thanks to the wonders of TV, each fresh disaster is on our screens almost immediately, no matter how obscure the location.

What is perhaps debatable is whether being aware of the tragic events going on around the world – and I could include what is happening in Libya in this category – does anybody any real good.

Except in cases like the Chile and New Zealand earthquakes, where many of us had some personal connection, a kind of emotional fatigue can easily set in, bringing with it a sense of impotence and maybe even, eventually, indifference.

For a tiny population like ours the numbers – 10,000 missing, 3,000 dead – may be too big to cope with, especially when they concern people with whom we may feel we have little in common.

But then we come to the images of individuals: the man searching for where his house once stood, the grandfather sitting on the roof of his house, nine miles out to sea, quietly mourning the loss of his wife, or the tiny child being checked for radiation. All at once our common humanity can be neither escaped nor denied.

It is hard to think of any good which might emerge from so much suffering, unless it brings the realisation that behind each of the many derogatory nicknames we apply so easily to those we consider different to us are just people, who mirror our own fragile humanity

John Fowler

A tasty beginning for tantalising cafe treats

SELLING out fast on their first day of business, Tasty Treats opened its doors to the public last Thursday.

Entrepreneur Arlene Bowers was found in the chef's kitchen preparing hot sandwiches: "It's been so busy. The cake and breads are nearly all gone but we're busy making more."

The reviews so far are positive. Hector Villalon was busy eating his square of sweet Chilean bread out of the bag as he left the building and said it was "very, very good bread. Just like home."

Alongside Arlene there are two full-time customer service employees Jocelyn and Solange. Juan the chef and baker Jose Jose has his own kitchen adjacent to Juan's, with bakery ovens and the latest equipment imported from Japan.

Arlene is confident the venture will be a success, but doesn't see neighbouring cafes and Stanley Bakery as a concern to her trade: "People always need to eat and, given more choice, they will eat what they want."

She said their success lay in their range of foods, and long opening hours with a large menu changed daily catering for breakfast, lunchtime and the evening.

"The aim is to give the people what they want when they want it," she said.

Former partners sentenced to jail

DELROY Kevin Leo and his former partner Alena Dawn Scott were each imprisoned for nine months when they appeared before the Senior Magistrate's Court on Wednesday.

Mr Leo, who had previously admitted charges of common assault and assault occasioning actual bodily harm, was sentenced to three and six months respectively, the sentences to run consecutively.

He was also sentenced to a further two months imprisonment for taking a vehicle without consent, to run concurrently, and a charge of driving without insurance, which he also admitted, was placed on his driving record although no sentence was imposed.

Senior Magistrate John

Trevaskis told Mr Leo the sentencing was due to his repeated and escalating violence towards Miss Scott, which included previous convictions for assault.

Miss Scott was sentenced to nine months imprisonment after previously being convicted of unlawful wounding on November 19, when she stabbed Mr Leo with a kitchen knife following an argument.

Although she had no previous record of violence, Mr Trevaskis said she had been in a mutually destructive relationship that was allowed to endanger not only herself but others around her.

He said while he believed she found herself to be in danger at the time of the incident, the use of such force was not necessary.

Contributors to Christ Church Cathedral's clock restoration fund pose with restorers and visiting Bishop of the Falklands Stephen Venner. The Bishop (second from right), who is also Bishop of the Armed forces, left the Islands on Tuesday, but he took two minutes out of his packed programme of visits to feature in one of the most popular sections of the Penguin News: see page 5

Wool clippings

FALKLAND Land Holdings General Manager Owen Summers told the board on Tuesday that just over half the wool clip had been sold and core results just received would now allow for the sale of some mid-micron range wool and oddments from the dry sheep. The total wool clip from North Arm and Goose Green is some 32,000kg heavier than last year. However, quality is marginally coarser and yields are a little lower than normal.

Quake donation

JOHN and Sarah Maskell-Bott will shortly be delivering to Christchurch Cathedral in New Zealand more than £400 towards the church's rebuilding following the earthquake. A total of £397 was raised from a concert at Stanley's Christ Church Cathedral, and a further £67 by guests at the St Piran's Eve Reception at Government House.

Inquest opens

AN inquest into the death of Keith James Bonner was opened and adjourned on Friday. Mr Bonner was found unresponsive at his home at 2.11am on March 5, and pronounced dead by Dr Roger Diggle. The cause of death is to be determined by a visiting pathologist from the UK.

Chopper bid

NORTH Arm may be chosen as the site for a helicopter refuelling site in support of oil exploration in the Southern Licence Area, the Board of FLH heard on Tuesday. The manager of the farm has been approached, but no details are available.

Royal weekend

CHAMPIONSHIP Dog Trials will take place at North Arm on April 30, along with the DHSA sweep draw and a two-nighter – a chance to celebrate the royal wedding in true Falklands style.

AN appeal fund for victims of the Japanese earthquake and tsunami has been opened at Standard Chartered Bank.

FALKLANDS Conservation is to investigate the apparent beaching of 400 pilot whales at Speedwell Island.

Argentine oil sanctions pass through the Senate

A BILL to impose sanctions on any company or individual involved in the Falkland Islands oil industry, which was passed without dissent on Tuesday by the Lower House of the Argentine Parliament, was approved by the Senate on Wednesday and has now passed into law.

Mercopress reports that the bill, which carries the signatures of all political groups with congressional representation, seeks to take away the licences of companies that operate in Argentina and that are linked with others that explore or exploit hydrocarbons in the Falkland Islands.

At the same time, the document stipulates that every company that operates in Argentina "needs previous authorisation extended by the competent national authority in order to carry out transactions and or business, financial and extractive operations with those companies or physical persons that, in direct or indirect ways" act in the Falkland Islands.

It also "prohibits all national or international trading companies that operate in Argentina, along with their shareholders or controllers, with direct or indirect participation" in exploration and exploitation activities that are carried out in the Falklands, from being contracted by the Argentine Government.

If a company does not abide by these prohibitions, "the Application Authority will proceed to suspend the authorisation to work in the country, until the sanction application."

Director of Mineral Resources in the Falklands, Phyl Rendell, said: "We regret any action being taken that will make exploration for oil in the area more complex, not only for ourselves, but also for Argentina. This action is particularly regrettable as it would seem to rule out any future cooperation which might be to the benefit of the economy of the region as a whole."

Mrs Rendell concluded that this development would not prevent the continuation of the Falkland Islands oil exploration programme.

Reports in the Argentine press speak of a reiteration of sovereignty on the part of the British Embassy in Buenos Aires, and a restatement of the right of the inhabitants of the Falkland Islands to develop hydrocarbon industry in their own territorial waters.

At the time of writing we were unable to get further comment from oil industry representatives either here or in the United Kingdom.

Celebrations go so quietly

THE Falkland Islands Overseas Games Association held a celebration of sport this week as preparation for the Island Games.

Fees for use of the pitch were waived by the Leisure Centre, which assisted in co-ordinating the event on FIOGA's behalf, offering clubs the opportunity to hone their skills.

The celebration week so far has passed by relatively unnoticed by the sporting community and the public. The football, running, swimming, netball and badminton clubs all followed their usual programmes, some incorporating the available pitch.

A fundraising event for the 2011 Games is also taking place on April 8. For £30 you can join a limited number of guests to enjoy a buffet, live music and unlimited bar at Government House.

Students prepare lunch full of Eastern promise

YEAR 11 Community School students and teachers Jo Symons and Simon Isaacs are preparing "Bento boxes" for sale on April 7, to raise funds for victims of the Japanese earthquake and tsunami disaster.

Bento boxes are individual Japanese packed meals and contain a selection of different and authentic dishes.

The students will be preparing a mild Japanese squid curry, noodles, stir fried fish and vegetables, sushi rolls and gyoza (steamed savoury stuffed dumplings).

Each box will cost £5, and can be collected from FICS foyer at midday.

Students will also be delivering Bento boxes to businesses in Stanley between 11.30am and midday for an extra donation. Art Teacher Jo said local businesses including Falkland Farmers and Seaview Ltd had already generously donated fish and food containers.

All proceeds will be going to the Japanese Tsunami Fund set up by the British Red Cross on behalf of the Japanese Red Cross, which has 115 response teams of doctors and nurses working on the ground providing first aid and emergency healthcare, as well as distributing relief items.

At least 4,000 people are known to have died in the disaster, but thousands more are injured or still missing.

Close to half a million have been forced to leave their homes.

Bento boxes must be ordered by March 31 by emailing jsymons.fics@sec.gov.fk to allow students time to prepare.

Legislative Assembly Diary

Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

THE devastated scenes from Japan so soon after the tragedy in Christchurch remind us how fragile and unpredictable life on our small planet can be. It also reminds us how fortunate we are to live where we do. Small inconveniences and hardships are nothing in comparison with the suffering elsewhere. Few things are more heart-searing and poignant than the sight of shocked individuals surveying the place where their homes once stood.

I DO not always understand all the allusions in the Wanderer's ramblings. However, I think I am correct in saying that employment legislation stipulates that employers are required to give employees time off for civic duties. I imagine that FIG is not exempt from this. A more important question should be whether civil servants in timetable bound occupations who are elected to the Legislative Assembly should be given unpaid leave of absence for the duration of their time in office.

THE private initiative on an entertainment centre is a welcome development and I congratulate the people involved and wish them well. The idea that governments should do these things directly is, I believe, flawed. Unfortunately governments tend to be very bad at business because clearly they cannot take the same risks with public funds that a business can with its own capital. Government's role should be to enable, not to meddle.

MORE jiggers in the harbour over the last ten days are encouraging signs that illex catches may be greater than for the last few years. It is a sad reflection on the Argentine Government that they still allow indiscriminate fishing by their licensed vessels and within their zone and refuse to engage with international efforts to encourage responsible fishing in the SW Atlantic. We do what we can to ensure the sustainability of the fishery but there is a limit to what we can achieve in isolation.

WE seem to be swamped in protestations of love and peace this week; sad that the bearers do not take them to their own masters first. I think a message of decent neighbourly conduct and non-interference would be better received here.

Donations are a boost to the troops

SCOUTS in Stanley and at MPA have been given £400 by fundraisers from the Information Systems and Services South Atlantic Islands (ISS SAI) section of MPA through a series of social events and sporting competitions over the past year.

The contribution will go partly towards a new floor for the Scout building in Stanley as well as the Scout Group at MPA, which had to close down last July due to the lack of leaders. It was reformed this January by Sgt Guy Livingston who will distribute the money for the replenishment of Scout badges and group scarves as part of their uniform.

Top racing yacht limps into Stanley for repairs

MOORED alongside the East Jetty yesterday was Hugo Boss, one of an initial 15 yachts in the Barcelona World Race, a double-handed non-stop around the world event, which began on January 1.

Having sustained damage to sails and to the mast tracking, three days before tackling Cape Horn, skippers Andy Meiklejohn and Wouter Verbrak had anchored in Adventure Sound, East Falklands, in order to effect repairs themselves and to avoid the mandatory 48-hour penalty for making a pit stop.

However, when the Penguin News spoke to Andy yesterday morning he said that in Adventure Sound they discovered nearly every sail had problems and they lacked enough material to carry out repairs.

According to Andy the reason for the damage wasn't anything out of the ordinary, but just a case of everything reaching its expiry date.

Currently ninth in the 25,000 nautical mile race, Andy is hoping they may be able to get on their way without losing a further place.

Argentine skipper complains

CARLOS Rodriguez, captain of the Argentine yacht Shaman which put into Stanley harbour on February 18, has complained about his treatment here in an article for Nuestramar, a website dealing with maritime matters.

According to Mr Rodriguez's account, when he and his crew member Gisel Dugo entered what he refers to as "Puerto Argentino" flying the Argentine flag at the stern of his vessel, it was approached by a launch on which there appeared to be "no very friendly faces."

"They asked us to moor at a public jetty and we told them that we wouldn't because there was too much wind," he said.

"Another launch came out with customs officials, one of whom identified himself as Robert King and came aboard.

He ordered us to take down the Argentine flag to avoid any problems."

The Penguin News did not cover the arrival of the Shaman at the time, but the website article says that the account given by Mr Rodriguez differs from that given in the Islands' press, which claimed that the "order" to take down the Argentine flag was only a "recommendation." No mention is made by Mr Rodriguez in his article of the fact that when Shaman entered Stanley harbour, it was not displaying the usual courtesy flag, either British or Falkland Islands.

Claims in the article that the Argentine Foreign Ministry had complained to the British Embassy in Buenos Aires over the treatment of Mr Rodriguez were denied on Thursday by a spokesperson at Government House.

"Had such a complaint been made, we would have heard about it," the Penguin News was told.

A breakdown of tourism figures not to be missed

USING the United Nations definition of tourism, 2010 was a surprisingly good year for land-based, as opposed to cruise ship tourism in the Falkland Islands, with numbers up from 4,241 in 2009 to 6,017 in 2010.

However, the UN definition of a tourist includes everyone arriving in a country who is not already a resident or going to be one.

Consequently, oil workers and fishing vessel crews, who may well compete for scarce accommodation with regular tourists, are included under the heading "transit tourists."

Using this definition, the increase and the larger than expected numbers become immediately understandable.

The figures above came from Kevin Millington of tourism consultants Acorn, who gave a presentation recently at the Chamber of Commerce, which was billed by the Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB) as "not to be missed" by those with an interest in tourism and its economic impacts on the Falkland Islands.

The UN breaks down tourism into four categories: leisure, visiting friends and relatives, business and transit, with the first two of these being what most people would consider to be tourists and, as Mr Millington admitted, the real focus of the promotional effort of FITB.

Growth in the leisure tourism sector has been less than spectacular with a slight reduction in 2010 in all categories of visitor other than transit.

A graph showing leisure tourism arrivals revealed a barely perceptible rise over the past ten years, except for a significant peak corresponding with the 25th anniversary of the Falklands conflict.

In this context it is worth noting that with 200 fewer than the British, but still the second most numerous group of overseas visitors in the "leisure" category in 2010 came from Argentina. This suggests that remembrance by next of kin and veterans of both sides in the conflict may be challenging wildlife as a reason for visiting.

A significant and useful fact emerging from the statistics gathered is that the average daily spend by land-based tourists has risen sharply from £80 per day in 2009 to £130 in 2010.

Unfortunately Mr Millington was unable to give any figures for the per person promotional costs involved in attracting leisure tourists to the Falkland Islands, which would enable their net benefit to the economy to be better calculated.

Cruise ship arrivals for 2010 were also slightly down on the previous year, although the average number of passengers per ship had risen from 526 to 618 and the average spend on tours had also risen from £35.42 in 2009 to £48.61 in 2010.

Mr Millington has 20 years experience advising public and private sector organisations on the development of tourism, both in the UK and overseas.

He specialises in market research, tourism statistics, feasibility studies, financial and economic appraisals, tourism intelligence and forecasting. He also is a specialist in the field of measuring the economic impact of tourism.

In 2007 Mr Millington established a system of tourism statistics in the Falkland Islands, and developed a tourism statistics database for the storage and retrieval of all the information. The system included a survey of cruise and air visitors, and domestic tourists.

In 2008 he worked with FIG on the development of a first Tourism Satellite Account for the Islands, which led to the first reliable estimate of the economic impact of tourism. Currently he compiles the quarterly Falklands Forecast publication, and is undertaking a number of small market research projects for FITB.

Mr Millington's visit was as a guest of FITB to conduct staff training on the Tourist Satellite Account and to work on what were described as "strategic research objectives."

Islander students join Queen at Commonwealth Day event

STUDENTS from the Community School gathered to hear the Queen's Commonwealth Day message on Monday, while two of their former classmates celebrated the day at the Houses of Parliament.

As Acting Governor Ric Nye read the words of the Queen, promoting the recognition of women around the world, young Islanders Lesley Stewart of Peter Symonds College in Winchester and Nick Roberts of Chichester College, were attending the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association's programme in London.

Lesley and Nick attended a multi-faith Observance at Westminster Abbey, attended by the Queen and more than 1,000 young people from across the UK.

This year's theme was "Women as agents of change," meaning that by investing in women and girls, we can accelerate social, economic and political progress. The Queen said in her message: "This year, the Commonwealth celebrates the important role that women already play in every walk of life and in every Commonwealth country - from the richest to the poorest areas, across continents and oceans, from villages to places of international debate, in every culture and faith - recognising that women are "agents of change" in so many ways: as mothers and sisters, teachers and doctors, artists and craftspeople, smallholders and entrepreneurs, and as leaders of our societies, unleashing the potential of those around them...

"This year, and on Commonwealth Day especially, as governments continue to search for new ways to tackle these important challenges, let us all give a thought to the practical ways in which we, as individuals or as groups, can provide support to girls and women - so that everyone can have a chance of a fuller and more rewarding life, wherever they happen to be born."

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Peat

Thanks for your card. I do as always take note of your comments and I agree with them all except the one about electeds going away. Of course the Islands have to put the case wherever possible, but it is a fact that out of the present eight, half are retired and have more time than those in full employment.

Hey! What about that £1 million loan that turned into a shipping grant? Well, they had to take it didn't they? After all, you can't look a gift toothfish in the mouth can you? By the way, that small island that used to be well off is called "Nauru." It's in the Pacific.

I see in the press that there's a new chairman of the Committee of 24 at the UN. Do you remember there was an invite to the last one asking him to "come on down" and see for himself what makes the Islands tick? At the very least we could have expected a reply. I recall one being invited back in 2005 but he was always "too busy." What's interesting is the same press report stating that the last one offered through HMG to travel here, but it couldn't be done? Check out the article by Henry Whitney on page 9 of this week's Penguin News.

Hope you enjoyed the weather last week, a real treat. And some person told me a fine end to the summer. Hold on, it's not finished yet. As far as I am concerned there are three steps towards winter: one is the covering up of the Butcher's Bones, two is the flying in of the cattle egrets (and by the way do you recall the Saudis arresting that vulture for spying because it had been ringed at the University of Tel Aviv? Well, I have long had suspicions about those egrets). Anyway, the third step is the Tango Ground Tyrant flying north for the winter. None of these has happened, so I for one am optimistic that we still have some good weather to come.

Catch 22 saga costing dearly

I WAS surprised it did not attract more attention, but it may interest readers that approximately 20 per cent of the world's nations do apply the principle of "jus soli," that is the right of citizenship by virtue of where you are born, and confusion may arise here in the Falklands as Chile is one such country I believe applying this rule.

It was the case in the UK, and interestingly the USA which still applies jus soli, until in 1968 it excluded Native Americans, which rather calls the application into question. Australia was even more perplexing whereby Aboriginal Australians were not considered Australians at all, but were grouped with "sheep, cattle and dogs" in the National Census until quite recently.

The derogatory term "anchor baby" is often used in the USA, but it is a bit misleading as although a child born in the USA has an automatic right to citizenship the child's parents do not, and cannot be sponsored until the child is 21 years of age and meets certain financial conditions. Even then they may be unsuccessful.

British citizenship of course is a meaningless term which wafts in the wind and I note that even official channels now refer to British terrorists as British-born terrorists to indicate that they are somehow not... er... British? My own daughter was born in Brunei but this did not make her Bruneian. The Bruneians issued a birth certificate and, via the UK High Commission and Philippine Embassy, her right of abode in both was obtained, except that the British segregationist non-reciprocal clause means she cannot live unhindered in a British Overseas Territory with her sisters.

Despite my own loathing of our convoluted apartheid immigration rules, Mr Sawle I believe is correct in his analysis of your Catch 22 front page (Penguin News, February 4).

However, in some British Overseas Territories, citizenship is conferred only via the mother, whereas in Brunei it is only via the father. Therefore a British Overseas Territory father married to a Bruneian mother could have stateless children and be in a Catch 22 situation. Not so a Chilean couple with a Chilean child, born overseas. To correct British injustice, during the restoration of Native Title, Aboriginal Australians were described by Judge Merkel in 1998 as technical rather than real, thereby eliminating a genetic requirement.

This decision firmly established that anyone can classify him or herself legally as Aboriginal, provided he or she is accepted as such by Aboriginal community.

This means that you can be a White Anglo-Saxon Aboriginal or Mongoloid Asian Aboriginal. However there is no such creature as an Aboriginal Falkland Islander, despite attempts to somehow manufacture one.

At best, everyone is a recent settler who can trace ancestry a mere 200 years. If the Earth is about 10 billion years old that's peanuts, and John Fowler's editorial of March 4, despite being challenged irrelevantly on points of law, is I feel bang on the button in drawing attention to the "waste of hard-working people who leave here because they see no prospect of ever belonging."

Parking bays a safer option

CAN I thank Tyssen and his men for the great work they do around Stanley, especially for the marvellous job they have made of the parking area outside the hospital.

It is a joy to nip to clinic and find a space to park in. Only a short while ago it was chaotic along that road, with many vehicles being jammed in together.

I admit I was one of the worst offenders and, even though my car is tiny, I often had a yard of bonnet straying over someone's drive while I popped in to the hospital.

The new system is safer and definitely much more efficient.

Charity baton runner's late, late dash for the marathon start line

ONE of the charity runners in Sunday's Standard Chartered Stanley Marathon is still 8,000 miles away from the rest of the field – but he's hoping a last-minute dash will get him to the start on time.

Honiton barber Alan Rowe found his seat on yesterday's Airbridge flight cancelled, and is now hoping tomorrow's oil charter flight will finally bring him to the Falklands to run the race and raise valuable funds.

Alan will be carrying the Bastion Baton, a symbol of his registered charity, created from the handle of a Royal Marine stretcher used in the volatile Helmand province in Afghanistan.

Alan will be carrying the Bastion Baton, a symbol of his registered charity, created from the handle of a Royal Marine stretcher used in the volatile Helmand province in Afghanistan.

President of Honiton Running club in Devon, and recipient of an MBE, Alan founded the Baton charity to promote a non-political message of support for service personnel and their families.

The baton has been carried around Britain and in areas of conflict to keep the sacrifices made by members of the armed forces and their families in the minds of the public.

Falkland Islanders Tina Hirtle and Campbell Kirkham agreed to help Alan when they met him during a visit to Devon earlier this year.

Honiton Mayor Peter Fleming (centre) holds the baton with (from left) Tina Hirtle, Holly Hirtle, Campbell Kirkham, Zoe Hirtle and Alan Rowe, who plans to run Sunday's marathon help Alan when they met him during a visit to Devon earlier this year.

"We are in contact with each other practically every day to organise visits with the schools," said Tina, who has been helping to plan his visit and organise fundraising events. "He had hoped to run to all of the memorials in the Falklands after the marathon, but he didn't understand how far each of them was apart," she said.

He now hopes to be driven close to some of the major sites, from where he will run to them, honouring those who fell in the 1982 war. Alan also is planning to meet FICS students on Monday ahead of leading them on a Tumbledown run on Tuesday, and he said he couldn't think of a better place to take the baton.

"We lost 257 servicemen in the Falklands, but it is estimated that around a further 400 have taken their own lives since.

"This epitomises why I started the Baton charity. War is not the end of the suffering.

"We must have patience and tolerance for those who have been through conflicts and do what we can to help and support them."

He also will bring with him a plaque to honour sailor Darryl Malvin Cope, the son of a Devon couple, who died on May 4 1982 when HMS Sheffield was struck by an Exocet missile, just before his 21st birthday.

His mother Marge said she was "absolutely thrilled to bits" that a memorial for her son was going to be taken to the Falklands.

Anyone who is willing to help Tina with Alan's visit can contact her on 51781.

Wristbands and dog tags also are available to buy in support of the Baton charity.

A Sunday morning stroll kept children and adults captivated by the wonders of Stanley's wildlife

Nature and wonder, hand in hand

SIXTEEN children and adults from the Cathedral Sunday Club enjoyed a nature walk around the centre of Stanley on Sunday.

We started out by admiring the flower displays on Arch Green – the adults' favourite was the flowering ornamental cabbage – before imagining what it would be like to be in the jaws of a whale.

We then went down to the seashore, where the children found limpets, mussels, krill, and several kinds of seaweed and lichens.

A walk along Victory Green provided lots of opportunity for bird-watching: rock cormorants, kelp gulls, dolphin gulls, upland geese, kelp geese, logger ducks, crested ducks, and even some sparrows. A lilac jelly fish floated past menacingly. Continuing up Barrack Street, onto Drury Street and back along John Street provided lots of opportunity to admire Stanley's gardens.

The adults were enchanted with honeysuckle and roses, but the children were more interested in Kay's gnomes and a nearby hen-run.

The group's artwork (now on display in the anteroom to the Parish Hall) reflected the weather, with a rainbow arching over drawings of Perfect Plants, Awesome Animals and Beautiful Birds.

Sunday Club meets in the Parish Hall every Sunday (except the first Sunday in the month, when a Family Service is held in the Cathedral) from 10-11am.

All children age 5 to 10 are welcome. For more information contact Jen Hines on 21100 or myself on 22817.

Listeners so richly generous

FALKLANDS Radio listeners have raised £560 to help those affected by the earthquake in New Zealand on Wednesday, with their day of Pay To Play. Starting at 8am and running for 14 hours, staff at FIRS accepted pledges from the audience to hear their favourite songs, with all money raised to be donated to the cause.

Acting Station Controller Ailie Biggs said: "It went really well. I'm so impressed at the generosity of our community.

"This is the first time we have attempted such an event, and it is certainly something we would consider again in the future for another worthwhile cause."

Funds from the station's Cash Bash auction held in December also have now been collected and distributed. A total of £7,324.18 was raised on the day, with the total split equally between the Cancer Support and Awareness Trust and Falklands Radio.

Miss Biggs said: "Again, what a fantastic outcome. Thank you to everyone who rings in and gets involved during these events, every contribution, big or small, really does make a difference."

FICS on a hop, a skip and a jump

THE Annual Falkland Islands Community School Sports Day was very successful, with all pupils taking part in a fun competitive manner.

There were a number of closely run races and field events throughout the day, and all three houses were very close in the points tally.

However, the eventual winners were Shackleton House, closely followed by Ross House and finally Fitzroy House.

There were also some staff events which proved popular, including a high jump competition and a staff 4x100m relay.

Unfortunately for the staff the Year 11 team was far too quick and won the race, with Ryan Poole beating history teacher Ben Lovett to the line. The Learning Support team worked very hard all day and the next day in selling food and drinks to raise money for the school.

At the moment the total amount raised is thought to be around £300, which is a great effort for a worthy cause.

I would like to thank all the staff at FICS for their contribution on the day, and helping to make it run smoothly.

It was also great to see a number of parents and other family members and friends cheering on the pupils.

Thank you all for your support on a good day had by all.

The historical war of words: an alternative point of view

BECAUSE my grandmother was born there, the two articles on The Falklands in last Sunday's Herald were very interesting. There is much more to consider apart from Pepper and Pascoe's legalistic verbiage and Cisneros' cry-baby response...

Defending the frontier

In the 1870s Chile claimed Patagonia. In 1876 one of their warships actually seized a French ship in the Santa Cruz River (and in 1878 an American one) and killed some French settlers claiming that they were trespassing on Chilean sovereign land.

When the Argentine Minister of War, General Roca, heard of this, he had a problem: his army did not even control the land south of Azul, just 200 kilometres from Buenos Aires. How could he keep the Chileans out of Patagonia?

Roca had a brilliant idea: put British settlers in Patagonia. The British had five warships and troops on the Falklands and these would defend the British settlers should the Chileans bother them.

So Moyano, the first governor of Santa Cruz, went to the Falklands and offered 4,000 hectares of land to any Falklander that would settle in Santa Cruz.

Among the half dozen families that accepted the offer was my maternal great grandfather, William Halliday. He landed with his family on the North side of Rio Gallegos on July 31 1885.

Was this action by Roca and Moyano an admission of British sovereignty over the Falklands? Hmm...

People not land

Universities teach that, in international disputes, developed countries think in terms of people and underdeveloped ones in terms of land. That certainly is the case in the Falkland Islands dispute.

The Kelpers are overwhelmingly British descended. That is why the UK stands up for them. The Argentine side never mentions people, they only claim the land.

The United Nations considers that colonialism exists when a country has a possession inhabited by people of another race, language, inheritance, etc.

Since the Falklands are inhabited nearly exclusively by Brits, the Argentine claim that the British are colonialists carries no weight. On the contrary, if the Argentines had the Islands, they would be the colonialists because they are quite different in origin, language, customs, etc from the Kelpers.

Former Argentine President Julio Roca

As we reported in Penguin News in mid-January, the publication in the Buenos Aires Herald of an article by Graham Pascoe and Peter Pepper, under the heading "Falklands' Facts," led to a protracted debate between its authors and Andrés Cisneros, who was Argentina's former Ambassador and Deputy Foreign Affairs Minister during the Menem administration.

Beginning in the pages of the BA English language newspaper, the debate eventually spilled over into the news agency Mercopress. Here it continued and has now been joined by a third contributor: Anglo-Argentine Henry Whitney, who, as Mercopress describe him, "has the benefit of understanding both cultures and idiosyncrasies."

Mr Whitney's contribution, which we reproduce here, was originally published by Mercopress on March 7 under the title "Falkland Islands: other points of view." It seemed to us to be so full of good sense that we wanted to share it with our readers.

Crime against humanity

The majority of the Mercopress readers would agree that if Argentina had a quality of government at least slightly resembling the UK, the Brits would have a different attitude towards negotiations.

But to turn over the Falklands, with its remarkably developed democracy, reliable justice and honest leadership, to Argentina would qualify as a crime against humanity.

Studies indicate that practically across the board Argentina ranks badly on corruption, injustice, poverty and economic mismanagement.

Democratic decisions

The Kelpers have voted in free elections that they want to continue their present relationship with the UK. Mercopress readers might ask themselves, were the 40 million Argentines to have the Falklands, would they respect the wishes of the 3,000 Kelpers? No matter what the intentions might be, if Argentina were to control the Falklands they would most probably end up treating the Kelpers like they do the Wichi, Toba and Mapuche Indians.

A discriminatory society

When I was a blond, blue-eyed child growing up in the Northern Buenos Aires suburbs, I was insulted on various occasions because I looked like a foreigner.

Argentina is a surprisingly discriminatory society. So much so that the Argentine Constitution actually says in Article 25: "The Federal government will encourage European immigration..."

What other country has a constitution that outrightly discriminates against all but Europeans? Ciao English language, driving on the left side, local autonomy.

Fair weather people

Mainly because of the climate, 60 per cent of the population of Santa Cruz Province is Chilean or their descendants. To my grandparents, Patagonia had a beautiful climate compared to the Falklands or Scotland.

But for the majority of Argentines, seeing the whales in Puerto Madryn is one thing; Perito Moreno Glacier is worth a few days; but few Argentines want to live south of the Rio Negro.

Years ago I remember the Santa Cruz government had to offer Argentines from the north an airplane trip per month back to Buenos Aires to get them to go down to Santa Cruz. I don't know if they still do.

If the Argentines have such a problem with the Patagonian weather, how will they survive the even worse Falkland Islands weather?

A wider vision

Before the Panama Canal and the transcontinental railway in the USA, ships had to go around Cape Horn to get to the Pacific and to the California gold rush.

The number of ships entering Port Stanley for supplies or repairs was very large. One photo I have, taken at the turn of the century, shows 11 ships anchored off Port Stanley. Later, with the appearance of steamships, the Falklands became an important coaling station.

In World War I the British had a fleet there to stop German ships from going around the Horn.

The fleet that fought the Battles of Coronel and Falklands sailed from Port Stanley. In WWII the Falklands was the base the British fleet sailed from to battle the German cruiser Graf Spee.

Today the Falklands are still of strategic importance to Britain and her allies. With Diego Garcia, Ascension, Gibraltar, etc, they form a network essential to world peace. Argentina, on the other hand, thinks inwards.

Because of that attitude, the country can't even protect its own fishing grounds, let alone the Falklands. Controlling the Falklands would create problems Argentina could not handle.

What of the future?

Kelpers don't want to be Argies. But that doesn't mean they don't want to have relations.

If Argentina lowered its voice and allowed contacts with the Falklands, barriers would slowly fall. Trade between the two would grow, and with it friendship.

Is it so important to "own" the Falklands? What's wrong with a good friendship? Let the Kelpers live their lives.

How birds of a feather learn to live together

Photographer Sue Flood had her heart in her mouth when she spotted this King Penguin chick with his heart on his chest. Captured during a recent visit to Antarctica, it was the first time she had seen a moulting bib in a heart shape.

THE ability of diving seabirds in the Falklands to live and hunt together has underscored the miracle of behavioural evolution, according to researchers.

A recently published paper from Germany's Max Planck institute, based on studies of Imperial Shags, Gentoo, Magellanic and Rockhopper Penguins at New Island, revealed remarkable insight into how behaviour and co-operation between competing colonies ensured survival.

With most of these birds gathering once a year for breeding, they face massive competition to feed themselves and their offspring, sharing similar sustenance interests of crustaceans, squid and fish.

Yet researchers were surprised to learn how the birds actually had a great deal of flexibility in space, time, and prey choice that could allow them to all have access to resources without treading on one others' turf.

The two colonies of Gentoo penguins were found to segregate themselves from one another to enhance foraging success, and did not overlap at all in their foraging ranges.

Creating distinct divisions in the sea, Rockhoppers only overlapped in five per cent of their range, and Magellanics overlapped in 14 per cent.

Since the Imperial Shags only inhabited one breeding colony, the researchers decided to look at divisions of space within it, and in particular, by gender.

The birds were found to divide up their space by gender, but also their time. Females foraged in the morning close to shore, while the males watched over their chicks, and later in the day the males left the colony and foraged farther offshore.

As different kinds of food live inshore versus offshore, it varies the chick's diet and helps ensure that no one area is depleted of resources.

The birds also divided food groups. At either end of the spectrum were the Rockhoppers, eating mainly small krill, and the Imperial Shag, which ate larger fish.

The Magellanic and Gentoo Penguins ate a little of each (along with squids), ensuring that there wasn't too much competition for just one resource.

With such distinct provisioning between colonies of the same species, and even between sexes of the same species, researchers said it was hard to imagine how all of this fine division of resources could occur at all.

But the low overlap in foraging range, distinct diets, and avoidance of fur seal colonies was unlikely to be a conscious choice made by the birds.

They said in their paper: "Though it is decided without a legislative assembly to split resources, it is clearly an excellent example of behavioural evolution."

Most birds will return to the same colony at which they were born, and each bird itself was a product of two birds that were able to best survive and raise their chick properly.

"That chick is consequently mimicking detailed parcelling of resources, which helps the birds best survive."

Research into Southern sea lions makes a splash

SOUTHERN sea lions are top predators in our marine environment.

That means that just like seabirds, sea lions play an important part in maintaining the health of our seas.

It may come as a surprise, but Southern sea lions are one of the least studied pinniped (seals, sea lions, walrus) despite their wide distribution (Chile, Falkland Islands, Peru, Uruguay, Argentina). Information gathered on this enigmatic and iconic animal is therefore important locally, and globally.

Falklands Conservation, in partnership with the British Antarctic Survey (BAS) initiated the Southern Sea Lion Programme this season. It is funded by the Darwin Initiative Overseas Territories Challenge Fund and aims to uncover where sea lions find their food and what they eat.

This project was motivated by the 97 per cent sea lion population decline - from an estimated 80,000 pups in 1938 to 2,000 pups born in 1995. Despite a halt to sealing in 1962 the population continued to decline into the mid 90s.

Interestingly, sealing in the mid 1900's targeted male sea lions only. While some sea lion colonies have increased, others have declined, and some remain stable.

During February 2011, Falklands Conservation deployed satellite transmitters on adult female sea lions to follow their movements, and collected dietary information at two key sea lion breeding sites.

Initial results are remarkable. Maps of the foraging routes indicate that lactating females visit two very different habitats to find food. These can be broadly described as coastal inshore regions, and the Patagonian shelf-break up to 150 km from their breeding colony. These results redefine our understanding of foraging habitats used by adult female sea lions. Ultimately, this information will help to make clear impediments to population recovery in the Falklands Islands, and contribute to a more effective Species Action Plan. Sincere thanks to the many land owners involved in this project.

Snapshot of a Kelper's life on the great ocean waves

MANY young men feel the urge to see the world, but few act upon it to the extent of 82-year-old Stanley-born Terry Walsh, who returned to the Falklands two years ago after an absence of 54 years, and is currently visiting again with his daughter Melanie.

Terry, who now lives in New Zealand, has visited ports all over the world and sailed in a variety of craft from the sealing vessel Protector in the Falklands to ocean liners and even a Greek ship owner's private yacht in the Mediterranean.

Evacuated from Stanley during the Second World War with many other schoolchildren, Terry found himself at Port Howard.

When the rest were brought back to Stanley Terry, who was about 14 years old, stayed on in Port Howard and went to work there on the Navy Gang.

Terry remembers at that time "there were a lot of Lees there," including Sid Lee, father of Rodney, Alf Lee the foreman and his son Les.

It was a good farm to work on, says Terry, and one of the biggest on the West with about 36,000 sheep.

During the war the labour force was much reduced because so many men had gone to join the forces.

In 1947 or thereabouts, after three or four years of farm work, the urge for adventure struck and Terry came to Stanley where he joined the Lafonia as galley boy.

In this capacity, when the ship went back to Britain, Terry went with it and celebrated his 19th birthday in dry dock on the Tyne.

Returning to the Islands on the Lafonia, Terry next went to work more locally at Pebble Island on the Gentoos, where he stayed for a year or two before returning to Stanley to work on the East Jetty.

After a short spell on the Fitzroy, the Lafonia's successor, Terry went to work at the sealing station that had been constructed at Albemarle in West Falklands, near to Port Stephens. This, like the freezing plant at Ajax Bay, was a project of the Colonial Development Corporation and almost equally ill-fated.

"Those two projects; there was no research went into them, or very little," said Terry. "We had to give up because we couldn't get enough seal."

The target species were sea lions, although Terry says they would take elephant seals too, if they could get them, but they were very hard to get. Terry believes there were about 40 men employed at Albemarle, including the crews of the two ships, Protector and Golden Chance, which were responsible for catching the seals.

Protector can now be seen beached at New Island and the Golden Chance is one of the semi-submerged hulks in the Canache at the eastern end of Stanley Harbour.

However it may be viewed in today's more conservation-minded times, Terry enjoyed work as a seal catcher, not least because it paid well: "Two or three pounds more than for an ordinary seaman on any other ship, and we got so much for a barrel of oil as a bonus."

As part of the Protector's crew, Terry's duties included participating in the hunting of the seals.

"Everybody had to do everything, including the skippers," he says. The sea lions would be herded together and driven with bull whips up to a quarter of a mile to a place where they could be held before being sent down to a beach in pairs, to be shot. The quarter of a mile drive could take up to two hours. "If they were very fat, you couldn't push them," Terry recalls. "You could drive them about ten yards or so, then they would lay down."

It was important, Terry says, to prevent the sea lions from heading for the water: "We used to lose quite a few. Once they started to go for the water, all you had to do was get out of the way or they'd knock you over."

On one memorable occasion Terry and the group of hunters found themselves with no alternative but to flee between the sea and some 500 sea lions intent on escape down a muddy slope. Skipper Eddie Anderson had his rifle knocked out of his grasp in the confusion and it had to be retrieved from the mud.

"We got no seals that day," said Terry with a grin.

Once shot, the seals would be attached, two-by-two, every six feet, to a long rope or yawl to be hauled out to the ship, winched aboard and stored in the hold. Before this happened, the seals would be gutted on the beach and their ballast of stones removed to cut down excess and unwanted weight.

After some two and a half years of this lucrative employment, the sealing station closed and the Protector was sold to a local syndicate of Hector and Eddie Anderson and Les Hardy.

Terry stayed with the Protector, which was now employed for running freight around the Islands for a while, before once again joining the Fitzroy. In 1954, with Chris Anderson, a mate from the Fitzroy, Terry took passage from Montevideo to Britain, ending up like so many other Falkland Islanders in Southampton.

Soon after arriving in Britain, Terry found a job on a brand-new 300-foot Dutch-built motor yacht belonging to a Greek ship owner and based in the Mediterranean.

"People who own those yachts, don't use them," he says. During most of the seven months or so he spent on her, the MV Istros was tied up to the wharf in Monte Carlo, except for one trip to Piraeus and the Greek Islands.

Although very different from the South Atlantic, being in the Mediterranean was no great hardship for the young Falkland Islander, who says: "Monte Carlo was quite a nice place. I enjoyed it."

After this touch of the high life, Terry returned to Southampton, where, as he puts it, "I went to sea with the Merchant Navy."

Starting with the Braemar Castle, a Union Castle line ship on which he made five trips, many years of sailing around the world began with a journey which took Terry from London to Ascension, St Helena, Cape Town, and then up the East Coast of Africa, through the Suez Canal into the Mediterranean, and then to Genoa, Marseille and Gibraltar before arriving back in London two and a half months later.

After a few more runs to Cape Town and back with the same shipping line, Terry joined a Port Line ship which took him for the first time to New Zealand.

Before "coming ashore" around 1961, Terry says he was "running across to the Channel Islands, first from Southampton and then to and from Weymouth with tomatoes."

When I pointed out he had seen a lot of the world, Terry said: "That was why I left here."

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report

Tony Mills, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands
It is starting to get a bit monotonous but I find myself again reporting another rise in the EMI. The week on week gain is a very significant 41.3% (kg 126 p/kg) lifting the EMI to 1348. At the kg 843 GIP p/kg is highest level in absolute terms. The exchange rate as we report it has been static this week and therefore the price category lifts are genuine price lifts.
Analysts report good demand from China for wools suitable for use in capes, interior textiles and thick wool garments. This has translated into substantial lifts in the 26 - 32 micron ranges.
Supply issues that are still weighing heavy on buyers minds mixed with high levels of demand and high cotton prices are providing the background for high wool prices (nearly a perfect storm). Analysts believe these levels appear to be sustainable for several months but expect some volatility. Time will tell!!

Priscilla Halliday and Paul McDade were married in the intimate 18th century listed building at The Mill Forge, Gretna Green, Scotland on Tuesday February 15. Paul's brother Lee McDade and friend Sue Halfacre were witnesses, and guests included Donald Morrison and Bridget Langford.

The bride wore an ivory satin Alfred Angelo dress with a crystal beaded bodice, scatterings of sequins and rhinestone adorned the semi cathedral train. The gown was enhanced with an ivory satin bolero, with sequined hem and cuffs. The groom wore a grey morning suit with a dusky pink waistcoat and cravat.

The couple will be celebrating their wedding locally in the coming months.

On the eve of their tenth year anniversary, local couple Sarah Carey and Roy Shepherd joined together in marriage. The ceremony took place at the Malvina House Hotel and was performed by registrar John Rowland.

Sarah looked picturesque in a strapless, full-length ivory dress with detail beading around the bodice and skirt. She also wore an ivory shrug, and her long dark hair was pulled back into a small bun and finished off with a tiara. Sarah arrived in the FICs double decker bus along with her parents, sister and bridesmaids.

Shania and Ruby looked like little princesses in their matching lilac full length dresses, their hair done perfectly with tiaras and to finish, big gorgeous smiles. They led the way down the aisle scattering rose petals followed by three of Sarah's closest friends, Stacey Budd, Donna Henry and Kerri Ross, and the couple's nieces Tonisha Goodwin and Tansie Bonner. All the girls looked beautiful, wearing matching dark purple full-length dresses, with a white slip and a sequin snowflake detail and white shrugs. The bride was led down the aisle by her stepfather Derek Pettersson.

The groom looked handsome in his black with purple pinstripe suit with a lilac shirt and ivory tie, matched by his best man Richard Bonner.

There was not a dry eye in the house when the couple said their vows and finally said "I do."

Photographers sought to boldly go where the Challenger went before

VOLUNTEERS in the Falklands are being sought to help recreate on the internet a historic expedition from the 1870s.

Considered by many to be the first true oceanographic expedition, the 1,000-day voyage of the pearl-class corvette the HMS Challenger spanned 68,000 nautical miles.

She was a 17-gun, three-masted, 200-foot wooden ship with a steam corvette engine capable of 1,200 horse power. Starting with a crew of 216 she finished with 144 as the expedition took them through many harsh environments, including the Falkland Islands, Antarctica and Cape Horn.

HMS Challenger

They gathered data on currents, water chemistry and ocean floor deposits as well as identifying many new life forms.

The recent invention of photography also enabled them to accurately illustrate their works, and the scientific results of the voyage were published in a 50-volume, 29,500-page report that took 23 years to compile.

The crew took 500 pictures from its global ports, and six of them were taken around Stanley.

Now founders of an internet-based project hope to emulate the route taken by collating photographs retaken at the same angle as those of more than 100 years ago, including those taken in the Falklands in 1876. PhD student Gary McLeod is trying to find volunteers to help capture the locations, and invites them to join the voyage via the project's website.

He told the Penguin News: "I am trying to find volunteers around the Falklands who would be interested in searching for the locations in the original pictures, and re-photographing them from the same position. Although it isn't easy, looking at the history of a local landscape and photographing how it looks today is an exciting adventure."

Anyone with a digital camera can take part, and taking part is easy and free. People only have to go to the project website (<http://www.snschallenger.org>) and follow the instructions.

Troyd claims top spot in SCB Open

TROYD Bowles and reigning Stanley Open Champion Glenn Ross went to a four hole play-off to decide last weekend's Standard Chartered Open champion but Troyd edged ahead to win.

A field of 23 players signed in for the competition which was also the final two rounds of the Island Games qualifiers, and green keeper Rodney Lee had chosen some tough pin placings.

Saturday's round played in a cold northeasterly wind saw Troyd and Glenn both score 73 with Drew Irvine on 74, Jimmy Forster was fourth on 77.

In the ladies competition Carole Lee shot 80, one ahead of Sarah Bowles.

In Sunday's final round Sarah shot 79 to Carole's 83 and took the first ladies prize by two shots. But Carole didn't come away empty-handed as she won the prize for best front nine as well as nearest the pin on the 4th.

At the end of the first nine holes in the men's competition Troyd had edged two ahead of Glenn and three ahead of Drew.

Both chasing players then fell one shot further back as Troyd birdied the 10th. Drew then fell further back ending up with an 80 and third place with 154.

That left Glenn and Troyd to fight it out, Glenn making a great recovery to tie on 146 after the 18th, forcing a four-hole play-off. It came down to the first play-off hole, the 15th, which Troyd birdied. Both dropped shots on the 16th, parred the 8th and Glenn was unable to birdie the 18th.

Mention should also be made of Jimmy Forster who got off to a flying start in round two, and after five holes was one under for his round and level with Glenn.

Nick Stevens won best net prize with 126 and saw his handicap cut to 14. Jimmy Forster was second in the net comp on 135, one ahead of Johnny Ford. Nearest the pin on the 17th was Adam Glanville while Steve Vincent practically drove the Felton Stream to win the longest drive on the 18th. Stuart Haines won the best back nine on Sunday.

Thanks once again to Standard Chartered for sponsoring the competition and for providing the Sunday barbecue. The tournament was also the first where selected juniors were allowed to play with the seniors and Declan Bonner acquitted himself well.

As well as Sarah and Carole the following men qualified for selection for the Island Games: Troyd Bowles and Glenn Ross, who tied best five rounds. Kevin Clapp, Tony Roche, Ian Stewart, Tony McMullen, Graeme Hay and Rodney Lee. The team of four will be finalised shortly. This coming weekend will be the Caribbean Alliance sponsored competition with the usual check-in time.

Indoor hockey is off to a cracking start

THE 2011 Energise Shield started on Tuesday night with two great games, opening with a close match between the Sharks and the Penguins. Sharks opened the scoring with the club's youngest player, Sam Miller, scoring twice.

By the end of the first period, Penguins had levelled the score through Martyn Barlow and Antoine Daille. This set the scene for a fantastic second period, where Penguins took the lead through Barlow, only to have the score evened out by Penguin News' very own Teslyn Barkman.

With four minutes left, a cracking goal by Shark Dan Fowler saw Sharks finish 4-3 winners, a great start to the competition.

In the second game Blackhawks were at full strength, while Panthers had three players out for vacation and medical reasons. Each team is permitted to field a maximum of two guest players in these circumstances, so Buffalo's Nick Rendell and Andrew Miller stepped into the breach.

Blackhawks totally dominated the first period, with captain Craig Dockrill scoring four times and Sarah McKenzie and Robin Cooper picking up a goal each. Panthers scored twice, with Karl Nightingale netting against his former team. Period two saw Panthers come out with fighting spirit with Nightingale and Rendell claiming two goals each, while Dockrill also scored twice for Blackhawks, who won 8-6.

It was really good to have both female players on the score sheets and all four goalies made some cracking saves. Both matches were great to watch, and spectators included Barlow's parents who are visiting from the UK.

We are always keen for spectators to come along, so why not pop down on Sunday to see two more enthralling dek hockey matches. At 4pm, Buffaloes will take on newly formed sixth team, the Oilers, and at 5pm Panthers will face Sharks.

Falkland Oilands sends tabloid writers gushing

WHEN journalists at The Sun hop back onto the "black gold" bandwagon, you can bet they are itching to reclaim their piece of the Falkland Oilands media frenzy.

Under the banner "That's oil, Falks," the fabled tabloid this week announced, "The Falklands oil rush is back on."

Monday's announcement by Rockhopper Exploration that its Sea Lion discovery was, in the words of its chief executive Sam Moody, "highly likely" to be commercially viable, was all that was needed to set the tabloids into a spin.

In an effort to further pump up the story, The Sun quoted Finlay Thomson, an oil analyst at Canaccord, as saying: "This kick-starts the whole thing. In five years we could be talking about oil being produced in the Falklands."

Of course, we've heard it all before. But, crucially, we heard it first from Rockhopper, which continues to set the bar in Falklands waters.

The Daily Mail, too, was quick to get in on the act, proclaiming "Falkland (sic) oil fever hit the City once again," and announcing feverishly: "The news sent excited punters piling into every seat-of-your-pants oil stock involved in that area."

The latest Rockhopper announcement is indeed a huge fillip for the industry, after several months in the doldrums, not least when Desire's December "discovery" turned out to be nothing blacker than water.

Fellow explorers Falkland Oil and Gas Ltd, and the yet-to-drill Borders and Southern and Argos Resources, meanwhile, remain bit players.

But Rockhopper's well 14/10-4, spudded last month just over 2km from the first Sea Lion strike, appears to have again struck pay dirt. Designed to investigate just how deep the field's reservoir is, it found the oil-water contact level at 2,477 metres, and continued drilling to 2,801 metres.

According to The Guardian, the discovery revealed a "thick, high quality reservoir, a substantial oil column and the first oil-water contact in the licence so far."

According to Rockhopper, the 242 million barrels of crude it estimates is lying in the Sea Lion field is recoverable.

And that's exactly what sent shares soaring, leaping, jumping, rocketing, surging or shooting up, depending upon which newspaper or industry website you prefer.

Rockhopper's value at close of markets on Friday was £560 million (217p per share). The rollercoaster ride on Monday, during which 19 million shares were bought and sold, saw it climb to £882m (342p) by lunchtime before settling at £743m (288p).

The news had a knock-on effect not only for Rockhopper's fellow explorers, but also for writers at the Daily Mail.

They hit two puns on the head in their report on the price of Desire Petroleum shares which, they said, "gushed" to 50p before "boiling over" to close 3p up at 39.7p.

Stocks in the remaining explorers firmed to a similar extent. A click through the oil industry websites, though, revealed more sober appraisals.

"Two hundred million barrels doesn't seem big enough to be commercial," said Dougie Youngson of Arbutnot Securities. "If they found three or four fields in proximity, then that would be commercial." Charlie Sharp at Matrix was a little more positive: "This was a crunch well for Rockhopper," he said. "Failure would have raised enormous questions about the viability of the Sea Lion discovery. But the result appears to have matched or beaten expectations, raising the likelihood of a commercial development."

His confidence, however, was underscored with a rather important caveat: "There are still significant obstacles related to the scale of project, the need for a partner (greater reserves and preferably another field would be helpful), infrastructure and political issues," he said.

But he did at least agree with the London scribes who have helped push the rollercoaster along since the Ocean Guardian rig began plying its trade off the Islands.

"Today," he said, "the story looks back on track."

FALKLAND ISLANDS

AS Councillor Jan Cheek wrote last week, the Falklands does sometimes seem to get "swamped in protestations of love and peace."

These can be more trying to deal with than outright hostility. At least when people are nasty to you, you can respond in kind without the sneaking feeling that you are somehow losing the moral high ground.

While I don't always want to be on the lookout for ulterior motives, I do think it would be nice if people had the manners to wait until we ask them before attempting to do good to us.

As it is, sometimes I feel we are like an old lady who is forever being taken by the arm and led across the road when she doesn't want to go.

As a community I think we are generally happier giving charity than receiving it. Perhaps because of the frontier nature of our social history, we take good neighbourliness for granted to a degree which can surprise people from elsewhere.

This willingness to lend a hand sometimes produces better public relations as a by-product than our retained and no doubt expensive PR companies seem to manage on our behalf.

Take, for instance, the following quote from the BYM website which is accessed daily by yachting enthusiasts around the globe. The writer is one of the two skippers of the ocean racing yacht Hugo Boss, which had to put into Stanley for repairs last week.

"What a place! Nothing could have prepared us for the welcome we got or the help that came pouring in," wrote Andy Meiklejohn in his blog.

"This was never going to be an easy stop! The Falkland Islands are a logistical challenge. What we didn't count on was the help of the locals, most of whom just happened to walk down the dock for a look and ask if they could help!

"We had Shane and Bobby the tow boat drivers turning up at all hours to ferry us to the boat, tow us to a mooring or back again, Chris from Town Taxis gave up two nights work to flake sails.

"Diane Freeman rented us her sewing machine and Jenny, known to everyone as "Mother," put us up in her house for the first two nights while there were no hotel rooms."

All concerned deserve a big pat on the back.

Free broadband deal

CABLE and Wireless says it will offer its customers free broadband downloads over the next few months, as part of a package of changes to be introduced... starting on April 1.

The free megabyte (MB) deal is part of a "night time user" scheme. C&W says full details will be published soon.

Meanwhile, its residential broadband packages will be the first to be upgraded from next Friday, also at no extra cost to the customer.

The new monthly limits will be 3,300MBs, 1,250MBs and 450MBs for Gold, Silver and Bronze respectively, with lower "overage" charges of 9p, 10p and 12p per MB over the limit.

Chief Executive Justin McPhee said C&W was testing its free night time deal and hoped to launch it in the next few months: "We have come up with an exciting new scheme which will give every customer, residential or business packages, some free night time use.

"Collectively these are exciting new changes from Cable & Wireless which we hope will benefit all of our customers," he said.

Farmers go to market in town

THE Falklands first farmers' market will be held tomorrow in the Jetty Centre Car Park from 2pm to 5pm.

Organisers say there will be home-made breads, home-made jams and chutneys, home-made ready meals, fresh cream, fresh home baking and an assortment of fresh vegetables on sale, together with hand-made felted scarves, knitted woollen hats and hand-made jewellery. There will also be hot food

Cllr Bill Luxton, Chair of the Rural Development Strategy (RDS) Steering Group said: "This is a great initiative and exactly the type of project the RDS aims to support. This project shows what can happen when government helps provide an economic opportunity. The market is a chance to generate additional income and explore new retail partnerships but also an opportunity to showcase the talents and innovation of the Camp community."

Cllr Glenn Ross said: "The market will of course be a fun day out, but politically it tackles a serious issue. The event contributes to the Assembly's aim of reducing the level of imported fruit and vegetables by increasing the levels produced locally."

An initiative of the Rural Business Association (RBA) and the RDS, the event has cost less than £500 to organise, with the funds coming from the Rural Development budget.

Big hand for summertime

EXCO yesterday was due to discuss the possibility of Stanley remaining on summer time this year, after a show of hands at this week's public meeting indicated a strong vote of support for the move.

Responding to a question by Margaret Butler, there seemed to be a consensus among councillors that a trial would be worthwhile, (while tacitly admitting that set-lements in Camp would continue, as now, to do their own thing).

Apart from lighter evenings for leisure activities, remaining on summer time also would reduce communications difficulties experienced by businesses with partners in Europe.

Announcing the decision to take the matter to ExCo, Cllr Roger Edwards said councillors would welcome views from the public.

FI trio presses on with rights

DEFINING the future relationship of overseas territories with the European Union (EU) was the purpose of the ninth annual Overseas Countries and Territories of the European Union Forum, held earlier this month in the Pacific state of New Caledonia and attended by Councillor Roger Edwards, Michael Poole of FIG and the Falklands UK representative Sukey Cameron.

The relationship between the EU and its overseas territories is due to be formally renewed from January 1 2013, and 23 territories associated with UK, France, Netherlands and Denmark were there to formally agree a joint paper setting out their key objectives.

Cllr Edwards said the key messages in this wide-ranging document were a request for a commitment from the EU to a future relationship based on the recognition of overseas territories as valuable assets, but with unique economic, environmental and social challenges. It highlighted the need for EU support in the areas of development financing, communications, technical support for exports (eg fish and meat) and political backing where possible.

The Falklands delegation also succeeded in having all the territories present sign a declaration asking the EU to ensure their rights as defined in the UN Charter on self-determination were not undermined. In addition to the formal work of the forum, the opportunity was taken to discuss a number of topics with EU officials including the drawing down of the Falkland Islands outstanding balance (£13m) of European Development funding, environmental protection, renewable energy and disease prevention.

Joke's on them

THE Foreign and Commonwealth Office says the legislation passed last week by Argentina, which prescribes fines and sanctions for companies or persons involved in supporting oil industry in the Falklands, will only harm Argentine companies. An FCO spokesman was quoted in La Nacion as saying the bill would serve only to inhibit Argentine companies from taking advantage of the development opportunities in the Falklands hydrocarbons industry.

Robust regime

THE UK Government has endorsed the responsibility of the Falklands to monitor hydrocarbons development in its own territorial waters. Responding to concerns from the Energy and Climate Change Committee over what it called a "lack of clarity over responsibility for drilling and oil response" in the Falklands, the UK Government emphasised the Islands have a "robust regulatory regime in place."

ORDERS totalling £210 have so far been received for the FICS £5 Bento Japanese lunch boxes. Art teacher Jo Symons said it has been a great response and it will keep them busy, but there is room for more. If anyone wants a tasty lunchtime treat, email jsymons.fics@sec.gov.fk by March 31 and collect from the Community School foyer at midday on April 7.

Trusty boost

THE Cancer Support and Awareness Trust is more than £800 better off thanks to a £600 donation from Bargains Galore and £237 raised through the West Store charity token drive. Funds will be used to assist patients and carers with the cost of telephone calls while they are away receiving treatment or diagnosis.

Costa bombed

THE Falklands cricket team slumped to a 104-run defeat at the hands of Peru in the final match of their five-game ICC Americas Division Three tournament in Costa Rica last Thursday. Kevin Clapp top scored with seven runs as the Islanders were bowled out for 17. More next week...

Bye bye Bayleaf

THE Royal Fleet Auxiliary ship Bayleaf, which supported the task force during its first year of operations in 1982, this week sailed into Portland for the last time, having been laid-up under Ministry of Defence savings.

Cruise visitors award top marks to our tours

THREE Falkland Islands tours achieved the top ratings out of all South American excursions taken by Princess Cruise Line passengers during the 2010/11 season.

The Bluff Cove penguin rookery tour, the rockhopper penguin colony tour at Murrell Farm and the North Pond penguin tour were favourites.

Samantha Marsh, Tourism Coordinator of Falklands Port and Shore Excursion Agents Sullivan Shipping Ltd, said Bluff Cove Lagoon also was the most sold shore excursion during the past season, with the Stanley highlights tour the second most popular.

Tour agent Sue Bucket of Penguin Travel had an equally satisfying season, and both agents claimed there was very little negative feedback, with all of the visitors from one ship, the Seabourn Odyssey, saying they were "100% happy" with the tours provided.

A total of 40,525 people visited the Falklands this season, fewer than last season's total of 48,420, and the number of cruise ships to drop anchor was also down, with 32 visiting this season against 37 for the year prior. However, there were only three cancellations compared to 13 last season.

Miss Marsh said the most common complaints were about rainy weather and a lack of taxis - but there were more complaints from local residents than visitors.

This was due primarily to the offloading of nearly 6,000 passengers from the Crystal Symphony, Star Princess and the Infinity on February 2.

Meanwhile, a "Southern Cone" cruise, which takes in the Falklands as well as Uruguay, Argentina and Chile, was described as "the best in the world" by John Tereck of Royal Caribbean Cruises Limited, at last week's Seatrade Cruise Shipping expo in Miami.

Mr Tereck said, however, that high port costs in the region remained a problem, despite Chile's decision to reduce them.

Another speaker, Hugh Darley of Idea Inc, emphasised the need for first impressions of ports to match the passengers' expectations.

He said new designs should "tell the story of the destination," and involve the community, and he felt it unfortunate that very often the passengers' first impression of a destination was of an industrial container site.

He said there was a general emphasis that, bearing in mind the increasingly sophisticated entertainment on board ships, it was all the more important for every cruise destination port to appear attractive and enticing in order to compel passengers to leave the ship.

Anxiety at antics of Argentines

LAST week's visit of the Argentine Rugby sin Fronteras group was the subject of much discussion at Tuesday's public meeting, with the overwhelming majority of those present, including councillors, expressing anger and dismay at what they saw as an attempt to use children for propaganda purposes.

Councillor Sharon Halford said she thought it "appalling that foreigners could come in and target children" and colleague Bill Luxton said: "If I knew of a way of stopping it, I would."

While Cllrs Glenn Ross and Jan Cheek spoke of the benefits of individual Argentines experiencing life in the Falklands at first hand, both expressed anxiety at aspects of this particular visit.

Cllr Ross expressed his fear that the visit of such groups might provoke some people to commit public order offences.

Many at the meeting were surprised at the number of children who had participated in activities, and also at the number of parents who had attended the Thursday night session on the school field with their children.

While various ways to prevent a further such visit were discussed, the meeting's chairman, Cllr Roger Edwards, pointed out that the freedoms to be enjoyed under the Constitution of the Falkland Islands were not "exclusive to Islanders."

Squid tastes even better in Prague

FALKLANDS squid, seabass and kingclip were among the mouthwatering morsels served to guests and buyers at a prestigious exhibition in the Czech capital of Prague last month.

Fortuna Seafoods was among the exhibitors, as part of its push into central and eastern Europe, and three of its products featured on a menu presented by celebrity chef Alan Coxon.

The five-star menu, dished up at the two-day "Taste of Britain" show, included Yutaka tempura battered Fortuna wild caught loligo squid with chilli, lime and ginger jelly; marinated Falklands seabass in vinaigre; and flash-seared Fortuna Seafoods Falkland Kingclip, in Yutaka panco Japanese breadcrumbs served with a warm oriental yutaka ginger and micro green salad.

Mr Coxon said: "Needless to say it turned out to be excellent and, judging by the comments received, the fish dishes certainly made the impact that was required."

A spokesman for Fortuna said the company's toothfish also had been singled out for recognition, earning classification as "surimi grade," which was a great reference to have for future sales.

Fortuna Seafoods, who last year exhibited at a major food fair in China, will again be at the European Seafood Exhibition in Brussels in May.

Cockroaches sail in on container, but no regulations are breached

AN insect invasion, which could have left the population of Stanley looking back with nostalgia to the era of the earwig, may have been averted by the prompt action of the Agricultural Department's biosecurity officer, Shona Strange.

A consignment of pine sawn wood planks and pine sawdust from Chile, which came via Brazil in a 20ft container on the SAAS vessel Scout, was found to be infested with cockroaches.

Shocking as this may seem, no breach of regulations had occurred.

These materials, which are necessary to meet packing regulations for the export of lamb skins to China, were destined for the Falkland Islands Meat Company (FIMCo). While the wood was heat-treated as per the relevant international standards for phytosanitary measures, the same standards specify no treatment for sawdust.

Fortunately Frigorifico Simunovic SA, the abattoir in southern Chile with which FIMCo has links, had warned that a similar consignment which they had received had been found to be infested, though no information was received as to the insects involved.

On receiving this information, Miss Strange immediately requested the goods be held for inspection but, due to the nature of material and the way it had been packed, it was impossible to make a thorough examination in the container. It was agreed, therefore, that the goods could be released, but on the proviso that as they were unpacked, they should be routinely inspected.

On commencing unpacking under the watchful eye of FIMCo staff, some very small, but alive and active cockroaches were found. Among the hardiest insects on the planet, they are widely thought to be the only living creature capable of surviving a nuclear holocaust.

Although cockroaches are renowned for adaptability, they have only ever been found in a small number of buildings in the Falklands, like the Town Hall, from which they have since been successfully eradicated. In order not to give cockroaches a second chance of settlement, the wood and sawdust were immediately sealed up into two containers, and an appropriate insecticide was found.

In most parts of the world, the cockroach is not considered to be a quarantine pest and therefore no measures are taken to ensure that exported goods from any given country are cockroach free, nor are there any Falkland Island Government import regulations for wood and wood products, though contaminated products can be confiscated.

While this incident was successfully dealt with, it did illustrate how relatively easy it could be for the Falklands to face a new threat of some unwelcome invasive species.

In her capacity as biosecurity officer, Shona Strange would be interested in hearing whether people feel our import regulations need tightening up. Shona can be contacted at the Department of Agriculture on 27355, or by email at sstrange@doa.gov.fk.

Strange ship at anchor on a wing and a prayer

ONE of the strangest ships ever to visit the Falklands this week lay at anchor in Port William after making a hasty departure from FIPASS on Saturday morning.

Had it not left the dock, an ongoing legal wrangle involving its owners could have caused it to be detained there indefinitely – rendering a significant proportion of FIPASS unusable by other vessels, perhaps for a very long time.

The German owned 433ft MS Beluga SkySails looks like any other modern container ship, but a strange stumpy mast on its fore-deck is a clue to the fact that this is the world's first ship partially powered by a giant computer-controlled kite, similar to a huge paraglider, of up to 600 square metres (6,500 sq ft).

The kite is attached to the ship by a rope system and is deployed from an automatic pod. The system can control the kite at heights between 100m and 500m to maximise the benefit of the wind which, at such heights, is more constant than at sea level.

With the price of oil at its present high, it is estimated that the system, which can be potentially retrofitted to any ship, could save an average 87m cargo ship nearly 300,000 a year.

The Beluga SkySails arrived in Port William on Saturday March 12 carrying some 5,000 tonnes of oil and gas equipment for Rockhopper Exploration, which it began to discharge at FIPASS the following day.

But while it was in the Falklands, the Chief Executive Officer of Beluga Shipping was accused of fraud and the company, along with subsidiary Beluga Chartering, filed for bankruptcy protection due to alleged financial irregularities in their published figures.

The fear from the Falkland Islands point of view was that the parent company might be unable to pay its creditors, rendering the vessel effectively ownerless, and a court might then issue a detaining order which would require it to remain tied to the FIPASS dock.

When the Russian Academy of Science owned cruise ship Akademik Ioffe was detained in the Falklands in the 1990s because of unsettled debts incurred at a German shipyard by a sister ship, it was some months before she was allowed to go on her way.

At the time of writing, Beluga Sky Sails was still awaiting its fate. Lewis Clifton of Byron Marine told the Penguin News he had heard rumours of new owners but, if this was the case, they had so far failed to make any comment with local agencies.

Merchant Navy salty sea dog turns ninety amongst friends

JIM Lewis, born in 1921 in Yorkshire, turned 90 this week, but remains confident he is still very good looking for his age.

He was celebrating with four generations of family and friends at the Acorns Day Centre on Monday, and said his best present was "to have all my family and friends here, and for the children to enjoy good health and happiness."

"It's been a great day, but ask me again in a hour and I'd have forgotten and it will all start again," he said, explaining how it all seemed to get a bit jumbled these days.

Jim began his working life as a seaman in the Merchant Navy and was stationed to the Falklands in 1939, where he met Jean Grant and the pair married in 1941.

Shortly after their marriage Jim was posted to the Mediterranean and Jean travelled alone on a Merchant Navy convoy to stay near him. His son Dave said he was always being crafty though: "He'd somehow get a rope around the

After his tour was over they settled in Jim's home town of Hull, where they raised local faces Pam, Dave and Mandy, before moving back to the Falklands in 1986. The family lived at Goose Green where he worked as a handyman until moving to Stanley in 1990.

Jean died a few years ago and Jim now spends his spare time at socials at the Acorns Day Centre and travels on the blue bus.

Jim was a founding member of the Royal British Legion Falklands branch, after the RBL itself was founded 90 years ago. He also was a founding committee member of the Sea Cadets in the Falklands.

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Ya Peat

I'm pleased that you understood the point I made about employers being fair and looking after their employees.

Did you notice the cheeky sidestep into legislation speak?

The couple of cases I am aware of were not teachers, so are not under those rules.

Yes, I believe you are right, the two electeds who are FIG employees chose to stay on their normal salary, which I think is fair, but kind of blows the cheeky notion of "unpaid leave for civil duties" away.

Some say rugby was invented for people who couldn't play football! The visitors from East Chile seemed to not quite understand why they were treated coolly.

What on earth do they expect, given that their broomstick rider of a president is fixated with trying to give us a hard time.

They talked of peace but their Barbie Babe doesn't want any piece – she wants it all!

What I liked best in the Whitney article in last week's Penguin News was "developed countries think of people but under developed countries only think of land." That says a lot about certain, but not all people in East Chile. I reckon they are starting to get worried.

The short answer to your question on the new port is no. I haven't heard a thing about it.

I have to say one of the best decisions the Gilbert House gang did was to get rid of Calamity Ken! Head hunted by Teffy no less, but it can't go anywhere else now can it?

Thinking of Teffy, DMR going, COP going, DOPE going; changes afoot. I hear the next big idea is the dual Head and Dep Director of Education.

I'm having a "Petronius" moment again. Tell you what, though, the review of the review will save Teffy's bacon.

After all, the last lot swallowed those changes mainly on the promise of savings of £300k a year. I can hear him now: "If only you had stuck to the plan I could have delivered!"

Going to the far, far west shortly, so shall write in a couple of weeks.

Chief Gary has been a fair cop

I WOULD personally like to say a big thank you to DCS Gary Finchett as he leaves the islands in the next few days.

He inherited the police force when it was at its lowest ebb, and has pulled the whole unit back up to what it is now... no mean feat I'm sure. He has made a great change in the way the RFIP works now, and I'm sure that he will be sorely missed in the ranks.

I know that Trudi is one of those who have said she will miss his leadership. She has said his quiet way of stepping back and trusting his officers to do their job, while being available for advice, has done wonders for morale in the force. It is thanks to his leadership that the force is now looked on in a different light: people are now trusting the police, and realising that even crimes committed years ago are not beyond the reach of the law. I wish Gary all the best in whatever he does in the future. Good luck "sir." You are going to be missed.

Phantom saved from scrapheap

SOME sections of the Phantom aircraft, which for many years has guarded the entrance to the Mount Pleasant Airport terminal, may soon find a new home in Stanley.

Hearing that the aircraft was due to be removed, Councillor Gavin Short was initially interested in having the whole aircraft displayed somewhere in Stanley, but examination by interested staff from the Falkland Islands Air Service (FIGAS) indicated that it had corroded to such an extent that this was impossible.

What is now planned is that the complete nose section of the aircraft, together with the tail section, the engine and some other pieces will be saved from the scrapheap by FIGAS enthusiasts and later prepared for exhibition at the new museum site in the historic dockyard.

The FIGAS team, headed by engineer and restoration enthusiast Kurt Whiney and including former Phantom engineer Jim Parke, is ready to move as soon as a team of demolition experts from the UK arrives to begin work on the aircraft.

Ethan and Kyra arrive at FICS with their friends and the baton

The baton visits Mt Tumbledown

FRESH from completing the Stanley Marathon, charity fundraiser Alan Rowe visited both schools, accompanied by Tim Lowe RN, to explain the purpose of the Baton Charity on Monday.

They visited the Community School first, where Alan explained the baton was one of four created from handles of a stretcher used in Afghanistan: "When we hand it to people we ask them to think of how people have been carried to safety by it and how, unfortunately, some people have died on it," he said.

One of the batons is currently travelling to the North Pole with the charity "Walking with the Wounded" and, if successful, it shall be in the company of the first amputee ever to reach the Pole.

"When the engagement is over, it's not over," Alan said, highlighting the message of remembrance and the sacrifices made and still being made by those who have seen conflict and their affected families. He reminded the children of their responsibility as young adults soon to have influence in the world, to make their decisions wisely and vote with conviction: "You may end up in a position of responsibility yourselves. You may not think it sitting here, but it could be on you to make decisions that affect the world." Alan then presented Acting Head Teacher Helen Bell with a pennant as a memento of their visit.

He described his efforts on Sunday's marathon as "very much like a tortoise: head out and very slow." But Alan is not stopping yet. Having visited memorials at Fitzroy, on Tuesday he ran with students of the Infant and Junior School and took the baton to the Community School from where the students of FICS took it to the summit memorial on Mount Tumbledown, finishing at the Liberation Monument.

His aim is to visit as many memorials as possible, and Alan left Stanley on Wednesday to visit the HMS Sheffield memorial on Sea Lion Island. There he will leave a large engraved pebble of oak from the mother of Darryl Cope who perished on the ship.

Racing yacht on its way

AFTER the disappointment of making a forced stop in their race around the world, co-skippers of the Hugo Boss yacht left Stanley on Monday owing a huge debt to the generosity of locals.

Andy Meiklejohn and Wouter Verbraak admitted they had gone through some "dark hours" as they attempted repairs while at anchor in Adventure Sound, before deciding a stop in Stanley was unavoidable: "We are absolutely gutted after working for 48 hours straight without sleeping." Mr Verbraak admitted, "We were exhausted. It was not a fun place to be."

Sail specialists flew in from New Zealand on Thursday and, by Monday morning, they were preparing to rejoin the Barcelona Round World race.

They were able to borrow use of the FIDF Hall in which to spread out their sails, and Mr Meiklejohn said their support had been fantastic: "We could not really ask for anything more."

Having picked up on some much-needed sleep, Mr Verbraak was in a happier frame of mind as they prepared to leave: "We are very fortunate with all the help we got here. We were stunned by the mindset of the people here. They are very solution-orientated and that's exactly what we need."

"Nothing has been a problem, everything was just a phone call away and a friendly helping hand was never far."

Searching and rescue practice

THE Falkland Islands Defence Force took part in a search and rescue exercise last Saturday with the crew of the RAF's Air Sea Rescue Sea King Helicopter.

Flight crew for the day were pilot Flight Lieutenant Tom Greene, Co-pilot Lieutenant 'Daisy' May, Flight Lieutenant Doug Larkham and Winchman Sergeant Ady Brind.

Sgt Brind told his guests the aircraft was "a big bloody spinnny thing, so keep clear of the end," and warned them to not press any buttons when entering the "tradesmen's entrance" on the side, especially that of the shotgun blade cable cutter. He warned them as well to avoid losing a few brain cells by making sure the earth wire hits the ground first to release static energy built up by the two Rolls Royce jet engines.

Half of the group were winched at sea while the others were given the task of finding a missing walker last seen headed along Wireless Ridge bound for Hadassa Point. Seven were dispatched, two with quad bikes, and found their casualty in around 30 minutes. Sergeant Major Paul Watson called in the Sea King and, shortly after, he was picked up, relieved he didn't have much of a wait.

Standard Chartered Stanley Marathon 2011

Hugh and Manuel, still together approaching Sapper Hill

THIRTY nine individual runners and 18 relay teams of four joined in the fifth running of the Standard Chartered Bank sponsored Stanley Marathon on Sunday.

Run in sunshine with only a moderate wind, this year's marathon was a race that contained many firsts, not least the participation as a competitor of the Governor of the Falkland Islands, who is usually called upon just to start the race.

Nigel Haywood did just that, and then took off in pursuit of the field, arriving back at the finish line in 20th place with a creditable time of 4:15:33.

Somewhat slower was the oldest competitor, 76-year-old

Wes Love who had flown in especially from the United States to take part in what was his 199th marathon. Wes, who intends to complete his 200th in Zurich next month, finished, but his hopes of beating his target time of six hours for the 26.2 mile course were not realised.

Hoping for much better times were two-times former winner Hugh Marsden, recently returned from South Georgia, and familiar Argentine runner Marcelo De Bernardis on his fourth visit to the Falklands. Marcelo was third in both 2008 and 2009.

Marcelo developed problems with his Achilles tendon around the 20km mark and this year his compatriot Manuel Méndez won the race, gaining not only a medal but also the winner's prize of £1,100. Running in his first Stanley Marathon, 40-year old Manuel, who finished in 3:3:13 is an experienced long-distance runner. He has won a 100km ultra marathon and two other marathons in his native Mar del Plata, and also competed in the Spartathlon in Greece, a demanding test over 246km with a 36-hour time limit.

People, it seems, run marathons for many different reasons, including charity. By completing the course Acting Attorney General Ros Cheek raised more than £5,000 for kidney research, while Standard Chartered Bank's Kate Burston entered just to set an example to her fellow employees, and ended up being the first woman home to make herself £1,100 wealthier.

Although more used to taking part in shorter races on horseback, winner of the £200 Mike Summers prize for the first locally-born runner home was frequent champion jockey Tim Bonner.

First team home by a long way was the Internationals: Claudio Ross, Bill Chater, Steve Mason and Rex Eagle, although the latter confused race officials by appearing at the winning tape from the wrong direction. When this was pointed out to him, Rex ran round the Town Hall again, but still in the wrong direction.

Half Marathon victor Nirmal Rana was third

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that in the event of an emergency where no other form of communication are available, that the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the following frequencies.

VHF 2 metre Band

- 147.725 (Duplex - 0.6)....Mount Caroline repeater, covering the north of the West Falkland including the cross sound ferry main operational area
- 146.625 ...Stanley to Mount Alice
- 147.825 (Duplex - 0.6)....Mount Alice repeater, covering the south of West Falkland.

Marine Band

- 156.800...Channel 16 (Stanley area)
- 2.182 MHz HF

In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

It must be stressed that calling the Royal Falkland Islands Police on any of these frequencies must only be done in the event of an emergency

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report
17th March, 2011

Tony Mills, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands
The rise and rise of the Australian wool market continues with the LMB reaching another record high of 1370 AU (kg 1840 GIP/Fat). As you may have noticed when exchange rate is considered there is a 1p/kg drop. With the current turmoil in the Pacific region the AUD is depreciating against most major currencies. Exchange rate is influencing some of the price drop and in fact the only category to drop in AUD terms is 32 micron.
Analysis report that the coarse fibre diameter wool continue to find favour. This is attributed to the need for buyers to access cheaper wools for their blends.
On a local front it would appear that there is better assurance to the new level of wool prices with many consignees coming in well under the benchmarks. Let's hope the wool pipeline is short and some decent offers will be on offer.

Week ending	Pence per kilogram clean for each micron category.

Self-styled missionary carries a rugby ball and a message of love

"IT is not just about the Islands; we are hoping to reintroduce into our own country the values of fair play, respect, humility and working together as a team that rugby teaches."

"These are values which have been lacking over the last 26 years during which our country has in some senses been going backwards. Coming to the Islands where our forces were defeated and many of our countrymen were killed is not only meant simply to introduce rugby and rugby values to your children, but also to set an example of tolerance and forgiveness to our own country."

The above is hopefully an accurate synthesis rather than an exact translation of the words of Juan-Batista Segonds, President of the Rugby sin Fronteras (RsF) group, who spoke with Penguin News on Friday at the end of their third visit to the Falklands.

With a build not unlike that of English rugby coach Martin Johnson, and a perfect pair of cauliflower ears squashed tight against the sides of his head, Mr Segonds is unmistakably a rugby player. It is all the more disconcerting, therefore, when he talks about his mission being one of love and peace and cites as his heroes Mahatma Gandhi and Mother Teresa.

He is, it appears, a missionary with a rugby ball rather than a wooden cross.

Despite problems over access to the football pitch and warnings from the police about appropriate behaviour with children, the 14-strong group had been able to run a couple of after-school rugby coaching sessions and on a beautifully fine Thursday evening played some kind of match with a dozen or so local participants, mainly schoolboys.

These events, which amounted to little more than knockabout games, were hailed by the Argentine press as "historic" and afforded almost as many column inches as might be given to Premier League matches in Britain.

Mr Segonds was quoted in an article posted on infobae.com as saying: "Some parents forbade their kids to come and play with us, but the majority had no problem with it. We want to look ahead and leave our children with a message of peace."

It was suggested to the RsF President that this degree of publicity, generated largely by the group's own press officer, was excessive for what was just a coaching visit, and aroused suspicions there might be another more sinister agenda at work.

The Falklands had in the past received a variety of sports coaches in such disciplines as soccer, tennis, golf, badminton, swimming and, most recently, cricket - often through the offices of the Shackleton Fund - without them receiving any attention at all from the British national press.

In response, Mr Segonds said the activities of his organisation, which had refused financial support offered from federal and regional government sources, and was totally self-funded, had in fact gone completely unnoticed by the media for the first five years of its existence.

Among RsF's enemies were, he said, the government of his country, as well as the current group of councillors in the Falklands, who he believed had reneged on many of the promises and agreements made to him by their predecessors: "We just want to bring a message of love and peace" he said.

This sentiment was echoed by another member of the team, who was quoted in La Nacion as saying, "It's love: to come here to the ahole of the world to pass a ball and teach these kids rugby; it's love."

Darren's dash wins Caribbean Alliance

SEVENTEEN players including a representative from sponsor Caribbean Alliance turned out on Sunday for a stableford competition. Darren Wade romped home with 44 points, five ahead of Glenn Ross who was one ahead of Tony McMullen.

Best front nine was won by Troyd Bowles while the best back nine was won by Stuart Haines. No player managed to find the 12th green so, in a lucky draw, Ginny Forster won that.

Nearest the pin in the least number of strokes on the 10th was won by Bob Gilbert. Junior Declan Bonner won the longest drive prize on the 14th.

There were 14 birdies in all reflecting the excellent playing conditions. Caribbean Alliance sponsor David Kinnell, playing the course for the first time, acquitted himself well.

After last week's results Troyd now has an unassailable lead in the league with only one event remaining. Darren Wade lost two shots off his handicap and is now playing off 13. Tony Mac lost a shot and Sarah Bowles gained one.

The team for the Island Games has now been finalised. The men's team will be Troyd Bowles, Glenn Ross, Kevin Clapp and Ian Stewart, and Carole Lee and Sarah Bowles for the ladies.

Congratulations to Sarah Bowles on winning her second matchplay title with a three and two in the final against Ian Stewart.

This Sunday will be a three ball team alliance playing for the South Atlantic Team Challenge, in a stableford format with best two scores to count on each hole.

After the competition there will be a raffle and players are asked to bring a small gift wrapped prize. It is still not too late to get into a team. Usual check in time.

Budd nips in on debut

DEK Hockey debutants Oilers got off to winning ways on Sunday with a 5-2 win against Buffalos.

Gareth Goodwin, assisted by Lucy McGuire, opened the scoring followed quickly by a solo effort from Grant Budd, before Andrew Miller teed up Nick Rendell to pull it back to 2-1.

However, three further goals from Budd put the tie beyond his old side's reach. Buffs did reply with Rendell netting his fourth of the season.

The second of Sundays games saw Panthers play an in-form Sharks team. In a very entertaining neck-and-neck game Sharks went into a 3-2 half-time lead with goals from Nick Stephens and two from Dan Fowler. Panthers' goals came from guest player Andrew Miller.

Panthers made a go of it in the second half and equalised through Nick Francis. Sharks took the lead again through Ricardo Leyton and were able to secure the points with Teslyn Barkman assisting Dan Fowler for his hat-trick.

There were no games played on Tuesday and these will be rescheduled.

Oh bother, it's a beaver!

SEVERED tree trunks with teeth marks clearly visible on them, are found from time to time on Falkland Islands beaches and thought to be the work of beavers from Tierra del Fuego. Finding their way into rivers and from there to the sea, they have drifted across to the Falklands on the tide.

While not among the list of South American animals introduced into the Falklands in the thirties by John Hamilton of Weddell Island, it has always been assumed that the largely treeless Falklands would be of little interest to tree-eating herbivores, but now, following the mysterious disappearance of so many established trees from around Stanley and equally mysterious sightings of what have been described as "monster rats" scientists are not so sure.

Since around fifty of these animals were introduced into Tierra del Fuego from Canada in the 1940s, their numbers have grown to an estimated 250,000. With no natural predators and an abundance of food, beavers have thrived causing environmental havoc and are now officially considered a plague.

If beavers from Tierra del Fuego are escaping continental overcrowding on rafts of their own making and arriving on Falklands shores, a legal precedent being set in Scotland may have alarming consequences for any attempt to eradicate them.

Up to 20 beavers are believed to have escaped from private collections and are now living and breeding on the River Tay in Scotland, but an order to trap these escaped rodents on behalf of the Scottish National Heritage Group (SNH) is about to be challenged in the courts.

Louise Ransay, of the Scottish Wild Beaver Group (SWBG) claims that feral beavers in Scotland are protected by European law - whether legally introduced into the wild or not - and that the Scottish government is "flouting" European law with the trapping order.

Falkland Conservation personnel currently involved in rodent extermination, were unavailable for comment at this time.

Argentina's media hype going global

THE Argentine public relations campaign in support of their claim of sovereignty over the Falklands has taken on a new global dimension, according to a recent Mercopress report.

Argentine ambassador at the United Nations, Jorge Argüello, is scheduled to give a conference at the University of Chulalongkorn Political Sciences Department, in Thailand on the "Malvinas Islands issue" and the South Atlantic situation.

According to the ambassador's press office, the conference is part of the cycle launched by the Argentine UN legation under the name of "It takes two to Tango," a title which in itself highlights the repeated denial by the Argentine Government of the rights of the Falkland Islands people to a separate voice in talks about their future.

Argüello recently was a speaker at the Jawaharlal Nehru University in India and in Havana's Foreign Relations Institute in Cuba. Last year the conference cycle included Berlin and Columbia University and New School University in the United States.

He added that "Argentine diplomacy is displaying a clear strategy oriented to generating the appropriate political conditions so that the many UN resolutions referred to our Malvinas Islands become effective."

Live and on TV in the Falklands

TONIGHT at 7pm will see the Falkland Islands first ever TV station broadcast the first of its scheduled weekly news programmes.

From this week on, FITV will go live each Friday evening with a magazine-style news programme from its studio in the Stanley Services complex.

Trainers from Bournemouth University came to the Islands a few weeks ago to instruct camera operator and reporter Liz Roberts and station manager Paula Fowmes, in camera operation, editing techniques and script writing.

Partners in the project, Stanley Services and KTV are both very pleased with the product so far.

Mario Zuvic of KTV explained that due to the amount of editing required to produce a show, all programmes are aimed to be edited on the day of their filming and stated, "In the long term we not only hope to broadcast interna-

Now the times they're not a changing

EXECUTIVE Council has agreed that, on a trial basis during 2011, Government clocks will not go back this winter. This means that the Falkland Islands will remain on "summer time" throughout the whole of 2011.

Calendars currently indicate

FITV covering the Half-Marathon. Liz Roberts with microphone

tionally but our first focus is to reach everyone in the Falklands.

"As you know the KTV Digital only reaches North Camp and the Stanley area so to overcome this we will be producing DVDs of the newscasts so people can watch them anywhere they find themselves."

that clocks will go back one hour at 2am on 17 April 2011. Those indications should be ignored.

The advantages that will be gained from the trial include more time to contact UK and Europe during the working day, and lighter evenings during the winter.

Mr Zuvic went on to explain that FITV aim to produce an internet version of the broadcast to reach an even wider audience. He is hopeful this can be achieved in the next few weeks, after the broadcast itself has had opportunity to absorb regular viewers and get into the routine of production.

Practical arrangements are being made to ensure this information is widely disseminated here and abroad, and further notices will be published in due course to help remind the public that they do not need to put their clocks back this year.

FALKLAND ISLANDS

THERE is nothing quite so British as a Royal Wedding at Westminster Abbey.

So what could send out such a strong message to friends and neighbours of the Falklands that the Islands are British through and through? And what could demonstrate the famed "can do" attitude of Islanders – and give everyone a huge occasion to celebrate?

The answer, of course, is a Royal Wedding street party. But not only does nobody appear willing to take on such an event – nobody appears to recognise the tremendously positive spin-off such images and stories would earn the Islands overseas.

Aside from being one heck of a community get-together, images from a Falkland Islands Royal Wedding street party could so easily be circulated around the world via the British media and, perhaps, even by the Islands brand new TV station, FITV.

What an irresistible PR opportunity – and what a powerful tool with which to beat the patriotic drum.

The logistics are really not that difficult: throw together a few outdoor tables, begged and borrowed from backyards and pubs; canvass Stanley's eateries for the loan of cutlery and crockery; and recruit a small army of cooks to lay on a slap-up meal to be eaten al fresco along the Victory Green frontage of Ross Road.

If rules and regulations were considered a stumbling block, think again: Inspector Len McGill of the Royal (could that be a hint?) Falkland Islands Police tells the Penguin News there are no such encumbrances.

Any road could be closed in much the same way as they are for official parades and, for those who would like to toast Wills and Kate on April 29, there is no law here to prevent alcohol being consumed in public. And if the weather is poor, then just wrap up well and get on with it.

This should not be a case of waiting for government to make a move. This should come from the community itself. And it would surely be a mean-spirited civic body that refused to at least contribute towards the costs.

So, to mess around with mixed metaphors, is there anyone out there willing to pick up the gauntlet and fly the flag? If so, you have four weeks to get your Royal act together.

To not do so, in my humble opinion, would be a wasted opportunity to remind the world to whom these Islands belong.

Matthew Pointing (6th from bow) in his college eight

Pointing pulls it off

A FORMER Falkland Islands Community School student has taken part in the curtain-raiser to one of the world's oldest sporting events: the annual Oxford versus Cambridge University Boat Race.

Matthew Pointing, son of FIG's Senior Veterinary Officer, Steve Pointing was part of Oxford University's reserve Isis eight which won the race against Cambridge University's reserve Goldie eight on the Thames on Saturday, immediately before the day's main event.

Getting selected for the Isis team, with always the possibility of being picked for the main crew, is an amazing achievement for Matthew who only took up rowing when he went to university and is the result of many hours of rigorous training effort both on and off the water.

Following a course of exactly 4 miles 374 yards from Putney to Mortlake on the River Thames in London, the event now attracts a massive crowd of around 250,000 and an estimated TV audience of 400 million world-wide.

Proud father Steve says that his son is not naturally very demonstrative, but TV viewers in the Falklands saw Matthew looking happy several times on Saturday.

Feeling the pain for others' gain

LAST year a team consisting of Wilkins Kennedy Stanley employees, plus family and sympathisers, all possibly certifiable, raised just over £4,000 for charity by completing a midnight marathon walk in shocking climatic conditions.

This year, sensibly moving indoors, but still pushing the boundaries of sane behaviour, the same group of individuals hope once again that their pain will be others' gain, as Karen Lee reports:

AT midnight on May 27, 2011 three teams will be starting a swimming challenge. Each team member will swim a quarter of a marathon. The challenge will start at midnight and all swimmers will aim to finish before the pool opens at 10am, with some hoping to finish much quicker!

Each team member is to swim 422 lengths of the Stanley swimming pool, or an overall distance of about six and a half miles. Some members of the team have opted to share the distance with a friend, so in total 15 of us will be swimming.

We aim to raise money for two local charities: the Cancer Support and Awareness Trust and the special needs function at the Infant and Junior school via the Parents' Association. Both are registered Falkland charities.

If anyone would like to help with counting of lengths, lifeguarding the pool (if they are qualified), snacks that you can eat and then swim (we haven't worked that one out yet) or providing moral support, then please give us a call on 22918.

Combined search fails to find missing seamen

LAUNCHES, a helicopter, an oil supply ship, a patrol vessel and HMS York were all called in to action at the weekend to search for three crew members reported missing from a fishing vessel.

At 7.52 on the evening of Saturday March 27, the Falkland Islands Company's shipping agency informed the Fisheries Department's duty officer that three crew members were missing from the jigger Shuenn Ching I, which was transhipping to the refrigerated cargo vessel Pusan Reefer, approximately 1.5 nautical miles east of Long Island in Berkeley Sound.

The three crew members were last seen at approximately 7.00pm.

Duty Officer Bernard Meehan requested the services of launches from the FIC and Sullivan Shipping which proceeded to the area. The offshore supply vessel Toisa Invincible on passage to Stanley was also requested to divert to Berkeley Sound to carry out a search. The Military Joint Operations Centre was informed and scrambled a Sea King helicopter. Officers from the Royal Falkland Islands Police attended the vessels by launch and the King Edward Memorial Hospital was informed of the situation.

The search carried out by the launches, the Sea King helicopter and the Toisa Invincible unfortunately yielded no results and was abandoned at 11.10pm when the Sea King was recalled to MPA.

The search was resumed at first light by the Sullivan's launch and at 7.45am the fisheries patrol vessel

Members of the FIDF undertook a shore search of the south coast of Berkeley Sound. The RAF Sea King was in attendance in the morning and had searched the whole area before shortage of fuel necessitated a return to base at 11.40am. Finally, HMS York attended the scene later in the day to carry out a search.

The search was called off at four o'clock on Sunday afternoon, by which time the Royal Falkland Islands Police investigation was already complete and the vessel was free to return to the fishing grounds.

The Fisheries Department would like to thank all concerned for their efforts.

Rise in cost sparks rush

THE rise in the cost of electricity to 19p a unit from today caused a rush to buy pre-paid meter cards at the old price last week.

Mhari Ashworth of Kelper Stores reports that the announcement of a 13 per cent rise in the cost of pre-paid electricity cards resulted in over twice the usual number sold last Monday.

Customers with credit meters have been sent self-read forms to complete.

We are told the new unit price would have been 26p without the contribution of the wind farm.

THERE can be few sadder phenomena in nature than that of the beaching of whales. This image, taken on Speedwell Island by Chris May, reveals the extent of the grounding of 400 pilot whales earlier this month, possibly induced by an undersea earthquake or the following of a lost or sick individual.

FIMCo rejects some retailers' accusations of unfair trading

THE Falkland Islands Meat Company, (FIMCo) has reacted angrily to allegations that by importing some meat cuts from their Chilean partner, Simunovic in Punta Arenas they are somehow acting unfairly or putting undue pressure on the scarce opportunities for imports from Chile which currently exist.

That meat from Chile is being imported by FIMCo is not denied. In fact in the latest edition of the abattoir's own newsletter, Sand Bay News it was stated, "We continue to import some high value beef cuts from Simunovic (Chile), in areas where local supply is lacking, such as fillet and sirloin."

A number of complaints against these imports had been put to Penguin News, which passed them on to FIMCo for clarification. The first of these was to the effect that as a company receiving a good deal of government subsidy, FIMCo's competition with local meat importers was unfair.

Such a premise was denied in statements from both FIMCo's General Manager John Ferguson and David Waugh of FIDC who is also a FIMCo director. Both take the view that as a limited company FIMCo is obliged to behave commercially in a competitive commercial world if it is to succeed and that further more it is only by being commercial that its dependency on subsidy will be reduced.

The other, possibly more cogent-seeming complaint in the face of current egg and fresh vegetable shortages, was that any increase in pressure on an already scarce air freight allotment from the mainland would serve to intensify and prolong these shortages. It is claimed by FIMCo's detractors that this pressure could be reduced if meat required to counter local supply shortfalls could be shipped into the Falklands rather than flown.

For reasons of customs certification, there is apparently no legal way in which eggs can be imported into the Islands from South America at the moment, except by air and there are claims by local suppliers that eggs bound for the Falklands from Santiago have in the past been off-loaded from the LAN flight to make room for meat being loaded in Punta Arenas.

Mr Ferguson said that he saw no reason why he should defend his company against wild rumours, but he did give his opinion that when freight is not carried it is usually due to passenger load and in these circumstances, "no one gets anything."

Apologies

THE Penguin News wishes to correct a number of errors in our reporting of the Standard Chartered Bank Stanley Marathon. This was the seventh organised by the bank, in which 46 individual runners took part. Hugh Marsden has won this race three times before, and Governor Haywood's final position was 21st. Our remarks about the motivation of ladies' winner Kate Burston came from a person we considered credible, and we regret any upset this may have caused.

Mission mobile

THE Stanley Seamen's Mission has been awarded a £17,400 grant from the International Transport Federation Seafarer's Trust to purchase a new vehicle, including providing transportation for seafarers. Betty and Luis Romo said they were especially grateful to previous Mission managers Debbie and Maurice Lake who initiated the grant application, as well as to the ITF Seafarer's Trust.

Firth role offer

OSCAR winning Colin Firth has been offered the role of Captain David Hart Dyke, commander of the Falklands War destroyer HMS Coventry, in a film adaptation of Captain Dyke's 2007 book, Four Weeks In May, according to the Daily Mail. After the Coventry attack – in which he was badly burned – he was convinced his dead twin brother had guided him to safety out of the burning operations room.

Appeal mounts

THE local Japanese Earthquake and Tsunami Appeal was close to £1,500 this week with Stanley Football Association donating £100 from Sunday's Football Club fun day. The £5 FICS Bento boxes are set to boost the fund further when office workers and home diners turn Japanese at lunchtime on April 7.

Wedding gift

COUNCILLORS have decided to contribute to the Battle of Britain Memorial Flight as a wedding present for Prince William and Kate Middleton. The gesture continues the tradition begun in World War II when the Falkland Islanders bought ten Spitfires for the Royal Air Force.

Cuts kill

AMONG other victims of cuts in the BBC's World Service budget are the Corporation's radio broadcasts in Spanish for Latin America. The service was launched in 1938 and its journalists famously remained objective during the 1982 Falklands War, despite pressure from the British Government.

Legislative Assembly Diary

Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

THIS week is another busy one with two days' work on the budget. Thursday and Friday. We met Chamber of Commerce council members on Tuesday and the Civil Military Liaison Officer on Wednesday. That day we also had one of our regular telephone meetings with PR consultants Edelman. We meet the Governor and Chief Executive separately every Wednesday afternoon. This week's meeting with the Chief Executive also included the introduction of the new Attorney General.

LAST week as well as GPC, public meeting, SFC and ExCo, the Honourable Sharon Halford and I had our regular meeting with the Director of Health and Education at which we were updated on recruitment matters as well as discussion of a couple of problem areas.

MEMBERS also received many comments and calls on the subject of remaining on summer time. The vast majority thus far have favoured the proposal. The main advantages are seen as lighter evenings, with more opportunities for work and play, and a longer period during the working day when businesses and others can contact partners and associates in UK and Europe. Another benefit will be that GCSE exam pupils may not now have to be isolated from 7am minus mobile phones on certain exam dates. It looked as though some exam boards were going to insist on this, but a lesser time difference may make it more manageable.

I WOULD urge individuals with any interest in the uses of Stanley Common to fill in the consultation paper on the management of the Canache area which is obtainable from the Planning office. In addition to specific questions it has space for other comments. Closing date for that consultation is April 15. ExCo has also requested that there be public consultation on proposals for improving tourist facilities at Gypsy Cove. It is important that general users of Stanley Common land have their say and not just those with special interests. We have already seen a piece of Common land removed in the Canache area and I believe we must beware of further encroachments on public space as the population of Stanley grows.

A success story built on community's generosity

Quietly and unobtrusively, a band of dedicated volunteers has channelled many thousands of pounds to local charities. On Thursday, they celebrate ten years of business at the Falklands' first charity shop, Bargains Galore. Treasurer and trustee Viv Perkins tells their story...

IT was in November 2000 that the idea of a charity shop in the Falklands was mooted.

The three churches, Christ Church Cathedral, the Tabernacle and St Mary's, began making plans for a joint project, and a committee of trustees was formed, made up of the incumbents of the three churches, a shop manager, secretary and treasurer.

The object of the charity shop would be to raise funds to help support locally registered charities. Six were chosen: the Lighthouse Seamen's Mission, Cancer Support and Awareness Group, Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund, Falkland Islands Community Trust, KEMH General Fund and the Red Cross (local branch).

These remain the same today, with the exception of the Red Cross for the time being. The shop would be called Bargains Galore, a name chosen by treasurer Viv Perkins.

A portacabin on Hackett's Hill became the first charity shop, and so a "joint churches' venture" was born. It was opened by Governor Donald Lamont on April 7, 2001.

Managed and run entirely by volunteers, the shop has been an entire success. The takings on that first day alone were an amazing £381. And so it went from strength to strength, with donations of clothing, household items and some furniture being continually channelled through the shop, by the ever-generous general public.

Finally it became quite obvious that larger premises were needed. Business continued in the portacabin until June 2003 when, thanks to Dick Sawle of Seaview Ltd, he made available to us the premises at 37 Fitzroy Road, once a retail paint shop. In its present state at that time it was evident that work needed to be done to extend the building to approximately twice its size, decorate and fit shelving. Planning permission was sought, granted and work went ahead.

The portacabin premises closed on June 9, and on June 18 2003 "Bargains Galore" was re-opened at its present day premises by Russ Jarvis.

Up until March 25 this year the total sales and donations have amounted to an incredible £185,170. Of this, £9,403 was spent on the alterations and extension of 37 Fitzroy Road, £155,650 has been donated to the chosen charities, plus £1,000 each to the Tsunami Appeal Fund in January 2005, and the Chilean Earthquake Appeal in March 2010.

In addition to the monetary donation to the Lighthouse Seamen's Mission, donations of clothing are frequently given. These are eagerly snapped up by the fishermen from the jiggers, and you can often see them leaving the Mission with plastic bags crammed full of clothing. We also donate clothing to the Red Cross who have, in turn, been sending this to Chile, for the benefit of the poor and needy in that country. As well as the above, we have a couple of outlets in the Camp. These are also run entirely by volunteers.

Two accounts are held at the Standard Chartered Bank. No 2 a/c is a sum set aside in 2005 for any future extensive building expenses, the result of a very generous donation from a Canadian couple of CAS10,000. This realised £4,287 and, with accumulated interest, now stands at £6,608. The other account is the "working" account, which also attracts interest, small though it may be.

However, the shop has become a victim of its own success. We really have exhausted the present premises and would dearly love somewhere much larger.

Another story of success is the Furniture Shop. The need for somewhere to sell furniture and other household items became apparent, and Beauchêne Trading kindly rented to us, at a nominal rent of £50 per month, on a temporary basis, the old ITT building in the Beauchêne complex.

Since its opening on August 18 2009, a total of over £3,000 has been raised from furniture donations. Unfortunately, we must now vacate the premises at the end of April and seek some place elsewhere. We are hoping for some place soon. Can anyone help?

Of the original committee, four are still members: Gladys Lee, Anya Cofre (our first shop manager), Willie Bowles and myself. Rev Richard Hines joined us as the Cathedral incumbent member, Ann Reid is our shop manager and Phyllis Jaffray is a regular helper. Connie May is another sterling worker, who unfortunately is still away after medical treatment in the UK. Connie was at one time shop manager and, like Ann, did us proud by her devotion.

Our helpers have devoted many hours in addition to normal shop hours. And we are now desperately short of help in the shop as, for the foreseeable future, Gladys, Anya and Ann are indisposed due to sickness.

The proof that God works in wondrous ways is certainly shown in all the foregoing and, as long as the belief is there, it will continue to be so.

And so, on April 7, we can say what an amazing ten years that was... and what a splendid idea it was, ten years ago!

Guests meet between the sandwiches

Grace McGhie: have spoon, will make biscuits

HILL Cove welcomed a new "sandwich bar" when Camp Education pupils Tyler Hobman and Thomas and Grace McGhie opened the doors to their latest Design Technology school project.

The youngsters chose a variety of ingredients and sent a questionnaire to members of the community, asking them to submit pre-orders.

Grace made a batch of biscuits before all three pupils, aided by their teachers Clare Cockwell and Wendy Reynolds, set up a production line and made 19 sandwiches. Other visitors came for a drink and a biscuit afterwards.

Altogether they had 24 customers, who were later treated to a performance of The Owl and the Pussycat, recited off by heart by Thomas and acted by all pupils. The event was concluded by the Grand Draw of the Alex McGhie Fund raffle, which has raised over £1,000 for all children with special needs in the Falkland Islands. The main prize of two nights for two on Sea Lion Island was won by Mark Dodd.

Inaugural market a hit for farmers and buyers

SATURDAY'S Farmers Market brought out the crowds to Stanley Visitor Centre car park, and was regarded by its organisers as a success from which many lessons could be learned.

Rural Business Association (RBA) representative, Sarah Clement, co-organiser of the event with Nuala Knight of the Rural Development Strategy, told the Penguin News they had been "totally bowled over" by the public response, and really thrilled by the support of the event given by the farming community.

It was because there were so many more people than expected that there were unfortunately long queues of people waiting to pay, but this was something which would be addressed in the future. The experience was, Mrs Clement said, "a good building block for making future markets better."

Mrs Knight, who had brought much of the produce from the West in her vehicle, said now it was established that demand existed, it was hoped to hold further markets, possibly quarterly. There had been "really lovely feedback" from farmers, who she hoped would also now have a better idea of what the market's potential was for the sale of their produce.

A quick count up of the contents of the cash tin showed takings of around £600, mostly in the first hour and not including money taken by the Market Garden or Henry Boughton for his Woolmore sheepskins. Mr Boughton told Penguin News he was very pleased, not only with the amount of sales achieved, but also with the opportunity to raise the profile of the high quality skins produced at his Hill Cove tannery.

Apart from regular vegetables and preserves, of particular interest at Jan and Tim Miller's Stanley Growers stall was the array of cultivated versions of plants encountered locally in the wild, like sea cabbage, some of which had been propagated from seeds in Falkland Conservation's seed bank.

Fresh Camp eggs and dairy products, which were sent in by a large number of the 20 or so contributing farms, were among the hottest items on sale, and all but the earliest were probably disappointed. This is something else that Sarah Clement says will be addressed before the next market.

If anything else was a source of disappointment to some, it was the absence of products such as oven-ready geese, chickens and salt beef. Mrs Clement said failure to meet this demand might have been a product of the season or the shortage of notice.

Rumours that the sale of meat itself had been banned as a result of objections by the Falkland Islands Meat Company (FIMCO) were quashed as "completely false" by the organisers.

Speaking for the RBA, Mrs Clement said the idea of the Farmers Market was to provide farmers with new marketing opportunities, and the abattoir already existed as a major existing opportunity which did not need to be supplemented.

Incredibly kind and generous

I WOULD like to sincerely thank all the supporters of my recent fundraising for the charity Kidney Research UK for which I completed the Standard Chartered Stanley Marathon. My fundraising was inspired by Nick Chater and his family who are living in UK temporarily whilst Nick waits for a kidney transplant operation.

The charity's activity is dedicated to improving the understanding of kidney disease, its causes, treatment, and management. Nick is only three years old, so the charity's research has a real likelihood to have a positive impact on his future, as well as helping others with kidney disease.

Donations are still coming in, so I am not yet able to give a final total, but pledges and money received to date, together, have just reached an amazing £7,073.62.

If anyone still wishes to donate, they can go online at www.justgiving.com/Ros-Cheek.

The website will stay active until June 20. I will report a final total after June 20, but in the meantime I just want to repeat my very grateful thanks for the incredibly kind and generous support that my fundraising has received from both the Falkland Islands and from elsewhere. You are too many to name individually, but I thank you all.

Marathon run in great spirit

ONCE again I would like to publicly pass on the thanks of all at MPC for another fantastic running event in Stanley.

The marathon was a great occasion and one that will not be forgotten by anyone who took part. We are all enormously grateful not only to Standard Chartered Bank for organising the race but also to all the volunteers who turned out to run the drinks stations and marshal the course.

I cannot express quite how welcome a sight those drink stations were and how much the encouragement given by the team on the course and those who came out as spectators helped the runners.

I particularly felt there was a real bond between all those who took part, especially at the end of the race, and it seemed to sum up the very strong community spirit that we enjoy being a part of here in the Falkland Islands. We'll take some great memories of the race and whole day away with us wherever in the world we go to next. Thank you.

Violence rearing its ugly head

SPRING has arrived in Britain. The apple blossom and daffodils are blooming gloriously, the garden centres are thronging, people are sunning themselves in Hyde Park, rather than briskly striding through it only to satisfy their dogs' need for fresh air.

But, if you think that is the backdrop to a happy and contented country, you are wrong. In domestic and foreign affairs there is a strong sense of crisis, and even violence. Ever since David Cameron took power almost a year ago, he has focused on cuts that he insists are necessary to bring the country's deficit back under control. The trouble is that an increasingly large proportion of society does not agree, and they are expressing their discontent with increasing militancy.

They see libraries being closed, support programmes for disabled people and troubled youths being cancelled, private enterprise being introduced to the National Health Service, and major elements of the armed forces being scrapped.

Meanwhile, of course, the banks, which many consider to have caused the economic mess, continue to receive their grotesque pay cheques and bonuses. And everyone knows that they ain't seen nothing yet.

The massive wave of public sector redundancies is yet to commence and, while some will be happy to leave with a financial handshake, a great many others will swell the ranks of the discontented.

The first signs that public opinion might start to impact on the government's thinking came last weekend, when some 250,000 people marched in protest against the austerity measures. There was an element of violence about the protest, which means it achieved uncomfortable top billing in the press for days.

It is, unfortunately, the violent demos that achieve most. The evidence suggests that governments only listen and consider changing their policies if some windows get smashed and some scruffy youngsters (always "anarchists") are kettled, cuffed and dragged off by the rozzers. Evidence for that? The famous protest against Mrs Thatcher's poll tax proposals way back in the '80s became very violent indeed. The tax was scrapped.

Bound Ungagged

When 400,000 or so marched against plans to invade Iraq in February 2003 it was a totally peaceful and good-natured event. The government paid not a blind bit of notice. Last weekend, the usual symbols of capitalism copped it. Among others, Top Shop's Oxford Street branch was attacked. This generated the kind of news imagery that can make governments reconsider their policies, particularly as further violent protest is expected.

The coalition government is not popular, although David Cameron's personal stock has actually risen over the last few weeks.

He (with some help from the French) achieved the seemingly impossible and gained UN approval for military action to stop Gaddafi slaughtering his own people. Indications are that, with a clear UN remit for military action, the public approves of this campaign.

Ultimately, however, Libya is a sideshow. Domestic politics and economic issues always trump foreign policy in Britain, so the government's attention must still be focused on its exceedingly painful austerity plans and public anger about them.

The real struggle is on the home front and, as far as I can tell, no Top Shop is safe.

Remembering dear Bill Bailey

OUR family, and quite a number of other Falkland Islanders, lost a good friend when Bill Bailey died.

He was 89 but, just a year earlier, Bill was still travelling the world.

Even when his health had deteriorated he was, I believe, still planning adventures. I admired Bill greatly. He enjoyed life so much and rarely did so from the comfort of his armchair.

He embodied the spirit of the great journalist Bill Deedes who, while reporting for the Telegraph well into his 80s, told a young colleague: "The secret is, young man, that you've got to die with your boots on." Bill only laid up his travelling boots a short time before he passed away.

He was a close friend of my mother, Joan. They met in 1947 when Bill was a young scientist developing the ionospheric research station in Stanley.

Bill went on to spend a period at the FI Dependency Survey base at Port Lockroy on the Antarctic Peninsula.

After that Mum and Bill didn't see each other for over 50 years. Both went on to have their own families, and they lost track of each other. But then, after both my father and Bill's wife, Margaret, had died they began enjoying some very happy times together again.

Bill came to the Falklands often over the last seven or eight years, sometimes going on to visit his daughter in New Zealand. And Mum and Bill would spend time together in the UK.

Nadia and I sometimes travelled with Bill and Mum on trips from their UK base.

Bill achieved much in his life. He attained a degree during the war, and worked as a scientist, helping the war effort by developing means of measuring atmospheric conditions that helped the forces and the BBC's radio communications. He even worked at the secret listening station GCHQ.

I had no idea about his brush with espionage until his daughters Helen, Sheena and Kathleen told me about this at the ceremony they held to celebrate his life. I was pleased to be at this moving farewell at Helen's home in Cumbria.

It was sad, of course, but Bill lived a good and long life.

I cannot imagine that he was ever unkind, inconsiderate or anything other than generous. He was, quite simply, a lovely man.

Ghost ships bid a final farewell

THE pride of the fleet which sailed to save the Falklands in 1982 left Portsmouth for the last time last week, with just a lone standard-bearer from the Royal British Legion and a few well-wishers to pay tribute at the quayside. The muted farewell for HMS Invincible, now heading for the scrapyard in Turkey, was all the more poignant as she eased past another former legend, HMS Ark Royal, now also awaiting her fate following Defence Ministry cuts.

Cricketers snatch hope from the jaws of defeat

AFTER a day of travelling, the Falkland Island Cricket Club eventually arrived in Costa Rica mid-afternoon on Sunday March 13.

Their first game was against Belize the following day, and later on that evening the team went to a nearby park in order to get some last-minute fielding practice in before the start of the Division Three Tournament.

The buses left the hotel at 7.30am to take the teams to the cricket grounds, which was a polo pitch divided into two individual cricket ovals.

Although the Falklands were not scheduled to play until the afternoon, they made full use of the cricket nets that were available throughout the tournament.

Even before the competition had started, Belize looked the likely champions based on previous performances in the International Cricket Council tournaments. After already beating Peru in the morning, Belize chose to bat first against the Falklands.

The Central American team put a tremendous score of 182 on the board in their 20 overs and it seemed an impossible target to reach. In the end Belize won by a considerable margin.

On the second day of the competition the Falkland Islands were set to play Mexico in the morning and then, after only a couple of hours break, played Costa Rica in the afternoon.

Mexico had proved that they were a strong side, based on last years performances in Division

Falkland Islands cricketers put on a brave show in Costa Rica

Four, and made light work of reaching a modest Falkland Island total and eventually won the match by ten wickets.

After lunch, chances were few against Costa Rica, and after 20 overs they had put a target of 130 on the board. The Falklands were unable to match this and lost by 65 runs.

The Falkland Islands penultimate game was against Chile. The Falklands had won the toss and elected to bat first.

After their 20 overs, they could only manage a score of 60 runs. The Falkland Islands fielders were unable to protect their total, and lost the game by nine wickets.

The last game in the competition for the Falklands was against Peru. They batted first and scored 128 runs in their allotted 20 overs.

The Falkland Islands struggled from the start against by far the strongest bowling attack in the competition, and Peru went on to win the match by 104 runs.

Although losing all five matches in the tournament, the individual performances of every player have improved over the past few months.

Special mention needs to go out to Kevin Clapp for his consistent bowling, Rhys Clifford and David Phillips for their remarkable fielding, and finally Martin Collins for captaining the side and keeping the players motivated throughout the competition.

Since last year's Division Four competition in Mexico, there has been far more enthusiasm for the sport and, as a result, the Falkland Islands Cricket Club has seen many new players, and they hope to continue to develop into a competitive team within the Americas region.

CBF pays special visit

SEA Cadets played host to a special guest of honour last Thursday when Cdr Philip Thicknesse, Commander of British Forces South Atlantic Islands, visited their HQ to present them with a £500 donation from the Fleet Air Arm Officers' Association.

Keelan Fiddes had the honour of accepting the cheque, and he said it was a great experience.

Fellow cadet Michaela Clifford was thrilled too: "This donation will go a long way to helping the Sea Cadets with the unit and its activities," she said.

Corps Chief Petty Officer, John Clifford told the Penguin News: "We're very pleased. Things like this show us that we are definitely part of a bigger sea cadet family and, of course, recognised by the Royal Navy."

CPO Clifford said the cadet unit needed £4,000 a year just to keep their doors open: "Money is getting harder and harder to find every year so this is a great help."

"This money will be put into various projects. We will just have to wait and see what the unit management committee will feel about where the money is best placed."

Unit Chairman David Lang said: "It's very good of the Commander of the British Forces to come down and take time out of his busy day."

An excited Emily Cairns-Wicks said after meeting the Commander, "He is basically the God of the military."

Sunday's football fun day was a scoring success

Hoods up the kids brave the rain as sweets fall from the sky

THE Falklands Islands Football Club bolstered their club funds by almost £1,800 on Sunday with a Fun Day and Football Tournament on the Falkland Islands Community School sports field.

The weather forecast the previous day threatened to cancel the event, but we took the chance and one we believed paid off. There were several passing showers throughout the day but the giant FIDF tent meant supporters could take shelter and the games could continue.

The day kicked off with the seven-a-side nations tournament between Kelpers, Europe, St Helena and Americas, with the Junior School Boys playing in between and showing off their skills under the mentorship of Cleggs Ross.

During an hour's break from the football the children were called forward for several races and, with sweets and free swim coupons up for grabs, there were lots of happy faces around. When not playing games the bouncy slide was available, kindly donated by NCB solutions for the day.

By lunchtime the BBQ was in full swing and hotdogs and burgers were selling quicker than our chefs Carlos and assistant Rhys Clifford could cook them. A special thanks goes out to Rhys for his hard work.

Next to take to the field was an over 40s team captained by Timmy Bonner against a group of youngsters who have been coached by Troyd Bowles. In a very entertaining hour of football the young boys won 3-2. If anybody has never seen these lads play they should make an effort to come and support them next time. Troyd has put in a lot of time coaching them and it is really paying off. Several will go on to great things when they join the senior team.

The final event of the day was the Nations Final played between the Kelpers and Americas, with the Americas running out 2-0 winners.

The prize giving and raffle draw took place soon after to end a fantastic day (see back pages for the full list of winners and sponsors). The elusive 1049 sweets in the jar were won by Sheena Miller. Nearest the pin on the golf competition was won by Adam Glanville and the Junior version of the event by Declan Bonner.

The Football Club would like to thank everyone who turned out on the day, but most of all those who sponsored us in any way.

Out of the £1,800 raised the Football Club donated £100 each to the Christchurch Earthquake Appeal and the Japan Earthquake and Tsunami Appeal.

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report
24th March, 2011

Tony Mills, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands. Another week of strong sales has pushed the EMI slightly higher to finish at 1379 AU c/kg (861 GBP p/kg). As you would expect the currency markets are quite volatile at present and this is having an effect on the reported prices. Sales early in the week provided significant lifts across all micron ranges however this trend didn't continue into the last sale. The medium to fine wool categories retreated approximately 1 - 2% and the coarser microns either held their ground or appreciated by approximately 1 - 2%.

Europe and India are competing strongly with the ever dominant Chinese buyers. Analysts are predicting some strengthening in the finer microns while the broader categories should remain at current levels.

While the international wool market is buoyant it still appears that on the local front buyers are still testing the new price levels.

THE BEST CHOICE, QUALITY AND VALUE

Jay Moffatt wins at Riverside

THE penultimate round of the motocross season took place last Sunday below stormy clouds, racing squalls and cold southerly winds: motocross in the Falklands as we know and love it!

Soft we may have been getting, but it did not deter riders from giving us a great day of exciting racing. With an enthusiastic crowd warmly tucked up in their buses, fifteen 18-inch wheeled rotivators made light work of creating a new potato patch for Neil and Kathleen.

First off were the Juniors, PeeWees and the Ladies. Travis McGill was on fire as he tore away from the rest of the field with Roger Shillitoe, Nathan Lowe and James Tyrrell in hot pursuit.

Adam Dickson, riding on his own, displayed complete confidence on this boggy course on his small-wheeled Yamaha, and Angeline Clarke was on fire this week as she proved unbeatable on her 250 Suzuki.

The Clubman Class is starting to entertain the crowds as each rider improves through the season, notably Nathan Gemmill and Dylan Stephenson.

They will be giving the experts a run for their money next season, and Danny Cofre continues to improve as the results show.

Shane Blackley takes a muddy lead from Jay Moffatt

The Expert Class, running low on entries with only three on the start gate, did not detract from the exciting racing from Shane, Jay and Stefen. Setting a blistering pace, Shane shot into the lead on his super-fast Yamaha and could not be caught, earning a well deserved win. The second race proved equally spectacular, but Jay Moffatt, fighting off his flu with a couple of paracetamol and getting the hang of Sean's monster bike, took the lead and cleared off to take the overall win of the day. Many thanks to the course builders, medical crew, marshals, lap counters and Neil and Kathleen for the use of their land and sponsoring the event.

Bonner trio triumph on golf charity day

LAST Sunday saw the Stanley Golf Club's annual charity day competition which this year was in the form of a three ball team alliance playing for the South Atlantic Challenge Trophy.

Nine teams signed in on a cold sunny day with a westerly wind blowing. The format of the competition was stableford with the best two scores to count on each hole.

In first place on an outstanding 90 points and seven clear of the second team was the Bonner trio of Tim, son Declan and Ally.

Declan on his own scored 45 points and carded a personal best gross 74 off the yellow tees and has had his handicap cut three shots to 13. The second placed team on 83 points was an all ladies team of Sarah Bowles, Carole Lee and Ginny Forster with all three contributing to the final result. Two teams were on 81 points - the Jocks comprising Ian Stewart, Graeme Hay and Drew Irvine and Rodney Lee's team consisting of Rodney, Nick Stevens and Jimmy Forster. Longest drive was won by Declan Bonner for the second week while no player found the 12th green. Nearest the pin on the 17th was won by Ian Stewart.

As this was the Club's charity day a raffle was held after prize giving. Jimmy Forster, who won the birdie pot with an eagle on the 10th, donated his winnings and that together with the competition fees and the raffle meant a sum of £284 was collected. The winning team decided that this money should be donated to the Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund.

This Sunday will see the playing of the final scheduled competition of the regular fixture list, the April Monthly Medal. The following week departing member Stuart Haines will be sponsoring a competition.

Tony Roche

Sharks on the table top

SUNDAY March 27 saw the Blackhawks against Oilers. Rodrigo Vasquez got his first shut-out of the season as Oilers won 5-0. The score did not reflect the efforts from Blackhawks (who were without captain Dockrill) though, as they had many chances to score, but somehow the puck did not get past Vasquez. Two goals each from Gareth Goodwin and Gordon Lennie and a simple tap in by Clayton March gave Oilers their second win of the Energise Shield. Caris Stevens bagged herself three points with a hat-trick of assists.

Then Penguins took on Buffalos. Penguins led 3-2 at the end of the first period, thanks to a hat-trick from Martyn Barlow. The second period saw Buffalos fight back and the game ended 7-4 in favour of the Buffs. Andrew Miller scored a hat-trick and guest player Dan Fowler scored four times. Roy Shepherd was the other scorer on Pens.

On Tuesday Sharks against Oilers sparked a very entertaining game, which saw Sharks go from being 3-1 down to winning 5-4. Ricardo Leyton netted his first hat-trick of the competition, with Sam Miller and Nick Stephens claiming a goal a piece. Grant Budd also netted three times, Oilers other goal coming from Gordon Lennie. Oilers could have grabbed themselves a draw, but Budd had a penalty shot saved by Vasquez in the Sharks goal. For the third week running Teslyn Barkman gets a mention, but this time for being the first player of the season to be 'sin binned', as she was sent off for two minutes for high sticking. Sharks are now the only team to have won all their games.

Buffalos took on Panthers after and it looked like a very even game in the first period with neither side scoring, until with just five and a half minutes left, Nick Francis opened with Panthers first goal. In the second period, Panthers managed to bag three more, the final score being 4-0, giving Stuie Duncan his first shut-out of the campaign and Panthers their first win. Buffalos did well though as they were missing key players, due to holidays and injury.

Many thanks to all the players who have been guest additions for teams when they are short of players. More people are adding themselves to the list, which can only be a good thing.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH OFFICE: CHEVENING SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE ACADEMIC YEAR 2011/2012

Government House invites Islanders interested in postgraduate study in the UK to apply for a Chevening Scholarship Award. Chevening Scholarships are run by the FCO and offer funding to outstanding graduates to study at one of the many British Universities that subscribe to the Chevening programme. The programme is intended for future leaders and decision-makers. Awards are normally given for one-year Masters degree courses, but may also be considered for other courses of a minimum of three months' duration. In line with the wider programme objectives, Government House would particularly welcome applications for the following areas of study: good governance (financial management, public administration, the rule of law etc), climate change, sustainable development, environmental management, and criminal justice.

There will be two Chevening scholarships awarded in 2011/2012 to applicants from the UK Overseas Territories. Applicants will be assessed according to the merit of their applications and their qualifications (both academic and professional). Hence this is a highly-competitive programme, but also highly prestigious – there are Chevening alumni all around the world.

A typical successful applicant would be:

- a holder of Falkland Islands residence status with the intention of returning to the Islands after the period of study;
- educated to good UK second-class Honours degree standard or equivalent, and able to meet the academic requirements for their proposed course of study;
- able to demonstrate the personal, intellectual and interpersonal qualities necessary for leadership;
- motivated to reach a position of leadership in the Falkland Islands within 10 years of their scholarship;
- able to network effectively to use their studies and experience in the UK to benefit themselves, their country and the UK.

Successful candidates are offered full scholarships covering tuition fees, flights to/from the UK and living expenses sufficient for a single student.

Candidates seeking advice on courses in the United Kingdom which might best suit their needs should consult: www.educationuk.org. Please note that acceptance for a course does not in itself make a candidate more eligible for a scholarship. Further information about the Chevening programme is available at www.chevening.com. The programme will be administered locally by Government House and anyone interested in applying can request an application form either by emailing Ralph Jones at ralph.jones@fco.gov.uk or calling 28213.

The extension of the Chevening programme to the OTs is very welcome and represents a terrific opportunity. We hope that the Falkland Islands will benefit, so we very much look forward to receiving applications. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday 15 April 2011.

Territories to get £7m

UK Government funding for South Georgia and other UK Overseas Territories is to be increased.

British Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, William Hague announced the increase of the Overseas Territories Programme Fund to £7m per year, with a special one-off payment of £1 million to the Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) this year "to strengthen their reserves in the face of recent reductions in fisheries revenue."

There was also £100,000 that will ultimately go to the Antarctic Heritage Trust to be used to support the Trust's work repairing and maintaining heritage sites in the British Antarctic Territory.

Mr Hague said: "We will continue vigorously to uphold the principle of self-determination and to ensure the continued security of all the Overseas Territories."

Panto meets Pop Idol is the twist in the traditional tale of Dick Whittington, the latest production by FIODA which hit the boards at the Town Hall last night for the first of three performances. Cast members Jessica Whalley-King, Natasha Rickman, Tevra Fiddes, Sophie Pompert Robertson, Beth John and Geoff Pring warmed up for the show during rehearsals on Tuesday.

Royal wedding party plan to rally whole community

STANLEY is to host a giant community party to celebrate the royal wedding of Prince William and Kate Middleton.

The free 12-hour event, to be staged at the FIDF Hall on Friday April 29, will carry a wedding theme with a parade of brides, grooms and page boys, competitions for best hat and best tiara, and all-day party games and dancing.

Promoted under the banner of "William and Kate: Let's Celebrate," organiser Trish Jamieson promises it will be a day to remember for the Falklands, with as many people as possible invited to take part – and a whole host of fringe events in the lead-up to the big day.

"We don't want to give everything away at this stage," said Trish. "But there is going to be a lot more in the pipeline and, when it all comes together, it will be a very special day."

The idea came about after a meeting on Wednesday when Trish gathered a few interested friends – and came away with pages of notes full of ideas for the event.

"It went very well," she told the Penguin News yesterday.

"The people who came along were up for everything.

"It's a once in a lifetime event and it's something to celebrate. We are proud to be British and we want to have a good celebration.

"I stood up for it because I am quite passionate for the cause and I really wanted something to happen."

Among the group behind the event is Assembly Member and teacher Emma Edwards, who was planning an indoor street party at the Community School, but she is now backing this event, which is being publicised by posters proclaiming: "Your Community Needs You."

Trish said she wanted to get as many groups involved as possible to help organise and take part in the party, which will run from 10am to 10pm and include live TV screening of the wedding from 11am: "The wedding parade is going to be judged by the public at the party, so we would like to encourage people to make hats and dust off their posh frocks," she said.

"We would also like people to bring a plate of picnic food for a buffet, and there will be a hot meal later in the afternoon. We are also going to have a teaberry cupcake tower as the centrepiece of the buffet, which Heather Smith will make, so we need a gang of teaberry pickers too!"

The mother of two has a number of other ideas gathered from the meeting which she said she would confirm in the weeks leading up to the event.

"We can't say too much at the moment, because we need to contact a lot of people, but we are hoping for a great surge of support from across the community."

Anyone who would like to help is invited to contact Trish on 51867, join the William and Kate Let's Celebrate networking group on facebook, or attend the group's next meeting, which will be at 7pm at the Narrows Bar.

FALKLAND ISLANDS

"ONE man's ceiling is another man's floor," goes the song. Equally relative it seems are the concepts of speed and urgency as defined by governments on the one hand and the governed on the other.

In a press release welcoming the appointment of an interim Chief Police Officer and Director of Emergency Services, Governor Nigel Haywood said: "It has been a high priority to fill this post as quickly as possible."

While I would not wish to argue with the high praise deservedly heaped upon the head of the departed Mr Finchett, I find myself wondering about the tide of unrest and crime which is clearly visible on the horizon to make the appointment of his temporary successor a matter of such urgency.

With all available criminals already locked up, and the problems of low morale that once beset the police force apparently overcome, one has to wonder why it can't be left for six months in the hands of Inspector McGill without disintegrating.

We might ask, too, what perils the Fire Service, Falkland Islands Defence Force and Customs and Immigration will suffer without there being anyone to fill the new and as yet untried position of Head of Community Safety on such a temporary basis.

The surprise announcement of Mr Finchett's departure came much more recently than the announcement of the imminent closure of the SAAS cargo route to Latin America. Two public meetings ago we were told that councillors were working on a solution because something had to be done urgently. This seems to have been a different kind of urgency than that which applies to temporary recruitments, as nothing seems to have happened yet, if you don't count some weird rumours.

Wondering whether government will ever match their own sense of priorities and urgency, and crank out a new immigration policy which will give them some security and a future before they lose heart and leave the Islands, are all those long-term work permit holders whose plight we have featured before in this column.

Not particularly urgent before it became an issue raised at a public meeting, when action was taken with unprecedented speed, was the decision of councillors to tinker with time itself by not turning back our clocks this winter. Urged on by Cllr Emma Edwards riding what seemed like a wave of public approval, this decision is now attracting a chorus of objections as some of its implications sink in. Government, normally castigated for being too slow, is now in some quarters being berated for acting too quickly. As the old saying goes: "You can please some of the people some of the time..."

Business dismay at land disposal

ARRANGEMENTS for the disposal of government land with commercial development potential, approved by January's meeting of ExCo, have not met with universal approval among Stanley's business community.

Under the new arrangements, land at Gordon Lines or other sites, excluding the Lookout Industrial Estate, can be purchased freehold via a five-year lease, using the current FIG land-pricing system for commercial land and subject to planning permission and approval of the purchaser's intentions by the Lands Committee.

A similar procedure will be put in place for the Lookout Industrial Estate, although here what is offered is not freehold, but a 999-year lease. Existing commercial tenants of Gordon Lines are offered the opportunity to convert their leases into freehold, and Lookout Industrial Estate tenants to a 999-year lease. Ian Stewart of Ian Stewart Construction, who currently leases land in both Gordon Lines and Lookout Industrial Estate told the Penguin News his company had "already paid over the odds" in rent over the years, and he regarded it as unfair that this would not be reflected in the purchase price of the freehold.

Ian also saw no reason why freehold should not be available to leaseholders in the Industrial Estate. This latter view was echoed by several other Lookout leaseholders, including John Clifford of Saddle Computers, Paul Bonner of Bonner's Haulage and Andrew Brownlee of Lifestyles Ltd, who said that after two decades of the estate's existence, with defined boundaries to each plot and separate services, it was "absurd" that FIDC still wanted to manage it.

Luxton for Minerals post

STEPHEN Luxton has been offered the post of FIG's Director of Mineral Resources following interviews conducted recently. Subject to the usual employment formalities, Mr Luxton will take over from Phyl Rendell who retires at the end of the year. It is planned that he will start in September.

Chief Executive Tim Thorogood said: "Stephen underwent a rigorous selection process and demonstrated to the appointments panel that he had the experience, knowledge and skills to undertake this key role within FIG. I am particularly pleased to be able to appoint a Falkland Islander who has already gained significant knowledge of oil exploration."

New police chief to take six months interim role

A POLICE chief from south west England will be stepping into Gary Finchett's shoes for six months while the government seeks a full-time replacement.

Chief Superintendent Barry Marsden of Devon and Cornwall Police has been appointed interim Chief Police Officer and Director of Emergency Services, starting at the beginning of next month. Chief Supt Finchett left the Islands last week after resigning his post for personal reasons.

Chief Supt Marsden's recent roles include Commander of South and West Devon Basic Command Unit, head of territorial policing for Devon and Cornwall and most recently he was on secondment to the Association of Chief Police Officers in the UK as head of the International Policing Assistance Group.

Chief Executive Tim Thorogood said the interview panel, which included Chief Supt Finchett, was impressed with his "commonsense approach."

"He will be able to ensure continuity to the excellent progress made by Gary Finchett and both staff and the public should feel reassured," he said.

Chief Supt Marsden said "I believe my past experience in progressing community safety issues across the counties of Devon, Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly will be useful and my aim is to ensure the Falkland Islands continue to remain a safe and secure place for residents and visitors to enjoy a good quality of life."

Welcoming the appointment, Governor Nigel Haywood said: "It has been a high priority to fill this post as quickly as possible.

"Chief Supt Marsden is clearly a first-class police officer, with strong leadership qualities, and I am looking forward to working with him to build on Chief Supt Finchett's outstanding legacy."

CMO contender

ONE strong contender has emerged to fill the post of Chief Medical Officer at the hospital following interviews held in London, the Health and Medical Services Committee heard on Wednesday. Meanwhile, the Senior Dental Officer post is to be readvertised, and short-term contractors continue to fill the vacant GP post.

New IJS head

TOM Hill from Wiltshire is to take up the post of Head Teacher of the Infant Junior School. He is due to arrive in the Islands mid August. Meanwhile, the position of Head Teacher at FICS is also to incorporate the role of Deputy Director of Education. An appointment is not expected before January 2012.

FIDC is still hazy after all these years

INTRODUCING his proposals for consultation at the Development Board meeting on Tuesday, Chief Executive Tim Thorogood admitted that after three years of reviewing FIDC, solutions were still less clear than the feeling that something was wrong.

There seemed to be a general consensus at the meeting that what was needed was to make FIDC more independent and more visibly on the side of the private sector than at present, but what was not much clearer was how this might be achieved.

Mr Thorogood spoke of a general feeling of dissatisfaction with FIDC and the perception that it was constantly interfered with by government to the detriment of its ability to act strategically.

The need for FIDC to apply for an annual subvention from government and to justify it in detail might also have a braking effect on initiative and the power of the corporation to act in a more commercial and strategic manner, he argued. There was, perhaps, a case to be made for a three-year budgetary period to get around this problem. The alternative of absorbing the economic developmental function fully into government was generally dismissed.

Former General Manager of the FIDC, Mike Summers, making a return to the board as representative of the fishing industry, suggested there would be conflict between the government's regulatory function and its role as a promoter of industry. "If you want a Department of Trade and Industry, then have one," he warned. "But it's not the role of the FIDC."

Mr Thorogood's proposals are a result of a long, formative consultation process involving Falkland Islands Fisheries Association, Rural Business Association, Chamber of Commerce and the FIDC General Manager and staff.

Executive Council considered them at its February meeting and agreed they should form the basis of consultation with interested parties. Final proposals will be provided to ExCo in May or June.

King causes a flap in Stanley

He's the king of the road

THIS slippery little fella caught dozens of onlookers on the hop when he decided to take an impromptu stroll along Ross Road on Tuesday morning.

The king penguin even appeared unperturbed by approaching traffic. While the occasional gentoo has been spotted on the outskirts of Stanley, it is highly unusual for a king to boldly go where few penguins have gone before.

Teeth recovered

CUSTOMS Officers recently recovered a number of fur seal teeth from a passenger on a yacht, who was attempting to bring them into the Falklands from South Georgia. Fifty-four teeth from the Antarctic fur seal, which is listed as an endangered species, were recovered and returned to GSGSSI staff.

Names sought

HOSPITAL staff are being invited to suggest designated names for the bays on the ward. Plaques from the old hospital, depicting the names of the warships, could be reused, Director of Health and Education Services David Jenkins reported to yesterday's Health and Medical Services Committee.

SA union claim

ARGENTINE Foreign Affairs Minister Hector Timerman this week presented a formal request to UN General Secretary Ban Ki-moon reiterating Argentina's sovereignty claim over the Falklands, which has the support of the 12 leaders of UNASUR, the union of South American nations.

Catching up

ILLEX catches have reached a "reasonable" level of 60,000 tons, Director of Natural Resources John Barton told Wednesday's Fisheries Committee. However, the loligo catch, which to date has reached 10,000 tons, was described as modest.

Ram sale today

THE Saladero ram sale, originally scheduled to take place yesterday, has been postponed to today. For details call Lucy at the Department of Agriculture on 27355.

Mixed fortunes in the oil fields

ROCKHOPPER Exploration again stole the oil industry headlines this week with news that it had re-evaluated its Sea Lion prospect and increased its estimated yield by almost 300 per cent.

The company now believes there are 155 million barrels of recoverable oil at the field, significantly higher than its previous low case estimate of 57 million barrels.

Meanwhile, Falkland Oil and Gas, which is yet to finalise a rig contract for its deepwater exploration programme in the southern licensing zone, has reached a settlement with BHP Billiton giving FOGL full operating rights. The company can now rely on total cash resources of $110 million, sufficient to fund the Loligo well and other exploration expenditures. The global mining giant will also retain the right to back-in for a maximum 40 per cent non-operated interest in the Loligo development area, in the case of a successful discovery, in return for making a cash contribution to FOGL's future exploration and appraisal costs.

However, the future for Desire Petroleum is not so clear, with the company saying it will review its financing options once the Ninky well result is known and its latest seismic results are in.

The company last week spudded its 14/15-3 exploration well on the Ninky prospect in the North Falkland Basin, the final contracted well of its current programme. Chairman Stephen Phipps said: "We will review all financing options available with the intention of rejoining the drilling campaign later in the year if possible."

Desire reported a loss of US$3.49 million in the twelve months ended December 31 2010.

Legislative Assembly Diary

Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

THIS week's meetings included the Planning and Building Committee, Lands Committee, Housing Committee, Health and Medical Services Committee and Education Board. Moving from one to another I feel fortunate to have so many different subjects to keep my ageing brain exercised and active, but vaguely resentful of hours sitting in meetings where some of the same issues seem to resurface years after I believed they had been resolved. There seems to be no end to human ingenuity when it comes to "playing the system" and hoping that the corporate memory does not have their last play on file.

THE thud of oil support ships' huge diesel engines and the squawking of illex jiggers' tannoy have replaced my alarm clock for months now. On a calm morning some of it can sound too close for comfort. It is great to see so much activity in the harbour, undoubtedly creating significant business ashore. It will be interesting to see how much revenue FIG receives compared with previous quieter years, both in direct charges and through taxation.

I'M not normally a fan of American idiom but I use an example this week. With all the usual Argentine rhetoric about, we really are the "elephant in the room." Nothing that I have read in recent months from there recognises the blindingly obvious fact that the Falkland Islands are inhabited by a group of people with the right to self-determination who have no wish to see their country colonised by a large neighbour. Furthermore, I cannot see our other neighbours indefinitely denying themselves any opportunities there may be for cooperation with us in the future.

FRIDAY morning we meet to update our priorities as set out last year and will assess progress so far. We are beginning to see some real progress on succession planning and have brought a good number of new housing plots on line, thus satisfying a considerable amount of the existing demand. Other items are in hand but, regardless of how priorities are arranged, unanticipated events often mean that some are overtaken by more urgent matters requiring diversion of resources.

Trawler returns to Islands after seven-week detention

A WELCOME sight at FIPASS on Saturday morning was the British-flagged trawler Baffin Bay, which had just arrived in the Falklands after suffering a seven-week long detention in Montevideo.

On hand to meet the vessel was Cheryl Roberts, Managing Director of Beauchêne Fishing Company Ltd, whose subsidiary companies South Atlantic Squid Ltd and South Atlantic Squid (UK) own Baffin Bay with joint venture partners Copemar SA of Vigo in Spain.

Later Mrs Roberts spoke to the Penguin News about the detention of her company's vessel. This, she says, was brought about as a result of a flagrant abuse of Uruguayan labour laws and the most basic international agreements regarding the sovereignty of foreign flagged vessels, by a particular Chilean lawyer operating in Montevideo, whose activities are putting at risk the port's future use by international fishing fleets.

Though rather more protracted than some, Baffin Bay's case is typical. In a growing number of cases over several years, crew members of fishing boats entering Montevideo have been encouraged by a particular Chilean lawyer to engage him on a no-win no-fee basis to file complaints against the owners of the vessels in which they have served.

False statements are filed with the courts, made up of lies and fabrications surrounding, but not limited to, accommodation and working conditions.

The crew men targeted are usually Peruvian, to whom the promised compensation would appear like a lottery win.

What these men are not told is that the claims made against the fishing companies through the courts may be for hundreds of thousands of dollars, which will fill pockets other than their own if successful. They are also not told that when the money is all spent and they try once again to seek employment in the fishing industry, their chances will be nil.

The Baffin Bay's problems began when the vessel arrived in Montevideo on February 6, unaware there were separate claims made against it in the labour courts by two brothers who had not worked on the ship since 2008.

After a protracted process which we reported on in Penguin News (February 25), involving the payment to the courts of bonds described as "substantial," Baffin Bay was finally due to leave Montevideo.

However, at midday on March 4, within minutes of taking up the gang plank, the vessel was once again detained. This detention was due to a legal action filed by the same lawyer on behalf of another Peruvian crewman, who promptly jumped ship to hide aboard a neighbouring Chinese vessel.

With the legal process over the first two complainants still in train, and unwilling to find themselves in the same situation again, Baffin Bay's owners decided to take another course.

Eventually, after attempts to send home the majority of the crew, which failed in the case of some of the Peruvians, and multiple appearances through Montevideo's many labour courts worthy of a Dickens novel, the owners were able to negotiate with every single remaining Peruvian crew member and arrive at individual settlements.

All these negotiations were carried out with a different lawyer acting for the Peruvians, and not the Chilean lawyer. These included the legal relinquishment of any further claims which finally ensured Baffin Bay being able to leave port.

With less than two weeks of the season remaining, Baffin Bay is now once again fishing for loligo in Falklands waters.

Mrs Roberts says of Montevideo that while the circumstances remain as they are it is clear there may well be a reluctance to utilise the port. However, that of course will be a decision for individual companies to make.

She wishes to make it clear that she defends the rights of fishermen to be protected by the law, but says that the industry cannot afford the kind of inflated sums currently claimed for against unsubstantiated charges - US$310,000 in one recently reported case.

Some Peruvians have worked on board Baffin Bay for periods of between 8-12 years and this Chilean lawyer has served only to ensure they have lost their careers.

Baffin Bay left Montevideo with only 15 of her normal contingent on board, made up of differing nationalities who did not fall for the deception of the Chilean lawyer, all of whom have served loyally on the vessel during differing time periods.

Saturday's LAN flight saw the arrival of the remainder of the crew, made up some who had been flown home and others newly contracted in to replace those who had left of their own accord.

Mrs Roberts is concerned that the future livelihoods of these and other Peruvians are being put at risk by the predatory activities of one unscrupulous Chilean lawyer operating in Montevideo for solely his own benefit with clear disregard for the welfare of the seamen he purports to represent, and the Uruguayan economy.

Cubs aspire to Cathedral challenge

THE Cubs were on holy orders last week when they paid a visit to the Cathedral as part of their work towards the Promise Challenge Badge.

Reverend Richard Hines showed them around, pointing out many of its unique features, such as the interior roof, which is shaped like an upturned boat, the stained glass window depicting District Nurse Mary Watson on her bicycle, and the array of pictures depicting Falklands life on the Hassocks (kneelers). Cub leader Jan Miller said the Cubs were extremely grateful to Rev Hines for giving up his time.

Mission to save the last of the Vulcan bombers

ANOTHER campaign is under way to save an iconic aircraft which saw its finest hour during the Falklands War.

The Avro Vulcan bomber was behind the legendary Black Buck One bombing mission which saw Squadron Leader Martin Withers and his crew drop bombs on the runway at Stanley Airport on May 1 1982, four weeks after the Argentine invasion.

At 15,000km it was the longest distance raid ever accomplished and it earned Withers the Distinguished Flying Cross.

This week the last airworthy Vulcan returned to its spiritual home at Robin Hood Airport in Doncaster – formerly RAF Finningley – as supporters continued their campaign to raise £350,000 by the end of May to keep Vulcan XH558 in the air.

And the Falklands would again figure famously if the aircraft can be preserved, according to Dominic Holtam of The Telegraph,

The last of the Vulcans

“It would be a crying shame if this machine were not in our skies next year to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the South Atlantic conflict and the Vulcan’s most famous mission,” he wrote.

The Vulcan’s visit to Doncaster saw it return to the base where, alongside the Victors and Valiants, it formed the RAF’s V-force, where quick reaction crews were on constant standby during the cold war. Home to the Vulcan from 1961 to 1969, RAF Finningley had a 3,000-yard runway and stores for atomic weapons.

The last of the delta wing bombers was retired in 1993, but a few years later a group of enthusiasts formed the Vulcan to the Sky Trust, bought the plane and set about restoring it to its former glory. The XH558 flew again in 2007, and has since appeared at numerous air shows. But its days may again be numbered.

One flying hour alone costs £18,000, even though that is peanuts compared to the £90,000 hourly cost of flying a Typhoon.

“Public donations are our lifeblood,” said Dr Robert Fleming, CEO of Vulcan to the Sky.

Mr Withers, who continues to pilot the XH558 today, said: “She’s a lovely plane to fly – so much power and so manoeuvrable. But I guess the thing I derive most pleasure from is other people’s reaction to the Vulcan. People love this plane.”

SAMA82 vets gather

ABOUT 150 members of the South Atlantic Medal Association (SAMA82) attended the group’s annual meeting in Coventry last month.

Former CBFFI, Maj Gen Malcolm Hunt (Commanding Officer of 40 Commando in 1982) stood down as President of the Association after ten years, and Lt Gen Sir James (Jim) Dutton (Signals Officer of 40 Commando in 1982) was appointed in his place.

The two main projects that SAMA are involved in for the 30th Anniversary next year are raising money for a Falklands Memorial, to be built at the National Memorial Arboretum in Alrewas, Staffordshire, and planning for a pilgrimage of some 50 veterans and family members to visit the Islands in November 2012.

The AGM was followed by a dinner on the Saturday night and a service at Coventry Cathedral on Sunday morning, at which the former Captain of HMS Coventry, Captain David Hart Dyke read the lesson.

Among those attending were Gary Clement MBE and Falklands UK Representative Sukey Cameron.

Police visit Camp kids

PUPILS at Goose Green and North Arm schools were questioned by police recently after the area was invaded by frogs – but it was all for a good cause as PC Nobby Ford interviewed the children in relation to the mock attack as part of their literacy lessons.

“It was really good,” said teacher Jackie Adams. “PC Ford had read the book that we were studying and had lots of different activities arranged.”

“He also told the children about how hard it is to make a reliable witness statement,” said Paul Gill, North Arm teacher.

“He showed them how different people remember different things about a situation.”

The Wanderer

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Peat, I'm back. I could have written, but decided not to.

I believe you agree with me in that our communications are nowhere near as bad as some would have it.

Remember I told you about me being in the dead centre of England last year?

Not only couldn't I get any internet, but I couldn't even get a phone signal most of the time

I recall hearing Old Tango had the same problem in frog!

Did I tell you my view on the latest sporting trip? "Not rugby," by the way, but the cricket team going on tour.

Surely it doesn't matter if they win or not?

The point is they were there, and they were showing the flag for the Islands. I say well done the lads! Fight fire with fire, tell our story whenever and wherever.

Did you hear the last public meeting? Well I never; they went from Glenny saying that "we shouldn't let the people from East Chile wind us up with their rugby visit" (fair comment), but that was followed by 20 minutes of near hysteria about it.

Own goal there, then, followed by the time change discussion "as sponsored by last minute.com."

The alarm must have gone off cos Tango was even heard to mention that there should be a phone-in on the subject!

Careful, chaps, that would make two phone-ins in 20 months!

I reckon if Tango is so interested in time, he might like to take some of that and look into what's going on at Backside Farm, owned by FIDC of which he's chair by the way. He could also inform his constituents.

Let's not forget he was going to sort That Organisation out, because the word is that there are plans afoot to create not only a chicken farm (remember the film "No Chicken Escapes from Backside Farm?") but also a market garden, along with a kiddie's touchy feely mini hands-on farmyard adventure place.

A micro brewery, massage parlour? What's going on then?

What we need is more open government...

Ta ta old chap.

Argentine alarm bells are ringing

THE continual Falkland bashing by the Argentine Government has prompted me to ask some questions and make a few points.

It is now 29 years since the invasion by Argentine military forces which, as far as I am concerned, was a declaration of war.

Whilst these invaders were soundly beaten and signed the surrender documents, did Argentina ever actually make a declaration to cease hostilities towards us?

The behaviour of the Kirchner presidency in their attempt to interfere and strangle our economy shows how immature as a nation Argentina really is.

Their aims for the foreseeable future will be to continually provoke us and ignore the wishes of the Falkland Islands people.

I believe that it is up to us and our elected government to ensure that we counter their arguments and that we do so in a robust and mature manner.

As history shows us, we must also be wary of our government and the British Government.

The way the British Government and seven of our elected councillors formulated and agreed to the 1999 Memorandum of Understanding, without consulting with the electorate, prompted myself and Mike Triggs to organise the two demonstrations.

Could this happen again? We do not want another repetition of the 1999 Agreement which was shrouded in secrecy.

Both Mike and I would have no hesitation in organising any future demonstrations if our councillors go against our wishes or fail to consult the electorate.

What I find alarming about the recent visit by a supposedly non-political Argentine rugby team is the way they were allowed to interact with our children.

Why do those people such as teachers and other social groups that work with children have to go through a CRIB check when these people were allowed to do what they wanted?

Who are these people anyway, as we have no knowledge of their backgrounds?

Perhaps someone in Customs and Immigration or the police force can shed some light on this aspect of these visits?

Finally, I would like to hear the views from Argentines who live here permanently and from those persons who have come back from living a long time in Argentina, especially those who were educated in Argentina.

It would be interesting to hear their views and if their loyalties lie here or across the water.

If they do wish to stay here permanently and be part of our society I believe they should give up their Argentine passports.

Police are once again in limbo

I WRITE to acknowledge last week's letter of thanks from Owen Lee regarding Chief Supt Gary Finchett's departure from the Islands and to comment on the future of policing in the Islands.

Having invested heavily in the development of RFIP myself I am heartened that Gary has been able to make his own mark as well as implementing most of the changes that were outstanding from my review of RFIP.

I am also pleased that during Gary's term of office several historic cases, including a number that were initiated during my tenure, have now been finalised.

Whilst not wanting to detract in any way from the thanks expressed in Mr Lee's letter, and fully acknowledging Gary's impact and achievements whilst in post, I do feel I am justified in pointing out that Gary certainly did not inherit the police force when it was at its "lowest ebb."

I would, however, agree that RFIP was suffering a dip in morale at the time of my redundancy in November 2009, but suggest that this was because officers were very concerned at the uncertainty surrounding the Chief Executive's interference in policing and his misguided proposal to "transmogrify" the role of Chief Police Officer into the post Director of Community Safety.

This proposal had been warned against by the Overseas Territories Law Enforcement Advisor and was not welcomed by heads of other uniform services across the Islands. It appears our shared concerns have now been realised.

This is no reflection on Gary Finchett's ability, but I found that being Chief Police Officer was a full time job and believed that the "super head" DCS role was always going to be too big for one person to manage and sustain (I understand this is also proving to be the case for certain other super heads). For the record, I actually agree there should be a post of Director of Community Safety, but recommend now, as I did back in 2009, that this should be a standalone post overseeing the work of all uniform departments – not also being required to perform the full time role of Chief Police Officer and Officer in Charge of the Prison.

Falkland Islanders should perhaps be concerned for the morale of RFIP rank and file officers as they find themselves once more in limbo awaiting the outcome of an independent review of Tim Thorogood's apparently flawed 2009 FIG management restructure, which is not due until September.

On a personal note, based on my own knowledge of the surreal demands of being Chief Police Officer in the Falklands, I can empathise entirely with Gary Finchett's "Falkland adventure" and wish him and his family well for the future.

Let's scrap this Phantom folly

I HEARD on the radio that MLA Gavin Short has asked for the remaining bits of the Phantom to be brought to Stanley for some sort of restoration work.

There is no need to bring it that far. As I recall there used to be a large pit on the right of the MPA Road just beyond the Main Gate.

That is where the other three are buried, so drop it off there.

In case the MLA in question has not noticed, take a drive along the Stanley Bypass in an easterly direction, to the rear of Lookout Industrial Estate: a great accumulation of scrap metal, further east between FIPASS and Boxer Bridge, even more!

Historically scrap metal has created enough problems. If we have to have an aircraft, let's have one with some relevance like a Navy Harrier. There are plenty of them being mothballed. It would make a nice gift from the UK for the 30th anniversary!

An angry beaver bites the dust

Beavering invasively

DON'T panic is the message from Falklands Conservation following news of the latest species to invade the Islands, as featured on the front page of last week's Penguin News.

Falklands Conservation said they were unavailable for comment because they were busy trapping unwelcome beavers using fresh driftwood as bait. Conservationist Farrah Peek provided reassuring photographic evidence to help calm the public, although we suspect an April Fool Photoshopper was working closely with them following our spoof story.

Honour badge for local heroes

WILLIE Bowles and Steve and Kate Burston last year became the first Islanders to be presented with the Queen's Certificate and Badge of Honour – now you can help decide who will be next in line for this prestigious honour.

The purpose of these awards is to allow the Falkland Islands Government to recognise people having connections with the Falkland Islands who have, by their loyalty and meritorious conduct, provided services of exceptional benefit to the people of the Falklands.

The Queen's Certificate and its accompanying Badge of Honour will be awarded by Governor Nigel Haywood, acting on the advice of Executive Council, on or around Falkland Day (August 14), which commemorates the first recorded sighting of the Falklands in 1592.

The number of recipients will normally be restricted to three a year and the names of Queen's Certificate recipients will be published in the Official Gazette.

Willie Bowles earned his nomination for his services on behalf of those interned by Argentine forces at Goose Green in May 1982, as well as for his encouragement of young people interested in wood-working and carpentry.

Steve and Kate Burston were honoured for their services in running the Shack youth club for the under 15s. Nominations for this year's awards are now being sought, and forms are available on request from Gilbert House. Nominations should be submitted before June 17 to the Clerk to Executive Council at Gilbert House (tel 27451), or by email to cprior@sec.gov.fk.

Willie Bowles

The Queen's Certificate carries with it the right to wear a badge to be worn on the breast on official occasions when full-sized medals are worn.

This award does not replace, but is in addition to the award of other honours such as the OBE and MBE, as part of the Diplomatic and Overseas List.

These are awarded by HM The Queen on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

SAR stamp on 70 years

THE Post Office released a special set of stamps on March 9 to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the RAF Search and Rescue Service (SAR). First issue covers were kindly delivered by Squadron Leader Andy Shenton to Deputy Postmaster Glynis King and Philatelic Bureau Manager Lindsay Bonner at the school football pitch in Stanley.

The bright yellow Sea King Mk 3 is a welcome sight to those in need at land or sea around the Islands. It provides vital support to the military and civilian community, all year and in all weather, to uphold the pledge "the sea shall not have them." SAR also assists cruise liners, injured fisherman and compassionate evacuations from ships and the oil rig if required, as well as giving the occasional hitchhiked ride to Santa Claus.

Sir Alister Hardy and his CPR

Pharos on krill call

THE PV Pharos last month undertook the first tow of a Continuous Plankton Recorder (CPR) to monitor krill numbers between the Falklands and South Georgia.

The CPR is to be deployed every other month on the same route to gather seasonal data on plankton species, which will help identify any changes in the biomass or make-up of the plankton community, including those across the Polar Front.

As plankton forms the basis of the food chain, the data will help study the fluctuation of seabird, fish and marine mammal numbers.

Designed by Sir Alister Hardy, the CPR was initially trialed in the Southern Ocean during the Discovery expeditions (1925-1937), and its design has remained unchanged since 1948. Samples are analysed at the Sir Alister Hardy Foundation for Ocean Science (SAFHOS) in Plymouth.

To coincide with the first deployment of the CPR between the Falklands and South Georgia, and to celebrate the work of Sir Alister, South Georgia Government has released a set of four stamps, including a 60p release featuring an image of Sir Alister with the CPR.

Red Plum's successor is a Norwegian Polar Bear

A NORWEGIAN Polar Bear is to take over ice patrols in the South Atlantic while the future of HMS Endurance remains unclear.

The MV Polarbjorn is a commercial icebreaker normally based in Bergen, but is to be renamed HMS Protector for a three-year trial beginning this winter.

Completed in 2001 and displacing 4,985 tons, she can act as a polar research ship or subsea support vessel, and has 100 berths. She is around 1,000 tons smaller than Endurance but, unlike the current stand-in HMS Scott, she has a flight deck – although as that currently sits on top of the bridge roof, there may be a need to modify the ship's configuration for navy operations.

Polarbjorn is expected in Portsmouth in May to be fitted with specialist military equipment required for her deployments.

Whitehall wants to continue the Senior Service's Antarctic mission – updating charts, supporting the British Antarctic Survey, monitoring wildlife and maintaining Britain's presence in the South Atlantic.

The ship's owner, GC Rieber, also owns the scientific support ship RRS Ernest Shackleton, currently chartered to the British

Successor to the Endurance, the Norwegian MV Polarbjorn

Antarctic Survey. Her new name is taken from the sixth HMS Protector, which completed 13 Antarctic seasons from 1955-1968, before being replaced by HMS Endurance, the current Endurance's predecessor.

The flood-damaged Endurance, affectionately known as the Red Plum, almost sank off the coast of Chile in December 2008. A 15-month investigation revealed the flood was caused by a valve opening as crew made a filter change.

The ship was carried back home to Portsmouth on a transport ship from the Falklands in April 2009 at a cost of £4m. Defence Minister Lord Astor said the new HMS Protector would provide "interim replacement ice patrol ship capability for at least the next three years while we consider the long-term future of HMS Endurance."

He said the navy had still to decide whether the Endurance should be repaired or replaced permanently. However, naval sources told the Portsmouth News in January that the loan deal would be made permanent when officials decided to publicly announce the axing of the Endurance.

Students learn it takes a fancy dress in Antarctica

YEAR 9 pupils at FICS were visited last Friday by Dr Claire Lehman and Karen Fowler, a communications officer for BAS, to talk about their 18 months living at Rothera in Antarctica.

The team of 20 at Rothera has to take on a number of roles on a day to day basis. Students were surprised to hear that as well as scientific equipment, skidoos, sledges and survival suits, the base has a well stocked dressing up box, with costumes for many occasions.

Ms Fowler spent 105 days without daylight when based at Halley for winter. Most impressive were the photos of Dr Lehman's hair frozen vertically in temperatures of -20c, and how ice clouds formed when throwing cups of water into the cold air.

Organiser of the talk, art teacher Jo Symons, met Dr Lehman in Stanley in November 2009 and the two stayed in touch: "It was really lovely to see Claire again, having followed her adventure online and in emails, and I hope we get the opportunity to meet once more in August in the UK," said Jo. "I'd be very interested to learn about how one adjusts to returning to living and working."

Jail fears dismissed

FEARS that the number of prisoners currently in Stanley jail may lead to overcrowding have been dismissed by Inspector Len McGill of the Royal Falkland Islands Police, although he did admit that the imprisonment of a female did have staffing implications.

At present there are seven prisoners in the Stanley cells, including one female.

Insp McGill told the Penguin News that the new prison block, which was opened in March 2009, was designed for nine prisoners, including a separate two-person cell designated for young offenders or females. If necessary, a further three could be accommodated, at least on a short-term basis, in the police custody cells.

He said all prisoners essentially received the same treatment and worked towards achieving trustee status, using British Home Office guidelines.

Currently the supervision of prisoners is carried out by police officers, the old post of prison officer having been converted into that of police officer. This arrangement offers the force more flexibility, especially when the prison is less occupied than at present.

We had joy, we had fun, we sheared a season in the sun

Wool handler Martha Brown from Cumbria, who this year completed her fifth shearing season, pays tribute to the men and women who helped make this summer a scorcher for the record books...

he's not over the hill yet, shearing more than 400 sheep eight days in a row. Well done to Molks!
Among the other new personal bests were Joe Clarke (358), Stefan Clarke (330), Lucas Berntsen (352), Ewen Bonner (263), Daniel Ford (his first 300), Roy McKay (260) and John McKay (403).

Lucas, though, still has another target to chase: "I had a good season," he said. "But I'm a bit gutted I didn't beat Dad's PB."
They were excellent efforts all round by the local shearers who one day will hopefully represent the Islands against the rest of the world. Tex Alazia and Jan Clarke were on hand to help out.

The local shearers were joined by two overseas shearers and a presser this year. Ashley Story from Cumbria (I'm sure he introduced himself to most) had a top score of 402 on his second visit to the Falklands.

Ritchie Robinson from Scotland shore 360, also in his second season, and was well thrilled: "I had heaps of work and worked in some awesome gangs!"
Hopefully these boys will return for another season as they do an excellent job and get on well with the farmers.

Tomos Lewis from Wales was the presser for the season at land holdings: "Although my speed wasn't the fastest, I enjoyed the season and and myself. Two other ladies who dusted off their (very dusty) brooms were Emma Reid and Lynne Forster. Emma and Lynne covered for the girls in times of need, and sometimes at very short notice, but with much delight from the rest of the gang (especially Molks) as the oldest gang member changed.

With thanks to the Argos Awards and the Shackleton Scholarship it was possible to invite the shearing instructor Doug Lambie down for a couple weeks to work with the gangs. Some of the shearers have changed their pattern as a result of Doug's tutoring, saying "it's a lot better" and "easier on the body."

Doug worked with all levels of ability but all aimed at improving the finer points. He very much enjoyed his time "in the beautiful islands" and working with the very "talented and polite" shearers here.

Along with the hard work, the shearers and wool handlers have had some fun with fund-raising events. Halloween night at the Globe raised £436, the Rose Bar speed shear raised £290 and the BBQ dance and Grill at the FIDF hall raised £670. All the money raised goes towards sending a team to the world shearing championships in New Zealand in 2012.

For a number of reasons the shearing competition did not go ahead this season, but the current plan is to hold it in Stanley this Christmas. This competition will decide which two shearers will go to Masterton, New Zealand, at the end of February to represent the Islands at the Golden Shears world championships.

In addition to the shearing competition, a wool handling competition is also planned to allow the Falkland Islands to be represented by two wool handlers, as well as the two machine shearers, in a sport in which the Falkland Islands are already ranked in the top ten.

Contractor Molks said he was delighted after a stunning season: "The season has gone really well we have had excellent weather," he said. "I'm well pleased with the efforts made by everyone. All the shearers reached a new personal best and the girls did a good job with the wool."

"Cheers to people coming to work at short notice and helping out, and cheers to all the farmers, especially those who help out with the young fellas."
But record-breaker Evan had the last word: "It was a very good season - but the contractor's a bit tight!"

EACH season the interest in the shearing industry grows with more and more young locals wanting to join the gangs.

It is crucial that we support and encourage these young people to do this job which is so important to the Falkland Islands.

Achievements in the gangs have been very high this year. Among the shearers who have just finished their first full season, Scott Short shore his personal best with 215 and Shaun May with 300.

The learner wool handlers also did an excellent job as it's not an easy job to learn. Fayann, Toni and Kylie all lasted the season and did a good job with the wool. We hope to see all these learners back in the sheds next season.

Toni said: "It was awesome! I loved getting out of town to places I have never been to. It had its ups and downs but it was fun making a fool out of myself!"

Thank you to the farmers who have encouraged the learners throughout their training this season, not only for letting them shear your sheep and sort your wool, but also for the constructive criticism given to them. If we want to continue to produce world class shearers and wool handlers these are our future.

High achievements were not restricted to the learners, with more experienced shearers pumping out big tallies and breaking records throughout the season.

Evan Jones broke the whether record shearing 370 and broke the long standing Falklands "eight-hour record" shearing 461 ewes at North Arm. A massive well done and congratulations to Evan.

The oldest shearer this season, Lee Molkenbuhr, also showed that he's not over the hill yet, shearing more than 400 sheep eight days in a row. Well done to Molks!

Among the other new personal bests were Joe Clarke (358), Stefan Clarke (330), Lucas Berntsen (352), Ewen Bonner (263), Daniel Ford (his first 300), Roy McKay (260) and John McKay (403).

Lucas, though, still has another target to chase: "I had a good season," he said. "But I'm a bit gutted I didn't beat Dad's PB."
They were excellent efforts all round by the local shearers who one day will hopefully represent the Islands against the rest of the world. Tex Alazia and Jan Clarke were on hand to help out.

The local shearers were joined by two overseas shearers and a presser this year. Ashley Story from Cumbria (I'm sure he introduced himself to most) had a top score of 402 on his second visit to the Falklands.

Ritchie Robinson from Scotland shore 360, also in his second season, and was well thrilled: "I had heaps of work and worked in some awesome gangs!"

Hopefully these boys will return for another season as they do an excellent job and get on well with the farmers.

Tomos Lewis from Wales was the presser for the season at land holdings: "Although my speed wasn't the fastest, I enjoyed the season and

and myself. Two other ladies who dusted off their (very dusty) brooms were Emma Reid and Lynne Forster. Emma and Lynne covered for the girls in times of need, and sometimes at very short notice, but with much delight from the rest of the gang (especially Molks) as the oldest gang member changed.

With thanks to the Argos Awards and the Shackleton Scholarship it was possible to invite the shearing instructor Doug Lambie down for a couple weeks to work with the gangs. Some of the shearers have changed their pattern as a result of Doug's tutoring, saying "it's a lot better" and "easier on the body."

Doug worked with all levels of ability but all aimed at improving the finer points. He very much enjoyed his time "in the beautiful islands" and working with the very "talented and polite" shearers here.

Along with the hard work, the shearers and wool handlers have had some fun with fund-raising events. Halloween night at the Globe raised £436, the Rose Bar speed shear raised £290 and the BBQ dance and Grill at the FIDF hall raised £670. All the money raised goes towards sending a team to the world shearing championships in New Zealand in 2012.

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report
31st March, 2011

Lucy Ellis, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands
The continuing trend of strong sales has seen the EMI reach another high of 1383 AU c/kg (886 GBP p/kg). After the volatility of last week's sales, the market was more settled this week with 19.5 - 22 micron wool receiving the most attention instead of the broader microns which have dominated the selling market in the previous weeks.
China has once again dominated the market, ahead of Australia and Europe, especially in the 20 - 24 micron range. There is speculation that buyers are targeting these mid-range microns having already stocked up on the finer wools in response to earlier concerns about adequate supply.
Whilst, locally, wool sales are still on going, there is a distinct reluctance by buyers to commit to purchase wool, especially the finer microns, closer to the benchmark prices as they were doing 3 or so weeks ago. Disturbingly, it has been reported that there is a distinct discount of up to GBP 100 p/kg for the finer micron wools.

PRESS RELEASE

Reduction in Interest rates on Savings Accounts

Issued 1st April 2011

FOR IMMEDIATE USE

The Bank of St Helena regrets to advise its customers that with effect from 1 May 2011, the rate of interest payable on all savings accounts will be reduced by 1%. The new rates will apply to the following

- Current accounts from 3% to 2%
- Child Bond Saving Accounts from 5% to 4%
- New Life Accounts from 4% to 3%

The world financial crisis has resulted in a significant reduction in rates of interest being offered by the financial institutions with which the Bank places its overseas investments

The Bank's prudent investment policy and practices has allowed the current savings rate to remain stable for longer than most people would have expected. However, our last gilt investment that enabled the bank to maintain a 3% interest rate on savings accounts for two years matured in March 2011. The current market rates for investments are much lower than what we were previously earning. As a result, the savings rates payable by Bank of St. Helena must be reduced accordingly.

Customers are assured that the Bank's management will continue to closely monitor the situation and the Board of Directors will review and revise interest rates as and when appropriate.

Oilers so slick at the top of the pile

THIS week saw only two of the four scheduled dek hockey games being played with Sharks versus Buffalos being the pick of the ties.

In a very fast paced and fiercely fought Tuesday night fixture a Barlow strike put Buffs into the lead. However, a double strike from Dan Fowler put Sharks in front who then seemed to find their passing game. Another goal from Martyn Barlow, who was guesting for Buffs, enabled the sides to go in level at the end of the first period.

In the second period Sharks pressed but were undone by goals from Miller, Peralta and Daille, who was also guesting for Buffs.

Sharks then rallied and Sam Miller teed up Teslyn Barkman before Fowler rounded off his hat-trick to bring them within one goal.

Buffs managed to hold their nerve despite constant pressure and ran out 5-4 winners, and the first to beat the Sharks this season. Sunday's game was another tight affair with Oilers playing Panthers. Gordon Lennie opened the scoring for Oilers with further goals from Goodwin and Budd putting them into a 3-0 lead at the break.

The second period saw Panthers up the pace and level the scores with goals from Nick Francis and Karl Nightingale (2).

Oilers reacted positively with goals from Goodwin and Lennie to restore a two goal lead. Panthers were surely now beaten but were able to pull another goal back through Nick Francis despite the fact Nightingale was serving a penalty for kicking the puck. Oilers held out to win 5-4, placing them top of the table.

The Blackhawks v Panthers fixture scheduled for Tuesday April 12 has been postponed.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE: VACANCY

An opportunity has arisen for a member of the community to become involved in helping to ensure that FIG is delivering value-for-money to the residents of the Falkland Islands. Expressions of interest are sought from members of the public wishing to become a member of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC). Under the Falkland Islands Constitution, the PAC comprises:
 (a) a chairman and two other members appointed by the Governor, and
 (b) two members of the Legislative Assembly. The PAC currently has a vacancy for an "other member" under (a) above. The role involves six (or so) meetings per year, each lasting two hours, with an estimated time commitment of four hours per month for background reading and preparation. The role is unpaid but expenses are reimbursed. The appointment period will be until 31 January 2012 (in order to tie in with the appointment periods of the other, existing members). The PAC has an important scrutiny role over the public accounts of all government departments and specified bodies. The PAC's task is to ensure that public funds have been expended properly, for the purposes for which they were voted by the Legislative Assembly. Hence the role is varied, complex and fascinating. Individuals appointed to the PAC make a significant contribution to the community, in helping to maintain high standards of public administration and good governance in the Falkland Islands. This calls for PAC members themselves to have the highest standards of personal integrity, discretion and commitment to the good governance of the Islands. Applications should be submitted to the Governor by 30 April, setting out the reasons for the applicant's interest in appointment to the PAC and the skills and experience that the applicant would bring to the job.

New light shed on Chinook disaster

EVIDENCE to be presented to Lord Alexander Philip, who heads a new inquiry into a 1994 helicopter crash on the Mull of Kintyre, may also explain a previous mystery crash in the Falklands.

Efforts are being made to exonerate the pilots of the RAF Chinook in the Scottish crash which killed more than 20 senior police, army and MI5 officers.

An initial RAF inquiry in 1995 ruled Flight Lieutenants Jonathan Tapper and Richard Cook were guilty of "gross negligence" for flying "too low and too fast."

The BBC has revealed the existence of previously unpublished papers, which may shift the blame from the pilots to the aircraft itself. The 1992 Chinook Airworthiness Review Report stated: "Since entering RAF service in 1980, the Chinook HC Mk 1 has been dogged by configuration control problems, inadequate publications and system unreliability. Serious incidents such as un-commanded flying control movements have brought into question the effectiveness of the aircraft's overall management and maintenance."

On February 28 1987 the Penguin News carried the story of the loss of seven crew from 78 Squadron RAF when their twin-rotor Chinook crashed two miles away from Mount Pleasant.

Unlike a Chinook crash in the Falklands nine months earlier, the February 28 crash occurred on what was described as "a routine operational flight in fine weather."

The official report said the Chinook "pitched nose down from about 300ft and impacted the ground, killing the occupants."

The cause of this crash in the Falklands was "never determined" although the reference in the recently emerged report to "un-commanded flying control movements" may ultimately require that judgment to be reconsidered.

The whole cast of FIODA's fine Dick Whittington stands aghast, when hero, Scott Betts, appears to have been shot by the dastardly Lord Royston Royston, aka Gary Tyrrell. More pictures in centre

Workshop to drive biodiversity vision

THE many elements of what can be described as the Falkland Islands conservation community will come together at the Chamber of Commerce building next week for a workshop headed by Colin Chubbs of the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew in London.

To be held from April 18-21, the principal focus of the workshop will be on actions and implementation in support of the Falkland Islands Biodiversity Strategy, with particular attention given to main threats, listed as by-catch associated with fisheries, invasive alien species, pollution and all forms of disturbance, modification and destruction of habitats.

The Falkland Islands Biodiversity Strategy (FIBioS) 2008-18 was adopted in 2008 and outlines the goals and principles for the future of the biodiversity of the Islands, identifies potential threats to our environment, specifies priority species and habitats and sets out action tasks and how they will be implemented.

Improved cooperation between environmental organisations is expected to improve capacity to channel funds and resources to attract greater investment in local initiatives from overseas, something which will become increasingly important in the light of FIG's decision to fund a South Atlantic Research Institute in the Falklands.

Workshop sessions include: Seabird-Fisheries Interactions led by Anton Wolfardt and Paul Brickle, Commercial Fisheries led by Sasha Arkhipkin and Vlad Laptikhovskiy, Shallow Marine Environment led by Paul Brickle and Dr Paul Brewin, Hydrocarbons Exploration and Extraction led by Phyl Rendell, Agricultural Development and Site Management or Restoration, together with Integration of Farming with Biodiversity, led by Mac McArthur and Rebecca Upson, Biosecurity led by Shona Strange, Invasive Species led by Sally Poncet, and Protected Areas led by Craig Dockrill.

As holder of an MSc in Biodiversity Conservation, Governor Nigel Haywood has a particular interest in the workshop.

He told the Penguin News he found it very encouraging that so many people were active in conservation issues in the islands, often as volunteers.

There were many different, but often over-lapping strands and the strategy helps bring them together, he said, highlighting the areas of greatest concern which can then become part of work programmes.

"The Falkland Islands' Biodiversity Strategy 2008-2018 is a well thought-through and carefully-constructed publication," he said. "I have, during my student days, seen a number of such plans, and this is a model, a compelling vision, and clarity about what needs to be done."

"It has been in place now for just over two years: next week's Biodiversity Workshop will give an excellent opportunity to review progress, and to give further impetus."

"The Strategy acknowledges the need for a collaborative approach between the community, landowners, the government, conservation organisations and businesses. I hope each of these sectors will be well-represented at the Workshop: they need to be, if it is to be a success."

"The workshop will tackle some important areas, including the environmental impacts of agriculture, fisheries and hydrocarbon exploration."

"We are fortunate in having Colin Clubbe as a facilitator. Colin has considerable experience of the challenges facing island communities, and has worked closely in the past with other Overseas Territories."

Penguin News

FALKLAND ISLANDS

ANYBODY who believes that history proceeds in a straight line is invited to look into the Penguin News archives. Choose almost any year at random and familiar themes and events will appear to convince you that in fact the life of our community goes in cycles.

I am not referring only to the annually recurring events like the Horticultural Show or the May Ball, which can sometimes give rise to the almost irresistible temptation to dust off last year's copy and simply change the names, but to what one might call the "eternal themes" of life in the Falklands.

Of these constant themes, one of the most enduring, along with expat-bashing, xenophobia and mutual distrust between Camp and Stanley, is the feeling of the population in general that they are not being properly informed by the eight men and women who represent them, be it on Legislative Council or Legislative Assembly.

I was reminded of this when, in the course of researching a story this week, I had in my hand a copy of the Penguin News from February 1987. While a very different looking publication from today's professionally printed paper – seven stapled A3 sheets of smudgily duplicated type, with the occasional bit of shaky handwriting thrown in – its content was reassuringly full of the familiar.

There was a report on a successful Farm Open Day run by the Agricultural Department's predecessor, the Agricultural Research Centre, during which "farmers from all over the Falklands were invited to look at the re-seeding trials at Goose Green and Fitzroy," and an article preparing readers for the Flower, Vegetable and Home Produce Show to be held in the now disappeared gymnasium on Ross Road.

One of two front page leads told how both the Argentine Government and the Falkland Islands Government were offended when the Foreign Office allowed an American jumbo jet to fly into MPA in support of oil exploration. The other reported a widespread feeling that immigrants were being given priority on the housing list over locals during a housing shortage.

The Editor's comment on these stories contains a phrase which, considering recent events, letters to the paper, utterances and silences from councillors, is just as relevant today: "Doesn't the Falklands Government appreciate that in the absence of fact and reasoned argument, speculation and prejudice take root."

Sharon attends royal wedding

FALKLAND Islands guests at the marriage of Prince William and Kate Middleton will be MLA Sharon Halford and husband John. "Each overseas territory government is to be represented," said Cllr Halford. "I was chosen because we will already be in the UK." The couple will be visiting their daughter, Sarah, in Colchester who is receiving her medal for service in Afghanistan.

Sharon is not yet in possession of the ticket, which will become a collectable after security checks, but she has been informed of the dress code: women must wear both hat and gloves for the occasion. John must also be appropriately suited, although he has opted out of top hat and tails.

On the Falklands wedding party front, Trish Jamieson is excited to report Kate and William will be landing on Saturday's airbridge. The six-foot life-sized cardboard cut-outs should provide plenty of photo opportunities, she explained.

Preparations are gathering pace to engage the community, with shop owners being asked to put up window displays, to be judged by the public. Individuals can get involved by raising a flag or decorating windows with fairy lights. "With the early evenings it would be a welcome sight," said Trish.

A raffle will be drawn at the FIDF Hall with proceeds going to Combat Stress, the Prince William affiliated charity. Tickets are £1, available from K3, the Pod, Julie Ford, Cara Jordan, Emma Edwards, Ali Dodd, Mandy Ford, Heather Smith and Trish.

They still need musicians for the day and outfits for the wedding fancy dress competition.

"Wedding or bridesmaid dresses that may have been outgrown could fit other people or kids, so we're asking people to be really generous," said Trish.

There is no age restriction on the event, which will be BYOB, though partygoers will be treated to a complimentary drink on arrival at the FIDF Hall. People can also arrive in style courtesy of the big red bus.

"I hired it for an hour, so hopefully it can fit in two trips if demand is high," said Trish.

The next meeting for party planners is at 7pm on Wednesday at the Narrows Bar.

Public's views sought on the sale of brown trout

IF you catch a trout legally, should you be able to sell it? That is the question the public are soon to be asked.

Although brown trout are protected under the Conservation of Nature and Wildlife Ordinance, a limited number above a minimum weight can be caught each day by an individual using a rod and line between the months of September and April.

For years it has been generally understood that the sale of such trout is illegal in the Falklands and, in February, after being made aware of some ambiguities in the wording of the Conservation of Wildlife and Nature Ordinance (1999), the Environmental Committee agreed to submit a paper to Executive Council recommending the legal position on such sales should be clarified.

Following their February meeting, the Environmental Planning Department (EPD) was contacted by members of the public expressing views both in favour of, and opposed to the sale of trout.

As this issue clearly mattered to certain sections of the community, it seemed appropriate to formally invite representations and include them in the report to ExCo so that it could be aware of the differing views on this matter.

With public consultation in mind, the EDP has drafted a paper, giving background and some of the arguments for and against the sale of brown trout.

At their Tuesday meeting, the committee agreed that the paper should be publicised for four weeks, with comments invited.

A report will then be prepared for consideration, first by the Environmental Committee and then by ExCo.

Subject to legislative priorities, it is hoped that the change in wording (which should require a very limited amount of work on the part of the Attorney General's Chambers) could be in place by the start of the next fishing season, commencing on September 1.

Water fuel mix diverts trip home

THE British Antarctic Survey (BAS) in Cambridge has confirmed to the Penguin News that the research vessel RRS Ernest Shackleton discovered one of its fuel tanks was contaminated with salt water while on its way north.

Diverting to Rio de Janeiro or Recife for fuel were options but, after deliberations with the ship's master, based on business timing needs, BAS has arranged for a fuel stop in Cape Verdeand, which will recover the contaminated fuel for re-use when the ship is in refit.

BAS rejected a suggestion that the RRS Ernest Shackleton did not call into a Brazilian port because of possible political problems, adding that BAS did not feel the need to contact either the Foreign and Commonwealth Office or any Brazilian ports.

The RRS Ernest Shackleton is expected to arrive in Falmouth on April 30, for personnel transfer only, and then in Grimsby on May 2, prior to maintenance and refit in Denmark between May 7 and 20.

Health audit highlights quality

THE findings of an audit into the Health Service which was conducted recently were discussed at last week's meeting of the Health and Medical Services Committee.

The audit was performed by senior clinical staff from the Ministry of Defence Permanent Joint Headquarters. The report highlighted the dedication and team spirit of all members of staff and their pursuit to deliver quality care to their patients.

It also noted that for such a remote and isolated community the provision of health care services was impressively wide.

Speaking at the Health and Medical Services Committee last week, the Director of Health and Education, David Jenkins said that the issues and actions identified mainly stemmed from two key areas.

Firstly they highlighted the importance of a need to identify and agree relevant standards that are to be worked to in a number of key clinical and governance areas. The auditing team recognised that identification of any difficulties and challenges that such consultation might involve, along with gaining a clearer idea of the various uses to which the Common is currently put.

The EPD's Nick Rendell emphasised that a more general public consultation would take place, possibly to include public meetings and workshops, once a clearer idea had been gained from Miss McKenzie's work of any conflicts which might currently exist between the various user groups.

Towards a common plan

FOLLOWING the considerable recent public debate about the uses and abuses of Stanley Common, the Environmental Planning Department (EPD) is taking the first steps towards the formulation of a comprehensive management plan.

Visiting Canadian volunteer, Sarah McKenzie, who has a degree in conflict resolution, will conduct a survey of some 30 people representing different types of user of Stanley Common, with a view to finding those interested in involvement in future consultation, and the wholesale adoption of NHS or UK standards was not always possible or practicable in the Islands, but realistic standards that fit the local environment needed to be agreed in areas where ambiguity might currently exist.

Secondly the audit emphasised the need for increased longer-term planning over a ten to 20-year time horizon.

Mr Jenkins said work was already under way to address elements of the issues for improvement highlighted in the report.

Driver fined

DAVID Ellis (48) of the RFA Black Rover admitted drink driving when he was stopped by police on the MPA road just before midnight on Saturday April 9. He was two and a half times over the legal limit, but the Magistrate's court heard on Wednesday he co-operated fully with the police, pleading guilty at the earliest opportunity. Mr Ellis was fined £800 and ordered to pay £85 court costs before he leaves the Falklands.

JSEOD moves

THE Stanley-based Joint Services Explosive Ordinance Disposal Team (JSEOD), which has given almost 29 years service to the Islands and dealt with over 2.8 million items, is moving to MPA from its base at Hillside Camp. A spokesman for JSEOD said the service would continue to support the Falklands community, and that being based at MPC they would have better access to additional resources, including helicopter support.

Vehicles crash

THE causes of a two-vehicle road traffic accident which happened close to the old Beaver Hangar on Ross Road at 5pm on Wednesday evening are being investigated by the Royal Falkland Islands Police. The incident was attended by elements of the police, fire and ambulance services. One of the people involved is reported to have sustained minor injuries which were treated at the scene.

Monument site

THE British Antarctic Monument Trust, which is looking for a site in Stanley for a monument to the memory of British Antarctic explorers, have been in touch with Museum Manager Leona Roberts over a possible site for the monument in the proposed Cultural Heritage Area at the historic dockyard. This will be included in proposals to be put before the Planning Committee.

A chance to star

LAYLA Crowie of the Falkland Islands Tourist Board is looking for volunteers who would be willing to answer the question 'What do you love about the Falklands?' on film, at key spots around Stanley. Layla will be doing the filming herself and says the answers can be as short or as long as the subject wishes. She can be contacted on 22215.

May date note

THE May Ball will be held on Friday May 20, not May 23 as wrongly stated in last week's advert by the Dance Club.

Legislative Assembly Diary

Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

AGING though my brain may be I resent having my perfectly acceptable spelling of the word corrected by a casual spell check at PN.*

 THAT point made, this week's meetings included one with Chris Doyle who advises FIG on telecommunications regulation. Not the most gripping subject but I must concede one which affects many aspects of our daily live and business activity.

 WE are at the point of testing two potential uses of communications: telemedicine which may revolutionise the way in which the service can be enhanced, and a trial classroom link to a settlement school. With the development of distance learning already being used by some, our remoteness becomes less problematic. I can see distance learning being especially valuable for those who wish to improve their qualifications and skills but, for family or other reasons, cannot commit to full-time study elsewhere. The crucial question for all these applications is whether they are affordable at a time when we are just catching the sting in the tail of the recession combined with rapidly rising fuel prices.

 I AM as disappointed as any other member of the public at the seeming hiatus in planning for shipping. Having declared my interest as a director and shareholder of CFL, which has heavily subsidised SAAS for the life of its operation, I have spent many hours sitting in corridors so cannot throw any light on the subject. I suggest asking the question of those directly involved.

 ROADS are always a controversial subject with every other person becoming an instant expert in what "they" are doing wrong. The decision to do low cost, high maintenance all-weather tracks was made before I was first on council, with the aim of connecting most people as fast as possible. I wonder, even with hindsight, whether the decision would be any different if made today and, if it was, how many would still be awaiting their link. We take lifestyle transforming, relatively easy travel for granted. There is a high maintenance cost and weather damage is inevitable; however, damage by speeding, inconsiderately driven heavy vehicles is not.

 * Editor's note: "Ageing" is the preferred syle in the PN, as it is in the Collins English Dictionary.

Ian Jaffray with champion ewe

Sarah Whitney and daughter Olivia enthralled at the show

Family farm scoops the sheep show silverware

It was no clean sweep, however, with prizes well spread around both privately owned farms and Falklands Landholdings (FLH).

While Tyrone and Sarah Whitney can proudly boast a champion ram, as well as best mature ram, wool section dual purpose mature ram, ram hogget and terminal sire, vociferous Scotsman Hew Grierson at Blue Beach claimed best shearing ram and ewe, wool section breed, and FLH farm North Arm appeared to produce the best girls, taking first ewe hogget, dual purpose ewe and, ultimately, champion ewe classes.

Elephant Beach didn't go short on points either, with farmer Ben Berntsen giving Home Farm a run for its money in the wool classes.

Worthy of note were the fine woolled Mount Kent sheep - winners of pen of three flock shearlings (male or female) - and the texels (meat sheep) of host farm Fitzroy, winner of ewe of any age suitable for producing prime lambs. Goose Green Farm also picked up prizes in a wide variety of classes.

Happily, the multi-purpose merinos (MPM) carried to the East by Peter and Shelley Nightingale of West Lagoons had a worthwhile journey taking second place in the flock hoggets wool section.

Shelley and Peter's primary reason for making the journey to Fitzroy was to show case developments in their MPM flock in terms of increased yield, micron reduction and body weight increase.

With a growing interest in dual purpose animals (meat and wool producing) since the launch of the Falkland Islands Meat Company, a class for dual purpose ram lamb/hogget was added this year alongside the dual purpose mature ram and ewe classes. While dedicated wool-growers, West farmer Justin Knight and island farmer Louise Pole-Evans along with veteran farmer George Smith examined the wool sheep, former FIMCo Manager George Paice and former Fitzroy Manager (and texel fan) Ron Binnie oversaw the meat classes.

The two groups then came together to judge the dual purpose animals; a decision by organisers SeAled PR that left them mildly concerned about the potential for a punch-up in the catching pens.

However, maturity and cooperation reigned and decisions were quickly made with one meat judge shockingly overheard to agree with a wool judge that the latter's choice "was a better example of its breed" than its meaty counterpart.

The Falkland Islands Meat Company is a generous sponsor of the show, in particular of the dual purpose classes.

Manager John Ferguson said: "I thought the standard of the sheep and lambs this year was the highest to date and it was good to see all classes well attended."

"The decision to introduce a class for dual Purpose Ram Lamb/Hogget to separate them from the mature rams was the correct one."

"A few years ago, the dual purpose/meat breeds only had a few animals in one corner of the shed, so it is very encouraging to see them spread right through the show now."

RBA Vice Chair Justin Knight, speaking of the wool breeds, said: "This was the third time I have assisted with the judging of the wool sheep classes at the show and I have to say I am more impressed every year, to see such a high standard."

"The sheep are clear faced, large framed, high yielding and have an even fleeced conformation, and are a real credit to their owners; all sheep were in great condition and that is always a big positive."

The RBA would like to thank the sponsors of the show, host Alan Eagle, and those who made the journey to Fitzroy, both farmers, stallholders and spectators.

FIOGA fundraiser at live music and drinks shindig

THE Falkland Islands Overseas Games Association held a fundraiser on Friday raising money for the 2011 Island Games.

Government House was at full capacity with more than 80 guests treated to drinks, food and live music.

The location of the bar was essentially in an outside tent, to save space in the reception hall where a dance floor had been set up, hopefully the drinks and music would take affect, and that they did.

First to perform, separately and together, were talented youngsters Sorrel Pompert Robertson (piano) and Amy Guest (violin). Music teacher Shirley Adams-Leach also played piano duetting with Sorrel and supporting Amy.

Paul Howes then played a well prepared set of soulful acoustic songs which wooed the crowd to rapturous applause.

Shortly after was the auction of donations including rock climbing lessons, shooting with the Gun Club and Gold Leisure Centre Membership, snuck in between speeches from Chairman Mike Summers and host for the evening, His Excellency the Governor.

A few cocktails later it was the turn of The Pushers to perform who, aided by guest vocalist Tara Hewitt, played an upbeat set of rock classics and house favourites.

DJ Andres provided music for the rest of the night, the crowd thoroughly warmed up, and it became difficult to find room on the dance floor.

It was also an excellent chance to see preparations for the Island Games.

This year sees the largest team of athletes ever sent by the Falklands, travelling to the Isle of Wight this June.

Sports include football, shooting, golf, badminton, swimming and, for the first time in quite some time, athletics. Investment in sport is valuable for the promotion of our small Islands and it was announced this week that an intern shall be travelling to the Falklands to work with FIOGA in advancing our international contributions.

Due to arrive on Saturday, Natalie Brett is from the Commonwealth Games Canada Association. FIOGA applied for an intern and Natalie was selected for her interest in core sports, such as football and swimming, which already have a large local interest.

Natalie will travel to New Zealand on April 23 for training in her role, providing programme capacity support to spend a year developing sport in the Falklands.

"Her role will be to improve development of sport and promoting the use of sport to develop the individual," said Steve Dent.

"She will also assist FIOGA in administration, grants, fundraising and liaising with clubs."

Paola, Scott and Rosemarie dance away

Happy guests grab a partner to share the dance floor

FICS art teacher Jo moved from Hastings to the Falklands in 2009 with husband Mark and Miles, now three. Since arriving here she has acquired a daughter, Harriet, five months, and developed a passion for spinning, knitting and felting

The Wanderer

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Peat

Thanks for that about the non time change.

I have to admit it never crossed my mind that we would now be on East Chile time.

Do you think Tina Kitchen will think that her "Yawn" new initiative strangely called "It takes two to Tango" is starting to work? Is the name of the initiative code?

Do they have in "spy jargon" a sleeper over here? Even at the highest level such as Gilly House? The truth will out!

Do you remember the TV show "Yes Minister"?

Do you recall how when the politician was going to make a mess of something, the civil servant would say "that's a very courageous decision minister?" The meaning was no! Don't do it! Well, that remark came to mind when I heard the news from the Education Board about combining the FICS Headship with the Dep Director's post.

The last lot were very wary of combining the education and medical top jobs, but were persuaded by the non-stick shaman to do so.

The present lot appear to be going down a similar road.

The Falkland Islands Community School needs a strong but fair-minded professional Head who not only gains the confidence of the staff and gets to know the students, but also can give the school a period of stability that it so desperately needs.

I know you agree with me on this one, and did you notice the new post will be appointed in January 2012. It said so on the radio, but the reality is that it will not be filled until September of that year.

This means there is still time to revisit this most important post, and I hope that they do, 'cos the biggest losers will be the students.

Hey pal, hot news today! I hear that the EOD have left Stanley after 29 years and not a peep from anybody.

I do hope that some person in authority will recognise all the good work that those lads have done over the years... at the very least some kind of public recognition in the name of the Islands.

Talk later. Ta Ta. JW

A little produce goes a long way

STANLEY Growers ended their cruise ship supply season on March 31 when the NG Explorer loaded 150kg of Falklands lettuce, tomatoes and herbs – in Ascension Island.

The Explorer left Stanley on March 12 with a full load of Falklands produce on her Atlantic islands cruise and the Ascension "top-up" will see her on to the cruise end in the Azores.

Many thanks to the RAF at Mount Pleasant and Air Seychelles for a long-range delivery. NG Explorer of Linblad Expeditions have always favoured Falklands produce – we have even delivered to them in Ushuaia before!

A good thought for a great day

JUST read your article in the Penguin News (April 1) re a street party and I think you have put a really good thought to the Islanders, and I am sure there will be volunteers to get it going.

It is needed as all the problems that the Argentines are trying are not coming up in worldwide news programmes. A lot is going on in the world right enough, but it is not even coming up on the UK news programmes, so where is the PR company?

As to the catering, what is wrong with everyone bringing their own, plus forks and knives? I am sure the government would supply the trestle tables and there is enough talent on the Islands to organise entertainment.

I am sure the Camp settlements will be organising their own parties, so come on all you Campers, I know you can lead the way. Let the Penguin News know what you are doing for a good bash. I'm just sorry we cannot be with you. Have a great day.

Delving into Dairy business

READING The Wanderer in the latest issue got me thinking: could we have inadvertently supplied the FIDC with the business plan for the old Stanley Dairy?

Some months ago we approached the FIDC with our proposal to reinstate the poultry unit at the Stanley Dairy, together with a market garden venture which was presented to them for consideration. We were invited to supply a five-year business plan which, at their suggestion, was to include the possibility of reinstating the dairy herd.

This area, while possible, had too many risks as the entire assets and livestock had already been sold, or as we now know stolen, so it would have been a very difficult system to rebuild again.

However, we put in the plan and were invited to a meeting where the management praised our proposal, stating we ticked all the right boxes. Being highly praised was very encouraging.

However, soon after, we started to get the usual delays and excuses as to why the old Dairy could not be started in the short-term. One suggestion from the board was that a deep water port was going to be built there. Can't see how that would affect the operation.

Then we got another put-off stating that it would be unlikely to be able to commence any form of business while the current investigation was going on.

This is not the first time that I have written a business plan to have it come back to haunt me. Talk about being a complete mug.

I copied my proposal to the entire councillors. Rumour control informs me that the latest proposals, as commented by The Wanderer, are possibly that of a current councillor. If this is the case then that is surely using the benefits of insider information.

We have continued to implement the poultry unit on our farm because we were told that we would not be allowed to develop it out at the old Great Britain site.

Time to place the old names

I OBJECT to the ever-increasing occurrence of altering place names in the Falkland Islands. All changes are adding to the loss of our identity and the origin depicting specific features. Who is responsible for these desecrations?

Starting with Stanley, a big bone of contention is Whalebone Bay, in recent times called Whalebone Cove and, to add insult to injury, a Tourist Information board has been put in place abreast of the hulk of "Lady Elizabeth" calling it "Cove." Now up to Sappers Hill: who took the "s" away to make it Sapper?

I believe Hackets Hill is a misnomer. It was pleasing to see on page 4 of the Penguin News (April 1) another "t" with an apostrophe before the "s" inserted.

Now, all that is required to get it back to its original identity is change the "c" to "t" and it becomes "Halkett's Hill," as it should be. Before I move westward, let's look north and put the "e" back on "Mount Lowe."

Proceeding west out of Stanley, past Swan Inlet, we come to "Canada Runde," sometimes "Ronde." The correct name is "Ganada Ronda," a holding place for livestock, a trap or surround.

Onto "Burnside." I ask you put the "t" to make it "Burntside?" The original name was from the Scottish burn nearby, where once was the site of the Darwin Farm sheep dip trough. The nearby park "Kiel Park" should be "Gill Park," where the half-bred Indian was found hiding after he had knifed the FIC Camp Manager Rudd on October 15 1864. We then come to "Middle Hill," just outside the Boca Wall in the old Cow Park. I always knew this as "Hill 60."

Perhaps we should put these names to bed and rename the feature "Illingsworth Hill" in honour of Private Steven Illingsworth of 2 Para who was killed there on May 28 1982. I would like to hear the emphasis as "k" in "Boca," not the soft "oc" as we have heard since the war 29 years ago. Darwin Bay often referred to as Darwin Pond? I ask, do you get tidal ponds? One I've aired before is "Cheroogs Corner" Pond and Gate. I think this was probably "Cheroot," where riders took a break before dispersing to gather sheep or cattle.

I do approve of new place names that record events like the renaming of Bluff Hill at Goose Green to "Para Hill" (albeit by the locals), where the Memorial to 2 Para stands. Also "Coventry Point" at Pebble Island, officially recognised in recent days.

Since the extension of the road network new place names have been added to our travel memory.

Bollix Bend, Lickers Hill, Blake's Bend and Suicide Hill are a few often quoted. But these have not made it to the maps, or been written in stone yet.

Going back to where I began, I urge our public to have their say in defending our heritage by getting the original names back on our maps.

You can help stop this sneaky erosion by picking up your pen or raising your voice. I don't know who to address or who is responsible for such matters but soon we will find out.

Should I dare to resurrect the old chestnut of Port Stanley or Stanley I would, for sure, have the attention of many.

Lastly, a change that gripes me in the avian world is our beautiful Red Backed Buzzard being called a Variable Hawk!

THE BEST CHOICE, QUALITY AND VALUE

FIC bid to build 14 new homes is knocked back

THIS month's meeting of the Planning and Building Committee reviewed 11 applications seeking planning permission, two of which were refused consent.

As usual, the meeting was chaired by Councillor Sharon Halford who was supported by Cllr Jan Cheek with three of the five lay members present.

An application for 14 terraced houses to be sited west of 34 Fitzroy Road was submitted by the Falkland Islands Company and, after much discussion, the committee accepted the recommendation by Environmental Planning Officer, Antony Payne that it be refused for two reasons: that the scale of development was unacceptable due to the large dwellings proposed on very small plots, and that the parking arrangement also was unacceptable being likely to give rise to highway and pedestrian safety issues.

Members did, however, welcome the fact that moves were in hand to redevelop the area, the amenity of which they considered was currently needing improvement.

Also refused planning permission was Ben Watson's outline application for a dwelling with provision of off-street parking on the north part of the garden at 7 Moody Street. Both of the proposed alternative parking arrangements were considered likely to give rise to highway and safety concerns. The other nine submissions which received conditional planning permission were:

- Renewal of temporary planning permission for the siting of non-operational mobile tea rooms to the rear of 4A Jeremy Moore Avenue for Paz Blyth.

- Erection of a single-storey timber-framed building for use as shops on land south of Plot 25, Lookout Industrial Estate for Ian Stewart Construction Limited.

- Detailed plans for a dwelling for family member(s) to be erected on land at the rear of 29 Fitzroy Road for Pauline McCormick.

- Extension to dwelling to create extra room and link to a garage at 18 Callaghan Road for Nicholas and Tara Francis.

- Demolition of a Nissen Hut and erection of a garage at 108 Davis Street for Les Morrison.

- Erection of a double garage at 74 Davis Street for Harold Neilson.

- Erection of a porch at 2 Davis Street for James Lang.

- Extension of plot to south to excavate and backfill for extended laydown, hardstanding and pipeyard facility at 11-13 Boxer Bridge Road for Byron Holdings.

- Operation of a taxi company from dwelling at 3A Brandon Road for Ricky Jones.

Two objections were received to the proposal from Mr Jones to operate two taxis from the property.

In granting conditional consent, the conditions imposed a requirement that only one owner-driven taxi can operate from the premises, and that such consent was for a limited period only to expire, initially, at the end of next September.

This latter condition was imposed in order to assess the impact of the development on the neighbourhood, and to give the applicant time to find a commercial area from which to operate his firm.

Before concluding the meeting, members were asked to review a list of 12 applications for building permits which gave their current status.

These included an extension to and conversion of a store building into a dwelling at Douglas Station on East Falkland. Building Adviser Nick Stephens reported on a visit made to the site and his discussions and correspondence with the owner and builder, following which he now awaited further information.

The next meeting is scheduled to be held on May 5 at 8.30am in the Liberation Room of the Secretariat.

A top round-up at Port Howard

Tall tales and true, allegedly

The Dog Handlers Association celebrated a two-nighter at Port Howard over the weekend with a very high standard of dog trialling.

Everyone got to the pen, and Pecker got them in twice (not that he went on about that much!).

Steven penned them as well, and even the old, hardened handlers didn't seem to have any complaints.

The morning of the trials started with a brisk, warm wind to blow the headaches away and the weather got better as the day went on, lending itself to excellent socialising for the large crowd who were gathered.

Robin "Snoozer" Smith and Rodney Lee were in their element, keeping the crowd entertained with tall tales and merriment.

The day finished in the bars with much discussion about the day's events (with many re-runs and what-ifs).

The confidence of the handlers grew with every drink, culminating with Paul Peck offering Critta £500 for the winning dog. Critta, having left the bar briefly, was dismayed to find his wife had agreed to this sale and was ironing out the fine print with Pecker. At the time of writing, negotiations surrounding this sale are ongoing...

A fun weekend was had by all and it was lovely to see so many people from all over the Falklands making the effort to come to Port Howard. It was particularly good to see Les Morrison making a comeback from retirement on his old turf.

The association would once again like to thank the people of Port Howard for hosting the event, judges Bill Pole-Evans, Leon Marsh and Diane Betts, and the "sheep letter-outers."

Results: 1st Critta Lee with Duke lost 33½ points; 2nd Susan Hirtle with Jodie lost 37½ points; 3rd Steven Dickson with Jeff lost 43½ points; 4th Steven Dickson with May lost 45½ points.

See you all in August for the next trials.

Saladero ram numbers down, but select few sold to spirited bidders

THE Department of Agriculture's annual Ram Sale eventually took place on Friday in the Saladero shearing shed after two unavoidable postponements.

The number of farmers and spectators was down slightly compared to last year, leading to less competition for the lots on offer.

Glenn Ross and Mac McArthur both said a few words, welcoming everyone before the Helmsman auction commenced.

Although there were fewer bidders there was, however, some spirited bidding, with a select few animals being hotly sought after.

The bulk of the animals were sold through the Helmsman auction with the remaining animals allocated to farms through the FIP scheme. This resulted in a high level of clearance of the sheep on offer.

Total auction proceeds were down on last year's, which was understandable given the lower attendance and subsequent drop in competition.

A very big thank you to Beverly and Trudi of The Galley Café, who once again did a fantas-

Thanks also to Workboat Services for being so patient and helpful with all the delays and, on the day, getting Westers to the sale and back again. And, lastly, thank you to Keith Alazia at Goose Green for all of your help, Brian and all DoA staff who made a huge effort in making sure the sale eventually happened!

Concern when Dick Whittington appears shot

Youthful cast breathes new life into Dick Whittington's story

I HAVE to admit to a sense of foreboding as I took my place in the Town Hall on Thursday evening for the opening night of FIODA's latest production, Dick Whittington.

Slap-stick comedy, the principal ingredient of pantomime, is one of the hardest things to bring off successfully on the stage. Get it wrong and instead of being funny it just becomes hideously embarrassing. "Oh dear" I thought as I read my programme, "most of the cast are children, it's bound to be a disaster."

Happily, I need not have worried, particularly about the children, who were, without exception, fabulous. In fact, although at the beginning there were a few "first night moments" when the action faltered or scene changes took a little while longer than probably intended, the whole show went with such zest that the near-capacity audience could not help but be swept along.

The story began traditionally enough with Dick Whittington, played by Scott Betts, and his talking cat Felix, alias the totally unrecognisable Geoff Pring, on their way to London where Dick is to work for Councillor Fitzwarren, played by Carl Evans.

What happens after that serves simply as an excuse for comic interludes, some songs, some mushy episodes and a lot of laughter from an audience which soon began to join in with relish when asked. Suffice to say there was love interest leading to marriage between the handsome, if somewhat bizarrely attired, Dick and the lovely Alice Fitzwarren, played convincingly by Paula Fowmes.

There was even romance between two cats, when Dick Whittington's faithful companion Felix was lured away from his master by the alluring Tabatha Purrfect, in the sinuous shape of Beth John who, for one of her tender years, was disturbingly convincing as the kitten femme fatale. In pantomime good has to finally triumph over evil, represented here by two bungling buddies, whose wicked plots were always doomed to failure. Sir Oliver Olphant and Lord Royston Royston were not exactly Morecambe and Wise, but more like Morecambe and Robbie Coltrane.

The outrageously inept Olphant was legal drafter, Ronnie MacLennan-Baird, and Lord Royston Royston was played with his usual aplomb and wicked laugh

Absolutely, fabulously, in the pink, Alison Inglis

by veteran villain Garry Tyrrell. Garry brought the house down with a perfect rendition of Michael Caine's famous phrase from the Italian Job: "You were only supposed to blow the bloody doors off."

Kim and Aggie of "How Clean is Your House?" fame were taken to a whole new dimension by the man-hunting, marigold wearing, Hopit and Mopit, played delightfully by Andrea Stanworth and Catherine Catton.

Another comic duo much appreciated by the audience were the workshy Mick the Brick and Monty Zoomer, played with great enthusiasm by Hannah McPhee and the always irrepressible Daniel Clarke.

Their conspicuously consuming employer was TV presenter Davian Devine, played in a shocking pink wig by Alison Inglis, who could easily qualify as Stanley's answer to Dame Edna.

With such a good ensemble performance, a credit to the direction of Lidda Luxton and the rest of the production team, it is maybe invidious to pick out anyone as the star of the show, but for me the spotlight has to fall on the girl band, the Bow Belles: Jessica Whalley-King, Sophie Pompert-Robertson, Natasha Rickman and Tavra Fiddes, who lit up the stage each time they appeared.

With such talent as they and all the other youngsters displayed, the future of FIODA has to be secure. John Fowler

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report
7th April 2011

Lucy Ellis, Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands
The EMI closed today at 1375 AUS c/kg, down 8 cents since March 31. This is the first time the EMI has closed lower since February 17th, maybe indicating the ceiling on high prices has been reached. Yesterday the EMI reached 1386 AUS c/kg clean, the highest level in absolute terms when no adjustment has been made for inflation. In a volatile market, fine fleece wools set the pace before losing ground today. Mid-micron performed better with 20-22.5 microns selling at almost the same level as last week. Once again, China dominated the market, with pressure from India and Europe. Locally, there have been mixed selling results with some wools underachieving benchmark prices by over GBP 1/kg and others going well over the benchmark. Wools across the board are still selling at a steady pace.

Decline in skua numbers on New Island may prompt new research REPORTS of the demise of the Falkland skua may be premature, according to conservationists.

Research just published in the journal Polar Biology reveals the number of skuas on New Island has declined by almost half in only five years.

According to scientists, something appears to be limiting the birds' ability to reproduce, raising questions over the health of the wider marine environment in the south-west Atlantic.

The reason for the crash is not clear, the BBC reports on its BBC Earth website, and just a few thousand pairs of Falkland skuas now remain worldwide, most living on the Islands and a few along the coast of Argentina.

Overall, the number of New Island skuas fell by 47.5 per cent between 2004 and 2009, reports Dr Paulo Catry of the Museum of Natural History in Lisbon, Portugal, who conducted the surveys.

"Given this is the largest known colony for the species, currently with 333 pairs, this decline should obviously raise some concerns," he said.

"In fact, long-lived seabirds like skuas usually change their numbers slowly and this situation cannot be considered as 'normal'.

"We were very surprised that the decline in numbers was so fast, particularly considering that other seabirds on New Island seem to have been doing quite well over the same past five to six years."

Brown skuas generally enjoy a high breeding success, with each pair raising a chick a year on average. But the New Island skuas are reportedly producing just 0.28 chicks on average per pair each year.

"This decline seems to be linked to an abnormally low reproductive output, the causes of which are still to be identified," said Dr Catry. "We are currently working on these questions. They are important not only for the sake of Falkland skuas, but more generally, for the marine environment of the Falkland Islands."

One possibility is that the Falkland skua is suffering at the hands of a competitor.

Falkland skuas prey on a smaller bird, the thin-billed prion, and its eggs. But so too does the striated caracara -- and the caracara's population has grown 15 per cent a year in recent years, producing 2.5 chicks per nest per year, on average.

Al Bayliss of Falklands Conservation said Dr Catry's report was "a very interesting paper that raises some important questions."

But he said the research was only a "snapshot" taken from limited breeding grounds and, while any decline in skua numbers was a concern, some implications of the report could be misleading.

He told the Penguin News: "Ultimately, the Polar Biology article calls for a closer look at the Falklands skua population, to assess whether the decline in breeding pairs recorded on New Island reflects population trends around the Falklands. As the paper indicates, the decline may not be Falklands wide, but could be site-specific, eg predation or competition for food by other predators breeding on New Island, which could effect skua survival and breeding success."

However, he said it might be prudent to more closely monitor other sites.

"We have limited data on population size and trends from other breeding sites and this may need to be redressed," said Mr Bayliss.

But Dr Catry said he believed his findings might link the skua's slowdown in breeding to much wider problems.

"Falkland skuas are top predators of marine ecosystems," he said. "They will take fish, squid, crustaceans, and they are also important predators of other seabirds."

"If something is not well with them, it may mean that something is not well with the rich Patagonian shelf ecosystem."

"Many Falkland Island seabirds have known important declines over the past decades. We need to learn more about what is driving these changes, and skuas may help us with that."

Admin & Studio Assistant - this position will help to deal with the organisation of the weekly diary and will be involved with the day to day running of the studio. This position will suit someone with an interest in the "behind the scenes" aspects of the media. The person required must be highly motivated. They will be involved in filming TV programmes and so will need to have a confident, presentable manner and have a high degree of technical ability to operate studio and field equipment. There must be a willingness to go wherever and whenever the news dictates which will involve some weekend and evening work. This is a fantastic opportunity for someone who wishes to embark on a career in the media but will require dedication and hard work.

A clean driving licence is a requirement for the position. Applicants must have a good telephone manner and good communication skills.

An attractive salary is on offer for the right person.

For further information please contact Stephen Fowmes at FITV on 22631 or Mario Zovic on 22349. Applications with a full CV and two references should be submitted to Stephen Fowmes, Financial Director, FITV, Airport Road, Stanley. (e-mail sfowmes@fitv.co.fk) by 30 April 2011.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE: VACANCY

An opportunity has arisen for a member of the community to become involved in helping to ensure that FIG is delivering value-for-money to the residents of the Falkland Islands. Expressions of interest are sought from members of the public wishing to become a member of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC).

Under the Falkland Islands Constitution, the PAC comprises:

- (a) a chairman and two other members appointed by the Governor; and
- (b) two members of the Legislative Assembly.

The PAC currently has a vacancy for an "other member" under (a) above. The role involves six (or so) meetings per year, each lasting two hours, with an estimated time commitment of four hours per month for background reading and preparation. The role is unpaid but expenses are reimbursed. The appointment period will be until 31 January 2012 (in order to tie in with the appointment periods of the other, existing members).

The PAC has an important scrutiny role over the public accounts of all government departments and specified bodies. The PAC's task is to ensure that public funds have been expended properly, for the purposes for which they were voted by the Legislative Assembly. Hence the role is varied, complex and fascinating. Individuals appointed to the PAC make a significant contribution to the community, in helping to maintain high standards of public administration and good governance in the Falkland Islands. This calls for PAC members themselves to have the highest standards of personal integrity, discretion and commitment to the good governance of the Islands.

Applications should be submitted to the Governor by 30 April, setting out the reasons for the applicant's interest in appointment to the PAC and the skills and experience that the applicant would bring to the job.

Sarah wins Stuart Haines competition

SEVENTEEN players signed in last Sunday for a stableford tournament hosted by club member Stuart Haines who departs the Islands next month.

Stuart has been a regular competition player winning a number of tournaments, and he will leave with a handicap substantially lower than when he arrived three years ago. We all wish him well in his retirement.

The competition was played in fine conditions and so some good scores were expected. Sarah Bowles came in first with 38 points (Stuart also scored 38 but counted himself out of his own competition), one point ahead of Kevin Clapp who was one ahead of Ian Stewart.

It was good to see all three top places taken by members playing in the forthcoming Island Games in the Isle of Wight.

Best front nine was Nick Stevens on 21 points while Troyd Bowles won the best back nine, also on 21 points. Troyd shot a one under 33 on the back nine. Troyd also won the longest drive while Adrian Joshua won the nearest the pin on the 12th and Ric Nye on the 17th. There were lots of birdies so no payout this week.

Many thanks again to Stuart for sponsoring the prizes.

This coming Sunday will be the final tournament of the season with the rescheduled Monthly Medal at the usual check-in time.

Penguins p-pick up the pace for a brace of wins

SUNDAY saw Penguins pick up their first win of the season, against Panthers in what was an extremely fast and close game.

All the goals came in the first period, with Panther's Karl Nightingale netting the opener, and a rare goal from "Boy" Miranda levelling the score. Penguins had the Evans brothers back for the first time in the competition and they grabbed themselves a goal apiece.

With just five seconds of play left, Panther's captain Nick Francis scored a second to pull the score back to 3-2. The second period was goalless but the game continued at the same relentless pace.

The other fixture was between Blackhawks and Sharks. The first period saw just one goal, scored by captain Craig Dockrill. In the second period, Sharks pushed and pushed, but guest goalie Ever Peralta had an outstanding game defending the Blackhawks goal. Dockrill and Sarah McKenzie both scored and assisted each other's goals to bring the score to 3-0, before Ricardo Leyton managed to pull one back for Sharks. A third goal from Dockrill sealed a 4-1 win.

Tuesday's game was between Penguins and Sharks, which looked to be another close tie. Ricardo Leyton opened the scoring for Sharks. Shortly after that Teslyn Barkman was sin-binned (again!) for two minutes for high sticks.

Penguins took advantage of the power play and Kyran Evans levelled the score. The second period saw Penguins go up a gear and, with goals from Antoine Daille, Captain Roy Shepherd (2) and another for Evans, the game ended 5-1 to the Pens.

Dani Gordon models grandmother Carole Lee's 1975 silk and cotton wedding dress

Wedding belles call

A WHOLE host of brides and grooms are preparing to share Kate and William's royal wedding day next Friday at the free community party in the FIDF Hall.

TV coverage of the wedding will be broadcast on a big screen, followed by a red carpet event like no other, as young and old dust off their best bibs and frocks for a grand wedding parade.

Everyone turning up wearing wedding gear – whether it is just a tiara or a full ensemble – will be given a number on arrival, and party guests will be invited to vote for the winner, with the prize being a right royal tour around Stanley in the FITT limousine.

The 12-hour party starts at 10am, with a hot meal, novelty dances and games going on into the evening. Organiser Trish Jamieson said the Legislative Assembly had contributed £500 towards the party, and she was still keen to hear from businesses who wanted to share in the fun.

Interested people can phone Trish on 51867 or join the party planners for a dress swap at the Narrows Bar at 5pm on Friday.

Unclaimed holiday credits close to £1m

TWO years after the Falklands Holiday Credit Scheme was frozen, almost £1 million remained unclaimed in government coffers.

And while at least £100,000 has been withdrawn since July last year, when the fund still totalled £920,000, the vast bulk still remains untouched – and there are just ten weeks left for claimants to come forward.

The Holiday Credit Scheme was introduced on January 1 1997 as part of the Hay Management scheme, replacing regular overseas passages formerly enjoyed by some government officers.

It was initially for overseas passages only but, over the years, the goalposts were moved to embrace domestic tourism and the allocation of credits to friends and relatives to visit the Islands, or the transfer of credits to other residents who were also entitled to holiday credits in their own right.

The latter has been of particular benefit to people with relatives requiring medical treatment overseas, when families have pooled their credits to allow a family member to accompany the patient.

And it is not only those eligible for holiday credits who have benefited from the scheme. In 2007, to mark the 25th anniversary of the Falklands War, many donated their credits to SAMA82 to bring veterans back to the Islands, some of them for the first time since liberation in 1982.

But as with most good things, they usually come to an end and, as the scheme has dwindled from the initial £1 per day allocation per adult, through to 13p by 2006 and then to none in recent years, the fund will be closed at the end of June, with very little chance of it being reinstated in the future. And with so much remaining unclaimed in the fund, those entitled to credits are being urged to claim their travel funds – or cash – as soon as possible.

Councillor Roger Edwards said there were no plans to use any surplus funds on any particular project, and that any money left over would simply go back into the central fund. But he hoped "every penny" would be used up before the end of June: "It's your money," he said. "Go to the Treasury and draw it down."

Holiday credits may be used for travel and associated costs such as accommodation, in or outside the Falklands.

This can include domestic lodges or hotels and, if you don't have wheels to get out and about, you can use your credits to hire a taxi or even hire one of the many Tourist Board accredited tour guides for a tour around the Islands. Flights with FIGAS and ferry crossings on Concordia Bay also are eligible.

Bookings can be made through a travel agent, who will make the necessary arrangements to access your holiday credits for full or part-payment, or claimants can obtain a receipt which can then be taken to the Treasury for a refund.

Accommodation booklets are available from the Falkland Islands Tourist Board, and its website (www.falklandislands.com) also carries information on tour guides and self-drive suggestions.

Credits also can be used for flights on the airbridge, with Lan and for overseas holidays. They can also be signed over to another person.

Children's balances may be drawn down, but claims for travel expenses from family members will not be accepted.

However, if you wish to cash in your allowance, you will receive only 50 per cent of the value and, if you have any outstanding debts to the government, they too will be deducted.

Treasury was this week unable to put a precise figure on the outstanding funds in the scheme.

To obtain your balance and further information on the Holiday Credit Scheme, call 28436 or call into the Secretariat.

Silence of the baggage-less band

THOSE looking forward to stepping along Ross Road to a military band on Thursday, or maybe going to one of the other musical occasions that the visiting Volunteer Band of the Mercian Regiment was due to undertake from April 17 to 21, have had their hopes dashed by the news that these have been cancelled.

The cancellation is not because the band could not make it to the Falklands, because they are already here, but instead as a result of their instruments and equipment not being loaded on the recent airbridge.

An official release from Mount Pleasant explains that "due to the limitation of cargo space on the airbridge all equipment and supplies brought out to the Falklands are subject to priority listing, which ensures that the operational commitments within the South Atlantic Overseas Territories are maintained at all times.

"On occasion equipment designed to travel may be postponed or replaced if a higher priority cargo has been identified.

"It is recognised that the cancellation of the band's itinerary will disappoint many in the Falkland Islands who were looking forward to the numerous musical activities and concerts scheduled to take place.

"British Forces South Atlantic Islands would like to apologise for any inconvenience which has been caused by this cancellation."

FALKLAND ISLANDS

THE closing down of the Holiday Credit Scheme at the end of June is a rather sad end to an era. In its hey (or should that be Hay) day it was a great equaliser; it gave some people who had never had either an urge or the finances to travel, that little push in a northerly direction on a journey of discovery.

The term "cultural ventilation" was coined at the time (it must also have been the era of management speak being introduced) and mooted as a move to encourage Islanders to travel to other parts of the world, "experience different countries and peoples and bring back to the Islands ideas and experiences that could be of use to the community".

Really it was a way to dispose of the very expensive overseas holidays for government officers, but it was also a way of sharing with the population the wealth from what was at the time an extremely lucrative fishing industry.

Personally, I think it was probably one of the most successful government initiatives in the Islands' social history and, unusually, no one in particular has laid claim to giving birth to the concept.

Think of the millions that have been spent bringing experts to the Islands over the years and what we have got out of them, and then imagine a Falkland Islander travelling overseas; learning new skills, exploring and investigating all aspects of everyday life and finding ways to utilise fresh ideas on their return. Money well spent.

It wasn't as though the money was sufficient to fund luxurious holidays, it merely opened doors and, in many cases, the minds of those who never thought to travel before.

Now bring on the oil, so that should our government desire, we can get the ball rolling again.

And another thing...

THE time issue ticks on and is becoming a little boring for one who really doesn't give a damn. Turn-to half an hour later if you want to work outdoors first thing. It really doesn't matter how you arrange your day, you're not going to get any more daylight within that 24 hours. That unfortunately, is well out of the reach of our MLAs!

Colin Clubbe puts Falklands biodiversity under the spotlight

Four day focus on biodiversity

BIODIVERSITY Workshop facilitator Colin Clubbe opened four days of lectures on Monday, welcoming more than 30 landowners, conservationists, ecologists and one self-proclaimed "contract killer" Brian Summers to the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr Clubbe, of the Royal Botanical Gardens in Kew, London, yesterday reviewed the programme for day one with an overview of fisheries impacts and marine environment, with familiar themes of more research, prioritisation and long-term support of research programmes running throughout. Also highlighting a need for improved communication with the international and local community to promote the strategies.

Terrestrial biosecurity was the active topic for discussion Tuesday morning. Much of the considered research was compiled by New Zealand and Australian specialists who had witnessed the ferocious spread of species like gorse and thistle.

Shona Strange exposed deficiencies in labour and law that do not prevent transient species from invading. She admitted much of her work involved only dealing with problems and expressed a keenness to switch the focus to "prevention as the cure."

Presentations centred around impactful plant species, and

Brian Summers reassured it is possible to get rid of calefate despite its tenacious reputation. "I've sprayed bushes in town and 95 per cent of the time it's not grown back" he reports. Cutting back the plant can cause low flowering re-growth to occur with a habit to hide in grass, similarly in scotch thistle. Budding re-growth can be eaten by grazing sheep and consequently affect wool quality.

Gorse was a subject of contention; it offers a crucial shelter to young lambs but warming weather seems to have promoted the bush to seed and spread uncharacteristically past management in areas.

Landowners can be nervous of the use of some pesticides to control the plants, meaning more labour intensive measures may need to be taken in grazing areas.

Colin Clubbe adopted Governor Nigel Haywood's term when he said: "We don't want to be perceived as 'eco-fascists'," explaining it was important to reassure the public and landowners that biosecurity monitors were not after their hedges. They are strategising to control them spreading to negatively impact the endemic and indigenous species.

Mr Clubbe opened the floor to discussion which inspired encouraging suggestive solutions. They hope to pass information to the public shortly on how to battle invasives on the home front.

Wheels fall off Desire's rocky rollercoaster ride

THE thirteen-year long rollercoaster ride from the peaks of elation to the depths of despair for the many local investors in Desire Petroleum now seems finally to have come to an abrupt halt with the news that the company's latest well, the last in their present campaign, has failed to deliver.

Desire saw its shares, which had fallen around 90 per cent since the beginning of December, suffer a further fall of around 70 per cent on Monday, after announcing that its Ninky well in the North Falkland Basin would be shut down and abandoned.

Chairman Stephen Phipps said after shutting down the well, the AIM-listed company would be left with around £22 million, which was insufficient to drill further wells.

Desire has been exploring the Falklands since 1998, and has so far failed to find any significant reserves of oil or gas. This latest disappointment follows failure to find oil at its Rachel North and Jacinta Prospect wells last year.

According to analysts, two significant questions remain in the wake of this failure: one being whether the company can inspire sufficient confidence among investors to try again, and the other the effect that it might have on the perceived viability of the seabed around the Falklands as a potentially productive and economical source of hydrocarbons.

Mr Phipps said on Monday:

Warrah has carbon date with its past

CARBON dating of all three Warrah skulls discovered whole or in fragments by 13-year-old Dale Evans at his home at Spring Point Farm has been made possible as a result of a donation of £1,000 by Stanley Services Ltd, and a further gift of £500 by a private individual, Falkland Islands Museum and National Trust Curator Leona Roberts has confirmed.

The skulls which Dale found appear to belong to the only specimens to have died a natural death. The other few specimens which exist in museums around the world were all killed by naturalists, leaving unanswered the question of how long this strange cross between a fox and a wolf had lived on the Falklands. It is hoped the carbon dating, which is to be carried out by an American company at a cost of £500 per specimen, will give a final answer to this question.

Desire's downfall: from 168.5p in October to 13.5p yesterday

"Given our continuing confidence that oil will be discovered on Desire's acreage, further wells will need to be drilled, and therefore we will review all financing options available with the intention of rejoining the drilling campaign later in the year if possible."

It is claimed that around 70 per cent of Desire's shareholders are what are known as "retail investors," which is to say private individuals, including Falkland Islanders and British veterans of the 1982 war.

But it seems unlikely they will rally to the cause again, especially after the recent disappointment when Desire announced a significant find from its Rachel prospect, only to announce days later that the promised black stuff had mysteriously turned into water.

"While the company stresses the continued prospectivity of its licence blocks, the question mark of how Desire will fund additional activity is likely to weigh on the shares, especially given all six wells drilled to date have been unsuccessful," said one analyst.

But Desire's disappointing well result may not dent the Falklands chances of becoming a new oil province. "Today's news doesn't have any decisive impact on the Falkland Islands as a whole, in terms of their viability as a petroleum province," said Mirabaud Securities analyst Alex Martinos. "But it raises issues specifically for Desire."

By contrast, other companies interested in Falklands waters still appear upbeat about their prospects. Falkland Oil & Gas (FOGL) has raised £32 million in a share placing to fund a new deep-water drilling campaign in the Southern licensing area off the Islands, beginning with the Loligo prospect in the first quarter of 2012.

And Argos Resources is hoping to join the Falklands oil drilling campaign later this year, now that it has completed its key seismic exploration programme alongside Rockhopper Exploration.

The company is exploring a highly prospective area, the PL001 licence, adjacent to Rockhopper's Sea Lion oil discovery, which was effectively deemed to be commercial last month. Argos plans to be "drill ready" by late 2011, or early 2012.

Puerto Williams to challenge Ushuaia

CHILE is planning to open up its most southerly town, Puerto Williams, to mass tourism under a new investment programme approved by the government.

Currently a sleepy little settlement, local authorities hope that Puerto Williams will be able to mirror the success of Ushuaia just 25 miles away, and become a centre for Antarctica-bound tourism.

The docks of the secluded settlement on the Beagle Straits will be expanded by 70 m to accommodate ocean cruisers and a later expansion of the nearby airport is planned.

The US$8 million investment approved by the Ministry of Public works on April 5 aims to boost tourism not only in Puerto Williams but the rest of the Navarino Island, an area of exceptional natural beauty.

At present, only about 2,000 people visit Puerto Williams each year, roughly equivalent to the town's population.

RFIP is right on the button

FROM Wednesday April 20 callers to the Royal Falkland Islands Police on telephone number 28100 will be given a number of options - licensing, prison or police reception - allowing the caller to be put directly through to the section they require by pressing a button.

Callers unable to press any button or not knowing which section they require should not hang up as the call will be diverted to the police reception who will assist them.

This system's aim is to improve RFIP's customer services, call response time and time dealt with an inquiry.

The RFIP would like to remind everyone that all calls made to the station are recorded.

Texas travels

THE Director of Mineral Resources, Phyl Rendell, and Projects Officer, Sam Cockwell from FIG, along with Phil Richards of the British Geological Survey and geological consultant for FIG, returned on Saturday from the American Association of Petroleum Geologists conference, hosted in Houston, Texas. The conference was an excellent opportunity for the delegation to meet petroleum geologists from around the world and discuss Falklands basin exploration.

Heavy contact

SEISMIC survey vessel Polareus Nadia made heavy contact with FIPASS on Sunday when leaving the floating dock. Marine Officer Malcolm Jamieson said minor damage had been caused to the east side of the north centre barge above the water line. No immediate repairs were required although the situation would be addressed when other work was carried out, Mr Jamieson said.

Monument site

MUSEUM Manager Leona Roberts has asked us to clarify that while, as we reported, she has been in consultation with the British Antarctic Monument Trust over the possible siting of a monument in the proposed Cultural Heritage Area at the historic dockyard, this has not been made part of the Museum's proposals to be put before the Planning Committee.

A chance to star

LAYLA Crowie of the Falkland Islands Tourist Board, who as we reported last week is looking for volunteers to take part in a promotional film, has asked us to make clear that this offer is only extended to members of the Tourist Board and not to the general public, unless insufficient Tourist Board members come forward.

Grazing plan

ALTHOUGH unsure which of his department's officers would take on the task, allocation of existing grazing plots in Stanley will become the responsibility of the Agricultural Department, the Director of Natural Resources announced at the recent Lands Committee meeting. The use and classification of any new plots will still need first to be put before the Lands Committee.

Legislative Assembly Diary

Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

NEXT week is busy with the threat of a massive Executive Council agenda. I am a fast reader but many papers require deeper study and I often have to refer to previous papers on related subjects. The volume of paper hitting our in-trays can be daunting when added to the dozens of emails arriving on a daily basis. While some are trivial, all have to be checked in case they are important.

THE biggest single challenge we face is an economic one. By comparison the pre-election rhetoric from Buenos Aires is a self-defeating irritant so long as we retain a sense of perspective. Common sense dictates that we should further expand and diversify the economy. Our dependence on imports represents a constant leakage of funds which must be replaced by new money. I'm not an economist and view with great scepticism theories which may work in larger countries but not in a narrow economy like ours. All more reason to encourage new and existing entrepreneurs to broaden the range of their activities and to recognise the essential contribution they make.

THE biodiversity workshops this week are a logical progression from the signing on our behalf by former councillor Mike Summers of the UK Overseas Territories Environmental Charter in about 1997. I am looking forward to sitting in some of the sessions when I have breaks between other meetings. I can never quite understand the knee-jerk prejudiced resistance in some quarters to the whole concept of looking after the environment which is our most valuable resource. Many individuals, including a great many landowners, have been caring for their land and wildlife for years. I've been in contact with many environmental scientists over many years and only one or two were paid up members of the lunatic fringe. It is a pity that one or two extremists, long gone, have poisoned people's views when today's specialists place huge emphasis on working with individuals for everyone's benefit.

ALL MLAs will welcome feedback over the next few months to monitor the effects of the decision to trial year-round summer time.

Opportunities knock for students in the workplace

YEAR 10 students from FICS were recently sent to work, learning all about the skills involved in the workplace.

First, all students had to write their own letter of application and type up a CV.

They went through interviews and crossed their fingers in the hope of receiving a letter which told them they had the job.

When Tasmin Tyrrell, working at IJS, was asked if she enjoyed work experience, she very keenly said: "Yes! I received a purple heart from a little girl. It was so sweet!"

All students confidently said that all the employees at the work placements had been very welcoming, respectful and seemed eager to teach.

Work experience includes many different tasks for different jobs, from cooking to being responsible for children. This was a great opportunity to learn various skills.

"Patience is a skill I have thoroughly learned here," said Bethen Parker, working at IJS.

Jean Robello, working at the Malvina House Hotel, said: "I have learned lots of cooking styles - I can chop a carrot so fast now!"

Tasks can also vary within one job opportunity.

Emilia Amey-McNab, working at FIRS, said: "I do loads of different things. I sometimes do editing, interviewing or work at the front desk. This will benefit me in the future if I ever work with media because I can be confident that I have the experience."

This was also a good opportunity to base decisions on future careers.

Dani Curtis, working in the Malvina, said: "This is a job I could get into."

These skills can benefit all students for the future, such as being able to react faster in different situations, and how to interact with other employees.

It's strange being in the staff room, working with the teachers that used to teach me," Kieran Watt said, followed by many nods from other IJS work experience students.

Dani Gordon, also at IJS, said: "I can now be better with kids and handle the different situations."

As for myself, I spent my week at the Penguin News, where I have really enjoyed my time here for various different reasons.

The employees were lovely to me and were very welcoming.

This job was brilliant for me because instead of being in the office the whole time I got to go out and do reporting, take pictures, and I was given my own special project about the Sea Cadets.

It is so rewarding just to see one of my pictures in the Penguin News, so when I learned that I would be doing an article in the Penguin News I was ecstatic (I know my Grandma will be too when she reads it!)

I have loved my time here so much that I have given the Penguin News workers a big box of chocolate biscuits. Thank you for a wonderful experience, I will never forget my lovely time here.

This has definitely been a positive experience.

Jigger master and owner fined

THE master of the Taiwanese jigger Hsiang Ching, Lin Yi Ming, appeared in the Magistrate's Court on Friday and admitted failing to maintain records of fishing effort and catch in the required form, amounting to a breach of a condition of his fishing licence.

James Patterson, Acting Crown Counsel, told the Court that Fisheries Officers had boarded the vessel on April 12 and asked to inspect the fishing log books.

Those log books for February and April were blank, and the master completed the log for March in their presence. Keith Watson, defending, said his client meant to fill out the official logs from rough records he had made, but was prevented from doing so by weather and work commitments.

Senior Magistrate John Trevaskis gave the defendant credit for his guilty plea, but noted there had been a protracted failure to complete the records, despite the defendant having fished in these waters in previous seasons.

He said the Fisheries (Conservation & Management) Ordinance required any sentence to reflect the difficulties in enforcing such regulations, and the need for a deterrent element.

He also said the effective management of the fishery required the honest completion of records of effort and catch, particularly where a refund of licence fee may have to be considered. He fined the master £3,000 and ordered him to pay £100 costs.

Also before the court for being concerned in the commission of the same offence was the owner of the vessel, Hsiang Ching Marine Company Ltd, of Taiwan. The company admitted the breach of licence condition through its advocate, Keith Watson, and was also fined £3,000 and ordered to pay £85 costs.

Five hit by food poisoning bug

AT least five people have become victims of food poisoning over the past week, prompting Chief Medical Officer Roger Diggle to issue a cautionary note of warning – particularly to those handling food-stuffs at work.

Dr Diggle said four adults and one child had been reported suffering from salmonella, although none of them had become seriously ill or required treatment.

Most salmonella infections are caused through eating contaminated food, with chicken and egg products often the most common, but treatment with antibiotics can increase the risk of a patient becoming a permanent carrier. Stomach pains, diarrhoea and a mild fever are common symptoms, and the infection usually clears up of its own accord over a few days.

However, a number of people also are suffering a strain of viral gastroenteritis, whose symptoms are more severe, but usually last no more than a day or two.

"Viral gastroenteritis also produces vomiting and diarrhoea," Dr Diggle told FRS. "But the most noticeable feature is that you start off very suddenly with a high temperature, aching all over, and get a bout of vomiting and diarrhoea, which lasts from 18 to 24, maybe 36 hours, and then gets better.

"Salmonella, while not quite so dramatic in its onset, goes on for longer."

But he emphasised there was no cause for alarm: "At the moment there is no need for the public to panic about this," he said. "The key thing is scrupulous hand washing and, as long as you are good at doing that, salmonella is easily killed by soap and water."

He said if people were concerned they were suffering from persistent diarrhoea, they should go to the hospital to have their faeces tested, and they would know within 24 hours if they had salmonella or not.

"The only people who ought to be concerned – and they always ought to be – are food handlers at work," he said. A source of the outbreak has not been found.

Cocaine case prisoners sent home as free men

THE two Spanish seamen who had the dubious honour of being the first occupants of the cells in the new police station extension have had their sentences remitted and been deported from the Islands.

Rogelio Curras Pastoriza (42) and Jesus Carballo Martinez (26), both fishermen from Cangas in Galicia and formerly among the crew of the Falklands registered vessel Venturer, were sentenced to imprisonment in the first week of April 2009 by Senior Magistrate John Trevaskis for "the unauthorised importation into the Falklands of an unspecified quantity of a controlled drug, namely cocaine."

Mr Curras, who was sentenced to five years imprisonment on the drug-related charge, was also sentenced to a further 16 months imprisonment for burglary.

This last sentence was related to the disappearance of 23 kilo bags of cocaine from the police cell in which it was guarded. The original gross weight of the 30 packets of cocaine seized on the ship was around 30 kilos.

Mr Carballo was sentenced to seven years imprisonment for his part in the importation of the cocaine, but this was reduced to four years and eight months in acknowledgement of his early plea of guilty.

In the cases of both men, the sentences were to run from the date in October 2008 when they were taken into custody and it was hoped that it could have been possible for them to spend the bulk of their prison time in Spain.

The two men were released after making a successful application to the Governor to exercise the prerogative of mercy to remit the remainder of their sentences of imprisonment. Having received advice from the Advisory Committee on the Prerogative of Mercy, as required under section 71 of the Constitution, the Governor remitted the two sentences with effect from the second anniversary of the date of sentence.

Both men had served almost two and half years imprisonment when time spent on remand in custody was included.

The two men were made subjects of Deportation Orders, by His Excellency the Governor, following a recommendation by the Principal Immigration Officer and due process. The date of deportation and remission of sentences were timed to coincide with each other, and they were sent home on April 9.

Argentina's post-war leader Bignone handed life sentence

THE Argentine military officer installed as de facto president following the Falklands War has been sentenced to life in prison over human rights violations committed during the country's last military dictatorship.

General Reynaldo Bignone was found guilty for his involvement in illegal imprisonments, torture and disappearances.

Bignone had already been sentenced to 25 years in jail last year for kidnappings and torture that occurred at the Argentine's Army main base, Campo de Mayo, where an estimated 5,000 people were deprived of liberty, forcibly interrogated or tortured during the seven-year military rule from

Reynaldo Bignone

1976-1983. The Argentine military Junta nominated Bignone de facto president following the resignation of the three members – Galtieri, Anaya and Lami Dozo – considered responsible for the defeat in the Falklands of the Argentine invading forces. Eighteen months after the war, Bignone handed over office to Argentina's first democratically elected president since 1973, Raul Alfonsín.

Besides Bignone, the court also sentenced to life in prison the former Mayor of Escobar Luis Abelardo Patti, the former head of Campo de Mayo's Military Institutes of Commando units and Argentine ambassador in Uruguay in the eighties, Santiago Omar Riveros, and the ex-officer of the intelligence unit of the Army First Corps, Martín Rodríguez. Escobar's former Sheriff Juan Fernando Meneghini was sentenced to six years in prison.

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Ya Peat.

Like you, I wouldn't wish anybody ill health, so I do hope Tina Kitchen gets better soon.

Do you think it's just a rumour that she overdosed on "Lady Grecian"?

My view is that at her "ayge" (by the way that's Billy Waggleddagger's spelling of the word in his well known play "Omelette") she should think about slowing down, maybe taking up a bit of knitting while sipping on her "Mate."

Also on a Latino line I see that things really do go better on coke: the two Spanish importers have been exported!

Does it really send the right signals to other potential smugglers?

Maybe keeping them for the full stretch was expensive and seen as more "down the drain!"

I apologise for misleading you about a massage parlour over at Backside Farm.

It's not true, but all the other stuff has a sniff of something going on. I read about it on "Benileaks."

How strange that the FI "Wheel-ree" Development Corp is thinking of setting up a new business in direct competition to a "Biz" they already set up!

And what a hoot that there's still talk of "Harriet" being the new port. It's a red herring!

Look at all the infrastructure including the Golden Hole around and beyond FIPASS.

Are you waiting for the PAC Dairy report? Will it be Whole and not Semi-Skimmed? I bet you can't wait for it to be "Past your eyes!"

I disagree with you and wish her Majesty a Happy Birthday, and also think it's a great honour that someone is going to represent the Islands at Bill and Kate's wedding next week.

Shazza will be fine, but just think about it, if they had chosen Groovy Gav there wouldn't have been the expense of a new hat!

I told you and I checked it out on the web so it must be true: if 17,3550,432 people died, then according to my family history I would be Queen.

So I still think my invite is in the post somewhere and only hope there's a fat boy seat available at short notice on Panini Air Ways.

Invincible's end is sad testimony

THE Defence Ministry is busy with Operation Ellamy, dealing with Libya, as well as Operation Herrick, in Afghanistan, let alone affairs of concern to Islanders some 8,000 miles from the UK, and the country is rightly behind its armed forces thus engaged.

It is nevertheless unwise to ignore some of the flawed decisions the UK Government took last October in the defence review.

The Public Accounts Committee, in early March, established that the real cost of each one of the 160 Typhoon aircraft ordered by the RAF, the prototype of which flew in 1994, is £126m. Some 65 have been delivered, and 95 are still to come, but no one knows why we need 160 of these aircraft that cost £1bn for eight.

The utility of an aircraft carrier, for operations off Libya, let alone for a range of other tasks, is obvious. So obvious that even the RAF, and retired air marshals, acknowledge that a no-fly zone off north Africa is best policed by carrier-borne aircraft.

The US, French and Italians have aircraft carriers in the area. Even Britain has quietly arranged for one to be in the Mediterranean since April Fool's Day - HMS Invincible has now passed The Rock as she is towed to Turkey and the scrapyard, but she is an empty vessel and characterises this government's vacuous approach to maritime affairs and defence. Yet the RAF advised the government, last autumn, that its land-based aircraft could carry out all future tasks were there no aircraft carrier.

Why the government listened to such nonsense is hard to understand. When one learns that HMS Ark Royal and the Harriers could be run on for four years, at a total cost of £402m - less than the cost of four Typhoon jets - it is clear that the government was well and truly duped by the Brylcreem boys in Whitehall.

The cost of the operations off Libya would be significantly less were HMS Ark Royal and her Harriers off the coast now. No 3,000-mile round trips by some seven aircraft, for the first strike, at a cost approaching £1m.

No comparable failure to fly, as the Harrier is newer than the Tornado and a much more reliable aircraft; of the nine Tornado aircraft intended for use in the first strike from RAF Marham, only three were serviceable.

No 160 RAF personnel in hotels in southern Italy at a cost of some £10,000 a day - bunks are free in a carrier. That £1m first strike contributed three missiles to some 112 others fired, the same day, from submarines and ships off the coast. These are the tactics of despair, comparable to the useless Vulcan bomber strike on Port Stanley in 1982.

The daft decisions of the SDSR are manifold. The RFA landing ship dock Largs Bay, commissioned four years ago, is now for sale. She provided great utility for the UK and was in the news when delivering aid to earthquake-stricken Haiti. How quickly the bean counters in Whitehall forget.

A parliamentary answer shows that RFA Largs Bay cost £9.5m to run in a year. The RAF display team, the Red Arrows, costs £9.35m to run, yet it has no front-line military purpose and is quite useless when it comes to delivering humanitarian aid.

But we keep the Red Arrows and RFA Largs Bay will be sold to some lucky foreign navy. With decisions like these made last October, the government would be guilty of dissembling were it not to respond to the increasing clamour for a review of the defence review.

I don't blame ministers entirely, but they do need to be very careful as to the advice they heed from partisan advisers.

Fortunately, though partisan I am insofar as maritime Britain is concerned, the figures here just speak for themselves. Mr Cameron must review the defence review now.

Why truth and courage deserves to overcome

FAKLAND Islanders know about generosity, as the response to recent needs in Haiti, Chile, New Zealand and Japan has shown.

And they regularly support worthy local causes and discretely and kindly care for each other as friends and family.

Such goodness contrasts encouragingly with events that evince the darker side of human nature.

Who is not weary of suicide bombings, national-scale corruption, appalling abuse of vulnerable children, and the violence and oppression of illegitimate regimes?

But, truth to tell, mysteriously and lamentably, the fault-line between the generous and the mean-spirited, between the good and the wicked, runs through the centre of each one of us - doesn't it?

But consider the following: this week, Christians will journey in heart and mind with Jesus of Nazareth, a man for whom three intense years of public life appeared to culminate in failure.

He was betrayed by a friend. He was violently and unjustly treated by corrupt authorities. And he was condemned by those who should have been foremost in displaying the goodness of the God whom Jesus himself claimed to represent.

Indeed, on reading the closing chapters of the four Gospels, one is drawn into a familiar human drama - the meeting of truthfulness and moral courage, with aggression, spite, hatred and fear.

And, in each heart-wrenching scene, it is as though something malevolent is seeking to crush and snuff out the searching light and sheer goodness it cannot bear.

But consider this, as well: Christians will also, on Easter Day, celebrate what they believe was God's answer to the worst which evil can do. The implications of Jesus' empty tomb, and of his being made alive again, are still (they claim) being experienced and explored today - including here in the Falkland Islands.

Moreover, this energising experience prompts Christians to pray that God's evil-defeating, life-creating generosity might provide the bedrock for us everywhere in these Islands.

This, they feel sure, would inspire yet more Falkland Islander goodness - and the grit and perseverance needed for testing times.

The Islanders of Santa Cruz, and the Affair of the Map unfolded

Peter Pepper has dedicated years to researching the often convoluted history of this part of the world. Here he corrects some errors he found in a recent PN reader's letter...

MUCH as I like Mr Whitney's modern views on the Falklands dispute in his letter in the Penguin News (March 18), he did not get all the history right.

He says that in 1876 the Chileans "killed some French settlers claiming that they were trespassing on Chilean sovereign land," but that is untrue. There was a French settler family on the Santa Cruz River in the 1870s with a concession from Argentina, but the Chileans did not kill any French settlers there, neither in 1876 when they seized a French ship, the Jeanne Amélie, nor later when they seized an American ship.

The Jeanne Amélie was wrecked while being towed to Punta Arenas, but there are no reports of any loss of life, and in any case the Jeanne Amélie had been loading guano, not bringing settlers. The sovereignty of Patagonia had already been under discussion for several years by then, so the Chilean seizure of the Jeanne Amélie caused considerable Argentine annoyance.

Chile's seizure of an American ship, the Devonshire, on the Santa Cruz River in 1878 made the situation a lot worse, and Mr Whitney is right to see these two events as the trigger for Argentine action. The Devonshire, like the Jeanne Amélie, was seized for loading guano without a permit from Chile, and its seizure is now referred to as the "Devonshire Incident."

Mr Whitney is also wrong in saying that Minister of War Julio Roca's army "did not even control the land south of Azul, just 200 kilometres from Buenos Aires." Roca did control land much further south than Azul at that time. Argentine control in 1878 extended to the Zanja de Alsina, the great ditch and bank barrier with regular forts that ran from near Bahía Blanca to the north-west.

This had been built to keep the Indians living further south from attacking northwards into what is now the Province of Buenos Aires – territory from which they had been driven by Argentine settlers. And in 1878 Roca's armies were gearing up for the great campaign the following year that would eventually exterminate the Indians right down to the Rio Negro.

Mr Whitney implies that Julio Roca was at a loss over what to do about the "Devonshire Incident," but that was not the case; it was simply the last straw and gave him the excuse he needed to act. Roca (obviously with President Avellaneda's approval) promptly sent a naval task force to occupy what is now Puerto de Santa Cruz, at the mouth of the Santa Cruz River, to put a stop to Chilean activities there. And the Chileans could do nothing about this because of the deteriorating situation around Antofagasta – they couldn't risk a fight on two fronts at the same time.

This was just as well; events at Antofagasta did indeed explode into the War of the Pacific just four months later. So, Julio Roca's task force, commanded by Comodoro Py, arrived at Puerto de Santa Cruz on December 1 1878, without any opposition from Chile, and this date is celebrated there every year. There are several monuments commemorating it in the town. Several years later, in 1884, four years after Julio Roca himself became president, he appointed Carlos Moyano to be Governor of Santa Cruz. There is a good section about him in the recently-published Dictionary of Falklands Biography.

Moyano went to the Falklands in January 1885, and left again on March 11 with 600 sheep and 15 originally Scottish shepherds, some with their families born in the Falklands, whom he had invited to settle in Santa Cruz. As Mr Whitney says, he himself is descended from that group.

Roca and Moyano probably wanted settlers who were used to the rigours of the Patagonian climate and knew about sheep ranching. Such people would certainly have helped to keep Chilean settlers out, just by occupying the land, and that was very probably Roca's intention. Mr Whitney asserts that Roca intended that British forces from the Falklands would protect the Falklands settlers in Santa Cruz against any renewed military activity by the Chileans, but there is no evidence that Roca thought along those lines.

In any case, there was little risk of this by then, since Chile had ceded its claim to Patagonia in the 1881 boundary treaty with Argentina – probably to keep Argentina out of the War of the Pacific. So it cannot be true either that Roca's wish for Falkland Islander settlers in Santa Cruz was an admission of Britain's sovereignty in the Falklands. It was in fact in 1884, the year before Moyano went to the Falklands, that Argentina attempted to revive its claim to the Falklands. And it's just conceivable that Roca wanted to foster links with the Falklands because of this renewed claim.

Dr Graham Pascoe and I believe that the Argentine takeover of Patagonia encouraged the sons of Louis Vernet to press their case for compensation for the loss of their father's concession in the Falklands. There was a debate about this in Argentina's Chamber of Deputies on May 19 1879.

We believe it was this activity by Vernet's sons, plus Roca's expansionist policies and Argentina's possession of the mainland opposite, that ultimately led to this revival of the Argentine claim to the Falklands, which had been dropped by the Convention of Settlement in 1850.

This revival process began in January 1884 with a renewal of the claim against the USA for compensation for the Lexington raid, and was mooted privately to the British Ambassador in Buenos Aires later that year.

It finally went public with the so-called "Affair of the Map," when there was a report in the newspaper El Nacional on December 8 1884 that a new map was about to be published which would include the Falklands as Argentine territory.

Britain protested against the map on December 26 1884 and, on May 6 1885, the Argentine government accepted that the new map would have no official character. But several private diplomatic letters were subsequently exchanged which served to revive the subject, and Argentina's claim became important from the late 1930s onwards.

After hundreds of years, so near and yet so far

IT is interesting to note how similar the events are that led to Argentine sovereignty over Patagonia in 1878, and Britain's re-assertion of its sovereignty over the Falklands 45 years earlier in 1833.

In both cases a French settler had been given a concession by Argentina in disputed territory, which had in effect put Argentine sovereignty to the test.

In the Falklands it was Vernet, while on the Santa Cruz River it was the Rouquaud family.

In both cases action by one claimant to the territory was precipitated by the seizure of American vessels by another claimant.

In the Falklands it was Vernet's seizure of three American sealing vessels, particularly the Harriet, which Vernet took to Buenos Aires in November 1831.

At the Santa Cruz River, it was the arrest of the Devonshire by the Chilean warship Magallanes for loading guano without a licence from Chile – it had one from Argentina.

The Harriet was seized for taking seals in defiance of the prohibition on this by Vernet, whose authority came from Argentina, and who wanted to restrict sealing to himself. But in both cases the requirement for a licence or permission from an authority of any kind was new, and stemmed from recently advanced territorial claims.

Ships had been loading guano in Patagonia for years without licences from anyone, and the Americans had been sealing, without the slightest restriction, in the Falklands since before independence from Britain.

There are, of course, differences.

In the Falklands the seizure of the Harriet led to the raid by the USS Lexington, which in turn forced Britain to act to preserve its sovereign rights. On the Santa Cruz River the Argentines occupied what is now Puerto de Santa Cruz straight away, and then the entire Atlantic coast of Patagonia.

As for the Chileans, they lost their claim to Patagonia, but won the War of the Pacific, and with it the territory that makes up Northern Chile today, leaving Bolivia landlocked.

But similarities return here once again – just as Argentina revived its claim to the Falklands, so Bolivia revived its claim for an outlet to the sea, which it had lost together with the Antofagasta area.

Both claims are being actively pursued today.

Yachtswoman reveals astonishing ambition during Stanley stopover

JEANNE Socrates only began seafaring at the age of 51 and now, describing herself as well in to her sixties, she is en route to complete a solo circumnavigation of the world.

We met up with her at FIPASS during her Stanley stopover, and she explained the tragic loss of her husband to cancer inspired her to sell her home in West Ealing, London, and take to the seas raising money for the Marie Curie Cancer Care charity along the way.

Her first two attempts at circumnavigation were unsuccessful, her first attempt falling just 60 miles short of her target port.

Due to what she suspects was a low battery on a piece of electronics she awoke from a 45-minute power nap to discover the auto pilot had directed her yacht, Nereida, to the beach on the surfing coast of Mexico.

Undeterred, but with no available resources to recover her yacht from the sand to the sea, she had to abandon ship and purchase another.

The slightly larger and faster Nereida, the name of a handmaiden of Poseidon, took her to Cape Town from where she started, and hopes to soon complete her first solo circumnavigation.

Jeanne was aiming for a non-stop round the world trip after her two previous attempts. It was all going well after sailing through the Tasman Sea off Australia and New Zealand, and then passing by Hawaii and up to Canada.

Her route saw her move down the coasts of the Americas but, after 72 days at sea, Jeanne was "knocked down" by a tremendous wave 100 miles west of Cape Horn. This accident cost her dearly and the extensive structural damage caused a two month stop in the harbour of Ushuaia waiting for parts. "I had to stop," she said. "I was in pieces."

Jeanne Socrates on board Nereida at FIPASS

When asked why she did not travel through the Panama Canal to avoid the tempestuous waters of the Southern Cape she said very matter-of-factly:

"That is not a solo circumnavigation." She said it would take a crew of five to operate the canals keys and locks.

Jeanne was initially going to miss out the Falklands, knowledgeable of the changing weather of this region, but she was very glad she took the advice of the crew of RRS Ernest Shackleton and changed her route.

"Everyone spoke of the weather but no one told me of the wildlife," she said.

"Tony Smith took me out to Volunteer Point to see the Penguins. It's just a pity I could not get to the West. I hear it is beautiful too."

South Africa bound and sorry to leave, Jeanne and Nereida left FIPASS on April 4 minus one Peruvian pink beanie, accidentally left in a Rover generously offering her a ride into town.

Jeanne is anxious to get the memento back and asks if it is stumbled upon could the hat be passed on to the Seamen's Mission who have offered to forward it.

You can follow Nereida's progress on Jeanne's website www.synereida.com. It also has a daffodil link for donations to the Marie Curie foundation.

Jimmy does a runner, going nowhere in a hurry Cleo and Ruby admire Shania's impressive trout

What a £otta fun, what a £otta fishy fundraising

AN informal gathering of fishing enthusiasts which has blossomed into an annual fundraiser, this year's CoSta £otta Fishing Competition attracted three dozen participants who raised an astonishing £1,339.

Hosted by Derek and Trudi Pettersson at their cabin at Port Sussex earlier this month, the fishing started at 11.40am on a falling tide, and soon people were catching trout and mullet.

Fortunately the weather was quite nice for the first hour or so, but then turned quite wet, which saw all but the most dedicated fishers legging it for the warmth, shelter (and probably the booze) of the cabin where a wood burning stove was generating a nice heat.

Michael Goodwin managed to land an impressive 7½ lb mullet, which went on to win him the trophy for the largest single fish on the day. It also bagged him the under 17s trophy, although Shania Shepherd was close on his heels after landing a nice trout.

The trophy for the most weight of fish caught on the day went to Turpin Ford, and he did not even have to fill them with grit this year to ensure he won!

Trudi Pettersson caught the biggest trout, winning the Derek Millar Memorial Trophy with a 3lb 4oz fish.

Everyone then all piled into the cabin extension where Derek and Trudi had laid on an impressive spread of cold meats, sausage rolls, empanadas and salads, followed by trifles, jellies, cakes and teaberry pavlovas. After everyone was sufficiently fed and had consumed enough alcohol to loosen their purse strings, they got down to the serious business of fund raising. Derek auctioned four photographs he had printed onto canvas and an impressive £385 was raised.

He also auctioned his Commonwealth Games jacket from Delhi which Neville Hayward bought although, being a Leeds supporter, he vowed he would not be wearing it as he wouldn't be seen dead in red!

Angela Moffatt felt sorry for Ted Jones when his favourite hat went under the hammer, and paid handsomely to save it from being burned or worse.

She also gave generously for a picture drawn especially for the occasion by Cleo Jones.

Neville very kindly donated a brand new fishing rod and reel, and everyone paid £5 to have their names entered into a draw with the lucky winner being Bonita Goodwin.

As the evening wore on, more ideas were dreamed up to raise funds. People were egging each other on to jump on the trampoline, pledging various amounts of money. There were some impressive performances and some not so impressive ones.

Let's just say Garry Tyrrell should have a good collection of bruises, and don't get Gene Berntsen to show you how to get off a trampoline!

Back indoors Jimmy Moffatt produced his guitar and pledges were made to hear songs, and penalties imposed for not taking part in the singing or for singing the wrong words.

But the piece de resistance of the evening was when Neville announced that if £300 was pledged he would have his head shaved.

His wife Pauline kindly started the ball rolling by pledging £50, and in no time the target was reached, as Neville's shiny dome will testify.

A great time was had by all, and the magnificent sum of £1339.08 was raised, split evenly between the Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund and the Cancer Support and Awareness Trust.

Derek and Trudi would like to say a huge thank you to everyone who came to the competition, including all who helped provide food and drink, and most especially for giving so generously to two worthwhile causes.

Farmers on a high price roll

HOT on the heels of news that sheep numbers at the Sand Bay Abattoir are at the highest ever, providing increased returns for farmers, Robert Hall of wool agents Falkland Wool Growers Ltd reports that wool prices have also substantially improved this season.

UK prices for 25 micron combing fleece wool are 640 pence per kilo in 2011, compared to 390 pence per kilo in 2010 and 208 pence per kilo in 2001, he told Mercopress reporter Lisa Watson last week.

Falkland Wool Growers are obtaining the highest ever gross prices. However, on a cautionary note, Mr Hall said: "Bear in mind the greatly increased costs and inflation faced by farmers over the last few decades."

For the less farming orientated among us, microns and per kilo prices mean little. Putting it into pounds and pence, a farm producing between 25-30,000 kilos of wool of an average micron of 25-26 could receive a gross income of up to £200,000.

Just one 25 micron fleece of 3.5 kilos could be worth £22 to the farmer.

Based on current statistics farms would need to have about 7,000 wool producing sheep to reach these heady incomes, and unfortunately the average farm size is less than this. However, with income boosted with the higher prices offered by the abattoir, along with financial and technical assistance from the Department of Agriculture, the future looks bright for Falkland farmers.

Mr Hall said: "There has been tremendous demand from some specialty customers requiring high yielding, low vegetable matter fleece wool in the mid-microns. Generally prices are fairly close to those achieved in Australia.

"Causes are three fold: reduced supplies, good demand especially from the Far East, and competing fibres (natural and man-made) have greatly increased in value over the last 18 months."

Falklands wool has substantially declined in volume over the last 15 years, he said.

"However, improvements through importations of sheep genetics and sheep breeding and selection have made the Falklands clip significantly finer. Top quality fleece preparation and classing ensures that Falkland Islands wool is a world class product." PN/MP

Policy to be reviewed on shooting of problem birds

WHILE some modifications to the government's policy on licensing farmers to shoot turkey vultures and southern crested caracaras, or caranchos, are to be recommended to Executive Council, the policy with regard to the shooting of striated caracaras, or johnny rooks, should remain the same, the Environmental Committee decided at its meeting last week.

These decisions came in the light of two recent reports submitted to FIG.

Brandon Breen's report on his studies in 2008 and 2009 of conflict between humans and turkey vultures, and Falkland Conservation's Darwin Project funded report on the relationship between farmers and raptors, particularly the southern crested caracara, were those referred to.

Breen's study, which involved extensive interviews with farmers, concluded that the latter did not consider turkey vultures to be a major threat to livestock, but suggested that turkey vulture policy should be modified to allow each farm to remove as many as ten turkey vultures per year seen in the act of threatening viable sheep, on the condition that these removals should be made part of the farm's annual report of stock numbers and movements to the Department of Agriculture.

However, Breen's recommendation to allow farmers to shoot up to ten turkey vultures without licence was rejected by the group which advises the Environmental Planning Officer on relevant applications.

With 90 independent farms in the Islands, this could result in 900 turkey vultures – or between 25 per cent and 47 per cent of the total estimated number of vultures in the Islands – being shot per annum outside the formal licensing procedure.

A total of 97 birds were shot under licence last year.

Some alteration of the current policy was recommended to reflect farmer concerns by making the allocation of licences more flexible.

Where a licence had been previously issued for a proven and ongoing problem, it could be made possible for licences to be issued with a minimum of formalities, prior to vultures or crested caracaras causing damage to animals.

This would allow farmers to shoot a small number of problem birds immediately, without being delayed by the need to complete paperwork and receive consent.

Following agreement of the Environmental Committee's recommendations by ExCo, the Environmental Officer intends to produce an article for the Wool Press outlining the research undertaken and the revised policy on issuing licenses for the shooting of turkey vultures and southern crested caracaras.

Howe happy with display

FUNDED by the Shackleton Scholarship, Adam Howe is displaying works at Studio 52 of his recent trip to South Georgia on the Pharos.

The keen photographer, already locally renowned for his work, was inspired by imagery of Hamish Jennings and Bill Richards to utilise similar routes to evoke nostalgic views, in a portfolio he titled "Familiarity in a foreign landscape."

He said South Georgia had always been a place of intrigue since listening to his grandfather talk so passionately about the island.

Response from the public so far has been excellent, with plenty of admiration for his scenes as well as his commitment to theme. The works are on display at Studio 52 for about one more week.

SOME weeks ago Penguin News was invited aboard what we were told was one of the largest things moving on the face of the earth.

Taking up the invitation and approaching the seismic vessel Polarcus Nadia in a launch, it certainly appeared huge, but not as big, for example, as any of the larger cruise ships that come to the Falklands during the summer.

What I was seeing, however, equated in agricultural terms merely to a tractor. The "tractor" that this remarkable "tractor" pulls is what makes the size of the whole thing gargantuan, namely a network of technology-laden cables and gadgets that can be over a kilometre across and ten kilometres long.

If not looking quite as huge as expected, viewed from the water, its unconventional upside-down bow makes it look like one of the strangest vessels ever to be seen in the Falklands.

Down-turned like the beak of a carancho, the patented X-BOW[®] is a backward-sloping bow that starts at the extreme front of the vessel.

Rather than pressing down on the water with increased force like a conventional bow, this sharp bow smoothly divides both waves and calm water, reducing pitching and subsequent slamming.

Among benefits to crew comfort and safety, this allows high top speeds, low resistance and reduced fuel consumption.

This is explained to me by Captain Hans Brekke, a Norwegian who occupies the pinnacle of the ship's hierarchy. Not only is he responsible for his ship, but also by law responsible for the safety and well being of everyone aboard.

At present, Captain Brekke explains there are only some 45 souls aboard, in an equal split between marine and seismic personnel.

The marine faction are the engineers, officers, chefs, stewards, etc, while the seismic crew comprises the geophysicists, technicians and mechanics. Of course, the chefs serve both groups and cheerfully provide four hot meals every day for the people of a dozen or so different nationalities represented on board.

If all this responsibility weighs Captain Brekke down it doesn't appear in his demeanour as he begins to demonstrate the workings of the five separate positioning systems on the ship, operating a similar number of thrusters, all of which can be controlled by the sort of joystick you can find in a video game arcade.

I suggest to Captain Brekke that the ship could be driven by any computer savvy nine-year old.

While I was on the bridge talking to Captain Brekke an emergency arose: it seemed that some kind of essential supplies which were expected to have arrived from Dubai had been delayed and their absence would lead to rationing. Calmly the Captain made a phone call and, by the time I stepped off the ship onto the waiting launch, I had to avoid a mountain of packets of washing powder, obviously obtained from one of Stanley's supermarkets, waiting to be put aboard. The emergency was over!

I imagine that the soap powder was non-biological because, as Captain Brekke explained, the Polarcus Nadia works to a meticulous set of industry specific criteria to ensure that the natural environment is not impacted by its operations.

This "green" consciousness appears to be taken very seriously. Not only does the ship have exhaust catalysts, systems for cleaning both bilge and ballast water, but it also employs a number of recycling initiatives, down to the requirement to use both sides of every sheet of paper.

The Polarcus Nadia is also double-hulled, thus minimising the danger of any kind of spillage in the event of a collision.

Steve Hughes, who carries the somewhat misleading title of Party Manager, is the man in charge of seismic operations, which are the ship's raison d'être. Despite having just arrived after a 40-hour journey from his home in Canada, he was kind enough to give me a tour and explain it all.

As set up for work in Falklands waters, as specified by the ship's clients Rockhopper Exploration and Desire Petroleum, the Nadia surveys a grid, travelling at a speed of 4.5 knots along a straight line, usually about 40km in length, releasing a high pressure air energy charge, typically every 25m. Positioning accuracy is established through the use of differential GPS.

This charge is targeted at the seabed structure, and the sound reflection is recorded by hydrophones, thousands of which are located in eight towed electronic cables, each of which is five kilometres in length.

These cables are towed behind the vessel, with a lateral separation of 100m between each, so the total area covered by the towed equipment is approximately 5kms in length by 1km in width.

The equipment positioning is maintained by depth-seeking devices attached to the cables, and is confirmed by acoustic transducers, which measure the distance between the cables.

All of this data is fed back to the recording and positioning systems onboard, so the accuracy of the surveying is known to within less than five metres. When interpreted by analysts, the data acquired from these recordings displays the seabed structure, and confirms areas of interest for possible further exploration. The Polarcus Nadia's most recent return to Stanley was ten days ago.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that in the event of an emergency where no other form of communication are available, that the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the following frequencies.

VHF 2 metre Band

147.725 (Duplex - 0.6).....Mount Caroline repeater, covering the north of the West Falkland including the cross sound ferry main operational area

146.625.....Stanley to Mount Alice

147.825 (Duplex - 0.6).....Mount Alice repeater, covering the south of West Falkland.

Marine Band

156.800.....Channel 16 (Stanley area)

2.182 MHz HF

In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFI may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

It must be stressed that calling the Royal Falkland Islands Police on any of these frequencies must only be done in the event of an emergency

Department of Agriculture Wool Market Report
14th April, 2011

Tony Mills Department of Agriculture, Falkland Islands

With the EMI (1352 AU c/kg or 866 GBP p/kg) closing lower again for consecutive sales we can say with a little more confidence that the peak may well have been reached. Time will tell whether this is a permanent downwards trend but with only one sale to go until the Easter break it would be nice to think that stability will be the order of the day. It would seem that all categories were affected by the drop which analysts partly attribute to a poorer quality offering. The drop in quality was due to discolouration, coting and higher vegetable matter in fleece wools from the east. Locally sales are still occurring with mixed results. The majority of the coring has occurred which is bringing to a close a pretty positive year for increased wool cuts and high prices. However it is still worth remembering that its years like this that we go to try and repair some of the damage done by many years of lower prices.

The ability to export and market products in a worldwide market place is a necessity for many Falkland companies.

The Fortuna group is meeting this challenge, building on a strong base established with international partners and with investment in the expansion of the operation of 'Fortuna Seafoods'.

In addition to marketing the catches of group vessels we are offering to buy the catches of other vessels operating in the South West Atlantic, landing in Stanley.

Offers are ex vessel at Stanley quay (FIPASS).

We are happy to look at making offers for any catches available.

WATCH Group at the Long Island beach Christmas barbecue

Super season for WATCH Group

Groupers at Cape Pembroke after a day in the wild

Jessica, Harriett and Darby

THE 2010-11 WATCH Group season is cooling off with the weather, providing an opportunity to reflect on the summer's activities.

As the junior branch of Falklands Conservation, the WATCH Group's activities revolve around watching, and watching out for, nature in the Falklands.

This summer allowed for an extraordinary number of outdoor activities.

Staples of the WATCH Group calendar include a Christmas barbecue, this year hosted by Long Island Farm, and a full-group camping weekend at Elephant Beach Farm. WATCH Groupers are also familiar faces on the marathon route, providing refreshment and encouragement at each water station.

This year, other fun nature activities included a day learning about (and practising) camouflage at Cape Pembroke, and several trips aboard the B-Mar to view wildlife and watch for whales around Berkeley Sound.

A day in the area west of Gilbert House involved planting native plants and painting bins for future use as recycling containers at public events. A trip to Volunteer Point provided inspiration for members to create new signs to minimise harmful visitor-penguin interactions.

A highlight of every WATCH Group season is each member's small-group trip to Camp.

This summer, nine landowners opened their coastlines, their wildlife and often their houses to enthusiastic kids. The groups explored, cleaned beaches, went on boats, swam with dolphins, photographed caracaras, stargazed, barbecued, planted tussac, tidepooled and so much more.

WATCH Group activities will continue through the winter, with a day devoted to whales planned for April, and other activities following monthly.

WATCH Group relies heavily on the generosity of parents and volunteers, the kindness of landowners for hosting, the great lengths that FIGAS goes through to transport kids, and the continued sponsorship of the Standard Chartered Bank. Without this community support, these opportunities would not be possible.

MARRIAGE

March 5 Michelle East and Mike McKay

Mike and Michelle McKay were married by John Rowland at the Narrows Bar on Saturday March 5. The bride looked very elegant in a full length burgundy dress, complimented with an ivory bolero jacket and matching jewellery. She was escorted to the Narrows from her parents' house on Ross Road by her Mum and Dad, brother Kevin, Lisa and her own daughters Carly and Daisy, who made beautiful bridesmaids. Mike wore a dark suit and waited patiently as Michelle kept him waiting nearly 15 minutes. Their sons Shaun and Andrew looked very smart. The marriage was witnessed by Ingrid Jaffray and Leann Harris and was followed by an excellent hot carvery meal, champagne and drinks.

Laquisha Ellick and Theo Duncan

Karate trio earn their new colours

WELL done to the three students who recently successfully graded at the IJS hall: Theo Duncan (6) intermediate grade, orange/white stripe; Laquisha Ellick (7) intermediate grade, orange/white stripe; and Claudia Quiroga and her bump, 9th Kyu, orange belt.

Claudia began training in October and is currently six months pregnant, but the pregnancy has not stopped her from training regularly, and now she has successfully passed her first grade.

Shotokan Karate is a traditional style of karate, which practices controlled sparring, and is a sport for all ages to learn and enjoy.

The club hopes to welcome Chief Instructor Dave Wilkins and Instructor Lauren Frearson to the Islands, later this year.

We hope to have training sessions for all grades of students to enjoy, with a course, grading and competition. Dave and Lauren will also be offering karate or self-defence instruction within the wider community, including with the Rainbows.

If anyone would like to join the Karate Club, please come along to the IJS hall during training sessions on Tuesdays (5.15pm-7pm) and Fridays (5pm-6.30pm).

CLASSIFIED ADVERTS

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE: VACANCY

An opportunity has arisen for a member of the community to become involved in helping to ensure that FIG is delivering value-for-money to the residents of the Falkland Islands. Expressions of interest are sought from members of the public wishing to become a member of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC).

Under the Falkland Islands Constitution, the PAC comprises:

- (a) a chairman and two other members appointed by the Governor; and
- (b) two members of the Legislative Assembly.

The PAC currently has a vacancy for an "other member" under (a) above. The role involves six (or so) meetings per year, each lasting two hours, with an estimated time commitment of four hours per month for background reading and preparation. The role is unpaid but expenses are reimbursed. The appointment period will be until 31 January 2012 (in order to tie in with the appointment periods of the other, existing members).

The PAC has an important scrutiny role over the public accounts of all government departments and specified bodies. The PAC's task is to ensure that public funds have been expended properly, for the purposes for which they were voted by the Legislative Assembly. Hence the role is varied, complex and fascinating. Individuals appointed to the PAC make a significant contribution to the community, in helping to maintain high standards of public administration and good governance in the Falkland Islands. This calls for PAC members themselves to have the highest standards of personal integrity, discretion and commitment to the good governance of the Islands.

Applications should be submitted to the Governor by 30 April, setting out the reasons for the applicant's interest in appointment to the PAC and the skills and experience that the applicant would bring to the job.

Lift out today's royal wedding souvenir poster ...and stick it in your window!

Wedding party to feature six decades of bridal gowns

AT least thirty bridal gowns will be paraded before guests at tomorrow's community party to celebrate the Westminster wedding of Prince William and Kate Middleton.

The dresses have been sourced from weddings held over the past six decades – and some have seen duty more than once.

The earliest was first worn in 1958 but, although two of the original brides can still fit into their dresses, none will be wearing their own dresses on the day.

The "red carpet" parade of brides, grooms and page boys is just one of the many highlights lined up for the free ten-hour event, which kicks off at 10am at the FIDE Hall, and celebrates the biggest royal wedding since Charles and Diana's on July 29 1981.

Organiser Trish Jamieson has been gathering a small army of supporters over recent weeks to ensure the Falklands celebrates the big day – declared a public holiday by government – in right royal style.

As well as dances, games and giveaways, the wedding itself will be beamed into the hall on a big screen TV. Guests are asked to bring their own food, drink... and confetti. Raffle tickets also are selling well, and will be available for purchase at the party. Prizes include dinner for ten at Government House, and will be drawn every hour from 4pm onwards.

Meanwhile the soon-to-be royal couple – or at least life-size cardboard cut-outs of them – have been touring the Islands.

Photographs from their novelty walkabout, together with the party's guest list and full details of Friday's event, will be compiled into a journal to be lodged with the Museum as a permanent record, unlike previous royal weddings where details of celebrations in the Falklands are virtually non-existent.

The Pod Gift Shop has produced a range of wedding memorabilia, including mugs, cups, rulers and coasters, all priced at £5 or under, to be sold exclusively at the party. Susan Knipe and her team at Jac's Café also are producing icing images of the Kate and William – who was born exactly seven days after Liberation Day in 1982 – to decorate some of the teaberry cup cakes from which Heather Smith will be fashioning a celebratory tower.

Commercial premises seem to have been slow to respond to the suggestion that they should make special displays for the wedding, with the notable exception of Kandy Kabin in Philomel Street, whose windows are gloriously decked out.

In the UK, the Falklands will be represented at the royal wedding by Assembly Member Sharon Halford and her husband John. Sharon said John raised his eyebrows at the price tag on the first choice of hat, but a suitable, simple alternative was soon found to finish her three-piece cream suit with black accessories.

"The shops are full of it, as well as the TV, in the build up to the event," said Sharon.

In the Colchester area where she has been spending time with family, there is a lot of dressing up and street parties being planned.

"Everyone is very excited," she said.

Sharon and John are being picked up at 9am on Friday to be taken by coach to Westminster for the wedding ceremony, and afterwards will be transported to Lancaster House for a reception with Foreign Secretary William Hague.

For those looking for a more traditional weekend, the William and Kate cut-outs will be making the journey to North Arm on Friday, and will be welcomed at the club with much flag-waving before dancing gets underway.

The championship dog trials take place on Saturday morning, followed by a barbecue lunch and the Darwin Harbour Sports Association sweepstake draw at the Social Club, rounded off with a fancy dress dance.

FALKLAND ISLANDS

HAVING first made the acquaintance of MLA Glenn Ross when he was a schoolboy, I have long been impressed by his intelligence, but also aware of his quirky sense of humour. This sometimes makes knowing whether or not he is serious a difficult proposition.

So it was that when my computer's Google news alerts began to fill up with accounts of how Mr Ross was in Washington attending an energy storage conference and suggesting that excess energy created by our wind farm was going to be stored in the batteries of electric cars, my initial response was a bit mixed.

On the one hand, I wanted to congratulate him on headline-grabbing – something that we seriously need to do in these beleaguered days – but on the other hand I was inclined to dismiss as a piece of typical Ross humour the suggestion that a nation of diesel heads such as we are would ever be happy driving around in small silent cars with a top speed of 40mph and hardly enough oomph to get up Philomel Hill.

That such an idea seemed to be pure fantasy was fuelled by my memory of when, hoping to set an example of both environmental friendliness and economy, the Falkland Islands Development Corporation bought a diesel Ford Fiesta as the office run-about.

It was certainly economical, because nobody wanted to be seen dead in it if they could use any of the Corporation's more conventional gas-guzzlers in which to go to the Post Office or the Secretariat.

All this negativity, however, was dispelled over the long weekend when the normally high-octane and conservationist-hating TV programme, Top Gear, featured an all-electric Honda currently only available in California. This is fuelled by hydrogen, emits only water, has a much longer range than conventional battery-driven cars and a top speed of over 90mph.

"Way to go Mr Ross!" I shouted, particularly when I discovered that there is a whole range of hydrogen-driven cars being developed, and our excess green electricity could conceivably be used to make hydrogen from salt water, which we have lots of. It's almost too good to be true.

It wasn't made clear who is providing us with these electric vehicles, which tend to be a bit pricey at present... but could I please have a Nissan X-Trail?

ANZAC Day dawns

Mac and Felicity McArthur at the ANZAC Day dawn service

MONDAY morning saw members of Stanley's Australian and New Zealand communities, including children, gather before dawn at the Cross of Sacrifice for the annual ANZAC Day service to honour their countrymen and women who lost their lives in various conflicts.

Participants in the service, which followed tradition by beginning in darkness and ending with the rising of the sun, included Rev Richard Hines, who led the prayers, Steve Dent who read the ode to the fallen, and Paul Freer who played the Last Post. Governor Nigel Haywood laid a wreath and later hosted a breakfast at Government House.

FIC sales soar in record trading

THE Falkland Islands Company has returned record trading figures for the year ending March 31 with sales increasing by 21 per cent.

The FIC performance was stronger than anticipated, and boosted by the economic benefits of oil exploration activity in the Falklands, according to parent company Falkland Islands Holdings plc.

The FIH group also has kept faith with hydrocarbons exploration company Falkland Oil and Gas Limited, in which one of its subsidiary companies, Erebus Limited, owns 12 million ordinary shares at a market value of £10.8 million. Erebus has agreed not to dispose of any of its FOGL shares until the announcement by FOGL of the results of the wells drilled in this campaign, or May 31 2012, whichever is the earlier.

FIH Chairman David Hudd said the board expected underlying group pre-tax profits at a similar level to the £2.7 million reported for the previous year.

"Looking forward, FIC will continue to benefit from oil exploration around the Islands which should compensate for the more testing economic conditions impacting our UK businesses," he said.

August holiday stretched CONCERNS expressed by parents of Stanley schoolchildren about the length of this year's August holiday were addressed at the recent meeting of the Education Committee.

Assistant Director of Education Richard Fogerty assured Councillor Jan Cheek that the extra length of the holiday this year – close to four weeks – was as a result of the timing of the start of the new school year and did not mean that a week had been taken from the summer holidays as some people had supposed. Mr Fogerty explained that a number of factors are taken into account when planning for the school year, which had to contain 190 teaching days and five training days.

For example, the school year cannot start before September 1 and half terms had to be a full week in length. The idea of not breaking up too close or too far away from Christmas was also usually considered when setting term dates.

Former teachers join chorus of discontent over FICS post

PROTESTS by staff of the Community School seem to have been ignored or overridden by the Education Department's controversial decision to combine the post of Head Teacher at FICS with that of Deputy Director of Education.

At the April 5 meeting of the Education Committee, Director of Health and Education, David Jenkins confirmed Executive Council had approved the amalgamation of the posts of FICS Head Teacher and the Assistant Director of Education, although he said there had been some discontent among the FICS staff on the decision taken.

Hopes expressed at the same meeting that there would be a substantive Head for the school by January 2012 seem unlikely to be realised, as Mr Jenkins said the post had not yet been advertised and he was currently working on the job description.

Deputy Director of Education, Richard Fogerty, who has served the Education Department since the early 1970s, later confirmed to the Penguin News that the ExCo decision to combine his post with that of Head of FICS would cause him to become redundant in June of next year.

Mr Jenkins said the decision to amalgamate the two posts has been taken in the best interest of FICS, and that an "excellent" head teacher would be required to take FICS forward.

While currently serving teachers are prevented by the terms of their contracts from commenting publicly on Education Department matters, two former senior teachers at FICS were firm in their view that the post of Head Teacher should be a full-time one.

Long-serving art teacher Tim Simpson MBE, who retired from FICS in 2007, told the Penguin News she felt it was vital the school should have a full-time and fully committed head.

"I don't think a part-timer can contribute as much to the school as he or she should," she said.

This view was echoed by former science teacher Louise Taylor, who wrote: "The FICS needs good, strong leadership to bring it out of a now long-lasting period of disruption.

"I believe that a full-time head teacher is necessary to do this properly – the kind of person who meets and greets students, staff and visitors as they enter the school; someone who takes the time and trouble to get to know individuals, families and the community as a whole. I find it hard to envisage that this position can be successfully combined with the Assistant Director's role."

Call for Stanley Services to come under scrutiny

STANLEY Services should be the next government licensed monopoly to come under scrutiny by the Legislative Assembly, according to one of its members.

With the economy so dependent on the fishing fleet, and a potential oil industry in its infancy, the ability of ships serving the Falklands to receive fuel locally is vitally important.

Alleged recent problems with this supply prompted the first question put to MLAs at Tuesday's public meeting.

As the Falkland Islands Government is the major shareholder in Stanley Services Ltd (SSL), the company with a monopoly over the supply of oil to the Falklands, and also regulators of its performance under the terms of the contract which gives them that monopoly, Roger Spink asked councillors what conditions had been set to monitor the supply of bunkers to the fishing and oil industry, and whether those conditions were considered sufficient.

He also asked what monitoring of the bunkering service was done and whether councillors believed it should be done better.

Mr Spink told the Penguin News that over a number of years he had heard of a shortage of bunkers for both the fishing fleet and oil industry vessels, and he wanted to know whether government was aware of the extent of any such shortages.

Cllr Emma Edwards responded: "Overall FIG clearly recognises the key importance of the supply of bunkers to vessels and, for this reason, has a number of mechanisms in place.

"It is also planning in the near future to review the current arrangements with a view to determining if current regulatory mechanisms are appropriate."

After giving in some detail the conditions of the Fuel Supply Agreement entered into by SSL, as a precondition for the granting of its exclusive licence to import, market and supply fuel, and explaining how these obligations flowed down from SSL to Stanley Bunkers Ltd via a sub-contracting agreement, the government statement: "In terms of performance against these obligations, whilst there may be occasions whereby it is challenging to ensure that all reasonable bunker fuel demand is met, current levels of performance are considered to be good."

However, although compliance with the terms of the Fuel Supply Agreement is a legally binding requirement, and failure could result in a withdrawal of the licence, the strict monitoring of the domestic fuel supply did not apply in the case of bunkering, which was, in the words of Cllr Dick Sawle, "a different story."

While Cllrs Sawle and Cheek, both with considerable past experience of the fishing industry, seemed prepared to accept the current situation as not ideal, but workable and "driven by our remoteness," Cllr Roger Edwards was more forthright, calling for more legislation with both price and fuel quality being brought into the equation.

"Stanley Services must be the next monopoly situation we should look at," he said.

Stanley Services Director and local General Manager, Robert Rowlands said that as a monopoly his company could expect to be targeted, but he pointed out that supplies of fuel could be tight or non-existent even in free market ports like Rio Grande, a point also made by Cllr Sawle during the public meeting.

The current contract between SSL and the government expires in 2016.

Shipping news

A PAPER prepared by SAAS and FIDC on proposals for a new shipping link was due to be released for scrutiny by government and the private sector "this week," Cllr Roger Edwards said in response to a question posed at this week's public meeting. Cllr Edwards said government was "actively working for a second shipping link."

MLAs in camera

THE Public Accounts Committee has agreed to allow FITV to televise its forthcoming round-up session on the Stanley Dairy inquiry. Councillor Emma Edwards said at this week's public meeting. However, her fellow MLAs have declined to allow any of their proceedings to be televised.

Season Expert Champion Jan Clarke

Jan crowned king of the track in thrilling season climax at Ponds

THE final round of the 2010/11 motocross season took place last Sunday at the Ponds Moto X track, just off the MPA road near Fitzroy.

Jay Moffatt had it all to do in the Expert Class if he were to win the overall title.

Jan had such a commanding lead all he had to do was race and have fun; he could not afford not to race.

In the Clubman Class it could have been Nathan Gemmill or Dylan Stephenson that lifted the trophy for the season.

Travis McGill had the Junior Class in the bag but snapping at his rear tread was Nathan Lowe on his new Kawasaki.

There were no ladies racing, but Sian Ferguson had the championship wrapped up from the last race. Angeline Clarke, her closest rival, had been wed the day before so we thought we would let her have a day off.

Adam Dickson took the Pee wee Championship, followed by Jack Alazia and Leo Benjamin.

The Ponds track can be blisteringly quick given the right weather conditions. Having received a fair amount of rain prior to race day, all agreed we were in for some excellent racing.

Within a few laps the grease had gone, making the track perfect for some spectacular riding.

As ever, first off were the PeeWee's and Juniors.

Travis never looked like he was going to give the championship away with two great rides coming in ahead of Nathan Lowe and James Tyrrell.

Adam Dickson and Jack Alazia had fun getting some air time and showing great ability on this technical track.

In the Clubman Class Nathan and Dylan had it all to do, with Dylan on his new KTM taking the first race in a very quick time.

If Nathan could not deliver on the second race he would be giving the championship to Dylan.

By the time the second race took place the track was in superb condition, which Nathan took full advantage of, and set off for that chequered flag like a blue buzzer being chased by a goose wing, taking the win and the championship.

With great anticipation a large crowd had gathered to watch the Expert Class.

All the riders had the ability to produce wins: Shane Blackley on his super quick Yamaha, Jay Moffatt on his brother's KTM tractor, with Jan and Stefen Clarke on borrowed machinery.

Racing was fast, spectacular, electrifying and won by Jay

Moffatt who needed every point to win the Expert Class. However, Jan, quick as ever, only needed to come home to win the number one plate. Shane and Stefen each took a third place on the day.

Racing was sponsored by ET James, the bike shop in Wales, who have had a great relationship with the Falklands for many years, helping many riders in the Welsh Two Day Enduro.

Also thanks to Terrienne Ormond and her squad of lap counters and marshals. Sterling work ladies and gents! Thanks to Janice Dent and her team for the outstanding medical cover provided throughout the year.

Finally, a big thank you to all the land owners without whom we could not have had such a fantastic motocross season.

Roll on next year!

The passing of a quiet Falklands champion

THE "sad passing of an undervalued man" is how former Falkland Islands Company Managing Director, David Britton, has described the death of Frank Mitchell, on the evening of Thursday April 14.

Francis George Mitchell was born in Barking, Essex on April 5 1923, and joined the Falkland Islands Company in London in 1950, after military service in Europe and Palestine.

By 1955 he was Company Secretary and later London Manager before being appointed Managing Director in 1973. He retired in 1987.

Described by Terry Spruce as "a very modest and retiring man," Mr Mitchell's own entry in the Dictionary of Falklands Biography – one of a number of entries written by him – understates his importance to the Falkland Islands Company, its employees and to the Falkland Islands, of which he became a resourceful, determined and significant champion.

Mr Britton writes of Mr Mitchell: "Apart from a few people who had intimate connection with him, hardly anybody knew how much of his life he dedicated to the Falklands."

From Mr Mitchell's first visit to the Falkland Islands in 1953 he began to be concerned for the welfare of the company's workforce, and particularly that of the many single men then employed in its extensive farming operations.

He was responsible for switching the company's Provident Fund

from a basis of dividend-related contributions to one of contributions based on profits, at the same time making changes in its investments, which vastly improved its value, enabling the provision of pensions which were both non-contributory and generous.

Against the wishes of the Executive Council of the time, Mr Mitchell also helped bring about changes in the local tax regime, which resulted in the taxes paid by overseas-based companies going predominantly into the coffers of the local government, rather than to the UK Treasury as had previously been the case.

Also, by registering Darwin Shipping as a local company, he prevented a high proportion of the UK Government's subsidy for the mail ship service to Montevideo being lost to the UK.

Perhaps his most important contribution to the Falklands began in 1968, when the existence of a Memorandum of Understanding between the governments of Argentina and Great Britain over the sovereignty of the Falklands came to light. Responding to a plea for support from the Falkland Islands Government and, in the absence of any official Falkland Islands representative in Britain at the time, Mr Mitchell joined forces with a Lincoln's Inn barrister called Bill Hunter-Christie to form the Falkland Islands Emergency Committee, described subsequently by a historian as "one of the most influential lobbies in British politics."

To quote Mr Britton again: "Because of his (Frank Mitchell's) administrative control of the Falkland Islands Company, he had to keep a very low profile, because otherwise he would have been castigated as having a vested interest."

"That was never the way he worked and, when I became involved in the company, I had huge respect, not only for his knowledge of the Islands and connections with the politicians of the day, but because he never sought recognition for his efforts."

This unassuming man, whose encyclopaedic knowledge of Falklands history made him a frequent contributor to both the Falklands Journal and to the Upland Goose, the journal of the Falkland Islands Philatelic Association, is survived by Violet née Donaldson, whom he married in 1967.

We are advised by Mr Mitchell's niece Valerie Ann Lacey that his funeral will take place on May 3 at 3.00pm at Cribs in Becton.

Argos on course for oil round

FALKLANDS based exploration company Argos Resources is on track for its hunt for oil in the North Falkland Basin.

Seismic data gathered by the MV Polarus Asima earlier this month is now being processed, and the next step is its interpretation and prospect ranking ahead of scheduling drilling in late 2011 or early 2012.

Chairman Ian Thomson, commenting on the company's 2010 financial results released this week, said: "It is our ambition to participate in the current drilling campaign in the basin and we are building our team and taking all the steps required to be prepared for this."

Argos raised £22 million when it was listed in July 2010. Additional capital will be required to finance the drilling.

The Wanderer

An occasionally sardonic sideswipe at our country's current affairs

Hi Peat

I would like to know how your mind works sometimes as I just don't know why you thought the letters FITV stood for a local transvestite club instead of the new Tele Company?

Have you checked out the adult channel yet? It'll be well worth the new TV licence fee.

Liz's Birthday was quiet: the Mercy Band kept in tune with current noise pollution concerns by miming, and the chicken hat stood up very well in the wind.

Mind you, it's not the first time a King Charlie St representative has had his feathers ruffled.

I hear Teffy's abroad again - has he got a thing about "panninis"?

It would be interesting to see a list of trips overseas by senior FIG staff published annually. And I'm not the only one commenting on the commuting.

Local politics a bit quiet at the moment, though, don't you think? So quiet that I found it hard to recall all of the eight by name - still we are on the run-up to the Budget!

I wonder if any of them would be able to comment on something that has now come to light due to the very commendable continuation of previous councils' policies of localising posts where possible.

It seems that there's a differential within the pay scale between locally employed and people brought in when it comes to starting salaries.

And heaven help me, you know I'm no nutty contractor basher, but what's needed surely is a level playing field?

Thinking of policies, I hear the Top Secret project at Backside Farm is part of the import substitution drive which, of course, has to be a good thing as long as it's not at any price.

I was told that one of the individuals involved in "Project Backside" thought that they grew tomatoes in Britain during the winter! So we should here.

And you were right when you told me the other day that perhaps import substitution might include beef instead of it winking its way in.

By the way, I didn't get an invite to Billy and Kate's big day!

A rich history of sports meetings

THE 100th meeting of the Stanley Sports Association is due to take place in 2012 and, as some people may be aware, I aim to publish, during the latter part of 2011, a record of results of all 99 official meetings of the Stanley Sports Association.

I have already received considerable support and assistance from so many people, too numerous to mention here.

Since the first official meeting in 1908 there have been more than 200 events scheduled on the programme, and my book is designed to record the results of not only the major events such as the Governor's Cup and Maiden Plate, but also such nondescript items as the Biscuit and Whistle Race (held once only) and Stepping 100 Yards.

I am particularly keen to find the result of the 100 yards foot event for 1987 as nowhere does this seem to have been recorded, and similarly many results from the 1999 meeting (the only meeting I've not commented on over the past 40 years) appear to be missing.

Going back further, the names of the Ladies who finished 1st, 2nd, and 3rd (Mrs Sheila Hadden, Mrs Mally Lyse and Miss Colleen Summers) in the 1966 Ladies Trotting Race were recorded, but not the names of their horses.

Can anyone help? If anyone can assist me in finding these results then I will be most grateful.

Indeed if anyone has any "old" programmes that have the results inserted and would be prepared to let me borrow or just look at these programmes, then this would be extremely helpful in my research.

Old race meeting photographs too would be welcome to scan and return to the owners.

Horror stories of the peat bogs

I THOUGHT readers, and especially people who are new to the Islands, may benefit from our experience last weekend.

We walked our dogs on the Common, near the Canopus guns, and lost one of them, Mavis.

It was unusual for her to wander so far without us without returning. She always knows where we are and returns to us, but when she takes chase of a hare anything is possible, so we always stay in the same place until she comes back.

But this time she had been gone around 30 minutes, and panic was setting in.

We wondered if she had lost sight of us and doubled back to go home or seen the beach and headed off there, but that didn't feel right either. Although it didn't look too far to the road or the beach, the Common is vast when you are trying to find something small and black. Then we eventually heard her cries. She had fallen into a peat bog.

She had gone under the water, and was standing on her back legs up to her armpits in boggy water. She was freezing cold and frightened and crying.

The hole she had fallen into was quite wide but the grass which grows around it had grown horizontally across the hole, so when she had stood on it she slid into the hole but couldn't get out.

They are traps for small dogs and, I hate to say it, for small children also.

Ian had put our other dog Nelson back on the lead whilst shouting and searching for Mavis. He gave his lead a tug wondering what Nelson was doing and, when he looked behind, he had also fallen into a bog and had to be lifted out.

If he hadn't been on the lead he may not have got out either.

We used Nelson to find Mavis because they kept calling each other, and the ending was a happy one, but it could have been all so different if we hadn't kept our eyes on them and at least had an idea of the area she had disappeared in, and persisted in searching.

We have heard of some horror stories about the peat bogs, usually when I tell of the first time Mavis fell into a bog three years ago, and I wouldn't have found her then if Nelson hadn't have stayed with her at the side of the bog and led me to her. Some dogs are not so lucky.

I never returned to that part of the Common and didn't expect it to happen again. I wasn't sure people even believed me whenever I told that story but I won't forget it. If you have small dogs, please be careful. The water is very cold in the bogs and the sides are difficult to get out of. Mavis does have her dew claws but they didn't help her this time.

Not quite a wool price bonanza

AFTER reading the article entitled "Farmers on a high price roll" I felt I should try and bring a bit of reality to bear.

Sadly wool growers will not be as well off as the article suggests, and anyone in the business will know that. However, for those less "orientated" I will explain.

Falkland fleeces averaged around 3.5kg greasy last season, with an average yield of around 65% probably. That means average clean fleece weight would be around 2.3kg. You get paid on a clean fleece basis so, at the rate of 640 pence per kilo quoted, this would give about £14.72 per fleece. At that rate 7,000 sheep would gross around £103,000.

Then you have to take the cost of production out of that which includes the likes of shearing, freight to Stanley, freight to end market, agent commission, etc.

I do not deny that wool prices are very good this year, but not quite the bonanza we are led to believe, methinks.

A Knight comes to the rescue

LOOKING forward to a well earned holiday week exploring the West, we drove off the Concordia Bay and up the hill out of Port Howard. Only seconds later, disaster struck and our trusty Rover broke down.

We'd like to say a huge thank you to everyone who helped us, from the folks of Albemarle who helped us to the side of the road and directed us where to go for help, to Critta Lee, Nuala and most of all Keith Knight. Without Keith's knowledge and mechanical skills, we would have seen nothing but Port Howard on foot.

As it was we were able to drive to our accommodation in Port Stephens, Little Chartres, back to Port Howard and safely home. We had a fantastic holiday and loved all we saw of the West - and the fishing. Thank you!

The yacht's engine room with its mighty Mercedes engines

Unusual 'aerorig' sail plan gives clear, uncluttered deck space

Stanley plays host to legendary long distance yachtsman Amyr

As summer swiftly becomes a fleeting memory, John Fowler recalls a chance meeting with the skipper of one of the more unusual private yachts to grace Stanley harbour in recent months...

ANYONE walking along Ross Road at the height of the tourist season could hardly have failed to be aware of the twin-masted aluminium-hulled maxi yacht, Paratii 2, which was moored in Stanley harbour and later came alongside the FIC jetty to take on fuel.

The yacht's bulk and the height of its masts might have been enough in themselves to set it apart, but the sharper-eyed of the growing number of yachting enthusiasts in the Islands may also have noticed that each mast had a fixed boom going fore and aft – a rig which is virtually unique and, for the knowledgeable, gave an unmistakable clue to the yacht's identity and history.

Amyr Khan Klink, the yacht's Brazilian owner, is a legendary adventurer. Born in Sao Paulo in 1955 to a Lebanese father and a Swedish mother, when he was two the family moved to the coastal town of Paratii in the state of Rio de Janeiro, where his love of the sea began. Already by his teens a renowned canoeist (and collector of traditional Brazilian canoes), with many long-distance voyages to his credit, in 1984 Amyr rowed from Namibia in Africa to Brazil, a trip which took him 100 days and made him the first man to row across the South Atlantic.

Using experience gained on an epic 642-day sailing voyage from Antarctica to the Arctic Pole in 1989, Amyr supervised the building of the 90-foot Paratii 2 as his working platform for his next adventure project, "Antarctica 360," a single-handed circumnavigation of Antarctica, which he accomplished in 79 days.

Looking vast from the outside, this monster yacht, which has a specially strengthened ice-breaking bow, appears even bigger inside and yet it is perfectly set up for single-handed sailing, with everything including its Aerorig sail plan (which makes Paratii 2 look from a distance like two complete yachts joined together end to end) designed to be operated with the minimum of manual labour.

The wheel house and the "office end" of the saloon below are packed with electronic gizmos and screens more fitted to one's idea of a spaceship than that of an ocean going yacht.

There are generators galore producing 110,220 volts AC as well as DC to power all the systems, and hydraulic jacks which raise and lower the vessel's retractable keel and main rudder, one of three on the yacht. Should the wind fail, its two mighty Mercedes engines can power it along for some 11,000 miles without a problem.

Before attempting his circumnavigation of the Antarctic, Amyr had already become the first yachtsman to spend a whole winter there and, before arriving in Stanley this time, Paratii 2 had spent a whole year perched on a rocky shore in Dorian Bay near Port Lockroy on the Antarctic Peninsula. Amyr was not on board this time, but his yacht provided home, school and a workplace for his colleague and fellow Brazilian Flavio Fontes, with his wife and five-year-old son.

At the end of last year the cruise ship Ushuaia arrived at Port Lockroy to take Flavio's family on the first leg of their journey back to Brazil and to bring Amyr to help Flavio get the monster yacht back in the water and sail it home via Stanley.

Commonwealth intern for FI Overseas Games

THE Falkland Islands Overseas Games Association last week welcomed an intern from the Commonwealth Games Canada Foundation.

Natalie Brett (29) from Montreal, gained her Masters in Sports Management from Bournemouth University, and will be pioneering in the role as FIOGA's full-time capacity development and administrative officer, funded by the foundation.

Natalie has already met members from the badminton, cricket, swimming and football teams, and she told the Penguin News: "They all have interest, drive and passion for their sports. I hope to help improve and develop skills." Previously reaching the level of elite class coaching for girls football around 13 years of age, she hopes to gather interest for a girls team on top of her duties.

Steve Dent of FIOGA explained the role was crucial for developing the association to do more for people.

"We have full-time jobs and families to support, and a lot of administration and looking for grants and funding we can't do," explained Mr Dent.

"The main problem is that the health of a nation is not quantifiable. We can't put a value on lifestyle or tell the government that a healthier community will save them 'x' amount of money."

Considerations are being made to change the role of exercise referral practitioner to more of a "change for life" role.

"The key word is legacy," he said, with hopes the role can be filled locally in the future.

Steve and Natalie are leaving this weekend for a training conference in New Zealand to gain training on the Commonwealth Federation's database system, Zeus.

It is hoped the system is one all Commonwealth countries will be trained in using, allowing up-to-date global access to information.

Sandy Bay generates exciting options for eco-friendly travel

COULD the faithful Rover be replaced with an all-electric car on the streets of Stanley?

According to the Daily Mirror, quoting a BusinessGreen.com website report last week, the use of electric vehicles in the Falklands – powered by renewable energy sourced from Sandy Bay Wind Farm – is at least a distinct possibility.

Wind Farm Manager Glenn Ross told the Penguin News the runaway success of the Sandy Bay turbines could indeed support the use of alternative eco-friendly transport.

Mr Ross, also Manager of the Power Station and a Member of the Legislative Assembly, even has two makes of electric car under consideration if the plan gets the green light.

The £4.6m wind farm faces average winds of 10.7 mph which, since the first three turbines were installed, has achieved one of the world's highest per capita percentages of renewable energy replacing fuel consumption.

It has achieved wind into diesel penetration of up to 73 per cent – 950 kW wind and 350 kW diesel on some occasions. The UK in comparison is only about one per cent renewable.

But while Sandy Bay does not have the problem faced by most wind farms of there simply not being enough wind, its more pressing problem is having no storage to retain energy not used in times of low power demand.

"We have 1,500 hours of the year when it is too calm to generate power from the wind and 500 hours of storm winds," said Mr Ross. "This means for one quarter of the year there is no contribution to energy needs."

The ability to store excess energy would create a reserve for those periods, levelling out energy usage as well as reducing the need for expensive fuel imports.

Mr Ross has already identified the preferred "large storage" option, a Japanese manufactured NAS battery, capable of storing 2MWh, although cost could be a restrictive factor.

But "distributed storage," a technology which has already been used to remotely start water pumps at Moody Brook, is the option that could lead to electric cars.

Lack of range has restricted electric vehicle use overseas, the ability to travel 140 miles on a full charge could suit domestic use in the Falklands.

Vehicles currently under consideration are the Nissan Leaf and the proposed electric Ford Focus, which have limited off-road capabilities but would make good town runners.

But Mr Ross said it would be essential that the first vehicle introduced had the performance and would be something we would all be happy to drive.

"In the UK they are using coal, nuclear, oil, etc, to provide fuel to produce the electricity to charge the batteries on their cars. Here we would be using wind, totally green," he said.

The technology behind distributed storage also allows energy loads to be operated by remote control: "It is possible to dial a phone number and initiate battery charging by area or street," said Mr Ross.

"We are considering any type of load that can be remotely controlled and is not time critical. It could be greenhouse heating or refrigeration."

The wait may be long for the desired NAS Battery, however, Mr Ross assures the price is coming down year on year "This is something we need to get right: the right vehicle, the right battery; so I will take my time."

New book reveals secret Israeli support given to Argentine Air Force in 1982

IT has sometimes been said that the full extent of Chile's support for the British is the last of the untold stories of the 1982 Falklands War, but a book published recently in Buenos Aires reveals another previously unpublicised facet of that conflict.

"Operation Israel," by Hernan Dobry, which is about the rearming of Argentina during the period of the military dictatorship (1976/1983), reveals the extent to which Israel, then led by Prime Minister Menajem Begin, was involved in a complicated plan to supply Mirage jet fighters and other equipment to the Argentine forces.

Dobry claims that when Argentina was beginning to lose the war under British pressure, and desperately in need of replacements for aircraft and other equipment lost in combat, Israel was at the head of the queue of countries willing to supply their needs.

According to a salesman from Isrex Argentina, the Israeli provider and consultant for defence and security products and systems, when Argentine representatives gained an interview with Mr Begin, they were apparently surprised when he interrupted their explanation of the situation by saying: "You've come to talk badly about the British.

"Is this going to be used to kill the English? Go ahead."

He added: "Obviously, it must be all done perfectly."

Begin had been what would now be considered a freedom fighter against British rule before the establishment of a Jewish State, and had apparently developed a pathological hatred of the British when a close friend, Dov Gruner, was captured and hanged by the British on April 19 1947. His problem in 1982 was that his country had very close relations with Britain and therefore could not appear to be openly supporting Argentina.

A third country had to be found to create a triangle intended to disarm suspicion and Peru, which had already publicly pledged its support of the Argentine cause, agreed to be the apparent purchaser from the Israelis of a mountain of equipment including gas masks, radar alert systems to detect incoming missiles, duvet jackets, spares and even Shafir air to air missiles, which were delivered to Buenos Aires on Aerolineas Argentinas planes flying from Tel Aviv, via Callao in Peru.

The most important of these supplies were larger 1,500 litre fuel tanks for the Argentine fighter bombers, which could give the pilots sufficient range to reach the British Task Force and get back home.

This, according to Dobry, forced the Task Force to move further east from the Falklands to avoid attacks.

The most audacious deal with Israel involved French-built Mirage jets just a few days before the Argentine surrender. They had already been offered to Argentina in 1980 but were rejected because they were "old and deteriorated."

However, the loss of at least 35 combat aircraft in the Falklands made it imperative to strengthen the air force, because it was feared that following the war Chile would take advantage of a debilitated Argentina to force its hand in their long-running dispute over the islands in the Beagle Channel.

Queen's Birthday Parade in the wind becomes a test of allegiance

WHILE the rain stayed away and the sun almost shone, a bitterly cold wind blowing across Stanley Harbour from the North made this year's Queen's Birthday Parade, if not the worst for weather, at least a challenging test of loyalty and allegiance for all involved.

Despite the fact this was a significant marking of another half-decade in the Queen's life, it was difficult to avoid the feeling that this event was being to a certain extent overshadowed by the forthcoming wedding of her grandson William to Kate Middleton, who were briefly present, at least in cardboard cut-out form, before the Penguin News saw them being carried away somewhat unceremoniously.

The event was also significantly reduced in splendour by the absence of the expected military band, who were the victims of an unfortunate decision to offload their instruments from the plane that should have brought them, in favour of some more strategically important cargo, the details of which have not been released. Unless this important cargo was composed of fresh fruit and veg to be distributed to the civilian population at bargain prices. I am sure everyone in Stanley, including those marching, regrets its precedence over the band's instruments: on occasions like these there is nothing like a band to quicken the step and help ignore the creeping chill.

In the past Stanley has seen separate Armed Forces detachments joining in the parade with our own Defence Force. This year, as for the Battle Day Parade, there was a combined tri-service detachment, perhaps symbolic of the cuts which seem to be threatening every aspect of British military life recently. To extend this image yet further, the fly-past which followed the parade, consisted not of a formation of Typhoons chmaxing vertically up into the blue yonder, as on past occasions, but of one Sea King SAR helicopter trailing the Union Flag, followed some time later by a rather forlorn looking Lynx. Sic transit gloria Britanniae? One has to wonder.

Penguin News journalist and FIDF private, Teslyn Barkman takes us behind the scenes at the Queen's Birthday Parade in Stanley REHEARSALS started with a bang on Wednesday night. An hour of preparation introduced a new fix bayonets routine, drill and marching to find our feet before running through the ceremony with the tri-service detachment and sounding out the big guns.

The gale force winds arrived by the morning, the FIDF donned their blues pre-ironed with soap-starched seams and arrived at the hall for 8.30am.

It was a hung head of shame for me however: I forgot my hat. Fortunately, after much running around, said hat was found, but in the process I had misplaced those pesky gloves.

With the view it was just going to be one of those days. I helped pour the traditional glug of port to toast the Queen on her birthday with the rest of the parade. Much refreshed, we all clambered aboard the minibus and lined up behind the Town Hall for a run through the commands again, to reinforce those rifle-induced bruises.

It was a quick march to Victory Green, hoping not to break an ankle following a measured pace through the middle of the front road pot-holes.

Privates Brownlee and Barkman

After lining up we waited for the cars to turn up, not usually an issue, but it caused a bit of praying my hat would stay on in the meantime.

The mention of chinstraps having to be used made everyone screw them on pretty tight but the wind was trying its best.

The gale failed to steal our digress but it must have taken solace in aiming the smoke and ash in our faces a while later.

The parade seemed to be over relatively quickly, with a little skipping on the march back - not from joy but to keep in sync.

At ease.

Parade over for another year, the FIDF return to the starting point

Biography

PRINCE William is the elder son of The Prince of Wales and Diana, Princess of Wales, born at 9.03pm on June 21 1982, at St Mary's Hospital, Paddington, London, weighing 7lb 1½oz.

On August 4 1982, Prince William Arthur Philip Louis was christened by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, in the Music Room at Buckingham Palace.

After attending Mrs Mynors School, Prince William became a pupil at Wetherby School in London, from January 15 1987 until July 5 1990.

The Prince attended Ludgrove School in Berkshire for five years until July 5 1995. He then attended Eton College from July 1995 and studied Geography, Biology and History of Art at A Level.

Prince William was 15 when Diana, Princess of Wales was killed in a car crash in Paris on August 31 1997.

Prince William and younger brother Prince Harry walked behind their mother's cortege at her funeral held at Westminster Abbey on September 6 1997.

After a gap year when he visited Chile, Belize, worked on British dairy farms and visited countries in Africa, Prince William chose to study at St Andrews University in Fife, Scotland. He graduated with a 2:1 in Geography in 2005.

After a period of work experience, Prince William joined the Royal Military Academy Sandhurst as an Officer Cadet.

He was commissioned as an army officer in front of Her Majesty The Queen at Sandhurst in December 2006 and joined the Household Cavalry (Blues and Royals) as a Second Lieutenant.

On St George's Day (April 23) 2008 the Queen appointed Prince William to be a Royal Knight Companion of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. He was installed at The annual Garter ceremony held at Windsor Castle.

He remains a Lieutenant in the Household Cavalry, but Prince William's career is currently as a Search and Rescue Pilot. He is posted with the Royal Air Force at Anglesey, Wales, where the royal couple will settle when married.

The Prince has royal and military duties

Charity work

PRINCE William is also president and/or patron of a number of charities and organisations whose work he wishes to support further by requesting no wedding gifts, but instead donations to one of his charities.

Prince William recently visited New Zealand and Australia on behalf of the Queen and at the request of the Prime Ministers of New Zealand and Australia following the natural disasters the countries suffered.

The Prince met those affected by the recent disasters as well as members of the emergency and support services.

Prince William was in Christchurch, New Zealand, in mid March, where he attended the National Memorial Service on the 18th. He also visited Greymouth, near the site of the Pike River Mine disaster.

As part of the tour he arrived in Australia, where he spent two days visiting a number of areas affected by the recent cyclone and flooding in Queensland.

The Prince then travelled to north-west Victoria to see areas affected by flooding. It is expected that the Prince will start to absorb more and more royal duties from the Queen as her age prevents travel, especially to some of the more remote parts of the Commonwealth.

Let them eat cake

THERE are to be two royal wedding cakes to celebrate the marriage.

One, as requested by his bride-to-be Kate Middleton, is to be a traditional multi-tiered fruit cake by Leicestershire based baker Fiona Cairns, decorated with edible flowers - an English rose, a Scottish thistle, a Welsh daffodil and an Irish shamrock.

The other cake is a family childhood favourite of the prince's - an unbaked chocolate and rich tea biscuit cake by McVitie's, made to a secret Royal Family recipe.

William and best man brother Harry

The Prince and the Falklands debate

CURRENTLY stationed in Anglesey, the Prince is said to have finally accepted that he will not be able to fight on the front line like his brother Harry did in Afghanistan, but it is still unknown whether he will serve in the Falklands.

Two years ago, in February 2009, Argentina's Foreign Minister Jorge Taina expressed concern that the presence of the future King on the Islands could inflame public opinion in Argentina.

Any decision on the deployment of the Prince has been delayed since, but it is thought he will either go to the Falklands or Cyprus.

His stationing at Mount Pleasant Airport would be part of his training as a search and rescue pilot with the Royal Air Force.

Although the News of the World was informed that "William is adamant he wants to join his squadron when they are seconded to the Falklands," the insider also remarked that the comments from the Argentine minister had made the point sensitive, but William has "let it be known that there is no reason why he shouldn't join his colleagues."

He realises it is not his call, but it is believed the Falklands posting would still show he is prepared to make a valuable contribution.

A spokesman for St James's Palace said the 1982 war was unlikely to have any bearing on whether Prince William would be sent to the South Atlantic garrison, and that "we would take advice from the Foreign Office."

The Prince would be following the example of his uncle, Prince Andrew, who flew helicopters during the 74-day war with Argentina in 1982.

Fashion icon

AS well as a figure of fantasy to millions of women and girls lusting after the fairytale, Kate Middleton has been featured in several best-dressed lists and was selected by the Daily Telegraph as the "Most Promising Newcomer" in its 2006 list of style winners and losers. Tatler placed her at number eight on its yearly listing of the top ten style icons of 2007.

She was also featured in People magazine's 2007 and 2010 best-dressed lists. Kate was named as one of Richard Blackwell's ten Fabulous Fashion Independents of 2007.

In June 2008, Style.com selected her as its monthly beauty icon. The following month Kate was included in Vanity Fair's international best-dressed list.

The attention was not always favourable and, on February 28 2010, The Times reported that Kate was pursuing an invasion of privacy suit against photographer Niraj Tanna who took pictures of her over Christmas 2009.

They were never published in Britain and she did not pursue the claim.

Global event

COMPARISONS to this wedding and that of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer are made by the media all the time.

Nearly one billion people tuned in to the wedding of Lady Diana Spencer and Prince Charles in 1981, although it's worth noting both the UK and USA had only three national channels.

The most viewed television event, however, was Princes Diana's funeral in 1997, watched by an estimated 2.5 billion people worldwide.

It is hoped, fuelled by the media's interest in the royal nuptials, that the international fan base of curiosity in the royal wedding will exceed this.

The BBC will not release the cost to the tax payer of coverage and build up of the event, but it has been revealed that more than 1,000 staff will be covering the day. ITV and SKY staff are rumoured to have around 460 combined.

The engagement ring is no small treasure and the same ring Prince Charles gave to Diana on their engagement

Ceremony

ON November 16 2010 the office of the Prince of Wales at Clarence House announced the Prince and Kate's engagement.

Prince William presented her with his mother's engagement ring in October while on holiday in Kenya, while also celebrating passing his RAF helicopter search and rescue course.

The 18 carat oval sapphire surrounded by diamonds is worth more than £80,000 and had to be adjusted recently to fit Kate's slim digit.

It was announced on November 23 that the wedding will take place on April 29 at Westminster Abbey to coincide with the UK bank holiday weekend.

It is customary for royal men to receive a dukedom when they marry. At the moment possible dukedoms up for grabs are Clarence, Sussex, Kendal, Cambridge, Avondale and Strathearn. As the wife of a royal duke, and prince, Kate will become a duchess.

If William were not given a title after the wedding Kate Middleton would, by convention, become known as Her Royal Highness Princess William of Wales, taking her husband's first name on marriage (as with Princess Michael of Kent). If, however, William is given a title, she would be known as Her Royal Highness The Duchess (or other rank if appropriate) of the bestowd Dukedom.

Biography

CATHERINE Elizabeth Middleton was born to Michael and Carole Middleton at the Royal Berkshire Hospital, Reading, on January 9 1982.

In May 1984, at the age of two, Kate moved with her family to Amman in Jordan, where her father worked for two and a half years.

In September 1986, the Middletons returned to their home in West Berkshire.

Kate studied Chemistry, Biology and Art at A level and also took part in sport on behalf of the school, playing tennis, hockey, netball and athletics, particularly high jump.

During this time she also completed her Duke of Edinburgh Gold Award.

In July 2000 Kate undertook a gap year in which she studied at the British Institute in Florence, undertook a Raleigh International programme in Chile, and crewed on Round the World Challenge boats in the Solent.

She first met Prince William in 2002 when studying at the University of St Andrews, Fife, from where she graduated three years later with a 2:1 in History of Art.

Since completing her degree, Kate has worked for Party Pieces, a family business owned and run by her parents.

In 2008, Kate launched First Birthdays, a junior brand to Party Pieces. She has also worked in London as a part-time buyer for the clothing company brand Jigsaw Junior.

The dress

KATE is rumoured to have ordered three gowns from different and secret designers - or even designed the dress herself.

The effort is to try and keep the outfit a surprise for the big day, for superstition, or just to annoy the tabloids.

Nothing official has been released, but the bookies' money is on the Alexander McQueen designer Sarah Burton. The house of McQueen seamstresses have been at work unusually early lately and Sarah's work is very popular. Designers Jasper Conran and Alice Temperly also have tongues wagging.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that in the event of an emergency where no other form of communication are available, that the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the following frequencies.

VHF 2 metre Band

147.725 (Duplex - 0.6)... Mount Caroline repeater, covering the north of the West Falkland including the cross sound ferry main operational area

146.625... Stanley to Mount Alice

147.825 (Duplex - 0.6)... Mount Alice repeater, covering the south of West Falkland.

Marine Band
156.800, Channel 16 (Stanley area)

2.182 MHz HF

In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

It must be stressed that calling the Royal Falkland Islands Police on any of these frequencies must only be done in the event of an emergency

How Ascension holds the key to Darwin's best-kept secret

Thousands of passengers on the airbridge which links the Falklands to the UK have made the brief refuelling stop on Ascension Island, but few will appreciate its remarkable ecological history. This report comes from the BBC...

THE lonely Ascension Island in the middle of the South Atlantic, and closely linked to the Falkland Islands, conceals Charles Darwin's best-kept secret: two hundred years ago, it was a barren volcanic edifice, today its peaks are covered by lush tropical "cloud forest."

What happened in the interim is the amazing story of how the architect of evolution, Kew Gardens and the Royal Navy conspired to build a fully functioning, but totally artificial ecosystem.

By a bizarre twist, this great imperial experiment may hold the key to the future colonisation of Mars.

The tiny tropical island of Ascension is not easy to find. It is marooned in the ocean, 1,600 km from the coast of Africa and 2,250km from South America. Its existence depends entirely on what geologists call the mid-Atlantic ridge. This is a chain of underwater volcanoes formed as the ocean is wrenched apart. However, because Ascension occupies a "hot spot" on the ridge, its volcano is especially active. A million years ago, molten magma explosively burst above the waves. Back in 1836, the young Charles Darwin was coming to the end of his five-year mission to explore strange new worlds and boldly go where no naturalist had gone before. Aboard HMS Beagle, he called in at Ascension. En route from another remote volcanic island, St Helena, Darwin wasn't expecting much.

"We know we live on a rock, but the poor people of Ascension live on a cinder," the residents of St Helena had joked before his departure. But arriving on Ascension put an unexpected spring in Darwin's step.

Professor David Catling of the University of Washington, Seattle, is retracing Darwin's travels for a new book: "Awaiting Darwin on Ascension was a letter from his Cambridge mentor, John Henslow," he said.

"Darwin's voyage of discovery had already caused a huge sensation in London," he said. "Henslow assured him that on his return, he would take his place among the great men of science."

At this fantastic news, Darwin bounded forth in ecstasy, the sound of his geological hammer ringing from hill to hill. Everywhere, bright red volcanic cones and rugged black lava signalled the violent forces that had wrought the island.

Yet, thinks Professor Catling, amid this wild desolation, Darwin began to hatch a plot. Out of the ashes of the volcano, he would create a green oasis - a "little England."

Darwin's great buddy was Joseph Hooker, the intrepid botanist and explorer. Only a few years after Darwin's return, Hooker was off on his own adventures, an ambitious slingshot around Antarctica aboard HMS Erebus and Terror.

Mirroring Darwin's voyage, Hooker called in on Ascension on the way home in 1843.

Ascension was a strategic base for the Royal Navy. Originally set up to keep a watchful eye on the exiled emperor Napoleon on nearby St Helena, it was a thriving way-station at the time of Hooker's visit.

However, the big problem that impeded further expansion of this imperial outpost was the supply of fresh water.

Ascension was an arid island, buffeted by dry trade winds from southern Africa.

Devoid of trees at the time of Darwin and Hooker's visits, the little rain that did fall quickly evaporated away.

Egged on by Darwin, in 1847 Hooker advised the Royal Navy to set in motion an elaborate plan. With the help of Kew Gardens - where Hooker's dad was director - shipments of trees were to be sent to Ascension.

The idea was breathtakingly simple. Trees would capture more rain, reduce evaporation and create rich loamy soils. The "cinder" would become a garden.

So, beginning in 1850 and continuing year after year, ships started to come. Each deposited a motley assortment of plants from botanical gardens in Europe, South Africa and Argentina. Soon, on the highest peak at 859m, great changes were afoot. By the late 1870s, eucalyptus, Norfolk Island pine, bamboo, and banana had all run riot.

Back in England, Charles Darwin and his theory of evolution were busily uprooting the Garden of Eden. But on a green hill far away, a new "island Eden" was being created.

Yet could Darwin's secret garden have more far reaching consequences?

Dr Dave Wilkinson is an ecologist at Liverpool John Moores University, who has written extensively about Ascension Island's strange ecosystem.

He first visited Ascension in 2003. "I remember thinking, this is really weird," he said.

"There were all kinds of plants that don't belong together in nature, growing side by side. I only later found out about Darwin. Hooker and everything that had happened," he said.

Wilkinson describes the vegetation of "Green Mountain" - as the highest peak is now known - as a "cloud forest."

The trees capture sea mist, creating a damp oasis amid the aridity. However, this is a forest with a difference. It is totally artificial.

Such ecosystems normally develop over million of years through a slow process of co-evolution. By contrast, the Green Mountain cloud forest was cobbled together by the Royal Navy in a matter of decades.

"This is really exciting!" said Wilkinson. "What it tells us is that we can build a fully functioning ecosystem through a series of chance accidents or trial and error."

In effect, what Darwin, Hooker and the Royal Navy achieved was the world's first experiment in "terra-forming." They created a self-sustaining and self-reproducing ecosystem in order to make Ascension Island more habitable.

Wilkinson thinks that the principles that emerge from that experiment could be used to transform future colonies on Mars.

In other words, rather than trying to improve an environment by force, the best approach might be to work with life to help it "find its own way."

However, to date, scientists have been deaf to the parable of Ascension Island.

"It's a terrible waste that no one is studying it," said Wilkinson. Ascension Island's secret is safe for years to come, it seems.

Sharks hammer Panthers in a bloody victory

IN the first of Sunday's games on April 16, Buffalo's managed to keep their nerve and inflict the second defeat of the season for the Oilers by five goals to four.

Amongst the Oilers goal scorers were two from Callum Middleton, Gordon Lennie and a goal for the Oilers newest addition, Ian France.

The game was level until the final few minutes when the Buffalos managed to score their fifth goal, which gave Andrew Miller a hat-trick for the game. The other Buffalo goals came from Nick Rendell and Roy Shepherd.

The second game saw Sharks end their recent slump with a 3-0 victory against Panthers.

The game was full of action from the start. The first few minutes saw Ricky Leyton miss a penalty, although he did go on to score two goals before the end of the game, and another goal was scored by Samuel Miller.

Panthers did fight back but were unable to get past Stuie Duncan.

This game also saw the first casualty of the season with Karl Nightingale being sent to hospital after he cut his right eye after coming into contact with Ricky's elbow.

On Tuesday 19th Blackhawks managed a 5-0 shut-out against a rejuvenated Penguins side.

This was very much aided by guest keeper Stuie Duncan, as well as another hat-trick from Craig Dockrill and two goals from guest player, Dan Fowler, all helping to secure the three points.

The second fixture saw Panthers win 4-1 against the Buffalos. A hat-trick from Karl Nightingale was a highlight for the Panthers, as well as a goal from Nick Francis. The only goal for the Buffalos came from Andrew Miller, but there some excellent performances from newcomers Natalie Brett and Pepe.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTS

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE: VACANCY

An opportunity has arisen for a member of the community to become involved in helping to ensure that FIG is delivering value-for-money to the residents of the Falkland Islands. Expressions of interest are sought from members of the public wishing to become a member of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC).

Under the Falkland Islands Constitution, the PAC comprises

- (a) a chairman and two other members appointed by the Governor; and
- (b) two members of the Legislative Assembly.

The PAC currently has a vacancy for an "other member" under (a) above. The role involves six (or so) meetings per year, each lasting two hours, with an estimated time commitment of four hours per month for background reading and preparation. The role is unpaid but expenses are reimbursed. The appointment period will be until 31 January 2012 (in order to tie in with the appointment periods of the other, existing members).

The PAC has an important scrutiny role over the public accounts of all government departments and specified bodies. The PAC's task is to ensure that public funds have been expended properly, for the purposes for which they were voted by the Legislative Assembly. Hence the role is varied, complex and fascinating. Individuals appointed to the PAC make a significant contribution to the community, in helping to maintain high standards of public administration and good governance in the Falkland Islands. This calls for PAC members themselves to have the highest standards of personal integrity, discretion and commitment to the good governance of the Islands.

Applications should be submitted to the Governor by 30 April, setting out the reasons for the applicant's interest in appointment to the PAC and the skills and experience that the applicant would bring to the job.
