iorgetto Giugiaro recently celebrated his 80th birthday. Amazingly, he's still very active, and still designing cars. I bumped into him at the recent Paris Motor Show, and found him looking fine, fit and with a mind as sharp as ever.

That's a fantastic achievement for someone who truly bestrode the golden era of car design, with countless major milestones to his name. He's the 'designer's designer' - the man that most stylists cite when asked to choose the colleague they admire above all others.

As you can read on page 40, in our extensive tribute to the man, he's designed countless concept cars. More significantly, perhaps, he's created dozens of production greats, from the Alfasud to the VW Golf, the Fiat Panda to the Alfa Romeo Brera. All have a simplicity and cleanliness that the current generation of designers, obsessed as they are with ever more tortured shapes, might do well to study.

We have another tribute to Giugiaro – of a kind – starting on page 80: a full guide to another brilliant car that he designed, the Fiat Uno Turbo. This has to be one of my all-time favourite hot hatchbacks, with light weight, keen reactions and feisty performance in its armoury.

As with a lot of 1980s machinery, the generation of youngsters who lusted after cars like this can now afford them. Trouble is, there are so few left on the roads that prices have gone stratospheric. It's going to be repeated with 1990s stuff, too, mark my words. It's already starting to happen with the Alfa Romeo GTV 916 and 147/156 GTA. Which modern Italians will be the next iconic classics, I wonder?

ITALIAN CAR NEWS

ALFA'S NEW 'NERO' BLACK EDITIONS

Ifa Romeo has launched three new Nero Edizione ('Black Edition') models – Giulia, Stelvio and Giulietta – all treated to high-tech extras and dark glossy details.

The Giulia and Stelvio Nero Edizione are based on the Super trim level and include a dark glossy front grille insert, mirror caps and exhaust tips, plus burnished rear badges. Gloss black window surrounds, dark tinted rear windows and bi-xenon headlamps also feature.

The Giulia has 18-inch dark alloy wheels, the Stelvio 20-inch alloys and gloss black roof bars. Both cars add aluminium kick plates, sports pedals and footrests. The Giulia version is only offered in 2.0-litre 200hp petrol form, priced at £34,990. The Stelvio can be either 200hp petrol (£40,090) or 190hp diesel (£41,290).

The Giulietta Nero Edizione has dark glossy grille, mirror caps, door handles, foglight bezels, exhaust pipe and badging. Tinted rear windows, side skirts, sports rear bumpers and dark interior headlining are complemented by 18-inch dark gloss alloy wheels. You also get a Tech Pack as standard. The Giulietta Nero Edizione is available as either a 1.4-litre 120hp petrol (£23,270) or 1.6-litre 120hp diesel (£24,700).

FIAT 500L S-DESIGN & 2019 UPDATES

Fiat has launched a new 500L special edition called the S-Design. Based on the Cross model, it features a sportier look, matt bronze paint with contrasting accents and a gloss black roof, in addition to 17-inch alloy wheels. Inside, a Uconnect seven-inch touchscreen is standard, as are S-Design leather seats. The 500L S-Design is sold with a 1.4-litre petrol engine and manual transmission at £18,610.

The whole Fiat 500L range has also been updated for 2019, with a new City Cross trim level, equipment updates and a simplified range (it's now only available with the 1.4-litre 95hp petrol engine). The City Cross has a raised stance and SUV styling (different bumpers, skid plates and side/wheelarch mouldings). Prices start at £16,710 for the 500L Urban, with the City Cross adding £900 to that price. The full 'Cross' model remains available at £18,710. The Fiat 500L range is available with three years' 0% finance up to 31 December 2018.

'AUTUMN' FIAT 500 COLLEZIONE

A new 'autumn 2018' special edition Fiat 500 Collezione is now on sale. Colours include Avantgarde Bordeaux, Tech House, Crossover Black and brand-new Cortina Grey, or two-tone red-and-grey Brunello.

Also featuring are copper-coloured alloy wheels and coachline, plus a chrome bonnet trim and chrome-plated Collezione rear badge.

Inside are pinstripe fabric interiors, leather seat inserts and copper-coloured accents. High-spec features include parking sensors, special floor mats, seven-inch Uconnect screen and a Beats hi-fi.

The 500 Collezione is available either as a convertible or a hatchback with a sunroof, exclusively with the 1.2-litre 69hp engine, priced from £14,060.

ABARTH 124GT: ONLY 50 FOR UK

Abarth's new carbon-roof 124GT has arrived in the UK – but we're only getting 50 examples. The Abarth 124GT features a carbonfibre roof, 17-inch OZ Ultra-Light alloys, Bose sound system and Visibility Pack (dusk and rain sensors, rear parking sensors and adaptive LED headlights).

The carbon roof weighs 16kg, is lined on the inside and has a large rear window with a defroster, and is removable in minutes. Three body colours are offered: Portogallo 1974 Grey, San Marino 1972 Black and Turini 1975 White. Prices start from £33,625, or £299 per month for a two-year PCH scheme.

ABARTH SALES RECORD

A record September for Abarth UK means it has already beaten its sales total for the whole of 2017. Abarth registered 987 cars in September 2018 – the ninth consecutive monthly increase – and its year-to-date figure of 4518 is up 29 per cent compared to 2017. The results mean the UK is Abarth's healthiest European market.

FIAT'S HYBRID FUTURE REVEALED

FCA's Melfi plant will be the first in Italy to produce a Plug-in Hybrid Electric Vehicle (PHEV) when the Jeep Renegade PHEV is launched in early 2020. Pre-production will start in 2019.

The Renegade PHEV is the first European hybrid from FCA, following the US-made Pacifica PHEV and Dodge Ram mild-hybrid. Over 742,000 conventionally powered Renegades have been produced in Italy to date.

FCA's 2018-2022 business plan calls for a major electrification programme. By 2022, FCA will offer 12 electric propulsion systems (BEV, PHEV, full-hybrid and mild-hybrid). Some 30 different models will be electrified, including a new all-electric Fiat 500, Fiat 500 Giardiniera estate, Alfa Romeo 8C hybrid and Alfa GTV coupe with 640hp. Maserati will also launch a 'Blue' range of models including the Alfieri supercar, a new small SUV and electric versions of the Levante and Quattroporte.

BEST IN SHOW: ALFA ROMEO 6C TOURING

A 1948 Alfa Romeo 6C 2500SS by Touring Superleggera has won Best in Show at the Zoute Concours d'Elegance in Belgium. Touring also picked up the 'most elegant interior' award for its 2010 Bentley Continental Flying Star III estate (pictured right), while the 1966 Touring Lamborghini Flying Star II won the Shooting Brake class.

PROTOTYPES ON SHOW

A new exhibition called Italo Design 1968-1978 has been opened in Switzerland, dedicated to Italian car design of the 1970s. The Swiss Museum of Transport in Lucerne is hosting nine cars from the Corrado Lopresto Collection, all of them rare examples or prototypes.

The exhibition includes cars by Bertone, Ghia, Italdesign and Zagato. Designers being celebrated include Marcello Gandini, Giorgetto Giugiaro, Diego Ottina, Ercole Spada and Tom Tjaarda. The star exhibit has to be the Lancia Stratos-based Bertone Sibilo (pictured below). For more information, visit www.verkehrshaus.ch

PININFARINA MOVES TO GERMANY

Pininfarina has moved its headquarters to Munich, Germany under CEO, Michael Perschke. The Indian-owned company will continue to operate in Italy as well.

The first car to be produced by Pininfarina will be the PFo (pictured below), a luxury all-electric hypercar. This will boast 1900hp and 2300Nm of torque, for a 0-62 mph time of less than 2.0 seconds and over 250mph top speed, with a potential range of over 300 miles. The PFo will be launched at the 2019 Geneva Motor Show and produced from 2020, limited to 150 cars.

SIX NEW ALFA 105 BOOKS

A significant new series of six books on the Alfa Romeo Tipo 105 Series has been published, illustrated entirely with period photographs, most of which are published for the very first time.

Separate volumes document the different variants of each of the 105 Series Alfas: Giulia, Giulia GT, Spider, Montreal and Junior Z, with an additional book dedicated to the Arese factory. The text is in both German and English.

The full set comprises over 2000 pages. The largest volumes in the series are on the Giulia Tipo 105 saloons (1962-1977) and Giulia GT coupes (1963-1976), each at 528 pages long. The Spider volume (1966-1977) is 312 pages, the Montreal 264 pages and the Junior Z 192 pages, while the Arese factory book has 384 pages.

Publisher Dingwort Verlag prices the books between €59 and €119 per volume. For more information, visit www.dingwort-verlag.de

PARIS SHOW HIGHLIGHTS

Pininfarina designed (and built, in Italy) two prototypes for brand new Vietnamese carmaker VinFast. The LUX A2.0 saloon (above) and SA2.0 SUV were presented by David Beckham, no less!

Paris marked the European debut of the Ferrari 488 Pista Spider, the open-top version of the 720hp Pista. It's the fastest drop-top ever made by Ferrari. The roof can be raised or lowered in 14 seconds.

Ferrari launched its new 'Icona' series with the 810hp V12 Monza SP1 (single-seater) and SP2 (two-seater). SP1 has a unique hard tonneau covering the passenger area. Price tag is 2 million euros.

Dramatic shape of the Monza SP2 is inspired by racing barchettas of the 1950s but Ferrari says it's definitely not a retro design – it's an iconic inspiration. Just 499 Monzas are to be built.

Nice to see a Ferrari 275 LM at the show, specifically Helge Pehrsson's 1965 example that the exhibitor (the Mulhouse museum claims to be the most original example in the world.)

Italian racing car firm, Tecno, has joined forces with the Monaco-based car maker, Montecarlo, to produce this Alfa Romeo V8-powered GT with 503hp. Tecno says that only five examples will be manufactured.

PASSIONE SENZA TEMPO

HOT TO JOTA

A full 770hp of V12 grunt, clever aero tweaks and a track-focused spec make Lambo's new Aventador 'Jota' SVJ a truly extreme tool. Possibly the purest Lamborghini you can buy, we take the SVJ for a spin around Estoril circuit mong Lamborghini enthusiasts, the SV or 'Super Veloce' badge is about the most coveted. But there's another badge, used even more sparingly - only a handful of times over the years - that really gets Lambo fans' juices flowing, and it's back on the latest and greatest version of the Aventador. The name is Jota.

Last used on an extreme version of the Diablo way back in the mid-1990s, the Jota tag first graced a one-off Miura fettled by legendary Lambo test driver, Bob Wallace, who had plans to take the brand racing. Ferruccio Lamborghini was less keen, preferring to focus on road cars, so the programme was axed, the car sold and, sadly, later destroyed in an accident.

But when word got out, Lamborghini's customers began requesting Jota Miuras for themselves. The result was the Lamborghini Miura SVJ, a Miura SV with something of the flavour of the Jota, including its riveted bodywork and faired lights, but retaining the full interior of the donor car. Only seven such cars were built and it goes without saying that they're worth millions today.

Which might help take the sting out of the numbers you're looking at to get behind the wheel of its namesake, the Aventador SVJ. It costs a cool £350,000, but Lamborghini reckons it could sell every one of the goo it plans to build and then some. Climb behind the wheel and whip all 750 horses into a frenzy and you can see why. The naturally-aspirated V12 SVJ sounds obscenely good, and responds instantly to the throttle, two traits that are becoming less of a given in the modern turbocharged landscape.

Lamborghini is one of the last holdouts of naturally aspirated supercars (the only turbocharged model in Lambo's range is the Urus SUV), and the Aventador's replacement will add a hybrid power pack, meaning you might look at this as the last big Lamborghini built to the original recipe.

That £350k price makes it almost £80k more expensive than the regular Aventador S, which might sound like a lot, but it probably won't faze those with wallets fat enough to afford one. The Aventador occupies a strange place in the supercar hierarchy, being vastly more expensive than its Huracán little brother, but also less than half the price of next-rung-up hypercars like the McLaren Senna. So Lamborghini can afford to push its price a little.

Before we get into the differences between the regular Aventador S and the SVJ, it's worth recapping the difference between the baby Huracán and the Aventador. The former is an aluminium-bodied V10 machine that shares some DNA with parent company Audi's R8 - a fine, but vastly cheaper and less focused, machine. The Aventador, though, is the real deal. Built around a carbonfibre central structure, only the Aventador features Lambo's trademark scissor doors and mighty V12 engine.

But while there's no doubting the Aventador S's supercar credentials - it has a thumping 740hp V12 behind its two seats, can reach 217mph and offers its driver the visibility of a partially sighted man driving a tank - it's very definitely a street-biased supercar. The SVJ also has to work on the road, but it's been honed on, and for, the track.

There's certainly no forgetting that on Portugal's Estoril race circuit launch venue. On display in the pitlane (alongside one of the 63 examples of the 63'-badged anniversary editions commemorating the founding of Lamborghini in, er, 1963) is another SVJ, wrapped in camo and sitting under letters a foot high reading: 6:44.97.

No, not a part number for a Diablo door handle, rather the SVJ's lap time around the Nürburgring Nordschleife earlier this year – a record, of course. Interestingly, neither McLaren or Ferrari, Lamborghini's key supercar rivals, make a hoo-hah about Nürburgring times, preferring to keep the numbers to themselves, though McLaren's Senna, packing 30hp more than the SVJ, even more aero kit, and weighing 327kg less, is almost certainly faster than the SVJ. But for Lamborghini it's a big deal, giving the brand the kind of motorsport credibility it hasn't always enjoyed.

The SVJ's immediate predecessor, the Aventador SV, did the same job. And while it didn't break any records, it did duck under the 7min barrier, one of only three cars to do so at that time, thanks to a combination of reduced weight, stickier rubber and generous helpings of extra power and downforce. It's the kind of car you drive and wonder how it could go with deep black bitumen and freshly painted lines, the oils on the surface gave it all the grip of an icy multi-storey car park until the sun had had a chance to heat it up and some rubber had been laid down. For once I wasn't disappointed that Lamborghini hadn't gone full track-spec and switched to rear-wheel drive to save a few more kilos...

As it is, the Aventador SVJ weighs the same 1525kg

770hp is an outrageous amount of power for a midengined road car, but undeniably intoxicating

The starter button hidden beneath a military-look flap asks, 'Are you sure you want to press me?' >>> much faster. But Lamborghini managed it anyway, shaving 15sec from the SV's best time.

And one look at the SVJ tells you where the engineering team focused a lot of its efforts. Perched high on the rear is a monster of a spoiler, every bit as awe-inspiring as the Countach's optional boomerang wing from 1978. In fact, it's just one component in a suite of aero devices that include active flaps in the front bumper, a specially shaped floor and an aggressive rear diffuser.

But it's that spoiler that's the most fascinating. Borrowing the ALA (Aerodinamica Lamborghini Attiva) active aero tech from its Huracán little brother, the SVJ's rear wing is held aloft by one central pylon that's actually split into two channels, which feed the left and right side of the wing, spewing air into the slipstream through holes in the wing's underside to create drag. Electronically-controlled flaps manage the airflow from each nostril, allowing Lamborghini to tweak the aero across the left and right side of the car, for example pushing the lightly loaded inside wheel onto the track to maximise traction. Compared with its already planted SV predecessor, the SVJ's downforce is improved by 40 per cent.

We had the chance to try that for ourselves at the launch at Estoril, though not quite to the level Lamborghini might have hoped. When the Sant'Agata teamed rolled up at Estoril ready for the event, they discovered that the track had been unexpectedly resurfaced only days earlier. While it looked flawless without fluids as the old SV, despite the addition of new tech like the ALA system and the four-wheel steer that worked wonders for the Aventador S (and weighs 50kg more). This is still a big car – 143kg heavier than Lamborghini's excellent Huracán Performante, and almost two metres wide before you've counted the mirrors.

Limbo beneath the scissor door, drop down into the ridiculously firm bucket seat and you're faced with a fat-rimmed steering wheel between you and a crisp digital instrument display, and beyond that, the road, though a big chunk of that is obscured by A-pillars like an elephant's legs. As if the visibility weren't intimidating enough, the high-rise centre console houses a starter button hidden beneath a military-look flap. 'Are you sure you want to press me?' it asks.

Of course you do, and the reward doesn't disappoint. Instead of the muffled bassy growl of so many modern supercars, your ears are treated to a crisp, multi-tonal roar. Click the right paddle to engage first, squeeze the right pedal and things only get better.

Well, actually, they get better and worse. I'd forgotten the Aventador is still stuck with an ancient single-clutch sequential transmission (every rival has a dual-clutch set-up). Automatic changes are ponderous, and even in manual mode they're savage, but not that quick, particularly on the down-change.

But the engine is delicious. It's been massaged to 770hp, up from 750hp in the old SV, through the use of valve train and intake mods and a lighter flywheel to help it spin up quicker. It erupts the moment you touch the throttle and it gets better the longer you dare to hold it open. It's still an engine that does its best with a stack of revs on the dial, but while it hasn't got the easy mid-range punch of a turbo V8 - peak torque arrives at a nose-bleedy 675orpm - Lamborghini has put a lot of effort into fattening the torque curve in the 3000-6000rpm range you'll use on the road.

Give it the beans from rest and the SVJ will hit 62mph in 2.8 seconds, 124mph in 8.6 and, given enough space, keep hoovering up the horizon until you call it a day at the 217mph top speed. That makes it quicker than its Performante little brother (2.9sec, 8.9sec and 202mph), but turbocharged rivals such as the Ferrari 488 Pista and McLaren 720S can both reach 124mph in well under 8sec for £100k less.

And both feel substantially more agile, more playful than the SVJ. You don't flick this car though turns like you would in a smaller sports car; you make smooth, deliberate actions to get the best out of it. But you can definitely feel the benefit of the four-wheel steer system, which turns the rear wheels the opposite way to the fronts through lower-speed corners. Aventadors have always wanted to understeer unless seriously provoked, but thanks to the rear-steer and a centre differential that now disconnects the front wheels under braking and shuttles less torque to the front wheels in all situations, this one is less prone.

And when the front wheels do let go, you can feel what's happening. The steering is very weighty, which fits with the character of the car, but doesn't stint when it comes to communicating what's going on. And because the variable gearing switches to a fixed ratio in the track-focused Corsa driving mode, you can reliably predict the kind of input you're going to need for any corner. Likewise, the feel from the carbon ceramic brakes is excellent and the absolute stopping power verging on the uncomfortable.

Looking at it dispassionately – which is almost impossible with a Lamborghini – you might conclude that the smaller Huracán Performante is a better car than this. Almost as fast, every bit as good to listen to, even better to drive and two-thirds the price of an SVJ, it's arguably the best Lamborghini you can buy, and one of the best ever.

But for some that won't matter. Only the Aventador has that V12 engine, those iconic doors and a bespoke carbon structure that shares no DNA with Audi. For many of us, the Aventador is the truest Lamborghini, maybe the only true Lamborghini. And now that the brilliant Urus SUV is finding homes, and will likely double Lamborghini's output, cars like the SVJ only feel more special, and more important in painting the Lamborghini legend.

Hit by an ugly stick? Maybe. But there's beauty in this trio of beasts. From the brutal energy of Maserati's Shamal, through the monstrous Alfa SZ to Lancia's quirky Kappa Coupe, Italian style doesn't have to be delicate to have appeal eauty, they say, is in the eye of the beholder. If so, then ugliness is, too. The trio of cars we've gathered here have variously been beheld as misshapen, awkward, monstrous and brutal to the point of hideous. In Italy, they even called one of them Il Mostro – the monster.

Yet I'm here to argue that not only is their very ugliness an essential part of their appeal, but they also have a captivating inner beauty. All three have a peculiarly individual charm that goes beyond aesthetics.

After all, it's not as if these cars are ugly by accident. There is method in their apparent design madness. The stylists of each are stellar creators. The Maserati Shamal was designed by Marcello Gandini (who did the Lamborghini Miura and Countach), the Alfa Romeo SZ by Robert Opron (Citroen SM, Renault Fuego) and the Lancia Kappa Coupe by Enrico Fumia (Alfa 164, Alfa GTV/Spider 916).

If history has judged these cars akin to Macbeth's three ugly witches, I'm here to present an alternative history. One where they are, with every justification, loved and appreciated. These ugly ducklings are triumphant swans. Fly, my uglies, fly.

MASERATI SHAMAL: THE BRUTE

A Biturbo with brawn? That's just one aspect of Maserati's most extreme model of the 1990s – well, actually 1980s, since it was unveiled in December 1989, just before De Tomaso relinquished control of Maserati to Fiat. Extreme rarity is another aspect: in its six-year production life, a grand total of just 369 Shamals were made.

When you meet the Maser, it broods at you, its aggression barely contained. The original Biturbo shape is just discernible under massively fattened arches, 1980s side skirts and none-too-subtle slabs of bumpers. To me, it looks like the love-child of a Coke bottle and Kryten from Red Dwarf. Details collide in a kaleidoscopic frenzy: Gandini's signature slanted rear wheelarch profile; the bold black B-pillars; the banks of eight lights up front; the bonnet's purposeful cooling vents; and the extraordinary spoiler at the base of the windscreen (to deflect air and water from the wipers).

The 'brawn' aspect continues under the bonnet, with an all-aluminium V8 engine with twin IHI turbochargers – basically the engine that would eventually make it into the 3200 GT. Fire it up and you know you're in for a blast. This was a very quick car by 1990s standards, and it still is: 0-62 mph in 5.3 seconds and 170mph tops. Having two turbochargers ensures the torque curve is beefily linear; or at least, it is once it's on boost. The first turbo kicks in above 2500rpm, merging seamlessly with the second one to become stronger and stronger as the revs rise. Peak torque has already arrived at 280orpm, but you're seduced to explore the upper ranges where the boost and noise are phenomenal. Objectively, there's no point blitzing the 6500rpm limiter but it's intoxicating to hear the low-rpm growl give way to a full symphony of whistling turbos and chattering wastegates.

The six-speed Getrag manual 'box is brilliant, if old-school mechanical in feel, with a heavy clutch pedal to match. That somehow fits the car's brutish persona, as does the driveline shunt. While the Shamal can sometimes be a beast to drive, it's actually pretty relaxing as a GT, with excellent refinement and 29mph per 1000rpm in sixth gear.

The weight distribution – pronouncedly over the front wheels – means the rear end feels light and the wheels can spin up, even in the dry. No rain fell during our test drive but the car's owner – Clive Bate of Emblem Sports Cars – reports that it can snap in the wet without warning, despite the presence of a quite sophisticated differential. The steering is precise and fairly fast-acting (three turns lock-to-lock) but perhaps lacks a little feel. The Shamal lacks ABS, but the brake pedal is well servo'd and quickly hauls the 1417kg car to a halt.

All Shamals have Koni adaptive suspension, with four selectable damping rates via a switch that looks like a 1980s TV remote. But even on the softest setting, body roll is well controlled thanks to a hefty front anti-roll bar and a smaller rear one.

The cabin is a wonderful place to spend time: a feast of leather, polished wood and Alcantara. The seats are supportively bolstered yet comfy. The lenticular clock has the whiff of fine jewellery and the wooden steering wheel adds an aristocratic air. It can even carry four people at a push, and the boot's very usable, despite being encroached upon by a diff cooler and fuel swirl pot.

Overall, then, the Shamal is a real driver's car. This exquisite left-hooker example feels superbly tight, with just 40,310km on the clock and a concours trophy in the cabinet from the Maserati Owners' Club. If you're interested, it's for sale at £69,995 via Emblem Sports Cars creator was Frenchman Robert Opron who, as previously mentioned, also penned the Citroen SM and Renault Fuego, with which you can detect certain similarities. OK, so the design may have all the subtlety of a roughly butchered haunch of meat but it's deceptively effective, with a wind-tunnel smooth drag coefficient of just 0.30.

I do admit to some bias in the SZ camp, in that I actually own the car pictured here (number 249 of the 1036 SZs made, an original UK-supplied example). But having lived with my SZ for over five years, I'm not blind to its quirks and foibles. It does not, shall we say, have the precision build quality of a Porsche; small children could be lost in its panel gaps. And Alfa's decision to use 'Modar' plastic for the body panels – something no other car maker ever did – is one that generations of owners lament, since the paint suffers from maddeningly regular bouts of micro-blistering.

But these faults are somehow all part of this utterly extraordinary machine's charm. Inside, the quirkiness continues: exposed painted panels, tan leather upholstery and a faux-carbon dashboard. The Zagato-monogrammed seats are nicely supportive and sumptuous, although they lack adjustability. Behind the seats is an area reserved for luggage, complete with straps to keep your bags in place. The 'boot lid' doesn't access a boot – that would be far too sensible, wouldn't it? – but merely a space saver spare wheel.

The SZ shares much of its underpinnings with the Alfa 75 Group A/IMSA race car, including its coilover front suspension. Having the five-speed transaxle at the rear, where a de Dion tube sits, gives the car nearperfect weight distribution (56% front, 44% rear). That means superb balance through the bends, and any shuftiness in the back end is transmitted early and clearly, allowing you to adjust the throttle and cornering line with consummate ease.

Alfa claimed at launch that the SZ could pull 1.4g in corners, a record at the time. That was on 16-inch teledial wheels; my own SZ has 18-inch reproductions which, with 225/40 front and 255/35 rear tyres, give it even sharper turn-in. On the centre console are switches for adjustable damping but there are no 'sport' or 'comfort' modes here; the buttons simply raise and lower the ride height to overcome kerbs and sleeping policemen. In either mode, the ride remains pulverisingly hard.

As with the Shamal, the SZ does without ABS (reportedly Alfa deliberately didn't fit it because that's what racing drivers preferred). The SZ's brakes aren't very strong, so fitting uprated Ferodo DS2500 pads on my example has given a much meatier feel.

The 3.o-litre Busso V6 is a thing of glory. It's not super-powerful, though, despite Alfa uprating the fuel injection, camshaft timing, compression ratio and intake and exhaust manifolds. The result is 210hp; modern diesels have more grunt. But the exhaust note is glorious, helped in this case by a one-off system which has muscular oomph at the low end and a searingly sparkling top.

Just 95 SZs currently exist in the UK, according to AROC SZ Register records. Which is still loads more than either the Shamal (nine) or Kappa Coupe (unknown but surely the fingers of one hand would suffice). You'd be winning ugly in any of these cars, but the public doesn't get to see them very often...

LANCIA KAPPA COUPE: UGLY DUCKLING

Quirky. Attention-grabbing. Full of character. The Lancia Kappa Coupe is all of these things. Few would argue, however, that it is a masterpiece of elegance. Lancia described it, at launch, as having "sophisticated understatement and great character" comparable to the Flaminia Coupe and Gamma Coupe. Er, really Lancia?

There's something distinctly 'off' about the proportions; wheelbase too pinched for the car's height, overhangs too falollopy. The frameless doors look nice but the rear window's being flanked by two 'tail fins' – a supposed reference to the Flaminia Coupe – doesn't work terribly well.

But it sure has charm. And significance, because this was the last coupe Lancia ever made. Designed in-house by Centro Stile Lancia, it debuted at the 1996 Turin Show, although it didn't reach market until April 1997. It was dropped in March 2000 because the plain fact was, it was a sales flop. Lancia's forecast of 3000 units a year proved wildly optimistic: in the end only 3263 coupes were made in three years.

Aesthetics aside, the main reason why demand was slender was the price. It was built by Maggiora – at the same factory that made the Delta integrale and Fiat Barchetta – and was essentially a handmade car, which bumped up the price to luxury levels (although not in the UK, where it was never sold).

The front end, right up to the windscreen, is identical to the Kappa saloon's, but it's entirely different from there backwards. The coupe's shape is kiboshed by its compact wheelbase (120mm shorter than the saloon's). Lancia tried to make amends with a wider rear track but to little avail. The rear lights, by the way, are taken direct from the 1990s Delta (the one we never got in the UK), albeit divided by a chrome strip.

The engine range was interesting. The fivecylinder 20V of 'our' Kappa – one of only 837 built with this powerplant – comes straight from the Fiat Stilo Abarth. This 2.4-litre fivepot has decent flexibility for a non-turbo engine, with a smooth torque curve at relatively low rpm and a peak of 175hp, as well as a very charismatic soundtrack.

If you wanted more power, you could choose a 205hp 2.0 four-cylinder turbo (top speed 146mph, 0-62mph in 7.3 seconds), which was superseded in 1998 by the 220hp Fiat Coupe 20V Turbo five-cylinder lump. For more relaxed touring, the best choice was a detuned Alfa Busso 3.0 V6 (204hp, 137mph, 0-62 in 9.8 seconds), which in the Kappa was only ever offered with automatic transmission. As for the five-speed manual gearbox fitted to 'our' car, this works well, even if has a rather long and rubbery action.

Helping to put the power down via the front wheels is a Viscodrive viscous coupling, which means you can hoof the throttle early on corner apexes, although the steering can feel heavy when you do. The all-strut suspension does a good overall job of balancing ride and handling. Despite Lancia calling the tyres "low profile" at the time, their 55 section is pretty lofty by modern standards. On 16-inch alloys, the ride is very good, even if the handling suffers from comfort-orientated settings, even with the optional adjustable damping set to 'Sport'.

It's plush inside, with a very Italian feel. Standard gear includes climate control, electric Recaro seats, and Lancia even offered a very early sat nav option. Alcantara upholstery was standard, with Poltrona Frau leather optional – including some very brave 'Kaleidos' colours, such as vivid green, violet and turquoise. The Coupe is more of a 2+2 than a four-seater but I still managed to squeeze my 5ft 8in frame back there fairly easily. Oh, and the 500-litre boot is huge. We should add that this example, owned by Donald Smith, is for sale for £8750 – please see our classified pages for full details.

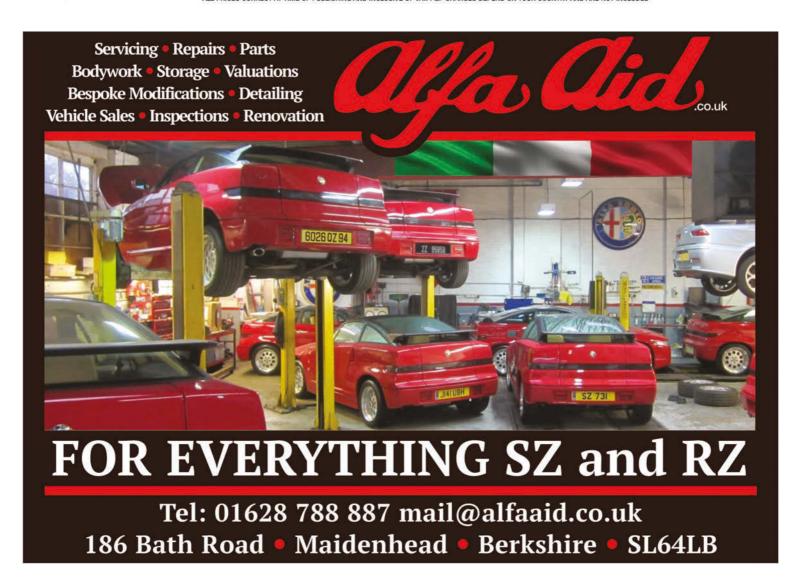

Shaped by the Wind

Scaglione's wind-cheating Alfa SS was designed to win races, but it eventually ended up being marketed as a luxury sports coupe. We compare a very early 750 example with a later 101, and come away utterly charmed ranco Scaglione was a truly remarkable man, even by the lofty standards of Italian car designers. From drawings for Lancia Aurelias for Carrozzeria Balbo in 1951 to the Intermeccanica Indra of 1972, he stunned the world with his creations. And let's not forget his immortal Alfa Romeo Tipo 33 Stradale, which has every right to be described as the most beautiful car in the world.

Story & images by Peter Collins

So before we take a detailed look at the two Alfa Romeo Giulietta

Sprint Speciales on these pages, it's worth assessing the impact of Scaglione on the design world. It was Scaglione who was arguably responsible for setting the design baselines for all the big three Turinese carrozzerie in the late 20th century, namely Pininfarina, Bertone and Italdesign.

It was with Nuccio Bertone that Scaglione started. Nuccio believed in putting his trust in one senior stylist, with occasional reference to an outside consultant, instead of the 'team' approach adopted by others. He was an agitator of men, whose methods were similar to those of Enzo Ferrari.

The Turin Show of 1952 was a watershed for Bertone. Famously almost on the brink of bankruptcy, its stand was visited by Stanley Harold 'Wacky' Arnolt from the USA, who was so taken by Bertone's work that he commissioned a new body for the humble MG TD chassis for US customers. By 1953, that extended to Bristol chassis, too. Scaglione's open sports racer design for Bertone became known as the 'bolide', while three extremely svelte coupes were built on the same chassis.

Between them, these MG and Bristol-based cars saved Bertone.

Franco Scaglione had been involved in style and shapes a lot earlier than this. Born in 1916 in Florence, he settled into fashion and dress creation but, although this was a success, cars were what he really wanted to design. He visited Pinin Farina, who appreciated what he was trying to do, but there was no real connection between the two men.

It was Scaglione's Fiat-based Abarth 1500 Berlinetta, which Bertone bravely committed to metal for the 1952 Turin Show, that showed the true genius and originality of Franco's thinking. Indeed, it impressed the American executives of Packard so much that they bought it off the stand and took it back to the USA as a design study.

Next came his three BAT (Berlinetta Aerodinamica Tecnica) cars. Initiated at the Turin Show in 1953 with BAT 5, the BAT 7 and BAT 9 followed in 1954 and 1955 respectively, all displaying gasp-inducing, yet logical, air-smoothing shapes. All were based on Alfa Romeo 1900 chassis.

At the same time, Scaglione was charged with the design of a coupe to be based on Alfa's upcoming new car, the Giulietta. In fact, the final shape of the Giulietta Sprint, as the coupe was christened, was worked up in collaboration with Felice Boano at Ghia, and the prototype incorporated the world's first hatchback (albeit opening laterally). The model was first introduced to the public in 1954, and such was the demand that Bertone was overwhelmed and resorted to Ghia to help manufacture them.

The Sprint was taken to heart by the competition fraternity, but it lacked power for races like the Mille Miglia, so the obvious answer was a more powerful, lighter version. The factory came up with the Sprint Veloce, which incorporated exactly those advantages. Something more was needed, though. A crashed SV was eventually turned into an even lighter, smoother car by Zagato (called the SVZ) and racers were soon beating a path to the Zagato's door.

Alfa's favoured stylist, Bertone, was then asked for ideas about aero shapes were entirely sound. The drag coefficient turned out to be as low as 0.28 – utterly remarkable for the time.

A second prototype appeared at the Geneva Show in March 1958, possibly merely the first car modified. The overhangs at front and rear were reduced, and the height of the roof was raised by 20mm. A third prototype then appeared at the Turin Show later in 1958, finally receiving the factory's blessing and an Alfa Romeo badge. This had front and rear overhangs slightly reduced again. The rear lights were now in a horizontal row of three each side with reflectors in the middle of each set. Flasher repeaters had been moved from the front wings to just below the headlights and a

It was difficult to see how anyone of normal height would be able to wear a crash helmet inside  its own take on a competition-suitable Sprint. To Franco Scaglione, this was a red rag. At the 1957 Turin Show, Bertone stand's hosted a prototype named Sprint Spinta – or 'Thrust'. The wheelbase was the same length as the SV's but overall the car was longer, lower and more streamlined, with a long, tapered nose and a wind-sculpted tail so typical of Scaglione. Journalist Gordon Wilkins commented: "[Scaglione] knows more than most about the science of wind cheating."

Clearly intended as a competition car, it had aluminium body panels, plastic windows and lightweight interior trim. The 1245mm height – 110mm lower than the standard Sprint – meant headroom was minimal. Wilkins said: "It was difficult to see how anyone of normal height would be able to wear a crash hat inside."

The shape at the front bore similarities to Franco's BAT g, but there was no Alfa Romeo badge on the nose, merely script announcing the car as a Giulietta Speciale on the truncated Kamm tail. It is interesting that it wasn't until 1961, some four years later, that a tail of this sort was adopted for use on the final series of Giulietta SVZ cars. Every line was a testament to Scaglione's inventive expertise.

At this stage, there was no obvious sign that the Sprint Speciale might be adopted by Alfa. Extensive aerodynamic tests were carried out, some at Moto Guzzi's own wind tunnel, which revealed that Franco's transparent bug-deflecting aero screen was mounted on the bonnet just ahead of the driver.

When the Sprint Speciale was finally launched on 24 June 1959 at Monza, further alterations were visible. The rear lights were now arranged vertically, five slots appeared in the bonnet to reduce pressure and help cooling, and the interior furnishings were more comfortable. The first production cars went under the generic title of 'low-nose' 750 SS. And we've been lucky enough to bring together one of these early cars, along with an example of a later SS (by which time several changes had been made to the model).

First, though, what were the advantages of the SS over the SV? Firstly, the SS enjoyed a lower frontal area, which meant less drag. Gregor Grant, in his 1961 Autosport magazine road test of the actual low-nose example seen here, stated that, "undoubtedly the science of aerodynamics has been applied to the design, for rarely have I travelled in a car which has so little wind noise at high speed". Another advantage of the SS was its five-speed gearbox.

Jason Wright, the current owner of the low-nose, told me that driving an SS from Italy to the UK was, considering it has only 129occ, a sheer delight. In fifth gear and with the shape of the bodywork, motorway work was as relaxing as any modern, larger-engined car.

Alfa Romeo presented the car as factory

ALFA ROMEO GIULIETTA SPRINT SPECIALE

auto italia 31

Original intended role as a competition car it didn't pan out, so SS was reimagined as a luxury coupe competition for the Zagato-built SVZs, but it quickly became apparent that the extra weight of the longer bodywork compared to the SVZ effectively negated the SS as a contender. So where did that leave the Sprint Speciale? The first production run – 101 Series cars required for motorsport homologation – were of the low-nose specification. That can clearly be seen on the example registered DNW 4. These cars in general had steel bodies with aluminium doors, bonnet and bootlid, but a very few lightweight 'alleggerita' cars were constructed entirely out of aluminium.

Although Sprint Speciales were used in competition, they raced far less frequently than SVZs. There were some notable results nevertheless, such as Riolo/Federico coming 13th overall and winning the 13oocc class in the 1960 Targa Florio (beating an SVZ!). At the later Nürburgring 1000km race, Stangl and Degner finished second in the 13oocc class. Despite this, it was clear that for the best results you needed an SVZ, so Alfa rethought the future of the SS. It decided to relaunch it as a top-of-the-range coupe, modifying many details to achieve this. Aluminium was retained only for the bonnet and bootlid, glass replaced Plexiglas and the nose was raised by 70mm.

We were lucky enough to find two SS cars, one from each of the first two production runs and, possibly for the first time in print, compare them together. From the front, the earlier car is easily identified by its 'droop snoot' nose, looking almost like an anteater, with the Alfa Romeo grille and badge seemingly perched on the tip. In comparison, the later car has a raised and softened look, with a slim bumper for protection. Note the bug deflectors at the back of both bonnets. At the tail end of the later car, the bootlid extends to, and includes, the edge of the rear bodyline. In addition, the dainty bumperettes of 'DNW' are supplemented by a full-width bumper that hugs the lower bodyline, and has reflectors in each outer corner.

On the sides, the Giulietta Sprint Speciale badging is similar, although it's nearer the A-post on the later car, which also has flashing side repeaters. Inside, the ignition switches are on different sides of the steering wheel in each car, the door cards are of different designs and the dials in the dashboard are transposed with the rev counter in the middle on the later car.

To drive, both cars are well endowed with all the usual Giulietta advantages, such as superbly precise handling. Writer Gregor Grant commented: "As for understeer or oversteer, I feel that the car possesses something in between – in other words, it is just right!" The steering is accurate and beautifully weighted. Performance is amazing for just 1290cc, with a top speed of over 120mph. The noise levels are unexpectedly low, too, thanks to Scaglione's slippery body shape.

The SS never fulfilled its intended function as an allout competition car for Alfa Romeo. The failure of Franco's Alfa Abarth 1000 Berlinetta to be taken on by Arese was another reason why there was eventually a falling out between Scaglione and Bertone. None of that should detract from the fact that the SS was a glorious example of Franco's ingenuity, gut feeling and understanding of fluid shapes. It does no harm that the SS looks so good, either.

Back to the Future

Farina's gorgeous drop-top Aurelia B50 is a poignant reminder, from nearly 70 years ago, of Lancia's halcyon days

he time is rapidly approaching when petrolheads at the Vatican (well, it's a fun thought, isn't it?) will be preparing a requiem for dear old Lancia: a whiff of incense, a quick Requiem Aeternam and then... well, over and out. The marque's decline and fall – from producer of some of the world's most beautiful, exquisitely engineered and sought-after cars to purveyor of just one rather dull and dated supermini (and that, almost certainly, for not much longer) – is a tortuous, sad and familiar story. But let's not go there; instead, let's remember the good times.

"Remembrance of things past is not necessarily the remembrance of things as they were," declared Marcel Proust. Time, certainly, can distort our memories and perspectives. But not always; and just as, for example, the fancifully-named Austin Allegro ('Adagio' would have been more appropriate) really was every bit as dreadful as we remember it (if we remember it), so the Lancia Aurelia still enraptures with its repertoire of superlatives from the very first moment of reacquaintance. Of course, if you remember the Aurelia B50 from back in the day you will now have teeth the length of Pinocchio's nose. My own memories of it go back merely a dozen years or so, to a sunny day in Milan when we shot one for this august organ. But it wasn't as nice as the one you see here.

Aurelias can, I'd suggest, be divided into two definitive categories: the big, comfy saloons and cabriolets (B10, 21, 50, 52 and so on) and the more compact and sporty numbers (B20 GT, B24 Spider and Convertible). But they all stem from a common seed, sewn in the late 1940s by, essentially, three people. Gianni Lancia, son of company founder Vincenzo, was just 23 years of age when he became General Manager in 1948. Vittorio Jano, despite his 13 years at Alfa Romeo (during which he designed most of their greatest pre-war models), was sacked by Alfa in 1937 for failing to beat Mercedes and Auto Union on the racetrack. He joined Lancia the following year, Farina, and he too played a major part in the new model's success. The dashing, monocoque B20 and B24s are undoubtedly the finest feathers in his Aurelia cap; but like most of the leading carrozzerie of the time, Farina also availed himself of the separate chassis produced by the factory, alongside the mainstream monocoque saloons, to cater for coachbuilt variants such as this.

The B50 was there right from the start, 485 being produced between 1950 and 1952. It shared with the B10 all of the radical features which set the Aurelia apart from its contemporaries, and which induced becoming Technical Director in 1943.

By this time, multi-talented 31-year old engineer Francesco De Virgilio, who joined the company in 1939, had been tasked with finalising the design of a proposed V6 engine for the Aprilia. De Virgilio's painstaking research eventually convinced him that, in order to achieve acceptably smooth, vibration-free running, such an engine had to have a V-angle of either 60 or 120 degrees. But not even 60 degrees could be accommodated under the Aprilia's narrow bonnet; and a 45-degree prototype - which could was deemed insufficiently refined. So towards the end of 1948, Gianni Lancia, impressed by De Virgilio's diligence and reasoning, finally consigned the illustrious 11-year old Aprilia to history and instigated development of a replacement with enough engine room for a 60-degree V6.

The shape of the original B10 Aurelia saloon owed much to a special-bodied Aprilia designed by Pinin amongst motoring cognoscenti the reverence which endures to this day. The all-alloy 1754cc engine was the first V6 to go into series production anywhere. It provided a modest 56bhp at 4000rpm, which was transmitted via a four-speed gearbox (with synchromesh on the top three) nestling with the clutch, final drive and inboard drum brakes on the rear transaxle. At the front, suspension was by the familiar sliding pillars (which had first appeared on the Lambda, in 1922), but the rear end featured a new independent set-up, with semi-trailing arms, coil springs and hydraulic dampers. The final touch was the revolutionary new Michelin X radial tyre – well, four of them – which contributed hugely to levels of handling and roadholding unprecedented at the time.

The example we have here is a little bit special, having been built in late 1950 for the 1951 Geneva Salon. It was bought off the show stand by an English lady, the magnificently-monikered Anna (Nancy) Cobleigh Payne-Jennings, for 32,531 Swiss Francs (around £155,000 in today's money). Sadly, she died within a year and it was then purchased by a Mr Jenkins of Richmond, Virginia, who was visiting England. Jenkins and his wife then embarked on an extensive tour of the UK and Europe, during which they visited the flamboyant coachbuilder Jacques Saoutchik, in Paris. Saoutchik added some signature features – chrome flanks on the rear wings, extensive chrome work to the hood frame and door shuts, plus perforated silencer covers and built-in Marchal auxiliary lamps.

It remained with the family at their Palm Beach home for 43 years until Jenkins died in 1995. It then passed to his son Todd, who in 1996 sold it to Rick Fitzgerald, a professional car restorer. He undertook a slow and careful restoration, finished just in time for the 2005 Pebble Beach Concours d'Elegance, where it was placed third in Class. He had undertaken the restoration to a very high standard for his own personal use. Sadly, he then found himself getting divorced, enforcing the car's sale and subsequent return to the UK.

It's still as spick and span as you could wish for, and a joy to behold. Overall, the cabriolet's lines are pleasingly clean and uncluttered from every angle. The extra four inches of wheelbase compared to the B10 saloon are clearly evident in side profile. Given the amount of legroom this provides in the back, you do wonder why the two rear seats are of the 'occasional' variety, with meagre fold-down squabs revealing non-existent backrests – there's easily room for two comfy armchairs back there. But two people would not go short of luggage space, as this car's suite of suitcases clearly demonstrates – they weren't even in the boot.

Saoutchik's adornments aside, the detailing of hand-made Italian cars of this period is invariably exquisite, and so it is here. The wonderfully delicate fold-out door handles, stylish internal door cards and furniture, the T-spoked cream steering wheel and the unusually neat and tidy (for the period) disposition of switchgear on the painted dash are all soothing on the eye, no doubt helping to convince the owner that her/his not-inconsiderable investment was justified. Instrumentation is simple – clock, fuel and oil-pressure gauges, and a speedo marked from '2' to '14' (or 20-140km/h) – supplemented by a slightly awkward after-market temperature gauge attached to the bottom of the dash. Tellingly, there is no rev counter.

The front seats promise considerably more comfort than those behind, and they deliver. The lack of lateral support might be an issue in a B20; but here, as I'm about to discover, you'll not be too concerned about bracing yourself against high cornering forces. Firing up the V6 brings a bit of a shock: the stately cabriolet comes on like a pur-sang racer, the raucous growl from the rear a tad incongruous, and Very Loud. Somewhat taken aback, I must now address myself to the steering-column gearchange. These infernal things don't improve with age, but the Aurelia's is tolerably slick – first and second nearest the dash, the top two towards you. The clutch is friendly; take-off achieved without drama.

Now we do go back in time, and need to reacclimatise to steering with a certain amount of free play around the centre, and a graceful, floating quality to the ride. I'm not expecting much from the unassisted drum brakes, and I'm not pleasantly surprised. But think well ahead and the heel-toe double-declutch that's advisable on downchanges is none too difficult to achieve. Apply some lock and the steering acquires a much greater degree of certainty, commanding neutral turn-in – at 'sensible' speeds, I should add – aided greatly by those new-fangled Michelin radials.

In truth, 56bhp is not a great deal in something this size and weight (around 1240kg) and progress rather belies any expectations raised by the rorty exhaust. (The thought of a B50 with the later 2.5-litre V6 and double the power is tantalising. Heresy to the purists, of course.) And maximum power-at-all-costs was never a priority for Lancia, which was always more concerned with driveability, handling and balance. That so many distinguished racers elected to drive Aurelias in period is an impressive vindication of that philosophy. But almost without exception, they went for the B20 GT, which offers a far more focused driving experience.

Whether the likes of Fangio, Collins, Behra and Hawthorn would have been as happy in the B50 is conjectural. Somehow I doubt it; she is very much the grande dame to the B20's flighty floozy. Here, dignity is paramount – she'd much rather not have to lift her skirts and make unseemly haste. But go with the flow, sit back and enjoy the details, the ambience, the view, and you'll very quickly feel that the world is an altogether better place for it. The B50 has a timeless quality about it which transcends past and present. Proust's compatriot Coco Chanel put it well: "Fashion fades, only style remains the same".

Giugiaro the Great

DESIGN ROYALTY, PRECOCIOUSLY GIFTED, A HISTORY MAKER - ALL THESE DESCRIPTIONS APPLY TO GIORGETTO GIUGIARO. AS HE TURNS 80 YEARS OLD, HE TALKS US THROUGH HIS DECISIVE DECADES IN CAR DESIGN

Story by Ruoteclassiche/Giosuè Boetto Cohen/Chris Rees Photography by Ruoteclassiche/Alessandro Bianchi

There is always a royal feeling whenever you visit Giugiaro appy birthday, Giorgetto Giugiaro. Born in 1938 in Garessio, Cuneo (Piedmont), one of Italy's greatest designers has just celebrated his 80th year on the planet. Most of those years have been spent in the searing limelight of car design.

It might well not have turned out that way, had he pursued the same career as his father and grandfather: painting. The young Giorgetto quickly developed a passion for art but he was persuaded to study not just art by day, but technical design at night as well. That brought him to the attention of Dante Giacosa, who recruited him for Fiat in 1955.

Giugiaro actually only worked for two independent studios before he struck out on his own: Bertone (1959– 1965) and Ghia (1966– 1967). In 1968 he formed a stellar partnership with engineer Aldo Mantovani by founding Italdesign.

Most of his car designs – from city cars to striking sports cars – have become icons of the automobile history: his portfolio includes such luminous stars as the Alfa Romeo Giulia Sprint GT, Alfasud, VW Golf, Fiat Panda, Fiat Punto, Lancia Thema and Alfa Romeo 159. Giugiaro also designed industrial products like cameras and even his own pasta.

Giugiaro is one of the few big names of Italian coachbuilding to design his cars personally. His was a unique company, too. Despite having over 1000 employees at its peak, it was never a 'factory floor' type operation. It was always run as a factory of ideas, technology and prototypes. Over 100 vehicles were designed by Italdesign, which in 2010 was subsumed by the Volkswagen Group. The final hand-over occurred in 2015, after which (in 2016) Giorgetto and his son Fabrizio founded GFG.

We were lucky enough to interview the maestro in his 8oth year. Although he is always a jovial and smiling host, generous in words and very open to listening, there is always a royal feeling whenever you visit him. Entering the gates at his old Moncalieri HQ always felt like arriving at a royal mansion. You would perceive the subliminal presence of a thousand subjects, doors would open and close silently. and some of his 'subjects' would call him cavaliere ('knight'). Not quite 'king', perhaps, but for a republic founded on labour, the title is definitely worth something.

Nevertheless, Giugiaro's presence inspires a certain awe, now every bit as much as in his heyday.

Giugiaro's initials underscore over 100 prototypes and 200 production cars. His biography, The Roads of Design, published in 2014, is a mighty 400 pages long, while a 5000 square metre exhibition was hosted last year at the Turin National Car Museum.

Fabrizio. The studio is located inside a princely mansion that you reach after a five-minute drive through a centuries-old park overlooking Italy's car capital, Turin.

As we draw breath to ask our first question of a man who started working 60 years ago, Giugiaro immediately has providential. And crucial too. So, this is my message to young people. Do not waste your time daydreaming; rather learn how to recognise good suggestions.

"The second key person in my life was Nuccio Bertone. He welcomed me, raised me, believed in me and invested in my

This is my message to young people: do not waste time daydreaming ""

He is the 'designer's designer' – the man most car stylists say is their standout creative. Indeed, in 1999 he was named Designer of the Century, standing out above all others for his contributions to the car industry.

Thousands of pages have been written about his career, and it's somewhat daunting to think of questions for such design royalty. Giugiaro smiles as he sits before us in the frescopainted room inside the HQ of GFG, the venture created with his son something to say. "First thing, I really should like to send a message to young people," he exclaims in his unmistakable alto voice. "I am forever in debt to two people. First is my father, because he gave me the most important piece of advice in my life. He told me not to be stubborn about becoming a painter like him and my grandfather. The world had changed a lot in the meantime and he suggested that I study technical design, along with art. His suggestion was powerful, brilliant and follies. He offered me my big chance. I would recommend that smart trainees invest in their apprenticeship, try hard, work hard and learn as much as they can. Do not argue; simply work, learn and do not ask anything in return."

After delivering this statement, Giorgetto is wracked by doubt. "Well, perhaps I should also thank the great caricaturist Golia for letting me into his club of thinkers. And Dante Giacosa for opening up the gates of Fiat for me. And my partner, Aldo Mantovani – we always got along so well, better than a married couple. And how could I forget my main clients, Rudolf Hruska, Gianni Agnelli and Ferdinand Piëch?"

You've thanked quite a lot of people there...

Well, you must understand me. Let's take Hruska for example. In 1968, Mantovani and I were 30 years old and Italdesign had just been founded. Here comes this Austrian engineer, called to work with Alfa Romeo by Giuseppe Luraghi. He starts talking about a completely new car... it was top secret at the time. The manufacturing plant did not exist, either.

Of course, the Alfasud – the first Alfa to really challenge Fiat.

We would meet incognito in restaurants and coffee bars... He would sketch his ideas on paper towels.

Measurements, weights, restrictions. Every detail was sharp and clear in his clever, meticulous mind. Every detail should offer much and cost little.

Did you always agree on design and aesthetics?

We came up with two quite advanced mock-ups. He listened, thought it over and eventually chose one. We were ready to leave but he went back to the mock-up with a ruler and started measuring. The numbers were not quite adding up in his head. "I don't like it any more, let's go for the other one," he said. He was keen on aesthetics, but budget and function mattered more to him.

The Alfasud looks great today but it caused eyebrows to be raised when it came out, especially the tail.

Once again, engineer Hruska had the last word. He wanted the boot to be spacious enough for five pieces of luggage, as big as a Mercedes. So we did all we could to create enough space. We even moved the fuel tank in front of the wheels.

Let's continue with your production cars – ultimately, that's what people like the most.

And so do I. Yes, let's talk about the Panda. Hruska was no longer there, replaced by several department heads, determined to fulfil Carlo De Benedetti's legacy. The idea of making the Panda originally came from him. We ended up having to deal with maybe 20 different people who were afraid of making mistakes and regarded us with distrust. I was the first freelance designer admitted inside the factory after generations of 600, 500, 850 and 126, all created in-house. I wanted to make a minimalist, Spartan car, also from a manufacturing point of view. But I wanted it to be cute, so it would steal customers from the Renault R4 and Citroen Dyane. Equipped with leafsprung suspension and flat glass, the car was so basic that Umberto Agnelli ended up saying, "Add at least a few centimetres of glass, please". And that's what we did.

What about the De Lorean and Maserati Ghibli? Did those companies also like doing more with less?

For sure. A clever use of resources and functionality have always been the core of my work. Today even more than yesterday, with seven billion people inhabiting our planet.

You did the same with Golf, the car that rescued Volkswagen in 1974.

Yes, but once again, I paid the price of my young age. When I first got to Wolfsburg, an entire platoon of German engineers had been deployed to broach my ideas. But I caught them in an ambush. I started by making technical enquiries and raising all sorts of questions, cleverly avoiding the issue of design. They liked my approach. They chose me after seeing four of my designs at the Turin Show, and they wanted me to convince them they had made the right choice.

I had been called to develop a family of cars. But after presenting the future Passat, things started snarling up. VW's new manager had a traditional approach and different ideas. It should not be forgotten that Volkswagen meant Beetle, and the development of new models slowed down. The Golf segment was questioned. Luckily enough, the research was already at a late stage and it was no longer possible to step back.

You were eventually given a tailor-made Golf.

Yes, my five-door GTI.
Only two were made: one for me, the other for Piëch. The gift was because they'd started making money on the Golf.

What about this concept car painting you've just created?

This is my first prototype that appeared at a car show. It's the 1963 Chevrolet Corvair Testudo, one of the few cars I wanted to buy back when the chance came up. It represents the early years of my career, embodying my style as it was over 50 years ago. But not only that: it was already a practical, running car, fitted with mass-produced mechanicals. That's also why I think I have a special tie to the Testudo. I'm still hooked on car designs that work, not just ones that are good-looking.

n its 50th anniversary year, it's no surprise that Ferrari's 365 GTB/4 'Daytona' has taken a lot of limelight in the world's press during 2018. But I'm here to shine a beam on a car that very much hides in the Daytona's shadow – its sister model, the 365 GTC/4 – and argue its cause. I reckon it's an underrated, understated beauty that deserves far greater appreciation.

Don't get me wrong, I'm a big fan of the Daytona – how it looks, how it drives, how it feels to sit in – and I'm in no doubt about how thoroughly deserved its iconic status is. The fact that the GTB/4 had a successful racing career is always going to give it extra kudos, too. So why should anyone look at the GTC/4, which was effectively a flabby four-seater iteration of the GTB/4? I hope I can persuade you.

The 365 GTC/4 was launched in 1971, and took a quite different approach to the car it replaced, the 365 GT 2+2 (which we featured in the August 2018 issue of Auto Italia). In contrast to the lumbering 'Queen Mary' 2+2, Ferrari's new four-seater was much more compact. Its 2500mm wheelbase was substantially shorter than the 2+2's, but having 100mm extra wheelbase than the Daytona allowed two extra small seats to be squeezed in the rear.

The GTC/4 was styled by Pininfarina, which also constructed the bodywork and trimmed it, before it sent the part-finished car to Maranello for the mechanical components to be fitted. Most of the bodywork is steel, with only the bonnet and boot lid in aluminium. OK, Pininfarina's design may not slot into history as an iconic shape in the way that the Daytona does, yet I've spoken to countless enthusiasts who actually prefer the GTC/4's subtly lithe lines.

This is a sophisticated and elegant shape that rewards extended appreciation. The pointy nose features pop-up twin headlights – that 1970s 'must have' feature – to keep it clean and very low. Perhaps the car's most controversial feature is its black rubber front bumper; this can look odd with certain paint schemes but it works best with dark colours such as this example's metallic blue. From the wedgy front end, the smooth-sided body undulates, exaggerated by a teardrop-shaped glasshouse and slender fastback rear end, culminating in a neatly cut-off Kamm tail. Classic triple rear lights nestle above a plain matt black bumper. Keeping the Daytona vibe going, the five-spoke alloys with knock-off spinners on Rudge hubs look just right.

Step inside and the positive impressions continue.

FERRARI 365 GTC/4

The dashboard is a pleasing mélange of 1970s grand tourer and aircraft cockpit. The bare metal finish for the centre console has a certain period charm, while the leather seats are firm yet comfortable. The rear seats are just about big enough for kids and can be folded down to create a luggage area. And what's this – electric windows and air conditioning? In the heat of our 2018 summer, yes please.

How about the way it drives? In some ways, it actually feels better than a Daytona. For a start, there is a bigger glass area and you sit a little higher, so visibility is excellent, accompanied by a light, airy feeling to the whole cabin.

The heart of any Ferrari of this era is its V12 engine – in this case the classic 4.4-litre unit with six Weber carbs. This was detuned very slightly compared to the 365 GTB/4 (340hp versus 352hp). The differences to the Daytona powerplant include dry sump lubrication (rather than wet sump), different cylinder heads and side-draught carbs (rather than down-draught) to reduce the bonnet height.

Peak power arrives lower down the rev range than the Daytona, keeping the engine more tractable at low speeds. Indeed, there's very strong torque at low revs, accompanied by a satisfyingly deep exhaust burble. But the V12 is still capable of exceeding 7000rpm, and when you extend it towards its max, the throaty howl that builds relentlessly is unmistakably luscious.

The gear lever nestles in a conventional five-speed gate with none of the exposed metal that typified Ferraris of this era. Despite the long throw between gears, it's surprisingly easy to shift, with a positive, weighty heft to the lever action, while the clutch pedal is beefy but not too heavy.

The suspension marks a good compromise between ride and handling. As with several grand touring Ferraris of this era, it has self-levelling rear suspension to keep the ride both level and comfy. Having power assistance for the steering is a huge boon for low-speed manoeuvring, aided by being fairly low-geared. Luckily it loads up feelsomely as you apply lock in corners, and isn't over-light. Directional stability is excellent, and in bends the mild initial understeer gives you plenty of confidence to push on. Being more enthusiastic in corners, you can induce oversteer, but since this is a fundamentally well-balanced car (with virtually equal weight distribution front to rear), it's a cinch to control.

The GTC/4 had a relatively short production run, from 1971 to 1972, during which time only 500 examples were built. This particular example is a 1972 car, one of just 31 original UK-supplied GTC/4s (of which a mere 20 are thought to remain on British roads). It's up for sale at Rardley Motors of Surrey, and the price of £279,990 looks like a bargain – less than half what an equivalent Daytona would cost. As ever with Ferraris, four-seaters offer the best value.

Its deep blue metallic paint, tan hide upholstery and dark blue carpets work sybaritically well together. It was not originally blue, though. Ordered by Maranello Concessionaires in January 1972, the selected colour was Grigio Le Sancy (named after a thoroughbred race horse) with blue hide and light blue carpets. Its first owner was Simon Agace (of the estate agents, Mann & Company), who paid £9486.98 for it and took delivery in July 1972.

He covered 16,000 miles in it in its first year, during which time the warranty work apparently included a transaxle rebuild! The car was sold, along with his brother's Ferrari Daytona, after company cutbacks due to the oil crisis. In 1974, it was bought by the 11th Baronet of Loton Park in Shropshire, whose 1349 metre-long drive is one of the UK's longest hillclimb courses. By 1978, with 43,800 miles on the clock, it was owned for 20 years by the same man, who got marque specialist, John Etheridge of Watford, to maintain it. Its next owner bought it in 1998 via Etheridge for £32,500 and undertook a full restoration. Every nut and bolt was removed and everything was either rebuilt or replaced, a job that took some seven years to complete. In 2007, it deservedly won a trophy from the Ferrari Owners Club as the best pre-1975 car. Mike Wheeler of Rardley says: "Without doubt this is one of, if not the most, meticulously detailed cars and histories I have ever seen. We have also been able to check and verify that all numbers match."

Mike also tells us that the specialist and GTC/4 owner, Miles Wilkins, is currently researching a book on the GTC/4: "A road test for the book carried out at Millbrook gave a genuine 155mph with a fifth wheel attached and 100orpm still to go. Miles believes that the GTC/4's superior aerodynamics to the Daytona and better attitude – the self-levelling rear suspension keeps the tail up under hard acceleration, reducing underbody turbulence – help reduce the power and weight advantages of the Daytona. John Surtees, who owned a GTC/4 new, rated it as one of the best, if not Ferrari's best, road cars. Praise indeed."

As for this car's original owner, Simon Agace, he was quoted as saying: "I had two small children and they happily got in the back. I did some long runs to the south of France before there were speed limits, so it was run in carefully. At 120-130 [mph], it purred and you could hear the radio and the air con was good. The lighter steering was a big asset. The Daytona was too heavy for general driving and parking."

That sums up the appeal of the GTC/4 perfectly, and why it deserves your attention, even next to the overshadowingly mighty Daytona. The GTC/4 is an eminently usable, enjoyable classic. It's a 'go to events' kind of car, perfect for taking the family to Goodwood. It benefits from being an unshowy machine, and it offers far, far keener value than a Daytona. Personally, I like to think of it as an understated gateway to the world of classic Ferrari V12s: just lovely.

Forget everything negative you've ever heard about the Ferrari 348 and be prepared for a very pleasant surprise – that's the message from two evangelical owners of 348s, both road and race n Ferrari marque lore, the 348 languished for years in a netherworld between used car status and classic-dom. Purists railed that it lacked the aesthetic purity of the 328 that it replaced, while others carped about its lack of dynamic ability compared to the F355 it spawned. Even company supremo Luca di Montezemelo went on record at the launch of the 360 Modena in 1999, saying: "Ferrari won't be making any more mistakes like the 348." Ouch. In so many ways, and on so many levels, the 348 was on to a loser the moment it broke cover 29 years ago.

That's one version of history. The thing is, it was well received at the time, for the all brickbats that have been levelled at it since. What's more, the 348 in its many guises is beginning to garner quite the retinue. There are fans - quite a few of them, in fact. It is that rarest of things - an underrated Ferrari. Though never held in the wider public's affections in the same way as the 308/328, the 348 was a commercially successful model that helped Ferrari weather the early 1990s global recession. Announced at the 1989 Frankfurt Motor Show, it represented a major departure from preceding Maranello supercars, in that there was a universal homologated specification rather than endless detail changes between versions sold in different countries.

Distinct from earlier V8 Ferraris, the 348 did away with the usual Ferrari practice of using a tubular steel chassis, in its place a pressed steel item with a tubular engine subframe. It also had its 3.4-litre 'Tipo F119D' unit sited longitudinally rather transversely for a truly competition-inspired layout (much like its F40 big brother). A development of the outgoing 328's enduring Franco Rocchi-conceived engine, its power output was increased to 300hp at a dizzying 7200rpm. The gearbox was mounted transversely to the rear of the engine. Ferrari claimed a top speed of 165mph, with the o-6omph dash taking a mere 5.5 seconds. That was seriously quick for the period. By means of comparison, its Testarossa big brother was purportedly capable of o-6omph in 5.2sec before topping out at 180mph.

For some, the sticking point was – and remains – the styling. Clearly inspired by the Testarossa, not least its slatted side strakes, the 348's outline was predictably the work of Pininfarina. It was also the Turin styling house's second stab, its first attempt having been rejected. Bodied in steel (save for the aluminium bonnet and boot, plus glassfibre front and rear body control and its meaty yet beautifully positive steering that allows it to feel so natural through the Esses of Le Mans... In the 348 you've got the same degree of body control, the same iron tautness through the corners, but the steering – lighter than the Honda's but with much more feedback – lifts it clear of even the mighty NSX at La Sarthe."

The oft-highly critical Car meanwhile, gushed forth: "There is nothing like [the 348]. It communicates so richly, involves you so completely. And, when you have finished driving it, cocooned in that exquisite cockpit, you can get out and feast your eyes on one of the loveliest cars ever designed." Stateside, the late great bumpers), build quality was markedly improved over previous models. Offered in closed form (TB for Transversale Berlinetta) or with a lift-out roof panel (TS for Transversale Spider), both models were replaced by the GTB and GTS versions respectively from late 1993, which boasted an extra 20hp and styling revisions inline with sister models such as the 512 TR. Rarest of all was the Zagato-customised Elaborazione edition, just 12 of which were made of the envisaged 20 cars, with styling revisions that teetered on vulgarity.

The 348 has long been a victim of maulings by magazines that should know better; the same ones that showered it with praise in period but have since developed selective amnesia. Autocar, for example, stacked the 348 against three rivals – Honda NSX, Porsche 911 Turbo and Lotus Esprit – on a road trip to Le Mans. Once in France, it found: "It's the Honda's

Phil Hill was more circumspect when he wrote in Road & Track: "When I went out in the 348 at Fiorano, I was warned to be careful because the tyres (Bridgestones in this case) were brand new. I noticed a certain tendency to oversteer, but wrote that off to the new tyres... The fanfare surrounding the 348 is justified."

The 348 hasn't completely outrun its haters, but those that love the model really love it. And none more so than Ray Ferguson and Ian Sterling. The old friends and sometime on-track rivals are fervent Ferrari fans with a particular penchant for the 348 in particular. What's more, there's plenty of overlap in their ownership histories. Stories are being told the long way around as we wait for the rain to clear, neither man being what you might call 'precious' about their cars.

Ferguson has every reason to be, however, as his 348 TS is about as close to perfect as you can get. What's Ray Ferguson's targa-roof 348 is utterly immaculate. This is actually the second time he's owned it!

FERRARI 348 TWIN TEST

Ian Sterling's superb 348 Challenge is one of only 59 race-spec cars converted by the factory in period more, he has owned it twice. Not only that, he also used to own Sterling's race car, as he recalls: "I bought 'RAY 348' – my first Ferrari – in 1990. I convinced my wife to let me spend the tax money, VAT money and part-exchange my Porsche for it on the basis that if she said I had to sell it to put money back into the business, I would do so without moaning! As soon as I got the car I was hooked. I worked days, nights, evenings and weekends to pay it all off and the rest is history. I've been hooked ever since.

"It was followed by 348 Challenge car, but then I missed my road car so much that a friend of mine, who was very ill, persuaded me to buy his 348 TS. I then bought a left-hand drive 348 GTB from Germany and had it converted to a race car which I raced in the Auto and I couldn't do anything more with it concours-wise. A decade later, I came across the dentist at a car show and asked him about 'my' car. He mentioned it was for sale. It turned out that he hadn't even started the engine for five years. The 348 was still in perfect condition so I bought it back. The car had done only goo miles in the 10 years he had owned it!"

The equally affable Sterling followed a similar path to Ferrari ownership, even if he hadn't originally planned on becoming a track warrior. "Over the years, I had many low-value Fiats and Alfas and can clearly remember a Classic & Sportscar magazine front cover featuring a Ferrari 308 GT4 with the strapline 'A Ferrari for the price of a Mondeo'," he muses. "That got me thinking. 15 years later, I just about managed to scrape

I missed my roadgoing 348 so much that I bought a 348 TS. All told, I've had four of them ""

Italia racing series so, all told, I've had four of them."

Ferguson's competitive instincts also stretch beyond his trackside forays. "I campaigned it for 10 years," he says. "It was used for high days, holidays and so on. I also raced it a couple of times. I then decided to enter it in the Ferrari Owners' Club and Autoglym concours events. I really wanted to win the FOC Car of the Show award, which took me five years to achieve. During this period, I just used to drive it to and from competitions. After that, I sold it to a dentist in West Bromwich. I only let him have it because he wanted it for his collection together enough cash to buy a 308 GT4 which, because it had been used for racing, appeared to be a bit of a bargain. I paid pretty much what had been spent prepping the car to race. There I was with a ready-to-race Ferrari, so what could I do! I should mention the Ferrari Owners' Club racers and organisers were very encouraging and supportive."

Sterling graduated to the 348 Challenge 16 years ago, the car being one of 59 cars converted in period. It was originally raced by Saverio Castellaneta. The car appears exactly as it did 25 years ago, livery, decals runner like me prior to that. The smile on Ray's face after his first race in the 348 could have sold it to anyone! When I got the car, it was in well-thumbed condition, and had a number of battle scars that had only had minimal repairs to get back out on track. I did a bunch of work on the car before it went in for a bare metal respray in 2016."

Sterling has since gone to great lengths researching the car's history, going so far as to establish the www.f348ch.co.uk website. "Most of the changes made to the Challenge over the road car were safetyrelated: they added a roll-cage, cut off switch, fire extinguisher, race seat, harness, different suspension bushes, brake cooling ducts, competition pads, competition clutch, slick tyres and so on. Then it was merely a case of optimising suspension settings and cam timing. I would love to know more about the background to the model. It would appear that a couple of 348 Challenge prototypes, although not designated as such, raced in the Italian GT series in 1992-1993, and I've seen a Eurosport video clip of my car taking part. As far as I know, there's no more than a hint that [Ferrari race car builder] Michelotto was involved. The 348 Challenge cars were assembled at Ferrari dealerships from an official kit of parts supplied by Ferrari. Michelotto, did of course, produce a number of quite famous 348s for Le Mans and so on."

Both men are evangelical about their 348s, while being refreshingly devoid of pretention. Last word has to go to Ferguson, perhaps the most hardcore fan of the model on the planet. "I love the shape, the size and the strakes in the doors," he says. "I've had so much fun with the 348s and all the comments in the media about them having crap handling is rubbish! They are a bit tail happy when you are racing, but then so are a lot of other cars. It's all part of the fun!"

Goodwood Revival

Ever faster laps at Goodwood are causing some concerns among drivers but this year's races were clean and fair, with Italian cars frequently on the podium

Story by Richard Heseltine Images by Goodwood/Peter Collins

eptember's Goodwood Revival Meeting witnessed its fair share of thrills and spills, with Italian cars claiming a significant haul of silverware. In marked contrast to last year's sodden event, the 2018 running took place under blue skies. Attendance was down slightly on previous years but those who did make the effort were privy to some scintillating battles, not least in the Kinrara Trophy race which kicked off the race card for the three-day weekend.

Emanuele Pirro and Niklas Halusa claimed a convincing win in the blisteringly quick Ferrari 250 GT SWB 'Breadvan', but the Italo-Austrian duo were made to work for their garlands. British GT regulars Jon Minshaw and Phil Keen were a threat for much of the one-hour running aboard their Jaguar E-type, and it was only in the final few laps that the win looked assured for five-time Le Mans winner Pirro and his young wingman.

Halusa was slow off the blocks at the start of the race, the ex-Count Volpi Ferrari smoking its rear tyres as it scrabbled to find traction. Even so, the pole-sitting Breadvan was in the lead as the field arrived at Madgwick for the first time. Halusa belied his lack of experience by keeping the fast-starting Minshaw at bay for the first two laps, only to get jumped at Madgwick third time around. He returned the favour at the same spot a lap later, and the warring duo continued to trade places as they streaked away from the rest of the field. Just 0.47sec covered the top two at quarter-distance, and there was barely a car's length between them when the pits opened for driver changes 23 minutes in.

Minshaw was the first to blink, with Keen emerging on track in third place behind the Franklin/Lindsay E-type and the leading Breadvan. Halusa pitted 15 laps in, with Pirro venturing onto the circuit a few seconds after Keen had assumed the lead at the chicane. The race soon returned to a Ferrari-versus-Jaguar battle, with veteran Pirro taking the lead at half distance. The Roman wasn't allowed to escape, though, and Keen nosed ahead in traffic, but the Breadvan wasn't to be denied. In the final quarter of an hour, Pirro gradually eked out an advantage after Keen lost time amid errant backmarkers.

Latin single-seaters also featured prominently. Former British GT Champion Callum Lockie claimed repeat Goodwood Trophy honours aboard Sean Danaher's nimble Maserati 6CM to go with his 2016 triumph. The Scot was on masterful form during the 20-minute race for Grand Prix and Voiturette cars built and raced between 1930 and 1951. Nevertheless, five-time winner Mark Gillies didn't make life easy for him, and the ERA man led at various stages of the race. Just 0.4sec blanketed the top two as the chequered flag descended.

Historics star Joe Colasacco ended Lotus' multi-year dominance of the Glover Trophy for 'cigar tube' Grand Prix cars. The American Colasacco, driving Lawrence Auriana's Ferrari 1512, emerged on top following an epic 20-minute battle with Andy Middlehurst, having sat patiently in his Lotus 25-mounted rival's wheel-tracks from halfway around the first lap to the penultimate tour, finally jumping him at Woodcote. It was a fantastic display of precision driving from both men who were rarely more than a fraction of a second apart.

19-year-old Olivier Hart claimed honours in the incident-filled second instalment of the St Mary's Trophy saloon car race. The Dutch teen, whose Alfa Romeo 1600 GTA had been driven by countryman Tom Coronel during Saturday's opener, drove brilliantly in a race of two parts. Lotus Cortina man Mike Jordan led Roger Wills' wayward Mercury Cyclone at the start, but there were frenzied battles up and down the order. This was brought into sharp relief on the fourth lap after Duncan Pittaway demolished the chicane in his Plymouth Barracuda. The race was then red-flagged.

The race was restarted, only for the safety car to be deployed almost immediately after Peter Chambers barrel-rolled his Lotus Cortina on the approach to St Mary's. Fortunately, he walked away uninjured. The race got underway again with only a few laps left to run, with Hart up front and Ambrogio Perfetti close by in his Lotus Cortina. Unfortunately, the Italian's car was then tagged by Bill Shepherd's Ford Galaxie and spun off into retirement. Fourth-place man Mike Jordan was also a casualty of this contretemps, and had to cede a place to arch-rival Steve Soper who was fielding his own Lotus Cortina. Hart came home the victor from Wills, but Soper and Saturday's winner Andy Priaux triumphed on aggregate.

There would be no further wins for Italian classics, although former British Hillclimb Champion David Franklin impressed in his Ferrari 225S in the Fordwarder Trophy for pre-1955 GT cars. The Bristolian finished fourth, ahead of more fancied runners, while Tony Wood was typically quick in the Richmond & Gordon Trophies race for 1954-1960 GP cars. He narrowly missed out on a podium placing in the unique TecMec Maserati. Sam Hancock was also denied a top-three finish in the Sussex Trophy encounter for 1955-1960 sports racers in his Ferrari 246S Dino. A multiple winner in the past, the Ferrari lacked pace in 2018 and Hancock ended up fourth.

As to where the Goodwood Revival Meeting goes from here, it's anyone's guess. Driving standards have become a thorny topic in the past, but there were relatively few accidents this year. On the flipside, lap times have tumbled. Consider this: Colassaco's best lap in the Glover Trophy was 1m 28.676sec. That's more than six seconds faster than the victorious Lotus-BRM during the inaugural event in 1998. The same is true of virtually every race this year. Similarly, some of the Lotus Cortinas lapped more than five seconds faster than the equivalent cars did a decade ago. The worry is that these weapons-grade historic racers are scaring off some owners, while also inviting accidents.

Regardless of which side of the debate you cleave to, the Goodwood Revival Meeting is an event like no other, and one of the highlights of the motorsport calendar. We can't see that changing any time soon.

CLUBITALIA REPORTS ON NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL EVENTS AND ITALIAN CAR CLUBS Gran Premio Nuvolari 2018

Like a relaxed Mille Miglia without the expense – and perfect for affordable classic cars – there's so much to like about the GP Nuvolari any people still say Tazio Nuvolari is the greatest racing driver the world has ever seen. When he died 65 years ago, he was mourned throughout the world. His importance to the world of motorsport and as an international ambassador for Italy was undeniable, so it was considered vital to celebrate his extraordinary life and in some way continue his memory. So the organisers of the Mille Miglia in Brescia decided that a special prize should be awarded in his name.

Words & images: Peter Collins

If you drive along the SS 10 from Cremona to Mantova (Tazio's home town) today, it is more than frustrating to find long stretches of straight road with 50km/h and 70 km/h speed limits that were originally designed for Fiat 500s and 1100s in the 1950s and have never been reviewed since. If you continue towards Brescia on the SS 236, passing the location of the fatal accident of De Portago at Solferino (which effectively put a stop to the Mille Miglia as we know it), the road is mostly straight, but still narrow and cambered. This was the section of road over which the organisers of the Mille Miglia decided to award their prize, called the Gran Premio Nuvolari, to the fastest crews on this stretch, coming right at the end of the MM. From Cremona to Brescia, they even altered the route of the Mille Miglia specially to pass through Tazio's home city of Mantova.

Thus, from 1954 until the demise of the event in 1957, it was possible to see the actual speeds achieved by the top three cars as they travelled over those last 135km - and they were staggering. In 1954, winner Ascari in his Lancia D24 covered the distance in just over 44 minutes – equating to an average speed of 180.35km/h (112mph). This was eclipsed in 1955 by Moss, who achieved 39 minutes 54 seconds, and an average speed of 198.49km/h (123mph). Often overlooked is that even this was bettered, in 1957, by Olivier Gendebien: 39 minutes 43 seconds and 199.41km/h (almost 124mph). And that was in a GT car: a factory breathed-upon 250 GT Tour de France. The figures still leave you reeling, especially considering the narrow, cambered and dire state of the roads at that time.

Cynics might say it was a pity that Tazio was born in Mantova, as its geographical position poses the organisers a real headache. In order to reach the coast at Rimini and head to the fabulous roads of Umbria and Marche, the first day's drive has to weave through the busy, semi-industrial Po Valley. That the route was as good as it was heaps praise on Mantova Corse for its varied choice of highways and byways. South of Bologna, more open and hilly countryside and roads were reached, and the foothills of the Apennines beckoned. Special checkpoints and regularity tests were held, and the finish of the first day was at Rimini.

Saturday was the longest day: a 470km run through Tuscany, the Umbrian hills and Marche to Siena, tracing a figure-of-eight route that returned via Arezzo and Urbino, literally in the wheel tracks of today's Mille Miglia Retro event. Cleverly picked original roads were quiet and gave a period feel. The 32-degree heat led to speculation about how much might be taken out of the older cars. The answer, it turned out, was not much, as could be seen by the overall results at the end of each day.

Starting again from Rimini on Sunday, a 282km run back to Mantova took in Faenza, where Tazio's 6C 34 Maserati was on display alongside Toro Rosso GP cars. Much of the current Mille Miglia route was used, but in the reverse direction. Throughout all this, large crowds turned out to watch the wonderful cavalcade of cars pass through. This usually took over three hours from first car to last!

The entry was run in age order, with the oldest cars first. In the initial 20 cars there was an OM, the Superba example that used to be a regular at Brooklands events, but is now in the hands of a Russian enthusiast, plus no fewer than two Casarobodied Lancia Lambdas. A huge variety of 43 different makes and models followed, including Alfa

Romeo, Siata, Cisitalia, Ferrari, Fiat, Lancia, Maserati, Osca and many more.

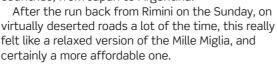

The sun and heat never diminished through the Umbrian hills and presented a serious challenge on the long uphill sections, but once at altitude, the roads, views and driving were sublime. Miki Biasion was probably rather warm with a roof over his head as he drove his gorgeous white Alfa 1900 Super Sprint Coupe, with Mario Peserico co-driving.

The entry allows cars from 1919 to 1972, so there is huge variety. Quality was equally to be seen throughout the list of participants. Exotica included the brutish Ferrari 375 Plus of Michael and Marlon Stehle – the ex-Tony Parravano chassis 0262. The Fiat 8V Zagato of Johann and Anna Lont was another striking entrant.

As well as being a round of the FIA championship, the Gran Premio is also a round of the ACI's Epoca series which incorporates several national historic rallies and events in Italy. For 2018, it was a pleasant surprise to find that Maserati was appropriately 'Main Partner' and ran a mini-event entitled the Coppa Nuvolari for current and classic examples of the marque.

Overall, though, the pre-war cars enjoyed something of a results takeover, and five Fiats from this period finished in the top ten. After the first day and 26 stages, Giovanni Moceri and Daniele Bonetti in their 1939 Fiat 508 C held a lead they were never to lose. In fact, the highest-placed post-war car was in ninth place – the 1947 Volvo PV 444 of Antonino Margiotta and Valentina La Chiana.

By the finish, second place was taken by the Alfa Romeo 6C 1750 of Andrea Vesco and Andrea Guerini, while in third spot came another Fiat 508 C, that of Francesco and Giuseppe Di Pietra. Of the very few British entrants, top finishers were Kevin and Wee Rawson in their 1958 Alfa Romeo Giulietta Sprint. The Volvo remained the highest-placed post-war car in ninth position, with the Ercolanis in their Fiat 600 next in 11th place. Salvetti and Spozio came 13th in their Fiat 1100/103, a model in which when so many driving greats first cut their competitive teeth back in period. Whilst it often seemed as if everyone was from Italy, in fact entries came from 20 different countries, from Japan to Argentina.

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT OWNING A TOP END ITALIAN CAR

NUMERO UNO

Among pocket rockets of the 1980s, Fiat's Uno Turbo has a reputation as one of the feistiest of all. Increasingly rare these days, what do you need to know if you're in the market to own one?

ashion has a habit of being cyclical, and nowhere is this more apparent than the 1980s hot hatch. All the rage 30 years ago, the genre fell out of fashion in the 1990s due to high insurance premiums and the fact that many of them were thrashed, abused and neglected. While the hot hatch has made a resurgence in recent times, those original 1980s tearaways have become seriously collectible among classic car fans. The problem is that, after many years in the wilderness, there are very few good ones left, which in many cases has led to prices getting a bit silly.

While many classic hot hatch enthusiasts clamour for a mint Golf GTi or Escort RS Turbo, there's a more low-key alternative which is more attainable when it comes to value: the Fiat Uno Turbo. But you've still got the significant problem of tracking down something worth buying, because Uno Turbos in any condition particularly hard to find.

The Uno Turbo arrived in July 1985, with a 1299cc engine that gave a modest 106hp, enough to take the car to 124mph. While the Turbo was based on the lowly Uno 70, it was far more than a standard car with a blower bolted on. Alongside water-cooled cylinder liners, there was an intercooler and oil cooler, along with electronic ignition, knock sensor and Bosch LE2 Jetronic fuel injection.

Within 18 months the displacement had grown by 2cc, but the big change came with the appearance of the Turbo Mk2 in September 1989 (January 1990 in the UK). With a restyled nose that housed a 1372cc powerplant, there was also multi-point fuel injection to give 120hp; the catalytic converter fitted from June 1992 took the edge off the free-revving four-pot, with power dropping to 116hp. Production of the Mk2 Uno Turbo lasted until 1993, with the arrival of the Punto. However, regular Uno production lasted until 1995, and some Turbos weren't registered until the same year.

ON THE ROAD

The steering is perfectly weighted and beautifully direct, and even at speed the car is surprisingly refined. The ride is also good considering how small the wheels are, but the gearbox is disappointingly notchy at first, although it's something that's easy to adjust to.

With the Uno Turbo being a relatively early blown hot hatch, it would be easy to assume that it suffers from horrific turbo lag, but nothing could be further from the truth. The power feeds in as soon as the throttle is pressed, although you need 3000rpm on the dial before the car performs with any urgency. From there on, the power and speed just build, right through to the 6000rpm red line.

The Uno feels so sprightly because of its light weight, tipping the scales at just 845kg (Mk1) or 895kg (Mk2) - a modern equivalent such as the Renault Clio Sport 197 weighs nearly 400kg more. That's why it comes as no surprise that the Uno is so delicious through the bends; of course it'll understeer if you overdo things, but exercise some restraint and the front end just goes where you ask it to, with little in the way of fuss or drama. Well – up to a point. 13-inch wheels are by modern standards laughably small, but it's essential they're retained, because if you go sticking huge alloys and ultra-sticky tyres on the car, you risk destroying the car's great balance.

ENGINE / TRANSMISSION

Engines are strong and despite the 1301cc powerplant having just 2cc more than the earlier unit, the extra zip is definitely noticeable. Regular servicing is essential. Fully synthetic oil is unnecessary as a 10w40 semi-synthetic lubricant is fine; it's what the engine was designed to run on, along with triple-electrode spark plugs. A new cambelt should have been fitted within the last three years or 36,000 miles; it's easy to do on a DIY basis.

Engine ancillaries such as the water pump, alternator and starter motor are durable but don't expect any more than 70,000 miles from the Mk1's IHI turbocharger. These are more expensive to source or have rebuilt than the Garrett turbo used on the Mk2; budget around £450 compared with £350 for the Garrett, if there's no major damage.

Thanks to aftermarket suppliers, you'll have no problem sourcing service parts and most gaskets.

Mk1 Uno Turbo has a 1.3litre engine with 106hp. Early-spec IHI turbo tends to last 70,000 miles before needing replacement

BUYERS' GUIDE: FIAT UNO TURBO

However, engine components are much harder to find. Fiat dealers can't help so you'll be reliant on Italian eBay, although you might stumble across some newold stock that's been stashed away in the UK for years.

Early Mk1s use a Strada-derived gearbox with a bottom-change linkage that wears quickly, revealing itself by a very vague feel. It's easy to fit new bushes but even with these in place you can't expect a really precise gearshift. Bottom-change gearboxes can suffer diff bearing wear or failure, as well as worn synchromesh, particularly on third gear. From mid-1987 the newer C510 gearbox was fitted, borrowed from the Tipo. This gearbox is still used on the Abarth 500 and it's got a much nicer change thanks to the use of a top-change mechanism, but it's still not up to modern cable-change standards. At least the C510 gearbox is very tough, the only likely problem being a slight diff whine once the car has racked up a huge mileage. This transmission was carried through to the Mk2 Turbo and parts supply for it is poor, with Italian eBay once again the best source.

Clutches don't give problems unless abused or power levels have been increased to silly levels. If a new clutch is needed, you can buy one for well under £100.

SUSPENSION & BRAKES

The brakes work fine in normal use but they lack feel; discs were fitted front and rear. Upgrading to larger callipers and discs is easy and worthwhile; take your pick from Punto, Bravo/Brava and Marea parts, all of which are readily available on a new or used basis, with a ready supply of aftermarket discs and pads.

The handbrake operates on the rear discs via a combined hydraulic/mechanical calliper that wears internally, reducing effectiveness and reliability. Repairs aren't possible so it's best to replace with a reconditioned calliper for £150 or so per side.

The suspension doesn't give any problems other than the possibility of wear because of age or high mileage. Everything is available on an aftermarket basis; when fitting replacement parts most owners opt for lowering springs and dampers because the Turbo sits rather high with the original set-up. Dropping the car arguably improves the aesthetics as well as the handling.

CHASSIS / BODY

Unless you're looking at a mint restored Uno Turbo, some rust is inevitable. Mk2s fare a little better than Mk1s when it comes to rust resistance, but whatever the car you need to concentrate on the top of each front inner wing, rear inner wheelarches, around the sunroof (if fitted), sills, floorpans and door bottoms. That said, corrosion can rear its ugly head pretty much everywhere. The underside of the rear end contains several enclosed areas that serve as moisture traps where rust will eat its way out, so do lots of tapping and prodding with the car on a ramp.

Some body panels – including doors, sills, rear panel and rear wings – are common to both the Mk1 and Mk2, which makes sourcing them easier. However, other key panels such as the front wings, bonnet and tailgate are specific to each version. Predictably, Fiat and its dealers can no longer help with panel supply so you'll need to trawl Italian eBay once again to find what you need. As well as genuine parts, there are plenty of pattern items, but it's the OE parts that are the quickest and easiest to fit – if you can find them.

The front bumpers are specific to the Uno Turbo, with the Mk1 and Mk2 each getting their own design. With no pattern parts ever made, you'll have to find the genuine article; as you'd expect, you'll be lucky to stumble across the correct bits and you're unlikely to find a bargain.

INTERIOR

The seat fabric used in the Mk1 is fragile and wears easily, with the later type being only marginally more durable. Even low-mileage cars can be looking the worse for wear, and unless covers have been fitted since the car was new, any Turbo that's covered more than 80,000 miles is likely to have a really tatty driver's seat at the very least.

Fiat stopped supplying replacement fabric ages ago but it's now being remade in Italy, at a price. Interior plastics are flimsy but durable enough, as is the carpet; the Mk2 has a more understated interior with more long-lasting fabric. The headlining tends to peel and sag, necessitating replacement or retrimming. Expect dash rattles and creaks on any Uno Turbo, especially if it's a Mk1.

Corroded contacts and poor earths are likely to cause electrical problems, so check everything. The

You need to check carefully for body and chassis rust, whether you're looking at a Mk1 (above) or a Mk2 (below right)

Mk2 is less prone to problems than the Mk1, partly because it's newer but also because the Mk1 had a shortage of relays, so equipment such as the headlights and electric windows (if fitted) are wired through long runs of aged cable, while the contacts inside the switches often degrade. What starts out as a healthy 12.5 volts at the battery is barely 10 volts by the time it reaches the other end, resulting in slow electric windows and dim headlights. Mk2s are better but any Turbo can benefit from improvements, such as extra relays and shorter cable lengths - although beware that such mods can make things worse rather than better if not done properly. Look for evidence of the loom having been hacked about in an attempt to fit or remove security or stereo equipment, as this is a common problem.

Long-term Uno Turbo enthusiast Jeremy Nesbitt owns of these included as standard or pay extra for all three, so all Mk1s should have at least one of these. The Mk2 had electric windows as standard, a sunroof was an option and the digital dash was dropped.

"A Mk1 is worth more than a Mk2, with top cars fetching around £9000 and £6000 respectively. A Mk1 worth owning will cost at least £4000 to £5000, whereas an equivalent condition Mk2 fetches around £1000 less."

Whether you're looking in Europe or the UK, Uno Turbos are hard to find. At the time of writing, a well-known Phase 1 car (featured in Auto Italia Issue 125) was available for £8000. In much better condition than most survivors, the price is eminently reasonable – especially when you consider that the only other car we could find for sale was in Italy. A left-hand drive two-owner car built in 1990, it had 65,000 miles on the clock and was up for a stiff £9995.

THANKS

Many thanks to Jeremy Nesbitt, owner of the superb Uno Turbo pictured, for his help with this buying guide and the photo shoot

Alfa Romeo Giulietta by Matteo Licata Independently published ISBN 978-1983393747 £22

It's perhaps surprising, given the attention lavished in print on Alfa Romeo over the years, that no book has ever been published on the 1977-1985 Giulietta 116. After all, it was a popular car in its day, selling almost 400,000 units, and there's still plenty of love for it, which we've documented extensively in Auto Italia (Alex Jupe, step forward!).

Well, now there is a Giulietta book. You couldn't wish for a better author in Matteo Licata, an automotive designer of many years' standing, who has clearly invested a lot of labour in this volume. He travelled to Arese to research Alfa's archives, for instance, and acquired a lot of information about rarities like the South African 'Group One' homologation special of 1983 and the Turbo Autodelta.

It's unsurprising that, with the material available, the book extends to only 66 pages, but within that you get the full development story, including some nice images of prototype drawings. The text is entirely in English, by the way.

Downsides are that this is a paperback with a rather flimsy cover and the repro quality could be better, but for a first-time author, who is self-published at that, this is a very good effort. And of course the only book devoted to the 116.

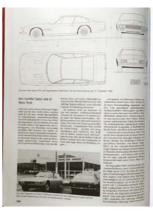

Monteverdi by Roger Gloor & Carl Wagner Published by Paul Berger ISBN 978-3-033-05953-5 £85

This book on Monteverdi – or to give its full title, Monteverdi: Geschichte einer Schweizer Automarke – is easily the best reference work yet on the subject. Not surprising, as it's been done in collaboration with the Monteverdi Museum, based in Switzerland.

Before you raise your eyebrows too high over a book about a Swiss marque appearing in Auto Italia, there are some major Italian connections. Peter Monteverdi was and American V8 engines, including the 375L, Palm Beach and Hai supercar. The story is surprisingly rich for such Ferrari's Swiss importer, but he was a famously irascible chap and soon fell out with Enzo Ferrari, deciding instead to build his own sports cars.

Monteverdi's iconic
'High Speed' model was designed with the help of the Turin-based stylist, Pietro Frua, while when it came to productionising his cars, he beat a path to Carrozzeria Fissore in Savigliano, just outside Turin. There followed a string of exotic models with Italian bodywork

a small operation, with Formula racing models (including an abortive F1 sojourn), SUVs, boats and even military vehicles.

Unfortunately the text is in German only, with no English translation, but the rich depth of illustrations more than makes up for that. For the record, there are 470 photos, 215 of which are in colour. Also included are specifications and reproductions of sales brochures. You'll have to hunt down a copy in the UK but it's well worth it.

MONTECARLO MOMENTS

Thanks for the great article about John Campion's collection of Lancias (Auto Italia October 2018), but someone has made a major booboo regarding his Group 5 turbo Montecarlo. Dallara/Pininfarina/Abarth /Lancia didn't build nine cars, as is claimed in the article; they built 11 and Campion's is thus not the last one built, although it did run as #65 at Le Mans in 1981. For the record, the cars built were as follows:

1979. 828CB1 1001 -828CB1 1003. Chassis 1001 was destroyed in an accident at Norisring in 1980. (Hans Hever, DRM) and replaced with 1008. 1980. 828CB1 1004 -828CB1 1008. 1981. 828CB1 1009 -828CB1 1011.

For the record, Campion's car (1009) was raced as follows:

1 Feb 1981 Daytona #4 Martini livery Alboreto/Ghinzani/Gabbia ni. DNF

12 Apr 1981 Mugello #8 Martini livery Alboreto/Ghinzani Disqualified (nonchampionship race) 26 Apr 1981 Monza

full details of all the Group 5 racers. Rod Shipley

ABARTH 124 VOLUMEX

I have found an old issue of Car magazine in which there's a test of the Abarth Spidereuropa Volumex. I knew there was a Fiat version but never an Abarth. After some research I gather this car (painted matt red) was a one-off built at the time when Pininfarina took over production from Fiat in 1982. In all probability Pininfarina sold it off. Do you have any idea whether this unique car still exists, and if so where it might be? James Purfoy

Sadly we don't know what became of the Abarth Spidereuropa Volumex. Do any readers know...? Editor the impending demise of petrol and diesel, it is unlikely that we will see something as goodlooking and powerful in the future.

As always, I enjoy the magazine and its arrival always puts me in a good mood.

Snap! Here's a similar shot I took of the GTV Cup that Alfa Romeo had on its press fleet - MW find out for me what shade of red that is? Mark Vincent

The 308 GT4's owner tells us: "I think the car was repainted circa 2000 in its original Rosso Chiaro. The code for this, on 246s anyway, was 20-R-190 (originally Glidden Salchi paint was used by the factory). I would think the 308 GT4 of 1978 would likely be the same." - Editor

Just thought I would send you this small photo, which I recently took with my phone. I was cleaning my GTV and liked the look of the engine through the shield grille. The engine is painted a largely nonstandard red, but it occurred to me that, with

WHEREFORE YPSILON

Reading your fascinating story on best selling Italian cars (Million Makers, October 2018 issue), I noticed that the most popular Lancia of all time was the 1995-2003 Ypsilon. I actually have the accurate production figures for this model and the total number made was 785,253. Sadly, I fear the current Ypsilon may be Lancia's last gasp. Dieter Schmidt

Your cars, your stories - tales of Italian car ownership in the real world

LANCIA GAMMA BERLINA 2500

PATRICK HURST, NORTHERN IRELAND

ero mileage
1976 Gamma?
Yes indeed: this is the amazing story of an unregistered Lancia Gamma 2500 Berlina that was found in the back of a Turin Lancia garage, where it had sat unloved for 38 years.

It was ordered back in 1976 by an Englishman working in Turin, who planned to return to England so he asked for RHD. But he'd 'disappeared' by the time of delivery so the dealer simply pushed the car to the back of his garage, where it sat for nearly 40 years. When the business was wound up in 2014, Patrick Hurst heard about the car and bought it blind – with a total of just 16 miles on the clock!

"I thought, what could possibly go wrong?" laughs Patrick. "When it was shipped back to Northern Ireland, its condition left me in a dilemma. The engine wasn't running right and the bodywork had picked up some bumps and scratches during its hibernation. Part of me thought, 'leave it as it is' but the more I looked at it, the more I thought it had to be brought back as new.

"We decided to strip the car back to the shell and have it taken back to metal and repainted. I am glad it was stripped because I got to see it in its component parts and marvel at the engineering that went into the car.

The new parts were mainly mechanical. It was a massive challenge but thank goodness for the Lancia Gamma Consortium.

"I set myself a budget of £10,000 but three years later and £25,000 spent, it's finally finished. Many would say it's financially crazy but I don't really care; madness is not a scientific barometer, it's a measure of your soul." There are some interesting features. For instance, the front scuttle has chrome blanks over where the wiper spindles on LHD cars would be. The car is set up for right-hand wipers, and the RHD holes suggest either that the wrong part was used in production or this was the first RHD model produced but Lancia didn't have the RHD scuttle ready. Either way, it is an interesting and unique feature.

Patrick concludes:
"The Gamma represents freedom of design spirit, attention to detail and quality. The doors close with a beautiful clonk and the seats are supercomfortable. Then there is the driving, steering, handling and gearbox. Gammas are still so undervalued."

Alfa Romeo Alfasud Ti 105 Green Cloverleaf. 1984, 54,650 miles, silver, in good condition and garaged since 1990, I have had her since 1988. Well maintained and serviced: new clutch, discs all round plus new front calipers, new rad and Koni sport shocks. Has clean interior (little split in gear gaiter rubber/leatherette and small worn patch on driver's seat), I put in rear belts. Drives beautifully and sounds great, recent service and MOT this August, £7700. Please call Marek: 07879 448289 (London). A274/015

Alfa Romeo 105 Giulia. 1971, silver. My very special Bertone Junior is up for sale, it attracts a lot of admirers and has a characters, one is a performance Classic road car sitting on period GTA Corsa wheels, the other allows the owner to take part in Classic hill climbs, sprints and continental speed events, it complies with MSA scrutineering requirements. A well known car in AROC circles, this is an excellent car which is maintained regardless of cost and is in top mechanical condition. It was originally restored in 2000 and altered to the GTA style together with Harvey Bailey fast road suspension, GTA exhaust system, Monza fuel cap and GTA Corsa wheels. The 1300 engine was rebuilt as a 1962cc Nord engine (original engine). The car is road tax exempt and the MOT exempt from May 2018, there is a service history back to 1980. Car will be sold with a voluntary MOT, £29,500 ovno; also included are the original front seats and the steering wheel, also Deluxe Garage elasticated car cover, red with Alfa logo. Email:

DE TOMASO MUSTELA

TOM TJAARDA'S DESIGN FOR DE TOMASO, WHILE HE WAS AT GHIA, MIGHT HAVE BECOME ITALY'S VERY OWN FORD CAPRI

Story by Chris Rees

he late, great Tom Tjaarda had a vast number of car designs to his name, working for some of the greatest Italian styling studios of the day. His career in Italy started with Ghia in 1959, where he designed such as cars as the Innocenti Spider and helped on others like the VW Karmann Ghia 1500 Type 34 coupe.

He then moved to Pininfarina in 1961, creating exceptional classics such as the Fiat 124 Spider, Ferrari 330 GT 2+2 and Ferrari 365 GT California.

He returned to Ghia in 1968, working with Giorgetto Giugiaro on the Serenissima supercar, among others. 1969 proved to be a pivotal year for him: he designed the iconic Lancia Fulvia 1600 HF Competizione, Lancia Marica and Isuzu Bellett MX1600 GT. The same year also saw his very first project for De Tomaso, the subject of this Obscurati: the Mustela, dating from a time when Ghia, Ford and De Tomaso were all collaborating.

The shape of the Mustela was neat if unspectacular: a well-proportioned coupe with a low nose (echoing that of the De Tomaso Mangusta, perhaps), rising window line and air extraction vents in the C-pillars. All the badges – front, rear and wheels – were De Tomaso.

The 2+2-seat cabin featured a near-symmetrical dashboard with slabs of wood either side of a central binnacle that housed face-level vents, gauges and switchgear. The seats and doors were sumptuously trimmed in white leather.

The engine was a front-mounted, tuned Ford 3.0-litre V6 with aluminium heads, double overhead camshafts and Lucas mechanical fuel injection. With a compression ratio of 9.5:1, its quoted power output was 230hp at 6500rpm, quite a lot more than the standard Ford V6. It was mated to a four-speed manual gearbox with overdrive.

The chassis' 2370mm wheelbase was shorter than the contemporary Ford Capri's; the car was also shorter overall at 4050mm, but wider at 1690mm and a lot lower at 1200mm. Independent suspension and disc brakes were used all round.

The Mustela was revealed at the October 1969 Turin Show and subsequently seen at a few other international shows. Could it have seen production? In an interview, Tjaarda confessed: "When I designed the Mustela, I was working on seven cars at the same time, and this one wasn't very successful. I did it very quickly. Alejandro de Tomaso was very displeased with it, and he immediately went on to think about other projects. He could fire me on Thursday and then call me the following Monday anxiously wondering where I was. It took a lot of self-control to work with him."

Ultimately, neither Ford nor De Tomaso were interested in the Mustela as a production prospect. In truth, the Mustela didn't look special enough, especially alongside Tjaarda's other, rather more significant, project for De Tomaso: the Pantera. Launched at the New York Show in January 1970, the Pantera catapulted Tjaarda's name into the design stratosphere. He got busier, designing the De Tomaso Deauville the same year, then in 1971 working on two more De Tomaso prototypes, the Zonda and the 1600 Spider (basically a rip-off of the Fiat X1/9). The Mustela name would be revived in 1973 for a Ford coupe project, dubbed the Mustela II another Tjaarda design and another project that sadly never saw production.
