New school 'a natural partnership'

Engineering a resource

WAKE FOREST and Virginia Tech (Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University) have announced plans to establish a joint School of Biomedical Engineering and Sciences. The school will provide a needed biomedical engineering resource for southwest Virginia, northwest North Carolina, and eastern Tennessee.

Wake Forest has long sought to add an engineering program, either directly or through affiliation. Virginia Tech gains access to a medical school and its biomedical researchers. The school is aimed at maximizing collaboration among researchers and educators in biology, engineering, and medicine to advance fundamental discoveries in medicine and biology and lead to improvements in health care technologies.

President Thomas K. Hearn Jr. said the new school will aid in the transformation of Winston-Salem's economy. "The school will strengthen Wake Forest's intellectual resources, thereby strengthening the capabilities of the Piedmont Triad Research Park."

"This is a natural partnership between Virginia Tech, which has no human medical school, and Wake Forest, which does not have an engineering school," said Charles W. Steger, Virginia Tech president. "We are extremely excited about affiliating with a highly respected university like Wake Forest."

To support the school, Wake Forest School of Medicine is establishing a Center for Biomedical Engineering with participation by thirteen departments, which are putting up $1.5 million to launch the Center. The Center will administer the program at Wake Forest. Virginia Tech already has a parallel Center for Biomedical Engineering with more than twenty active faculty members.

"We have set goals of ranking in the top tier of medical schools in NIH funding and in annual licensing revenues," said Dr. Richard Dean, senior vice president for health affairs of Wake Forest. "Currently, all of the top NIH-funded institutions have an engineering school or biomedical engineering department. This new school will address the goals of both institutions."

If the planning proceeds as hoped, the universities will jointly admit the first students in the fall of 2002. The plan envisions jointly awarding master of science, PhD and MD/PhD degrees, with the names and seals of both institutions appearing on the diplomas. The planners envision a student body of at least eighty to one hundred students within five years. Students will be in residence at one or the other university, but biomedical engineering courses taught at one campus will be offered on the other campus via distance learning. Faculty members at one campus will be granted adjunct appointments on the other campus.

Operationally, the school will be run jointly by Virginia Tech's College of Engineering, the Virginia Maryland College of Veterinary Medicine, and Wake Forest School of Medicine.

The art of giving

*Gallery naming honors
Phil and Charlotte Hanes*

IN RECOGNITION of their contributions to the arts, Wake Forest has named its art gallery for Winston-Salem businessman R. Philip Hanes and his wife, Charlotte. The gallery, which opened in the Scales Fine Arts Center in 1982, was dedicated as the Charlotte and Philip Hanes Art Gallery on September 7.

Philip Hanes, 75, is chairman emeritus of Hanes Dye and Finishing, a company founded by his father, but he is better known for his leadership and support of the arts. He helped shape the N.C. School of the Arts, the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Arts, and the Roger L. Stevens Center for the Performing Arts in Winston-Salem. He received the National Medal of Arts from President George Bush in 1991 for his role as the founder of community arts programs across the country. He received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Wake Forest in 1990. Charlotte Hanes serves on the University's Board of Visitors for the College and Graduate School of Arts and Sciences.

"Phil Hanes has done much for the arts in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, and the country," said President

Thomas K. Hearn Jr. "He and Charlotte have been generous in sharing their art collection with Wake Forest. We are pleased to have their names grace our fine arts gallery as a permanent expression of their service and our gratitude."

In 1991, Hanes and his wife donated to the University their 1820s plantation-style house, and committed through their wills their personal art collection and twenty-six acres of property that adjoin the Wake Forest President's House.

"Phil and Charlotte Hanes have been very good friends to the Wake Forest art department through the years," said Margaret Smith, chair of Wake Forest's art department. "Besides their very generous donation of paintings to the college, they frequently have opened up their home to our classes so that our students can see their remarkable collection of American art and learn from Phil how a collector goes about purchasing really significant art. We are delighted that the Haneses will be recognized by having the Scales Fine Arts Center gallery named in their honor."

Hanes started collecting American art in 1949 after studying art in college. His private collection ranges from a 1762 painting by John Singleton Copley to contemporary works.

Faculty, alumni honored

Don't live in fear, says Convocation speaker

TWO PROFESSORS and two alumni were honored during Opening Convocation September 13. North Carolina First Lady Mary Easley, a 1972 graduate of the College and 1975 graduate of the School of Law, was the keynote speaker during the program in Wait Chapel.

Richard Sears, Wake Forest Professor of political science, was presented with the Donald O. Schoonmaker Faculty Award for Community Service. Sears was recognized for his contributions to the University and the community. Since he came to Wake Forest in 1964, Sears has spent his free time volunteering with numerous community organizations.

Herman Eure (PhD '74), chair of the biology department, received the Jon Reinhardt Award for Excellence in Teaching. Eure began teaching at Wake Forest in 1974. He was nominated for the award by former students.

President Thomas K. Hearn Jr. also presented two alumni with Marcellus E. Waddill Excellence in Teaching Awards during convocation. The 2001 recipients, Jeffrey Morgan (MAEd '95) of Winston-Salem and Elizabeth Fair Goffigon ('93) of Sparks, Maryland, were each chosen in May to receive the $20,000 awards. See related stories, page 38 and 40.

Speaking two days after the September 11 attacks, Easley urged the audience not to live in fear, but to live fully.

"Every tragedy, every moment of inexplicable pain, every minute of sorrow, every one of life's little risks that we confront is really the wrapping around a gift for us," she said. "It is at once a gift of redemption for us as we share part of ourselves with another, and the fulfillment of a promise from a loving God. It is a perpetually renewing opportunity wrapped in risk."

Wachovia gift endows Babcock scholarships

Program will enhance student body diversity

Wachovia is providing a $2 million gift to Wake Forest University for its Babcock Graduate School of Management to endow the Wachovia Scholars Program, which will furnish scholarships and career assistance to MBA students for the purpose of creating a more diverse student body. It is the largest single gift designated for the Babcock School since it was founded in 1969. Annually, the program will provide up to six scholarships for underrepresented full-time MBA students to cover up to 100 percent of tuition, books, and room and board costs.

R. Charles Moyer, dean of the Babcock School and GMAC Insurance Chair of Finance, said the school will work closely with Wachovia to recruit prospective students who are interested in careers in financial services. Scholarship recipients will have a Wachovia mentor during their two years at the Babcock School and will have summer internship opportunities with Wachovia.

"This gift from Wachovia is a keystone in our strategy to attract a high-quality, diverse student body to our MBA program," Moyer said. "It is further evidence of the strong bond among the Babcock School at Wake Forest University, Wachovia and Winston-Salem."

Wachovia Chairman L.M. Baker Jr. said the commitment exemplifies Wachovia's support of all levels of education and the company's desire to recruit a diverse professional employee base. "Academic and professional success most often are achieved through capitalizing on opportunity," Baker said. "Wachovia hopes this gift provides the Babcock School broader opportunities in attracting exceptional, diverse talent to its program and helps build on our longstanding synergy with the university."

Babcock business

FORBES MAGAZINE has ranked the Babcock Graduate School of Management No. 3 in the nation among MBA programs with total costs of less than $95,000 a year. The rankings measure return on investment, or how quickly MBA students can expect to recoup the investment made in their MBA education after they graduate, and are based on salary gains of 1996 MBA graduates over the past five years.

BABCOCK IS RANKED No. 26 in the world and No. 22 among U.S. schools in a survey of executive MBA programs released in October by Business Week magazine.

BABCOCK RANKED NO. 39 in the world and No. 25 among U.S. schools in the first international survey of executive MBA programs conducted by the Financial Times of London.

The ranking is based in part on surveys of alumni and measures of career progression of the graduates, diversity and international experience of the faculty and students, and faculty research.

THE SCHOOL WELCOMED 271 first-year students into its four MBA programs for the 2001-02 academic year. Thirty-two percent of the full-time program's one hundred and seven first-year students are international, and the international students represent seventeen countries. Both the percentage of international students and the number of countries represented mark new highs for the Babcock School.

NASDAQ HAS NAMED the Angell Center for Entrepreneurship one of its five Centers of Entrepreneurial Excellence for 2001. Stan Mandel, director of the Angell Center, said, "Wake Forest's selection as a Nasdaq Center of Entrepreneurial Excellence is a great reward for the innovative programs we have implemented in the past three years."

THE BABCOCK SCHOOL has renamed and restructured its executive program into the Fast-Track Executive MBA Program, which began with a new class in August. Some of the changes to the program are structural: The completion time has been tightened to seventeen months, and students will meet for full Fridays and Saturdays two weekends per month at the Worrell Professional Center. A faculty committee also has made refinements to the curriculum. Building on the school's strength of offering cross-functional management education, faculty members have created a highly integrated, module-based, team-oriented curriculum with a focus on general management skills.

At the Calloway School

THE UNIVERSITY HELD a groundbreaking ceremony October 4 for an addition to Calloway Hall that will bring all operations of the Calloway School of Business and Accountancy together under one roof for the first time.

The Calloway School will occupy the entire five-story F.M. Kirby Wing, named after the F.M. Kirby Foundation for its $5 million donation. The addition will include classroom and office space, room for group meetings, and an entrepreneur center designed to foster business skills in students from all areas of study.

ACCOUNTING STUDENTS in the Calloway School rank second in the nation for their performance on the May 2000 Certified Public Accountant exam. The Calloway students' passage rate—71.9 percent—is three times the national average. The National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) ranks schools in two categories: those with graduate programs in accounting and those with undergraduate programs only. Wake Forest, with its five-year program to earn a bachelor's and master's degree in accounting, is ranked among schools with advanced degrees. Wake Forest's passage rate has been either first or second in the nation since the Calloway School began offering a master's degree in accountancy in 1997.

THE CALLOWAY SCHOOL'S accounting program was also recently ranked 17th among all undergraduate accounting programs in the nation by the CPA Personnel Report's 20th Annual Survey of Accounting Professors.

SIX NEW MEMBERS were named to the Board of Visitors of the Calloway School. They are: Emily Neese Babcock ('81) of Winston-Salem, chief financial officer of Universal Solutions; Cynthia Evans Tessien of Winston-Salem, corporate finance director of Inmar Enterprises Inc.; Moira E. Davis ('89) of New York, New York, vice president and associate media director of BBDO, New York; Patrick G. Jones ('91) of Atlanta, executive vice president of Ptek Holdings Inc.; Charles L. Melman of Charlotte, partner with PricewaterhouseCoopers, L.L.P.; and Caroline Murray of Raleigh, senior consultant with Best Practices Group of GE Mortgage Insurance.

Hatching ideas

Business incubators nurture entrepreneurship

LONG GONE are the days when a young person could land a job with a large corporation and expect to stay securely in place until retirement. Today's climate of mergers, acquisitions, downsizing, and overseas manufacturing relocations makes longevity at even the most blue-chip of companies a perilous prospect at best.

That fact has hit home especially hard in Winston-Salem, which has suffered the loss or reduction in force of large and venerable employers such as Piedmont Airlines, Hanes, R.J. Reynolds, and, most recently, Wachovia.

Relatively small entrepreneurial firms now account for well over half of America's job growth. As a result, savvy cities are concentrating their economic development efforts away from the large and the industrial and toward the small and the science-and technology-oriented. Winston-Salem has a sound base by having strong health-care and technology resources.

To assist in the city's economic redevelopment and provide its business students with a more entrepreneurial focus, the University in November announced a broad-based Business Development Initiative which will encompass:

- 1 new incubator projects at the Calloway and Babcock schools;
- 1 a Babcock-sponsored Social Entrepreneurship Initiative;
- 1 the School of Medicine's technology transfer service, which works to bring health-related discoveries developed and patented by Medical Center scientists to the marketplace; and
- 1 Idealliance, formerly known as the North Carolina Emerging Technology Alliance, which is developing the Piedmont Triad Research Park downtown and pursuing high-tech business projects in hopes of building a Research Triangle Park-like sector in the Triad.

The Babcock School's incubator project, which will operate under the auspices of its Angell Center for Entrepreneurship, is designed to foster entrepreneurial education at Wake Forest and an entrepreneurial spirit in the Triad by providing personalized services and relationships to growth-oriented, early-stage ventures. The incubator will be located in an existing building directly across from the University Parkway entrance to campus. The building will offer Internet access and space for growing businesses. The incubator will house three to five start-up businesses at its inception, and each business that enters the incubator will have twelve months to grow and launch its business.

Babcock School faculty, students, and outside advisors will participate in the selection of businesses for the incubator and provide mentoring and consulting assistance. The incubator also will provide assistantships for Babcock students and opportunities for faculty research. Paul Briggs, a former executive with Duke Energy, directs the incubator. The Babcock School has an agreement with the Triad Entrepreneurial Initiative to house winners of that group's annual business plan competition.

Babcock's Social Entrepreneurship Initiative is designed to harness the resources of the Wake Forest community in partnership with local nonprofit agencies to improve the services provided to the Winston-Salem community.

'Incubating' students is Calloway focus

KATIE FREDERICK, a senior business major from Bethesda, Maryland, spent the summer working for a Winston-Salem venture capital firm that helps small companies get off the ground. She didn't fill coffee cups or keep the copier humming; instead, she analyzed business plans for viability and helped make decisions on whether to grant funding. Later she got the chance to work directly with one of the start-up companies, helping develop marketing and on-line strategies for the launch of a new pharmaceutical product.

Frederick's summer job is a great illustration of the hottest topic these days in business: entrepreneurship. Business faculty members say entrepreneurship is one of the fastest-growing academic programs in business schools around the country and the world, at both undergraduate and graduate levels.

Recognizing the demand in the marketplace for entrepreneurial skills, the Calloway School of Business and Accountancy is hatching an idea to start a student incubator on campus that would allow teams of students from both the business school and the college to work together on developing new business ventures. The Center for Undergraduate Entrepreneurship, which should begin in Fall 2002, will have its own space in the F.M. Kirby Wing of Calloway Hall when the addition is completed in 2003.

The center is part of a broader University-wide Business Development Initiative announced in November.

"There's a real demand in the marketplace for a better understanding of how to be more successful entrepreneurially," said Page West, associate professor of business and head of the Calloway project. "This isn't just dot.com fever, which has fortunately come and gone. If you look at fundamental economics in the U.S., small growth-oriented entrepreneurial firms have been the firms that have created new jobs on a net basis over the last twenty-five years. Large organizations, the Fortune 500 companies, have seen a net reduction in jobs over that same period of time."

Even those Fortune 500 companies are looking for ways to think like entrepreneurs, West said, so it makes sense to prepare students in practical ways for this new business environment. The new center is part of a spectrum of entrepreneurship projects going on in the Calloway School, including a curriculum change that allows students to take West's course on Entrepreneurial Strategy in the junior year. A natural follow-up to that change is the establishment of a new internship program that will help students find entrepreneurial summer jobs between their junior and senior years. Frederick's job at Academy Venture Funds was a bit of a test case for this new strategy. She took the entrepreneur course last year and said she wouldn't have been prepared for the job without it.

"Thinking like an entrepreneur makes you look at business from all different angles," Frederick said. "I think the entrepreneurial skills I've learned in class and on the job will be useful for whatever I decide to do and will definitely give me an advantage."

Jack Wilkerson, dean of the Calloway School, said that when he started out as a young accountant, he could afford to do the grunt jobs and prove himself as he worked his way up. Now, companies expect new hires to add value from day one. "The economy has driven that," he said. "Companies are getting lean and mean, and they have to ask themselves every day if their actions result in value. This business environment is forcing everyone to think in an entrepreneurial way. My hope is that every Calloway student will develop an entrepreneurial perspective on what they do."

The Center will not work as a typical incubator in the business world does, West said. Those incubators generally give new ventures space, technology, and other resources they need for a specified period of time. If the idea hatches, great. If not, the incubator pulls the plug and moves on. "Our focus is less on incubating a company than it is on incubating the students themselves," West said. "We want to teach them to think more entrepreneurially, to develop entrepreneurial skills, and really to put them in a position by the time they graduate that either they can continue on with the venture they've been working on, or they will be ready to work in small businesses or other entrepreneurial situations in industry."

The hallmark of the center is that it will be open to students from the college as well as the Calloway school. "Creative business ideas don't just come from the business school," West said. "I have students from other departments call me who have great ideas but don't have the training they need to develop a business. We want to put Calloway students who have been trained in starting, developing, and operating a business in partnership with students from other departments who may have interesting insights."

Up two notches

Wake Forest ranks 26th among 249 national universities in the new edition of U.S. News and World Report's annual guide, "America's Best Colleges." The University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA) tied Wake Forest for the 26th spot. Wake Forest was ranked 28th in last year's guide.

The annual guide recognized Wake Forest for its small classes, low student/faculty ratio, and freshman retention rate. The University also fared well in the alumni giving and financial resources categories, and placed 30th in the listing of "Great Schools at Great Prices." The list evaluates which colleges and universities offer the best value based on a formula that "relates a school's academic quality, as indicated by its U.S. News ranking, with the net cost of attendance for a student who receives the average level of financial aid."

Divinity scholars

Five receive prestigious award

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL has chosen five first-year students to receive its most prestigious merit-based scholarships—the Samuel and Sarah Wait Graduate Fellowships in Theology and Ministry. The 2001-2002 recipients of the Wait Fellowships are Michael Gregg, Christopher Lawson, Nicholas Stepp, John Templeton, and David Mark Tolliver.

The Wait Fellowships were established in 1999, the Divinity School's inaugural year. They are named in honor of the first president of Wake Forest and his wife. The fellowships cover the entire cost of tuition and fees for study at the Divinity School. They are renewable for up to three years, which is the length of the full-time master of divinity program. The school's faculty selects recipients from a field of students nominated for their academic excellence and exceptional promise for Christian ministry.

Gregg is a 2001 graduate of Belmont University and is a member of Crieveewood Baptist Church in Nashville, Tennessee. Lawson, a 2001 graduate of Bluefield College, is a member of First Baptist Church of Bluefield, West Virginia. Stepp is a 2001 graduate of Carson-Newman College and a member of First Baptist Church of Jefferson City, Tennessee.

Templeton, a 2001 graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is a member of Binkley Baptist Church in Chapel Hill. Tolliver is a 1999 graduate of the College of William and Mary and a member of Southview Baptist Church in Herndon, Virginia.

Med School research support soars

Outside support for Wake Forest School of Medicine soared past the landmark $100 million mark in the year ending June 30, reaching $105,993,513. The nearly $106 million represents a 12.2 percent over last year's total of $94,466,839. Most of the outside support was for research and training, reflecting the growing research emphasis at the medical school.

High honors

The School of Law's LLM program for international students ranked eighth among U.S. law schools in a ranking by a private student-recruiting firm, American Universities Admissions Program. The LLM ranking is based on program quality, admissions rate, world image of the university, average starting salary, and satisfaction index of international students.

Groundbreaking remembered

Honoring those who made the move

IN CELEBRATION of the fiftieth anniversary of the groundbreaking for the Reynolda Campus, Wake Forest held a luncheon and special program on October 29. The program brought together retired faculty members who were teaching in 1951, and the relatives and descendants of trustees and dignitaries involved in the groundbreaking ceremony. Photographs and other memorabilia from the groundbreaking were on display.

Wake Forest College broke ground on its new campus on October 15, 1951. Wake Forest moved from the town of Wake Forest and opened the campus five years later, in 1956.

“Except for the founding of Wake Forest, this was the most important event in the history of the school,” said Senior Vice President Edwin Wilson ('43), who attended the groundbreaking ceremony as a first-year English professor. “For us to honor the descendants of those who made the move possible and re-create the mood of that day is important.”

Descendants and relatives who participated in the program included former governor of North Carolina Robert (Bob) Scott, son of William Kerr Scott who was governor of North Carolina from 1949-1953 and present at the groundbreaking; Barbara Babcock Millhouse, daughter of Charles and Mary Reynolds Babcock, who gave the Reynolda property to Wake Forest; Lloyd P. Tate Jr., president of the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation and great-grandson of R.J. Reynolds; Barbara Tribble Holding, daughter of Harold W. Tribble, president of Wake Forest from 1950-1967; and Murray C. Greason, a Wake Forest trustee and 1959 graduate.

The celebration closely followed the order of the program from 1951, including the menu for the lunch served prior to the groundbreaking, which was a Southern lunch buffet of sliced ham and turkey, mashed potatoes, string beans, and green peppers stuffed with corn and rice.

It also included President Tribble's daughter sharing stories about her father, and Scott reading a greeting from Clifton Truman Daniel, grandson of President Harry S. Truman who attended the groundbreaking. Student Government President Jordan Brehove spoke on behalf of Wake Forest students.

Her college fund will help others*Boatwright scholarship*

KIMBERLY BOATWRIGHT Shirley ('85) has used the funds her father originally set aside for her Wake Forest education to increase a scholarship in his memory. The scholarship was established last year by Shirley and her mother, Jean Boatwright, who lives in Williamsburg, Virginia.

mother, to establish a scholarship in Dad's name," said Shirley, who lives in Raleigh, North Carolina. "It was a top priority of his to ensure that financial reasons would not keep me from attending the college of my choosing. He was blessed with a long life, so I didn't need my college fund to attend Wake Forest. Since I was fortunate enough not to need it for my education, I want to make it available to other students."

Her father, John W. Boatwright, died in April 2000 at the age of 96. Shirley and her mother established the scholarship with an initial gift of securities and recently made additional gifts—including Shirley's "college fund"—to qualify for a matching grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation. As part of its commitment to "Honoring the Promise: The Campaign for Wake Forest," the foundation is donating $1 for every $3 from individual donors who give between $150,000 and $300,000 to a non-athletic undergraduate scholarship fund. For example, if an individual gives $150,000 to a scholarship fund, the foundation will add $50,000 to that particular fund.

Her father greatly valued education, Shirley said, and ensured that she and her three brothers were able to attend top schools. He endowed a chair in economics and a scholarship at his alma mater, William Jewell College, and another scholarship at William and Mary.

"Dad's strong emphasis on education made this scholarship a natural way to honor him and fulfill my desire to give back to the University so that other students could benefit from the Wake Forest experience that I was privileged to enjoy," said Shirley, who joined the Wake Forest Alumni Council in October. "My mother and I want to continue his philosophy of enabling students to pursue their dreams of higher education, and to equip them to be leaders in their communities.

"'Pro Humanitate' is very much in keeping with my dad's beliefs," she added. "He was convinced that along with the benefits of education came the responsibility to use it to the betterment of society, to give back the gifts of your time, talents, leadership, and resources."

Boatwright worked his way through high school and college and graduated from William Jewell College in Liberty, Missouri. He later earned a master's degree in economics from American University and a doctorate in economics from Northwestern University. He was an economist with Standard Oil Company of Indiana for more than twenty-eight years before retiring as its chief economist.

Her father was sixty when she was born, and he set up a fund for her because he was afraid he would not live to pay her way through college, Shirley said. Fortunately, he lived to see her graduate from Wake Forest, get married, and have twins, but he let her keep the college fund, which had been accumulating interest for nearly forty years.

Serving all, not just a few

Distinguished Alumnus Doug Bailey ('60)

WHEN THE Reverend Douglass M. Bailey ('60) returned to campus in October to receive the 2001 Distinguished Alumni Award for his long record of humanitarian work, he returned the credit to Wake Forest and "the spirit of that great motto of ours."

"Pro Humanitate is for all of humanity, not just for a few," said Bailey, rector of Calvary Episcopal Church in Memphis, Tennessee. "Pro Humanitate – I heard that here in your school. I am so convinced and so convicted that this is what we must be doing for humanity for all God's people."

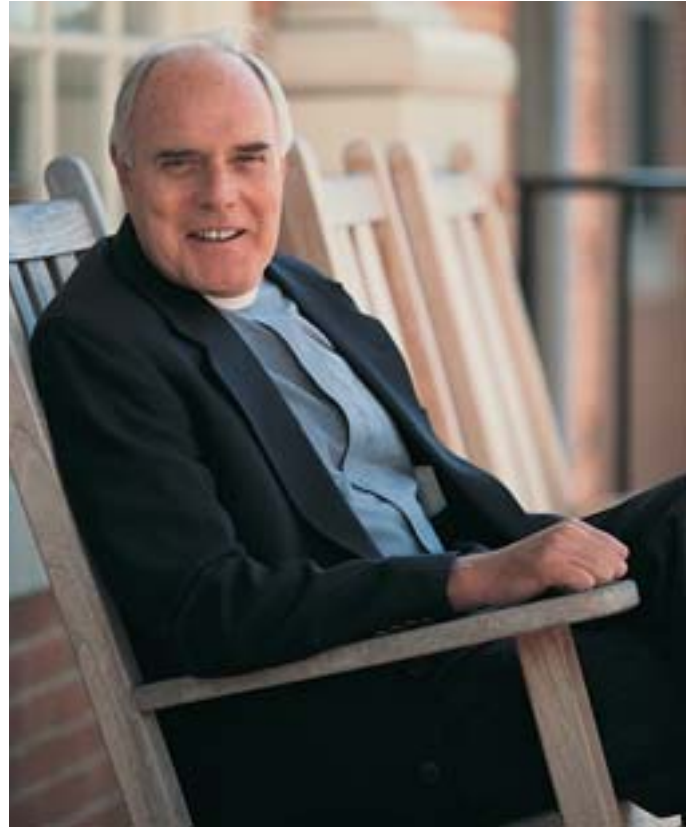

Bailey will be returning to campus again for good next month (January) when he becomes director of the new Center for Urban Ministry at the Wake Forest Divinity School and an assistant professor in the school. Bailey brings to the classroom a lifetime of putting the church to work in the community.

When "Father Doug" arrived at Calvary Church in 1978, the downtown parish had been in decline for years following the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King and the national urban crises of the 1960s. "The church had lost 1,000 members and was fast becoming a museum," he recalled. "We decided to open our doors so that everything we did would go out into the city. Twenty years later, we have rebuilt the urban body of Christ."

Bailey turned things around by emphasizing worship and education opportunities and the development of urban ministries. The church has grown from 400 members to 2,600, with a staff of thirty and an annual budget of $3.3 million. Ten non-profit agencies started by the church serve the homeless, the mentally ill, those suffering from AIDS, and those addicted to drugs or alcohol. Bailey turned an adjacent empty bank building into an elementary school, started another school for at-risk and suspended students, and opened a child-care center. The church also sponsors a community arts program and an employment program for teens. An indigent burial program provides a final resting place for the city's poorest residents in a cemetery once reserved for the city's wealthiest.

A native of Clarksburg, West Virginia, Bailey was recruited to play basketball at Wake Forest by Coach "Bones" McKinney, but played only briefly. After graduating from Wake Forest, he earned his masters in divinity degree from Virginia Theological Seminary in 1964 and his doctor of divinity from Rhodes College in Memphis.

Bailey said he was recently reminded of the importance of serving others when a poor woman approached him in a hospital emergency room. "She saw that I was a minister and she came over to me and said 'I hope you're never poor. Because when you're poor, you lose your voice.' And I said to her, 'I like to think that I'm from a church that helps those who've lost their voice recover their own voice.'

"I am not 'for' the poor, because that reflects a certain arrogance. And I am not 'of' the poor because I am not poor. But I am with the poor. Most churches have set aside the poor, the disposed, and the marginalized individuals in our society."

The Admissions and Welcome Center was named in memory of longtime dean of admissions William G. Starling ('57), who died June 18. Starling's wife Elinor was joined at the dedication by their son Gray and his wife Layne, and their daughter Jennie Weekley and her husband Mark and daughter Rebecca. Starling's fraternity brother Bill Cobb ('58) and his wife, Rhoda, and the Cobb Foundation made a gift two years ago to rename the building in Starling's honor to mark his planned retirement next year.

The Deacons huddle prior to a "Midnight Madness" scrimmage.

Unfinished business

WAKE FOREST enters the 2001-02 basketball season with an enthusiastic new head coach, a roster full of experience, and plenty of individual talent.

But how will all the pieces fit together? "We go in with a lot of experience, but also with a lot of question marks," said Skip Prosser, who takes over as head coach after serving as head coach at Xavier for seven highly successful years.

Wake Forest returns seven letterwinners including five players who started at least eight games from a team that finished 19-11 in 2000-01. And with five veteran seniors leading the way, this figures to be one of the more experienced teams in recent Wake Forest history. "Those five seniors have a sense of unfinished business as it pertains to their basketball careers," Prosser said. "Those five guys, knowing it is their last go-around in college basketball, will have a sense of urgency."

The 2002 senior class received its first taste of NCAA Tournament play last season after consecutive NIT appearances. Last year's team jumped out to a 12-0 start including wins over Kansas, Georgia, Richmond, and Virginia. But the Deacons struggled down the stretch, winning just seven of their last 18 games.

Gone from that team are its leading rebounder (6-9 Josh Shoemaker, 7.4 rebounds per game), one of the school's all-time leading scorers (6-1 Robert O'Kelley, 12.6 points per game), and one of the ACC's top post defenders and most physical players (6-9 Rafael Vidaurreta). "Our biggest concern is rebounding," Prosser said. "We lose a lot of size in Rafael and Josh. We'll especially miss their size as a defensive presence in the post to go against the (Duke's Carlos) Boozers and the (Maryland's Lonnie) Baxters of the world.

"And we'll also miss Robert. He took — and made — a lot of big shots during his career."

S p o r t s

What the Deacons do return in 2001-02 is one of the best one-two forward combinations in college basketball. Junior Josh Howard (6-6, 13.6 points and 5.9 rebounds per game) was a second team All-ACC selection last season after finishing among the league leaders in steals, field goal percentage, scoring, and rebounding. Howard, who seems to play his best against the top teams, could see his game take off this season in Prosser's up-tempo style.

Senior Darius Songaila (6-9, 13.2 points and 6.0 rebounds per game), one of the league's strongest players, is a versatile player who can drive to the basket or shoot from the perimeter. The former Lithuanian Olympian enters his senior season with 1,252 career points. "Josh and Darius have both been occasionally brilliant," Prosser said. "The challenge for both is to be consistently very good. When they are on their game, they can compete with anyone in college basketball."

Senior Antwan Scott (6-8, 6.8 ppg., 3.6 rpg.) will be counted on for more minutes this season in the post. Scott, a high-flying shot blocker, played the previous three seasons in the shadows of Vidaurreta and Shoemaker. And while Scott's lack of weight (205 pounds) in the post is a concern, his athleticism should pay dividends in the up-tempo system Prosser has in mind for the Deacons.

Songaila, projected to play the power forward spot, could also see minutes at center. "It will likely be post defense by committee," Prosser said. The frontcourt will be bolstered by two talented freshmen — Jamaal Levy (6-9) and Vytas Danelius (6-8). Both highly touted rookies are expected to contribute immediately. Red-shirt freshman Dshamal Schoetz (7-0) was injured in pre-season practice and is out for the year.

There are no shortage of candidates at the point guard position, a spot Prosser sees as vital. Seniors Broderick Hicks (6-1, 6.9 ppg., 77 assists) and Ervin Murray (6-5, 2.2 ppg., 84 assists) split time at the point guard position last season, offering contrasting but effective styles. Hicks, who started 18 games, pushes the ball up court and is more of a scoring threat, while Murray is consistently in control and looks to pass first. Sophomore A.W. Hamilton (6-3) saw limited action last season at the point, and incoming freshman Taron Downey (6-2) will also get a chance to compete for playing time.

"I'd like to see someone emerge and take the point guard position by the throat," Prosser said. "I put a lot of faith in the point guard and it would be good for someone to seize the position."

The Deacons may be even stronger and just as deep at the shooting guard position. Senior Craig Dawson (6-5, 12.5 ppg.) is one of the most prolific and accurate three-point field goal shooters in school history. Dawson, who started eight games last season after being used as a high-scoring sixth man, has 155 career three-pointers to his credit. Junior Steve Lepore (6-5, eligible transfer from Northwestern) is a blue collar player who is also dangerous from beyond the arc. A two-year starter at Northwestern, Lepore sank 118 treys in just two seasons with the Wildcats.

"Craig can shoot the ball as well as anyone in the league," Prosser said. "The challenge for Craig is for him to develop into a fullcourt defender. Steve could be a real positive force for us. No one has worked harder preparing himself for the season."

The returning players, not to mention the fans, are excited about Prosser's plan to turn the speed of the game up a notch this season. The Deacons plan to get after it on both ends of the court this winter.

Prosser hopes the Deacons will develop into an attacking, pressing team on defense, leading to fastbreaks and easy shots on offense. "We try to fight for every floorboard. We try to steal the ball every possession. Trap it, and steal it,

Skip Prosser: A sense of urgency

that's what we try to do. We want to be a team on offense when we're on defense."

The Deacons will face a very difficult schedule in 2001-02, including their first ever Preseason NIT appearance, the ACC/Big 10 Challenge, road games at Kansas and St. John's, and home games versus Cincinnati, Marquette, Richmond, and Minnesota. "I am excited about the schedule," Prosser said. "I think it is extremely challenging and will hopefully prepare us for the ACC. And should we be in position for an NCAA Tournament berth at the end of the year, it should send the (NCAA Men's Division I Basketball) Committee a message about playing a tough non-conference schedule."

After Disaster, Unity and Hope

Regardless of where they were on the morning of September 11, members of the Wake Forest community reacted to the terrorist attacks as the nation did: with fear and outrage, with patriotism and compassion. In the days that followed, students, faculty, staff, and alumni responded to America's worst tragedy in the true spirit of Pro Humanitate. They held prayer vigils and fund drives; they gave the gift of friendship and the gift of blood. They provided medical and spiritual care to the day's victims: the ones on-site and the ones on campus. They tried to help each other make sense of these events, while tensely waiting for news of friends and family who may have been on the planes or in the buildings that were demolished. As word came that at least two alumni were among the confirmed lost, they grieved together, and determined these deaths would not be in vain.

"Contrary to what you learn from the clock and calendar, our lives do not unfold hour-by-hour, day-by-day. Our lives are marked by events—of celebration and crisis—which are communal and create the common memories which make of us a people, a nation," said President Thomas K. Hearn Jr., at a memorial service on the evening of September 11.

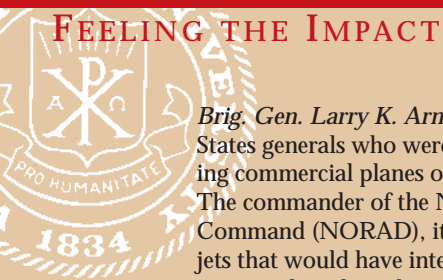

"The most gripping of these life-marking events are tragic. For all too human reasons, we resist and deny the lessons of the darkness of the soul. The sundial on the old campus spoke for all when it read, 'I count only the sunny hours.' It takes a catastrophe to overcome our reluctance to accept the lessons of human hate." (Read the full text of President Hearn's speech at <http://www.wfu.edu/memorial/>).

The 2001-02 year began as one without an academic theme, but all that changed with the events of September 11. Moved and called to action by the nation's tragedy, a group of student leaders organized "The Year of Unity and Hope: Pro Humanitate at Work," which will continue throughout the spring semester.

"The purpose of the theme year is to provide a forum for discussion and education in light of really horrible events," said Jonathan Willingham, a junior from Summerville, South Carolina, and the co-chair of the theme year committee. "My generation has always been accused of being apathetic, and the truth is that we have never been challenged like this. This is really our first opportunity to grow as adults as we try to build a framework for understanding how our lives fit into the global community."

The theme year opened September 27 with a public forum called "Understanding September 11." A panel of faculty experts on the Middle East explained the history of American relations with countries in that region for an audience of more than four hundred people. Other events focused on diplomatic and military responses to the attack. "Our main goal is to ensure that we come out of this as better people, not as jaded, bitter people, so every event we have will have an educational focus," Willingham said.

Students began work on a theme year web site to offer information about events and a "Book of Days." Brian Bell, a senior from Jackson Springs, designed the site, which features a logo designed by senior Melissa McGhie of Miami.

Brig. Gen. Larry K. Arnold, ('64) was one of the two United States generals who were authorized to shoot down threatening commercial planes over the forty-eight contiguous states. The commander of the North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD), it was his task to deploy the fighter jets that would have intercepted/shot down the planes in New York and Washington had they gotten there in time.

Joann Mary Klein, Rockville Centre, New York, mother of Beth Klein ('00):

This evening when we arrived at home and listened to the message that you left for us to check on our daughter Beth and our family, we were very moved by your concern and thoughtfulness. Thankfully, our family is fine and the environment and kinship of Wake Forest kept Beth right there in Winston-Salem...far from the danger here in New York.

In the wake of the terrorist attacks, safety of students and faculty was of utmost concern. Wake Forest monitored national and international events to ensure that students in Winston-Salem and in study-abroad programs remained secure. The University kept abreast of State Department advisories and was prepared to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of students. Residential study centers in London, Venice, and Vienna remained open during fall break so that students who chose not to travel had a safe place to stay during that time.

Shortly after the tragic events, comforting messages began to arrive from the study-abroad residences. "The situation in Venice remains calm. Our staff there has received encouraging information from officials at the U.S. Embassy in Rome, indicating that American students and academic officials are not considered a likely target of terrorism," said Peter Kairoff, associate professor of music and director of Casa Artom in Venice. "Of the more than eighty American college-level programs in Italy, none has elected to suspend courses or send students home. The situation is being monitored closely, and any changes will be noted here as soon as they occur."

Jim Barefield, professor of history and faculty director of London's Worrell House, reported that all students there were vigilant but not panic-stricken. All had returned safely from their fall break travels, as had students studying at Flow House in Vienna. "All our students have returned safely from their fall recess and none reported any problems possibly related to the terror attacks. Europe has lived with the threat of terrorist attack for a longer time and is quite prepared," wrote Guenter Haika, manager of Flow House.

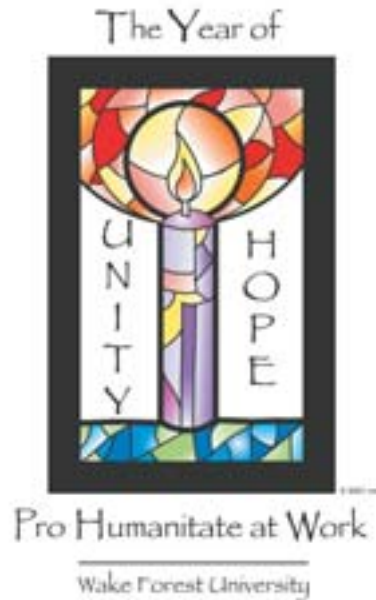

The University's Crisis Management Team initiated a number of activities. Campus Ministry and the Counseling Center offered counseling sessions in Benson University Center, and the University implemented a 24-hour information hotline. The Department of Human Resources developed a list of faculty and staff traveling abroad and made contacts to confirm their safety. Students and faculty abroad were required to register with local embassies, and a member of the Wake Forest Police Department was sent abroad to evaluate security at the overseas residences. Campus security was heightened, and a notice regarding suspicious mail was distributed.

The Office of Alumni Activities held a phonathon to contact about 3,150 alumni, parents, and friends who live or work in the greater New York area. During the week of September 17, Wake Forest students, faculty, and staff called these Wake Foresters to offer thoughts and prayers, to see if they were safe, and to ask if there was anything Wake Forest could do to help.

Students, faculty, and staff raised more than $10,000 during a campuswide fund drive to benefit charities supporting victims of the terrorist attack. The Volunteer Service Corps organized the project, which drew more than 1,000 student participants. "We were very impressed at the number of people campuswide who chose to participate," said Sarah Mastalir, a junior from Denver, Colorado. "The fact that we raised so much money is wonderful because the people who have been impacted by this horrible tragedy deserve our support."

Campus organizations, classes, and student groups representing residence halls held separate fund-raisers for the project, as well as a blood drive. Residents of Huffman Residence Hall held a potluck dinner and members of several choral groups held a benefit concert. A special edition of "What's New @WFU," the University's electronic newsletter, asked for information regarding the safety of Wake Foresters in the New York and Washington, D.C., areas. Responses came from Wake Foresters throughout the world. Check the main alumni web page (www.wfu.edu/alumni) from time to time for updates.

This Tragic Moment

At least four of the thousands killed in the September 11 terrorist attacks had ties to Wake Forest. Mark Schurmeier ('79), who lived in McLean, Virginia, was attending a conference at the World Trade Center. Another victim, James Christopher Cappers, attended Wake Forest in 1989-90 and worked for Marsh & McLennan in the trade center's north tower.

Two family members of alumni were also among the lost. Edmund McNally, brother of Mary McNally ('93), worked for Fiduciary Trust on the 97th floor of the south tower. Gerald P. Fisher, father of Serena Fisher Dugan ('94), was killed in the attack on the Pentagon. Fisher, 57, worked for the international consulting firm Booz, Allen & Hamilton and was at the Pentagon for a meeting.

A former Wake Forest parent who worked in the World Trade Center was not there at the time of the terrorist attack, but thirty-eight of the fifty-five employees in his office were lost. Ray Pfeister, father of Joe Pfeister ('01), is vice chairman of Fred Alger Management, Inc., an investment management firm, which had its headquarters in the north tower.

The death of Schurmeier, a popular member of Theta Chi, hit fraternity brothers especially hard. News of his death spread quickly by e-mail as they reached out to one another and shared memories of "Sherm." Schurmeier worked for the government mortgage company Freddie Mac.

"In the midst of shock and sadness at Mark's tragic death, I've been struck by how vivid so many memories and relationships from Theta Chi remain," said fraternity brother Greg Williams ('79), a pastor in Hickory, North Carolina. "Even after the passage of time and losing track of one another, the tears came instantly with the memories as I read the e-mail about Sherm."

Rich Marvin ('80), another fraternity brother and Schurmeier's former roommate, remembered his best friend as a "drama geek" and an imposing figure at 6'7", but with a gentle nature. "He sang 'This Magic Moment' a cappella at my wedding and would often call on our anniversary and sing it again. We shared so many of life's experiences in what seems to be such a short amount of time. As I alternate between all of my emotions, I feel more than

Marc Palmieri ('94), New York City

Let me tell you—this is the strangest time of my life. At 8:47 a.m. on Tuesday, September 11, I was standing on Broadway and Great Jones Street walking to the magazine office (Lafayette & Houston), and the first plane flew right over my head. It was low and fast as hell. About three seconds later I heard a "bump" like a truck going over a bump—here you hear it all day. I walked quickly up to the next corner and saw the trade center. A big black, charred slash across it—flames, glitter, and smoke in the sky—everyone gathering to watch. I ran up to another corner after about 20 minutes of being stunned by the "accident" when the second hit. Nothing's been sane here since—constant state of suspense. For thirty years I avoided reality. It looks like that's all over now.

anything the blessing of Mark's friendship and the time that we were able to share."

Marvin said Schurmeier became president of Theta Chi because of his leadership, respectability, and soft-spoken personality. He was also active in theater productions and was a DJ at WFDD. "Mark was a humble, Christian man who demonstrated 'servant' type leadership as a husband, father, Theta Chi president, and as a Freddie Mac director and manager," said Ed Anfindsen ('78), who preceded Schurmeier as president of Theta Chi. "Even though I hadn't seen him for fifteen years, after reading the trail of e-mails about him, it was clear that he never changed those values."

Schurmeier was a communications major at Wake Forest and earned an MBA from American University in 1988. He worked for the U.S. Treasury before joining Freddie Mac in 1991. As director of Strategic Reengineering in Funding and Investments, he managed a staff of fifty that was responsible for identifying, researching, and implementing technology solutions.

"Mark was a gentleman of the highest order—a devoted father, husband, and co-worker," said Greg Parseghian, Freddie Mac's chief investment officer and a senior vice president. "He has given Freddie Mac an exemplary ten years of service and is responsible for many of the programs and innovations that have helped us fulfill our mission. He is no less than an American patriot and a Freddie Mac hero."

Schurmeier had taken an early shuttle flight from Washington, D.C., to New York on the morning of September 11 for a technology conference at the Windows on the World on the 106th floor of the north tower, the tower hit by the first plane. Shortly after the plane hit the building, Schurmeier's colleagues at Freddie Mac heard from someone with him who reported that the conference room they were in was filling with smoke and that the elevators were not working and the stairwells were impassable.

Schurmeier's colleagues are now putting together scrapbooks of memories and tributes for his wife, Ayako, his five-year-old son, Mason, and his parents, Jerry and Susan Schurmeier of Wheaton, Illinois. "When Mason grows up, he will have a keepsake that reflects the affection and esteem we had for his dad," said Usha Chaudhary, a vice president to whom Schurmeier reported.

Memorial services for Schurmeier were held in his hometown of Wheaton in October, and in McLean last month, on what would have been his and his wife's anniversary. Memorial gifts may be sent to the Southern Poverty Law Center Teach Tolerance Program, 400 Washington Avenue, Montgomery, Alabama 36104, or to Habitat for Humanity International, 121 Habitat Street, Americus, Georgia 31709. Freddie Mac employees are also raising funds for Schurmeier's son's education; those gifts may be sent to Ayako Schurmeier, 1325 Cordelia Court, McLean, Virginia 22102.

Cappers, 33, who lived in Wading River, New York, is survived by his wife, Kathleen, and their two children; his parents, Maurice and Peggy Cappers of Long Valley, New Jersey, and a brother, Mark. After leaving Wake Forest, Cappers graduated from Quinnipiac University in Hamden, Connecticut.

Katy McDonald ('92), New York City:

At 8:48 this morning I was walking through Times Square. My walk to work is only 15 minutes and it takes me through the heart of Manhattan, across Broadway and through plenty of noisy tourists. It is hard to believe that I could have been outside and within earshot and eyesight of the first aircraft crash into the World Trade Center but I was oblivious, along with the thousands of other people in Times Square. When the (elevator) doors opened at the 40th floor of my building, an hysterical colleague screamed something about a plane crashing into the trade center. We tumbled out into the lobby and ran to the windows of my office to witness the next horrific stage of demolition.

Like children with noses pressed against a pet store window, my colleagues and I stood fixated as the second jet flew into the trade center. That minute hope that the first crash had been an accident evaporated, as did our contact with the outside world. I stood with my colleagues absorbing the stories, the reactions ... the fear and the sorrow. We were united in our helplessness.

Religion of peace?

For many Americans, the intense media focus on daily developments related to the attacks on New York and Washington has produced conflicting images of Islam, the world's second-largest religion. On the one hand, the hijackers and the al-qaida ("the base") network that apparently supported them clearly reveal a militant Islam. The five-page letter left by ringleader Muhammad Atta reflects a deeply held religious worldview seeking to justify the behavior. Similarly, Osama bin

Laden's widely publicized Jihad Manual and his various taped messages are laced with religious language and imagery designed to motivate his followers. On the other hand, many Muslim leaders have stated emphatically that Islam is a religion of peace and that these extremists do not reflect true Islam. President Bush has echoed a similar message repeatedly since the attacks: "We have no quarrel with Islam, which is a good and peaceful religion."

UNDERSTANDING ISLAM

MEANS GRASPING ITS

COMPLEXITIES

BY CHARLES A. KIMBALL

Other images further confuse the picture. A number of columnists and highly visible religious leaders have seized the moment to proclaim various messages. Some speak about Islam in generic terms as inherently violent and menacing; some highlight selected Qur'anic passages to "prove" a particular point.

Judging from the questions I have fielded during numerous national and international media interviews and speaking engagements during the two months following the attacks, there remains widespread confusion about Islam and the powerful forces at work in predominantly Muslim countries: Why is Islam called the religion of peace? What is the meaning of jihad? Why do so many Muslims appear to hate the United States? Where do we go from here?

Developing a Framework for Understanding

Before engaging these questions, it is essential to recognize the need for a more accurate understanding of Islam. Most Americans know very little about Islam. It is worse than simple ignorance: much of what people think they know is incorrect or distorted. The reasons are connected both to television images of violent extremism and a long history of interaction between Christians and Muslims, much of which has been characterized by mistrust, misunderstanding, and mutual antipathy.

In order to make sense of the Qur'anic passages about jihad, for instance, it is helpful to know more about Islamic understandings of God, revelation, religious and social requirements for the faithful. The need to take a step back and explain basic tenets of Islam is what often informs those who want to portray Islam in simple terms as a religion of peace.

A brief Arabic lesson helps demystify the meaning of key terms and make clear the basic orientation of Muslims. Like Hebrew, Arabic is built on a consonantal root system. Most words are derived from three consonants that convey a basic notion. The root s-l-m in Arabic has to do with submission to the will of God and peace. Three familiar words are connected to this root: salam, Islam and Muslim. "Salam" means "peace, well-being;" it originates from the same root as the more familiar Hebrew word, shalom. Islam means submission to the will of God; it is the "religion of peace." Those who submit themselves in obedience to God are Muslims; they are, by definition, people "at peace" in creation. God's will is made known primarily in the Qur'an and, secondarily, through the sayings and actions of Muhammad.

Over time, focused educational efforts can address the deep biases and misperceptions that

Eyes on the street or the train or tube that typically looked away now met ours with a sad, knowing kindness. Perhaps their own memories of menacing airplanes and fiery destruction were made fresh again. Strangers, hearing our American voices, offered words of support. There were public displays of condolence: a worship service at St. Paul's Cathedral attended by many Wake Forest students as well as Queen Elizabeth; the historic playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" at the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace. My small daughters saw Big Ben and royal palaces but what they also experienced was an international unity born of tragedy.

Jessica Jackson '00, serving in the U.S. Peace Corps in Asaka, Uzbekistan:

currently permeate our society. Although these are small steps, a fundamental commitment to education, both formal and informal, is crucial. Understanding Islam more accurately and learning to live cooperatively with Muslims who share our society and fragile planet is not an option. Some basic demographic information reinforces the point. There are approximately 1.2 billion Muslims in the world. The four countries with the largest Muslim populations are in Asia: Indonesia (160 million); Pakistan (140 million); and Bangladesh and India (120-130 million each). Islam is now or soon will be the second-largest religion in the United States with approximately seven million adherents. There are more Muslims in America than there are Presbyterians and Episcopalians combined. Islam continues to grow rapidly as a permanent part of the religious and political landscape throughout the world.

Given the size and scope of Islam and the obvious turbulence among many Muslims, the previous question comes into focus: What is the meaning of jihad? The Arabic word means, "striving or struggling in the way of God." Muslims should strive to know and do the will of God. Historically, the "greater" jihad refers to the struggle each person has with him or herself to do what is right. Human sinfulness, pride, and selfishness are the major obstacles.

The "lesser" jihad involves the outward defense of Islam. Muslims should be prepared to defend Islam, including military defense, when the community of faith is under attack. While the vast majority of Muslims reject the violent extremism manifested on September 11, some Muslim leaders and groups clearly attempt to justify their behavior in the context of a holy war or struggle in defense of Islam.

Common Themes and Specific Circumstances

"Why do they hate us?" is perhaps the most frequent question posed by journalists. The question is highly problematic since it encourages thinking in collective and monolithic terms. The more productive question is this: Why are so many Muslims so angry in various parts of the world? The answers are not simple or straightforward. We can begin to get some clarity, however, through a synthetic approach that takes seriously religious, historical, political, social, and economic dynamics.

A number of factors are operating simultaneously in predominantly Muslim countries. There are common themes one can discern through study and personal interaction with Muslims over time. These inform many of the politically active individuals and groups, often

I received a call asking me to come and work in the Red Cross mental health section of the Family Assistance Center in New York. My job was to provide grief and counseling services to families as they came into the center to file for death certificates. I took families to Ground Zero, helped them deal with the reality of death, calmed their anxieties, and provided them with comfort and stability. I am honored to have been able to work in these ways and help carry forward the motto of "Pro Humanitate."

Jane VanBrug David ('81), of Federal Way, Virginia, canine search specialist with the Federal Emergency Management Association:

The most difficult thing to deal with wasn't the tremendous tragedy of working in a graveyard of thousands of souls. It was facing the living community left behind. On my last day at the World Trade Center site, as Kita and I recovered remains, I turned around to find a FDNY chaplain blessing what we had found. The sorrow in his face was overwhelming. Although we would have given anything to find survivors in the rubble, I can only hope that we were able to bring some measure of closure to a grieving family through our efforts.

referred to as Islamists. At the same time, there are very specific historical, political, social, and economic circumstances giving rise to different movements in particular settings.

Many Muslims are convinced that Islam can provide a framework for the future. They point to the past and note how Islam led the world for centuries as the greatest civilizational system. Many in the West fail to grasp the substance behind this worldview. The popular Western image of Islam as unsophisticated and anti-intellectual quickly disappears in the face of even a cursory survey of Islamic history. When Europe was languishing in the “Dark Ages,” Islamic civilization was thriving from Spain to India. For several centuries, Muslims led the world in areas such as mathematics, chemistry, medicine, philosophy, navigation, architecture, horticulture, and astronomy.

Muslims are proud of their history and civilization. But something went wrong. From the sixteenth through the twentieth century many of the lands with a Muslim majority were under the control of outside powers. European colonial powers dominated prior to the rise of the two superpowers following World War II. In the last decade, the United States has been the world’s superpower.

The formation of many new nations during the past sixty years adds another layer. Muslims who hoped and worked for revitalized, contemporary Islamic states have been thwarted time and again during recent decades. Although many Muslim lands now have indigenous leaders, there are not many examples where those who govern are in power by virtue of popular choice. Instead, one finds dynastic rule by kings or military and political leaders who seized and maintain power through force.

Despicable human rights records in many Muslim countries add to the frustration. The details vary from country to country, but the pattern is all too familiar. Economic disparity and perceptions of exploitation are additional ingredients contributing toward political instability. Extraordinary wealth enjoyed by the ruling elite coupled with images of opulence in the West provide evidence for those who argue that their countries are still very much controlled by external powers.

Islam is not monolithic. Sweeping generalizations devoid of careful contextual analysis will lead inevitably to erroneous conclusions. Afghanistan is not Algeria; Algeria is not Iran; Iran is not Saudi Arabia; and so on. One must be very careful about generalizations based on one setting or one group. When journalists and pundits engage the question, “Why do they hate us?” they find partial answers in clashing value systems and general grievances related to inconsistent U.S. foreign policies. But the roots of frustration go much deeper. They are lodged primarily in particular settings.

The desire for clarity about the Islamic connections to turbulent forces is understandable. Bringing the picture into focus requires both an awareness of widespread aspirations among Muslims and a lot of hard, painstaking work in the dense thicket of the particulars present in specific situations.

I think that’s the challenge: to ascertain how I’m going to be an instrument and what role God wants me to play. With everything having been destroyed, it’s certainly a message to me that it’s going to be a time of rebirth, of starting over, of reaffirming my commitment and beliefs.

People were running through the streets. Some were stopping and praying. It was like something from a movie. We went to the top floor of my building and from our glass window you could see the Pentagon, black smoke billowing out, and Navy jets flying overhead.

Hostility Toward the United States

Anger and frustration inspiring violence directed toward America is not new. But September 11 shifted everything to a different level. The meticulous planning, the targets, magnitude, and audacity of these attacks were unprecedented. The perpetrators ignored the absolute Islamic prohibitions against suicide and the taking of innocent life—even in war. They saw only the Qur’anic texts that promise paradise to those who die struggling in the way of God.

The search for simple answers continues with both Osama bin Laden and many analysts citing U.S. support of Israel and sanctions against Iraq as primary sources of anger toward the U.S. Such rhetoric reflects only part of the truth. There seems to be little focus on the various ways Arab states have treated Palestinians over the years or the internal dynamics among Palestinian leaders as complicating factors. Why does Saddam Hussein bear no blame for using resources to fortify his regime while hundreds of thousands of children suffer in his country?

I do not want to diminish the importance of these ongoing conflicts or the suffering of people caught in the middle. On the contrary, I’ve written books and articles and provided Congressional testimony on these very issues. But the lifting of sanctions on Iraq or the resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian problem would not eliminate the frustration toward the United States.

The deeper issues, in my view, are tied to the enormous power of the United States and the inconsistency of policies affecting the Muslim countries in question. In addition to the many good and helpful policies pursued by our government, one can also find short-sighted, self-serving policies that contradict the ideals most Americans believe we espouse. We don’t pay much attention to the inconsistencies in foreign policy. People in other parts of the world who feel the impact of those policies pay close attention.

Many Muslims around the world are unimpressed by presidential speeches extolling our virtues as freedom-loving, peaceful people who cherish democracy and our way of life. They see our support for many repressive regimes they consider illegitimate. They see the pervasive influence of hedonistic Western culture on their traditional societies. Add in one-sided rhetoric about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and suffering children in Iraq and you’ve got a volatile mix.

The Way Forward

Where do we go from here? There are no easy answers or quick fixes. The road ahead presents many dangerous obstacles. I believe a two-track approach is needed. The immediate threats are very real. The events of September 11 speak for themselves. Violent extremists are beyond negotiation. One has to assume that these people will use whatever weapons of mass destruction they can acquire and deliver. The stakes are exceedingly high—not only for the United States, but for the world. Whatever their grievances, their actions eliminate any moral authority.

The short-term requires a careful, systematic, global effort to neutralize these misguided, violent extremists. The challenge involves pursuing military, political, and economic policies that won’t drive many more frustrated and angry people into the ranks of the al-qaida network. Patience and a great deal of collective wisdom are needed.

The longer-term challenge moves at a very different level. The United States must find new ways to work with others in the community of nations in pursuit of peace and stability. This is not wishful thinking. I’m not talking about lighting a candle and singing “We are the World.” Rather, America must take a hard look at its own policies and resolve to take principled, consistent positions in support of fundamental human rights, self-determination, democratization, and genuine economic opportunities. Working with others, the United States must endeavor to help address the legitimate sources of frustration and instill hope that a better future is possible.

OPPORTUNITY knocks

Thirty Wake Forest undergraduate and five graduate students have pursued their special interests through independent study projects the past two summers, often in foreign countries, thanks to the Richter Scholars program. The projects are intended to be “life-changing experiences.”

“The program provides an unparalleled opportunity for students to pursue topics in which they’ve developed deep, and in many cases passionate interests,” said Robert A. Browne, professor of biology and Richter Scholars undergraduate program chair. “Every student I have talked to has been profoundly affected by his or her Richter experience. In some ways, it’s like the old ‘Millionaire’ television program where, out of the blue, someone taps you on the shoulder and says, ‘Follow your dreams.’”

“The Richter program is an extremely valuable one for graduate students,” adds Cecilia Solano, associate dean of the graduate school and chair of the graduate Richter Scholars committee. “Other sources of money for graduate students are directly tied to working on a specific research project or acting as a teaching assistant. All of these are very focused sources of funding. The Richter is so impressive because it allows students to get a larger context on their research and professional lives. Every single student who has had this experience has been excited about what they did and what they learned.”

The Richter Scholars program is funded through two trusts established decades ago by Joseph Edward Richter, in memory of his parents, Evalyn E. and Paul K. Richter. Richter studied history and architecture at Cambridge University in London, and he thought it was such an enriching experience that he wanted other college students to have the same opportunity, so he left his entire estate to create the trust funds. The funds are administered by the Bank of America.

Wake Forest received more than $97,000 to fund student projects last summer and $150,000 the year before. Each student selected for a grant must have a faculty mentor for his or her project; amounts awarded range up to $5,000, depending on the project.

During the past summer Wake Forest Richter Scholars investigated the anti-cancer properties of the drug Taxol, studied dance technique and composition in Tuscany, tracked bird evolution in Ecuador, and worked with the International Justice Mission in Thailand. Here are some other experiences.

Julie Wyatt & Carolyn Krisel

in Peru

Julie Wyatt, a doctoral student in biology, and her field assistant Carolyn Krisel spent last summer on an Amazon jungle adventure that changed their lives.

Wyatt, a native of Cleveland, Tennessee, and Krisel, a sophomore from Summerville, South Carolina, traveled to a biological station in the Manu National Park in the Amazon Basin of Peru to research Wyatt's project examining the impact of humans on certain types of vegetation in the rainforest. It was the first trip for both outside the United States.

Sleeping in a tent for weeks, bathing in a piranha-infested river, and existing on beans, rice, and pasta, the two women not only savored the opportunity to study the world's most prized ecosystem, they became a part of it. Howler monkeys woke them every morning at 5 a.m., deadly Bushmaster vipers and scores of giant river otters watched as they brushed their teeth near the camp lake.

"Being in this pristine rainforest made me appreciate the simple and mundane parts of life—what makes this part of the world so utterly amazing is that the mundane is extraordinary—herds of peccaries, monkeys passing above, caimans basking on logs, agoutis munching in the middle of the path, jaguar prints in the mud next to your footprint, and giant river otters playing as you brush your teeth," said Wyatt, a graduate of Eckerd College in St. Petersburg, Florida. "This experience has revealed to me the elaborate interactions among flora and fauna—to walk through the forest and think of all the paths that cross and intertwine to create such diversity and complexity is overwhelming. Such utter amazement and curiosity is what fuels the field of ecology."

For Krisel, a biology major, the trip broadened her interest in science. "The only experience I had had was working in a molecular biology lab. Not knowing what direction I wanted to go in career wise and being unclear on my goals, this gave me a whole new perspective on a different aspect of science." Krisel also conducted her own research on the competing root systems of Ficus trees in the rainforest.

"My experience was definitely life-changing," Krisel added. "This was my first time out of the country. To go to Peru and live in a tent in the jungle for seven weeks, not knowing what to expect, was the biggest fear and anticipation. It has definitely made me a lot bolder. Until now, I would have never hopped on a plane to South America."

enior anthropology major Giles Harrison-Conwill used his Richter Scholarship to spend five weeks last summer examining race, class, and masculinity in Trinidad and Tobago. It was an experience, he said, that has cemented his interest in graduate research on the subject of racial identity. Harrison-Conwill, along with two other anthropology students from Wake Forest, were scheduled to present the results of his research last month at the American Anthropological Association Conference in Washington, D.C.

The son of two University of Tennessee professors—his mother is an anthropologist and his father is a psychologist—he insists that he is not following in his mother's footsteps by choosing to become an anthropologist, or by sharing her professional interest in racial issues in the Caribbean. It was purely the subject matter in his introductory anthropology courses that drew him to the discipline, he said.

"I'm interested in things like why ideas of race can be so different, the fact that people have racial identities," said Harrison-Conwill. "It was just a great learning experience."

aige Bentley ('90), a master's student in counseling, traveled to southern India last summer to familiarize herself with the use of yoga techniques in psychotherapy and to observe yoga research in action. At the Swami Vivekananda Yoga Research Center, Bentley observed and participated in a variety of yoga practices designed to calm the mind, body, and spirit.

She joined the yoga-therapy patients in meditation at 4 a.m. every morning, participated in the yoga practices geared toward certain physical and mental issues, and listened intently to lectures.

The culture shock alone was a test of her mental flexibility and stamina, she said. "The constant juxtaposition of chronic harsh realities with absolutely amazing beauty was exhilarating, disturbing, breathtaking, alarming and soothing all at the same time: lepers, lizards, and unsanitary eating conditions; extreme poverty, squalid villages and beautiful people; unimaginable kindness and guardian angels everywhere."

Bentley said she cried for a week after she returned home. "I believe the tears I shed were partially from relief and exhaustion, but primarily from the realization of how incredibly lucky we are to simply be alive and how much we take that good fortune for granted. The experience as a whole was probably the most life altering and awe-inspiring I have ever had—one that opened my mind to trusting this process called life."

ophomore Jennifer Harris spent countless hours preparing for her summer research project on human rights in Eastern Europe, including a spring break spent interviewing Immigration and Naturalization Service officials in Washington, D.C. Harris, a sophomore economics and politics major from Lawton, Oklahoma, used her summer Richter scholarship to continue her research on the effects of the creation of the new European Union on Latvia.

“I knew that I wanted to look at the EU enlargement and what interested me happened to be human rights,” she said. “I think the scale by which you should judge any fully developed democracy is the way they treat the least of its citizens. We have had a long struggle and are still struggling obviously with that in the United States. I wanted to feel out the climate for human rights over there.”

Harris flew to Latvia last May to compare how the United States and Latvia deal with asylum for immigrants. She also assisted the European Integration Bureau in drafting the laws of Latvia’s asylum program by providing a comprehensive overview of the U.S. asylum program. She then traveled south to Italy where she spent three weeks at the European University Institute near Florence studying its extensive collection of papers on human rights issues. She completed her research in Budapest, Hungary, where she interned at the Open Society Institute and studied at the European Roma Rights Center.

Harris says she came back to Wake Forest enlightened with a greater understanding of human rights issues.

Great Expectations

Freshman hopes and Senior reflections

by Leah P. McCoy

LAST SPRING WAKE FOREST surveyed members of the 2001 senior class to examine how well the University had met their freshman expectations. Results show that expectations were high, and that, with a few exceptions, they were met.

The survey began in the fall of 1997 when all 967 incoming freshmen were requested to write an essay describing their expectations of themselves and of the University. Last April, shortly before graduation, a random sample of 200 of these same students were given a copy of their freshman essay and asked to write a senior essay evaluating their college experience in terms of whether these expectations were met, exceeded, or not exceeded. Twenty percent of the essays were returned and analyzed by three researchers. Major themes in the essays were academic, personal, and social expectations.

Academic Expectations

IN THE FRESHMAN ESSAYS, several students mentioned that they had chosen Wake Forest because of the University's prestige and academic excellence. Students named academic achievement as their major goal, and several hoped to develop better study habits, and to have challenging classes. The senior essays clearly verified that Wake Forest met this expectation. Students reported that they were challenged, the academic atmosphere was competitive, and that they had to work hard for good grades. A senior reported, "Although I made Dean's List every semester, there was not a single semester when I didn't truly believe I would fall out of this school! I have been challenged beyond what I thought possible, and my achievements mean the world to me because I know how hard I had to strive for them."

In the freshman essays, students were asked to predict their graduating grade point average. As recent high school graduates, they were very confident about grades, with the majority of predictions above 3.5. They felt, as seniors, that grades were not so important, and that their education involved more than the grade point average reflected. One senior said, "I am not disappointed that I was unable to reach the 4.0. The spirit of my original expectation was that I would study and perform to the best of my capabilities. In this I have succeeded." Wrote one, "My inner GPA is probably a lot higher than my GPA from my classes, and that is something that I am very proud of."

Quite a few freshmen mentioned that they expected professors to be helpful, caring, friendly, and to give them individual attention. A majority of the senior essays reflected respect for professors and their academic knowledge, and appreciation for their personal interest in guiding and teaching them. A senior related, "I can honestly say that I have never had a bad professor at Wake." Only a small number of seniors felt that it was difficult to develop relationships with professors.

Students felt the first-year seminar was a good opportunity for exploration in a nurturing atmosphere. Here, many found lasting interests that translated into a major. Several freshmen shared that they were looking forward to study-abroad opportunities. The senior essays verified that this expectation was met, and that a large percentage of the students in the sample had studied abroad. They spoke very positively about these experiences, and some said this was the highlight of their college career. A student wrote, "I enjoyed a semester abroad and I was pleased to be in an environment where such an experience was so highly regarded." Another said, "I think I experienced more personal growth in the months spent out of the country than I did during all of my semesters in residence."

The final academic area mentioned in the freshman essays was technology. Several of the incoming freshmen were excited about the ThinkPad program, and expected this to be a major part of their education. Fewer of the senior essays mentioned computers, and those that did were overwhelmingly pleased that they had learned so much about the ThinkPad. Some students mentioned that this "incidental" learning would be a major plus in their job search.

Personal Expectations

AS INCOMING FRESHMEN, many students expressed personal goals. Over half mentioned that they wished to make friends at the University. This expectation was met, with several seniors mentioning "lifelong friendships." A student said, "I feel like my ability to have friends and be a friend has grown. Wake Forest has made me a better person." Another freshman expectation was that they would gain independence and become an adult during their four years of college. An incoming student realized that he would "become my own parent, teacher, and disciplinarian in many ways," and another knew that responsibility would be necessary because "my parents and teachers will not always be there to tell me what to do or how to act, to make me go to every class, or to wake me up every day." Most seniors felt that this expectation was accomplished, with varied credit given to the University. One student stated that the University was not a part of this maturation process, but that "being away from home forced me to learn how to do certain things on my own." Another said, "Freshman year taught me the self-confidence that makes me who I am."

A number of freshmen hoped to experience moral and religious growth, and that they would maintain high moral standards when faced with the "temptations" of college life. The senior essays confirmed that this expectation was met for those students who addressed it. A student wrote, "I was exposed to various religious practices different from my own, and I was able to grow in my own faith and become more aware of my personal beliefs by drawing boundaries according to what I did not believe." And another student summarized the University's role:

E s s a y

“The sense of security and values within the world is preserved by Wake’s honor code.”

A final area of personal expectations was health and safety. Students expected the University to provide a safe and comfortable living environment, and this expectation appeared to be satisfied. There were, of course, the universal protests about parking. On a less positive note, there were several mentions of stress and tension. One student worried about “countless eating disorders, depression, and anxiety” on campus. Others mentioned stressful competition, seeing some students “obsessed with high grades and résumé building activities.”

Social Expectations

AS NOTED ABOVE, many incoming students had “making friends” as a primary expectation, and this expectation was met. However, nearly half of the freshman essays mentioned that they expected Wake Forest to have diversity in the student body. Recognizing their narrow backgrounds, students wanted interaction with people of different cultural, socio-economic, and religious groups. They expected the opportunity, as one student put it “to meet people from all over the world.” A large number of the seniors felt that this expectation was not met. They described the campus as a “homogeneous and restrictive community.” The student population was repeatedly described as “homogenous” and the atmosphere conservative. “The gatehouses separating Wake from the larger community seemed to not only be a physical reality, but a state of mind as well.” Another said, “I have found that being an ethnic minority on this campus also pushes one ‘to the fringes.’”

Incoming students expected to have a wide variety of opportunities, such as cultural events, athletic events, parties, and other social activities. The majority of the seniors said that Wake Forest had provided a satisfactory or even an exceptional number of extracurricular opportunities. Some said that there were so many choices in terms of extracurricular activities that they regretted that they had not been able to participate in more of those activities. “I found more extracurricular activities that interested me than I could participate in, but chose a few that proved to be significant and meaningful for me,” wrote one senior. One expectation of several freshmen was community volunteering. Many of the seniors reported that they had met this expectation. One student who was a leader in the Volunteer Service Corps felt rewarded and satisfied by this experience. Another said, “I realize I could have done much more meaningful things with my time. I wish I had volunteered more.”

Many of the freshmen identified Wake Forest as a nationally known sports power, and expressed their expectation of an environment of school spirit. In the senior essay, many seniors felt that school spirit was lacking. The few who considered themselves “fans” were very complimentary about these experiences. They felt that being a part of the Wake Forest athletic successes were among their best moments at the University.

Although it was not mentioned on the freshman essays, many seniors were dissatisfied with the general social atmosphere on campus.

Common complaints were the lack of social opportunities outside the Greek system, the lack of social opportunities in general, and the party management system. Several students specifically said that they believed the University’s strict alcohol policy stifled the social atmosphere.

Summary

THE INCOMING FRESHMEN had high expectations for both themselves and for the University in the areas of academics, personal growth, and social opportunities. When they reflected on these expectations and their experiences after four years, most seniors felt that most expectations were met. They were happy with their classes and professors, and with their academic progress. They felt that they had matured and made friends, and that they had grown in their religious life as well as toward a career path. They were pleased with the variety and numbers of activities offered by the University, but would have liked a more diverse student body, more non-Greek social opportunities, and a more liberal alcohol policy.

In conclusion, a student stated, “I have had a wonderful experience and will leave the University satisfied.” Another said, “I matured into a well-rounded and competent person in the nurturing environment of Wake Forest University.”

Elizabeth Fair Goffigon ('93)

Satisfaction is knowing she's made a difference

Lasting impact

ELIZABETH Fair Goffigon ('93) still wonders what happened to Willie, the trouble-making kindergartener she encountered seven years ago during her first year teaching in Compton, California. With frequent trips to McDonald's and the library, she and Willie (not his real name) bonded and years later he still sticks in her mind as a reminder of the challenges—and satisfaction—of teaching in a poor, inner-city school. She still has his phone number memorized, but she's scared to call: "There's a good chance that he's been in trouble by now. And he probably feels like I abandoned him like others have. It's frustrating, because you want to change things. Is his life any different because of me? Probably not, but you always hope that you will have an impact."

There's no question that Goffigon has had an impact on many of her students. In September, she received the 2001 Marcellus Waddill Excellence in Teaching Award on the elementary level.

Goffigon returned home two years ago to Baltimore, Maryland, where she now teaches fifth grade at Sparks Elementary School. Although she's moved from poor, inner-city schools to one of the top public schools in Baltimore, her philosophy has remained the same. "A teacher has to be willing to take risks," she said. "You have to create an environment where your kids feel comfortable to take risks and to learn from their mistakes, rather than be defeated by them.

Regardless of family background, all children share the need to feel successful."

An elementary school classroom is the last place Goffigon, a sociology and religion double major, expected to be. As a senior at Wake Forest, Goffigon was already looking ahead to earning a PhD in sociology to prepare for a career in education policy research, but thought that some experience teaching first would be beneficial. She applied for the "Teach for America" program, but deferred her placement for two years while she was earning a master's in sociology from the University of Maryland, Baltimore, County.

"Teach for America stresses that everyone should have an equal opportunity for an education, and I wanted to play a small role in doing that," she said.

She was placed in an elementary school in Compton, a continent away from her white, middle-class upbringing in Baltimore and a world apart from anything she had ever experienced. She was one of the few white teachers in a school that was 100 percent minority.

"Everything you would think about a poverty-stricken area applied," she said. "The kids came from the most difficult home situations imaginable. I tried to make school a positive experience, because the kids had so few positive experiences in their lives."

With thirty-eight kindergarten and first grade students in her first class, an unsupportive principal who had seen too many white middle-class teachers come and go, and no teacher training beyond that provided by Teach for America, Goffigon faced a huge challenge. There were plenty of times that she was ready to call it quits, but she toughed it out and even recruited Wake Forest friends and professors to serve as pen pals with her students and to send books.

After her two-year Teach for America commitment ended, Goffigon moved to another elementary school in inner-city Los Angeles and earned a master's in education technology from California State University, Dominguez Hills.

Her situation now couldn't be more different, but she still finds teaching fulfilling. She can do more enrichment activities—she's started a school newspaper, which recently won a TIME for Kids national award for excellence—and has access to the latest computer technology. "My initial experience teaching in California erased any doubts that there was anything I wanted to do besides teaching."

*Jeffrey Morgan (MAEd '95)Risk-taker

TEACHING is dangerous work, says Jeffrey Morgan (MAEd '95), because good teachers challenge students to question their preconceived ideas of

His teaching isn't a job, it's a calling the world. And they shouldn't be afraid to challenge the educational system either.

"Our schools have increasingly become the locus of public evaluation and stratification rather than public education," said Morgan, who received the 2001 Marcellus Waddill Excellence in Teaching Award on the secondary level in September. "The result of this cultural force is a defensiveness in our schools and an ironic fear of student incompetence, leaving many teachers loath to take risks, even when taking risks can lead students to authentic opportunities for learning.

"You engage students in the most important ways when you challenge them to discuss the how and why questions of human existence and move away from a focus on the what's, when's, and where's. They must confront their prejudices and assumptions and learn to value a search for meaning, which is also what good writers do."

Morgan, who teaches English in the high school division of the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem, doesn't shy away from the "dangers" involved in teaching, but he does fear mediocrity. Up until several years ago, he wasn't sure he would make teaching a career because he didn't want to be an average teacher. "My first two or three years of teaching were physically and emotionally draining. Teachers who don't want to be mediocre have to put in a lot of time. It is an unforgiving profession because you're always 'on.' I think I work just as hard now, but I make better choices about what's important."

Morgan said he spent his first two years of teaching—at Watauga High School in Boone, North Carolina—"creating his bag of tricks." Although the atmosphere there was supportive, he said, it wasn't until he moved to the School of the Arts in 1997 that he made the transition all good teachers must make. "Methods alone will carry you for a few years, but you quickly wither unless you begin to see the larger moral purpose of what you do. This includes moving from thinking of teaching as merely a job to accepting it as a calling. I help prepare young people for college or work, but this is not my most important role as a teacher."

Morgan's wife, Heather, is also a teacher, at an elementary school in Winston-Salem. Morgan found his calling late, during his senior year at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He credits the Master Teacher Fellows Program at Wake Forest with providing him a good background in instructional methods and philosophical approaches to education.

Morgan's classes are discussion-oriented, with students often critiquing one another's work and dramatically interpreting poetry and scenes from plays. "I encourage students to consider the philosophical, ethical, and moral questions raised in literary study," he said. "Increasingly, I approach my classes as literature-based critical sociology courses with an emphasis on writing. Through discussions, students form ideas and arguments for formal development in their papers. They aren't graded until they've had a chance to reconsider their arguments in response to my comments and those of their peers. That helps them become more daring in their thinking, original in their approaches, and aware of standards for quality writing."

Although students at the School of the Arts are accepted for their artistic ability, Morgan says he doesn't teach them any differently than he would other students. "I'm not teaching artists, but young people who may become artists. The ability to write well, to communicate well, and to face the world with a critical mind is important regardless of your path in life. As with the development of any art form, one must learn both to take criticism and to critique oneself."

Gentle man of the press

BYNUM SHAW ('48), long-time professor of journalism and author of the fourth volume of the University's history, died at his home in Winston-Salem on August 27 after an illness of several months. He was 78.

Shaw succeeded his mentor at Wake Forest, professor of English E.E. Folk, in 1965 after an eventful tenure at the Baltimore Sun as a foreign correspondent and editorial writer. He retired in 1993.

"Bynum Shaw was a member of an important generation of Wake Forest students who went on to distinguished careers in newspapers, magazines, and publishing," said Edwin G. Wilson ('43), senior vice president and a long-time colleague of Shaw's. "He genuinely loved Wake Forest—that comes across in the history he wrote and also in his friendships with faculty and with his former students."

"He genuinely loved Wake Forest—that comes across in the history he wrote and also in his friendships with faculty and with his former students."

Shaw grew up near Wilmington, North Carolina, and entered Wake Forest in 1940 on a debating scholarship. He left school to serve with the U.S. Merchant Marines during World War II, but he returned after the war. In his senior year, he was editor of the Old Gold & Black, and years later he served as the newspaper's faculty advisor. He began his journalism career in 1948 at the Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk, Virginia, before moving to the Baltimore Sun in 1951. During his fifteen years there, he reported on some of the biggest stories of the era. He was the first journalist to report from behind the Iron Curtain and was an early observer of the civil rights movement.

Shaw was known for his intense commitment to his students, and maintained friendships with countless students long after they graduated. He received Wake Forest's first Jon Reinhardt Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1986. Among the many students he inspired was Time magazine correspondent Douglas C. Waller ('71). "Bynum was my mentor, he was like a second father to me," said Waller. "I was always calling him, asking him for advice," Waller said. "He always presented the ideal of what journalism should be."

"I've lost a friend and mentor," said another former student, Maria Henson ('82). Henson received a Pulitzer Prize in 1992 for a series of editorials in the Lexington (Ky.) Herald-Leader on domestic violence. "I can't count the times I picked up the phone over the years to ask Bynum's advice about whether to move to another city, take a turn in my career, or roll the dice for a fellowship. He was there for me — always. The man had humor, a certain irreverence valued in a journalist and, above all, a heart big enough to hold his students. He remembered us. He cheered for us. He taught us well. I've lost a friend and mentor, but, truth be told, he's with me still."

In addition to The History of Wake Forest College, Volume IV 1943-67, published in 1988, Shaw also wrote four novels, including The Sound of Small Hammers (1962), based on his experience in Cold War Europe, and Oh, Promised Land (1992), which drew on his recollections of old Wake Forest. He received special recognition for two other novels, The Nazi Hunter (1968), which was awarded the Sir Walter Raleigh prize by N.C. Writers, and Days of Power, Nights of Fear (1980), which was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize. His non-fiction books include Divided We Stand: The Baptists in American Life; a History and W.W. Holden: A Political Biography, co-authored with Folk. He also contributed to Esquire, the Sunday New York Times, the New Republic, and many other newspapers and magazines.

Shaw is survived by his wife, Charlotte Easley Shaw ('44), two daughters, four grandchildren, and six step-grandchildren. Memorials may be made to the Bynum Shaw Prize in Journalism, Department of English, P.O. Box 7387, Winston-Salem, NC 27109.

Inspiration, and example

I AM NOT TRYING TO FORGE a new career as the official obituary writer for Wake Forest University. But there are some people whose death demands comment. This last week has been an especially sad time.

Very personally, I feel bereft, having lost my birth father a few months back and now the person who might be called my professional father. When my own father died, I had three siblings with whom to share my loss. With the death of Bynum Shaw, the long-time teacher of journalism at Wake Forest, I join legions of brothers and sisters who similarly followed him down the path to careers as journalists and writers.

For better or worse, Shaw shaped my professional life more than any other person. I was an 18-year-old sophomore with little idea of what I wanted to do when I wandered into his introductory journalism class. Within weeks, he suggested that I go over to the offices of Old Gold and Black, the student newspaper, and see if they needed a reporter. The rest of that story is the rest of my life.

Not that I always followed his advice; I suspected that he was disappointed some years later when I left a job as the assistant national editor of The Sun in Baltimore to move to the woods of Stokes County and write for The Sentinel in Winston-Salem. But he didn't criticize me, even though The Sun was the newspaper where he had his impressive career as a newsman.

Criticism and interference were not his style. He led through inspiration and example.

He gave to scores of young people who passed through Wake Forest beginning in the mid-1960s a double gift: He both ignited in us a passion to be good journalists and taught us what that entailed.

Sitting in his class was a heady experience. With premature white hair over a youthful face, he would almost shuffle into the room, usually a little late. He'd settle in at a table, lean forward as he might to attack an old upright typewriter, peer with bright eyes over his wire-rimmed glasses and start spinning his magic. We were hooked, caught up in images of smoky, noisy, bustling newsrooms where people wrote about exciting and important things.

A novelist as well as a journalist, Shaw spiced his writing with a dramatic flair and vivid descriptions. When he read us the lead from a story he wrote about the voting-rights march from Selma to Montgomery, Ala., we could see Martin Luther King as a latter-day Moses leading his people into the Promised Land. When he talked about his days as a foreign correspondent, venturing behind the Iron Curtain, we felt the thrill of danger.

Having snagged our attention with his stories, he proselytized like the preacher's son he was. We came to believe that being a journalist was possibly the noblest calling available to man or woman. In his journalism history class, we learned the importance of the free press and the journalist's role as guardian of democracy. In news writing class, we learned that the truth is both precious and elusive. In copy editing, we learned that proper spelling, grammar and style are the essential tools of the writer's trade. In news-writing, essay, feature and fiction classes, we learned the power of well-chosen words. And always, we learned to leaven the gravity of our endeavors with a little humor and compassion for the human condition.

Outsiders were often surprised to learn that Shaw was Wake Forest's entire journalism program, just as his mentor, Dr. E.E. Folk, had been for years before him. Wake Forest students could not major in journalism; they could take only a few courses and gain practical experience on the student newspaper and through summer internships.

But that was intentional, part of Wake

Forest's educational philosophy. The thinking was that the best training for a journalist was a sound, broad, liberal arts education. That way, Shaw often told us, we might have something to say when we wrote. The approach worked with an impressive number of people.

Probably the nearest Shaw ever came to criticizing, interfering and getting downright angry with me was when I told him toward the end of my sophomore year that I had decided I wanted to be a journalist, so I was thinking about transferring to a university with a journalism school.

I might as well have insulted his first-born. He loved Wake Forest about as passionately as he loved newspapering and his family.

Along with the lessons about journalism, he instilled in his students a deep appreciation for the "giants" who had built Wake Forest College. Not long before he died, I wrote to tell him that those from my era at Wake Forest also have our giants to look up to, and that he is one of them.

Late on the same day that Shaw died last week, Lib Brantley died. She's another of that generation of people who were so central in the past half century or so of the college that moved from the village of Wake Forest to Winston-Salem and grew into a university. Brantley was the daughter of a venerated professor on the old campus, as was Shaw's wife, who grew up as Charlotte Easley. The two were among the first women students at Wake Forest. Lib Jones married a fellow student, Russell Brantley, and, among her other journalism jobs, worked with him for many years in the college news bureau here.

The old-timers often speak of the "Wake Forest family." That family has some big gaps today.

Franklin Douglas Byrd Jr. ('31), June 23, 2001, Fayetteville, NC. A highly-respected educator and community leader, he served as superintendent of the Cumberland County Schools from 1946 to 1972. He was credited with transforming the county's old-fashioned schools into a modern public education system. He led the system through integration in the 1960s and decades of tremendous growth that saw the number of students increase from 8,850 to 32,000 and the number of teachers from 257 to 1,353. He oversaw construction of 41 of the county's 51 schools, including Douglas Byrd High School, which was named in his honor when it opened in 1972. He first joined the school system in 1931 as a math and science teacher and became an assistant superintendent in 1935. After serving in the Navy for three years during World War II, he returned to Fayetteville and briefly served as an assistant superintendent again before being named superintendent. He was also active in community organizations, helping to start the United Way of Cumberland County and serving on the board of the Cumberland County Health Department and the Fayetteville Recreation Commission. He was a charter member of Snyder Memorial Baptist Church and served on the original board of trustees at Methodist College. He is survived by his wife, Rebecca, a son, Doug Byrd III, and two grandsons.

Manson Meads: A noble tenure

VISITORS TO TODAY'S SPRAWLING Wake Forest University Baptist Medical Center might have a hard time believing that at one time, the Medical Center teetered on the brink of financial ruin. But Manson Meads, MD, who led the institution from 1963 to 1983, brought the medical school through those challenging times by drawing in Winston-Salem's power structure.

"Few people realized what terrible financial condition we were in," said Eben Alexander, MD, chief of professional services throughout the Meads era. "There were many discouraging days when it appeared that perhaps the Medical Center would not survive, but no one ever saw discouragement on the face of Dr. Meads."

In the view of many who knew him, involving these movers and shakers in the survival of the Medical Center was Meads' greatest achievement in his 20 years of leadership of the medical school. Meads, who was born in 1918 and died on July 8, established the Medical Center Board of Visitors, a group that included most of the city's leaders at a time when those leaders dominated civic life in Winston-Salem. Meads educated these leaders about the value of the hospital and the medical school to the community.

Two other Meads accomplishments had lasting impact. One was the conversion of the faculty to full-time status, accompanied by Meads' suggestion that each member of the clinical faculty contribute 4 percent of gross income to the medical school. "Many physicians objected and a few resigned, but the majority remained to establish the basis for the continued strength of the medical center," said Alexander. The second was the first full faculty retreat of any medical school in the country. At that June 1958 retreat the faculty decide to focus on five areas of research.

The first major expansion of the medical school was completed during his tenure, including the initial six floors of the Hanes Research Building, Babcock Auditorium, Watlington Hall and the Family Practice Building, which was renamed Meads Hall in 1992.

"In many ways, the Bowman Gray school was the image of the person embodied in Manson Meads," said Richard Dean, MD, senior vice president for health affairs and current director of the medical center. "For all of us that came after him, we can only hope to continue the culture and enhance the foundation that was left."

C. Douglas Maynard, MD, interim dean of the medical school, first saw Meads from the student perspective. "The door to his office was always open to students. His attitude toward us was patient and understanding." Meads epitomized a style of leadership not often seen in medical schools. "He boosted the self-confidence of the faculty because when he gave people a job to do, he let them do it, never micromanaging or second-guessing their decisions," said Maynard, who served as assistant dean for admissions and dean of student affairs under Meads.

Most people remember Meads' trademark bow tie. Catherine Davis, who worked with Meads continuously from the first faculty retreat in 1958 to his death, said the bow tie was just part of his daily apparel. "He was always the properly dressed man, white shirt, bow tie, and always in a suit."

Meads joined the faculty in 1947 and served until his retirement in 1983. He became dean in 1963, succeeding Coy C. Carpenter, MD. From 1967 to 1971, he held the dual title of dean and vice president for medical affairs. After Janeway was appointed dean in 1971, he continued as vice president for health affairs, and added the responsibility of director of the Medical Center in 1974.

Meads didn't pause after his "retirement" in 1983, and the Winston-Salem community became the beneficiary. He chaired the Winston-Salem/Forsyth County Utilities Commission from 1986 to 1990; chaired Winston-Salem Civic Ventures from 1985 to 1988, and co-chaired the successful 1983 city-county bond referendum for $35 million. As chair of the Chamber of Commerce Foundation, he facilitated establishment of a Crime Stoppers program in Forsyth County and the establishment of Tel-Med.

He served on the board of the Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust, and conducted a study for them on the feasibility of encouraging health providers to practice in medically underserved areas in North Carolina. For the Winston-Salem Foundation, he conducted a study of long-term care for the elderly in Forsyth County. He became heavily involved in Senior Services of Forsyth County, where he served as chair of the Board of Trustees in 1995 and 1996 and as resource chair in 1997.

A woman of letters

GERMAINE BRÉE, an internationally renowned authority on 20th-century French literature and retired Kenan Professor of Humanities, died Sept. 22 at her home in Winston-Salem. She was 93.

She was one of America's most distinguished professors in the humanities, said Senior Vice President Edwin G. Wilson ('43), who as provost helped bring Brée to Wake Forest in 1973. "She was a splendid teacher," he said. "Everyone who knew her was so stimulated by her brightness and wit."

She was known as the "Dean of French Letters" in this country, said Byron Wells, professor of Romance Languages. "In large part, it was her writings on figures like Camus and Sartre that generated American interest in modern French literature."

Brée's groundbreaking books on French writers remain standards in her field. She wrote and lectured extensively for decades on such writers as Marcel Proust, Andre Gide, Albert Camus, and Jean-Paul Sartre. She was a personal friend of Camus, whom she met while working with the Resistance in Paris during World War II. Her books include Marcel Proust, Andre Gide, Camus, Twentieth Century French Literature, and Camus and Sartre: Crisis and Commitment. She also wrote Women Writers in France and edited a series of French poets in translation published by the Wake Forest University Press. She also edited several other collections of poetry and essays.

Brée was born in France in 1907, but spent much of her childhood in the English-speaking Channel Islands. She taught in Algeria from 1932 to 1936 and did postgraduate work at Bryn Mawr before joining the faculty there. She served with the French Army during World War II, first with a volunteer ambulance unit in Algiers and France and later in the intelligence section of the French Army in Algiers. She received a Bronze Star and was named to the Legion of Honor. She became a U.S. citizen in 1952.

Before coming to Wake Forest, Brée taught at New York University from 1953 to 1960 and the University of Wisconsin at Madison from 1960 to 1973. After retiring in 1984, she was a visiting professor at Princeton University, Williams College, and Ohio State University. She received the University's highest honor, the Medallion of Merit, in 1994. She also received honorary degrees from twenty-six colleges and universities, including Wake Forest, New York University, Smith College, Mount Holyoke, Duke, Oberlin, Brown, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

Wake Forest University extends its gratitude to the individuals, businesses, foundations, churches, and other organizations that made gifts to the University during the 2000-2001 fiscal year (July 1, 2000—June 30, 2001).

Because Wake Forest values all gifts, all donors who made a gift of any amount to the Reynolda Campus are included in this Honor Roll. The School of Medicine section includes only alumni donors to the medical school; for a complete listing of medical school donors, please see the School of Medicine's Honor Roll of Donors.

Donors who have made extraordinary commitments during their lifetime or during the last year are listed in the Major Benefactors and Major Donor sections in the front of the Honor Roll.

Individuals who have made planned gift commitments to the University are included in the Legacy Society section. Individuals who have made five-year pledges to one of the University Gift Clubs are listed with the appropriate gift club in the front of the Honor Roll. Gift club members are also listed with their class year or in the Parents, Friends, or Faculty/Staff section if they made a gift during the past year.

Alumni of the College, Graduate School, School of Law, and Babcock Graduate School of Management are listed by class year with their appropriate school(s), regardless of the designation of their gift. Other individual donors are listed where appropriate in the Undergraduate Parents, Undergraduate Past Parents, Friends, or Faculty/Staff sections.

All donors to the new Divinity School are listed in the Divinity School section. Major donors to the Deacon Club also are listed in a separate section; for a complete listing of Deacon Club donors, please see the Deacon Club Annual Report.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of these lists. Please report corrections or omissions to the Office of University Relations, P.O. Box 7227 Reynolda Station, Winston-Salem, NC 27109-7227, or by e-mail, kingkm@wfu.edu, or by contacting the appropriate development officer.

HEN JACK MAIER ('84) pondered the perfect Christmas gift last year for his wife, Heather Ann Maier ('84), the students of Wake Forest came to mind. "We're both alumni and are very interested in helping students there," he said. "I hoped she would be thrilled to have a permanent scholarship in her name."

Christmas morning, Heather Maier was surprised to find an unusual package in Wake Forest wrapping paper amongst the presents for their young children, Cathy and Johnny. "It was the most wonderful gift I could have imagined," she said. "Wake Forest has meant so much to us and it feels wonderful to know that we are helping others to receive a Wake Forest education."

The Heather Ann Maier Scholarship will be awarded to at least one student per year. If you would like to establish a scholarship, professorship, or other endowed fund in honor of or in memory of a family member, please contact the University Advancement Office, (336) 758-6079.

The Spirit of Giving

Hoey shares his success through a scholarship

IN APPRECIATION and recognition of the opportunities that Wake Forest gave him as a student-athlete in the 1940s, former football player Ed Hoey has established a scholarship to benefit future student-athletes. Hoey ('49) and his wife, Doris, who live in Sarasota, Florida, have created a charitable remainder trust worth at least $100,000 that will eventually endow the Ed and Doris Hoey Athletic Memorial Scholarship Fund. The scholarship is in memory of Hoey's mother, Nellie May Clements Hoey.

"I went to Wake Forest on a scholarship so I figured it was payback time," Hoey said. "I enjoyed Wake Forest and owe much to Wake Forest people. I hope this will encourage other former student-athletes to help future student-athletes. It's a good thing to pass along something that you benefited from to someone else."

Hoey retired in 1980 as president and CEO of Fair Lanes Inc., a national chain of bowling centers, restaurants, shopping centers, and indoor tennis centers based in Baltimore, Maryland. One of his daughters, Connie Enyart, graduated from Wake Forest in 1969, and a nephew, Bill Hoey, graduated in 1981.

Even though Hoey played football at Wake Forest, the scholarship will be available to a varsity student-athlete from any sport. In addition to helping student-athletes, he also hopes the scholarship will honor the memory of his mother. "My father died when I was young, so my mother raised me and my four brothers and three sisters," said Hoey, who grew up in southwestern Pennsylvania. "She raised us all to believe in the importance of education and emphasized that we would all go to school."

Stewardship Luncheon

September 7, 2001

Rev. Victor Lee Andrews Sr. Scholarship
Nancy and Ed Andrews ('42) of Asheville, North Carolina, with divinity school student Jennie Hemrick (MDiv '02), the first recipient of the Andrews Scholarship. Established in 1999 in memory of Andrews' father, the scholarship funds an internship for a divinity student working in a rural or small town church.

Neal Monroe Chastain Memorial Scholarship
June Booth of Charlotte and senior Matt Scott of San Antonio, Texas. Established by Mrs. Booth in 1986 in memory of her son, a business major at Wake Forest who died in 1985.

Elton C. Cocke Scholarship
Gilmer Cocke Van Poole ('49) with seniors Jason Davenport of Forest City, North Carolina, and Kara King of Columbia, South Carolina. Established in 1977 by Mrs. Van Poole and her sister, Virginia Cocke Bloch ('55), for undergraduate and graduate biology students, in memory of their father, Elton Cocke, former chairman of the biology department.

K. Wayne Smith Scholarship
Audrey and Wayne ('60) Smith of Newton, North Carolina, with Lisa Mann, a freshman from Harmony, North Carolina, and the first recipient of the scholarship. Established by Mr. Smith for undergraduates from North Carolina or whose parents are employees of Online Computer Library Center (OCLC) in Dublin, Ohio. Smith, retired president and CEO of OCLC, now teaches in the Calloway School.

John Aaron and Vida Lee P. Senter Scholarship
David ('81, JD '84) and Deborah Senter with freshman recipients Kimberly Jones, Philip Rogers, Tyler Chapman, and Pamela Braaten, and senior Garyen Denning. The scholarship was established this year by David Senter's parents, Vida Lee Senter and the late John Senter ('35), for students from North Carolina.

Marcus C. Miller Scholarship
Marc Miller ('77) of Chicago, Illinois, with senior Brian Bell of Jackson Springs, North Carolina. Established by Mr. Miller in 1996 for students who have demonstrated innovative uses of information technology.

The Babcock Fund

THE Class of 2001 Gift Campaign received more than $285,000 in commitments for the Babcock Fund from 111 students. Seventy-five of those graduating students joined one of the University Gift Clubs. The Executive Program achieved a 100 percent participation rate with all 57 students in the program making a commitment.

School of Medicine

THE following list recognizes M.D. alumni by class who contributed to the School of Medicine during the 2000-2001 fiscal year. This list includes both gifts to the Medical Alumni Association Annual Fund and any unrestricted or restricted gifts to the Medical School. A complete listing of Medical School donors by class and giving club levels is in the School of Medicine's Honor Roll of Donors.
