Coming Of Age

By Walt Dull

When I entered N.B.H.S. as a sixth grader, I was ready for a change. I wanted something new to happen. Anything—I didn't care what. It never happened.

My seventh grade year I went to school with one goal in mind. That was for my year to be different. I didn't know why, but I thought something would alter my life. Again, it never happened.

In eighth grade I thought I found the answer. I joined sports, but it didn't make a difference. Still I found no satisfaction in being in school.

Then it happened. My freshman year, I found myself. From out of nowhere it came, like a sudden burst of energy. For some odd reason, I was a new person. Cocky and adventurous.

By my sophomore year this new-found power was burnt out. I didn't feel that I had the respect of the upperclassmen or even my peers.

During my junior year the power was back. My parents let me go out. People liked me (GIRLS LIKED ME!). I participated in many activities.

Now, it is my senior year. I'm writing this with only forty-two days of school left. The year's been good to me. What I am going to miss about school is all my friends.

Jobs We've Held . . .

New treasurer Eve Baldwin has worked in a bank as an operations asst., an operations coordinator, asst. treasurer, and now she's North Baltimore's treasurer.

Advice she gives: be involved in as many different activities, clubs, etc., in the school system to have a good idea of what you are good at. Give it a chance; find your potential.

Sylvia Wymer held jobs all related to secretarial skills. After Sylvia graduated from high school, she became a clerk, then a bookkeeper. That's when she started her career at North Baltimore. She was a teachers' aide, cashier, elementary secretary, and now she is the secretary to the treasurer.

Her advice to the students: set goals and go after them but be happy in doing it. Don't waste time.

Above: Eve Baldwin, treasurer. Below: Sylvia Wymer, secretary to the treasurer.

Ken Cline held jobs that some people would be surprised to learn. For instance, he worked in construction, on the railroad, in a factory, on a farm, and as a night custodian. Then he began teaching business and later became a principal. That brought him to his present job, superintendent.

Advice to students: employers are looking for honesty, integrity, and the ability to be to work on time. Be hard working and have a positive attitude.

Sandy Stewart has held jobs as a receptionist. She was the secretary to the superintendent at another school, and now she's Mr. Cline's secretary.

The advice Sandy gives: never be afraid to try anything you like to do.

Sandy Stewart, secretary to the superintendent

Principal Don King was a park and recreation employee, he taught business, phys. ed., SBH, MH, coached football and baseball, became principal at Powell, and then NBHS principal.

His advice to students: work as hard as you possibly can; learn as much as you possibly can.

Dolores Bucher has worked as a cashier, in the meat dept. of a local grocery, at a news office, for a drycleaner, and as a secretary.

Advice she gives: study hard, pay attention to your studies, and do your best.

Dale Schwab worked in a beauty salon at one time.

She's a housewife and mother. Other jobs included working in a bank, a law office, a probate court, and now she is the high school secretary.

Her advice to students: work hard, study hard! You can be whatever you want to be.

Testing ... Testing

By Barb Gibson

This year there was something new at NBHS — PROFICIENCY TESTING. The proficiency test is a series of short tests made up of reading, writing, math, and citizenship.

Amanda Clark, freshman, had this to say about the tests: "I think that it's good because many people after graduation don't even know the basics." On the other hand, freshman Tonya Scott stated, "I don't think the tests do anything."

The majority of students questioned thought the writing was the easiest part of the test.

Although students' answers vary, the majority thought the citizenship section was the hardest.

Sixth Grade Word Power

By Dawn Hopkins

Due to a deadline and writer's block, I decided to do something different with the sixth graders... I tested their vocabulary. Each class was given a list of words and asked to write what they thought the word meant. Listed below are some of my favorite responses.

GARGOYLE: "When you put mouthwash in your mouth and gargole."—Jan Shumaker.

ANARCHY: "Like a monarchy gov't. only ants run it instead of butterflies."—Sarah Miller.

LACERATE: "A new way to tie your shoes."—Kristi Mason.

COVALENT BOND: "Things knights and dragons have in common."—Joe DeVaul.

Thanks for the story sixth graders! I enjoyed reading your answers. Also, thanks to the teachers for allowing me to use your students.
