ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I should like to thank the Department of Education for Northern Ireland for their support in carrying out this research. I am deeply indebted to Professor Gerard Stockman, Department of Celtic Studies, Queen's University, Belfast, for supporting my application for a major state studentship and most of all for his constant encouragement and advice from start to finish. His direction proved essential in completing this work and he prevented me from many errors - any errors or shortcomings which remain are totally my responsibility.

My best thanks are due to Miss Karen Campbell and Miss Teresa Flanagan for their care and endless patience in typing the manuscript. I also record my gratitude to my friend Dr. Johnathan Bell, Ulster Folk and Transport Museum, for his assistance in preparing the map and in preparing the typescript for the binders.

Is mór an pléisiúr domh buidheachas ó chroidhe a ghabháil le bunadh lár Thír Chonail as an chuidiughadh a thug siad domh agus as an fháilte a chuireadh siad romham le linn mo chuairte. Tá mé thar a bheith buidheach do Thomás Ó Dochartaigh agus dá bhean Annaí, agus do Johnnie Mac An Luain (go ndéanaidh Dia trócaire ar a anam uasal) agus dá bhean Máire a thug lóistín domh. Tá liosta na ndaoíní a chuidigh liom ró-fhada le cur síos annseo acht ba mhaith liom focal beag speisialta buidheachais a ghabháil leobhtha seo: Brighid Campbell agus a clann mac Eoin, Condaí agus Charlie; Máire Ruadh agus Padaí agus Síle; Pat Ward, Padaí Ó Dochartaigh, Eoin Ward agus a theaghlach; Pádraig Bhraighní Bháin, Pat Mac Dermott (Clainn Uí Duibhdhíorma); John Dhomhnaill Andaí agus a bhunadh; Micí agus Jimmy Coyle, agus Susan Martin. Ba mhaith liom fosta solas na bhFlaitheas a ghuidhe do James Ward atá ar shlí na fírinne.

Finally I thank Marie, my wife, for all her help.

INTRODUCTION

The general area surrounding points 82 and 83 of Heinrich Wagner's Linguistic atlas and survey of Irish dialects (LASID) is referred to as An Ghaedhealtacht Láir. It will be seen from the map that the shaded area to the west is within six miles (as the crow flies, or ten miles by road) of Meenawannia, investigated by Quiggin. Quiggin's work, which was to lay a foundation for Sommerfelt, Ó Searcaigh and later scholars in their descriptions of Donegal dialects, was concerned mainly with phonology and remains one of the finest phonological descriptions of an Irish dialect. However, since the publication of Quiggin's work in 1906 some three or four generations have come and gone and the increase in English-speaking - with the subsequent decrease in the number of Irish-speaking monoglots to the point of virtual extinction - has meant that the language has changed significantly since then.

The phonology of this area today broadly corresponds to the phonology of Meenawannia as described by Quiggin at the beginning of the century but there are some important differences. The section on phonology in the current work gives an analysis of some developments touched upon by Quiggin in regard to the lateral and corresponding nasal consonants (particularly in initial position) and the survival in remoter areas of mid-back-high-unrounded [ö:] and back-central-high-unrounded [λ:]. Another important difference is the tendency with young speakers to depalatalise [rʲ]. The labial fricative [v], which was not discussed by Quiggin, occurs here and may well be a feature which this area shares in common with the dialects of East Ulster.

A basic difference between Quiggin's A dialect of Donegal and the current work is that an attempt is made to analyse the verbal system in a fairly comprehensive way. Some attempt is also made to outline the radical changes which the case system is currently undergoing and other aspects of grammar and language decay are discussed (see below).

I have used 'Tangaveane' and 'Commeen' in the title in an effort to define the westernmost and easternmost limits of the area of study. Tangaveane, which lies little over five miles to the east of Glenties town, roughly marks the end of the Irish-speaking area and the start of the English-speaking area on the west side, while the Reelin Bridge in the townland of Commeen, which lies eight miles to the west of Ballybofey, marks the same on the east - although Irish is still spoken (to a degree) a little further east in the Glenfinn area. Tangaveane and Commeen are some nine miles apart by road (both are marked on Bartholomew's Ireland quarter-inch travel map Antrim-Donegal 1). The Irish-speaking area was described by Sp. 1:

"Ní rabh Gaedhilg ar bith siar an Gleann annseo ar chor ar bith, ní rabh Gaedhilg ar bith siar. Thart soir as seo go dtí amach soir ar na Cruacha agus Gleann Fhinne Gaedhilg uilig chóir a bheith a labharfadh mórán acu an t-am sin uilig. Gaedhilg uilig a bhí ar na Cruacha, ní mó ná go tuigfeadh (sic) cuid acu Béarla."

(There was no Irish out the Glen here at all, there was no Irish west (of Tangaveane). Out eastwards from around here to the Croaghs and Glenfinn it was mostly Irish a lot of them used to speak in those days. It was all Irish in the Croaghs, some of them could barely understand English.)

Na Cruacha, or the Croaghs, lie between Tangaveane and Commeen - access can be gained into this area on foot via a now overgrown 'road' in Upper Tangaveane. The most 'accessible' way would be to approach this same road at its other end, i.e. to take the Commeen to Tangaveane road and turn left three and a half miles west of Commeen, although only part of this road is passable by car. This area was described by Wagner in LASID.

"This point (83), representing a remote valley of the Blue Stack Mountains (nə kruəhə gərəmə), was the most inaccessible place I have visited in Ireland. It was, therefore, not surprising to find there quite a number of monoglots, who could not speak a word of English. I have visited this area several times. Most of the young people have left it. The way of life has not changed for hundreds of years. Rearing of sheep is the main occupation of the people."
LASID vol I, XXI.

Ó hEochaidh and Wagner give a fuller description in ZCP 29 1-22. Sadly the number of occupied dwellings has fallen to a mere handful but the Irish of the Croaghs is widely recognised locally as the Irish par excellence. Bhí an chuid a ba chruaidhe den Ghaedhilg acu 'They had the most idiomatic (lit 'hardest') of Irish' was how Sp. 1 affectionately described the old people of the Croaghs - a view shared by Ó hEochaidh.¹

I was not in a position to spend much time there because the place was difficult to get into and out of. During fieldwork I relied principally on walking and lifts as a series of punctures, broken axles and soakings caused me to abandon my bicycle. Since material had been published from the Croaghs by Wagner in LASID, and by Ó hEochaidh and Wagner in Sean-chainnt na gCruach (ZCP 29 1-90), I decided that it might be advisable to study the Irish of the areas on either side of the Croaghs, areas which formed a bastion between the Croaghs and the ever-encroaching English-speaking areas to the east and west.

Tangaveane is on the western fringe of the Croaghs and Sp. 1 often used to visit there. He learned many of his songs there and described how he once won a singing match in the Croaghs against another man. Sp. 5 is a native of Croaghveenananta. She is a sister of Pádraig Eoghain Phádraig Mac an Luain, featured in Séamas Ó Catháin's Uair an chloig cois teallaigh/An hour by the hearth (UCCT).² Sp. 11 is also a native of the Croaghs but now lives in Ballykerrigan (east of Commeen).

In upper Tangaveane and Silver Hill (Cruach an Airgid) Irish is the main language of the dwindling old and middle-aged inhabitants. Máire (Sp. 2) tearfully remarked following the death of her husband Johnnie (Sp. 1) Tá an gleann seo ag éirghe beag (The population of this glen is diminishing). Pat Ward (Sp. 3) now lives alone following the death of his brother James (Sp. 4), who travelled in from Glenties each day to see him; he has touched upon the decline in the population of the area in TEXT 2. Before his death Sp.1 also described how, long ago, there might have been up to fourteen or fifteen people to help save the hay (TEXT 1), whereas nowadays that number of people would most rarely, if at all, be seen.

In An tÉadan there is a primary school, a shop and a chapel. Nine miles east in Commeen there is also a primary school, shop and a Post Office. On the road between these two places there is a handful of small farms either side of a virtual wilderness stretching some six or seven miles. The older generations in these areas are by and large fluent Irish speakers. Where there are young families, the mothers are often from towns in Ireland or England and Scotland. Lack of work in the area has forced (and continues to force) a lot of the young men to go to other parts of Ireland, Great Britain or further afield, to secure a living for themselves. This requires a command of English and the children of those who have returned with their wives to set up a family in the area are either bilingual or English-speaking.

Of the people I spoke to all could understand and speak English - although many of the older people were much more fluent in Irish. Fluency in English is scarcely surprising as the nearby towns are English-speaking and most commercial transactions are now carried out in English.³ In many cases in-laws or grandchildren cannot speak Irish and the introduction of electricity has ensured the inevitable appearance of television, a readily available source of English.

Television has had an effect on the old practice of airneál or 'night-visiting', where events of the day were discussed and where stories and songs were told and sung. In the late 1940's Ó hEochaidh described how everyone in the Croaghs was a seanchaidhe;⁴ nowadays many of the few remaining who have stories and songs are unable to get about. Among the texts I have gathered there are some folktales but the majority of these had lain dormant for many years and were either recalled as pale shadows or mere fragments of their former fuller renditions. The same is true of some songs and prayers. Thus after her version of Murchadh Mór and Murchadh Beag (TEXT 45) Sp. 5 states Bhí sé agam níos fhearr. Tá dearmad déanta agam, 'I used to know it better. I have forgotten.' While Sp. 8 did have some Fenian lore, we see in TEXT 41 that only part of the story was recalled - acht ní fhuil a fhios agam-sa an chuid eile den scéal, 'but I do not know the rest of the story'. Sp. 1 was one of the finest Gaelic singers in this area and his death was a huge loss; even he, however, had lost a verse of TEXT 63 (which was supplied by Sp. 11) and he could remember only three verses of TEXT 68. Yet in his earlier days, he told me, he only needed to hear a song once and he had learned it (A'n-uair amháin a gcluifinn an t-amhrán, bhí sé agam). Sp. 19 was unable to finish a prayer Ní bhéinn ábalta a ghoil ní fhuide (TEXT 72). It would appear that the old remnants of Gaelic culture are vanishing from this area⁵ - although, thankfully, a large amount of material has been deposited in manuscript in the archives of Roinn Bhéaloideas Éireann by Seán Ó hEochaidh and other collectors.

The texts in this current work were all recorded by me in the field between 1982 and 1985 - with the exception of TEXTS 63, 64, 66, 67 and 68, which were collected in 1979. The basic aim of these texts was to provide a small corpus of phonetic material which would give some indication as to the current state of the Irish language in this area. As the aim of this work was to give a descriptive account of this dialect, I have not altered the language 'to what grammar requires' as Lloyd put it (see p. 359). Where a nominative or neo-genitive occurs, where a genitive may be expected (or possibly prescribed by earlier writers such as Lloyd), I have passed no comment. Thus in TEXT 2 the forms níos mó fir 'more men' and mórán fear 'a lot of men' occur. I have passed no comment on this, as examples such as these have now become so widespread. I have, however, marked áit i bhéadh (sic) in TEXT 2. Those who are reading these texts with grammar in mind are advised to read the section dealing with grammar beforehand.

It will be noticed that quite a number of English borrowings occur in these texts (Ó Catháin discusses this UCCT xx). I have collected many examples of English loanwords and syntax borrowed into the Irish of this area, and examples of Irish loanwords and syntax borrowed into the English of the general area and it is intended to present this as a separate paper at some later date.

Choosing a suitable orthography to represent a spoken dialect is no easy task. Up to the present almost every author of a work on a Donegal (and Ulster) dialect has used an orthography similar to that used by Dinneen. More recent authors have been criticised for this in reviews of their work, but I have adopted this orthography as I have found it the best available for this purpose.⁶ Even so, it has been necessary to use a few spellings which would appear to be 'Donegalisms'. The problem of representing [goɪ'] 'to go' has been resolved by employing goil. [jokI] 'frozen' < *[jokə] sioctha, by analogy with forms ending in -ighthē, now pronounced [i]/[I], has been represented as siocthaí, rather than siocthuighthē. There may remain a few spellings which I have not used consistently, eg chíodh, tchíodh 'used to see', but examples of these should now be few. There may also be idiosyncracies such as ghní 'does'.

A summary of the phonology of this area was deemed necessary to facilitate those unfamiliar with the phonology of Donegal Irish. It is stressed that the section on phonology does not pretend to be an exhaustive account of the phonology of this dialect. Provision of such an account would be superfluous as three already exist for similar dialects. Those who seek such an account should read the section on phonology contained in this work in conjunction with E. C. Quiggin's A dialect of Donegal, A. Sommerfelt's The dialect of Torr and S. Ó Searcaigh's Foghraidheacht Ghaedhilde an Tuaiscirt. In the current work the bare minimum of examples is listed for each sound but reference is made to the relevant sections of the above-mentioned works. The numerous examples contained in those works may be usually checked in the Vocabulary. Where such reference is made, it may, and in most cases does, follow on. Thus [i] is merely followed by Qu §108, Torr §1, FGT §72, rather than Qu §§108-115, Torr §§1-2, FGT §§72-74.⁷

The phonetic symbols and diacritic marks used in the phonetic transcriptions are those adopted by Wagner (LASID Vol I xxii f.). As Evans (p. 48-9) points out, Donegal [ʃ], a slit-lip spread fricative, differs from R.P. English [ʃ], a grooved lip-rounded fricative. While accepting his view that [sʰ] may be used to distinguish Donegal [ʃ] from R.P. English [ʃ], I have decided to employ [ʃ]-if only to conform with other works on Donegal dialects.

Table 1 shows the main consonants of the dialect while Table 2 shows the main vowels. These tables are based on Palmer, pp. 77 and 410.

Apart from the texts, all phonetic symbols are placed within square brackets. The transcription (an impressionistic-phonetic one) has been fairly narrow and - with allowance for an inevitable subjective element - it is by and large in keeping with the other works on Ulster dialects. As with other dialects, it will be noticed that many words have phonemically irrelevant variant forms. I have decided not to list every variant pronunciation of a particular word on every occasion the word appears - although I have tried to be consistent in listing peculiarities or exceptional pronunciations such as [kə p'ɛ:d] for cá mhéad 'how much' - usually [kə v'ɛ:d].

It was never intended that an exhaustive account of the grammar be included in the current work, but rather that attention be focused on certain aspects of grammar. I decided that my main priority here should be to give a synchronic description of the verbal system. Researching in an area where Irish is still spoken means that most forms heard are true reflections of current speech. Compare this to the situation in which Holmer found himself in the Glens of Antrim, where Irish had ceased to be spoken as a daily language. 'The Antrim verb appears to be simplified, though some forms given by some of the speakers cannot possibly be anything but corruptions.' (Holmer 54). Although Irish continues to be spoken in this area, its survival in the long-term seems very much open to question and this persuaded me that this task should be carried out sooner rather than later. A foretaste of what might lie ahead some years from now was provided by Sp. 15. Living in Belfast for forty years she had stopped speaking Irish on a regular basis and occasional forms such as chualann 'hears' and chluinigh 'heard' are examples of 'developments' which are a direct result of not using a language on a regular basis, rather than true reflections of a living Gaelic dialect.

Having been a regular visitor to the area several years before commencing the current work (principally due to the invitation of my friend Micheál Ó Dochartaigh from Commeen whose parents Tomás and Annaí provided me with lodgings before and during the project), I had become familiar with the Irish of the area.⁸ Having then three years at my disposal in which to complete this project, I had an opportunity to attest most forms as they occurred naturally rather than rely excessively on responses gleaned from direct questions. Where verbal forms have been received from direct questions, this is usually indicated, as in a number of cases the responses to such questions did not seem accurate reflections of everyday usage. It should be noted, for example, that conditional/imperfect forms of the first person plural were almost exclusively heard as -adh sinne in normal speech, while forms in -adh muid were mainly heard in response to direct questions (usually from Sp. 3). The forms abróchaidh/abóraidh 'will say' were likewise confined to responses to direct questions (usually from Sp. 10). More importantly responses such as Ba ghnáthach leis a theacht/ghoil ... 'He used to come/go ...' totally disguise the traditional imperfect forms thigeadh/théigheadh sé etc. which are widely used in the area.⁹

As will emerge from the section dealing with the case system, the case system is undergoing radical change. The older Irish-speaking generations employing the inflected forms of the genitive markedly more so than the younger generations given to English. The use of 'older' and 'younger' generations as two broad linguistic categories does generally hold good but note that exceptions do arise. Thus Sp. 5 was much younger than Sp. 4 (resident in Glenties) or other older speakers still dwelling in the two shaded areas, yet his Irish was grammatically and idiomatically superior to that of many older people. As with verbal forms, I have endeavoured to use examples of case inflection from normal speech but where recourse has been made to forms obtained from direct answers, this has been indicated.

The remainder of the grammar section is intended merely to give a broad outline of some of the other aspects of local grammar - here again it will be significant to note the 'decay' in the speech of those given to English-speaking, and indeed the section as a whole should give some indication of the variation in the speech of many of the older speakers.

The Vocabulary in this work is merely a contribution to the lexicography of the general area. Many of the entries occur in Dinneen and other Modern Irish dictionaries, but these have been included, firstly to show that the word is in use in this area and, secondly, to supplement the examples listed in the phonology section. Any new or rare words, or words with a particular meaning in this area, have been included. Not all the words occurring in the texts have been included in the dictionary, as English translations of the texts have been provided. It is stressed that these translations are fundamentally of a literal nature.

To give a phonetic form followed by an Irish form and English translation for each entry would have unnecessarily lengthened the Vocabulary. As the preceding corpus of texts and the section on phonology should equip the reader with a reading knowledge of the phonology of the area, it was decided that each entry should have a headword in Irish orthography and that the phonetic form be given followed by an English translation. Where it was thought that the phonetic form might present difficulty to those seeking an orthographical representation, an Irish form was given in brackets.

A considerable amount of glosses appear in the Vocabulary; these are indicated by 'gl.'. Where 'sugg. → gl.' appears, I have suggested the word in Irish to the speaker and he/she has glossed it. As most of the lexical items were taken down from speech, 'sugg.' may not always have been included. Some entries may have been inadvertently duplicated, e.g. Cuirfidh mé le deoch chugat 'I shall send you the money for a drink' appears under cur and le; but such cases are rare. Likewise a few entries are not in alphabetical order: cearc p. 422 should be entered after ceapadh p. 423; coisidheacht p. 427 should be entered with coisidheacht p. 421; and gnaithe, gnaitheach p. 450 should be entered after glór p. 449.

A comprehensive account of the place-names of this area has been given by James O'Kane (Séamas Ó Catháin) in his Placenames of Inniskeel and Kiltееvoге ZCP 31, 59-145. I render Tangaveane An Teanga Mheadhóin although cf. An tSeanga ... ibid 109. On page 64 of O'Kane's work there is a map which shows the exact townland boundaries of these two parishes and this should prove useful in locating places not listed on the map in the current work.

Notes

1. 'Gaedhilg teangaidh achan teaghlaigh, agus ní bréag Gaedhilg orthaí. Tá binneas agus cruinneas innti nach bhfuil in áiteacha eile atá ar m'eolas.' ZCP 29 13.
2. This publication, released late in 1985, was not available to me until the current project was at an advanced stage and consequently only brief reference is made to it. Page xxviii is tragically indicative of the population decline in the area.
3. Cf. the situation as described by Ó hEochaidh in the late 1940's 'Tá mórán daoine go fóill sa cheantar nach dtuigeann focal Béarla, agus tá fhios agam fir san áit, agus nuair a théid siad 'un aonaigh le h-ainmhí a dhíol caithfidh siad fear teangtha a bheith acu le cuidiú leo an margadh a dhéanamh.' ZCP 29 14.
4. 'I gcanntar (sic) mar na Cruacha an áit a bhfuil 'ach uile dhuine 'na sheanchaidhe' ibid 16.
5. Reflections of the decay can also be detected from Ó Catháin's most recent work cf. UCCT Story 15, p. 28 and Story 21, p. 66 'Sílím gur sin deireadh de ... Tá sé dhaichead bliain ó chuala mé é.'
6. Lucas who used the Caighdeán Oifigiúil also experienced difficulty. 'I use the standard spelling except when it differs too much from the local pronunciation; in this case I modify it accordingly. It is sometimes difficult to decide when it should be modified and when the standard spelling is near enough and I may not always be consistent here.' Ros Goill ix. Cf. also Ó Catháin's remarks UCCT xxix.
7. Reference might also be made to H. Wagner's Gaeilge Theilinn, pp. 1-95, E. Evans' Irish dialect of Urris (Lochlann IV, pp. 12-59), J.N. Hamilton's Irish of Tory Island, pp. 117-70 and L. Lucas' Grammar of Ros Goill Irish, pp. 1-3.
8. When I began learning Irish in 1977, I discovered that I had the good fortune to live in the same street in Belfast as Brighid Nic Gaoithín, a very fluent native speaker from Taobh an Mhuilinn (near to LASID, pt. 82), and in the same area Susan Martin (Sp. 15), a native of Clonclayagh (just east of Commeen). I had the opportunity to visit these old ladies regularly, visits which were to prove invaluable as a preparation for later visits to An Ghaedhealtacht Láir.
9. 'One weakness in fieldwork is that the researcher doesn't normally have the time to hear in natural conversation all the forms, vocabulary, etc., required. The result is that recourse is made to direct questions, and I'm suggesting here that the answers are not always completely trustworthy.' Hamilton, Éigse xvii 104.

INFORMANTS

- Sp. 1 Seán (Johnnie) Mac An Luain c. 73 of Teanga Mheadhóin. Provided many texts, songs and lexical items.
- Sp. 2 Máire c. 65, wife of Sp. 1. Originally from Glenfinn area. Provided some texts and lexical items.
- Sp. 3 Pat Ward (Mac an Bhaird) c. 70+ of Teanga Mheadhóin. Provided many texts and lexical items. His mother spoke English.
- Sp. 4 James Ward c. 65 of Teanga Mheadhóin, resident in Glenties for many years. Brother of Sp. 3. His brother spoke much better Irish than he.

cruacha (?) féir. Cuid acu bhí bealach cart fhad leis an fhéar acu agus tilleadh acu nach rabh dadaidh ann acht go díreach é a iompar arna rópa ar do dhroim. Agus is minic a chonnaic mise cruacha féir a bhíodh thart annseo b'fhéidir go bhfaghthá annseo go dtí ceithre claighe déag agus cúig claighe déag ag iompar. Bhí sé an-deas, tchífeá an scaifte sin i ndéidh a chéile agus beairtín féir ar achan duine agus bhéarfaí an féar uilig comhgarach ag an teach ná isteach i ngarrdhaí agus dheánfaí cruach fhéir dó fá choinne é a bheith sásta fá choinne an gheimhridh(sic).

Bhal anois, mur bhfuil bealach acu fá choinne tractor agus fá choinne na cocaí a thógáil isteach mar atá siad ní fhuil fear ar bith ag goil a dh'iompar féar ar bith anois - sin an t-athrughadh a tháinig ar an am(a) le mo chuimhne-sa ar scor ar bith.

Bhí cinnte, bhí cuid acu in am amháin agus bhéarfadh siad mórán den fhéar isteach. Bhal ní rabh ann acht corrdhuine a bhí ag coinneáil beathaigh chartáileadh siad mórán den fhéar isteach lá na cruaiche féir fosta. Thoisigh na tractors annsin a's dóigh i bhfad níos gaiste a's bhéarfaidh siad an coca leobhtha go díreach mar a bhí sé ina shuidhe annsin.

Bhéadh obair go leor acu sa gheimhreadh fosta. B'fhéidir go mbéadh cliabh ná beirt ag fear le tabhairt isteach sa lá. Agus duine ar bith a bhí ag coinneáil ceathair ná chúig de bha, chaithfeá éirghe ar maidin agus an chéad rud a ghoil isteach 'un an bhóithigh agus glanadh amach as faoin eallach sin. Chaithfeá a ghoil a fhad le cruaiach an fhéir annsin bíodh sneachta ann ná bíodh agus féar a tharraingt do na ceathair ná chúig de bha sin agus é a iompar isteach chucu eadar do dhá lámh. B'fhéidir go mbéadh bóitheach le glanadh amach annsin le barra agat. Nuair a bhéadh sin déanta agat bhal bhí an lá go measardha goirid san am sin agus b'fhéidir go mbéadh sé comhgarach ag am dinnéara nuair a bhéadh sin uilig deánta agat sa gheimhreadh, sin achan lá bíodh a fhios agat.

Bhal b'fhéidir nach mbéadh a'n-fhód mónadh istigh annsin ag bean an toighe agus chaithfeá imtheacht b'fhéidir, ó b'fhéidir go gcaithfeá chóir a bheith a ghoil leathmhíle ná míle fá choinne cliabh mónadh agus dá mbéadh an lá go measardha maith b'fhéidir go dtabharfá isteach dhá chliabh agus sin an dóigh i gcuireadh siad isteach an geimhreadh.

B'fhéidir annsin dá mbéadh dadaidh ag goil san oidhche, d'imtheochadh siad a dh'airneál a fhad le teach na comharsan agus chuirfeadh siad isteach an geimhreadh ar an dóigh sin. Bhí siad ag obair ar fad, 'bhfuil a fhios agat, an seort oibre a bhí acu le deánamh chaithfeadh siad a dheánamh. Bhí am sásta ag an áit i rabh fear ná beirt ná b'fhéidir triúr fear fán teach ní thiocfadh mórán do dhuine ar bith le deánamh, acht an áit nach rabh acht a'n-duine amháin bhí tú, ó bhí tú ag goil go tiugh! Achan lá bíodh sneachta ann ná siocán ná gaoth ná fearthainn chaithfeá a ghoil amach agus an obair sin a dheánamh cá bith. Chaithfeá an t-eallach a fhodderáil agus móin a thabhairt isteach agus deireadh.

Tuighe le cur ar thoigh annsin sin rud eile fosta. B'fhéidir go mbéadh tuighe 'e dhiobháil ar an teach agus go gcaithfeá toisiughadh agus fear eighinteacht a fhagháil agus a d'imtheochadh in áit eighinteacht i mbéadh cuibhreann maith luachra agus chaithfeá an luachair sin a bhaint uilig le corrán agus í a cheangal suas ina buinnsí agus é a thabhairt abhaile annsin. Agus chaithfeá lá measardha socair a fhagháil annsin fá choinne an teach a scaoileadh agus a ghoil a chur suas na tuigheadh. Bhí sé le ceangal annsin arais. In mo chuimhne-sa ní rabh wire ar na toighthe ar chor ar bith, sùgáin is mó a bhí orthu bhí cuid acu a chuirfeadh suas le scoilb í agus mhairfeadh sí i bhfad níos faide ná an tuighe eile fosta.

So, bhí siad ag obair cruaidh go leor fá na toighthe san am sin innsa gheimhreadh.

Ó sé an líon, dá mbéadh líon agat sé a b'fhearr, acht sé an luachair a ndéanfadh siad úsáid uilig fá seo dó. Bhal cuid acu dá mbéadh cuibhreann maith arbhair annsin acu bhuailfeadh siad é le súiste ná bata Sé m'athair a bhí beo go dtí go rabh sé fá chúig bliadhna de chéad bliadhain agus chuaidh sé fríd an am a dtugtar an Land League air. Agus b'éigean d'achan duine joináil leis an Land League 'thairbhe dóigh Pharnell. Duine ar bith nach rachadh ann bhí siad boycottáilte, sin mar bhí siad, bhí iomlán Éireann faoin rud amháin.

Acht bhí sagart i mBaile na Finne, i bhFintown agus bhí sé an-go millteanach leis an Land League agus chuir an t-easbog fá chomhuidhe é. Agus chuaidh deputation as an áit seo soir ag iarraidh é a fhagháil arais, agus ní thearn an t-easbog faic acht bata a thabhairt leis agus iad a thiomáint amach.

Chuaidh siad annsin síos Leitir Cheanainn agus d'inis siad caidé tharlaigh. Tamallt ina dhéidh sin tháinig cailín an easboig anuas fá choinne siopaireacht agus earraidh a fhagháil fá choinne an toighe don easbog. Ní fhuigheadh sí luach (?) feoirlinge i siopa ar bith, bhí an t-easbog boycottáilte. Agus an fear a bhí dá thiomáint ní thiomáineadh sé é agus ní labharfadh a'n-duine leis. Agus roimhe chupla lá b'éigean dó an sagart a chur arais, sin ná é a bheith cailte leis an ocras.

Bhí sin maith, well!

Maise ní rabh mórán pisreogaí ag goil thart annseo, mhoithightheá iomrádh ar mhórán acht ní rabh a'n-duine ag goil dó. Ní rabh a'n-duine ag goil do phisreogaí chóir a bheith in m'eolas-sa annseo in am ar bith, ó maise ní rabh. Acht mhoithightheá iomrádh ar dhaoíní a bhíodh ag goil dó, do you see, acht creidim go rabh sin saoghaltaí ó shoin tá a fhios agat.

labhair sé go dtí an lá a d'imthigh sé. Agus sé an obair a bhí aige i rith an ama ag deánamh bow an' arrows agus tháinig fear an toighe isteach lá amháin agus dubhairt sé leis.

'Tá an-rud ar obair indiu,' arsa seisean, 'tháinig bunadh Chondae Thír Eoghain agus thóg siad iomlán an eallaigh thart annseo agus thug siad leobhtha iad. Agus anois,' arsa seisean, 'tá tusa annseo le bliadhain a's níor labhair tú a'n-fhocal acht ag deánamh bow an' arrows agus sé an t-am agat anois rud eighinteacht a dheánamh.'

D'éirigh sé ina sheasamh agus dubhairt sé go gcaithfeadh sé rud eighinteacht a dheánamh anois.

'Bhal sulmá n-imthighidh tú,' arsa an fear, 'rinne tú trí gháire ó tháinig tú sa toigh seo. Caithfidh tú inse caidé rinne tú na gáirí air.'

'Tá maise, inseochaidh mise sin duit. Tháinig thusa anuas lá amháin, an cnoc, agus cliabh mónadh ort agus thripáil dreiseog thú agus thuit tú. Ghlac tú an-fhearg agus tháinig tú abhaile agus thug tú leat spád. Romhair tú an dreiseog amach as an talamh agus rinne mé gáire fá dtaobh de sin. Dá dtéightheá giota beag eile síos thiocfá ar chróc óir.'

'Well an gháire eile,' ar seisean. 'Chuaidh do bhean amach oidhche amháin agus tháinig sí isteach agus cabhair cocháin uirthi ón áit i rabh do bhuachaill ag bualadh arbha agus thoisigh ag iarraidh a bheith baint (?) an arbha dithe. Agus bhí tusa ag cuidiughadh léithe í a ghlanadh suas chuaidh mé a gháirí fá dtaobh de sin,' arsa seisean. 'Sé an t-adhbhar a dteachaidh mé a gháirí fá sin, fuair do bhuachaill howlt uirthi amuigh a's thug sé an-chuacháil (?) dithe san arbhar.'

D'imthigh sé annsin agus na bow an' arrows leis aniar an cnoc agus d'fhág sé an cnoc udaí thall, an taobh thall Cruach Hatáin atá air, d'fhág sé a hata annsin. Agus cheap sé an chreach i mBealach na gCreach, sin an tath a bhfuil Bealach na gCreach air ón lá sin go dtí an lá indiu. Cheap sé na heallaigh agus achan rud agus nuair a chuaidh Bhí fear muinnteartha do Eoin amuigh annseo, Lá Aonaigh an Fhoghmuhair i bhfad ó shoin agus dhíol sé bó le fear as Gleann Fhinne ar shé phunta. Dhíol sé ar shon na bó agus d'iarr sé ar an fhear an bhó a choimhead go dtí go bhfaghadh sé rud eighinteacht le hithe. D'imthigh sé síos an tsráid agus chuaidh é isteach fá choinne rud eighinteacht le hithe agus le hól. Agus ag teacht amach dó caidé rinne sé acht titim amach ag Droichead na nGleanntach. Bhí an-tuille ann agus báidheadh é.

Bhí an-hub-bub fríd an áit annsin agus tháinig an scéala thart ach an áit agus cé a bhí ann acht an fear a cheannuigh an bhó ó mhuintir Eoin annseo. Agus caidé a bhí le déanamh ag an fhear annsin? Thug sé an bhó leis abhaile agus a luach, 'dtuigeann tú, ní rabh dadaidh eile le déanamh aige. Agus tamallt ina dhéidh sin tháinig an bhean as Gleann Fhinne, b'as Gleann Fhinne an fear, tháinig an bhean chuige agus dubhairt sí leis gur mó a bhéadh na sé phunnta 'e dhíobháil uirthi ná an bhó.

'Bhal,' arsa an fear, 'gheobhaidh tú na sé phunnta.'

Thug sé na sé phunta dithe, 'dtuigeann tú. D'imthigh sí léithe.

Bliadhain ón am sin bhí sé thiar arais agus an bhó chéadna leis agus dhíol sé í le fear agus chuir siad an bhó isteach anna yard eighinteacht agus caidé a bhí ann acht an bhean pósadh eadar an dá am ar fhear eile agus badh é sin an fear céadna a cheannuigh an bhó arais!

Ag Lá Fheil' Brighde bíonn daoíní ag déanamh crosa i gcuimhne Naoimh Brighid i gcomhnuidhe. Agus rachaidh fear amach agus bainfidh sé punnann luachra agus is maith leis mórán de rud bhán a bheith fríd fá choinne a bheith ag breacadh na gcrosa. Agus bídh an bunadh a bhíos istuigh, bídh an tae réidh acu nuair a thiocthas sé agus an luachair leis. Agus má tá duine ar bith den ainm Brighid innsa teach is í a bhéarfadh isteach an luachair nuair a thiocthadh sí agus murab fhuil aon-duine ann bhéarfaidh an fear a mbéidh an luachair leis isteach í.

Agus cá bith an méid daoíní a bhéas istuigh sa teach rachaidh siad ar a nglúine nuair a bhéas sé ann ag an doras agus scairtfidh sé ag an doras nuair a bhéas an luachair leis.

'Gabhaigidh ar mur nglúine, agus fosclaigidh mur súile, agus leigigidh isteach Brighid.'

Déarfaidh sé sin trí huair agus an bunadh a bhéas istuigh rachaidh siad ar a nglúine agus déarfaidh siad.

'Sé beatha, sé beatha, sé beatha.'

Tiocfaidh sé agus iad leis annsin agus cuirfidh sé isteach faoin tábla í, an áit i mbéadh an tae amuigh, agus ní bhainfidh aon-duine dithe go rabh an tae ólta agus toiseochaidh achan duine annsin agus dheánfaidh siad cupla cros. Dheánfar cros fá choinne achan seomra dá bhfuil sa teach agus fá choinne an chisteanach agus mórán daoíní a ghníos fá choinne na mbóitheach iad fá choinne an eallaigh agus na gcaoirigh. Agus annsin nuair a bhéas Lá na gCoinneal ann - ní chuirfear in airde go dtí sin

Sin an dóigh i rabh sé, théigheadh cuid acu achan am sa bhliadhain, 99 téigheann siad ar fad.

Q. An rabh tusa ann in am ar bith?

Bhí mé ann, shiubhail mé a fhad leis, arú tá sé tamallt maith ó shoin nuair a bhí mé ar an scoil. Creidim go bhfuil sé dhá mhíle is daichead. D'fhág muid annseo ar maidin - mé fhéin agus dearbhráthair domh, tá sé marbh anois - ar a cheathair a chlog ar maidin. Ó! bhí muid giota maith nuair a thúsaigh na daoíní a dh'éirghe ar maidin, cá bith. Tá aithghiorra ann, 'bhfuil a fhios agat, acht ní rabh a fhios aige-sean dadaidh fán aithghiorra agus ní rabh a fhios agam-sa dadaidh fá dtaobh de ar scor ar bith ná bhí mise costarnocht mórán den bhealach. Ní rabh na bealaigh an t-am sin tarráilte ná dadaidh ní rabh orthu acht graibheál a's leabhra chaithfeá siubhal isteach ar an taoibh.

Agus amach síos annsin, 'bhfuil a fhios agat, bhí fir amuigh agus beathaigh leo, a's mí na Bealtaine a bhí ann. Ar scor ar bith bhí lá an-te ann tá cuimhne mhaith agam, daoíní amuigh ag treabhadh le dhá bheathach, ní fheicfeá mórán de na daoíní ag treabhadh thart annseo ar chor ar bith, bhal corr-dhuine, siar an Gleann annsin threabhfadh corr-dhuine. Bhí na beathaigh, bhí siad maith ag obair fosta bhí siad níos bláthmhara ná na rudaí úra seo atá ann anois, na tractors.

'Sé an oidhche a ba cheart duit a ghoil ann an chéad oidhche den bhliadhain úr, sin an oidhche is mó a théigheanns daoíní agus suidheann cuid acu suas go mbíonn sé mall san oidhche ann. Sin an oidhche is mó a théigheanns daoíní a fhad leis.

Is fearr dúinn fanacht go fóill go ndéanaimid an lón 'nár aon.

VIII

Tá sinne ag fanacht go fóill ó caithfidhear cuid mhór dár saoghal
Is fearr dúinn pósadh go hóg a's béidh an cuidiughadh dár gcomhair arís.
Ní fheadaim í a mholadh le feabhas 'sí mhearúigh go mór mo chroidhe Ní fhuil a'n-duine dá bhfeicfeadh an tseoid nach dtitfeadh 'un bróin dá díth.

Ní fhaca mé a leithéid go fóill aon-bhealach ná ród a bím
Acht dá gcastaí í i mBaile an Átha Móir (?)¹ cailíní óga ar phinginn.

Sowing, a thing they called potato and corn sowing. You would have to prepare the land for them and when you would have the potatoes planted, were the weather to be fairly good you would then think of cutting turf for a day or two when the ground would be dry. And when you would have your turf dry and gathered up into clamps, they used to call them clamps, the harvest would be starting then.

You would then have to start cutting hay. They do not cut it in the same way now as they used to, it was all scythes in those days and anyone who was able to manage a scythe at all or to sharpen it, everyone was attempting to cut grass until the hay would be saved. It would all be cut with scythes and I saw a lot of them there when the grass was scarce they would maybe cut a bank or a drain with a sickle those drains would be gone over with a sickle and gorra they would reap a lot of hay out of them. Well that is not cut now at all, do you see, it is left there some animal can eat it, but it used to be cut long ago and they would then have those drains cleaned up for the winter. And then again perhaps in spring, if there was water blocked in them or anything like that they would be gone over with a spade and shovel and everything would be shovelled out of them down to the gravel until all the water would be let out of the drain in case it might be soaking the ground around it, or any water might gather in the fields, do you know, the drains would draw all the water, do you see that is how they would pass the spring and the harvest.

A time would come then, maybe towards October the hay would be practically saved and the haystacks would be begun. Some of them had a cart path to the hay while others had nothing except to carry it by rope on your back. And I often saw haystacks around here you might get up to fourteen or fifteen people carrying. It was very nice, you would see that crowd following each other each carrying a load of hay and that hay would all be brought near to the house or into a garden and it would be made into a haystack to have it handy for the winter.

Well now, if they have not got a path for a tractor to lift the haycocks as they stand in the field no-one is going to carry hay in now - that is the change that has come in my memory anyhow.

It is true that at one time they used to carry a lot of the hay in. Well there was only the odd person who kept a horse they used to cart a lot of the hay in on haystack day as well. The tractors then began and quicker method(s) and they would take the haycock just as it was sitting there (in the field).

They would have quite a bit of work in winter as well. A man might have to bring in a creel or two of turf during the day. And anyone who was keeping four or five cows, you would have to get up in the morning and go into the byre first thing and clean out under those cattle. You would then have to go to the haystack, snow or no snow, and pull hay for those four or five cows and carry it into them between your two arms. You might then have to clean the byre with a barrow. When you would have done that well the day was fairly short at that time and it might be near dinner time when you would have done all that in the winter, that was everyday I'll have you know.

Well maybe the woman of the house might not have a single sod of turf in and you would maybe have to go, oh maybe almost a half a mile or a mile for a creel of turf and if the day were reasonable you might bring in two creels and that was how they would put the winter in.

Maybe then if there was anything going on at night they would go visiting to the neighbours house and they would pass the winter like that. They were continually working, do you know, the type of work they had, they had to do it. It was handy where there was a man or two or maybe three about the house no-one would have to do a lot, but where there was only one person you were, oh you were going fast! Every day should there be snow or frost or wind or rain you would have to go out and do that work just the same. You would have to fodder the cattle and bring in the turf and everything.

Thatching a house that was another thing as well. The house might need thatching and you would have to start and get someone to go off some place to where there would be a good field of rushes and you would have to cut all those rushes with a sickle and tie it up in bunches and then bring it home. And you would have to get a fairly settled day to loosen the roof and begin to thatch. It had then to be tied again. In my memory there was no wire on the houses at all, it was mostly straw ropes some of them would use wattles and it would also last much longer than the other thatch.

So, they were working hard enough around the houses at that time in the winter.

Oh flax, if you had flax it was best, but they all used rushes in this area. Well some of them if there was a good field of oats there they would thresh it with a flail or stick or something and they kept the straw then and they used to use the straw for thatch, do you see, when the oats had been removed from it.

Some of them would then send the oats to the mill and they would turn it into meal. They might then have four or five hundredweight of oatmeal. It would be threshed fairly early in November and it would be sent to the mill and they would then have that meal for during the winter and indeed any house which would have that there would be no hunger there, that is one thing. They used to make bread and porridge out of it and they used to have plenty of potatoes as well. They had.

'(When) you have water, meal and turf' says he,
'life is going well for you.'

That is a proverb they had. Oh they were working hard in the winter before this anyone who was keeping a house, do you see.

All the people would flock to the man who would be making the house and they would help him, (and) maybe, where there would be more men, help(ers) would have to be sent home at the house-building. And they say that there is the odd house which was built almost in a day with the amount of men there would be. And when they were, when land would be sold, they would be putting a ditch around it, and many men would gather to build that ditch but you would not get the likes of that now, no-one would come, the people do not come now they will not do now as they did before this.

But, do you know, the country was full of people at that time, they had no place to go until they started going to ... America, and then over to England, an awful amount went over to England after that last war. They were building those dams up about Scotland and I believe in places in England as well. A lot of people from around here went to that place.

Taking sheep to a fair, they would have to be gathered the day before and they would be taken to the fair and maybe you would stand a good while before you would sell them. You would sell some of them and others you wouldn't sell at all and they would be taken home and they would be left there for the second night. But one thing now, nearly all the fairs have finished apart from the Autumn Fair in Glennties and the Autumn Fair at Brocagh and another fair now in October. And those are the last fairs now for the year indeed, and from then on they would be taken to these places, to these live-stock markets, to be sold and it is much easier to sell the sheep, sheep and cattle, it's just the same thing, the same way for the cattle, they will sell them the same way.

TEXT 4

The old people long ago, there were no ropes to be had in the shops like nowadays and they used to make all their own ropes themselves. The rushes would not be cut until the wind of August would come upon the rushes and it would then be cut and there was a wooden hammer, the thing they called a mallet and all the ... (?) would be taken out of the rushes and they would then take the rushes to where there would be a stagnant pool on a hill; that is a pool on a hill with no water leaving it or coming into it, a stagnant pool. And the rushes would be steeped there for I believe a week or so and it would then be taken out and they used to make all the ropes for carrying and everything out of the rushes. Oh they used to. And a single strand of those rushes when it would be dried out, when it would be taken out of the stagnant pool, you could not have broken it. You could not. Oh I often saw the men making ropes out of the rushes.

TEXT 5

You would have to have the pup with you from an early age, it would be immaterial whether you would be herding cattle or sheep you would have to bring the pup with you and make him take the cattle along or begin asking him to go around the sheep or pen them or to help you to bring the sheep the way you were going - the same thing for cattle.

Well some of them were very easy to train, it would be in themselves somehow and there were others then and they would drive an animal on, they would drive the animals on but they could not round up an animal. Well the dogs began to improve then, they had better breeding, and they began to round up cattle and sheep and they were very suitable, very handy for anyone who kept sheep or cattle. Almost any dog will drive cattle on but it is rounding up the animal then, that is the hardest thing to do and it is the hardest thing to put into the dog's head as well. It is indeed.

Indeed, the first good dogs that started coming, came over from Scotland as a matter of fact. People going over and working over there in a place where there were sheep and cattle and they might bring a pup back with them. And they brought over a lot of good breeds of dog from Scotland in that way. The breed that was in this country at one stage, they were what they would call mongrels, they had no breeding in them. But a lot of those good dogs their descendants came from Scotland.

Q - In which language would one speak to the dogs?

It would make no difference. If you had the pup from an early age you could speak to him solely in Irish and perhaps the odd person who could not speak Irish well he (lit 'you') would instruct it in English and it would understand everything he meant. Oh the dog would understand you surely it would make no difference whether it was Irish or English. It would not. Over to the east in the Croaghs almost all the dogs have Irish. They have surely. They spoke to the dog just as they would speak to a boy or a person there. 'Go up', 'bring them down', or 'drive them on up', the dog will understand them it matters little he will understand English or anything else. He will. They have reared the dog like that do you see, they will ask the dog to 'lie' (in Irish) and the dog will lie down. If you ask (it) to 'lie down' in English the dog will lie down also if you have trained him up to do that.

TEXT 6

They used to gather it from the rocks. You would have to take an old spoon or a bucket and scrape it into the bucket off the top or the side of the rock and put it into the pot. And that also had to be boiled and your wool was ready then to put in when it would be boiling on the fire. You would put the wool in and you would leave it, oh you would leave it in perhaps a quarter of an hour or about that time and you would lift it out then when the juice would all be out of the lichen, do you see, and it would be as lovely and yellow as any cloth you ever saw but it could only dye the one colour, yellow. They used to call it lichen. Gorra it was very nice, some of them used to make those pullovers, you know those vests and put some of that thread in them. Oh it was very nice, but that stuff used to be gathered from the rocks. There is plenty of that still to be found indeed. It will dye any cloth a nice yellow colour, it is dark brown.

There was a herb they called the herb of the cough, anyone who would have a cough. They called it mountain sage and some of them used to call it Wild George but I always heard it called mountain sage. You would boil it and drink the juice, you would not eat a bit of the leaves anyway. You would have to sieve it through a sieve and keep the juice, bottle it and drink a drop of it every morning. It was a cure for the cold.

Sp.2

The herb of the jaundice, boil that also, boil it at morning with a pint of milk and take it for three mornings the first thing. It would be kind of sour the third morning but just drink it on the third morning, divide it into three.

Well there was other stuff they called rose noble. It would grow in great leaves like dock. And there was a disease at that time, it would come upon your hand or your foot perhaps, it would result from an injury they called erysipelas, and there was no cure for erysipelas until you would get rose noble and boil it with fresh butter and when it would be boiled through the butter and everything was boiled through each other you would shape it up into a nice little lump and you would put it onto a plate, an old plate or a box lid or something that would hold it and when it would solidify then it would be like a piece of soap. The butter would solidify, do you see, when it would cool down and you would then have to rub it on it then.

Oh your leg would swell up like that and it would be as red oh as red as an ember from the fire and you would have to rub it on it and keep it against it for maybe three or four days. By the third day you would see the swelling going out of it and that was one herb which was very useful. I never heard any Irish (name) for it but indeed the old people could have had an Irish (name) for it but I always heard it referred to as rose noble.

They had other stuff there which they used a great lot, garlic. Any animals there that would have a cough or people who would have a cough as well, (they would) eat a little piece of garlic. Well you could eat that cold, do you see, like an onion. They said that it was a good cure for a cold as well and for pains. They used to have a lot of good cures long ago surely, but it is almost certain that you would not get any garlic at the moment anywhere. I am thinking that it would be very difficult to get it but there was a lot of it planted in that old garden over there at one time, it was growing everywhere throughout it. But it withered. And it was not being attended to, you know, but the rose noble is growing yet.

They also grew another thing to keep flies away, what is this it was called? There was never a house long ago which did not have it growing, there would be a bush of it growing in some place, planted beside the wall and you only had to plant it once and it would then grow by itself. I have forgotten the name of that as well.

Well there was another disease which the young calves used to get long ago, a thing they called blackfoot. And there was a type of thin branch they used to cut, I do not know whether they are growing or not. They called them black wands and they used to boil them and the juice would be given to the calf and it would be cured and if you were not to give it to it it would die. It would. There were not many vets at that time, the same can be said for doctors, there were only home cures. They were able to cure the thing as well. They were. Indeed they were, as they used to say with the herbs.

TEXT 8

There was a time long ago and there was no tea nor sugar nor flour, any of those three things anyhow and they did not use anything save for oatmeal and potatoes twice a day, maybe in the odd house three times a day, and milk but there was no tea. That was in the far off distant past, do you know.

TEXT 9

Indeed they would hardly go across until after Christmas when the day would start getting long(er) that it is the time which we called spring. They would go off in early spring and they would remain over there until near the end of the year until the day would get short(er) again on them. Some of them would stay over in the winter and others used to come home, any place where there was not a great deal of help in winter in the houses, they would have to come back, some of them, to help look after the small amount of livestock and ~~all~~ in the winter.

The two brothers were able to understand each other, do you see, and they thought that one of the neighbours, do you see, would be telling things that he would see or hear, that he would carry the stories out of the house. And he was seeking information about something or other, do you see.

Something happened in the neighbourhood anyhow, do you see and one of the brothers was inside talking to this man, do you see. The other brother came in and he knew full well that he (the visitor) was fishing for news about this incident that had happened. And they were smoking tobacco by the fire on the other side (of the fireplace) and the other brother came in.

'Well, true enough,' said he, the man (brother) who had come in, 'watch yourself on the sparks.'¹

'True enough,' said the man (brother) who was inside 'indeed so said the old cat.'

He had understood do you see.

TEXT 11

An old woman in the house would say to the people in the house if they were telling a thing which they would not want told in case the children - or anyone - would tell it out of doors.

'Aru watch yourself there is a hole in the roof.'

The person would understand then and he would cease talking. There used to be a lot of that surely before this.

TEXT 12

The time that the barracks were in Edenfinfreagh,² the soldiers went eastwards one day and they found poteen in the Croaghs, three or four gallons and they brought it with them to the barracks. And they had to report it to the officer and the officer came the following day to examine it. And they knew very well that the officer would order it to be thrown out. And there was a hole over near to where the garage is outside the priest's house, that was where the barracks was, and they put a bucket down into this hole and straw on top and the officer asked them to take it and pour it into the hole. And they did. And it went into the bucket. Then when the officer left they lifted the bucket and brought it inside and they put it into jugs and bottles.

And they sent word that night around the neighbours, they sent word to ... and a great crowd from all around (the place) to come to the barracks that night. And when everyone of them came into the barracks, they had to go onto their knees and swear that they would not say anything about the thing, do you see, and they drank all the poteen in the barracks.

1. The sparks meant the man who was in (the house), do you see?
2. ZCP 31.85.

My father lived until he was within five years of one hundred years and he lived through the time they called the Land League. And everyone had to join the Land League because of Parnell. Anyone who would not join he was boycotted, that was how they were, the whole of Ireland was under the one thing.

But there was a priest in Fintown and he was very much in favour of the Land League and the bishop silenced him. And a deputation from this place went trying to get him back but the bishop merely took a staff and drove them out.

They then went down to Letterkenny and explained what had happened. A while after that the bishop's servant girl came down to shop and buy goods for the house for the bishop. She could not get a farling's worth in any shop, the bishop was boycotted. And his chauffeur would not drive him and no-one would speak to him. And within a couple of days he was forced to reinstate the priest, either that or himself to perish with hunger.

That was good, well!

Indeed there were not many superstitions¹ around here, you would hear about a lot but no-one was practising it. Hardly anyone was carrying out ceremonies as far as I know around here at any time, oh indeed there was not, but you would hear mention of people who used to practise this, do you see, but I believe that that was generations ago you know.

They would not let you brush the floor out over the door and they would not let you, long ago it was forbidden to put out ashes when the sun would have gone down. If the ashes needed putting out they would have to put out in the morning.

You were forbidden for you to clean out the byre on Friday.

TEXT 15

The little folk used to be fishing on all the rivers and the lakes. There used to be plenty of trout at that time, but now, there are a lot of places now, and there are not (as many) trout in the rivers as was in them before this.

1. Probably 'witchcraft', cf asalraidheacht OCGC 170.

Well there is no mention of superstitions now at all hardly, but they used to say that the little folk could be seen before this, whether it was true or not. Lights to be seen about the hills after nightfall and the odd person who would see a light and who didn't know where it was coming from at all.

I myself do not think that they were superstitious, do you know, a piece of tree used to always be picked on the first night of May and it used to be put in the manure. And they used to pick daisies and they used to put them in the windows. I do not know what the significance was.

And then St John's Eve, do you know on the twenty third day of the month of ... Oh what did they call June (in Irish)? They used to light fires anyhow and I think that they were for St John the Baptist, and they do that yet with the fires. Well whether or not that was a superstition, but I do not think it was, it was an old custom.

If there was a holly tree there they would not interfere with it in any way whatsoever, they think that they are all noble especially if they were growing in a ravine near a river. They would not be interfered with at all.

TEXT 16

There was a thing long time ago which they called the evil eye. Were you to be going the road with cattle, sheep, or a horse or anything at all, I heard an old woman tell me, if you suspected someone of having the evil eye:

'May God bless your heart and your breast,
And may my own share remain with me.'

They used to call those (people) blinkers¹ in English.

TEXT 17

(In) a noble place it would not be unlucky to interfere with rocks. And in ravines near a river, where there would be plenty of trees or things like that it would be unlucky to cut wood or anything in those places. To the west there, the road you turn down to the bridge of Drum, the first crossroads there, there is a cataract there and it is said that it is noble.

TEXT 18

The little people were very plentiful before this. They were in Mí n na mBroc¹ to the east of here and one of the little people came into this house in Mí n na mBroc seeking meal, do you know, to make bread.

The woman of the house gave a couple of bowls of the meal to her, to this woman and she went off. And the next day the fairy woman came back with the meal (to return) the loan and the woman of the house did not want to use it and she threw it outdoors into the mud pit. And the same evening a heifer fell over a cliff in Mí n na mBroc, to the east of here and the heifer was killed and they said that when the heifer fell that laughter was heard at the Autumn Fair. That was the little people.

I do not know if there were such people as the little people - fairies - there must have been. There are a lot of stories going around but there is none of that to be heard now. There is not. There was in the old days.

TEXT 19

Up there on the height the little people used to hold a fair at night. There used to be cattle and tents and noise and everything there. And when the other people (mortals) would go up to it they could not see anything. It could be seen from the main road here, I heard the old people talking about that.

Wasn't that a strange thing?

This man was living to the east by a bridge which is this side of Brockagh called 'droichead Eannóig' and a brother of Pádraig Eoin Phádraig's was living there before he joined the Civic Guards but he is dead now. But there was a man living there long ago and he had four or five cows and their milk yield was fading and he did not know what was wrong with them at all. And he came a few days to observe the cows where they were grazing in the field or on the hill and there was a hare among the cows. And he had a black hound which had not got a single white hair in its body, and I had always heard that a hound of that sort was capable of catching witches, and he set the hound after the hare and it went around the field a few times and finally the hare jumped the fence and it caught hold of the hare's back leg and the hound returned and the man went to look and it was an old woman lying on the other side of the fence and Pádraig Eoin Phádraig said that it was over from the wood, from Cloghan wood that the old woman, the hare, had come.

1. 'Much frequented by the fairies at one time' ZCP 31.95 cf 'Shíoch-aidhe Mhí n na mBroc, caith do phíopa a's bí 'do thost. Sp. 7 (Fairy sprite of Mí n na mBroc, smoke your pipe and be quiet.)

It is true that the fairies could be seen before this long ago. And I heard tell (of) this man, he lived to the east there in the townland of Garvan, he was (called) Herron and his father was fairly old and he was a young boy and he was going down to a man who was down in Taobh Chlochach out above Ballybofey. He (a farmer from that place) used to have a lot of reapers cutting hay and the best of reapers were there.

But this afternoon anyhow he was going down, the young boy, I heard, was going down the afternoon before and at some stage on his way down, he had his scythe with him, he met this little man. A little red-haired man and the little red-haired man asked him where he was going and he told him.

'I am afraid,' he said, 'that there is not much good in you going to work there. There will be good reapers there, and I am afraid that you might not be able to keep up with them. And have you the scythe there?'

And he sharpened the scythe, and there was not a reaper there that day as good as him. There was not.

There was a man to the west in Ardara, he entered this house and he stayed there for a year and he never uttered as much as one word until the day he left. And the work he had all the while was making bows and arrows and the man of the house came in one day and said to him.

'There is a lot happening today,' he said, 'the Tyrone crowd have come and they have rounded up all the cattle around here and taken them off. And now,' he said 'you are here a year now and you have not spoken a word, just making bows and arrows and it is time that you did something.'

He stood up and said that he would have to do something now.

'Well before you go off,' said the man of the house, 'you laughed three times since coming into this house. You must tell why you laughed.'

'Oh indeed, I shall tell you that.¹ You came down the hill one day carrying a creel of turf and a bramble tripped you and you fell. You became very angry and you came home and you took a spade. You dug the bramble out of the ground and I laughed at that. Were you to have gone a little further down you would have come upon a crock of gold.'

1. The speaker only related two.

'Well the other laugh,' he said. 'Your wife went out one night and she came in covered in some straw from where your servant boy was thrashing corn and she began to try and brush the (?) of the corn off herself. And you were helping here to clean it and I laughed at that,' he said. 'The reason why I laughed at that was because your servant boy caught hold of her outside and he gave her a great cuddle in the corn.'

He went off then carrying the bows and arrows over the hill and he left - yonder hill on the other side, it is called Cruach Hatáin (the Hill of the Little Hat), he left his hat there. And they rounded up the cattleprey on the Highway of the Cattleprey, that is why it is called the Highway of the Cattleprey from that day to this. He rounded up the cattle and everything and when he had gone that distance there were hundreds helping him, he was one of the little people and he took the cattle from them and brought them back here to the people.

Well that was true they were saying.

TEXT 23

There was a relative of Eoin's out here one Harvest Fair Day long ago and he sold a cow to a Glenfinn man for six pounds. He paid for the cow and asked the man to mind the cow until he would get something to eat. He went down the street and went in for something to eat and drink. And when he came out what did he do but fall (into the water) at the Bridge of Glenties. There was a heavy flood and he was drowned.

There was a great hub-bub through the place then and the news came round everywhere, and who was it but the man who had bought the cow from Eoin's people. And what could the man (who had sold the cow) do then? He took the cow home with him as well as its price, do you see, he could not do anything else. And a while after that the (dead man's) wife came from Glenfinn, the man was from Glenfinn, and his wife came and said to him that she was in greater need of the six pounds than the cow.

'Well,' said the man, 'you will get the six pounds.'

He gave her the six pounds, do you see. She went off.

A year from that he was over (at the fair) again with the same cow and he sold it to a man and they put the cow in some yard and who was it, but the woman had married in the meantime to another man and it was that same man who had bought the cow again.

Wasn't that strange?

Sp.8

This man fought with a ghost. He was going over or (coming) across stepping stones and he met a man who had died. But apparently before his death, himself and this man were continually fighting and the man said to him.

'I shall have revenge on you dead or alive!'

The man had died but apparently he was crossing the falls this night he met his ghost. The two began fighting and what ailed him was that every time he would strike a blow the ghost would be as fresh as before but he went home and he lay for six weeks.

Sp.9

Every time the ghost struck him it left a bruise on him. Didn't he say to that ghost.

'I was not afraid of you when you were alive and I am not afraid of you dead!'

There were people a long time ago who had all sorts of charms. There was a woman down there in Corrairie, she lived about two miles this side of Ballybofey and she knew a great number of charms. She knew the Charm of Searching, the Charm of the Missing Objects, the Charm of Error and the Charm of the Toothache, she knew the Charm of the Mote and she knew another charm, long ago these witches used to cast a spell on the milk (yield) she had a charm to get the milk back.

There was a man living over there where the house is over there on the other side of the river, there was a crowd called Carolan, and there was a man called Seamus O'Carolan. And however, he was working away. This day he got a mote in his eye and no one was able to take out the mote and a messenger was sent down to Corrairie seven miles away to this woman who knew the Charm of the Mote and she got a basin of water and whatever charm she knew the mote was in the basin of water down in Corrairie.

This crowd, they lived fairly close to this woman. And formerly on May Day, the first day of the month of May, that was the morning the witches would be out (and about). And a lot of people down the Road of the Finn, down here where they had a whole load of cattle, they would not rise any smoke until late evening and the first house which emitted smoke that morning these witches would have bewitched the milk. You would be churning for the whole day and the milk would not yield any butter in the churns. And this crowd anyhow, they had lost their milk and they went to this woman in Corrairie, the house where she lived is there yet, for I know the man who lives in the house very well.

They went to this woman and she asked them to gather the amount of milk to be churned and when it was on the verge of turning into butter to close the door and to put two pieces of iron in the fire and that they would not be long churning until a poor woman would come to the door seeking help, seeking alms but not to let her in. And they were not long churning until this woman came to the door and they did not let her in and she began crying aloud and she was saying that her breast was burning her and they did not let her in and she went off and the butter came on the milk after that. It did.

A man would have to pass it on to a woman and the woman would have to pass it on to a man. There was a man of the same surname as myself living to the east there in this townland and he knew the Charm of Bleeding.

I do not know how the people got these charms at all, I could not say. You would not hear of anyone using them now except that there are people, there is a thing they called erysipelas, I do not know what it is called in English. Erysipelas would result from an injury, if you were to get an injury,¹ swell your hand, or some limb of your body and it would not do to lance any injury. And Sean Mac Ginty to the west there in (the townland of) Drum, he learnt it from his mother. Oh many's the one used to go to (the) mother (and) to John seeking a cure for erysipelas and to make butter, whatever charm they had you would then get the butter back and when you would get the butter and (you would) rub the butter on it and the swelling would subside.

There was a man (living) out there one time and they (travellers) took seven hundred (pounds) from him, but he was the fool. He apparently suffered from pains and one of them began telling him that he could cure the pains if he were to get a certain amount of money, but that he would have to bury it in the ground and that it would have to remain buried in the ground for a certain number of days.

Christ! whatever way they lured it from the man, when he went out then, when the time had elapsed, indeed there was no money in the place! It was all gone they had made a fool out of the man. They had. It was a great sum to lose six or seven hundred at that time.

TEXT 27

Conall saw a dobharchú up on the hill once. The dobharchú would kill you, it is a large animal larger than a badger, they were very much frightened of it. It was sleeping out up on the Cruach Ghorm and there was someone else with him and they were afraid that they would waken it, if it awoke you would not be able to save yourself from it, they say.

1. Probably 'sprain'.

Q. What is the 'madadh uisce'?

Otter.

Q. Is there any difference between the dobharchú and the madadh uisce?

Yes. The dobharchú is much bigger. (Sp.6 → I do not think that there is such an animal as the dobharchú.) Well Conall saw that strange animal and Conall was fortunate that it was lying sleeping and he said that it had a very large head bigger than a dog and that it was bigger than any dog that was in the district. They were very much afraid of it and they went off and they left it. I think that John Simey¹ was with him.

TEXT 28

This man went in to this woman and I think that he was coming from the fair and she said to him.

'Well I would make you a drop of tea,' she said 'but I am afraid' she said, 'that someone else will come in before you have it drunk but I shall give you a bowl of milk.'

And he said 'Thank you a hundred times good lady,' he said, 'that is work that I never pursued, the work of the young calf drinking milk when not thirsty!'

TEXT 29

This man went in to this old woman, she was an old Protestant woman and she began telling him that she had a terrible toothache. And he said that if she were to repeat these words after him that she would be cured of the toothache and she asked him what she had to say.

'Well,' said he 'O Great Protestant hag
Who believes not in the Virgin Mary
May you not get relief
Until you are driven mad.'

TEXT 30

A bank used to come to Glenties once a month, and the bank used to come to where the chemist is now, and there was nothing at that time except gold, yellow gold sovereigns.

1. Johnnie Doherty the well known fiddle player from this area.

There was a little boy living in the town and he saw them working with the money indoors. He went home and he made paste and he put it on the bottom of a basin and he got 2d and he put it into the basin, like that, and he went off and he threw the basin on top of the money and he asked him (the banker) for tuppence worth of meal.

Aru, the bankers threatened him. They told him to clear off, that they hadn't any meal.

He lifted the basin and he went off home and when he went home the amount of sovereigns that could stick to the bottom of the basin were there.

His mother asked him where he got those. And he told (her).

O! she picked them up and she brought them down and left them in the bank.

Wasn't that a clever boy?

TEXT 31

My father went into Hugh Devitt's shop a long time ago to buy a cap. And there were four or five boys behind the counter and unknown to them he put a cap in under the back of his coat like that and

'Oh!' he said, 'I could steal a cap from you while you were watching me.'

One of the boys behind the counter said 'If you steal a cap unknown to us, we will give you a cap for nothing.'

'Well, that's alright.'

He began looking through the caps and then he let one of the caps fall onto the ground.

'Come,' said one of them, 'pick up that cap!'

He lifted the cap and he left it on the counter.

'Pick up the caps,' he said. 'I have a cap now.'

They said he hadn't. He put his hand in under his coat and pulled out the cap.

TEXT 32

This man went to the market of Ballybofey - there used to be a market there before this every Thursday and there used to be great crowds of people there - and it was summer in the month of June and he was looking for a place (to stay). He could not be accommodated the place was fully booked.

The landlady said 'I have no room,' she said, 'the place is all booked up but would you like to lie beside a baby?'

'Oh I would not, I shall not lie beside a baby at all, I have no experience of children,' he said, 'I shall lie outdoors in the yard.'

He went out to the back of the house and he lay down where there was straw and such like, do you see, out in the barn. Aru, he could not sleep a wink all night with rats jumping over him like that. He came out then in the morning and sat in the yard on a box smoking his pipe. Gorra, a young girl came out of the house, (she was) about twenty years old or so and she was carrying a can to fetch water and she went over to speak to him like that.

And the man asked her 'Who are you?'

'Oh,' said she 'I am the baby of the house.'

Well he thought to himself then, do you see.

She then said to him 'Any harm to ask who you are?'

'Not a damn bit,' said he, 'I'm the damn fool that slept in the barn last night!'

TEXT 33

This man was in New York and he was hungry and he had no money. What did he do? He chose four children from the street, do you see, with various ages from ten downwards which would resemble his own family and he brought them into this hotel and he ordered dinner for them.

They got the dinner and everything, do you see, and when they had eaten the dinner he said to the woman who was serving at the table, says he.

'Mind my children,' he said 'until I come in again, I am going to get a cigar.'

She said that she would mind them. He went, he cleared off. But the woman had not the least worry that he was not returning. She came in.

'Has your father come back yet?'

'Oh he's not my father!' said everyone of them.

The only alternative was to let them go.

TEXT 34

Three men from Edenfinfreagh here, were going to Scotland, to Glasgow. They went off and they had not got much money. And they used to walk to Derry at that time in the old days. And when they had gone as far as Ballybofey, they went into this café (lit 'house'), which was called Mrs McIlwaine's, for something to eat and their meal was served upstairs. And when it was all over, they had finished their meal, one man said to the other.

'I shall have to pay for this.'

'Oh you will not,' said the other man 'I shall pay for it!'

'Oh you will not,' said the third man 'I shall pay for it!'

And they had a great row among themselves, do you see, each one going to pay for it.

Well Mrs McIlwaine was standing there and one of them said, do you see, 'I'll settle this thing,' he said. 'We shall place a blindfold on Mrs McIlwaine and whoever she places her hand upon that man must pay the bill.'

Well that was settled then. One of them started to blindfold Mrs McIlwaine, a handkerchief tied behind her head, do you see. And while he was doing that the others sneaked off downstairs and when he had finished he went down also and away he went.

Mrs McIlwaine started through the upstairs room, through chairs and tables and all sorts and she could find no-one. Gorrah the man of the house went up and entered the room and she grabbed hold of him.

'Oh,' says she, 'you will have to pay the bill.' She removed the blindfold and who had she but her own husband! They had gone off.

TEXT 35

God made Adam and then he put a heavy sleep upon him and then he took a bone out of his side and he made woman - Adam and Eve do you see - that is round about four or six thousand years ago. Well skeletons are being found in the ground now that are millions of years old, before that do you know. That is the reason why the bible is not correct.

There was a married couple and the wife died and there was only one little boy. But the husband was frightened - they were living in a very remote place and they used not to get out anywhere at all - and he was very frightened that when the boy would grow up that he would become licentious¹ and that he would go off with girls, propose, and bring in a wife, and that maybe the wife would be crabbed, and the old man preferred that the boy should not see a girl at all. The boy was not sent to school or anything, from one end of the year to the other he saw no-one except the old man.

The old man used to go to the fair with a few calves once a year. But it transpired that the old man had a pain in his leg this day, he was getting old, and he had to bring the boy with him. This was the first day ever that the boy had left home and they were entering the fair and anything the boy would see he asked the old man, what is this and what is that?

When they were a while at the fair, what enters (the fair) at the end of the road but a few girls. Says the boy to the old man, says he.

'Daddy,' he says, 'what are those up there?'

'Oh indeed,' said the old man 'those are a few goats.'

'Oh,' said the boy, 'Daddy,' he said, 'I am very fond of the goats.'

TEXT 37

There was once a couple and the man fell sick and he was not getting better and he died. His wife was very grieved at his decease. She imagined that she couldn't live at all without him, she was so lonely.

Her sister lodged with her and the next day she decided that she would go back to the grave a second time, she was terribly lonely for her husband. Anyhow before he died he had asked her not to marry until a long time would have elapsed.² She went a short-cut through the bog, making her way to the grave and what did she encounter but a horse's head - a horse which had died out on the bog. A great long head it was and she said to the sister.

'O my o,' she said, 'look what we have encountered,' she said, 'how lucky I was,' she said 'I can marry any day now,' she said 'how short it was until I encountered a long head!'

TEXT 38

In the old days the time of the lords - this story, it is not very nice to relate but I'll relate it anyhow - there were men here and there who were guarding the grouse, hares, snipes, woodcock and

1. greamhlasach.

2. go cionn fada in this context means 'until a long time', below it is deliberately misconstrued as 'until a long head'.

everything like that. But this man went into this house this particular day and there was a boy in the house and he asked the boy.

'Where is your father today?'

'He is out hunting.'

'What sort of hunting,' said he, 'is he doing?'

'Well the amount he gets he discards and the amount he does not get he brings home.'

Do you know what it is? Picking his shirt. Lice, ticks. The people long ago they were pestered with ticks but there was nothing going at that time to sprinkle on bed clothes or any clothes, and people were very bad with lice.

TEXT 39

To the east of here on this side of the Croaghs, a man and woman were living there. And the woman got up in the morning, her husband was tired he was lying in bed, and she went out and she realised that rain was imminent and she came in and said to him that he had best get up as the ravens were screeching a lot over by the cliff and that the plovers were screeching down on the lake. And he lay back, he was tired anyway, and in reply (he said)

Believe not plover nor raven
And heed not the words of a woman or how the sun shines
- as God wills the day shall be.

TEXT 40

There was a member of the Fenian warriors called Fear-ghamhain.¹ Well out west the Glen² here there is a place by the roadside and it is called Mullach na Muice (The Summit of the Pig), there was a wild pig there. And this man was from Gleann Léithín five miles from Finntown³ and he went with the warrior bands to learn, and when he had completed the year he came home. And anything he was ever asked not to do he would have to do it, he would always do the thing the wrong way, do you see.

1. Fear-ghamhain, Sommerfelt (Lochl III, 376) refers to Fer-doman, in Acallamh na Senórach, Ferdhomhón in Duanaire Finn. He also draws attention to Ó Tuathail's remarks (Béaloides I 54f) "'Feardhamhan" atá agam annseo ach "Feargamhan" a shíl mé adubhairt an scéaluidhe.'
2. An Gleann, ZCP 31.95 sub Meenachallow. Gleann Mór, Gleann Mór na nGleanntach, etc.
3. Baile na Finne/Fintown ZCP 31.85 'The Irish name Baile na Finne is only very occasionally used.' I have found it most commonly referred to as [ˈfʲɪnˈtuːn]

But Fionn - Fionn Mac Cumhaill - wanted to get rid of him and Fionn asked him not to come the way of the pig at all, the place where the pig resided, do you see. Fionn knew that he would take that road and that the pig would kill him. He came from the west along the Glen, do you know, the Glenties side. The pig was not in the lair at all. He started on the lair with his sword, he rooted it east and west.

Coming across to the place where the Post Office is now, he had six dogs with him, the pig caught up with him. He put one of the dogs to fight with the pig and the pig killed the dog. And the name of that dog was Mullaigh¹ - that is the name of the townland ever since, do you see, 'Mullaigh'.

He and the dogs were fighting with the pig then and he put another dog called Loingsigh against her and the pig killed that dog - Loingseach 'Srath Loingsigh'² ('Loingseach's river meadow') is the name of that (townland). And out here where Grafaidh³ is now, he put another dog against her, do you see, and the name of that dog was 'Grafaidh'. And he was going northwards in that fashion, but the pig killed the six dogs anyhow and out by Loch Muc⁴ he had to face the pig himself. And he and the pig started on each other - the pig itself must have been a right decent one - and he gave up a yell at Loch Muc, and a sister of his five miles away in Fintown, she heard the howl and she recognised that it was her brother.

She came up as fast as she could and he was yelling on the other side of the Loch, Loch Finne⁵ - you know Loch Finn. She swam across the Loch and when she was on the other side of the Loch she thought that the shouting was coming from the other side of the Loch - due to the echo. She went across the Loch again and she was drowned, her hair became entangled in her feet and she was drowned. His sister was called Fingheal and that is why it (the Loch) is called Loch Finn from then on.

And the pig killed him and he killed the pig at Loch Muc - there is a place to the north of here called Loch Muc and he is buried there. And a brave few years ago the grave was opened and bones were found in it - a skeleton - and a ring was found in it and they thought that it was a ring that was on his finger. There must have been something to it.

He was the strongest in the warrior band, in the Fianna. There was the strength of a man (gen sg ?) in every strand of his hair and he did not know that. Were they to have told him he would have killed them all. But he was always left, when the Fianna would go off hunting, they would always leave him guarding the women. His name was Miogacha Colgach.

But this day he fell asleep, the man, Miogacha Colgach, and the women tied his hair to the rafters of the house and they went out and began to cry aloud. Oh, he awoke. He took one leap and left his scalp behind him.

Aru, he was as angry as could be. He put all the women back into the house and closed the door and he set it alight.

Fionn was a long way off, himself and the other Fianna and he realised that something was wrong. He put his thumb in his mouth and he knew that the house was on fire. He came as fast as he could and he found the women safe.

But Miogacha Colgach went down as far as Lifford and he went into hiding in a cave there and the name of that place from the day to this is Steeple Mhullach an Gharrdhaí¹ do you see.

And it was his own son who was to kill him. His son was in the Fianna as well. They told his son that there was a wild beast in the cave and his son entered with a sword and in the darkness father and son began to fight inside. He cut off his father's head. He came out bearing the head. And Fionn said when he would come out that he would slay the entire Fianna, that they would all be dead, do you see.

He came out and saw that it was his father's head he was carrying. Oh, he went absolutely mad! He goes over to a man lying down there, and he places his foot under him and he throws him into the air as if he were a ball. He continued in that fashion throughout the day, do you see, but I do not know the rest of the story after that.

TEXT 42

He was the best mason there ever was. It was he who helped build Donegal Castle up here, where Red Hugh O'Donell lived. But he and his son were setting off one morning on a long journey and the father asked the son to shorten the road.

'Oh,' said the son he could not do that.

'Well, go back home,' he said.

1. To be interpreted as Mullach an Gháire?

The boy came back home and how sad he was going into his mother.

'What has brought you back?' asked the mother.

'Indeed, my father asked me to shorten the road. I could not shorten it.'

'Do you know what you should do? Go back, and begin telling him a big long story, extremely long, and then you will shorten that road for him.'

So, he went off to where his father was and began telling him a long story. Oh! a story almost unending and that is how he managed to fulfil the thing.

TEXT 43

He used to go from place to place carrying a hurl and striking balls, he would be before the ball and then strike it as far again and he would be before it again, do you see. Cú Chulainn, that's how he was. He was the king of Ulster here.¹

TEXT 44

King O'Donell was owed a lot of rent by the people, do you know, and whoever was not able to pay the rent he used to seize their cattle and anyone who would give a back answer or say anything to him he would hang them. Wasn't that dreadful?

And he was riding along on a horse one day and when he had crossed down at Lettermacaward, do you know, over that way, he met a boy. And he asked the boy 'What is your name.'

'Mac an Bhaird' he said.

'And is that place deep?' he asked, going over to him.

'It is not,' said the boy.

Red Hugh went across on the horse, the horse had to swim, do you see.

'Oh the rascal!' he said 'the boy is telling me lies.'

1. Cf He used to be the 'boss' of Ulster (!), Sp. 2.

'I did not!' said the boy 'because my mother uses stepping stones,' he said 'going to and fro every day.'

Red Hugh took him on the back of his horse to Donegal for being so impertinent in his reply and he was to be hung the (following) morning. Now! And there was another crowd inside to be hung also and they were sitting around at supper, like that, and Red Hugh was going round and it appears that there were eggs on the table, he asked.

'Has Mac an Bhaird got an egg?'

Said Mac an Bhaird 'Were your finger in my rear end you would know that!' he said.

O my o! that was a great insult to King O'Donell, do you see.

'Well,' said King O'Donell 'I shall not wait until the morning to hang you but I shall hang you tonight by the light of the moon!'

'Well I hope that you will not go back on your word,' he said 'I would rather be hung by the light of the moon than by ropes.'

He was able for O'Donell again. Well then he did not know what he would do. He wrote a letter and he sent him down to Lettermaca-Bhaird.¹ Red Hugh had a brother down there and the letter to his (O'Donell's) brother was seeking to get rid of the boy. The (Lettermacaward) man understood what was wrong, do you see, and he kept the boy. And the boy was very good for him the whole time - for the man down (in Lettermacaward) - everything the brother asked of him he was very submissive to it, and when the brother died he left him the place, Lettermacaward and that is why the place is called Lettermacaward from that day to this.

TEXT 45

Big Murchadh and Little Murchadh were two boys, two cousins, and they went picking raspberries and Big Murchadh went up into the tree and he was throwing down to Little Murchadh, and as Little Murchadh was receiving them Big Murchadh did not know what he was doing, he was eating as he received. And Big Murchadh was taking it for granted that he had picked quite a lot in the end and he came down and there was nothing for him at all. Little Murchadh had scoffed the lot!

He then decided that he would have to get a stick in order to teach Little Murchadh manners. He went to cut the stick. The stick would not come until he would get an axe to cut it. He went to the axe.

1. The word litir 'letter', is pronounced [L'Ít'Ír'] as is leitir < DIL leittir (leth + tír ?) ... (lower ?) slope of a hill'.

'An axe that would cut a stick,
A stick that would trounce Little Murchadh
Who ate my raspberries last night,' he said.

He went to the axe then and the axe would not come until he would get a stone that would sharpen it. He went to the stone, and the stone would not come until he would get water that would wet it. And he went to the water. He could not get the water then until he would get a deer that would swim it. He went to the deer, the deer would not come until he would get a hound that would chase it (?). He went to the hound, the hound would not come until he would get butter to put between its paws. He went to the butter and the butter would not come until he would get a mouse to scrape it.

A mouse that would scrape butter,
Butter in the hound's toes,
A hound that would chase a deer,
A deer that would swim water,
Water that would wet a stone,
A stone that would sharpen an axe,
An axe that would cut a stick,
A stick that would trounce Little Murchadh who ate my raspberries last night.

The mouse scraped the butter, and the butter went into the hound's toes, the hound chased the deer, the deer swam the water, the water wet the stone and the stone sharpened the axe and the axe cut the stick, and he got the stick then and he was flailing and beating Little Murchadh three nights and three days until the white geldings came out of Carn Capóg.

I used to know it better, I have forgotten.

TEXT 46

There was a man who said that he could recognise any flesh, it did not matter what type. Every type was set before him, hen meat, mutton, pork, even human flesh!

He identified what sort they all were but when the fox's flesh was set before him he could not figure out what it was.

'Oh,' he said, sitting back in the chair 'if the fox is shrewd' said he, 'he gets caught in the end.'

What had happened but he had won the wager, and he was only saying that into himself! He did not recognise the thing, 'if the fox is shrewd he gets caught in the end', was all a proverb.

TEXT 47

There was a lord long ago and this man, he had arrived from some other country, and he was seeking a site for a house. And the lord who was in Dublin at that time he would not give, that is what I heard anyhow, he would not give him any house site except out on the sea. He said that there was plenty of space there to build a house as he would not give it to him on the (dry) land. That was no good to the man. But he began thinking to himself and he reasoned that if he had a small amount of good old posts bound together and placed down until some sort of land was reached at the bottom. And he kept persevering, placing all types of stuff that he could find, gravel and all sorts, until he had made what resembled a site for a house. He built a house there and the house was built out on the sea. And then, bit by bit, he started to build out on the sea and finally he made the city of Dublin out of it and it was called Baile (Átha) Cliath.¹ The reason being that it was sitting on the sticks. A wickerwork do you see, a wickerwork of sticks.

TEXT 48

Whatever law came to Ireland long ago, it was decided that all the Norse would be expelled, do you know, and they were expelled too.

They were able to brew beer from heather and the English wanted to find out how to make this and there were only two Norse left in Ireland, a father and son. And by gorra, they found them and they were taken to whatever sort of barracks that existed and they were promised that they would be left alive were they to tell how the whiskey was manufactured.

Well it was the father who was sent up to him (the king) first. 'Well,' said the father, says he 'if you kill my son,' said he, 'I shall tell you it, how the beer is brewed.' And whether the son was hung or shot, I do not know what way they used to execute them at that time, do you see, but by gorra the son was killed anyhow and they then asked the father to tell.

'Well,' said the father, 'do the same thing with me now for I shall never tell it.'

And he did not tell. That is why it has never been found out how the beer was brewed from heather, and it was the best of stuff. Oh God save us that was a thousand years ago. And it has escaped the king of England or any other king there ever was to find out how it was brewed. They tried it out and they failed.

1. 'The Town of the Wickerwork', Cliath is equated with cliabh.

That is the livestock they had do you see, they had a hen, the hens of the heather, that is the moorhen, they had a dog, the red dog (the fox), and they had a cow the hare. And when the last of them, the old man, was banished out of Ireland he asked one request, and it appears that he got it, the amount of animals they had, do you see, in their own possession that they should exist in Ireland for ever, as long as they should live in it, as long as life should last, that they should keep possession. And they still have possession. The fox is there, the moorhen is there, the wild duck is there, the hare is there.

But those animals were big and strong at that time, do you know, they have become smaller, do you see, but what else could have befallen the poor things? Continually out on the hills and living outdoors winter and summer with no-one to look after them or anything, damn the bit.

TEXT 50

A woman said that she would take her choice, do you see, that it would not matter as long as she got into one of those three townlands, that she would be contented, that she would be satisfied.

The Hill of the Silver
The Mound of the Meal and the Fine Pasture of the Milk.

TEXT 51

There used to be great wakes long ago right enough. Well when one was young you would go almost anywhere to a wake and you would sit until morning and tricks and all sorts of things used to go on at those wakes - harmless enough tricks, to keep them awake until morning, do you see, anything that would keep them going.

It was almost solely tobacco at that time, there were no cigarettes, (just) clay pipes. And some of the young lads got to thinking that they would be able to smoke tobacco and the pipes used to sicken them on occasions as well and they would be in quite a state a few times, at least until they would recover.

O almost the fill of the house would sit until morning at that time. They would. And that is where you would hear the stories and riddles. That is a thing they would spend a lot of time at, posing riddles.

They had another game, 'pass the piece of pipe', they had a little piece of the stem of a pipe that they called the gulaí and perhaps there would be the row of the young people, both boys and girls, and I would walk around them. I would have the piece of the pipe stem with me and I would (make as if) I was putting it in your fist. Well maybe I would put nothing in your fist at all. I might go past three or four or maybe five until I would give the stem of the pipe to someone. Well the person you would give it to he would not let on, do you see, they knew what the game was. I would ask someone:

'Who has the piece of pipe?'

I had a leather belt, a little piece of light leather and you might say that she had the piece of pipe and I would say that she had not and you would have to hold your hand out until you would get three slaps of the leather strap. I would have to go over to her then and ask her. Well she did not know you know but she would blame someone else - so and so had the piece of pipe. I would say that he/she had not and she would get another three slaps and you might be slapping for a maybe half an hour before the piece of pipe could be located and they kept each other going like that at the wakes. Oh, it was terrific. There was no harm in it they used to keep themselves awake. The person (who had the piece of pipe) would finally be found and he would then have to get up and pass the piece of pipe around then. That was how it was, anyone who had it he would then have to pass it around again, do you see, and take the belt and start beating!

TEXT 52

A man called Domhnall an Chinn, Domhnall Ó Briollaín, made a prophecy. It was said that he found the book under his head when he awoke in the morning. He was born in the parish of Boylagh, that is the parish of Glenties and his father and mother died when he was a child and he was an orphan then and there was no-one to look after him and he had relatives in this parish and they took him with them.

When he grew up he was sent to school and the master was not able to put one word of learning into his head and Domhnall of the Head¹ (ie Intelligent Domhnall) was the nickname given to him then. And the craft that he had, was travelling around every day tending cattle and doing odd jobs around houses and things like that for his keep. And it was said that he went to bed this night and he found the book under his head. No-one was able to read the book but himself and everything that was to happen before the end of the world was in the book.

He was going across on a stepping stone over at the Reelin bridge, that is where the tavern is, he was crossing on the stepping stone there and there were two boys, two young boys on the other side of the river and when they got him in the middle of the stepping stone and they started to throw stones and they completely soaked him. And when he got to the other side of the river he turned around.

1. Domhnall an Chinn.

'Well boys,' said he, 'you have not got much sense,' he said. 'But you will be,' he said, 'in the place yet where you will learn sense. You will go to Scotland and there will be no work available and you will join the English army and you will be out to the East Indies and you will be eating rats.'

And that was true.

TEXT 53

A lot of the prophecy has arrived, do you see, it is 'in' as the man said, it has arrived to us.

It was Domhnall an Chinn who was making the prophecy, a man they called Domhnall an Chinn, I think that he was (called) Herron and I would say that he was Glenfinn originally. But the book that he had - he had no learning, he was never at school - he found the book one morning under his head when he awoke and no-one was ever able to read it but himself. It was all in Irish and there was not one line in it that he was not able to read.

But to start at its beginning, you know, there is nothing that has happened that he did not say would happen. The fool was to have boots and there was to be a bright wand¹ from house to house and the car was to run without a beast, the son was to (start) mocking his father, you would not be able to sell your beast without a green card. Well that has all arrived and what else did he say? When there would be a war they would be fighting in the air and in the water, and the old people long ago they were only poking fun at that. 'How could they fight in the air and in the water?' Well that also happened. And he said that the time was yet to come when it would not be possible to distinguish between summer and winter, except that the trees would go green, and that would be the only difference between summer and winter. Oh, there was much more than that, do you know, but that is a fair portion of it right enough.

There was a bridge to be on every puddle
 And boots to be on every fool
 And a bright wand to go from house to house.
 Combat in the air and in the water
 And the son to be mocking his father
 And not to be able to sell your cow
 Without a green card at the fair
 And that finally there would not be much difference Between summer and winter
 Except that the trees would become green.

That now is all that I know about the prophecy and a lot of that has now taken place.

1. Electricity.

a bridge on every puddle

.i. To cross by bridge, do you see, bogán¹ I would say that it was a small one (streamlet), if it were big he would have said 'on a river' a something like that, do you see. Every bogán in other words that everything would become much more convenient, do you see, that there would be a bridge over it - that you would not have to step over everything, that there would be a bridge over every piece of marshy ground you would not have to leap or step anywhere (every)thing would be very convenient.

They do not use the word bogán much now anyhow. They do not. It is even seldom that you hear anyone being called breallán either.

boots on every fool

A man of little reason, a man who would be wandering around, perhaps singing, lirting and drinking and everything, who would not be doing much work in anyway, that man would be called a breallán.

There was nothing like that at that time and he said that every fool would have boots. And of course everyone has boots now you know. They have. Indeed they have. O, nearly everthing he said has been fulfilled.

TEXT 54

A highway on every swamp, 2
A bridge on every streamlet,
Boots on every fool,
A great house on every hillock
And a bright wand running at the bottom of every hill.

TEXT 55

He made a prophecy you know, Colm Cille. Oh he wrote a book. He did. I never saw the book, but of what I have heard of it I think that he declared when he had made the forecast that half of it would not be fulfilled.

That is one person he cursed (the) reaper. Colm Cille, was going somewhere on a Sunday morning and he came across this man cutting hay. And he asked the man why was he working, working on Sunday. The man said that he was rearing a family and that times were hard for him and that he would like to earn a few shillings.

1. 'Quagmire, piece of marshy ground' acc to Dinn.
2. Alt puddle (?).

Colm Cille put his hand in his pocket and he gave him a few shillings and he asked him to go home. And Colm Cille was coming back that way in the afternoon and the man was working again. On Sunday afternoon he had continued working after Colm Cille had given him the money. And he left a curse on the reaper that no man would ever become rich working with a scythe.

And he was crossing over the river Finn, out there at the mouth of Loch Finn in Fintown out here and he was being pursued and he tramped on a salmon and the salmon was slippery and the salmon upended him into the water and he declared that a salmon would never go into the loch until there would be a bridge on this side of the loch and one never did go. And when the bridge was constructed over the loch the salmon started to go back into the loch again. They did.

And it is said that he left his footprint somewhere down around Termonn in a rock. He was being pursued and he leapt as far as this rock and it is said that he left his footprint in the rock.

I heard a man say that the hardship - the hunger - would begin at the hearthstone.

TEXT 56

That day, or St Brigid's Eve, was always specified and you would have to go off in the afternoon and cut some rushes somewhere with a syckle and make it into a little bunch and leave it outside the door. And towards supper time - it was not to be brought inside until the supper was being prepared - and the rushes would have to be brought in then and (one would have) to start making crosses, that is when the supper would be finished and everyone would have to make two or three crosses before going to bed and anyone who was able to make them had to make them, do you see. Well where there would be little ones, very little ones, they could not make them but they would have great fun anyhow (playing) through the rushes. They did.

Then, it used to be two days I think after St Brigid's Day, it was called Candlemas, the crosses used to be put up that day. The old ones would be taken, trailed down and they would be burned. Nothing else would be done with them except to burn them, do you see, they believed that you should not throw them out, they would all be burned.

That was not superstition merely a kind of honour, whatever type of saint Brigid was, do you see, it was in honour (of her).

TEXT 57

Always on St Brigid's Day people make crosses in memory of St Brigid. And a man will go out and he will cut a sheaf of rushes and he likes to have some white stuff mixed in to speckle the crosses. And the people who are inside they have the tea ready when he arrives with the rushes. And if there is anyone by the name of Brigid in the house she would bring in the rushes when they would arrive and if there is no-one (called Brigid) the man who is carrying the rushes will bring them in.

And whatever number of people are in the house they will go on their knees when he arrives at the door and he will shout at the door when he brings the rushes.

'Go on your knees,
and open your eyes,
and let Brigid in.'

He will say that three times and the people inside will go on their knees and say.

'Welcome, welcome, welcome.'

He will enter bringing the rushes and he will put them in under the table, where the tea would be placed and no-one will touch them until the tea is finished and then everyone will begin and they will make a couple of crosses. A cross will be made for every room in the house and for the kitchen and a lot of people make them for the out-houses for the cattle and sheep. And then on Candlemas, they will not be put up until that, they will be (lying) made up in a basket and the holy water will be sprinkled on them, someone in the house will sprinkle holy water on them and he will put them up one in every room and one in the car if there is a car. And there are some people who make little tiny crosses to put in their pockets to save them and the (holy) water will be sprinkled on them before they are put up. They will then be put up and they are blessed and sacred for a year and Brigid saves people from everything for a year.

TEXT 58

They do another thing, they leave out a piece of cloth on St Brigid's Eve before twelve o'clock so that Brigid may come and bless it. And if you sew a little piece of cloth on your clothing or on children's clothing - or put a little piece in your pocket, a little light piece - anyone wearing a piece of Brigid's mantle on his clothing will not be drowned, lost or burnt. They do that surely.

TEXT 59

On Palm Sunday there you would take a few of those small slender branches from chapel and you would get them blessed and you would then take them home and you would peel the skin of them. You could heat them in the fire, if you so wished and their skin would become soft. You could then make little rings and put them on the button of your coat. You could place a little ring on the button and it would remain there, or the button of your trousers or anything and it was supposed to bring you good luck as long as the ring would remain on any part of your apparel. Some of them would carry it in the small (breast) pocket do you see, in the little pocket, that was the type of garment (ie blazers) they wore. They would be put on rosary beads also. They are (from) pine trees, little branches about that size grow out from them, do you see, and there is a lovely smell of them when you would be making them. They smell of resin do you know.

TEXT 60

Long ago on St John's Eve they used to always begin to gather scrap wood and heather and everything they could find. And anything that needed to be burned, anything around the house which was to be burned or that was in your way all of it would go into the St John's Eve fire that night and it would all be burned, do you know. And every house used to have a fire in those days, a little bit out from the houses, it was very nice you would see a fire at every house.

Well there are a lot of houses which do not bother to light a fire now, do you see, but a lot of the old hands who are still alive they will always light a fire but the young people do not bother about it, they do not believe in those things now. Times are changing. They are.

A lot of people used to go to Tobar an Dúin,¹ it is near Letterkenny and there are a lot of sticks there which people left after them, they are thrust into the ground there. Well, they would just leave the stick behind them, they say they were cured from whatever ailed them. That's the way it was, some of them used to go every time in the year, they still go.

Q. Were you ever there?

I was there, I walked to it, oh that was a good while ago when I was at school. I believe that it is forty two miles (from here). We left here in the morning - myself and a brother of mine, he is dead now - at four o'clock in the morning. Oh we had gone a good bit when the people began to rise in the morning. There is a short-cut, do you know, but he didn't know anything about the short-cut and I didn't know anything about it anyhow for I was bare-footed a good bit of the way. The roads were not tarred or anything they only had gravel, and indeed you would have to walk in at the side.

1. The Doon Well - Ac Meanman describes this OCGC 191.

And out down there, do you know, men were out with horses, and it was in the month of May. Anyhow it was a very hot day I remember well men out ploughing with two horses, you wouldn't see many of the people around here ploughing at all, well the odd person, out (west) the Glen there the odd person would plough. The horses they were also good at working they were tidier than these new things now, the tractors.

The first night of the new year that is the night you should go, that's the main night on which people go and some of them sit up until it is late at night. That's the main night on which people go to it.

TEXT 62

I

I went on a visit to the Rosses that I might view the sky
Out to the west around the islands on a jaunt like a doe pursued by a hound
Every one around the harbour said when I chanced down by the quay
That it was easily recognised from my gloom that I was a man being pursued.

II

Oh I met this fire young girl - and even if I did, it was sharply she spoke
If you are a playboy I do not praise your trade
A mainlander was seen fleeing bootless yesterday
I consider that you are the young man being pursued.

III

I answered the maid without pride for the story affected me greatly
Oh cease your impertinence¹ for I am not a man of that sort
If you do not come over beside me and act in the same spirit as myself
I will rush before your nose out to the mainland in a leap.

IV

When we had fallen into melancholy and sadness I asked the young woman Where would I get a glass to drink that would lift this depression for me?
There is a little tavern at the edge of the road and he always keeps a drop
You go and rap the board and I shall settle the bill myself.

1. Substantive of beadaidh? Cf beadaidh 'mí-mhodhail, impertinent', Gaelic Words and Expressions from South Uist and Eriskay, J L Campbell (Ed), 1953.

V

When we had entered the tavern, oh I was timid enough sitting,
 In case the pursuers would arrive and the young woman be taken from me
 The liquor flowed freely, there was a little being drunk in the country
 But were I to drink O'Donells gallon it would be easy to settle my bill.

VI

When we had settled the bill the young woman asked me
 Where do you live or do you maintain a little hovel (at all)?
 Oh I reside a while in the tavern and I shall not save a single penny
 But spend the little I earn during the day on the sport of the night.

VII

If you are a man who indulges in drinking I would not advise you to propose to any woman.
 It ill becomes a man like you to become involved in the worries of life
 For us to set up home oh we would live in abject poverty for the rest of our lives.
 It is better for us to wait until we each of us amass some savings.

VIII

We are eternally waiting and a large part of our lives will be spent
 We are better off marrying young and we shall have help later on.
 I cannot praise her brilliance she has beguiled my heart
 There is no-one who would see the jewel who would not fall into sorrow at not having her
 I have yet to see her likes any highway or road I travel
 But if she happened in Ballinamore ...

TEXT 63

I

In my younger days when Tuathal owned me oh how he used to give me sport and fun
 He used to take me to fair, and I was always to the fore¹
 Oh he would bring me back again and spruce me up
 And often I, like a kid-goat, used to reside happily up in yonder pasture.

II

Alas he sold me to Campbell and dire (?) were my circumstances
 Oh he tied me to the old house with no roof with water seeping from below and above.
 Oh he swore he would not give me a bite to eat nor would he lose a penny's worth on me
 While I was subjected to the screeching of their pipes till they broke my heart with longing.

1. Alt. and I always used to win (race)?

III

When I woke up on Friday morning I was tethered beside the hornless cow Tied to a hook at the side of the house beside the cow!
 They congregated and cast the dice, and the country could have heard the din
 Some of them shouting and crying and Nicky sitting there singing.

IV

O Campbell were my case to be examined, you would not leave me exposed to the country¹
 When you were in the old house in spring I put a roof and shelter above you
 I drew sacks and bags, stones and house timber
 I ploughed the land in March and harrowed neatly after that.

V

My curse attend the two young boys who followed the young woman,
 For fear I might hear their conversation they put me into the drain.
 There was not a house of ill repute on the road that they did not order much drink in
 It did not matter who called the beer as the young woman had to pay.

VI

When I spent a while in the drain I thought that these were abysmal circumstances
 I looked all around me to see if I could see the two young men
 I went over the Moyle river and took the short-cut up by Glendowan
 And now I am in Burndale and my curse upon your side of the river.

(Verse supplied by Sp 11)

Around Hallowe'en when the hay became scarce, and with no means of getting any,
 You swore oh Campbell that you would not give me a berry - were he to see me dying
 He took his sharpest spade and a fine strong hammer in his hand
 And he viciously pounded my feet putting me in the throes of death.

TEXT 64

I

The great eagle rose out to gather the Easter portion
 And he gave the community a warning, for them to be on their guard
 That he wouldn't leave them one hen from Derry to Downpatrick
 To give the hawk a feast and by damn, it was not out of love!
 And we shall drink the health of the birds.

1. Alt. read ar láir ag an tír 'for a mare in the country' (?).

II

As I rose out this morning dressed in my spats
 Round the back of the townland with me down to the boundary ditch.
 I met Red Seonáí and I asked him for advice.
 He said 'Return home and do not spare your neighbour's goods!'
 And we shall drink the health of the birds.

III

The oldest hen of them rose out over the garden ditch
 'It's a pity the fox or the great eagle of the hooked talon did not eat me,
 When it was not part of the Shrovetide resolutions that I should have the liberty of the farmyard.
 To pick my little share everywhere I would find it.
 And I'll drink the health of the birds.'

IV

The white gull came round from the Tuathails
 Indeed, if she did, she was not often gloomy
 She would play the 'carol' as sweet as the cuckoos
 And would then drink a glass of beer as well as mac Uí Thuathaláin!
 And we shall drink the health of the birds.

V

The scald swallow (r. crow) came around with an invitation to the feast
 'May the King and I bless you' said she to the birds.
 'Unless you give me the fat one¹ of the intestines,
 I shall go to Urris like a beggar seeking alms.'
 And I shall drink the health of the birds.

VI

If you could see the rabbit and the mouse at their holes, oh!
 A nest for the wren suitable for the gander.
 The water-hen and the starling singing songs on turf-clamps.
 The fox playing music and the weasel (?) dancing.
 And I shall drink the health of the birds.

VII

Oh White Mánus Ó Maoileagáin would you make a marriage match with me?
 I am Seán 'ac Sírfín son of Áoilidín of the Calfs
 I have cows and sheep and good wealth for a wedding,
 And if you don't give me your daughter I would hit you with a clamp!
 And we shall drink the health of the birds.

VIII

When the drink had affected them, they went wild
 They didn't leave a sieve, a piece of tin, nor a pan,
 That they did not tear into a thousand pieces as a sign of disrespect for the wedding
 And we shall drink the health of the birds.

1. Alt. the fat end (?).

TEXT 65

The stag in the bog with a turf-spade cutting turf.
 The snipe spreading it and the plovers footing it.
 The thrushes piling it ...
 The robin making a castle in the name of King George.
 The ducks washing and the sea-gulls smoothing.
 The water-hen and the starling drawing water to the court.
 The stoat with a pen filling out its legal documents.
 And the mouse with a summons for the cat in its pocket.

TEXT 66

I

There is the tree in the garden upon which the yellow flower grows
 And when I place my hand upon it my heart nearly breaks.
 Oh I am an airy young tailor who went to make clothes in the house of the red(-haired) man
 And my heart took a fancy to the nicest fair woman in the land of Munster (?)
 O vein of my heart won't you escape with me from the red-haired man?

II

When I am up there I visit the County Meath.
 I hear the red-haired man being mentioned with the love of my heart.
 O peace I do not get, for I cannot get a night's sleep
 It is the red-haired man's wife who has made coal of me beside my heart.

III

When I am down there I am in a dark, hard prison.
 Bolts on my slender body and thousands of locks on top of that.
 That I might rise with that sweep as the sea-gull rises from the harbour,
 That I might stretch my bright side down beside the red-haired man's bride.

VI

Oh maid without blemish in whose heart the fine sheen is.
 Oh do you know anything which would prey on the red-haired man's mind?
 Oh it is a pity that we are not together on the edge of yonder wood
 The red-haired man stretched out in the ditch and a flagstone above him!

(For a treatment of this song see Éigse XVI, 187 f)

TEXT 67

I

When I rose up this morning at the dawning of the day
 I saw the guards approaching at Killdea's house
 There was a light on their cars shining in the sky.
 Oh and my curse upon the blackguards who stole my still last night.

II

They came stealthily without noise or din.
 And I did not hear them there nor did I notice them until they were in the hut.
 They confiscated their equipment and they utterly dismantled it
 Oh and my curse upon the blackguards who stole my still last night.

III

They forced poor Braighní to stand with his back to the gable of the house
 A gun was put to his head and a pistol to his heart.
 And had he flinched in his skin he would have been blown up into the sky.
 Oh and my curse upon the blackguards who stole my still last night.

IV

But the priests and bishops are threatening myself.
 Saying that I would sin were I to run a batch
 But I would not have stopped making spirits on the advice of clergymen
 Only for those blackguards who came and stole my still last night.

TEXT 68

I

On the green stubble of autumn oh darling were you unwell?
 Oh how nice your feet in shoes and how very nice your footstep.
 Oh your cheeks like the roses and your ringlet woven and thickly set
 O alas we are not marrying or on a ship's decks faring afar.

II

Oh this time last year I had neither tiredness nor longing.
 We had a cuckoo from County Derry and another from County Down.
 Oh God or Mary did not order us the fiddle we had or the harp¹
 But they ordered a gentle woman for us, she will help us drink our health.

III

Oh the boys of this place are changing and becoming formidable.
 The high-hatted ones are courting my brown maid
 But were the King of Spain to traverse the sea with his formidable fleet Oh I would press through grass and wilderness and I would be beside my brown maid.

1. Alt ... order us to have the fiddle or the harp.

TEXT 69

Do you hear me, oh scapular wearers?
 Do not neglect your case.
 How pitiful the person without a friend
 And he lying on death's bed.
 Oh poor person without sense,
 Do not lie to Mary.
 Do not eat meat on Wednesday,
 And do not complain of your sickness.¹
 Mary and her son were walking outdoors during the day.
 They met Blessed Simon (?) over from Rome.
 Mary reached to him the fine scapular of the gold trimmings out of her right hand.
 There is no-one who will wear my cloth as is fitting,
 Whose soul I shall not speak for in heaven (?)
 Oh Brightest Queen and Maid of Heaven,
 If you see me going astray,
 May you bring me to knowledge
 May you steer my soul to the Kingdom of Heaven towards Christ.

TEXT 70

I

The first joy the Virgin Mary got.
 How great was that joy.
 When she looked at her noble only Son.
 That He was born in that way.

Blessed your young only Son.
 Blessed Virgin Mary.
 Were you to say the seven joys and carry her apparel.
 You would have eternal life.

TEXT 71

I present my soul to you God,
I do not demand it of you.
I ask you Mary to bear witness
That I presented my soul to you God.
The four corners of my bed
(?) ... of the household of God
If I die God before morning
May the kingdom of God be my bed.

TEXT 72

Oh my most sacred Mary and mother of God
Oh (?) of the world your hand
Implore your child who painfully suffered the crucifixion to help and rescue me from the predicament I find myself in.
My loved one the child conceived in March.
My loved one the child born in the stable.
My loved one, Jesus, Mary's only son,
For protecting my soul at the hour of my death.

(I would not be able to go any further.)

BLESSINGS, MALEDICTIONS, PROVERBS, RHYMES, RIDDLES, ETC

1. May God bless the work.
2. May God prosper you.
3. May God and Mary prosper you.
4. God and Mary protect you.
5. May God save us.
6. May God not reproach thee for it.
7. May the household of God be all the bigger for his soul (ie May he go to heaven. Said for the soul of any dead person, although a Rannafast woman (pt.78) once told me that this was usually reserved for priests). cf. Ar Draoidin p.234
8. May you journey safely.
9. Long life to you (said to someone on completion of a song, piece of music, etc). See 15.
10. Oh God of Mercy!
11. Eternal Virgin!
12. May you burn on the pavestones of hell. (The person to whom this was addressed was very upset by it.)
13. May the walls of hell fall on you.
14. May you be at the devil's funeral wearing a red cap.
15. May that length of a year's sickness not be upon you. (.i. That was for singing the song do you see. They were wishing you that.)
16. Patience gets its reward. (Sp. 16 heard this from his mother's aunt but did not fully understand it.)
17. The day will come and (the) cow will shake her tail (ie there will be changes made).
18. You have to put up with hard and easy (times).
19. (People who are well off in life, the likes of TDs or ministers or any wealthy people, they have best of circumstances and food and poor people who have none of those things, you would say as a proverb): The refined pigs eat (the) husks but the unrefined pigs have to put up with it.
20. No-one knows where the other person's shoe is hurting him.
21. Sp. 20 had a version: Is fhearr greim an choinín ná dhá ghreim an chait 'The bite that the rabbit can take is better than two bites the cat would take' (ie a rabbit will eat more with one bite than a cat will with two). The version quoted in this instance was heard from Sp. 5, who saw it as meaning 'A piece of rabbit is worth more than two pieces of cat', further stating 'Ní thig leat cat a ithe ar chor ar bith', You cannot eat a cat at all.
22. When there were no cars or bicycles or anything at all like that, everybody walked and the horse and saddle was the rapid mode of transport they had and it was said: that it would be a bad ride that would not be better than any amount of walking.
23. It is enough to be poor without being profane. (Sp. 10 who heard this from an old beggar woman, took [truəL'i] as being derived from truaigh(e) 'pity' and stated: Ní bheadh sí ag déanamh truaighe dithe fhéin. 'She would not be pitying herself.'
24. To obtain the advice of the extravagant person free.
25. If you like me come and live with me (no-one knows the other person until they live with him/her).
26. Size does not measure (the worth of a man) but the hard metal.
27. Were the branch to grow as the tree there would not be a single crooked tree in the wood.

28. Every second the year the hare is female and male. (Sp. 6 said that no matter how often a couple would fall out there would always be a time when they would make up again. Sp. 1 stated that a good year may come and a bad year may come, while Sp. 2 thought that it meant that the hares would have offspring.)
29. Anything which is not done instantly (lit let cool down) will be neglected.
Alt.
Anything which is not acted upon promptly will have a bad result (?)
(Sp. 6 translated this 'Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today'. He glossed fadaíl 'rud a dtabhrann siad neglect air'. His mother, Sp. 5, was unsure of its meaning.)
30. A mouth is sweet when silent (it is best to say nothing than to say too much).
31. It is often a slow hound is happy (it is best not to rush, you would have better luck taking your time with everything, Sp. 5).
32. Inciting the dog yet restraining it.
33. Were a goat to be dressed in silk it is still a goat.
Alt.
Were you to put silk on a goat, it is still a goat.
(It does not matter what fanciful dress you place upon a man or woman, it is still the same person, Sp. 5.)
34. Far off hills are green and (even) if they are green they are not grassy.
35. It is better to have a good neighbour near at hand than far off hard-hatted gentry.
36. The nobleman's flagstones are slippery, Sp. 5. (When you would go to a beautiful grand mansion and you hungry you will get no tea from them. (But) go into a little thatched cottage beside it and they will make you tea immediately and these 'big bucks' are not going to give you tea or anything, you have to move off (empty handed), Sp. 6.)
37. Listen to the noise of the river and you will kill a trout, Sp. 6. (Sp. 5 equated this with no. 30.)
38. One beetle recognises another one.
39. The fox in sheep's clothing.
40. Crooked, straight, the road the highway is the short-cut.
41. A foot that travels gets something that a foot that rests does not.¹
42. As long as there is seed there will be harrowing, Sp. 6. (Anyone who would win a sum of money and spend it recklessly, Sp. 5.)
43. 'Nearly' did not sink in the mud but 'maybe' was lost (ie nearly is not enough).
44. There has never been anyone to taste food that would not taste death.
45. The people go off (ie die) but the hills remain.
46. It (death) cannot be kept at bay.
47. It is hard to kill a bad thing.
48. Repenting after death, your journey is wasted.
49. There are no pockets in the shroud.
50. If you desire to be praised, die.
If you desire to be criticised, marry.
51. Give the live man his food,
Let him eat it or leave it.

1. I have heard a more complete form from a woman from Taobh an Mhuilinn, near Fintown: 'Gheibh cos ar shiubhal rud nach bhfaghann cos 'na comhnuidhe mur bhfaghadh sé acht dealg fhéin.' 'A foot that travels gets something that a foot that rests does not should it only be a thorn.'

52. In the reign of Cormac mac Airt
Life was sweet (and) pleasant.
There were nine nuts to the cluster,
And nine clusters to the branch.
(See also Cr. Chon. 61 § 5; SML 123f.)
53. I smelt the aroma and I did not see the food,
But he who discriminates may he not see God.
54. Frost and snow and a great blustering wind.
The (length of the) life of the blackbird in the yew tree to the person who carries out night-time work.
(Sp. 10 stated that this was said by a preacher's wife.)
55. Clamorous your din on (the) table and short-lived is your fill.
I would not believe from the men of Ireland that your bottom is not your middle.
(Sp. 8, who heard this from his father, interpreted this rhyme as a riddle for whiskey. It would appear, however, to describe a vessel which despite its large appearance held a small volume of drink, cf Cr. Chon, p 46.)
56. Seán coopering, Eoin weaving, Diarmud thatching, Bilí cutting rushes, Conall on the hill, Brighdín sewing, Peggy washing and myself tending the cattle.
57. A soft soft (sod)¹ between two soft sods, a fairly large sod (?) and a soft sod.
58. A tender young boy sauntering with his fair-sized herd of cattle carrying the fair-fill of his fist of a tender stick from the wood.
59. '... so that they turned the crag into a bog and turned the bog into a crag.'
(Sp. 6 recalled this from a folktale where two characters were fighting, cf DIL sv bogán '... go ndeunadais bogán den chreagán 7 creagán don bhogán le neart a ngleic.') 60. It is February which will kill the sheep and March which will kill the people.
61. The first day of February, to come in like a lamb and out like a lion.
62. When the heron goes west
Rain comes from the west.
(It is going to rain from the west when the heron would go west.
If the heron goes east good weather is going to come, Sp 6.)
63. Do not praise or criticise the year until June has passed.
64. It is here and there.
It is in Connacht of the crosses.
It is on the grey bare flagstone
And Brian has it on his dinner.
Salt.
65. It is here and there.
It is in Connacht of the crosses.
It is on the flagstone of (?)
And it is in woods in their midst.
Mist.
66. What can a black hen do that a white hen cannot do?
A black hen can lay a white egg and the white hen cannot lay a black egg.

1. bog as a substantive.

67. Why did the cow look over the hill?
She could not look through it.
68. What is a herring worth when one side is eaten?
Oh, it is worth turning over.
69. The man who made time made plenty of it.
70. Cold water will burn a lazy man.

Table 1 (based on Palmer 77)

LABIAL CONSONANTS

[p] Qu. §358 Torr §87 FGT §144

Strongly aspirated plosive except when preceded by s. For typographical reasons sp- is represented [sp̥] e.g. [sp̥adər] spadar 'wet turf'.

[p] occurs initially where written p occurs before a, o, u e.g. [pɔndI] pandaí 'pan', [pɔL] poll 'hole', [pɔtəg] putóg 'intestine'. l or r may intervene [plɑ:i] pláigh 'plague', [prɔnu] pronnadh 'to present'.

It occurs medially and finally for written p in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [ʃɔpə ; ʃapə] siopa 'shop', [krɔp] cnap 'lump, large amount', [ɔmpər] iompar 'to carry', [kɔpI] cupaí 'cups'.

[p] results from devoiced [b] e.g. [Lu:pə] lúbtha 'bent'.

[p'] is the palatal form of [p] and occurs for written p in the vicinity of e and i. It can occur initially, medially or finally e.g. [p'atə] peata 'pet', [p'ɪɪn'] pisín 'kitten', [p'ɪ'è:ʃur] pléisiúr 'pleasure', [p'r'è:ətI] préataí 'potatoes', [k'ɪp'in'] cipín 'thin stick', [φ'ip'] fuiip 'whip'.

[p'] loses its aspiration after s e.g. [sp'ahlʔ] speal 'a scythe'.

In addition to [kə v'è:d] cá mhéad 'how much, many' one speaker had [kə p'e:d].

[b] Qu. §368 Torr §81 FGT §147

[b] is a voiced plosive corresponding to [p]. It occurs initially, medially and finally for written b in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [batə] bata 'stick', [blas ; blɔs] blas 'taste', [boxt] bocht 'poor', [bradən] bradán 'salmon', [boɲu] bunadh 'people', [abər] eabar 'mud', [t̥o̥b̥ər] tobar 'well', [t̥a:bl̥ə] tabla 'table', [Lu:bu] lúbadh 'to bend', [g̥o̥b̥] gob 'beak', [sk̥o̥ləb̥] scolb 'thatching pin'.

[b] results from eclipsed [p] e.g. [o̥n̥ə b̥o̥L] anna bpoll 'in a hole', [trasn̥ə n̥ə b̥ʷa:r'k'ə̃n] trasna na bpáirceann 'across the fields'.

[b'] Qu. §373 Torr §84 FGT §158

[b'] is the palatal form of [b] and the voiced sound corresponding to [p']. It occurs initially and medially where b occurs in the vicinity of e and i e.g. [b'e:ə̃l] béal 'mouth', [b'I[a] biseach 'improvement', [b'l'o̥ỹən] bleaghan 'to milk', [b'r'ak] breac 'trout', [r̥ib'ə̃] ribe 'strand of hair'.

I have no examples of [b'] in final position.

[b'] results from eclipsed [p'] e.g. [a b'ik̥u] dá bpiocadh 'picking them'.

[m] Qu. §289 Torr §117 FGT §150

A voiced nasal corresponding to [b], [m] occurs initially, medially and finally for m in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [mak] mac 'son', [mo̥L] moll 'heap', [mū:n'ú] múineadh 'good manners', [mra:] mná 'women', [am̥ədan] amadán 'fool', [t̥ərəman] tormán 'noise', [t'r'o̥ml̥a] triomlach 'drought', [kam] cam 'crooked', [o̥g̥əm] agam 'at me'.

[m] occurs after [s] e.g. [sm̥o̥g] smug 'mucus'.

[m] results from eclipsed [b] e.g. [o̥n̥ə mo̥ks̥ə v'ø̥g] anna mbocsa bheag 'in a little box', [kasan n̥ə mrahar'] Casán na mBráthair 'the Path of the Friars'.

The past tense of the verb líomhadh 'to sharpen was heard as [L'i:ə̃m] líomh.

[mh] Qu. §295 Torr §123 FGT §154

[mh] is a voiceless or breathed [m] e.g. [L̥mh̥ət [ə] lomfadh sé

'he would shear'.

[m'] Qu. §296 Torr §120 FGT §160

[m'] is a voiced nasal corresponding to [b']. It occurs initially, medially and finally for m in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [m'aL] meall 'calf of the leg', [ər m'lr'ə] ar mire 'mad', [kōm'əL't'] cuimilt 'rubbing', [Im'ə] ime gen. sg. of [Im'] im 'butter', [drim'] droim 'back'

[m'] occurs before e, i after initial s e.g. [sm'è:rhə] sméara 'berries'.

[m'] results from eclipsed [b'] e.g. [ə m'l'iənə] i mbliadhna 'this year', [kaL'a nə m'an] Cailleach na mBeann, a female ghost-figure.

Medial mh in the vicinity of e, i may sometimes yield [m'] e.g. [kīm'ad] , [kiv'ad] coimhead 'watch', [kīm'ia] [kiv'ia] coimhthigheach 'strange', Cf. Qu. §298, note also [d'i:m'as] dímeas 'disrespect' Sp.1 - [d'i:vōs] Torr §169.

As other scholars have noted imtheacht 'to go off', is pronounced [Im'aht].

[m'h] Qu. §299 Torr §125 FGT §162

[m'h] is a voiceless or breathed [m'] e.g. [L'è:m'hət] [ə] léimfeadh sé 'he would leap'.

[f] Qu. §309 Torr §170 FGT §163

[f] is a voiceless bilabial fricative and occurs initially and medially where f occurs in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [faʃʃIN'] fairsing 'plentiful', [flaih'ul'] flaitheamhail 'generous', [fɔ:d] fód 'sod', [frλ:χ], [frI:χ] fraoch 'heather', [kɔnəfa] confadhach 'crabbed', [Laftan] laftán 'a ledge', [g'aftə] geafta 'gate'.

[f] results from lenited [p] e.g. [sə fɔrtə] sa phortach 'in the bog', [sə flu:r] sa phlúr 'in the flour'.

[f] may sometimes result from ch in the vicinity of back vowels e.g. [fuI]; [φuI]; [χuI] chuidh 'went', [gəLəfər'], [gəLəhur'] Gallchobhair 'Gallagher', [bɔfəlan bʷI:] buachalán buidhe (Dinn.) 'rag-wort', (buafallan/buathfallan DIL). [f] also occurs in [L'afuər'] leathuair 'half an hour'.

[f] may interchange with [φ], which see. For f(e)oghlaim see [f'].

[φ] Qu. §201 Torr §164 Tory p.151

This sound, a voiceless [w] closely resembles and is interchangeable with [f]. 'It is frequently impossible to distinguish between w^1 and bilabial [f], as they are so closely related to one another in formation'. Qu. §309.

[φ] arises where -bh-, -mh- occur beside -th- (or -ch-) e.g. [dI:φə], [dI:fə] díobhtha 'off them', [L'i:φə], [L'i:fə] líomhtha 'sharpened', [drauφu(:)N't'ə] drochmhúinte 'ill-mannered'.

[f'] Qu. §317 Torr §173 FGT §166

[f'] is the palatal sound corresponding to [f] and occurs initially and finally for f in the vicinity of e and i e.g. [f'anən] feannán 'white coarse grass', [f'i:əɾ] fíor 'true', [f'l'ohu] fliuchadh 'wetting', [f'r'i:d'] fríd 'though', [af'r'ən] aifreann 'mass'. Note also [skaf't'ə] scaifte 'crowd'.

[f'] results from -thbh- in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [d'ɛf'r'ə] deithbhre 'haste'.

[f'] results from lenited [p'] e.g. [t'r'i: f'è:r'ə] trí phéire 'three pairs', [f'ik m'ə] phioc mé 'I picked'.

[f'] may interchange with final [v'] e.g. [if'], [iv'] uibh 'egg', [N'If'], [N'IV'] nimh 'poison'.

The verb 'to learn', usually is [f'^jɔ:ləm'] feoghlaim although one example of [fɔ:ləm'] foghlúim was heard.

Both [f] and [f'] = zero when lenited e.g. [əN'ɪN'ag] an fhuinneog 'the window', [əN'adag] an fheadóg 'the plover'.

[w] Qu. §194 Torr §160 FGT §175

[w] is a voiced fricative corresponding to [f]. It occurs initially for lenited m and b before a, o, u e.g. [sə wal'ə] sa bhaile 'at home', [wɔg m'ə l'om] bhog mé liom 'off I went', [ɔbər'wla:ɸər] obair bhláthmhar 'tidy work', [l'an'wradan] an-bhradán 'a large salmon', [sə wa:lə] sa mhála 'in the bag', [d'e:wrI:] deaghmhnaoi dat. sg. of deaghbhean 'beautiful woman'.

[w] occurs for eclipsed [f] e.g. [wíl'is ɔgəd] 'bhfuil a fhios agat? 'do you know?' [ə'wɔd] i bhfad 'long'.

[w] occurs in the prepositional pronouns [wuI] uaidh 'from him', [wuəfə] uabhtha 'from them'. It also occurs in the lenited forms of fuair e.g. [N'iwuər tu] ní fhuair tú 'you did not get'.

[w] can occur for medial bh, mh in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [arəwər] arbhar 'corn', [fN'iwən] sníomhann 'spins'.

See also Glides and [v].

[v'] Qu. §323 Torr §167 FGT §170

[v'] is the voiced sound corresponding to [f']. It occurs initially, medially and finally for lenited b and m in the vicinity of e and i e.g. [də v'an^h] do bhean 'your wife'¹, [v'I[ə [ə]] 'he improved', [ər'v'l'i: tu gə fɔ:l'] Ar bhligh tú go foill? 'Have you milked yet?' [v'r'I[ət [ə]] 'it would break', [də v'è:r] do mhéar 'your finger', [ku:g'v'i:l'ə] cúig mhíle 'five thousand', [I:v'in'] aoibhinn 'delightful', [kiv'r'ən] cuibhreann 'ploughed field', [d'ev'əs] deimheas 'shears', [N'IV'n'a], [N'IV'n'a] nimhneach 'poisonous, sore', [iv'] uibh 'egg', [N'IV'] nimh 'poison', (Cf.

1 N.B. TEXT 36 n.1.

[ʲfʲ], [NʲIʲfʲ] s.v. [fʲ]), dative plural [əvʲ] -aibh (alt. [u] s.v. Dative Plural).

[vʲ] occurs for eclipsed [fʲ] e.g. [a vʲekʲət [Ivʲ] dá bhfeic-eadh sibh 'were you to see', [ə vʲiənʲ] i bhfiadhain 'wild'.

[v]

This is a non-palatal variety of [vʲ]. It is of sporadic occurrence and has not been described in Quiggin. Ó Searcaigh (FGT §169) states: 'Ní chluintear é i nGaedhilg an Tuaiscirt taobh amuigh de Ghlinnibh Aontroma agus d' Oileán Reachrainn'. Ó Tuathail, however, described this 'non-palatal [v] (bh, mh)' in Tyrone (S. M. Luin. xxiii), and further remarked that 'Ó Searcaigh goes too far in saying that non -palatal [v] is not heard in Northern Irish outside of County Antrim'. Ó Tuathail substantiated this by quoting examples from Counties Down and Louth, more importantly he indicated that [v] was rare in his Tyrone informant's speech and that [w] and [v] were wont to interchange - this is also true for this area.¹

[v] in this area is interchangeable with, and occurs where one would normally expect [w] < non-palatal bh, mh, e.g. [vɫa:iχʲə] , [wɫa:iχʲə] bhláithche lenited gen. sg. of bláthach 'buttermilk', [fo:vər],[fʲo:wər] foghmhar 'autumn', [fʲiəvrəs], [fʲiəwrəs] fiabhras 'fever', [kra:v],[krā:u] cnámh 'bone', [riəv], [rʲ(ʲ)i:u] riamh 'ever'.

[v] may also occur, again sporadically, in final position for -(e)adh e.g. [Luəv] luadh 'mentioning', [dɔ:əv], [dɔ:u] dóghadh 'burning'.

[v] arises consistently (in the speech of some speakers) in the 1 Sommerfelt (Armagh Ir. §55) describes [v] and equates it with Munster [v] and the [w] of Torr and Glenties. The dialect of South Armagh also had palatal [vʲ].

genitive singular of teinidh 'fire', thus [t'In'əv (-N'-)] teineadh, alt. [t'In'ú (-N'-)].¹

For [N], [Nh], [L] and [Lh] see Nasals and Laterals. For [R], [r] and [rh] see Flaps.

[t] Qu. §378 Torr §99 FGT §186

[t] is a strongly aspirated plosive except when preceded by s and ch. [t] occurs initially, medially and finally for t in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [taru] tarbh 'bull', [to:n'] tóin 'bottom', [trI^x] traigh 'foot', [tqbəʃt'ə] tubaiste 'misfortune', [batə] bata 'stick', [kɔ:tə] cóta 'coat', [tu:ta] tútach 'unfortunate', [ɔxtan] uchtán 'armful', [f'aLta] fealltach 'treacherous', [kat] cat 'cat', [smɔt] smut 'sheep's snout', [mɔlt] molt 'wether', [bɔxt] bocht 'poor'.

[t] arises when t is prefixed to a, o, u and to s, sl, sn, and sr before a, o, u e.g. [ə tɑhər'] an t-athair 'the father', [ə tɔ:l] an t-ól 'the drink', [ə tũ:n] an t-uan 'the lamb', [sə tλ:l] sa tsaoghal 'in life', [tu:s ə tɪö:dan'] tús an tslaghdáin 'the start of the cold', [ta Ji kasu n trã:] Tá sí ag casadh an tsnátha 'She is winding the thread', [ə^lnɔn ə r' ə truhan] anonn ar an tsruthán 'over the stream'.

1 O'Rahilly devotes a chapter to final -adh (IDPP chapter viii). 'As far back as the thirteenth century dh lost its dental character, and became everywhere a guttural spirant (gh) or, rarely, a labial spirant (v)'. He further suggested that 'In Northern Irish -adh became first əv -uv and then (when non-palatal v had become w) u, which in Ulster may be shortened to -u'. IDPP 66. If this theory is correct, it provides an explanation of forms like [t'In'əv] teineadh, [Luəv] luadh etc. which would appear to have resisted the change of [v] → [w].

[t] results when [d] is devoiced e.g. [N'i sʲatIN'fə] ní stad-fainn-se 'I would not stop'.

Parasitic t.

In a number of words ending in -ch -l, -n and -s a parasitic t is added. If the consonant is preceded by a, o, u then dental [t] is added, if e, i precede then alveo-palatal [t'] results e.g. [k'anaht] ceannacht 'to buy', [tɔməLt] tamallt 'a while' - alt. [tɔməL] tamall, [sköL't'] scoilt 'split', [bʷin't'] baint 'to cut' (one example of [bʷin'h]),¹ [fɔrəst] furast 'easy', [ə'ri:t'] aríst 'again'. Note also [ra:t'] ráidht v's [ra:] radh 'saying'.

[d] Qu. §394 Torr §93 FGT §189

[d] is the voiced sound corresponding to [t]. [d] occurs initially, medially and finally for d in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [dɔL] dall 'blind', [dɔ:i] dóigh 'way', [d'i'in'] duisín 'dozen', [dlu:I] dlúith 'closely plaited', [drɔŋ] drong 'crowd', [fadə] fada 'long', [rɔ:da] ródach 'blood-letting', [pu:dər] púdar 'powder', [b'arad] bearád 'cap', [rɔd] rud 'thing'.

[d] results from eclipsed [t] e.g. [dɔg tu [In' dɔ:ə] An dtug tú sin dó? 'Did you give that to him?'

A number of 2 sg. pronominal forms of prepositions end in [d] e.g. [ɔgəd] agat 'at you', [rɔ:əd] romhat 'before you'.

Nuair 'when', is pronounced [dər'] by some speakers e.g. [dər' ə v'i [ə] Nuair a bhí sé ... 'when he was ...' Sp.2, [dər' ə v'e:n'[ə] Nuair a bheinn-sé ... 'when I would be ...' Sp.16 (both speakers were from the east of this area).

In the east of this area the days of the week often have [d] e.g. [də dɔ:nI] Dia Domhnaigh 'Sunday', Genfinn, yet [d'ə dɔ:nI] Croaghanarget. Sp.1, a native of Tangaveane usually had [d'ə], while his wife Sp.2, a native of Glenfinn usually had [də] forms. Quiggin (§404) points out that 'd'ar·di:n' "Thursday". O.Ir. dardoén has d' by analogy with d'a Lu:n' "Monday" & c.¹ The [də] forms in the eastern part of this area may have been influenced by the preposition de [də] 'off'.

The form deir 'says', is often pronounced [dèr'] in the east of this area (v's [d'èr'] in the West). See rádh.

Where the 2 sg. possessive pronoun do occurs before e, i [d] results e.g. [i'n de:dan] in d'éadan 'against you'. Quiggin (§404) recorded [d']. Ó Searcaigh's criticism of Quiggin (FGT §247) would seem unjustified as Wagner (G. Theil. §497) records 'd'ʒe:dan (d'ʒed-) d'éadan (your)'. The occurrence of [d] in this area would appear to be an important dialect difference between this area (and areas north of here) and south Donegal.

[s] Qu. §347 Torr §176 FGT §219

[s] occurs initially, medially and finally for s in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [sa:l'ə] sáile 'salt water', [soləs] solas 'light', [su:l'] súil 'eye', [skǽrə m'ə] scannruigh mé 'I took fright', [sLo:k] slabhac 'type of seaweed', [sNI:m'] snaidhm 'knot (in timber)', [smaL't'əNI] smaiceannaí 'puffs of pipe', [spɔ:rt] spórt 'fun', [stəd'ig'i] stadaigidh 'stop', [kasu] casadh 'twisting', [fɔstə] fosta 'also', [hu:SI] thúsaigh 'began', [dāusə] damhsa 'dance', [skɔnsə] sconnsa 'fence', [mahunəs] maitheamhnas 'forgiveness', [L'is] lios 'fairy-fort', [gɔs] gus 'vigour'.

Where sm, sp occur in initial position before e, i [s] results

1 Donlevy's Catechism (1742) has diardaoin deasgbhála 'Ascension Thursday'. DIL s.v. dardóin.

e.g. [sb'Id'ag] spideog 'robin', [sm'è:rhə] sméara 'berries', (cf. medially [ta[m'ə] taisme 'accident').

FLAPS

For [ř], [r̥] see Cacu minal Consonants.

[R] Qu. §266 Torr §228 FGT §§222, 234

This trilled [R] does not occur consistently and it may sporadically occur in initial position before back or front vowels e.g. [RÖd], [RÖd] rud 'thing', [RIN'], [RIN'] rinne past tense of déanamh 'to do'.

Sporadic occurrences of [R] in other positions include: [pōRta], [pōRta] portach 'bog', [törka], [törka] turcach 'turkey'.

[r] Qu. §269 Torr §230 FGT §225

When r occurs initially as the second consonant in a cluster e.g. br, cr, dr, fr, gr, pr, scr, tr, then [r] results before a, o, u e.g. [bradən] bradán 'salmon', [krɔ:] cró 'hut', [dr̥id'] druid 'close', [frɔk] froc 'overcoat', [gra:] grádh 'love', [prɔ:ʃt'ə] próiste 'summons', [skrahəni] scrathannaí 'sods', [tr̥id'] troid 'fight'.

While initial sr yields [šř], [š] initial tsr before a, o, u yields [tr] e.g. [ə tra:d'ag] an tsráideog 'the shakedown', [sə tro:n] sa tsrón 'on the nose', [sə truhan] sa tsruthán 'in the stream'.

Initial cn, gn, mn, tsn before a, o, u yield [r] e.g. [krɔk] cnoc 'hill', [grā:s] gnás 'custom', [mra:] mná 'women', [ər' ə tr̥a:] ar an tsnáth 'on the thread'.

Initial fhr before back and front vowels yields [r] e.g. [sə rλ:χ] sa fhraoch 'in the heather', [kɔs rihIr'] cos fhrithir 'a sore foot'.

[r] results medially and finally for r, rr in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [skarəw'ɪn't'] scaramhaint 'to part', [tarəman] tormán 'noise', [e:dröm] éadtrom 'light', [karɪə] carrfhiadh 'stag', [garu] garbh 'rough', [gə L'ɔ:r] go leor 'enough', [N'is a(:)r] níos fhearr 'better'.

[r] occurs medially (and finally, where the clusters arise) before [d'], [L'], [N'], [ʃt'] and [t'] e.g. [ʔrd'ə] airde 'height', [kɔ:rL'ə] comhairle 'advice', [tɔ:rn'a] tóirneach 'thunder', [fɔ:rʃt'ənə] fóirsteanach 'suitable', [kuərt'] cuairt 'visit'.

Non-palatal nrr is assimilated e.g. [skã:ru] scannrughadh 'to take fright'.

[r] can occur where [r'] is expected e.g. [ər'], [er'] ar 'on', alt. [ər] cf. 'r' is often depalatalized ...' Ros Goill p.2.

The tendency for cht to yield [rt] is by and large absent from this dialect, apart from some very occasional examples e.g. [ə'Nɔrt] anocht 'tonight', from a woman in Tievelough. A few examples were heard from other speakers, but these were extremely infrequent in the speech of these speakers e.g. [kɔstərNart] costarnacht 'barefoot' Sp.3.

[rh] Qu. §279 Torr §241 FGT §231

[rh] is a voiceless sound corresponding to [r] e.g. [kõrhə] curtha 'buried', [kõrhəm] comhthrom 'level', [a:rhɪ] athrughadh 'changing', [N'i horhət [ə] ní thabharfadh sé 'he would not give'.

[rh] occurs where [r] is expected in [sm'è:rhə] sméara 'berries'.

Written irt in intervocalic position may yield [rt'], nevertheless the following have been heard from Sp.1 [k'arhlin'] ceairtlín 'ball (of thread)', - [k'art'l'in'] Sps.3 and 10, [ə bə χ'arhə du ə ra:] a ba chirte domh a rádh 'I should have said', Sp.1.

[rh] may occur for [r'h] e.g. [kír'hi], [kírhi] cuirfidh 'will put'.

[r'] Qu. §282 Torr §241 FGT §277

[r'] may occur initially in the adverb [r'i:u] alt., [ri:u] riamh 'before'. As has been stated above initial re and ri yield [r].

[r'] occurs when preceded by initial [b'], [k'], [d'], [f'], [g'], [p'], [sɸ'], [ʃk'], [t'] e.g. [b'r'I[t'ə] briste 'broken', [k'r'Iχ'] crith 'shivering', [d'r'am] dream 'crowd', [f'r'i:d] fríd 'through', [g'r'iən] grian 'sun', [p'r'abedI] preabadaigh 'palpatating', [sɸ'r'è:t'ə] spréighte 'spread', [ʃk'r'əd] scread 'yell', [t'r'i:] trí 'three'.

Apart from when it occurs before palatal d, l, n, s, t, and after s, [r'] occurs medially and finally for r in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [d'ir'ə] Doire 'Derry', [kɔs nə kIr'k'ə] cos na circe 'the hen's leg', [d'ir'əf'ur] deirbhshiúr 'sister', [m'ir'ig'] meirg 'rust', [g'ir'Im'ə] goirme fem. gen. sg. of gorm 'blue', [i:r'i] éirghe 'rising', [ib'r'u] oibriughadh 'to work', [af'r'ən] aifreann 'mass', [g'ev'r'u] geimhreadh 'winter', [krɔk L'It'r'a] Cnoc Litreach pl. n. [k'ɔ:Ltar'] ceoltóir 'singer', [kír'p'] coirp 'bodies'.

[r'h] Qu. §288 Torr §250 FGT §282

[r'h] is the voiceless sound corresponding to [r'] examples include: [wir'hət [ə hu] mhuirbhfeadh sé thú 'he would kill you', [èr'hi] aithridhe 'repentance'.

1 Cf. [ʼanʼɣri:v] an-gh. Vocab. s.v. gníomh.

[r] in this work represents a slight palatalized [r] and is not to be confused with the symbol used by Quiggin (§276) and Sommerfelt (Torr §239) which appears as [r] in this work.

LATERALS AND CORRESPONDING NASALS

There are four varieties of voiced laterals and corresponding nasals in this dialect: dental [L], [N]; alveolar [l], [n]; alveo-palatal [L'], [N'] and alveo-palatal [l'], [n']. [L'] and [N'] are blade or laminal consonants while [l'] and [n'] are point or apical consonants. (Cf. Evans pp.47-52).

Although some Northern Donegal dialects have lost, or are in the process of losing [l'] and [n'],¹ these sounds still occur in this dialect but not wholly as described in the earlier works of Quiggin, Sommerfelt and Ó Searcaigh.

Initial l and n

It appears that up until the late nineteenth century and the early part of this century that alveolar [l] and [n] only occurred in initial position before a, o, u for lenited dental [L] and [N]. Quiggin (§218) observed that: 'In those cases where other consonants² are aspirated initially [l] takes the place of [L]. This only happens, however, in the speech of the older people. The younger folk make no distinction between [L] and [l] initially'. The same was true for initial n before a, o, u: 'With the older people [n] is the aspirated form of [N] e.g. mə nɔ:wɪd', "my enemy" ... nɔχt m'ə, "I stripped", ... ni:m' tuw, "you fastened" ...' (Qu. §245).

1 The sounds being replaced by [l], [n]; or [L'], [N'] cf. Ros Goill p.3 and Evans p.50 n.4.

Similarly [l'] and [n'], as Quiggin observed, occurred in initial position for lenited l and n before e, i : Thus: '[L'ienuw]', (Qu. §222) líonadh 'to fill'; '[f'í'ɔχ]' (Qu. §26) fliuch 'wet'; '[L'äuwin']' (Qu. §40) sleamhain 'slippery'; had the lenited forms: '[l'ien m'ə]' "I filled", ... [i:çə l'íχ] "a wet night",¹ ... [l'äuwnə tuw] "you slipped". (Qu. §230).

Quiggin recorded '[N'ad]' and '[N'iuw]' for nead 'nest' and sníomh 'spin', but '[t'r'i: n'ad]' and '[n'iuw m'ə]' for trí nead 'three nests', and shníomh mé 'I spun'.

The situation in this area at present is that [L] and [N] may occur initially before a, o, u for lenited and unlenited l and n, with only sporadic occurrences of [l] and [n] for lenited l and n e.g. [ər' L'ak L'ie Lɔm] ar leac liath lom 'on a bare grey flagstone', [Lu:pət [ə] lúbfadh sé] 'it would bend', [Luə[t'r'ahI] shluaistrechthái] 'would be shovelled', [Nɔχt [ə] nocht sé] 'he appeared', [ə nã:uφu] a shnámhfadh 'which would swim'.

Examples of [l] and [n] in initial position include: [lqsət [I[ə] lasadh sise] 'she used to light', [ə t'r'ɔmu mə lã:u] ag trio-mughadh mo lámh 'drying my hands', [f'ar də mə l'in'u] fear de mo shloinneadh 'a man of the same surname as myself', [nã:u [i]shnámh sí] 'she swam' [nI:m'n'ahI nə ku:pI] shnaidhmneochthái na cúplaí 'the beams would be joined'.

Laminal alveo-palatal [L'] and [N'] occur initially for lenited

1 'One may hear [sə L'əχlɔχ] "in the wet weather" but this is attributed to the younger generation'. Qu. §230.

and unlenited l and n before e, i, e.g. [i ə L'è:u] í a léigheamh 'to read it', [ə L'an ə v'an ɔ:g] a lean an bhean óg 'who followed the young woman', [mə L'i:əku suəs] mo shlíocadh suas 'my sprucing up', [ədər mə γɑ: L'IN'an] eadar mo dhá shlinneán 'between my two shoulder-blades', [də N'i:ən] do nighean 'your daughter'.

Apical alveo-palatal [l'] may yet be heard, and quite a number of examples of this were recorded (although many speakers varied between [l'] and [L']) e.g. [krɔ l'əh'in'] Cró Léithín pl. n., [mə l'abI] mo leabaidh 'my bed', (v's [mə L'abI]), [N'i l'Ik'ət [əd] ní leigfeadh siad 'they would not let', [l'aunə tu] shleamhnaigh tú 'you slipped', [l'ei tu] léigh tú 'you read', (v's [L'è: [ə] léigh sé 'he read'), [l'aihət [ə] fhleaignfeadh sé 'it would founder', (v's [L'aihət [ə] ; L'ei hət [ə]).

Some examples of apical alveo-palatal [n'] have also been heard e.g. [n'ihɪ iəd] nighthí iad 'they would be washed'.

This tendency to replace the lenited forms of initial l and n (i.e. [l],[n] before a, o, u; and [l'], [n'] before e, i) with unlenited forms [L], [N], [L'] and [N'] is one of the major developments in the phonology of this area, and other areas in Donegal.¹ Quiggin, Ó Searcaigh and Sommerfelt state that in their day signs of this development were evident among the younger generations. Three or four generations later their 'younger generation' have now become the older generations. The older people in this area have (with some exceptions) lost initial [l], [n], [l']² and [n'] - this being especially true in the east of this area.

1 Judging by the research carried out by Ó Dochartaigh the unlenited forms appear to be holding out fairly well at LASID pt.78 - see GDDI p.74f.

2 N.B. [l'ə] le 'with'.

Other developments, such as [N'] appearing for [n'] in non-initial position and the lesser tendency for [l'] to appear for final [L'], are dealt with below.

[L] Qu. §204 Torr §205 FGT §207

[L] a voiced dental lateral occurs initially for l before a, o, u e.g. [LQ:] lá 'day', [Lom] lom 'bare', [Lu:bu] lúbadh 'bending'.

Initial sl before a, o, u yields [sL] e.g. [sLat] slat 'a stick'. (For initial dl and t(s)l see [l]).

[L] occurs for medial and final ll in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [kaLan] callán 'noise', [pɔL] poll 'hole'.

[L] occurs before homorganic [s] and [t] e.g. [fɔLsə] fallsa 'lazy', [d'i:əLtə] díolta 'sold', (cf. [ji:ə m'ə] dhíol mé 'I sold').

When l occurs before n, or after d in the vicinity of a, o, u [L] results e.g. [ɔLə] olna gen. sg. olainn 'wool', [kɔLu] codladh 'sleep'.

[Lh] Qu. §213 Torr §219 FGT §212

[Lh] is the voiceless sound corresponding to [L] e.g. [fɔLhət] [i] phollfadh sí 'she would stab'.

[N] Qu. §234 Torr §127 FGT §192

[N], a voiced nasal dental similar in formation to [L], occurs initially for n before a, o, u e.g. [NI:] naoi 'nine', [NɔLIk'] Nodlaig 'Christmas', [NuLɔht] nuaidheacht 'news'.

Initial sn before a, o, u yields [sN] e.g. [sNɔg] snag 'hiccough'.

[N] occurs for eclipsed [d] or where a, o, u have been eclipsed e.g. [ə n'ir'ə] i nDoire 'in Derry', [ə kɔmu nə no:rɔn] ag cumadh na n-amhrán 'composing the songs', [b'ɾ'è nə nū:n] breith na n-uan

'lambing'.

[N] results where non-stressed particles which end in n such as an the definite article, an the interrogative pronoun, occur before a, o, u (or if the article precedes fha, fho, fhu) e.g. [nɔ:lhə tu] an ólfaidh tú 'will you drink?' [sən ð:wər] san fhoghmhar 'in the autumn'. [nəhən] in achan¹ 'in every'.

[N] usually results for non-palatal n preceded by atonic a e.g. [ə'noxt] anocht 'tonight'. [ə'nuəs] anuas 'down, from above'. (N.B. [ə'nɪf] anois 'now'). Cf. [ə'nɪn'ə] a'n-duine 'anyone' [ə'nɔkəl] a'n-fhocal 'a single word', [əhə'nɔ:nə] achan Domhnach 'every Sunday'.

The intensifying prefix an- 'very', has [N] before all vowels or fh followed by a vowel e.g. [ʼanʼɑ:rhu] an-athrughadh 'a big change', [ʼanʼè:səg] an-fhéasóg 'a large beard', [ʼanʼId'íl'] an-fhidil 'a great fiddle', [ʼanʼɔlpəg] an-ulpóg 'a very bad cold', - [an-] also results before [d], [t], [L], [N], [S].

Where the n of the article an is pronounced it usually occurs as [ən] before non-palatal d, l, n, s, t, and vowels a, o, u. The plural form of the article na is usually [nə], though [nə] may be heard.

[N] occurs medially and finally for nn in the vicinity of a, o, u e.g. [k'ANI] ceannuighthe 'bought', [gɔnə] gunna 'gun', [dɔn] donn 'brown'.

[N] occurs after [r] and [s] and before [d], [L], [S] and [t] e.g. [kərn 'y:l'ə] carn aoileach 'dung heap', [trəsnən] trasnán

1 Ó Searcaigh's explanation of this form achan (FGT §199) seems more plausible than Quiginn's (§241).

'cross-beam', [pʌndI] panndaí 'pan', [kʌnLʌ] connlach 'stubble', [ʌnsə] unnsa 'ounce', [d'a(:)Ntə] déanta 'made'.

[N] occurs in [[ʌnʲn'ə (-n'ə)] seanduine 'old man', cf. [ʲʌn 'dy:n'i] sean-daoiní 'old people'.

See also Initial l and n.

[Nh] Qu. §242 Torr §142 FGT §200

[Nh] is a voiceless sound corresponding to [N] and is usually found in verbal forms e.g. [hʌnhət ʃə] theannfadh sé 'he would tighten'.

Alveolar [l] occurs in the initial clusters bl, cl, dl, fl, gl, pl and t(s)l before a, o, u e.g. [blas] blas 'taste', [klũ:n'] cluain 'after-grass', [dlu:I] dlúith 'thick-plaited', [flaihu'] flaitheamhail 'generous', [glɔ:r] glór 'voice', [plu:r] plúr 'flour', [ə tlat] an tslat 'the stick'. If any of the first six of these clusters are lenited [l] still results.

[l] occurs medially and finally for non-palatal l e.g. [[ʌlan] sealán 'pine-ring', [ʌlpag] ulpóg 'heavy cold', [d'i:ə] díol 'selling'.

See also [L] and Initial l and n.

[lh] Qu. §220 Torr §221 FGT §217

[lh] the voiceless sound corresponding to [l] usually occurs in verbal forms e.g. [Nɔ:lhə tu] an ólfaidh tú? 'will you drink?'. Note also forms such as [ʃi:əlhən] síothlán 'sieve'.

[n] Qu. §243 Torr §130 FGT §201

[n] the nasal sound similar in formation to [l], occurs medially and finally for non-palatal n (See [N] for exceptions) e.g. [L'anən

[əð] leanann siad 'they follow', [bɔ̃nu] bunadh 'people', [o:ran] amhrán 'song', [Lɑ:n] lán 'full'.

Sp.10 had one example of [n] for non-palatal tsn-, [ə kasun t^əna:] ag casadh an tsnátha¹ 'twisting the thread', LASID q.222 cf., however, qs.233/5 [ə f̥k'u:ru (tɔ̃hərtu) n sna:] ag sciúradh (tochar-tadh) an snátha 'scouring (winding) the thread', Sp.10

See also Initial l and n.

[nh] Qu. §248 Torr §146 FGT §206

[nh], the voiceless sound corresponding to [n], can occur in verbal forms such as: [glanhə m'ə] glanfaidh mé 'I shall clean', [χanhət [IN'] chanfadh sinn 'we used to speak'.

[nh] also occurs in words such as [L'anhu] leathnughadh 'broadening'.

Laminal alveo-palatal laterals and nasals.

[L'] Qu. §221 Torr §212 FGT §260

Initial sl before e, i yields [[L']] e.g. [[L'a:n] sleaghán 'a turf-spade'.

[L'] appears medially and finally for ll in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [bʷiL'ə] buille 'blow', [mʷiL'] moill 'delay'. (Cf. [L'] ↔ [l']).

[L'] appears before [N'], [f], [t'] and after [N'], [f], [r] (in the vicinity of e, i) e.g. [[e: f̥k'IL'N'ə] sé scillnge 'six shillings', [m'IL'[an'] milseáin 'sweet things', [mʷiL't'] moilt 'wethers',

[L'h] Qu. §227 Torr §223 FGT §265

[L'h], the voiceless sound corresponding to [L'], occurs in verbal forms such as [v'IL'hət [ə] mhillfeadh sé 'he would destroy'.

[N'] Qu. §249 Torr §134 FGT §248

[N'] is the nasal sound similar in formation to [L']. It occurs initially for n before e, i e.g. [N'art] neart 'strength', [N'i:] ní 'thing'.

Initial sn before e, i yields [ʃN'] e.g. [ʃN'axtə] sneachta 'snow'.

The ghní- forms of the verb déanamh 'to do', usually have [N'] e.g. [N'i:] ghní 'does', [N'i:u] ghníodh 'used to do', although Sp.19 had [n'i:u] ghníodh.

[N'] appears for eclipsed [d'] e.g. [N'i:ᵀ|hə] an ndíolfá 'would you sell?', [ə 'N'e:] i ndéidh 'after'.

[N'] appears for eclipsed e, i, for non-palatal n preceded by atonic a, and for the article an and other particles before (fh)e, (fh)i e.g. [nə N'i:r'ahu] nach n-éireachadh 'which would not rise', [gə N'i:sət [ə] go n-íosfadh sé 'that he would eat', [ə 'N'i:s] aníos 'up, from below', [l'ɛʃ əN' əLə] leis an eallach 'with the cattle', [əg' əN' ɔlər] ag an iolar 'at the eagle', [l'ɛʃ əN' ar] leis an fhear 'with the man', [əN' e:ɔn] in éadan 'against'.

The article an may be heard as [əN'] before [d'] [L'] [t'], [ʃ] although [ən] is very often heard. When the prefix an- precedes these consonants [ən] often results e.g. [l'an'l'o:r] an-leabhar 'a great book'. When an- precedes (fh)e, (fh)i [ən] usually results e.g. [ˈɑnˈar] an-fhear 'a great man', [ˈɑnˈi:ʃəl] an-íseal 'very low'.

[N'] appears for medial and final nn in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [sL̪iN'ʉ] sloinneadh 'surname', [b'IN'] binn 'sweet'.

[N'] appears before [L'] [ʃ'], [t'] and after [ʃ] and [r] (preceded by i) e.g. [a:n'L'ag] áinnleog 'swallow', [fʷiN'ʃag] fuinneog 'ash', [bʷiN't'ə] bainte 'cut', [kʷN'a] cuisneach 'hoar-frost', [tɑ:rN'a] tóirneach 'thunder'.

I have one example of [N'] preceding [d'], [IN'd'ɪ'aht] intleacht 'intellect' Sp.10.

[N'] can appear for medial and final palatal ng e.g. [dɑʃˈʃN'ə ʃə] d'fhairsngigh sé 'it became plentiful' [ɑ:rɪN'] arraing 'pang'. See [ŋ'].

[n'] → [N'] Qu. §249 Torr §138 FGT §254

There is a widespread tendency for [N'] to appear for medial and final [n']. Somerfelt described this in Torr:

'The younger people tend to introduce [N'] instead of [n'] between vowels or finally after vowels. The difference between [n] and [N'] is not very great, [N'] being slightly palatized, so [N'] results from a desire to emphasize the palatal quality of the consonant. In some cases this [N'] has penetrated into the speech of the older people'. (Torr §138).

Great variation exists in this area and no definite rules can be drawn up. For gréine gen. sg. of grian 'sun', Sp.1 had [g'r'e:N'ə] while Sp.11 had [g'r'e:n'ə]. In coinín 'rabbit', I have only heard [N'] i.e. [kʷN'in] while in muineál 'neck', both [mʷiN'al] and [mʷiN'al] have been heard. The plural form daoiní 'people', always has [N'] i.e. [dI:n'i], [dy:n'i] but the singular occurs as [d̥iːn'ə], [d̥iːn'ə] duine 'person'. Sp.15, a native of Glenfinn who has spent over forty years in Belfast always had [d̥iːn'ə] duine and [ɛ̃n'əm'] ainm 'name' - these words are usually pronounced [d̥iːn'ə] and [ɛ̃n'əm'] in Tangaveane and the area to the west of this area: Teinidh 'fire', was pronounced [t'In'i] by Sps.1 and 10. In response to my English question 'the middle of the fire', Sps.1 and 3 (Tangaveane residents) answered [Lɔr nə t'In'ũ (t'In'əv)] lár na teineadh but Sp.10 (a Commeen resident) had [mɔːLɔh ən t'In'əf] mullach an teineadh (sic.) 'the top of the fire'. (Cf. LASID pt.83 q.540).

Although it seems that intervocalic [n'] is better preserved in the east of this area than in the west, [N'] for intervocalic [n'] is certainly not absent from the eastern area as the following from Sp.10 show: [b'əL̥iːn'ə] Bealtaine 'May', [k̥yːN'u] caoineadh 'crying', cf. [d̥iːn'ə] duine 'person', [ɛ̃n'əm'] ainm 'name', Sp.10.

The substitution of final [N'] for [n'] is not as common as the substitution of intervocalic [N'] for [n']. Nevertheless while móin 'turf', and bhain mé 'I cut', are normally pronounced [mɔːn'] and [w̥iːn' m'ə], the forms [mɔːN'] and [w̥iːN' m'ə] may also be heard - albeit occasionally.

[n'h] → [N'h]

Intervocalic [N'h] may occur for [n'h] e.g. [ə m̥w̥iːN'hər] a mbainfear 'which will be cut' Sp.10 cf. [ɛ̃n'hə] aithne 'knowledge', Sp.10 ([ɛ̃n'hə] Sp.3),

[L'] ↔ [l']

In final position [l'] and [L'] can alternate e.g. [p'IL'], [p'Il'] pill 'return', [gə fɔːL'], [gə fɔːl'] go fóill 'yet'. The substitution of [l'] for final [L'] appears to be more common than [L'] for final [l'] yet cf. [f̥w̥iːl'] [f̥w̥iːL'] fuil 'blood'.

I have heard [k_{ON}'L'ə] coinnle 'candles', from Sp.2 yet [k_{ON}'l'ə] from Sp.5.

The tendency for [l'] → [L'] is less common than [n'] → [N'] (cf. FGT §266 and Torr p.52 n.1).

[n] for [N] or [n']

For the present tense ending -ann Quiggin (§236) remarked: 'It may be noted that the enclitic ending of the present indicative is [-əN] with J.H. I have listened repeatedly and have only heard [əN] Craig writes pósan muid but he is unreliable for l and n sounds'. While it may not be doubted that Quiggin did hear [əN], his criticism of Craig may be ill-founded. Gallagher had an (and ann)¹ and Wagner heard both [-əN] and [əN] at LASID pt.83.² It has been my experience to hear [əN] and [əN].

The na forms of the article may occur as [Nə] or [nə]. The an forms of the article usually occur as [əN] before dentals and a, o, u - although [əN] may also result. [əN'] rarely occurs before [d'], [N'], [f] and [t'] and [əN] is usually heard e.g. [ɔrhIN' 'd'è:d'i] Ortha an Déididh 'the Toothache Charm', [fəN t'əχ] fán teach 'about the house'.

[N'h] Qu. §259 Torr §144 FGT §253

[N'h], the voiceless sound corresponding to [N'], occurs in verbal forms such as [hIN'hət [ə] sheinnfeadh sé 'he would play'.

[N'h] may also be heard in fáinne 'ring', [fə:N'hə], [fə:N'ə].

[l'] Qu. §228 Torr §215 FGT §266

[l'] occurs initially in the preposition [l'ə] le 'with' and its pronominal forms [l'om] liom 'with me', [l'at] leat 'with you', etc.

[l'] occurs medially and finally for non-palatal l e.g. [sa:l'ə] sáile 'salt water', [iv'l'ogI] aibhleogaí 'embers', [f'jɔ:l'] feoil 'meat', [ka'l'k'] cailc 'chalk', [ʃel'ig'] seilg 'to hunt'.

See Initial l and n, and [l'] ↔ [L'].

[n'] Qu. §260 Torr §139 FGT §254

[n'] is the nasal sound similar in formation to [l']. It occurs medially and finally for non-palatal n e.g. [m'i:n'u] miniughadh 'meaning', [d'in'ə], [dīn'ə] duine 'person', [k'ɔn ə'wa:n'] cionn amháin 'one'.

See Initial l and n, and [N'].

[n'h] Qu. §264 Torr §148 FGT §258

[n'h], the voiceless sound corresponding to [n'], occurs in verbal forms such as [bʷin'hə tu] bainfidh tú 'you will cut', and words such as [ɛn'hə] aithne 'knowledge', [f'l'In'haxtə] flichshne-achta 'sleet'.

See [n'h] → [N'h].

CACUMINAL CONSONANTS

[š] Qu. §273 Torr §186 FGT §233

Initial sr yields [šř] or [š]. This is true for sr before back and front vowels e.g. [šřa:d'], [ša:d'] sráid 'space round a house', [šraŋ] sreang 'chord', [šřian], [šian] srian 'bridle', [šřo:n], [šo:n] srón 'nose', [šřuhan], [šuhan] sruthán 'stream'.

Medial rs yields [řš]. This is true for rs in the vicinity of back and front vowels e.g. [g'řřša] giorsach 'girl', (geirrseach Dinn.) [třřša] tuirseach 'tired', (tursuigheadh 'was tired', past pass. S. Bán Ac Meanman). Where te follows rs, [r[ř'] results e.g. [fo:r[ř'əna] fóirsteanach 'suitable'.

Ar siubhal 'gone', can appear as [er [u:ə]] or [əř šu:l] cf. 'ar s'ubhal' Cr. Chon. p.25.

[ř]

[ř] may occur in initial sr-, before front and back vowels, although it may, as in other Donegal dialects, disappear thus [šřa:d'], [ša:d'] sráid 'space round a house'.

[ř] is heard for medial rs in the vicinity of back and front vowels e.g. [třřša] tuirseach 'tired'.

[ř], [r]

[ř] and [r] are reduced forms of [š] and [ř] e.g. [šřraŋ] sreang 'chord', alt., [řraŋ].

Verbs ending in -ir occurring before the pronouns of the third person may give rise to [r] and [ř] e.g. [fuər řə] fuair sé 'he got', alt. [fuər řə].¹

1 [ř] is a slightly retroflex form of [ř].

[t'] Qu. §387 Torr §102 FGT §235

[t'] occurs initially for t, tr, ts, tsl and tsn before e, i e.g. [t'axt] teacht 'coming', [t'r'i:] trí 'three', [ə t'amrag] an tseamróg 'the shamrock', [ər' ə t'l'a:n] ar an tsleaghán 'on the turf-spade' [aL't' ə t'r'axtə] Ailt an tSneachta pl. n.

[t'] occurs when t is prefixed to e, i e.g. [ə t'aLa] an t-eallach 'the cattle', [ə t'Im'] an t-im 'the butter'.

[t'] occurs medially and finally for t in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [kat'ə] caithte 'worn', [skaf't'ə] scaifte 'crowd', [m'IL't'ə] millte 'spoilt', [k'IN't'ə] cinnte 'surely', [a:t'] áit 'place', [N'is boxt'ə] níos boichte 'poorer', [skart'] scairt 'shout', [e:f't'] éist 'listen'.

[t'] results from a devoiced [d'] e.g. [γət'ət [ə] ghoidfeadh sé 'he would steal', [d'it'[ə] duit-se 'to you' - emphatic form of [d'd'] duit.

See also Prosthetic t s.v. [t].

[d'] Qu. §400 Torr §86 FGT §245

[d'] is the voiced sound similar in formation to [t'].

[d'] occurs initially for d, dl and dr before e, i e.g. [d'arku] dearcadh 'to look', [d'i:r'a] díreach 'straight', [d'l'i:] dlighidh gen. sg. of dligheadh 'law', [d'r'I[agI] dreiseogaí 'brambles'.

[d'] occurs for eclipsed [t'] e.g. [a d'Ig'ət [ə] Dá dtigeadh sé 'were he to come'.

[d'] occurs in verbal forms where d' occurs before e, i, fhe, fhi, fhre e.g. [d'ɛ:tʰ] d'éist 'listened', [d'iar] d'iarr 'asked', [d'anəhu] d'fheannóchadh 'would skin', [d'iafrət [əd] d'fhiafradh siad 'they used to ask', [d'r'ɔ̃ɔər'] d'fhreagair 'answered' (cf.

[ragər'] fhreagair 'answered').

[d'] occurs medially and finally for d in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [k'r'ed'am] creidim 'I suppose', [i'rd'ə] airde 'height', [t'r'ɔ̃ɔlad'] tríobláid 'trouble', [g'id'] goid 'stealing'.

For [d'] → [d], see [d].

[ʃ] Qu. §351 Torr §182 FGT §274

[ʃ] occurs initially for s, sc(r), sl, sn and st before e, i e.g. [ʃamrag] seamróg 'shamrock', [ʃi:əlhən] síothlán 'sieve', [ʃk'è:lə] sceála 'news', [ʃk'r'ad] scread 'scream', [ʃL'a:n] sleaghán
'turf-spade', [ʃN'axtə] sneachta 'snow', [ʃt'u:ru] stiúradh 'steering'
(For sm, sp see [s], for rs, sr see [ʃ]).

[ʃ] occurs medially and finally for s in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [k'I[an] ciseán 'small sewing basket', [tə[m'ə] taisme 'accident', [iʃk'ə] uisce 'water', [sluə[ʃ'ə] sluaiste gen. sg. of sluasaid
'shovel', [IN'[ahə m'ə] innseochaidh mé 'I shall tell', [kaʃL'an] caisleán 'castle', [a krɔ:v'ʃi] Ó Cnáimhsighe 'Bonmar'.

I have one example of [h'ʃət [əd] thuitfeadh siad 'they would fall'.

PALATO-VELAR CONSONANTS

[k'] Qu. §417 Torr §114 FGT §285

[k'] occurs initially for c, cl, cn, and cr before e, i e.g.
[k'anI] ceannuigh 'buy', [k'ta] ciotach 'awkward', [k'l'i:u] cliabh 'creel', [k'r'asʊ] cneasughadh 'cicatrize', [k'r'atə] creata 'rafter'.

[k'] loses its aspiration after [f] e.g. [k'u:ru] sciúradh 'bleaching', [t'k'ə] uisce 'water'.

[k'] occurs medially and finally for c in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [krak'ən] craiceann 'skin', [gɔb nə k'ɪr'k'ə] gob na circe 'the hen's beak', [ə ha[k'i] a thaiscidh 'dear, darling', [s'ik'] saic 'sacks', [sb'Iŋ'k'] spinnc 'rocky pinnacle', [kaɪ'k'] cailc 'chalk'.

[k'] results from devoiced [g'] e.g. [h'ik'a] thuigfeá 'you would understand'.

[k'] occurs for final ig in polysyllables such as [gɔ:l'ik'] (gE:-) Gaedhilg 'Irish', [nɔ:lik'] Nodlaig 'Christmas'.

[g'] Qu. §430 Torr §108 FGT §288

[g'], the voiced sound corresponding to [k'], occurs initially for g, gl, gn and gr before e, i e.g. [g'alɑ] gealach 'moon', [g'irtɑ] giortach 'short', [g'l'e:s b'ɔ:] gléas beo 'means of living', [g'r'i:u] gníomh 'deed', [g'r'e:sən] gréasán 'spider's web'.

[g'] occurs medially for g in the vicinity of e, i e.g. [L'Ig'an] sligeán 'shell', [ar'əg'əd] airgead 'money', [t'ig'v'al'] tuigbheáil 'to understand', [uəg'n'a (-n')] uaigneach 'lonely'.

[g'] occurs in the 2 pl. forms of the imperative [Im'Ig'i] imthigidh 'go', although forms [Id'i] may also occur - see p.249.

[g'] occurs for final palatal g in monosyllables e.g. [L'Ig'ə'mɑ hə] léig amach é 'let him out', [m'ɪr'Ig'] meirg 'rust', [ɔ:g'] óig masc. gen. sg. of óg 'young'. [g'] appears in [ig'] 'at' - written as ag in preference to aig.

[g'] occurs for eclipsed [k'] e.g. [ɑ ɣir'ə nə g'al] ó Dhoire chun na gCeall 'from Derry to Killybegs', [ə g'art] i gceart 'in order'.

Sp.3 had [uəg'ənI] uaigeannaí (normally uaigheannaí) 'graves'.

[x'] Qu. §340 Torr §194 FGT §297 ; [χ']

The reduction in friction in palato-velar [x'], is a feature of this and other Donegal dialects (cf. Qu. §328). I deal with the two sounds [x'] and [χ'] together - [χ'] being a reduced form of [x'] (cf. further [χ'] → [h'] → [h]). [χ'] is more commonly heard than [x'].

[χ'] occurs initially for ch before e, i e.g. [ə χ'ark] an chearc, [χ'i:r m'ə] chíor mé 'I combed'.

Initial shiu in siubhal may yield [χ'] e.g. [χ'u:l' m'ə] shiu-bhail mé 'I walked' (alt. [hu:l' m'ə]).

Initial thri may yield [χ'] e.g. [χ'r'omI [ə] thriomuigh sé 'it dried', cf. [hr'e:k' [ə] thréig sé 'he abandoned'.

[χ'] may occur medially for palatal ch, dhch, th, thch, thgh, ghf e.g. [d'i:χ'əLt] dícheallt 'utmost' (alt. [d'i:həLt]), [I:χ'ə] oidhche 'night', [bɔ:iχ'ə] bóitheach 'cow-shed', (alt. [bɔ:iha]), [d'ɔh 'wla:iχ'ə] deoch bhláithche 'a drink of buttermilk', [aiχ'ərə] aithghiorra 'short-cut' (alt. [aihərə]), [ɔɔ:iχ'ət [i] dhóighfeadh sí 'she would burn', cf. [ɔɔ:hi iəd] dhóighfí iad 'they would be burnt'.

[χ'], [x'] is sometimes heard in final position for ith and igh e.g. [mai^{x'}], [mai] maith 'good', [ər' b'i^{x'} (b'i)] ar bith 'at all', [trIχ'] traigh 'a foot', [dɔ:i^{x'}] dóigh 'way' - more usually [dɔ:i].

[j] Qu. §188 Torr §189 FGT §302

[j], the voiced sound corresponding to [χ'], occurs initially for dh and gh before i, e (l or r may intercede) e.g. [jiə nə trɔ:kír'ə] A Dhia na trócaire 'Oh God of Mercy', [dən je:] den ghé 'of the goose', [ə dɔ: jr'am] an dá dhream 'the two parties', [sə jI'an] sa ghleann 'in the glen'. dh' before e, i, fhe/i yields [j] e.g. [fuə m'ə suəs ə jɛ: [t'əht] Chuidh mé suas a dh'éisteacht 'I went up to listen', [ə goɪ' ə jɔmpər] ag goil a dh'iompar 'going to carry', [ə jè:m'] 'e dh'fheidhm 'needed'.

[j] may occasionally occur before e, i e.g. [m'i: ju:l' (u:l')] mí Iúil 'July', [ɛr' jɔglə (ɔglə)] ar eagla 'in case'.

[j] can occur for medial palatal dh, gh e.g. [dɔ:i^jən (dɔ:iən) [IN']] dóigheann sinn 'we burn', [L'akəhə tanɪjə] leacacha tanaidhe 'thin flagstones'.

Note also [daijən (daiən)] daingean 'firm', see [ŋ'].

See also Glides. For [jɪakə] ghlacfa 'you would take', see [ɣ].

[ŋ'] Qu. §305 Torr §154 FGT §292

[ŋ'], the nasal sound corresponding to [g'] occurs initially for eclipsed [g'] e.g. [nə ŋ'è:L'ən də wɪr'ə] nach ngéilleann do Mhuire 'who does not do homage to The Virgin Mary', [bɔnu nə ŋ'ɪ'antə] bunadh na nGleanntach 'the people of Glenties'.

[ŋ'] occurs medially and finally for ng, n before [k'] e.g. [dɔ:nə 'kɪŋ'k'ɪʃə] Domhnach Cingcise 'Pentecost Sunday', [aŋ'k'əltə] aingciallta 'obstinate', [f'ar əs ə rəŋ'k'] fear as an Fhrainc 'a man from France'.

[ŋ̃] can occur medially for palatal ng e.g. [L'ŋ'ə] loinge gen. sg. of long 'ship'. There is a tendency, however, for palatal -ng- to appear as -gh- e.g. [aŋ'əl] aingeal 'angel', alt. [tɔbər nə nãɪəl] Tobar na n-Aingeal 'The Well of the Angels', [daijən (daiən)] daingean 'firm'. Cf. [m'ɪ:] muing 'mane', although final palatal ng usually yields [N'], e.g. [har'ɪN'] tharraing 'pulled'. Ging 'wedge' was pronounced [g'ɪN'], yet cf. LASID map 162 for [g'ɪŋ'] at pt.83 (and other areas in sth. Donegal). Medial palatal ng may also yield [N'] which see.

VELAR CONSONANTS

[k] Qu. §409 Torr §111 FGT §306

[k], a voiceless velar plosive, occurs initially for non-palatal

c e.g. [kət] cat 'cat', [kō:rL'ə] comhairle 'advice', [kuərtu] cuar-tughadh 'to search', [kl^ɔI:] claidhe 'dyke', [krɔk] cnoc 'hill', [kr'ɪN'] crainn 'trees'.

Non-palatal sc yields [sk] e.g. [skɔnsə] sconnsa 'fence', [kaskərt'] cascairt 'to thaw'.

[k] occurs medially and finally for non-palatal c e.g. [p'aku] peacadh 'sin', [bɔlkənɪ] balcannaí 'heavy showers', [d'arku] dearcadh 'to look', [truəkantə] truaghcánta 'pitiful', [mak] mac 'son', [ɔlk] olc 'bad', [pɔŋk] panc 'livestock enclosure', [k'ark] cearc 'hen'.

[k] occurs for devoiced [g] e.g. [tɔkə] tugtha 'given'.

A parasitic [k] occurs in [ʃanəhəsk] seanchasc 'inquiry'.

[g] Qu. §424 Torr §105 FGT §308

[g], the voiced sound corresponding to [k], occurs initially for non-palatal g e.g. [gɔN] gann 'scarce', [gɔd'] goid 'stealing', [gɔs] gus 'vigour', [glas] glas 'green', [grā:s] gnás 'habit', [gru^{bwɪ}:] gruth buidhe 'beestings'.

[g] occurs medially and finally for non-palatal [g] e.g. [bagərt'] bagairt 'threatening', [mərəgu] margadh 'market', [ɔglə] eagla 'fear', [bɔg] bog 'soft', [d'aləg] dealg 'thorn', [d'arəg] dearg 'red'.

[g] results from eclipsed [k] e.g. [ə lɔmu nə ɔl:ra] ag lomadh na gcaorach 'shearing the sheep'.

For [g] from medial dh, gh e.g. [karəgəs] Carghas 'Lent', cf. Qu. §429. For medial non-palatal g → [ɣ] see [ɣ].

[ɣ] Qu. §336 Torr §198 FGT §319

[ɣ] a voiced velar fricative occurs for initial non-palatal dh gh before a, o, u e.g. [fuə ʃi ə ɣāusə] Chuidh sí a dhamhsa 'She began to dance', [ɣɔrtə m'ə] ghortuigh mé 'I hurt', [dən ɣu:nə] den ghúna 'of the dress'.

Lenited [dr] yields [ɣr] e.g. [ɣrīt'ət̪] dhruidfeadh sé 'he would close'.

Lenited [gl], [gr] may yield [ɣl] [ɣr] e.g. [ɣlak m'ə] ghlac mé 'I took', [ə rən ə ɣru 'bʷɪ:] ag rann an ghruth buidhe 'dividing the beestings', [ʲanɣrã:s] sean-ghnás 'an old custom'. - The friction of [ɣ] may be reduced or disappear e.g. [bə ɣra: (ʲra: ; ra:) l'om] Ba ghnáthach liom 'I used to', [ɣlaka (ʲlaka ; laka] ghlacfá 'you would take'. (I have an example of [jlaka]).

dh' before a, o, u yields [ɣ] e.g. [k'e:d b'ɪ'ien' ə ɣl:] céad bliadhain 'e dh'aois' 'a hundred years old'. [ə ɡol' ə ɣɔbər'] ag goil a dh'obair 'going to work'.

In certain words medial non-palatal g and gh yield [ɣ] e.g. [sagert] alt. [sɔɣert] sagart 'priest', [f'r'ɔɣər] alt. [f'r'agər] freagar 'answer', [t'au'ɪa] alt. [t'aula] teaghlach 'household', [b'ɪ'ɔɣən] bleaghan 'to milk', [m'ɔɣər] meaghar 'sporting (lambs)' < DIL medor.

In monosyllables ending in non-palatal dh [ɣ] may sometimes be heard e.g. [ər' f'auɣ (f'au)] ar feadh 'during', [ə kuertu f'ɪ'auɣ] ag cuartughadh fliodh 'searching for chickweed'.

In compounds based on droch-, ró- etc. words beginning in non-palatal d and g yield [ɣ] e.g. [ˈdɾoˈɣoːi] droch-dhóigh 'a bad way', [ˈrɔˈɣarəhɑ] ró-dhorcha 'too dark', [ˈanˈɣoːəɾ] an-ghabhar 'a great goat'.

Medial non-palatal ng may occasionally yield [ɣ] e.g. [t'əŋə (t'əɣə) 'və:n'] Teanga Mheadóin 'Tangaveane. Dún na nGall 'Donegal', has been heard as [du(:)n nə 'ŋɑL] and [du(:)nə 'ɣɑL]. Cf. palatal ng → gh s.v. [j].

[ŋ] Qu. §301 Torr §150 FGT §311

[ŋ], the nasal sound corresponding to [g], occurs initially for eclipsed [g] e.g. [b'ed'ir' gə ŋlanhət [ə] B'fhéidir go nglanfadh sé. 'Maybe it (weather) will clear up'.

[ŋ] occurs medially for non-palatal ng e.g. [t'əŋI] teangaidh 'tongue'. There is a tendency for [ɣ] to arise (see [ɣ]).

In response to LASID q.39 'we tie', Sp.1 had [k'əŋlən [IN']] and Sp.3 [k'əŋlən m'wīd']. Sp.10, however, had [k'ɛ:l mīd'] - cf. 1 pl. [k'ɛ: 'ləmīd'] Sp.10. This represents [ŋ] → [ɣ] → [ɛ:] thus *ceaghal muid.¹

[ŋ] occurs medially and finally for n before [k] e.g. [frəŋka] Francach 'French', [pəŋk], [pəŋkə] panc(a) 'enclosure'.

[ŋ] occurs for final non-palatal ng in monosyllables e.g. [Lŋŋ] long 'ship'.

[x], [χ] Qu. §328 Torr §202 FGT §315

[x] and [χ] are discussed together, the former (and less commonly heard) having more friction than the latter. [χ] may further be replaced by [h]² or disappear completely in final position in words of more than one syllable ending in ach.³

[χ] occurs initially for ch before a, o, u e.g. [χəmhət [ə] chamfadh sé 'it would bend', [də χõ:rL'ə] do chomhairle 'your advice', [χõd'i [ə] chuidigh sé 'he helped'. Note also [χl'ĩn'hət [ə] chluinfeadh sé 'he would hear', [ər' ə χrõk] ar an chnoc 'on the hill', [mɛ

1 For -eagha- → [ɛ: ; ɛ:] cf. [L'è:u] leaghadh 'melting'.

2 Cf. 'There is a system of velar and guttural spirants ... [j] being a real spirant. But [χ] is on the way of being confused with [h]'. Torr p.189.

3 Cf. LASID maps 2, 9, 23, 31, 36, 41, 52, 53, 80, 83, 171, 173, 214, 219, 228 (N.B.), 233 (269), 300.

χrI:] mo chroidhe 'my heart'.

[χ] usually occurs initially for non-palatal thr e.g. [rahət [ə ə χröd'] Rachadh sé a throid 'He would be easily provoked to fight'.
— cf. [hröd' [ə] throid sé 'he fought'.

[χ] may occur medially for non-palatal ch, although [h] more often results e.g. [[əχran] [[ahran] seachrán 'straying'. [χ] is fairly well preserved in stressed cht e.g. [bəxtə] bachta 'turf-bank'.

[χ] occurs finally for final ch in monosyllables or contracted disyllables e.g. [Lχ] loch 'lake', also [Lχh], [frλ:χ] fraoch 'heather', [fo:χ] fathach 'giant' - cf. [t'ax əN əhI] teach an fhat-haigh 'the giant's house'.

See also [f].

GLOTTAL CONSONANTS

[h] Qu. §174 Torr §253 FGT §324 IDPP 206f.

[h] occurs initially for h in English borrowing such as [hatə] hata 'hat', [həLə] halla 'hall', and for h prefixed to words beginning in a vowel e.g. [gə hə:wil'] go hádhghail 'luckily', [rö:i l'ə hIm'əht] réidh le himtheacht 'ready to leave' (cf. le s.v. Prepositions).

[h] occurs initially for sh, th before a vowel (see [χ'] for exceptions) e.g. [də hīp'ar] do shuipeár 'your supper', [hök [ə rE:r'] shioc sé aréir 'it froze last night'. [hontə [ə hart] thionntuigh sé thart 'he turned around', [N'i hīg'əm] ní thuigim 'I do not understand'.

[h] occurs in words such as [he:n' ; hi:n'] f(h)éin 'self', [hobər' gə d'It'in'] fhóbair¹ go dtuitfinn 'I almost fell'.

1 'do fóbair gu ndernaínd dermad ... I nearly forgot'. IGT iii ex. 411 DIL s.v. fúabair.

Verbs beginning in a vowel have h in the past passive e.g. [hIN' [u du:N'ə] hinnseadh dúinne 'we were told' (cf. 'Do hinniseadh leo an lásaoin' Knott 51 v.5). Note also [hu:ru] dubhradh 'was said' (see rádh).

The compound preposition fá dtaobh de 'about, concerning', may occasionally be pronounced [hɑ dλ: də], more usually [fa (ɑ) dλ: də].

In déanamh 'to do', and rádh 'to say', some of the tenses and moods begin in [N'] nd- in the interrogative, yet [h] in the negative e.g. [N'í hanhə [ə] ní dhéanfaidh sé 'he will not do', [N'í hanhət [ə] ní dhéanfadh sé 'he would not do', [N'í han [ə] ní dhéan sé 'he does not do', [N'í herhə [ə] ní dhéarfadh sé 'he will not say', [N'í hərə [ə] ní dheir sé 'he does not say'.

[h] can occur initially in place of [χ] e.g. [huI], [χuI] chuaidh 'went' - alt. [fuI], [hɑ] [χɑ] cha neg. particle.

Medial [χ] has been to a large extent replaced by [h] e.g. [brahan] brachán 'porridge', [rohə [ə] rachaidh sé 'he will go'. See [χ].

Verbs ending in aith e.g. [kaiχ'] caith 'throw', [kraiχ'] craith 'shake', usually have verbal nouns in -atha- thus [kohu] cathamh 'to throw', [krohu] crathadh 'to shake'. (Cf. 'In Mod. Ir. non-initial palatal ch and th are usually pronounced alike either as h or ch; when the sound is h the neighbouring palatal vowels are broadened'. O'Rahilly Sc. G. St. III 12).

[h] may appear for medial [χ'] e.g. [draiχ'ed], [draihəd] droic-head 'bridge', [f'iχ'ə], [f'ihe] fiche 'twenty'. See also [h'].

The f-future and conditional is almost entirely pronounced as [h] e.g. [d'i:ə|hə m'ə] díolfaidh mé 'I shall sell', [skərə [ə] scarfaidh sé 'he will part', [v'ərət [ə] bhéarfadh sé 'he would give', [ho:kət [ə] thógfadh sé 'he would lift'.

While final unstressed ach yields mostly [ɑ], if the following word begins in a vowel [h] may be heard e.g. [kaL'a] cailleach 'old woman', [kaL'a^h ɔləbnI] cailleach Albanaigh 'an old Protestant woman', cf. [smai hə warul'] Is maith an bharamhail! 'I should think so!'

[h] is heard in the genitive singular or nominative plural of words such as [fa:χ] fathach 'giant', [t'aχ əN əhI] teach an fhathaigh 'the giant's house', [b'a:χ] beathach 'horse', [b'əhI] beathaigh 'horses'.

[h] or [h?]

In monosyllables ending in a short vowel, or in monosyllables with a short vowel ending in l, n, r the pausa form may be followed by [h?] or [h]. [?] denotes a kind of glottal stop (Torr §450) or rather a 'gestossene silbe' Stockman and Wagner Lochlann III 196 n.1 e.g. [ba^h] ba 'cows', [m'ah] meath 'decay', [sb'alh? ; sb'alh] speal 'scythe', [f'wīl'h ; f'wīl'h?] fuil 'blood', [b'anh] bean 'woman', [k'In'h ; k'In'h?] scian¹ 'knife', [f'arh ; f'arh?] fear 'a man', [dar'h] dair 'an oak'.

Note also [du^h] [duh?] domh 'to me', [du^h duh?] dubh 'black', [gə t'uh] go tiugh 'fast'.

[h']

[h'] is used to denote a sound midway between glottal [h] and palato-velar [χ'] e.g. [f'ihə ; f'ih'ə ; f'iχ'ə] fiche 'twenty'. Cf. 'I bhfocal mar mihid' mithid is deacair a rádh go minic cé acu [h] nó [χ'] a bhíos ann'. FGT §325.

The above table (based on that used by Palmer p.410) shows the main vowels in this dialect. The symbols are those used by Wagner (LASID vol. 1 p.xxiii). The symbol : after a vowel indicates that it is long, half-length is indicated by [·] and [˘] above a vowel indicates a reduced form.

Evans (p.14) remarked: 'The short vowels are of slightly longer duration than their Received Pronunciation English counterparts'. I have found this for front and back vowels, while the central or mixed vowels tend to be of shorter duration. Cf. 'Sílím gur ró-ghairid a bíos na guthaithe meadhóin (mixed vowels) uilig. I n-amanna bíonn siad an-ghoirid ar fad'. (G. Theil. §266).

FRONT VOWELS

The i vowels, [i], [I], [i̇]

[i] is more fronted than [I] but an area of fairly extensive overlap does exist, and [I] may interchange with [i̇] cf. 'The line between [i] and [i̇] is not very clearly defined'. Qu. §108.

[i] Qu. §108 Torr §1 FGT §72

[i] can occur between palatal consonants for stressed i e.g.

[f'iχ'ə] fiche 'twenty', [b'in'] binn 'sweet', alt. [b'IN'].

[i] occurs for unstressed i e.g. [kal'in'] cailín 'girl'. [i] also occurs in [dI:n'i] daoíní 'people', and the gen. sg. of áit 'place'. [maran a:t'i] /^{móran áiti} 'a lot of room'.

[i] occurs for unstress -igh, idh etc. e.g. [kɔN'i] coinnigh 'keep', [t'IN'i] teinidh 'fire'.

[i] occurs occasionally where [ə] is normally heard or expected e.g. [dIhi], [dIhə] dithe 'to her', [ən v''itaL't'i] an bhíotáilte 'spirits', [g'ir'Im'i ; g'ir'əm'ə] goirme fem. gen. sg. of gorm 'blue'. See also Verbal Adjective for [ə] v's [i]/[I].

[I] Qu. §125 Torr §6 FGT §79

Unstressed aigh, aidh etc. yield [I] e.g. [χ'ANI] cheannaigh 'bought', pausa form, [k'ANI] ceannuighthe 'bought', [t'əŋI] teangaidh 'tongue'.

[I] occurs for unstressed aí e.g. [f'w'IN'əŋI] fuinneogaí 'windows'.

[I] results from ei in the vicinity of a nasal consonant e.g. [m'I[ə (m'i[ə])] mise 'me' < messe, [t'IN'i] teinidh 'fire', [g'r'Im'] greim 'bite'. (IDPP 194f.). [I] may result from ei when d precedes e.g. [d'I[əht] deiseacht 'niceness', [d'Ir' ; d'er'] deir 'says'.

[ɪ] can occur for i e.g. [m'ɪn'ik'] minic 'often', [b'ɪn'] alt. [b'ɪn'] binn 'sweet'.

[i̯] Qu. §96 Torr §30 FGT §86

[i̯] is a central vowel which can, in addition to interchanging with [ɪ], [i̯], interchange with [ə], [ö] and [ɔ].

[i̯] occurs for io e.g. [L'is] lios 'fairy-fort', [g'itə] giota 'a piece'.

[i̯] can occur for ai, oi and ui e.g. [b'wɪn't'] baint 'cut', [d'ir'ə] Doire 'Derry', [t'ig'əm] tuigim 'I understand'.

See also [a].

[i:] Qu. §116 Torr §3 FGT §75

[i:] occurs for stressed í, ío e.g. [t'i:r'] tír 'country', [f'i:r'ɪn'ə] fírinne 'truth', [d'i:θ] díol 'selling'.

Typical of Donegal dialects éir ghe 'rising', is pronounced [i:r'i].

In this area fhéin 'self', is very often pronounced [hi:n'] Cf. 'Cluinntear [hi:n'] i n-áit [hɛ:n'] féin i nGleann Fhinne'. FGT §78.

[ɪ:] Qu. §125 Torr §7 FGT §81

[ɪ:] occurs for stressed aídh(e), oidh(e), uigh(e) etc. e.g. [kɪɪ:, kɪ^əɪ:] claidhe 'dyke', [krɪ:] croidhe 'heart', [lɪ:, l^əɪ:] luighe 'to lie down'.

Stressed oighe uidhe may yield [ɪ:] or [ɪ:^ə] e.g. [tɪ:] toighe gen. sg. of teach 'house', yet [go: ə^l[t'a h^əɔn tɪ:^ə] Gabh isteach chun toighe 'Come (go) into the house'. [b'wɪ:] buidhe 'yellow', [nə f'ɪr' wɪ:^ə] na fir bhuidhe 'the Orangemen'.

aoi may yield [ɪ:], [ɣ:] or [λ:] e.g. [kɪ:n'u (-n'-)], [ky:n'u], [kλ:n'u] caoineadh 'crying'. The same is true for ao e.g. [sɪ:l], [sy:l], [sλ:l] saoghal 'life'.

See [λ:] and [y:].

The e-vowels.

Quiggin and Sommerfelt found great variation between unrounded front half-close [e] and unrounded front half-open [ɛ]. Before dealing with these sounds the comments of these two scholars ought to be borne in mind:

'This ε may arise from various sources and interchanges with e. Individual speakers differ very considerably in the employment of e-sounds and hard and fast rules cannot be established. Indeed it is characteristic of Donegal-Irish that most of the short vowels can vary within considerable limits, the on- and off-glides of the neighbouring consonants being so to speak of greater importance for the listener than exactness of vowel timbre. Finck makes no attempt to distinguish between the various e-sounds but it seems to me advisable to attempt to differentiate the Donegal varieties'.

Qu. §81

'it will be necessary to distinguish between three e-sounds. The limits, however, are not sharply defined and there is considerable uncertainty in the use of these vowels, as in the case for all vowels in Donegal. The same individual may often be heard using ε and è, è and e in the same words'.

Torr §8

The various e-vowels occur in the transcriptions in this work although no rigid rules can be drawn up and [è(:)] appears extremely frequently cf. Palmer 234 'in a vocalic system with three degrees of opening the intermediate vowel /e/ will tend to station itself at the acoustic middle point between low /a/ and high /i/.'

[ɛ] Qu. §81 Torr §21 FGT §63

[ɛ] often occurs for ei e.g. [d'ɛv'əs] deimheas 'shears', alt. [d'ɛv'əs], [ɛt'agI] eiteogaí 'wings'.

[ɛ], [ɛ̀] may interchange with [a] e.g. [an'əm' (n')], [ɛn'əm'], [ɛn'əm'] ainm 'name'.

[e] Qu. §87 Torr §9 FGT §68

[e] does not occur with any consistency and interchanges with [ɛ̀] e.g. [t'eh?], [t'èh?] te 'hot'.

[ɛ̀]

[ɛ̀], to my ear, occurs for and interchanges with [ɛ] and [e] above. It lies midway between [ɛ] and [e].

[ɛ:] Qu. §86 Torr §23 FGT §65

[ɛ:] may appear for stressed éi e.g. [ɛ:[t'ah] éisteacht 'listening'. Very often [ɛ̀:] may also appear e.g. [ɛ̀:[t'ah].

[e:] Qu. §92 Torr §12 FGT §71

[e:] may appear for stressed éa e.g. [k'e:əd] céad 'hundred', [ɛ̀:] may also appear [k'è:əd].

[ɛ̀:]

[ɛ̀:] occurs for and alternates with [ɛ:] and [e:] above.

[E:] Qu. §95 Torr §34 FGT §59

[E:] is a retracted e-sound and occurs for stressed ae e.g. [LE:] lae gen. sg. of lá 'day', [tE:] tae 'tea'.

[E:] occurs for stressed ré- e.g. [rE:wag] riabhóg/réabhog 'lark', [ə¹rE:r'] aréir 'last night'.

[E:] can result from [ö:] e.g. [L^ö:r], [LE:r] ladhar 'toe', see [ö:].

[E:] may result from ao e.g. [E:nwək] aonmhac 'only son', [su¹krE:u] subh craobh 'raspberry', [E:nə], [I:nə], [λ:nə] aonach 'fair'.

See [ö:] and [λ:].

[E] occurs in [LEhə] laethe 'days'.

Front vowels [è] and [a]

[a] Torr §74 FGT §46

[a] occurs for stressed ea and unstressed eá e.g. [k'art] ceart 'correct', [t'aχ] teach 'house', [p'atə] peata 'pet', [kəl'an] coileán 'pet'.

In certain words historic éa has yielded eá e.g. [d'a(:)nu] déanamh (often deánamh in Donegal). This is reduced in [m'w'ín'a] muinéal/muineál 'neck', [k'iv'ad] coimhead 'watch' < coimhéad.

[a] can occur for io, eo e.g. [b'a¹ə¹ər], [b'í¹ə¹ər] biolar 'cress', [l'apə], [l'opə] siopa 'shop', [Im'ahə [ə] imtheochaidh sé 'he will leave'.

[a] may appear for oi e.g. [saL'ju] soillsiughadh 'to shine'.

[a] occurs in unstressed each(t) e.g. [d'í:r'a] díreach 'straight', [Im'ah¹t] imtheacht 'to leave'.

[a] and [ɑ] may interchange e.g. [ə t'asəl], [ə t'asəl] an t-asal 'the donkey', [abər], [ɑbər] eabar/abar 'peat-clay'.

Stressed ai and unstressed ái may yield [a] e.g. [tā] tais 'damp', [b'r'aLan'] brealláin 'fools', [kaL'an'] caisleáin 'castles', see [è].

[ɛ̃] Qu. §74 Torr §26 FGT §54 IDPP 198

[ɛ̃] may be regarded as an allophone of [a], and lies midway between [a] and [ɛ]. Quiggin did not distinguish between [a] and [a], both appearing as [a] in his work. He did, however, use æ¹ for stressed ai and unstressed ái.

[ɛ̃] occurs, especially in the east of this area, for initial ai e.g. [ɛ̃r'əg'əd], [ar'əg'əd] airgead 'money', [ɛ̃r'ə], [ar'ə] aire 'heed', [ɛ̃n'hə], [a¹n'hə] aithne 'knowledge'.

[ɛ̃] has been heard in [fəlsɛ̃r'] fallsóir 'a lazy person'.

[ɛ:]

[ɛ:] has been heard in [ɛ:l'in' (-L'-)] éilín (< áilín?) 'a litter, brood'.

[ɛ:] may interchange with [ɛ:] e.g. [ɛ:tʰ], [ɛ:tʰ] éist 'listen'.

[a:] FGT §50

[a:] occurs for stressed eá, éa > eá, e.g. [[a:n] Seán 'John', [kə'd'e: tə l'ə 'd'a:nu] Caidé atá le déanamh? 'What's to be done?' - stressed form.

[a:] occurs in contracted forms such as: [[L'a:n] sleaghán 'turf-spade', [b'a:χ] beathach 'horse', [t'anə (t'ayə) 'v'a:n'] Teanga Mheadhóin 'Tangaveane'.

[a:] occurs for stressed ái e.g. [na:r'ə] náire 'shame', [k'ON ə'wa:n'] cionn amháin 'one'.

BACK VOWELS

[a] Qu. §2 Torr §6 FGT §2

[a] occurs for stressed a and unstressed á e.g. [mak] mac 'son', [bradan] bradán 'salmon'.

á before th may appear as [a] e.g. [mahər'] máthair 'mother'.

[a] occurs for stressed o and unstressed ó in a number of words (cf. IDPP 192) e.g. [kasan] casán 'path' < cosán, [kaL] call/coll 'hazel', [bas], [bɔs] bos 'palm of the hand', [kɔs], [kas] cos 'foot'. The termination -óg is usually [ag] e.g. [bantag] banntóg 'a large heavy stick', [f'anaɔ] feannóg 'scald-crow'. [ɔg], [ɔg] and rarely [ɔg] may also be heard.¹ [χ'anahət] [ə] cheannóchadh sé 'he would buy', [t'ɔnta] tionntódh 'to turn'.²

móran 'many', is pronounced [maran] cf. LASID map 100.

See also [a], [ɔ], [ɔ].

[a:] Qu. §15 Torr §71 FGT §8

[a:] occurs for stressed á e.g. [La:] lá 'day', [ma:|I] málaí 'bags'. (For á in máthair see [a]).

Fathach 'giant', occurs as [fa:χ] in the nominative cf. [t'aχ ən ahI] teach an fhathaigh 'the giant's house'.

Stressed a before dhbh, dhm yields [a:] e.g. [a:wər] adhbhar 'cause, reason', [a:məd] adhmad 'wood'.

1 For this termination, see LASID maps 21, 49, 58, 133, 134, 151, 185, 186, 210, 211 and 217.

2 tionntódh/tionntádh/tionntúdh IGT.

[ɑ:] may occur for stressed ó e.g. [tɑ:rn'ə] tóirneach 'thunder'.

[ɑ:] occurs in [skɑ:ru] scannrughadh 'to take fright'.

[ɔ]¹ Qu. §22 Torr §63 FGT §11

[ɔ] may occur for stressed o e.g. [dɔhər] dochar 'harm', [gɔrəm] gorm 'blue'.

[ɔ] can appear for stressed a in the following [Lɔsət (Lɔ-) [i] lasadh sí 'she used to light', [tɔlu], [talu] talamh 'ground'.

acu 'at them', has been recorded [ɔku ; ɔku ; aku].

[ɔ] may appear for oi e.g. [kɔr'k'ə] coirce 'corn', [hɔfi] thoisigh 'began'.

[ɔ] appears for eo e.g. [[ɔ] seo 'this', [d'ɔ wla:iχ'ə] deoch bhláithche 'a drink of buttermilk'.

See also [ɑ].

[ɔ:] Qu. §28 Torr §66 FGT §14

[ɔ:] occurs for stressed ó, except when flanked by nasals, or in tóg (see [o:]), or in tóirneach (see [ɑ:]) e.g. [krɔ:] cró 'hut', [rɔ:ᵀpə] rópa 'rope'.

[ɔ:] occurs in eo < eó e.g. [k'ɔ:ə] ceo 'mist', [d'ɔ:rə] deora 'tears'.

[ɔ:] occurs in [tɔ:ru], [tɔ:rhu] torramh 'funeral'.

[o] Qu. §36 Torr §57

[o] is rarely heard, but is heard regularly in rabh e.g. [N'i ro [ə wad] Ní rabh sé i bhfad 'He was not long'.

1 [ɔ] v's [ɔ] Qu. §23 states: 'hard and fast rules cannot be established'. Cf. Torr §43. Hamilton (Tory p.120) states that [ɔ] is found where 'o' is written, unless followed by b, d, g, l, m, n'.

In a rhyme, Sp.2 pronounced moch 'early', as [moχ].

[o] occurs in [mohu] mothughadh 'to hear, feel', alt., [moχtal'] mothachtáil.

[o] results from shortened [o:] e.g. [dorhə tu [In' dɔ:] An dtabharfaidh tú sin do? 'Will you give him that?', [N'í ho:rhI] Ní thabharfaidh! 'I shall not!'

[o] is heard in the genitive singular of [bo:iχ'a] bóitheach 'byre', e.g. [ə glanu ə'ma ə wohI] ag glanadh amach an bhóithigh 'cleaning out the byre'.

[o:] Qu. §37 Torr §58 FGT §18

[o:] occurs for stressed ó, ói, eói in the vicinity of nasals e.g. [mo:r] mór 'big', [bro:n] brón 'sorrow', [mo:n'] móin 'turf'. [N'o:n'in'] neoinín 'daisy'.

[o:] occurs in the verb [to:gal'] tógáil 'to lift'.

[f̥o:] may occur for obh, odh, ogh, omh e.g. [do:rχu] dobharchú 'mystical beast',¹ [bo:ə^r] bodhar 'deaf', [N'í o:nhu] Ní fhoghnfadh 'It would not suit' (pausa), [f̥õ:wər] foghmhar 'autumn'.

In domhan 'world' I have only heard [d̥õ:ən] in this area although in conversation with Wagner's informant for pt.82 [d̥äuən] was heard. Cf. Qu. §40, Torr §93.

[o:] occurs in [o:ran] amhrán 'song', [L'o:gə] leoga 'indeed'.

Sp.5 sometimes had [õ:], [õ:] for úin e.g. [mõ:n'u] múineadh 'manners', [gl̥õ:n'ə] glúine 'knees'.

1 No longer understood as 'otter'.

[u] Qu. §41 Torr §44 FGT §31

[u] occurs for final stressed u or u followed by gh, th e.g. [ə'N'u^h] indiu 'today', [gu^h] guth 'voice', [du^h] dubh 'black', [sruhan] sruthán 'stream'.

[u] occurs in unstressed (e)adh¹, (e)amh, (i)ughadh e.g. [b'r'I[u] briseadh 'breaking', [ʃasu] seasamh 'standing', [kr'IN'u] cruinniughadh 'gathering'.

[u] occurs for unstressed ú e.g. [gasur], [gasər] gasúr 'boy', although [u:] may also be heard e.g. [gasu:r]; [galu:n], [galun] galún 'gallon'.

[u] occurs in -albh, -anbh, -arbh e.g. [balu] balbh 'dumb', [L'anu] leanbh 'child', [maru] marbh 'dead'.

[u] can occur in final mhail, mhar e.g. [barul'] alt., [bar'il'] baramhail 'opinion', [g'r'anur] alt., [g'r'anər] greannmhar 'curious'.

[u] occurs in [du^h] domh 'to me'.

[u] is heard for -abh (depalatalized -aibh) e.g. [ər nə moLu] ar na mallabh 'lately', Sp.11.

[u:] Qu. §44 Torr §47 FGT §37

[u:] occurs for stressed ú, úi e.g. [su:gan] súgán 'straw rope', [bru:d'] brúid 'brute'. (Cf. [o:]).

[u:] occurs from u before bh, gh, mh in words such as [[u:^ə] siubhal 'walking', [u:dər] ughdar 'author', [kū:dI] cumhduighthe 'covered'.

[u:] occurs for monophthongised ua e.g. [ū:n] uan 'lamb', (IDPP 193).

CENTRAL VOWELS

It will be convenient to deal with the short central vowels before dealing with the long vowels [λ:], [γ:] and [ö:], which are undergoing change in the Gaelic dialects of Donegal. For [ɪ] see FRONT VOWELS under i-vowels.

1 See [v].

When dealing with the short central vowels Wagner's statement regarding the phonemic system of Irish should be borne in mind:

'The pausa form of a given word has little reality. Each word has a number of phonemically irrelevant forms. Apart from this general feature, it is well known to students of Irish that it is the vowels which present difficulties when trying to transcribe a word or sentence. The reason for this is that the phonemic system of Irish is based on the consonants - opposition of velar and palatalized consonants - rather than on vowels, which latter show great variety, not only in the speech of each community, but also in the speech of each individual. On the other hand, consonants are fairly stable and, therefore, easier to define. Slight changes of consonant often result in misinterpretation, while the vowels have a wider phonetic radius. Free interchange of central vowels (i̇, ȯ, ö̇, E, I), all very close to the "irrational" vowel [ə], is a common feature in Irish dialects, and is often the despair of the phonetician who tries to define them exactly.' (LASID vol. i, p.xxii)

[ə] Qu. §128 Torr §37 FGT §94

Ó Searcaigh uses the vowel [e] (FGT §98) to represent unstressed a. This symbol has been ignored to a large extent in the various descriptions of Donegal dialects - although reference is made to the divergence of this central vowel [ə]. '[ə] is unrounded central ranging from half-close with a marked [i] quality to a lowered half-open position approaching [a] from which it is frequently difficult to distinguish when in unstressed final syllables'. Evans p.7. (See also Torr §37, G.Theil. §§88, 160). In this area [ə] often has a distinctive a-quality especially in the unstressed pronouns mé, sé, é. When reading the phonetic transcriptions in this work the wide range of this vowel should be borne in mind.

[ə] occurs for unstressed a, ea e.g. [ɑ:məd] adhmad 'wood', [mɑ:lə] mála 'bag', [bʷiːn'ən] baineann 'female'.

[ə] occurs for final unstressed e e.g. [m'IL't'ə] millte 'destroyed', [k'IN't'ə] cinnte 'surely', (alt. [k'IN't'i] see [i]).

[ə] occurs for atonic a e.g. [ə'NON] anonn 'over', [ə'NUəs] anuas 'from above', [ə'ri:t'] aríst 'again'. [ə] also occurs in unstressed particles [də] de/do 'of, to'.

[ə] occurs in verbal forms for -(e)adh, -(a)igh when followed by pronouns e.g. [rahət [ə] rachadh sé 'he would go', [χ'anə m'ə] cheannuigh mé 'I bought' [χr'iːn'ə t'ú] chruinnigh tú 'you gathered'.

[ə] is heard as an epinthetic vowel e.g. [ɔləbnI] Albanaigh 'Protestants', [k'aləgu] cealgadh 'to humour a child', [bɔrəb] borb 'uncouth', [mərəgu] margadh 'market', [mɔrəχu] Murchadh 'Murchadh', [d'arəməd] dearmad 'forget', [gə d'arəfə] go dearbhtha 'surely', [ən'əm' ; an'əm'] ainm 'name'. (See Qu. §138).

[^ə], a reduced form [ə], may be heard in overlong éa, ó, ío before non-palatal consonants, or for final stressed ó e.g. [p'r'e:^ətI] préataí 'potatoes', [rɔ:əpI] rópaí 'ropes', [ji:^ə | m'ə] dhíol mé 'I sold', [k'ɔ:^ə] ceo 'mist', [bɔ:^ə] bó 'cow'.

[o] Qu. §54 Torr §40 FGT §24

[o] occurs for stressed o (see also [ɔ]) e.g. [tɔbər] tobar 'well'. [(ə) wɔdI 'wI:] A bhodaigh bhuidhe! 'Oh vile churl!', [bɔg] bog 'soft', [pɔl] poll 'hole', [tɔm] tom 'bush', [kɔnərt'] conairt 'houndpack', [ɔ] occurs for stressed u e.g. [bɔnɪh] bun 'bottom', [gɔnə] gunna 'gun'.

[ɔ] can occur for a e.g. [tɔmɛlt] tamallt 'a while', [mɔlɔht] mallacht 'curse', [bɔl 'gɔrɛm] ball gorm 'bruise'. agus 'and', may be heard as [aɣɛs], [ɔɣɛs], ballóg 'ruins', may be heard as [baɫag], [bɔɫag]. The 3 sg. m. preposition of i 'in' written ann is pronounced [ɔn] (cf. ionn Ó Tuathail SML).

[ɔ] may occur for io e.g. [ɔlɛr] iolar 'eagle', cf. [i].

[ɔ] may occur for oi e.g. [kɔl't'ɛ] coillte 'woods', alt. [k'iL't'ɛ].

[ö] LASID vol. 1, xxiii

This vowel can alternate with [i] and [ɔ] e.g. [ə bönt Luəhrə] ag baint luachra 'cutting rushes', [kör ; kɔr] cur 'putting'.

[ø]

[ø], a slightly unrounded variety of [ö], occurs in [b'øɣ] beag 'small' - [b'ag] may also be heard.

[λ:] Qu. §61 Torr §52 FGT §40

This vowel has received attention in the works of the above listed scholars, where [λ:] was accredited to the older generations, the general observation being that younger generations substituted [I:] for [λ:].

Quiggin observes that 'The younger people as a general rule have not got this sound and substitute for it i: and y: [= Wagners I:]'.¹ In this area the situation is rather more complicated. In the east of this area (Commeen and Glenfinn) most of the younger generations and many of the older generations have substituted [I:] for [λ:]. In the west of the area, upper Tangaveane and Silver Hill (quite close to LASID pt.83), the sound [λ:] may still be heard. Sp.1 a native of Tangaveane had this sound, while his wife a native of Glenfinn in the east of this area usually had [I:]. Sp.3 a neighbour of Sp.1, usually had [I:], although [λ:] also occurred in his speech. His mother could not speak Irish and Sp.3 spoke English more fluently than his neighbour Sp.1. In the neighbouring townland of Silver Hill, Sp.5 a native of Croaghs had [λ:] as did her son Sp.6 who was much younger than Sp.3.

LASID maps 26, 95, 159, 170, 177, 220 and 223 show that [λ:], for written ao separates pt.83 from pts.84, 85, 86 which had [I:]. Wagner (G. Theil. §201) attributes this south Donegal feature to Connacht Irish. [I:] for ao in this area would appear to be due to several factors.

O'Rahilly (IDPP 31f.) suggests a pronunciation [E:] for ao in the late Middle Irish period.¹ While [E:] still occurs for ao in a few words in this dialect (see [E:]) the sound [λ:] has been dated to as early as the seventeenth century by O'Rahilly.² aoi assonated with í, ío, íu and aei in the Bardic schools. As Wagner's material from pt.83 shows (LASID vol. IV 134-46) [λ:] (and [γ:]) could appear for both ao and aoi cf. [sλ:r] saor 'cheap', Sp.1 comp. [N'is sλ:r'ə (sy:r'ə)]. To find [I:] in the speech of younger speakers in this area, may be due to the similar, yet independent, development in Connacht Irish, where [I:] representing aoi has spread also to non-palatal ao, but the influence of English-speaking is, I believe, a crucial factor in the substitution of [I:] for [λ:] (and [E:] for [ö:] below).¹

1 The fact that in the Bardic schools ao assonated with é, éa, eu and ae (long) would substantiate this Cf. Duan §31.

2 Eng. 'O Hue' for Ó hAodha as opposed to 'O Hea' and 'O Hee' IDPP 34- See also p.265.

[λ:] may occur for ao e.g. [sλ:l] saoghal 'life', [dλ:r] daor 'dear'.

[λ:] may occur for aoi e.g. [skλ:l' [ə] scaoil sé 'he let out', [b'li'ian' ə γλ:l] bliadhain 'e dh'aois 'a year old'.

[λ:] may be heard in oidhche 'night', thus [λ:χ'ə] although [I:] may also occur, the same is true for [λ:ntə] [I:ntə] iongantach 'wonderful'.

[λ:] may occasionally result from ua preceded by a labial consonant e.g. [bλ:r'u] buaidhreamh 'sorrow'. Alternatively [û:], an intermediate sound between [λ:] and [u:], may also result e.g. ['an'wû:n] an-bhuan 'very constantly (of work)'. Note also [smλ:t'u; smy:t'u; smI:t'u] smaoitiughadh 'to think' < DIL smúaintigid. In a great number of cases, however, [uə] results e.g. [fuər] fuair 'cold', [buəlu] bualadh 'striking', etc.

[λ:] has been heard in [fλ:d] fút 'below you', alt., [fu:t] and [fλ:fə] fúbhtha 'below them'.

[λ:] may interchange with [λ:], [I:] and [E:] which see.

[y:] may be relaxed by, or appear for [λ:] or [I:]. [y:] occurs mostly for aoi e.g. [smy:t'u], alt. [smλ:t'u], [smI:t'u] smaoitiughadh 'to think'. Note also [y:nə], [I:nə], [λ:nə] aonach 'fair', [Nλ:sκən], [Nÿ:sκən] naoscann 'snipe'.

Quiggin and Sommerfelt use [y:] to designate [I:] cf. 'Quiggin and Sommerfelt do not distinguish between [λ:] and [y:] sounds which are typical of Ulster Irish. The sound which they represent by [y:] is represented here as [I:] and is common in all Irish dialects.' LASID vol. 1 p.xxiii. Hamilton (Tory p.131) describes [y:] 'This is unrounded German ü, French, u'.

[ö:] Qu. §69 Torr §61 FGT §45

[ö:], a vocalized [y] (LASID vol. 1 p.xxiii), appears for adha, agha e.g. [gö:r gadhar 'hound', Sp.5 (folktale), [ö:rk] adharc 'horn', [Lö:χ] laghach 'decent'.

As the above mentioned authors have all noted there is a tendency to substitute [E:] for [ö:]. In the east of this area [ö:] has generally been replaced by [E:] (for all generations) while to the west the older speakers from Silverhill and Sp.1 preserved [ö:], although [E:] may also be heard e.g. [ö:rk], [E:rk] adharc 'horn',¹ [gö:l'ik'], [gE:l'ik'] Gaedhilg 'Irish'. (Cf. LASID map 114). The east/west distinction cannot be a rigid one, as Sp.2 a native of the east now living in the west had [gE:r] gadhar 'hound', while Sp.11 a native of the west now living in the east had [ö:rk] adharc 'horn'.

Even in the west variation existed. Sp.5 had [gö:r] gadhar 'hound', gen. sg. [gö:r'] gadhar, while Sp.3 had [E:rk] adharc 'horn'. slaghdán 'cold', has been heard as [sLö:dan], [sLE:dan] and [sLλ:dan].

In general then, this vowel (rather like [λ:]) survives only in homes in the remoter areas (usually in the west of this area) where Irish is the predominant language, although even here [E:] is showing signs of making inroads in some cases. English speaking would definitely seem to contribute to the loss of this vowel, although as a phoneme which (like French [œ]) is little used, it may be in danger of being replaced by a fairly similar more widely used one i.e. [E:].¹

1 LASID map 13 has [ö:rk] for pts.82 and 83 cf. LASID vol. IV q.35 where [ö:rk] and [E:rk] were recorded for both points.

DIPHTHONGS

Qu. §139 Torr §78 FGT §103

I list here the main diphthongs. In addition to the accounts of the above authors a detailed account of diphthongs was given by Evans (p. 29f.).²

[ai]

This occurs for aith e.g. [χai [ə] chaith sé 'he threw'. oich may also yield [ai] e.g. [draiχ'əd] droichead 'bridge'.

A triphthong may develop thus: [gə gaihət [ə] go gcaithfeadh sé 'that he would have to', alternatively [gə gaiət [ə].

[au]

This occurs for (e)abh, (e)amh (when [o:] does not result) e.g. [kaulə] cabhlach 'fleet', [sāuru] samhradh 'summer'.

A triphthong [əuə] may be heard in words such as [rauər] reamhar 'fat'.

[a:u]

This occurs for ámh e.g. [snā:u] snámh 'swimming'. Note [kra:u], [kra:v] cnámh 'bone'.

1 Cf. 'A phoneme which contributes little to the generation of utterances will tend to be eliminated. Such is the fate threatening the phoneme /œ/ in French which is yielding up its small territory to /ɛ/. ' Palmer 234.

2 See also G. Theil p.76f., and Tory p.132f.

[è:u] ([ε:u], [e:u])

This occurs in words such as [L'è:u] léigheamh 'reading'.
[sb'r'e:u] spréidheadh 'spreading'.

[iə]

This represents ia e.g. [d'ie] Dia 'God', [g'r'ien] grian 'sun'.
[iə] may occur for éa in sceal 'story', [[k'e:ə] alt. [[k'ieə].

[i:u]

This occurs for igheadh, íodh, íomh e.g. [d'l'i:u] dligheadh
'law', [b'i:u] bíodh 'let there be', [g'r'i:u] gníomh 'deed'.

[ɔ:i]

This occurs for óigh e.g. [dɔ:i] dóigh 'way'.

[ɔ:u]

This occurs for óghadh e.g. [dɔ:u] dóghadh 'burning', alt.
[dɔ:əv].

[uə]

This occurs for ua e.g. [kuərt'] cuairt 'visit'. [uə] may be monophthongized in the vicinity of nasals e.g. [ũ:n] uan 'lamb'. See also [λ:].

[uI]

This occurs for uaidh e.g. [buI] buaidh 'special power', [ruI] ruaidh gen. sg. of ruadh 'red'.

STRESS

Stress in this dialect is substantially as Quiggin (and later scholars) have described for Donegal. The basic rules for main stress are set out as follows:

- (a) Main word-stress falls upon the first syllable e.g.

[¹b¹a¹l¹t¹i¹n¹'ə] Bealtaine 'May', [¹l¹a:¹d¹'i¹r¹] láidir 'strong'.

In words which initially contained a noun preceded by an atonic particle (usually a preposition) the stress falls on the noun e.g.

[ə¹n¹'¹ɔ] annseo 'here', [ə¹n¹ɔ¹n] anonn 'over', [ə¹n¹'u¹h] indiu 'today'.

- (b) Incompounds where the sense of the second word is retained even stress occurs e.g. [¹an¹'adə] an-fhada 'very long', [¹drɔ¹'warul¹] droch-bharamhail 'bad opinion', [¹rɔ¹(:)'v¹øg] ró-bheag 'too small'.

In old compounds such as coiscéim 'footstep' the stress is on the first word, thus [¹kɔ¹.j¹k¹'i¹m¹].

- (c) Where an adjective occurs after a noun, the adjective is stressed e.g. [ə¹f¹'ar¹ ¹b¹'øg] an fear beag 'the little man'.

- (d) Where a noun in the genitive occurs after another noun the noun in the genitive is stressed e.g. [t¹'a¹ ¹f¹'adər¹] teach Pheadair 'Peter's house'. (See VOWEL SHORTENING).

- (e) A noun as a subject is stressed more strongly than the verb e.g. [d¹'i¹m¹'i¹ ¹o:¹n¹] Dimthigh Eoin 'Eoin left'. [n¹'i:¹əl¹ ə¹ ¹tam¹ øgəm] Ní fhuil an t-am agam 'I do not have the time'.

On the other hand subject pronouns have weaker stress than the verb e.g. [χ¹'anə¹ m¹'ə] cheannuigh mé 'I bought', [n¹'i¹ ¹akə¹ [ə] ní fhaca sé 'he did not see'.

- (f) A noun as an object has stronger stress than the verb upon which it is dependent e.g. [dɔ:¹l [ə¹n ¹ban¹'ə] D'ól sé an bainne 'He drank the milk'.

- (g) Adjectives and substantives used predicatively with the copula have stronger stress than the subject e.g. [əs 'mai hīsə] Is maith thusa! 'Good for you!', [N'í 'kɔd'əhtə hu fɔN'ə dīN'ə nɔ b'a:χ] Ní cuideachta thú fá choinne duine ná beathach 'You are not fit company for man or beast'.

In constructions with the substantive verb the adjective is stressed e.g. [tə [ə 'garuʷ] Tá sé garbh'It is wet and windy (lit. 'rough')'.

- (h) A pronominal object has weak stress e.g. ['wɔkə tu ə] An bhfaca tú é? 'Did you see him?', [tɔr 'l'at ə] Tabhair leat é 'Take it (away) with you'.
- (i) The numerals have strong stress e.g. ['fɛ:'mɔdɪ] sé madaidh 'six dogs',

When déag follows the substantive the stress of the latter numerals is reduced e.g. [kɛr'ə k'IN' 'd'è:əg] ceithre cinn déag 'fourteen'.

- (j) Adverbs are usually more strongly stressed than the words they qualify e.g. [tə [ə gə 'm'asərə] Tá sé go measardha 'He is (in) reasonable (health)', [d'i:ə lu gə 'mai m'ə] Díoladh go maith mé 'I was paid well'.
- (k) Prepositions, pronouns, negative particles and conjunctions are generally unstressed e.g. [N'í 'ɔkə m'ə hu] Ní fhaca mé thú 'I did not see you', [χ'u:l' [əd ad l'ə 'd'ir'ə] Shiubhail siad a fhad le Doire 'They walked to Derry'.
- (l) Emphasis is normally expressed by using the Copula (p.332) alternatively stress is placed on a word which is normally unstressed e.g. [mɔ hɪg' 'fɛ:] Má thig sé 'If he comes'.

(m) Some borrowings are stressed on the second syllable e.g.

[tə^(w)b^(w)akə] tobaca 'tobacco'.

In the phonetic texts stress is usually marked consistently in words with atonic a e.g. [ə¹ri:ʃ(t)] arís(t) 'again', or in compounds such as [ˈan¹wɔ:r], an-mhór 'very big', or in [kə¹d'e:] caidé 'what', [kə¹v¹ˈe:d] cá mhéad 'how much/many' etc. In other cases the main stress is not always indicated, but the above remarks should be borne in mind. I have confined my description to deal with main stress as Quiggin's remarks on secondary stress (Qu. §477) also hold good for this area.

VOWEL SHORTENING

As a general rule long vowels are shortened in words where they are in unstressed position e.g. [kaLan] callán 'noise', [ka¹in¹] cailín 'girl' (N.B. [galun], [galu:n] galún 'gallon'-[gaLun] p.22 Text 12.

Where nouns with stressed long vowels are followed by an adjective or a noun in the genitive the long vowel is liable to be shortened (although this may not always be so) e.g. [ku¹ə¹tI:] (alt. [ku:ɪ ə¹tI:]) cúl an toighe 'the back of the house'. Vowel shortening occurs consistently in forms such as [b¹al¹ f¹ar¹ʃ¹t¹ə] Béal Feirste 'Belfast', [f¹ar¹ gortə] féar gortach 'hungry grass'.

Stressed á and ó before h are normally shortened e.g. [ma¹hər¹] máthair 'mother', [b¹q¹hər] bóthar 'road' (rare word).

éanacha 'birds' occurs as [ɛnəhə], féadaidh sé 'it could', occurs as [f¹ˈe:ɪ [ə] or [f¹adI [ə] ar na céadlongaidh 'before breakfast', occurs as [ər nə k¹aləNI].

SANDHI¹

Quiggin (§453) and Sommerfelt (Torr §555) have defined the occurrence of sandhi in Donegal Irish and anyone unfamiliar with the phenomenon should consult either of these works. Progressive assimilation is a relatively rare feature in Donegal Irish, but some examples of this are listed under ASSIMILATION (p.245). The most common form of sandhi is regressive assimilation and some examples of its occurrence are given below:

- (a) It is most common for final palatal consonants to become non-palatal.

[hīt nə rōdI] Thuit na rudaí 'The things fell'

[ə gōd tōLtI] a gcuid taltaí 'their lands'

[f'r'i:d tɔlu nə hè:r'əNə] fríd talamh na hÉireanna 'through the land of Ireland'

[ə kōN'aLt tI:] ag coinneáilt toighe 'keeping house'

[Na:t du hi:n'] in áit domh fhéin 'in a place by myself'

[l'ə tríd l'e:χ'ə] le troid léithe 'to fight with her'

[bɔnu f'adər ruI] bunadh Pheadair Ruaidh 'Peadar Roe's people'

[v'erhət [ɛ[ən də χōd' ar'əg'Id dīt'[ə] Bhéarfadh seisean do chuid airgid² duit-se 'He would give you your money'

[rIN tu] rinne tú 'you did'

[ə bönt Luəhrə] ag baint luachra 'cutting rushes'

1 'The term sandhi (a Sanskrit word meaning 'putting together') is applied to changes affecting adjacent words in the utterance'. Palmer 64.

2 See p.376.

- (b) Final non-palatal consonants may be palatalized.

[b'ed'ir' nar' IN'i:] B'fhéidir nár inis 'Perhaps (he) did not tell'

[oə] [k'r'ed'əm] agus creidim 'and I believe'

[N'i è:ədem i wolu l'ə f'Jo:] [i v'arI gə mo:r mə χrI:]

Ní fhéadaim í a moladh le feabhas sí mhearúigh go mór mo chroidhe

(Text 62 v.III)

While [dɔ:L' [ə] d'ól sé 'he drank' has been heard [dɔ:l [ə] is also quite common. It would appear that regressive assimilation is stronger for non-palatal sounds influencing palatal sounds than for palatal sounds influencing non-palatal sounds.

- (c) In verbal forms where a voiced stop occurs before pronouns beginning in s the final stop may be devoiced. This occurs consistently for forms or the conditional, imperfect and past subjunctive ending in -adh, where, when deaspirated, the final -ad, *[əd], is devoiced e.g. [hɔkət [ə] thiocfadh sé 'he would come', [v'i:ət [ə] bhíodh sé 'he used to be', [a v'ek'ət [ə] dá bhfeiceadh sé 'were he to see'.

In the past tense forms of verbs ending in voiced stops devoicing may or may not occur e.g. [dɔ:k [ə] alt. [dɔ:g [ə] d'fhág sé 'he left', [ɣit' [ə] ghoid sé 'he stole'.

- (d) In verbal forms ending in [r'] before the pronouns beginning in s, [r'] is usually depalatalized and a slightly retroflex form of [ʃ] results e.g. [v'ər' [ə] bheir sé 'he gives', [fuər' [əd] fuair siad 'they got'.

ar siubhal 'going on', may be heard as [əʃ̣ ʃu:l], or [ər' [u:ə].

an fear seo 'this man', may be heard as [ə f'aʳʃə] or more commonly [ə f'ar [ɔ].

- (e) When the n in an forms of the article is pronounced, it usually occurs as [ən] before a, o, u (fha, fho, fhu) and before [t], [d], [L], [N], [s] e.g. [ər'ən ahər'] ar an athair 'on the father', [sən (ɔ):wər] san fhoghmhar 'in the autumn', [fən ɔrLar] fán urlár 'about the floor', [dən ta:blə] den tábla 'of the table', [dən dorəs] den doras 'of the door', [fən Lɔχ] fán loch 'about the lake', [r'iv'ə'NɔL'ik'] roimhe an Nodlaig 'before Christmas', [dɔn st'al'h?] don stail 'for the stallion'.

[ən] may occasionally be heard.

When the n in an forms of the article is pronounced, it usually occurs as [ən'] before e, i (fhe, fhi) e.g. [dən' ar v'ɔg] den fhear bheag 'of the little man', [ə kagnu n' è:[k'] ag cagnamh an éisc 'chewing the fish', [ən' iəsk'ir'əht] an iascaireacht 'the fishing'.

Before [t'], [d'], [L'], [N'], [ʃ] an may occur as [ən'] or [ən] e.g. [dən' (dən) t'aχ] den teach 'of the house', [əg'ən' (ən) d'a:rhar'] ag an dearbhráthair 'at the brother', [fən L'ɔ:r] fán leabhar 'about the book', [ər ə 'N'ad] ar an nead 'on the nest', [fən [k'iəl] fán scéal 'about the story'.

While there is a tendency in Northern Donegal dialects for written n to yield m before labials,¹ I have not noticed this here. It is quite common, however, for the n of the article, and other particles ending in n to yield [ŋ] before [g] and [k] e.g. [əŋ gɔ:r] an gadhar 'the hound', [gə d'i:ŋ grav'al] go dtí an graibhéal 'to the gravel',

1 Cf. Tory 145 (g).

[əŋ gI· 'do:r'] in Gaoth Dobhair 'in Gweedore', [iŋ ŋa:rI] in ngarrdhaí 'in a garden', [tən jr'ien ʃiŋ kaL't'ə] Tá an ghrian sin cailte 'That sun is lost'.

DELENITION

coimhead 'watch', may be heard as [kiv'ad] alt. [kim'ad].

Sp.5 had [L'ɪ:φu] líomhfadh 'would sharpen', yet [L'ɪ:əm ə tuə] líom(h) an tuagh 'the axe sharpened'.

ceobhrán 'misty drizzling rain', is pronounced [k'ɔ:brən].

INTRUSIVE CONSONANTS

áit 'place', is normally pronounced [a:t'] but [a:n't'] may also be heard - especially in the east of the area. I have single examples of intrusive n in [ʃn'əŋən] seangán 'ant', and [nər' ə wai' n'ahin'] Nuair a mhoitheochainn ... 'When I would hear ...'

r sometimes occurs after velar plosives. It is heard fairly consistently in [ʃk'r'i:ʃt'ə] scríste 'rest' - although scíste was occasionally heard cf. LASID map 158.

Sp.3 had [grən'əv'] gainimh 'sand', and [g'r'e:əhə] (beside [g'e:əhə]) géacha 'geese', and [dr'i'in'] (beside [d'i'in']) duisín 'a dozen'. It was also interesting to note that the same speaker had [skəhəni] (beside [skrahəni]) scathannaí 'sods'.

Cf. Parasitic t 190.

GLIDES

Non-palatal labial consonants before front vowels are often followed by a [w] -glide e.g. [pʷa:ʃt'ə] páiste 'child', [bʷi:]

buidhe 'yellow', [am^wid'a] amaideach 'foolish'.

Palatal labials before [ɔ:] and [o:] are often followed by a [j] -glide e.g. [f^jɔ:l'] feoil 'meat', [b^jɔ:] beo 'alive', [m^jo:ru] meabhruhadh 'contemplating'.

cé acu 'whether, which', is pronounced [k'ɔku] although [k^jɔku] may occasionally be heard.

METATHESIS

Some examples of methathesis include: [ɔmɛltɔ] iomlatach 'full of beans', Sp.10; [hɪr'ɛstə] tharat-sa 'over you', Sp.3; [suən'v'əs] suaimhneas 'tranquillity', Sp.1; [skɔlərgənI] Sp.1, [skɔləgərNI] Sp.10 scolgarnaigh 'clucking (hen)'. [mər nɪrd'ə tu] mur ndruididh tú 'if you do not close', Sp.1.

DISSIMILATION

[graulɔgI] grabhrógaí 'turf particles', Sp.1 - [graurɔgI] Sp.10.

ASSIMILATION

[kɔləbɫɔ] conablach 'idle person slut', Sp.1 - [kɔnəbɫɔ] Sps.2 and 14.

Some examples of 'progressive assimilation' (Palmer 64) include: [k'IL' ə 'mɑ:rd] Cill na mBard 'Killymard', [ə hɑ:uɔl'ən I:n'i] a shabháileann daoiní 'who saves people'.

LOSS OF CONSONANT

[hɛnə [ə] tháinig sé 'he came', [əs ən fɑ:r' [ɔ] as an pháirc seo

'out of this field', [N'í ha:r] ní thearn 'did not' (pausa).

CONSONANT INTERCHANGE

Sps.5 and 6 had [k'aLəmansIəht] for cearrmansaidheacht 'mis-behaviour'. Sp.5 had [ãntar'] for altóir 'altar', and [a:ntə] (alt. [a:Ltə]) for ábalta 'able'. She also had [kãŋ] for coll 'hazel' (usually pronounced [kaL]).

Sp.1 had [gl'ín'ə 'L'aL] for gloinne leann 'a glass of beer', (Sp.1 also pronounced this [L'an]).

While seilide 'snail' is pronounced [ʃil'(h)Id'ə] one speaker had [ʃIm'Id'ə].

CONFUSION OF INITIAL

soir 'east', has been heard as [ʃi'r'] from all speakers in normal conversation. When asking LASID q.945 'eastwards', Sp.1 (on two separate occasions) answered [s'i'r'h] - although [ʃi'r'] occurred in his normal speech. The occurrence of [ʃ] in soir is, as other scholars have pointed out, due to the influence of [ʃiər] siar 'west'.

siocair 'cause, reason', is usually pronounced [ʃokər'] although I have recorded [gən fa: gən sɔkər'] gan fáth gan s(i)ocair 'without cause or reason'.

duilleog 'leaf' may be pronounced [d'iL'ag] or [d'iL'ag].

I have one example of d'athruigh 'changed', pronounced as [d'a:rhI] usually [da:rhI]).¹

1 See also [d].

tionntódh 'to turn', is usually pronounced [t'ɔ̃ntɔ], although [tɔ̃ntɔ] has also been heard.

f(e)oghluim 'to learn', is usually pronounced [f'jɔ:ləm'], although I have heard [fɔ:ləm'].

an olainn 'the wool', is usually pronounced [Nɔ|IN'], although [N'ɔ|IN'] was also heard.

an t-asal 'the donkey', may be heard as [ə tɔsəl] or [ə t'asəl].

METANALYSIS

Sommerfelt has listed examples of the analogical change due to the different aspects of the Irish initial (Torr §378f.). This feature was termed metanalysis by Jespersen.¹

This dialect corresponds with Torr in the inclusion of inorganic f in words such as foscail 'open', fursast 'easy', etc. and the omission of historic f in áinleog 'swallow'.

While fiafruighe 'to ask', is by far the more widespread form, one example of ag iafruighe 'asking', was heard, see fiafruighe.

The form pilleadh 'to return' is the more common, but Sp.11 did use tilleadh in speech and song - this may well be an East Ulster form. For this word see LASID map 278.²

Sp.2 had [p'a:nagI] peadhnógaí 'pannier-baskets', cf. LASID map 58 where feadhnogáí was the usual Donegal form. Sp.10 has [mra: f'I[r'agahə] 'witches'. This may represent mná phisreogacha (i.e. lenition of plural of adjective by analogy with masculine o-stems, or first declension nouns, ending in a slender consonant) or mná fisreogacha.

For fliuchadh/liuchadh see p.296.

1 Language, its nature, development and origin. O. Jespersen (London 1922) p.173.

2 Note also UCCT p.94 story 19 n.5 for LASID pt.83.

As with Torr 'snake' occurs as [aħer'] athair < nathair. 'Snipe' usually appeared as [Nλ:sk̥ON (NY:-)] although I have heard [ə tE:sk̥ON] an t-aoscann cf. LASID map 220.

Quiggin (§250) recorded [N'as] neas 'near', and Ó hEochaidh and Wagner (ZCP 29.42 no.106) recorded 'Is neise cabhair Dé ná ceap an dorais' at pt.83.¹ I have only heard [əs d'I[ə] is deise 'nearest', and [õŋk ə jas dɔ:] amharc a dheas dó 'he is short-sighted'.

For nuair 'when' occurring as [dər'] see [d].

The past tense of fiafruighe 'to ask', has been heard as [d'iafrI] d'fhiafruigh and [jiəfrI] dhiafruigh < d'fhiafruigh.

Sommerfelt (Lochl III 249) recorded '[tla:man]' 'handful of wool, hay' for Torr. I have heard this as [sLa:man] cf. slámán olna OCGC 223 s.v. rothlóg. As with Torr tréadaidhe 'shepherd' occurs as [še:dI] sréadaidhe.

Sp.19 had [l'əNə s'il'] lena soil 'with their pleasure', where [l'ə də höl'] has been regarded as *le do shoil (v's thoil).

s is often prefixed to c cf. scéim bhacaighil (s.v. céim), scairbhshíon, sciúlán scorróg and [ədər [k'axtər ɔku] eadar sceachtar² acu 'between any of them'.

Sp.5 had [sp'l'ɔ:d'ə döNə r' ə fɔ:su] Spleoide (< pleoid) dona ar an phósadh 'Woe betide marriage'.

Sp.9 had one example of [b'In'] for min 'meal'.

Cf. táth 59 n.1.

CONFUSION OF [t']/[d'] AND [k']/[g']

In the townland of Falgarrow³ I met two brothers who had almost

1 See further ZCP 29.53 no. 167.

2 This was heard from Sp.1 who also used [k'axtər].

3 Between Commeen and LASID pt.83 (townland 31 in Kiltreevoe ZCP 31.64).

totally substituted alveo-palatal [t'] for palato-velar [k'] e.g. [t'IN't'ə] cinnte 'surely', [t'i:rəNI] cíorannaí 'bicycle cogs', [st̪rɔ:t'ə] stróicthe 'torn'. Examples of [d'] for [g'] included: [d'ar'wai] gearr-mhaith 'reasonably good', and [d'v'r'u] geimhreadh 'winter'.

Many speakers have both [i'g'i] and [i'd'i] for forms of the imperative 2 pl. e.g. [go:ᶱg'i] gabhaighidh 'go' Sp.1 yet [t'ont'i'd'i] tionntaighidh 'turn'.

The substitution of alveo-palatal stops by palato-velar stops is less common but examples include: [am nə g'i:ərnI] am na dtighearnaí 'the time of the (land)lords', Sp.10, (cf. [t'i:ərnə] tighearna 'lord' Sp.10). [g'l'i:har'] dlightheoir 'lawyer', and [g'r'εəm'Ir'ə] dréimire 'ladder', [g'aran], [d'aran] gearrán 'gelding', [d'r'arhə] gearrtha 'cut' - more usually [g'arhə].

NASALISATION

Vowels in the vicinity of nasals may or may not be nasalized e.g. [m̃ɔ:n'] alt., [mɔ:n'] móin 'turf'. Variation occurs in the speech of many individuals but many of the older speakers seem to preserve nasalisation better than the younger speakers given to English speaking.

ASPECTS OF THE VERB

THE PRESENT TENSE

The present tense of regular verbs is based on the stem (the imperative second singular) plus the endings -(a)im for the first person singular and -(e)ann plus the pronouns tú, sé, sí, muid/sinn, sibh and siad for the other persons. Thus tógáil 'lifting', (stem tóg) is conjugated as follows:

Sg. 1. [to:gəm]	Tógaim
2. [to:gən (-ən) tu]	Tógann tú
3m. [to:gən]ə]	Tógann sé
f. [to:gən]i]	Tógann sí
Pl. 1. [to:gən m'wíd']	Tógann muid
[to:gən]IN']	Tógann sinn
2. [to:gən]Iv']	Tógann sibh
3. [to:gən]əd]	Tógann siad
Passive [to:gtər]	Tógtar

Vowel reduction in unstressed syllables (IDPP 223) and analogy result in second conjugation verbs being identified with those of the first conjugation. Thus: [k'anəm] ceannuighim 'I buy', [k'anən]ə] ceannuigheann sé 'he buys'. Occasionally biforms occur: [kr'in'ən]ə] cruinnigheann sé 'he gathers', and [N'i χr'in'iən]ε]ə] ní chruinnighean seisean 'he does not gather', from the same speaker. But by and large the first conjugation ending -(e)ann is the most common form.

An alternative might be to suggest that the -(u)igh of the stem is dropped when conjugating the present tense, cruinneann sé 'he gathers' etc. In this work, however, both [kr'in'ən]ə] and [kr'in'iən]ə] are represented as cruinnigheann sé.

Verbs which are monosyllabic and end in -dh, -gh usually preserve the [-iən], [-in] ending. Thus: [kruIən]ə] cruaidheann sé 'it hardens', [dɔ: iən]ə] dóigheann sé 'it burns'.

The verb cruinniughadh 'gathering', (stem cruinnigh) is conjugated as follows:

Sg. 1.	[kr̥iːn'əm (-im ; iəm)]	Cruinnighim
	2. [kr̥iːn'ən tu (-in ; -iən)]	Cruinnigheann tú
	3m. [kr̥iːn'ən]ə (-in ; -iən)]	Cruinnigheann sé
	f. [kr̥iːn'ən]i (-in ; -iən)]	Cruinnigheann sí
Pl. 1.	[kr̥iːn'ən m'w̥iːd' (-in ; iən)]	Cruinnigheann muid
	[kr̥iːn'ən]iːn' (-in ; iən)]	Cruinnigheann sinn
	2. [kr̥iːn'ən]iːv' (-in ; iən)]	Cruinnigheann sibh
	3. [kr̥iːn'ən]əd (-in ; iən)]	Cruinnigheann siad

Syncopated verbs are usually reduced e.g. [iːn']ə] innseann/ innsigheann sé 'he tells', [fɔskl̥iːn']ə] fosclann/fosclaigheann sé 'he opens'.

The main preverbal particles are: an eclipsing [ən g̥iːr'ən]ə] an gcuireann sé? 'does he put?'; ní leniting [n̥'i χ'ənən]ə] ní cheannuigheann sé 'he does not buy'; go eclipsing [gə gr̥iːn'ən]ə] go gcruinnigheann sé 'that he gathers'; and nach eclipsing [nɑ m' r' i]ə] nach mbriseann 'which does not break', [nɑ nɔ: lən]ɛ]ə] nach n-ólann seisean? 'does he not drink?'

When I tried to ascertain verbal forms by questioning in English, Sp.10 often gave analytic forms for the first person singular: [t' i: m' è] chí mé 'I see', [n' i: m' è] ghní mé 'I do', [jɛv' m' i]ə] gheibh mise 'I get'. These forms usually occurred with the irregular verbs (due to the influence of tá mé 'I am'?) I did not hear any of these forms in normal speech, however¹, and the only consistent analytic paradigm for the present tense in the present indicative of the substantive verb - tá mé, tú, sé, sí, muid/sinn, sibh, siad; and the copula: (is) mé, tú, sé, sí, muid/sinn, sibh, siad.

The forms ending in -(e)ann are always written with double n. They are not always pronounced so, however. The forms [-əN] occur usually before tú and the forms [-ən] usually occur before the other pronouns. Gallagher often has a single n: 'nach nglacan' 13, 'an masan sibh' 14, 'mo thruaidhe nac[h] ndearcan no nach smuainion sibh air an la ud na feirge' 22. (Cf. 'mbionn na Daoine' 154).¹

As in the rest of Donegal orthographic -im (and the infrequent -imid) of the first person are pronounced with non-palatal [m] (IDPP 169f.) e.g. [k'ɔ:ləm] ceolaim 'I sing'; [rɪχ'əm'wɪd'] ritheamuid (rithimid) 'we run'. The emphatic suffix in the 1 sg. is always [-sə] e.g. [mɑ hɛ:msə] má théighim-sa 'If I go'.²

As can be seen from the above paradigms, the first person singular is the only consistently occurring synthetic form, the remainder based on the third person. By far the most common form for the 1 pl. is the analytic form tógann muid/sinn 'we lift'. I have only heard occasional examples of the 1 pl. synthetic form: ritheamuid (above) and [kl'ɪn'əm'ɪd'] cluineamuid 'we hear'. Cf. LASID pt.83 q.391 'cluineann sinne (cluininimid)'.

The termination -(e)ann occurs much more frequently as an independent form than -(a)idh. O'Rahilly (IDPP 132) traces the beginnings of this development to the seventeenth century, and although the old independent forms in -(a)idh disappear from literary use about the middle of the eighteenth century O'Rahilly does make allowances for Donegal: 'It [-idh] held out longest in Ulster and indeed is not quite dead in Donegal.'

1 See also [n] for [N] or [n'] in Phonology.

2 The emphatic suffixes can vary, however, e.g. [i'g'ə]ən or [i'g'əsən] for aige-s(e)an 'at him'.

The termination -(a)idh may still be heard in narrative, proverbs and fixed phrases e.g.

Théid sé a fhad le fear a bhí ina luighe agus cuiridh sé [k'ir'i] [ə] a chos faoi agus caithidh sé [kaih'i] [ə] suas innsan aer é mar bhéadh bál ann. Sp.9 TEXT 41.

'He goes over to a man who was lying down and he puts his foot beneath him and he throws him up into the air like a ball.'

Imthighidh [Im'i] na daoini' acht fanann (N.B.) na cnoic. Sp.5

'The people go off (die) but the hills remain.'

Féadaidh sé. [f'adI (f'èdI) [ə]

'It could be.'

In ordinary speech the independent form of the consuetudinal present of the substantive verb varies between bíonn and bídh. Examples of bídh include:

Bídh [b'i:] ceo ar an chnoc sin thall. Bídh. Sp.1.

'Mist gathers on yonder hill. It does'

Bídh sé ar shiubhal sna Státaí. Sp.6a.

'He (often) goes off to the States.'

Sp.3. Caithfidh sé go mbíonn féar maith air. 'Good grass must grow in it.'

Sp.10a. Bídh. 'Yes.'

Both forms may be used as in the following: Bíonn siad istuigh sna toighthe. Bídh. Sp.10. 'They are to be found in the houses. They are.' (Cf. Imthighidh fanann above).

The verb sílsteán 'to think' very often has forms in -idh:

Tá siad ag fagháil isteach leis an rud úr agus sílidh siad go bhfuil sé tréitheach. Sp.1.

'They (young people) are adopting a new way of life and they think that it is just wonderful.'

Sílidh daoiní Sp.5. Sílidh siad Sp.11.

'People think' 'They think'

In Ó Baoíll's examples of -idh (p.297f.) sílidh/saoilidh forms are to be found in various parts of Ulster. Wagner heard both sílidh sé and síleann sé at pt.83 in response to LASID q.417 'He thinks (that I am a fool)'. - Sp.1 answered sílidh sé, while Sps.3 and 10 answered síleann sé.

Other examples heard were: Fásaidh sé leis 'It grows (of its own accord)'.; and Tógaidh siad sa chloiginn é 'They (noises) make him (dog) go mad.'

It is evident that the -idh forms are, and were common in this area (Quiggin has eleven examples in his proverb and riddle collection pp.194-197). It is interesting to note that Ó hEochaidh and Wagner (ZCP 29.61) heard: Ithidh colpach a sáith agus luighidh sí síos san áit, at LASID pt.83, yet Itheann colpach an cháith agus annsin luigh-eann sí síos san áit at LASID pt.84.

New analogical forms of consuetudinal present have been noted in the following examples.

Gheibhidh siad [jɛv'i [əd] barraidheacht saoghail. Sp.6.

'They (tend to) live too long.'

Tigidh [t'ɪg'i] stoirm na Cuaiche. Sp.5.

'The cuckoo storm comes (regularly each year).'

Cf. 'Tigidh an pinneóir le n-a pheann'. Qu p.197 no.2.

The old independent forms have also been heard as dependent forms:

Ní thugaidh siad [N'í hɔɡI [əd] isteach dó sin anois.

'They do not believe in that (witchcraft) nowadays.'

Ní thugaidh siad dóbhtha é.

'They do not give (feed) it to them.'

Ní théigidh [N'í hɛ:i]

'He does not go.' (response).

Although the forms tigidh 'comes', gheibhidh 'gets' are rare, there is a much stronger tendency to add -eann, (-íonn) to the present stems of a number of irregular verbs whose independent stems are monosyllabic. Thus: bheir/bheireann 'gives'; chí/chíonn 'sees'; deir/deireann 'says'; gheibh/gheibheann 'gets'; ghní/ghníonn 'does'; tig/tigeann 'comes'. Biforms exist in the speech of quite a few speakers e.g. [N'í:], [N'í:əɲ] ghní/ghníonn Sps.3 and 5. [t'Íg'], [t'Íg'ən] tig/tigeann Sps.3 and 10. Younger speakers (especially to the east of this area) tend strongly towards forms in -eann, -íonn. While no hard and fast rules can be established this widespread development represents a further step towards the establishment of -(e)ann as the dominant marker of the present tense.

Relationship between Present and Future.

As is the case in other Donegal dialects and in East Ulster the negative of the present often carries a future meaning.¹ Examples include: [N'í:əl' m'ə ra: gə gír'ən [ə N'u^h]] Ní fhuil mé ag rádh go gcuireann sé indiu. 'I do not think that it will rain today.' [N'í ɛk'ən tu ən'stáim' ər' ə wadu gə mad'in'] Ní fheiceann tú a'n-staidhm ar an mhadadh sin go maidin. 'You will not catch a glimpse of that

1 Cf. LASID map 157 'It is likely that he will not come' - nach dtig-(eann)/dtarann/dtiocann sé.

dog until tomorrow morning.' [N'í han]ə dadI ɔrt] Ní dhéan sé dadaidh ort 'It will not affect you.'

Hamilton states: 'Very often the Future is used instead of the Present in the Irish of Tory and the mainland opposite it: Rachaidh bád isteach go Toraigh trí huaire sa tseachtmhain - (The) boat goes to Tory three times a week.' (Tory p.171 (c)). The following was heard from Sp.3: [joə tu ban'ə rauər nər' ə hIg'əs ə t'as] Gheobhaidh tú bainne reamhar nuair a thigeas an teas. 'You get thick milk in the warm weather.' This usage is absent in Teelin according to Wagner (G. Theil. §294).

The future stem has been noted in the present tense of some irregular verbs.¹ It occurs most commonly in the verb ithe 'eating': [i:sən]ə] íosann sé - see ithe. In the east of the area I have heard the form [rəhən]ə] rachann sé 'it goes', usually from speakers who speak English quite a lot. I have also heard [d'ɔkən]In nə g'iti b'ɔgə] An dtiocann sin 'na giotaí beaga? 'Does that come in small pieces?' from a Commeen youth. Sp.15, in addition to gheibh(eann) 'gets', had the form [jo:n]ə] gheobhann sé 'he gets'.

A present stem based on the past is occasionally found for the verb cluinstean 'to hear': c(h)ualann (see cluinstean).

THE PAST TENSE

The past tense of the regular verbs is formed by lenition of the stem (exceptions dealt with below) plus the pronouns mé, tú, sé, sí, muid/sinn, sibh, siad. Togáil 'to lift' (stem tóg) is declined as follows:

¹ See Éigse xvii 537-44 for a discussion of the future stems in the present.

Sp. 1. [ho:g m'ə]	Thóg mé
2. [ho:g tu]	Thóg tú
3m. [ho:g ə]	Thóg sé
3f. [ho:g i]	Thóg sí
Pl. 1. [ho:g m'wɪd']	Thóg muid
[ho:g]IN']	Thóg sinn
2. [ho:g]IV']	Thóg sibh
3. [ho:g əd]	Thóg siad
Passive [to:gu]	Tógadh

The verb cruinniughadh 'to gather' (stem cruinnigh) is declined as follows:

Sg. 1. [χrɪn'ə m'ə]	Chruinnigh mé
2. [χrɪn'ə tu]	Chruinnigh tú
3m. [χrɪn'ə ə]	Chruinnigh sé
f. [χrɪn'ə i]	Chruinnigh sí
1. [χrɪn'ə m'wɪd']	Chruinnigh muid
[χrɪn'ə]IN']	Chruinnigh sinn
2. [χrɪn'ə]IV']	Chruinnigh sibh
3. [χrɪn'ə əd]	Chruinnigh siad
Passive [krɪn'u]	Cruinnigheadh

The survival of do in the independent forms of the past tense

Verbs with vocalic initial, or verbs with initial f directly followed by a vowel, still preserve an elided form of do in the independent forms of the past tense. Thus, éirghe 'to get up' (stem éirigh) and fanacht 'to wait' (stem fan) form their past tense:

[d'i:r'ə m'ə] d'éirigh mé 'I got up'; [d'i:r'ə tu] d'éirigh tú 'you got up' etc; [dɔn m'ə] d'fhan mé 'I waited'; [dɔn tu] d'fhan tú 'you waited' etc. (See Verbs in fr- and fl- p.295f.).

Only one example of preverbal do occurring in the independent form of a verb with consonantal initial has been heard in normal speech: 'Cuid acu nach dtáinig ariamh arais, cuid acu do tháinig [də han'ik']. Some of them never returned, others did.' Sp.3. Some examples have been heard in songs: Do bhí [də v'i:] bean uasal ... 'There was a lady ...' Sp.3; and the following from Sp.1:

'Nuair do d'éirigh mé ar maidin le fáinniughadh geal an lae
Do chonnaic mé na gardaí ag teacht anuas ag toigh Kildea.' TEXT 67 v.1.

The do d'éirigh mé example shows that do has more than likely been prefixed as (alas) an unsuccessful antiquarianism and would have no reality in everyday speech.

The independent passive forms of verbs with vocalic initial have h- prefixed e.g. [hIN'f]u dūsə] h-innseadh domhsa 'I was told' < Class. Ir. do h-inniseadh. With verbs in f- e.g. foscail 'open' the independent passive is [fɔsklɔ ə] foscladh é 'it was opened'.

The main preverbal particles for the regular verbs are: ar, níor, gur and nár, all leniting. The verbs: bheith 'to be', déanamh 'to do', fagháil 'to get', feiceáil 'to see', goil 'to go', tabhairt 'to give' and teacht 'to come', all used the particles an, ní, go and nach in the active.

In the passive forms of the verb tabhairt 'to give' the preverbal particles ar, níor etc. are used e.g. [N'ir tɔgu] 'was not given'.

LASID map 118 'did you hear?' shows both ar chuala tú? and an gcuala tú? for areas in Donegal. Both forms can occur in this area (see cluinstean). The verb rádh 'to say' uses the forms ar, níor etc. (See rádh).

In addition to the confusion of preverbal particles for the past tense forms chuala/mhoithigh, the form ní is occasionally used with some regular verbs e.g. [N'í χ₀dəl']ə] ní chodail sé 'he did not sleep' (more usually níor ...) ¹

When used in the passive the preverbal particles ar, níor etc. do not lenite (they prefix h- to verbs which begin in a vowel).

Verbs whose past tense forms contain two syllables and end in vowels (e.g. chuala, 'heard' - fhaca 'saw', tharla 'happened') form pausa forms like chruinnigh, thus chualaidh, ní fhacaidh, tharlaigh.

THE FUTURE TENSE

The future tense for verbs like tógáil 'to lift' is formed by adding the future termination [hI] -f(a)idh to the stem and then adding the pronouns mé, tú, sé, sí, sinn/muid, sibh and siad. Thus:

Sg. 1.	[to:kə m'ə]	Tógfaidh mé
	2. [to:kə tu]	Tógfaidh tú
	3m. [to:kə]ə]	Tógfaidh sé
	f. [to:kə]i]	Tógfaidh sí
Pl. 1.	[to:kə m'wɪd']	Tógfaidh muid
	[to:kə]IN'ə]	Tógfaidh sinne
	2. [to:kə]IV']	Tógfaidh sibh
	3. [to:kə]əd]	Tógfaidh siad
	Passive [to:kər]	Tógfar

Other examples include: [m'IL'hə m'ə] millfidh mé 'I shall destroy', [glanə m'ə] glanfaidh mé 'I shall clean'.

The future tense for verbs like cruinniughadh 'to gather' is formed by adding the future termination [ahI], [ahI] -(e)óchaidh to the first syllable of the stem and then adding the pronouns. Thus:

¹ Cf. [N'í: - xri'ni -]iad i] ... 'They did not miss it' Lochl III 253 (Torr).

Sg. 1. [kʀiN'ahə m'ə]	Cruinneochaidh mé
2. [kʀiN'ahə tu]	Cruinneochaidh tú

The future tense of verbs with monosyllabic stems ending in -igh is usually formed by adding -f(a)idh [hɪ] e.g. [dɔ:ih'ə m'ə] dóighfidh mé 'I shall burn'.

The future tense of syncopated verbs add -(e)óchaidh e.g. [fasɰlahə m'ə] fosclóchaidh mé 'I shall open', [IN'jahə]ə] in(n)seochaidh sé 'he will tell'.

The predominant future terminations in this dialect are -f(a)idh (IDPP 221f.) and -(e)óchaidh (ibid 220f.). The form -óraidh (Class. Ir. -éora O. Ir. -éra) was heard in the form [əN abəɾə]ɛ]əN] an abóraidh seisean? 'will he say?' - although [abrahɪ] abróchaidh is also heard (see rádh, and LASID map 15 where ceanglóchaidh was recorded for this area and most of Donegal, yet N.B. pts.78 and 85).

The verb tais(p)eáint 'to show', has the future [tè]əNə] tais(p)éanaidh mé (-tais(bh)éanaidh Ir. Ling. Poet 19).

The verb breith 'bears' and its compounds: tabhairt 'to give', and rádh 'to say' (pres. deir); had é -futures in Old and Classical Irish (béraid, béraidh), these are now regarded as f -futures, thus: [b'èrhə]i] béarfaidh sí 'she will bear', [v'èrhɪ]ə] bhéarfaidh sé 'he will give' and [d'èrhə]i] déarfaidh sí 'she will say'.

While the future of the verb ithe 'to eat' has the future [i:SI] this can be taken as the old s-future íosaidh (O. Ir. íssaid), although a number of Donegal authors write this as íosfaidh. (Cf. DIL s.v. ithid : 'fut. stem : ís(s)- (in Mid. and Mod. Ir. somet. followed by - f- of the b- fut.)').

The preverbal particles are as those for the present.

The Synthetic Form

As can be seen from the paradigms the future tense in this dialect is totally analytic. I have heard, however, in songs and poetry some synthetic forms of the first singular:

(a) Gabh thusa 'gus rapáil an bórd a's díolfad an scór mé fhéin. Sp.1
TEXT 62 v.iv.

(b) Barraidheacht, faraor, a ghlac mé de mur gcomhairle,
'S ní ghlacfad níos mó de'. 'sé dubhairt sise liom. Sp.5. (poem)
"I have taken, alas, too much of your advice,
And I shall take no more of it", is what she said to me'.

Example (a) is taken from the work of the nineteenth-century Glenfinn poet Peadar Welch/Breathnach (c.1825-70). Synthetic (and analytic) forms occur in other folk versions of this poet's work:

'Stadfaidh mé feasta de'n cheol
Ní dhéanfadh níos mó san ghleann
Ó briseadh an teangaidh 'n mo shéoid.
Ní leanfadh de'n spórs nó greann.' (DDCU 320,iv)

No synthetic future forms are recorded for Donegal on LASID maps 15, 123 and 155. Quiggin has an example of a synthetic form in a folktale: 'Ní gheánfadh' arsa Gaibhdín Gabhna'. (Qu. p.237). Craig (p.105) mentions that 'the synthetic form pósfadh is sometimes heard'.

Other examples from poetry in Donegal (as well as from direct answers) could be cited, but it is sufficient to say that in this area the synthetic forms have totally disappeared from ordinary speech - indeed, even in (b), Sp.5 varied between ní ghlacfad and ní ghlacfaidh mé. (In direct answers in the 1 sg. the form is (as in the conditional) the form of the 3 sg. minus the pronoun, thus: An íosfaidh tú uibh? 'Will you have an egg?' Dhéanfaidh 'I shall').

THE CONDITIONAL MOOD¹

The conditional (and the imperfect/past subjunctive) have synthetic forms for the first and second persons singular, tógáil 'to lift', is conjugated as follows:

Sg. 1. [ho:kIN' (-in')]	Thógfainn
2. [ho:ka], [ho:ka höse]	Thógfá, thógfá thusa
3m. [ho:kæt]ə]	Thógfadh sé
f. [ho:kæt]i]	Thógfadh sí
Pl. 1. [ho:kU m'wīd']	Thógfadh muid
[ho:kæt]IN']	Thógfadh sinn
2. [ho:kæt]IV']	Thógfadh sibh
3. [ho:kæt]əd]	Thógfadh siad
Passive [ho:kI]	Thógfaí

Cruinniughadh 'to gather', is conjugated as follows:

Sg. 1. [χrīn'ahin']	Chruinneochainn
2. [χrīn'aha] [χrīn'aha höse]	Chruinneochthá (thusa)
3m. [χrīn'ahæt]ə]	Chruinneochadh sé
f. [χrīn'ahæt]i]	Chruinneochadh sí

Pl. [χr̥iN'ahət]IN']	Chruinneochadh sinn
2. [χr̥iN'ahət]IV']	Chruinneochadh sibh
3. [χr̥iN'ahət]əd]	Chruinneochadh siad
Passive [χr̥iN'ahI]	Chruinneochthaí

The lenition of these independent forms is due to preverbal do which in Classical Irish appeared before the independent forms of the conditional and the imperfect. An elided form of do still exists in the independent forms of verbs with vocalic initial or beginning with f- followed by a vowel. Thus: [d'i:r'ahin'] d'éireochaim 'I would get up', [d'i:r'ahət]ə] d'éireochadh sé 'he would get up', [danahIN'] d'fhanóchaim 'I would wait', [danahət]ə] d'fhanóchadh sé 'he would wait' etc.¹

The more usual form for the 1st pl is sinn.

In responses to questions, an analytic or 'bare' form of the 1st sg. is not normally used e.g.

(a) [dɔrɪa]IN' ə']t'əh] An dtabharfá sin isteach? 'Would you take that in?' [v'è:rhu] Bhéarfadh. 'I would'.

(b) A.J.H. An ndéanfá úsáid ar bith eile den fhocal sin? 'Would you use that word in any other way?' Sp.5 [N'i hi:l'əm gə N'a:nhu] Ní shílím go ndéanfadh 'I don't think so'.

This feature has been observed by other scholars in Donegal and has been satisfactorily explained by Greene: 'answers are always in non-personal (which normally corresponds to 3 sg. form minus the pronoun)'. (Ériu xviii 111)

I have also noticed this for the 2 sg.:

(a) Sp.1 [N'i hqkin' hi:n'] Ní thiocfainn fhéin 'I myself would not come'.

Sp.6. [N'i ha:nhu] Ní dhéanfadh 'You would not'.

¹ Note, however, [i:sət]ə hu] íosfadh sé thú 'He would eat you' Commeen Youth.

(b) Sp.1. [N'í v'éha wad ə t'axt ə' [t'a ɔrhI n'í v'eu] Ní bhéitheá i bhfad ag teacht isteach uirthi. Ní bhéadh 'You would not be long learning it (Irish). You would not'.¹

Joyce (p.80) remarks: 'Sometimes the simple past tense is used for one of the subjunctive past forms. "If they had gone out in their boat that night they were lost men"', This type of sentence is extremely common in the Irish of this area e.g.

Dá bhfanóchadh sé mar seo coicís bhí sé maith go leor cinnte 'If it (weather) would stay like this for a fortnight it would be (lit. was) certainly alright'. Sp.1.

Lá a bhéadh sé ag cur go mór agus an tuile ag éirghe, bhal ní rabh moill tréan breac a fhagháil ag na lochannaí 'On a day when it would be raining heavily and flooding, well it would be (lit. was) easy to catch plenty of trout in the lochs'. Sp.3.

Dá dtigeadh sé isteach garbh bhí sé ina dhroch-chomhartha² 'Were there to be bad weather (at the beginning of that month) it would be (lit.
 was) a bad sign'. Sp.6.

Dá bpós(f)adh siad na mná agus páistí a thógáil, bhí an áit ag goil ar fad 'Had they married the women and reared children, the place would (lit. was) still be populated'. Sp.11.

1 This tendency to answer in the non-personal form of the third singular can also account for the loss of the 1 sg. synthetic form of the future in responses (i.e. ní dhéanfaidh v's ní dhéanfad, see Future). While the synthetic 1 sg. forms of the present are used in responses, the impersonal form may also occur:

A. [ɲlanən tʉ nə f'iaKlə] An nglanann tú na fiacla? 'Do you clean your teeth?'

B. [N'í:] Ghní 'I do'. (Cf. Ros Goill §832).

2 'Dá dtigeadh oiread a's gráinnín amháin salaimn ar an tsúgh bhí sé millte'. OCGC 159.

Hamilton offers an explanation for this type of sentence.¹

During questioning, Sp.10 rendered 'I would not give', [N'í horhu 'm'é:] ní thabharfadh mé, this was never heard in his normal speech, nor in the speech of any of the other speakers, and is best regarded as a maverick (for this generation at least!).

The preverbal particles are as those for the present tense.

While má 'if' is used with the present, past, future; [d_o] [a] dá 'if' is used with the conditional and the past subjunctive.

THE IMPERFECT INDICATIVE

In northern Donegal dialects there has been a tendency for the imperfect (and past subjunctive) to be replaced by the conditional, or for the imperfect to be formed by the periphrastic construction: ba ghnáthach + le + v.n.² The situation in this area varies.

The imperfect forms of the irregular verbs are still in common use e.g.

Bhíodh.

An bhfuil cuimhne agat-sa ar an am i mbínn-se ag goil amach leat-sa? Sp.1.

'Do you remember when I used to go out with you?'

Bhínn ag obair ar an railroad. Sp.3.

'I used to work on the railway'.

1 'The identity of the Past Tense and the Conditional Mood in the copula has given rise to some confusion of these forms in the substantive verb, so that we sometimes find the Past Tense where we would expect the Conditional Mood'. Tory p.173(n). See also G. Theil. §297.

2 Tory 171(a); Ros Goill §§420-1; ZCP 32, 174 (Fanad + Glenvar). Cf. IDPP 131 'The future and conditional [in Scottish and Manx] have been merged in the present and imperfect, respectively, mainly as a result of the silencing of -f- of the two former tenses'.

Bhíodh margadh ann roimhe seo achan Diardaoin agus bhíodh an-scaifte ann. Sp.8.

'There used to be a market there every Thursday and a great crowd used to attend'.

Gheibheadh.

Gheibheadh simn ubhallaí agus síleadh (sic.) simn an dubh-rud dó. Sp.1.

'We used to get apples and we used to think that it was a great treat'.

Ní fhuil a fhios agam-sa caidé mar gheibheadh siad an plúr acht ghníodh siad a gcuid min choirce fhéin i bhfad ó shoin. Bhí cloch acu fá choinne an mhin choirce a mheilt. Sp.10.

'I do not know how they used to get the flour but they used to make their own oatmeal long ago. They had a stone for grinding the oatmeal'.

Ghníodh.

Ghnínn mo tae (sic.) ar maidin. Sp.3.

'I used to make my tea in the morning'.

Ghníodh sé na hamhráin. Sp.19.

'He used to compose the songs'.

Ghníthí amach go rabh siad bog. Sp.11.

'It used to be thought that they were soft'.

Théigheadh.

Théigheadh seisean amach achan mhaidin sula n-itheadh sé dadaidh. Sp.1.

'He used to go out every morning before eating anything'.

Théigheadh corrbhradan soir. Sp.3.

'The occasional salmon used to go past here (lit. east)'.

Théigheadh an fear amach san oidhche a sheiftiughadh. Sp.10.

'Her husband used to go out to poach at night'.

Thigeadh.

Nuair a thigeadh sé abhaile tráthnóna. Sp.1.

'When he used to come home in the evening'.

Thigeadh dream as Béal Feirste, cá bith rud iad fhéin, go minic a fhad leis. Sp.3.

'A crowd from Belfast, whoever they were, used to visit him often'.

Thigeadh sí anoir a dh'amharc air. Sp.5.

'She used to come over and visit him'.

As will be seen, the forms bhéadh, gheobhadh, dhéanfadh, rachadh and thiocfadh may, on occasions, appear for the imperfect forms above, although the imperfect forms are quite well preserved. There is a great tendency, however, for the conditional of regular verbs to appear for the imperfect, none the less the following have been heard:

Roimhe seo thoisigheadh siad [hɔʃ^ətʰ ʃəd] i bhfad níos luaithe ná sin.

'Before this they used to start much earlier than this'.

D'óladh siad barraidheacht agus ní bhíodh siad go maith ina dhéidh.

'They used to drink too much and they used not to be well afterwards'.

Bhaineadh siad [wɪn^ətʰ ʃəd] 'they used to reap' - also [wɪn^əhət ʃəd] bhainfeadh siad.

D'fhágadh siad [dɔ:ɡətʰ ʃəd] 'they used to leave', also [dɔ:kət ʃəd] d'fhágfadh siad.

D'fheoghluinneadh siad [d'ɔ:l'im'n̩ə t̪ ʃəd] 'they used to learn' - d'fheoghaimneochadh [d'ɔ:l'im'n̩'ahu] 'would learn' D'fhiafradh sé [d'ʲiəfrət ʃə] 'he used to ask' - [d'ʲiəfrəhət ʃə] d'fhiafróchadh sé 'he would ask'.

I have heard a few examples of some verbs (mostly second conjugation) using first conjugation -(e)adh (or even -f(e)adh) for the imperfect and -(e)óchadh for the conditional.

Thus: [dan̩'n̩'] d'fhanfainn; [dan̩hə] d'fhanfá; [dan̩ət ʃə] d'fhanadh sé; [dan̩hət ʃə] d'fhanfadh sé have all been heard as imperfect forms for the verb fanacht 'to wait', while the conditional forms were usually [dan̩h̩'n̩'] d'fhanóchainn; [dan̩h̩hət ʃə] d'fhanóchadh sé etc.

Thoiseadh sé [hɔʃət ʃə] 'he used to begin' - thoiseochadh sé [hɔʃəhət ʃə] 'he would begin'. (See Conjugational Intermix).

A factor which might assist in the substitution of the imperfect by the conditional of regular verbs of the first conjugation is the homonymity between the conditional and imperfect forms of those verbs ending in -c, -p, -s and -t.¹ Thus:

- (a) [f'ʲkət ʃəd n̩'o:n̩'in̩'i] could represent: phiocadh siad neoiníní 'they used to pick daisies', or phiocfadh siad neoiníní 'they would pick daisies'.
- (b) [x'apət ʃə n̩' t'aLə] could represent: cheapadh sé an t-eallach 'he used to round up the cattle', or cheapfadh sé an t-eallach 'he would round up the cattle'.

¹ Due to the fact that f in the conditional (and future) is for the most part pronounced [h] and that the voiceless plosives (stops) are strongly aspirated - 'that is glottal fricative is perceptible after the release of the stop before the onset of the following vowel'. (Palmer 52 n.1, see further p.68).

- (c) [rɔ:sɪn'ʃə p'r'è:ətɪ] could represent: rósainn-se préataí 'I used to roast potatoes', or rósfainn-se préataí 'I would roast potatoes'.
- (d) [datu də χɔs suəs] could represent: d'atadh do chos suas 'your foot used to swell up', or d'atfadh do chos suas 'your foot would swell up'.

The same can be said for verbs ending in -ch or -th. Thus:

- (e) [wuhət [əd] could represent: mhúchadh siad 'they used to extinguish', or mhúchfadh siad 'they would extinguish'.
- (f) [χaiχ'ət [əd] could represent: chaitheadh siad 'they used to throw', or chaithfadh siad 'they would throw'.

Although it is more usual for the conditional to appear for the imperfect (especially in the case of regular verbs), there are instances (few in number) where the imperfect has been heard for the conditional e.g. [N'í hɔgət [ɛ]ən] ní thugadh seisean 'he would not give'. This often occurs with the verb mothachtáil 'to hear', - [N'í waiχ'iha dīN'ə r' b'í ə gɔl dɔ:fə nī] Ní mhoithightheá duine ar bith ag goil dóbhtha anois 'You would not hear of anyone practising them (superstitions) now'. See also ithe.

Very often both conditional and imperfect forms are used by the same speakers in the same sentence.

- (a) [l'ɪg'ət [əd ə f'è:ɪt' ə'ma ahən La: ɔgəs d'iarhət [ə ər' ə χal'in'.....] Leigeadh siad an phéist amach achan lá agus d'iarrfadh sé ar an chailín ... 'They used to let the (little) monster out every day and he used to ask the girl ...'
- (b) [u:ər 'L'è:v'ə ə v'ərət [əd ɔrɪ ɔgəs [ɔ:řšə 'f'ien' ə v'ɪr'u kɔd' ɔku ɔrɪ] Iubhar shléibhe a bhéarfadh siad uirthu agus

Seoirse Fiaidhain a bheireadh cuid acu uirthi 'Some used to call it (herb) iubhar shléibhe ('wood-sage' FGB) and others Seoirse Fiadhain (Wild George)'.¹

- (c) [ɔgəs v'í ak'id' ə gɔl' sən am fIn' hɔkət]ə ər də La:u na hɔkət [ə r də ɣɔ] b'ed'Ír' hÍg'ət]ə ma əs gortu ə dɔgət [əd ruə ər'] agus bhí aicíd ag goil san am sin, thiocfadh sé ar do lámh, nó thiocfadh sé ar do chois b'fhéidir, thigeadh sé amach as gortughadh a dtugadh siad an ruadha air. 'and there was a disease at that time, it used to appear on your hand or on your foot maybe, it used to result from a sprain which they called the Rose'.

LASID map 296 'he used to come', yielded the response ba ghnáthach leis a theacht for all the points in Donegal, apart from Ardara (pt.84) and Teelin (pt.86), which had thigeadh sé. It has been my experience to hear imperfect forms such as thigeadh, gheibheadh etc. in normal speech, but the periphrastic forms ba ghnáthach + le + v.n. in response to the English questions: 'how would you say X used to ...?'¹ Nevertheless the periphrastic forms do occur in this area and examples include:

Ba ghnáthach le beathach a bheith i gcomhnuidhe annsin maise

Sp.1. (Cf. bhíodh above).

'There used to always be a horse there, indeed!'

Ba ghnáthach le mná fad ó shoin botannaí a dhéanamh agus iad a dhíol ar an mhargadh. Sp.1. (Sp.1. also used ghníodh).

'Women used to make 'bots' (of butter) and sell them at the market long ago'.

Ní fhuil oiread Gaedhilg fá Ghleann Fhinne a's ba ghnáthach a bheith' Sp.3. (Cf. bhíodh above).

'There is not as much Gaelic (spoken) around Glenfinn as there used to be'.

Ba ghnáthach leobhtha a bheith taobh amuigh de na Gleanntaí.
Sp.3.

'They used to (stay) outside the Glenties'.

(Cf. Bhíodh siad fá Ghaoth Dobhair 'They used to (stay) about Gweedore' Sp.3)

Ba ghnáthach le bunadh Leitir síos fá na Rosa eallaigh a chur aníos go dtí an cnoc sin agus ... Sp.6.

'The people of Leitir down by the Rosses used to send cattle up to that hill and ...'

(Sp.6 also used imperfect forms very frequently).

The following sentence was also heard:

Ba ghnáthach le nead a bheith ag an iolar roimhe seo ann, bhíodh corr-chionn fán tír an t-am sin.¹

'The eagle used to have a nest there before this, there used to be the odd one in the country at that time.'

These

examples illustrate the difficulty in trying to make a definite statement on the state of the imperfect in this dialect - I have heard: thigeadh sé; ba ghnáthach leis a theacht and bhíodh sé ag teacht² 'he used to come', from one speaker - Nevertheless it would appear that the imperfect survives better here than in northern Donegal

1 The following was heard from Sp.1.: 'Sin an áit i gcoinnigheadh siad ... ba ghnáthach leobhtha an t-eallach a choinneáilt lá an aonaigh - s.v. panca.

2 The use of bhíodh + ag + v.n. is another method employed to form the imperfect in this area. Cf. Bhíodh siad ag stopadh sa teach sin thiar. 'They used to stay in that house next door'.

dialects as described by Evans, Hamilton and Lucas.¹

Hybrid forms.

In addition to the survival of old imperfect forms, the emergence of periphrastic forms, the use of the conditional for the imperfect (and vice-versa, to a lesser extent), new hybrid forms have also emerged. These hybrid forms, which occur sporadically, are combinations of the imperfect and conditional forms of some irregular verbs. Examples heard were:

- (a) [dIr'hu],[der'hu] i.e. deirfeadh (< imperf. deireadh X condit. deárfadh). Several examples.
- (b) [v'er'hu] i.e. bheirfeadh (< imperf. bheireadh X condit. bhéarfadh) Several examples.
- (c) [N'i hoku] i.e. ní thugfadh (imperf. thugadh X f of condit.) Two examples.
- (d) [d'If'u] i.e. d'ithfeadh (imperf. d'itheadh X f of condit.) One example.

The past tense can also occur where the imperfect might be expected. Examples include:

Bhí cuid acu ag bualadh bos ar a cheile. Sp.2.

'Some of them used to slap hands (making a deal)'

Bhí siad ag magadh ort cionnus tú a bheith ag cainnt Gaedhilg.

Sp.6.

'They (people of the town) used to make fun of you because you

1 The imperfect would appear to have been holding out well in Teelin: 'Ach ní feidir a rádh go mbéadh an gnáth-chaite a dul ar gcúl i dTeil. de bharr an coingheallach a bheith a brúghadh isteach ina ait'. G. Theil. §296.

spoke Gaelic'.

I have not heard any of the 1 pl. forms ending in [mʷi]t̪' heard by Quiggin (Qu. §392) - Cf. FGT §240.

The lenition of the independent forms of the imperfect is caused by the same particle which preceded the conditional. An elided form of do is still heard before verbs with vocalic initial or f followed by a vowel e.g. [dʌn̪iːn̪'] d'fhanainn 'I used to wait'.

The main preverbal particles are those used for the present (N.B. dá 'if').

For complete (or reasonably complete) paradigms of the imperfect see: fagháil, goil, substantive verb, and teacht.

THE SUBJUNCTIVE

O'Rahilly described the state of the subjunctive in the modern language: 'All through the Modern Irish period the subjunctive has been gradually falling into disuse - a phenomenon which has its parallel in the history of other languages, such as English and French. In the Irish of Keating and his contemporaries the use of the subjunctive is much restricted as compared with the earlier language; and during the last three centuries it has lost further ground and is tending to disappear'.

The Present Subjunctive.

In this dialect, as in other dialects, the optative use of the present subjunctive is preserved in set phrases such as: [gōrə maɪʰ ŋgəd] Go rabh maith agat 'Thank you'. [gə d'è: tu sLɑ:n] Go dtéighidh tú slán 'safe journey'. [Nɑr af'r'I d'ie ɔrt ə] Nár aithbhrídh Dia ort é 'May God not reproach thee for it'. Even so, there is a noticeable tendency to replace the present subjunctive with the future: [gə ɡɔd'ahI d'ie l'iv'] Go gcuideochaidh Dia libh 'May God assist you'. In a prayer, recorded from Sp.5, the subjunctive and future were both used: 'go cuiridh tú [g'ir'ə tu] mé ar an eolas; go seolfaidh tu [ʃɔ:l'hə tu] m'anam go ríoghachta na Glóire' TEXT 69.

The present subjunctive can also be heard in normal speech, as the following examples show:

Tais(p)eánaidh mise duit é sulma n-imthighidh tú [N'Im'i tu] Sp.1.

'I shall show it to you before you leave'. Sp.1.

Taigheam (?) anall cupla fód mónadh go dtógaidh mé [gə do:gə m'ə] traifeal teas. Sp.11.

'Hand me over a few sods of turf until I heat the place up'.

muna mbualaidh tú [mu^ələ tu]

'if you do not strike'.

See also LASID map 258: '(wait till) I am (at home)'.

The present subjunctive of the verb teacht 'to come' is extremely common:

Tiocfaidh an-tomannaí millteanacha ar sin sulmá dtigidh [d'Ig'i] an barr.

'That (plant) will have a dense growth of bush before the fruit develops'. Sp.3.

Coinnigh coimhead ar mo pháistí go dtigidh mé [gə d'Ig'i m'ə] isteach.

'Mind my children until I come [back] in'. Sp.8.

as seo amach go dtigidh [gə d'Ig'i] mí na Lúghnasna. Sp.11.

'from now on until August'.

mur dtigidh cogaidh Sp.16.

'provided wars do not come'.

It is true to say, however, that the future tense appears frequently where the present subjunctive is expected in regular (and irregular) verbs.

The preverbal particles are usually those used for the present indicative, but the following were also heard: [ə'ra] nar d'ig'i [Iv'] Arais nár dtigidh sibh. 'May you not return!' [nar a: tu ə] Nár fhagha tú é 'May you not get it'.

The Past Subjunctive

There is a strong tendency for the conditional to replace the past subjunctive of the regular verbs but this development is by no means complete as the following examples show:

Dá dtuiginn [da d'g'in'] é, bhéadh a fhios agam é. Sp.1.

'Were I to understand it [English word] I would know [the Irish for] it'.

go dtí go seangadh sé [[anət ə] go dtí go bhfheoigheadh sé [v'jo:it ə].

'until it would season until it would dry up'. Sp.1.¹

Maise, tá mórán de shean-fhocla beaga agam dá gcuimhnighinn [a göv'n'in'] orthu. Sp.5.

'Indeed, I know plenty of little proverbs were I able to recall them'.

Dá dtógadh sinn [da do:gət 'IN'] callán ar bith. Sp.11.

'Were we to make any noise'.

There are forms of the past subjunctive and conditional which 1 Cf. [da nɔ:lhIN'ə] dá n-ólfainnse 'were I to drink'; [da məkət ə] dá mbogfadh sé 'were he to stir'. Both Sp.1.

which cannot be distinguished (i.e. verbs ending in -c, -ch, -p, -s, -t and -th; see Imperfect) e.g. [a v'ek'ət]ə] dá bhfeic(f)eadh sé 'were he to see'; [a gaiχ'ət]ə] dá gcaith(f)eadh sé 'were he to throw'; [a bɔ:sət]əd] dá bpós(f)adh siad 'had they married'. [a d'It'ət]ə] dá dtit(f)eadh sé 'were it to have fallen'. Forms such as these would have a catalytic effect in the substitution of the past subjunctive by the conditional.¹

The past subjunctive of fagháil 'to get' and the dependent of the conditional appear frequently for each other: [wI:u] , [wɔ:u] -bhfuigheadh, -bhfaghadh.

The past subjunctive of déanamh 'to do' is usually supplied by the dependent form of the conditional: [da n'anhət]ə gl:] Dá ndéanfadh sé gaoth. 'Were it to become windy'.

The past subjunctive of the verbs bheith 'to be', goil 'to go', teacht 'to come' are quite commonly heard - although the conditional is also used at times:

-bíodh.

Féadaidh siad a bheith deas go leor, acht ní fhuil tú 'do chomh-nuidhe acu, dá mbíodh [a m'i:u] , bhéadh a fhios agat caidé an rud iad.

'They may be nice enough, but you are not living with them, if you were, you would know what they are (really) like'. Sp.11.

Sp.1, showed dual usage:

Dá mbínn-sé [da m'i:n']ə] gasta chuideochainn leat.

'Were I fit (and able) I would help you'.

1 The 2 sg. forms of the past subjunctive ending in -thá and the passive forms ending in -th(a)í would fall together with the conditional forms ending in -fá, -f(a)í.

Dá mbéadh [a m'au] an lá go measardha maith.

'Were it to be a reasonably good day'.

-téigheadh.¹

Dá dtéightheá [a d'e:χ'a] an aithghiorra, b'fhéidir nach bhfúightheá an áit ar chor ar bith. Sp.1.

'Were you to take the short cut, you may not be able to find the place at all'.

Dá dtéightheá isteach i gcionn acu sin. Sp.10.

'Were you to fall (lit. go) into one of them'.

-tígeadh.²

Dá dtígeadh sneachta.

'Were it to snow'.

Bhéadh sé deas dá dtígeadh sé anois. Sp.10a.

'It would be nice if it were to come now'.

The past subjunctive of rádh 'to say', has been heard: [da n'ēr'ət [ə] Dá ndeireadh sé 'were he to say', although the conditional has been heard more frequently [Nə [axt suəl 'k'i da n'erha iəd] na seacht subháilcí dá ndéarfá iad. 'were you to recite the seven joys'
Sp.5 TEXT 70.

The following are examples of the mixed usage of past subjunctive and conditional:

Creidim nach mbínn [na m'i:n'] ábalta iad a rádh i nGaedhilg.

'I do not believe I could say them in Irish'.

Creidim nach mbéadh seisean [na m'èt [ε]ən] ábalta a theacht

'I suppose he could not come'.

1 LASID map 294 'if you went', has dá rachfá and dá dtéightheá for pt.83

2 See teacht in Paradigms.

THE IMPERATIVE MOOD

The imperative is mostly heard in the second and third persons singular and plural. The first person is usually supplied by the future tense or by a form which closely resembles the old synthetic form of the present indicative. In response to LASID q.328 'let's play a game of cards' Sps.1 and 3 answered: [Im' r' ahəm^wid'] Imreoch-aidh muid ..., while Sp.10 answered: [Im' ərə m^wid'] Imearamuid ... The use of the future for the first person plural in Donegal has been discussed by Hamilton (Éigse xvii 104) who cites examples from Donegal of: 'Imperatives in meaning even if future in form'.¹ It would appear from this, that the fut. 1 sg. in the following is probably best translated as an imperative:

'Beirt ansin a bhéadh ag cogarnaigh fá scéal eighinteacht nár mhaith leobhtha a ghoil níos fuide, déarfaidh mé (= 1 sg. fut.) dá mbéadh scéal agat-sa ...' Sp.1.

'Two people who would be whispering about some story who would not want it to go any further, let's say you were to have a story ...'

The form imearamuid resembles the form imthigheamuid linn ('let's go') recorded by Wagner in Teelin (G. Theil. §289) None the less it is difficult to attest forms of the first person from normal speech and (as has been pointed out with the imperfect forms) it is not always possible to receive accurate forms through the medium of questions in English.

1 Hamilton points out that: 'Another difficulty is that the form in question [Ipve.1 pl.] has died out in the English of North-West Ulster; colloquially one says "We'll go to the pictures" rather than "Let's go to the pictures". Thus the use of the Future does not seem strange to Ulster ears'.

The most common forms heard are those of the second persons singular and plural. The forms of the second singular are by and large consistent. Thus for verbs of the first conjugation the forms are: [to:q] tóg 'lift', [glak] glac 'take', etc. The forms for verbs of the second conjugation are: [kr'IN'i] cruinnigh 'gather', [k'ANI] ceannaigh 'buy', etc.

The second person plural for verbs such as cruinnigh is consistently [kr'IN'ig'i] cruinnigidh 'gather'. In the majority of cases the 2 pl. ending [ig'i] -(a)igidh has now spread to verbs of the first conjugation, thus: [ɔ:læg'i ɔ] ólaigidh seo 'drink this', [fan'ig'i l'omsə] fanaigidh liom-sa 'wait for me'. Nevertheless I have noted some examples of the older forms ending in [i] / [I]

-(a)idh:

Tógaidh [to:qI] libh na bearáid anois. Sp.8 (recalling an incident which happened to his father).

'Pick up the caps now'.

Stadaidh. [stədI] 'Stop'. Sp.5.

Tugaidh [tʊgI] aire mhaith daoibh fhéin. Sp.6.

'Take good care of yourselves'.

Tugaidh. 'Give' Sp.3 - more usually [tʊgəg'i] tugaigidh.

(In a folktale collected in this area by Seán Bán Ac Meanman the following occurred: Tabhairidh damh an gráinnín beag sin. ; Siubhailidh libh síos go bruach an locha. - An tUltach Márta 1985, 27).

The forms of the third person may also be heard: [b'i:ət ʃə] bíodh se 'let it be', [nə f'ek'ət ʃi] ná feiceadh sí 'let her not see', [nə k'ir'ət ʃəd] ná cuireadh siad 'let them not put'.

Positive forms in the third person may also be formed by a periphrastic method. This is usually cead¹ aige/aici/acu + v.n. e.g.

1 Occ. chead.

[k'ad 'i:g'ə suəhu l'ɛ:] Cead aige suathadh leis! 'Let him do whatever to hell he likes!'

Forms of the second person plural based on forms of the third person may occasionally be heard. These have only been heard in translations of English questions. Thus, 'don't yousens (= Std. Eng. you) go' was answered: [nɑ t'è:ət ʃIv'] ná téigheadh sibh, by Sp.10. Sp.3 translated LASID q.1007 'mind yourselves', [k'iv'adəg'it ʃIv' hi:n'] coimhéadaigiheadh (!) sibh féin.

The verbs teacht 'to come' goil 'to go' feiceáil 'to see' and cluinsteán 'to hear' have taradh, téigheadh, feiceadh and cluineadh in the third person of the imperative, but have suppletive forms for the second person (See Paradigms for examples).

In the forms of the second person the emphatic pronouns thusa and ibhse may be suffixed. [nɑ b'i: hɔsə m'IL'u dɑdI] Ná bí thusa ag milleadh dadaidh 'Don't you be ruining anything' - Passáil thusa chuig [əq'] Art é. 'You pass it to Art'; [gɔ:əg'i Iv'] [ə nɛ wəl'ə] Gabhaighidh ibhse 'un an bhaile 'Go yousens (Std. Eng. you) home'. (See IDPP 229).

For the occurrence of [i'd'i] for [i'g'i] - igidh in the second person plural. see p.249.

THE VERBAL NOUN

The verbal noun in this area (and Irish as a whole) carries out the functions of the infinitive and the present participle in English.

[d'iar m'ə ər' sI:]

D'iarr mé air suidhe.

'I asked him to sit (down)'.
7

[wíl' ʃag' õbər']

An bhfuil sé ag obair.

'Is he working?'

Some other uses of the verbal noun are listed below:

In negative constructions gan + verbal noun are used.

[hu:ru l'omsə gən Im'ah̃t] hubhradh liom-sa gan imtheacht.

'I was told not to leave'.

The verbal noun is used in indirect forms of the imperative.

[d'iar ʃi arəm ʃIn' ə χahu ər χ'u:ə̃l]

D'iarr sí orm sin a chathamh ar shiubhal.

'She asked me to throw that away'.

The particle a (< preposition do) occurs before beith, teacht and goil when ag does not precede. The a may be elided but the lenition still remains. Thus B'éigean domh-sa siubhal 'I had to walk'; yet B'éigean domh-sa 'theacht 'I had to come', etc.

When the object precedes the verbal noun the order is usually object + a + v.n.

[n'í h̃ok̃u l'ɛ[ən wɔ: ə χ'apu]

Ní thiocfadh leis an bhó a cheapadh.

'He could not round up the cow'.

When used with the substantive verb the order is ag + v.n. + object (gen. or nom., see Genitive).

[t̃a ʃi b'í'j: nə bɔ:ə̃]

Tá sí ag blighe na bó.

'She is milking the cow'.

In sentences of the type 'he is killing them' (LASID q.144) the construction is do (often reduced to a or zero) + possessive adjective (object) + v.n. Examples include:

[tə]ə da maruwə]

Tá sé dá marbhadh.

'He is killing them'.

[v'in kat da χoməL't' hi:n']

Bhí an cat dá chumailt fhéin.

'The cat was rubbing himself'. (Cf. LASID q.206)

[v'i]ə dar v'jɔ:ləm' (d'oyəsk)]

Bhí sé dár bhfeoghluim (dteagasc).

'He was teaching us' (LASID q.738).

[v'i]ə mə γortu]

Tá sé 'mo dhortughadh.¹

'It is hurting me'.

When used with le, fá choinne, ag brath and ag goil a, the verbal noun can express purpose or intention:

[l'ɛ] ə k'ɔN k'art ə χör ər' haχ] leis an cionn ceart a chur ar theach.

'to put a proper roof on a house'.

[w'il']ə fɔN'ə fanacht]

An bhfuil sé fá choinne fanacht?

'Does he intend to stay?' ('Is he for staying?' Local English).

[v'i]ə bra to[u]

Bhí sé ag brath toisiughadh. 'He was about to start'.

1 N.B. ag bualadh/cruinniughadh é 'hitting him/gathering it', Tá mise ag goil a shábháil í 'I am going to save her' - all heard from younger generations.

[tə m'ə ɡɔɪ' ə jənu brɪ:n tE:]

Tá mé ag goil a dhéanamh braon tae.

'I am going to make a drop of tea'.

With verbs of motion the verbal noun is also used with a (< do) to express purpose.

[χuə [ə ə L^oI:]

Chuidh se a luighe.

'He went to bed'.

The verb toiseacht 'to start', is sometimes followed by a and other times by ag.

[hu:səhu ən tɔt' ə haxt ə'ma əs ən a:i^x']

Thúsóchadh an toit a theacht amach as an áith.

'The smoke would start to come out of the kiln'.

[gər hɔ]ə [ə ə m'ah]

gur thoisigh sé ag meath.

'until it started to decay'.

Sp.3 had:[ə lɑ:r ə lE: ə rəhəi ə jɛ]k'ər'əht]

I lár an lae a rachfaí a dh'éiscireacht (normally iascaireacht).

'Fishing would be done in the middle of the day'.

yet: [rəhə [əd ə d'i:ə] nə hu:n' ə'līg']

Rachaidh siad ag díol na huain uilig.

'They will begin to sell all the lambs'.

[səw' arə ə hu:səhu nə kI:r'í ə v'r'e u:əⁿ]

San earrach a thúsóchadh na caoirigh a bhreith uan.

'The sheep would begin lambing in Spring'.

See further p.19.

See [j] and [ɣ] for verbs beginning with a vowel, when dh' precedes (although dh' may be absent, especially with younger speakers).

Another important periphrastic use of the verbal noun is the construction substantive verb + i ndéidh + v.n. which forms the recent past:

[ta [ə (gə d'i:r'a) n'e: haɣt ə' [t'a]

Tá sé (go díreach) i ndéidh a theacht isteach.

'He has (just) come in'. ('He is (just) after coming in'. in local English).

The verbal noun lenites certain nouns in phrases such as: ag goil cheoil 'singing', ag baint mhónadh 'cutting turf'.

Some verbs have variant forms of the verbal noun (often in use by the same speaker) e.g. [L'e:m'n'i], [L'è:m'n'a], [L'è:m'in't'] léimnigh, léimneach, léimnint 'to jump'. [kaL'u], [kaL'w'in't'] cailleadh, cailleamhaint (cailleamhuin Gallagher 20) 'to lose'; [skaru], [skarəw'in't'] scaradh, scaramhaint 'to part'; [kaN't'] [kaNəw'in't'] cain(n)t, canamhaint 'to talk'; [stapu], [stap'in't'] stopadh stop(amh)aint 'to stop'; [glak'in't'], [glakən] glacaint, glacan 'to take'; [mɔxtal'], [mɔhu] mothachtáil, mothughadh 'to hear, sense'; the verb 'to start' had four variants: [tɔ'u], [tɔ'aht], [tu:ʃaht], [tu:su] toisiughadh, toiseacht, túiseacht, túsughadh.

Those verbal nouns which have a parasitic t suffixed often vary in form e.g. [f'ek'al't'], [fɛk'al'] feiceáilt/feiceáil 'to see'; [kɔN'al't'], [kɔN'al'] coinneáilt, coinneáil 'to keep'.

The forms of regular verbs which were written -(e)adh and (i)ughadh both give [u]. I have one example of an analogical form [d'i:əlu] díoladh 'to sell' - normally [d'i:ə] díol.

The termination [a:l'] -áil is used to form the v.n. of English loanwords e.g. beatáil, 'to beat', ring-áil 'to ring', startáil 'to start' etc.

THE VERBAL ADJECTIVE

The verbal adjective is used with the substantive verb to indicate a state [ta [ə kōrhə] Tá sé curtha 'He is buried'; [v'i [ə b'r'I[t'ə] Bhí sé briste 'It was broken'. It is used attributively [fwi'n'ag v'r'I[t'ə] fuinneog bhriste 'a broken window'.

Another important use of the verbal adjective is in the formation of the perfect tenses. These are formed with the substantive verb + verbal adjective + preposition ag. The tenses and moods are determined by the tense or mood of the substantive verb, and the agent is expressed by the form of the preposition.

Tá an madadh tógtha [to:kə] mar sin acu.

'They have reared the dog that way'.

Nuair a bhí sin díolta [d'i:ˠLtə] aige.

'When he had sold that'.

Bíonn sé cruinn [kr'in'] suas ag Eoin fá choinne an gheimhridh.

'Eoin has it gathered up for the winter'.

Bhéadh an dinnéar ithte [It'ə] acu.

'They would have eaten their dinner'.

Béidh sin déanta [d'antə] aici.

'She will have done that'.

Dá mbíodh na caoirigh dip-áilte [dIp'aLt'ə] agat.

'Were you to have dipped your sheep'.

Fan go rabh an tae ólta [ɔ:Ltə] acu.

'Wait till they drink their tea'.

Bhíodh an mhóin sin cróigthe [krɔ:k'ə] acu.

'They used to have that turf footed'.

Verbs of the second conjugation ending in -igh may have a verbal adjective [I] < -ighthe (IDPP 207f.) e.g. [k'əNI] ceannuighthe 'bought'. But it is very common for this [I] to spread to verbal adjectives of the first conjugation and for -[i]t'ə, -[I]t'ə to be used for verbs of the second conjugation: [b'ɪi]t'ə] bisighste 'cured', [f'ɔ:ləm'ɪ]t'ə] feoghlaimiste 'learned'. (Three theories exist as to the origin of [I]t'ə], see Qu §356; IDPP 172; and Ériu xxxi 39f. (Ó Buachalla).

The usual verbal adjective endings for verbs of the first conjugation are: [tə] -ta; [t'ə] -te; or [hə] -tha, -the e.g. [kəntə] canta 'said', [pɔltə] pollta 'punctured, stabbed'. [b'r'ɪ]t'ə] briste 'broken', [b'wɪn't'ə] bainte 'cut', [tɔ:kə] tógtha 'lifted', [lɔmhə] lomtha 'stripped'.

As has been stated above, quite a few first conjugation verbs have adopted the ending [I] by analogy with verbs of the second conjugation (I transcribe these -aí, -í). Thus: [ʃɔkI] siocthaí 'frozen' (siocaidh Gallagher 16) [atI] ataí 'swollen'; [glakI] glacthaí 'taken'.

Some verbs have variant forms and some examples include: [d'ɪ:ə]t'ə], [d'ɪ:ə]tI] díolta/díoltaí 'sold'; [drɪt'ə] (rarely [drɪt'ɪ]) druidte/druidtí 'closed'; [kɔrhə], [kɔrt'ə] curtha/cuirte 'put', [ʃk'r'ɪ:fə], [ʃk'r'ɪ:fI], [ʃk'r'ɪ:ft'ə] scríobhtha/scríobhthaí/scríobhta (scríbhte(?)) 'written'; [kɔ:r'ɪ], [kɔ:r'ɪ]t'ə] cóirighthe/cóirighste 'fixed'; [k'əNI], [k'əNI]t'ə] ceannuighthe/ceannuighste 'bought'; [fask'ɪl't'ə], [fask'ɪI] foscailte/fosclai 'open'; [L'ɪt'r'ɪ]t'ə], [L'ɪt'ərə] litrighste/liteartha 'spelt'.

USES OF déanamh

In this area déanamh is very often used in responses, instead of the verb in the question e.g.

- | | |
|---|---------------------------------|
| A. An éirigheann sé amach anois? | B. Ní dhéan [N'í ha:n] |
| 'Does he go out now?' | 'No'. |
| A. An ólfaidh tú braon tae? | B. Dhéanfaidh [ja:nhI] |
| 'Will you drink (have) a drop of tea | 'Yes'. |
| A. Ar bhligh tú tráthnóna? | B. Ní thearn. [N'í ha:r] |
| 'Did you milk this evening?' | 'No'. |

Cf. 'An sparalfa or no airgiod, do mhaoin no do shubstaint air lucht dlighe an do chas a phledail? Ní dheanfa, gan amhrus maiseadh', (Gallagher 30, see also 'Ar ghearr tú é? Rinn. etc'. Ros Goill §534).

Responses in the second person singular are problematic.

- | | |
|--|----------------------------|
| A. An gcuirfidh mé sin isteach? | B. [d'a:n ə ¹] |
| 'Shall I put it in?' | 'Yes'. (Do) |
| A. An rachaidh mé anonn anois? | B. [d'a:n ə] |
| 'Shall I go over now?' | 'Yes'. (Do) |

Sommerfelt recorded the form [nə d'æ:n ə] 'don't do it' (Lochl. III 256 - Torr.) In the minds of the speakers this is regarded as déan é, and was written thus by Donegal authors. McGonagle (Éigse xvii 203f.) has suggested that the form [d'a:n ə] is an old form of the 2 sg. ipve. of the verb déanamh i.e. déana (O. Ir. déne) which coexists with the more usual form déan. The following example from Keating would show that the 2 sg. ipve. was used in this type of situation.

'... agus adubhairt ris an naomh Mo Chua go rachadh go Durlas d'fhios Guaire d'fhagháil a shásuighthe feóla.

1 Approaching a distinct [ɔ] → [ə] sound. Cf. Ó Searcaigh's [e].

Ná déin, ar Mo Chua'. (Keat. p.33.10)

Historically then [d'a:n ə] derives from the old 2 sg. ipve. déana, in the minds of the speakers, however, it is now regarded as déan é 'do it'.

This use of déanamh is not restricted to responses:

Bhéadh na cait ina luighe fán teinidh agus na luchógaf ag goil thart fá dtaobh daobhtha agus ní amharcóchadh siad orthu. Ní dhéanfadh!

'The cats would be lying by the fire and the mice would be going around them and they would not look at them. They would not!'

- | | |
|--|-------------------------|
| A. Caithfidh sé gur dhíol sé an olam indé | B. An dtearn? |
| 'He must have sold his wool yesterday'. | 'Did he?' |
| A. Níor glanadh sin le round bliadhantaí. | B. Ní thearnadh. |
| 'That has not been cleaned for many years now'. | 'It has not'. |
| A. D'éirigh sé an-dorcha. | B. Rinne |
| 'It has got very dark'. | 'It has'. |
| A. Cuirfidh an fuacht isteach air. | B. Dhéanfaidh. |
| 'The cold will affect him'. | 'It will'. |

As with other dialects déanamh is used as an auxiliary with verbal nouns which are not normally conjugated e.g. Rinne sé gáire 'He laughed'. Rinne sé scread 'He screamed'. It has also been used in the following: Dhéanfadh sí thú a bhualadh 'She would hit you'.

RELATIVE FORMS

Special relative forms are still in use in this area in affirmative forms of the present and future tenses which are not directly followed by a pronoun. Some examples of the old forms of the present include:

Briseann corr-chionn acu amach acht má bhriseann fhéin, an-bheagán acu a bhriseas [v'r'ɪʃəs] amach. Sp.1.

'The odd one breaks out but even so, very few of them break out'.

Sin rudaí a imthigheas [ɪm'ʲiəs] dóbhtha. Sp.1.

'Those (scales) are (the) things which come off them (fish)'.

I ndéidh na hoidhche a thigeas [hɪɔ'əs] an ghráinneog fhéir amach. Sp.3.

'The hedgehog comes out at night'.

Corr-dhuine a ghníós [N'i:ʲs] crossa beaga baoideacha fá choinne ... Sp.5.

'The odd person makes tiny little crosses to ...'

An fear a ghníós an báinín agus an t-éadach. Sp.10.

'The man who makes the flannel and the cloth'.

In addition to the old forms, there are forms based on the present stem -ann plus the relative suffix s. (Cf. IDPP 220; 271).

This form is commonly heard in this area:

Nuair a bhíonnas [v'i:ns] an féar ar an talamh bíonn an-rud bainne ag na ba. Sp.2.

'When there is (plenty of) grass on the ground the cows yield a lot of milk'.

Tá cuid acu a choinnigheanns [χɔnəns] tréan eallaigh go fóill. Sp.3.

'Some of them still keep plenty of cattle'.

Sin an crann a chuireanns [χ'ɪr'əns] an forestry'. Sp.5.

'That is the (type of) tree the forestry plants'.

rudaí a fhásanns [ɑ:səns] ar lochannaí. Sp.6.

'things which grow on lochs'.

The normal non-relative form of the present tense may occur, and indeed the old relative, the -anns relative, or the non-relative form may be heard in the speech of some speakers e.g.

Nuair a thigeas [hɪg'əs] an galar cleiteach orthu.

'When the moulting disease comes upon them'. Sp.3.

Sin an oidhche is mó a théigheanns [he:ns] daoiní a fhad leis. Sp.3.

'It is mostly on that night that people go to it'.

an fiabhras sin a thig [hɪg'] ar a gcuid úth. Sp.3.

'that disease which affects their udders'.

Examples of the relative form of the future include:

Nuair a bhéas [v'e:əs] Lá na gCoinneal ann. Sp.1.

'When Candlemas arrives (fut.)'. Sp.1.

Cá bith a thiocfas [hɔkəs] caithfidh tú theacht leis. Sp.3.

'Whatever comes (fut.) you will have to put up with it'.

a shoillseochas [həl'ʃəhəs] 'will shine', Sp.6 TEXT 39.

O'Rahilly when dealing with the relative endings stated that:

'In Northern Irish the relative endings have generally held their ground. Nevertheless decay has set in. With pronouns the non-relative form tends to be employed. Expressions like nuair a bhíonn tú, is minic a chuireann tú, goidé dhéanfa tú, are heard in Donegal and S.E. Ulster; and Gallagher writes an uair a bhion se.' (IDPP 219f.)

In this area the situation varies for relative forms of the verb followed by pronouns. The relative is always used in the phrase Caidé a ólfas [ɔ:lʰəs] tú? 'What do you want to drink?' Note also, Cá bith fear a leagfas [l'ökəʃ] sí a lámh air sin an fear a chaithfeas [χaihəs] dfol ar shon an raiclfín. 'Whichever man she puts her hand upon that is the man who must pay the bill'. Sp.8. The following illustrate the indeterminate nature of the occurrence of relative versus non-relative forms when the verb is followed by a pronoun in this area:

Is annamh a tchífeas [t'í:fəs] tú madadh ruadh. Sp.3.

'It is seldom that you will see a fox'.

Is annamh a tchífidh tú corr mhónadh. Sp.5.

'It is seldom that you will see a heron'.

Yet: Béidh am eighinteacht i gcomhnuidhe sa bhliadhain a ghlacfaidh sí an galar cleiteach. Sp.3.

'There will always be some time in the year when it (hen) will catch the moulting disease'.

Nuair a thiocfas sé. Sp.5.

'When he comes (fut.)'.

In response to LASID q.416: 'What do you think of the war?', Sps.1 and 10 answered: Caidé a shíleas [hi:l'əs] tú den chogadh?
while Sp.3 answered: Caidé a shíleann tú ...

In the negative relative form of the future the ordinary future (or present tense) form is normally used. Nevertheless I have heard Cad chuige nach n-innseochas [n'IN'ʃahəs] tú domh go bhfuil tú ag imtheacht? 'Why won't you tell me that you are leaving'.

I have recorded two examples of the relative in use in a non-relative situation:

Deireas [d'ēr'əs] na Rosannaigh i gcomhnuidhe. Sp.1

'The Rosses people always say'.

Reathas [rəhəs] sé i ndúthchas daoiní. Sp.16.

'It runs in peoples' nature'.

The relative form of the present habitual of the substantive verb, bíos, is usually lenited. An bunadh a bhíos [v'i:əs] istuigh. 'The people who are indoors'. C'ainm uaf a bhíos [v'i:əs] air? 'What's this it gets called?' In other areas of Donegal bíos tends to resist lenition. - The form bíonns is also common. Nuair a bhíonns [v'i:ns] ... 'When there is ...'

The future form béas has been heard lenited and unlenited: Is beag a bhéas [v'e:s] ag goil isteach. 'Few will be going in (to heaven)'. Draw a béas [b'e:s] ann. 'It (match) will end in a draw'.

I have only heard one example of the past tense relative of the copula [bəs] caidé b'is (bas?) chiall dó sin? 'What was the reason for that?' This would appear to be based on the relative present tense form [əs] Caidé is ciall do sin? 'What is the reason for that?'

THE RELATIVE CLAUSE

There is a tendency on the part of the young people or those of the older generations given to English to substitute a direct relative for an indirect relative e.g.

An áit atá na páirceanna glas sin, Sp.4

'The place where those green fields are'.

Achan áit a théigheann tú, Cén áit a toiseann (< toisigheann) sin?

'Everywhere you go'.

'Where does that start?'

An teach a tháinig P. as, Sp.11a

'The house which P. came out of'.

An block seo a bhí elephant air, Child

'This block which an elephant was on'.

An rud a bhí d'ordóg air.

'The thing that your thumb was on'.

Sin rud a gheibheann tú howlt air le do lámh.

'That is the thing which you take hold of',

With dóigh there is variance in the speech of quite a few speakers.

Sp.16, for example, usually used an indirect relative e.g. Sin an dóigh i rabh sé de 'That was how it was'. In response to LASID q.561 'That's the way they did it' Sp.1 had Sin an dóigh i dtear(n) siad é. Sp.3 had Sin an dóigh a rinne siad é (pres. ... a ghní siad ...).¹ Sp.10 had Sin an dóigh i ndéan siad é (pres.) yet for 'That's the way they get it', he had Sin an dóigh i bhfaghann (alt. a gheibheann) siad é. Sp.4 usually had the direct relative e.g. Sin an dóigh a fuair sé ... 'That is how he got ...' yet note Sin an dóigh i n-amharcaim-sa air 'That is how I look at it' Sp.4. Sp.5 had Sin an dóigh i dtearnadh an t-amhrán 'That was how the song was made (up)' yet Sin an dóigh a bhí sé 'That was how it was'.

Examples of indirect relatives for direct relatives are rare, but note Brigid a sabháileann daoiní TEXT 57.

CHA

The main preverbal particles: ní (leniting); an, go, nach (all eclipsing) have been dealt with under the Present Tense, and the preverbal particles níor, ar, gur, nár have been dealt with under the Past Tense. There is one other preverbal particle which deserves special mention, namely cha.

O'Rahilly discusses the negative particles ní (< O.Ir. ní) and cha (< Mid.Ir. nocha < O.Ir. nícon) in Donegal. His views as to the origins of cha will not be dealt with here, but his statement regarding the distribution of cha is important: 'In Donegal both cha and ní are in use today; in the south of that county the common negative is ní, cha being rare, but in Inishowen and Fanad in the extreme north, it appears that cha alone is employed, except in níl'. IDPP 166. The works of Evans, Hamilton and Lucas show the widespread use of cha in north Donegal. The occurrence of cha in the south of the county has been described by Wagner: 'Ní bhaintear féim as cha (i n-áit ní) i dTeil. ach amháin cha n-fheil. Ach chuala mé [ha n'æ:nhu] cha ndéan-fadh [hanæki] cha n-fheacaigh aig sean-iascaire Theil. a bhíodh ag iascaireacht thart fa na Rosa (agus na Dúnáin) fada ó shoin'. G. Theil. §542. Quiggin (§178) remarks: 'I can only say that in Meenawannia cha is generally confined to emphatic answers and here principally in ha ·nel', ha row being much rarer. Further east round Ballinamore cha seems to be much more frequent'.

This area would appear to be more akin to the situation in Ballinamore as described by Quiggin.¹ There is quite a lot of social contact between the area of this study and the Ballinamore (Fintown, Brockagh) area (all near to LASID pt.82). The only contact I know of between this area and Meenawannia was the occasional hill walk to there by Sp.6 to recover some stray sheep. It should be borne in mind, however, that Quiggin's remarks in his introduction (p.1) seem to hint at a more widespread use of cha than his remarks in §178 suggest: 'One of the parents in each family - usually the mother - must of necessity come from outside and the speech of the children is therefore a compromise. Hence in one family cha predominates as the negative while another has ní almost exclusively'.

In this area cha is often used to emphasize a preceding negative statement:

Ní thig leat rud ar bith a fhágáil ina luighe thart anois.

Cha dtig [ha'd'Ig'] Sp.1.

¹ And Torr as described by Sommerfelt: 'Negative statements have before them the negative prefix N i(:) or more rarely ha.' Lochl. III 225.

as the following, told me by a native of the parish of Glenties, shows: "Dubhairt fear a bhí ag fagháil droch-mheais ar fhear eile, gur mise d'innseachadh sgéal 7 nach mbéidheadh ag cur na thúannaí 7 na cháannaí ann'," "a man who was showing contempt for another man said, 'I, indeed, would tell a story, and would not be putting the thú's and cha's in it!'" Lloyd 125f.

In songs composed by Peadar Welsh (who lived in the adjoining townland to Ballinamore), Sp.1 had: cha rabh a'n-teach raice ar an ród; and chan fhaca mé a léithéid go fóill (ní forms also occurred in these songs). In other folk songs Sp.1 had: Char orduigh Dia ná Muire dúinn; and char fhág siad síothlán píosa tin ná pandaí. Whether or not the use of cha in these last four examples was for 'hamletical' effect is open to question.

What does appear, however, is that cha is used much more often in the ordinary speech of this area than in the southern part of Donegal, yet much less than in the far northern part.

VERBS IN fl- AND fr-

Verbs which begin in fl- and fr- have shown varying tendencies where lenition is expected. I have only heard one example of a verb in fr, freagairt 'to answer'. For the past tense 1 sg., Sp.1 had [d'r'ɔɣər' m'ə] d'fhreagair mé, while Sp.2 had [ragər' m'ə] fhreagair mé cf. [r'igər sə] 'he answered' Qu. §287.

I have heard the conditional of the verb fleaigneadh 'to freeze, founder', as: [L'əihət [ə] , [l'əihət [ə] fhleaignfeadh sé; and [f'l'əihət [ə] fleaignfeadh sé.

It would appear that the verb fliuchadh 'to wet' was regarded as liuchadh by Sp.2, thus: [b'ed'Ir' gə L'ɔhI ən rɔd ə tu ər' ə rɔhər] B'fhéidir go liuchthaí an rud atá ar an rothar. 'The thing which is on the bicycle might get wet'. While this speaker did have one example of go leniting, (Bhí eagla uirthi go bhualfaí (sic.) í), she normally did eclipse the following consonant after go (Note also the question [ən L'ɔhI n rɔd ə'ta ər' ə rɔhər] An (fh)liuchthaí an rud atá ar an rothar? 'Would the thing which is on the bicycle get wet?' Sp.2.)

THE PASSIVE

The forms of the passive are basically as follows:

Present Passive. (Similar in form to the forms for the Present Subjunctive and the Imperative).

- tar [tər] e.g. [to:gtər] tógtar < tógáil 'to lift'
- tear [t'ər] e.g. [bʷi'n't'ər] baintear < baint 'to cut'
- th(e)ar [hər] e.g. [Lɔmhər] lomthar < lomadh 'to shear' N.B. alt. [Lɔmər]
- (u)ighthear [əhər] e.g. [kr'i'n'əhər] cruinnighthear < cruinniughadh 'to gather'

Past Tense.

- (e)adh [u] e.g. [k'ir'u] cuireadh < cur 'to put'; [Lɔmu] lomadh < lomadh 'to shear'
- *-(u)igheadh also yields [u] e.g. [k'anu] ceannuigheadh (ceannadh) < ceannacht 'to buy'.

h is prefixed to a vowel e.g. [hɔ:lɔ] h-óladh < do h-óladh.

(See also rádh).

Future Tense.

- f(e)ar [hər] (IDPP 221f.)¹ e.g. [d'i:ə|hər] díolfar < díol 'to sell'

¹ 'In the present and imperfect passive the tendency is to substitute t for th in the ending in order to distinguish these tenses from the future and conditional ...' Qu. §385.

-(e)ochthar [ohər ; ahər ; əhər] e.g. [kr'iN'ahər] cruinneochthar < cruinniughadh 'to gather'¹

Conditional. (Often = Imperfect and Past Subjunctive).

-f(a)í (-th(a)í IDPP 222) [hI] e.g. [ho:kI] thógfaí < tógáil 'to lift'

-(e)óchthaí [ohI ; ahI] e.g. [χ'awohI] cheannóchthaí < ceannacht 'to buy'

Imperfect, Past Subjunctive.

Forms may be as Conditional (which see). Note [w'iN't'i] bhaintí < baint 'to cut' and [χ'ört'i] chuirteí < cur 'to put' [da:ktI] d'fhagtaí < fágáil 'to leave' (see p.269 n.1.).

The verbs cluinsteán 'to hear', fagháil 'to get' and feiceáil 'to see' form their past passive forms in -(e)as. [χoələs] chualas; [fuərəs] fuaras and [həwəkəs] chonnacas, cf. 'an bhfacus no an gcualas ariamh ..' Gallagher 13. It is also interesting that Wagner (LASID map 258) heard rugas at pt.83. I have heard rugadh and beir-eadh. This once again illustrates the diversity of forms in this area.

CONJUGATIONAL INTERMIX

Quiggin (549) describing the homonymy of the verbal noun endings -(e)adh (-(e)amh) and -(i)ughadh states: 'There is no difference in the ending between bwl:lúw, 'striking', bualadh, and b'ənuw, 'blessing', beannughadh, which accounts for the hopeless confusion of the two conjugations'. O'Rahilly (IDPP 223) modifies this statement somewhat: 'This fact, ['In Ulster, owing to the shortening of unstressed vowels, the endings of the second conjugation would generally be indistinguishable from those of the first'] and the fact that the verbal noun terminations -adh and -aghadh (-ughadh) have fallen together in N.Ir. have naturally blurred the distinction between the two conjugations in Ulster Irish; though Quiggin seems to put it too strongly when he speaks of "the hopeless confusion of the two conjugations" in the Irish of Donegal'.

Using forms collected by myself in this area I shall now try to present as reasonable an outline as possible of the conjugation intermix in this area.

There is regular conjugational intermix of verbs of the second conjugation (those verbs with polysyllabic stems ending in -igh e.g. ceannuigh 'buy'; coinnigh 'keep'; soillisigh 'shine') and the syncopated verbs (e.g. foscail 'open', iompair 'carry'). The past, future and conditional of these verbs are typical of the second conjugation.

Past: [χ'ani] cheannuigh; [χon'i] choinnigh; [hal'ji] shollisigh;

[dɔskəl'] d'fhoscail; [d'ɔmpər'] d'iompair.

Fut.: [k'anahI] ceannóchaidh; [kɔn'ahI] coinneochaidh; [hal'əhəs] shoillseochas (rel.); [fɔsklahI] foscólchaidh.

Condit. [χ'anahU] cheannóchadh; [χon'ahU] choinneochadh;

_____ ; [dɔsklahU] d'fhoscólchadh; [d'ɔmprahI] d'iompróchthaí (pass.).

While some second conjugation endings may occasionally be heard (see Present Tense), the majority of present tense forms of these verbs are first conjugation forms. [k'anən] ceannann (written ceannuigheann); [χon'əs ; χon'əns ; χ'on'ies] choinneas, choinneans, choinnigheas (rel. forms); [sal'ən] soillseann (written soillisigheann); [fɔsklən] foscann; [ɔmprən] iomprann.

The past passive forms are usually first conjugation forms; attested forms include: [k'anU] ceannadh (written ceannuigheadh); [fɔsklu] foscladh; [hɔmpru] h-iompradh (written h-iompruigheadh).

When the imperfect is not formed by the conditional or by the periphrastic method, some of these second conjugation verbs have a form which resembles a first conjugation imperfect or conditional. Examples heard include: [χrɪn'ʉ nɔ dɪ:n'i] chruinneadh (written chruinnigheadh) na daoíní 'the people used to gather', alt., [χrɪn'hət ʃəd] chruinnfeadh siad 'they used to gather' (written chruinnigheadh siad); fiafruigh 'ask' (Past. d'fhiafruigh, Fut. fiafróchaidh, Condit. d'fhiafróchadh) [d'íəfrət ʃi] d'fhiafradh sí 'she used to ask' (written d'fhiafruigheadh);¹ feoghlaim 'learn' (Past. d'fheoghlaim, Fut. feoghlaiméochaidh, Condit. d'fheoghlaimneochadh) [d'ɔ:ləm'n'ət ʃəd] d'fheoghlaimneadh siad 'they used to learn' (written d'fheoghlaimnigheadh²).

Some verbs have variant past tense forms: [χɔlɪ] chodluigh, [χɔdəl'] chodail 'slept' (Fut. codlóchaidh, Condit. chodlóchadh, Pres. codlann (written codluigheann)); [d'íəfrɪ] d'fhiafraigh, [d'íəfər'] d'fhiafair 'asked' (see above paragraph); [dɔʃn'i] d'fhairsngigh, [dɔʃɪn'] d'fhairsing 'became plentiful'.

Some verbs had second conjugation past tense forms yet first conjugation fut./condit. forms e.g. shaothruigh 'earned', condit. 2 pl. [hλ:hɔt ʃɪv'] shaothfradh sibh.

There are quite a number of verbs which have a first conjugation stem for the past and present, but which have a second conjugation future and conditional (although with some, both first and second conjugation future and conditional forms may be heard). The verb fan 'wait' (Past. d'fhan, Pres. fanann) has the future form [fanahɪ]

1 The Past Pass. of this verb was heard as [f'íəfru] fiafradh (written fiafruigheadh).

2 One would expect d'fheoghlmuigheadh but the unsyncopated form may have been retained to avoid the cluster -lmm- (alternatively the [ə] in [-ɔ:ləm'n'-] might be regarded as epenthetic).

fanóchaidh and the conditional form [donohu] d'fhanóchadh. A glance at the Donegal responses to LASID q.924 'I shall wait for you' gives some indication as to how widespread this future form is in this county¹ (It is also noteworthy that imperfect forms heard were: [don'in'] d'fhanainn, [donət [ə] d'fhanadh sé and [donhət [ə] d'fhanadh sé cf. chruinn(f)eadh etc. above. The verb amharc 'to look' has the past tense form [däuærk (inter al.)] d'amharc; fut. [aurkohI] amharcócaidh; condit. [daurkohu] d'amharcóchadh; pres. [auærkən] amharcann. I have heard two forms of the verb cáineadh 'to criticize, to fine': níor cháin 'did not criticize'; and cháineochthaí thú 'you would be fined'. The verb feannadh 'to skin', had the conditional form d'fheannóchadh sé thú! 'It would skin (freeze) you!' I have heard the forms dá n-éisteochainn, dá n-éisteochadh sé 'Were I, he, to listen', in ordinary conversation (past d'éist mé). In response to LASID q.419 'he wouldn't listen to me', Sp.1 answered: ní éistfeadh sé liom; while Sps.3 and 10 answered: ní éisteochadh sé ... The forms of the verb dearcadh 'to look' included: one example of nuair a dhearcfá 'when you would look'; two examples of nuair a dhearcóchas tú 'when you look' and one example of dearcóchaidh seisean 'he will look'. The verb stad 'to stop' (past stad) showed variation. Sp.1 had ní stadfainnse 'I would not stop', while his sister had stadóchaidh tú 'you will stop'. Also heard was the fut. rel. stadfas and the 2 sg. condit. stadóchthá. The majority of conditional forms for the verb casadh 'to twist' were chasfadh but one example of chasóchadh was heard. The majority of conditional forms for the verb smaoit-iughadh 'to think' were smaoitochadh (as expected) but one example, smaoitfeá 'you would think', was heard - representing a reversal of the more widespread tendency to use second conjugation future and conditional endings in some verbs of the first conjugation.

1 Wagner heard both fanóchaidh and fanfaidh at pt.83. Cf. ní fhanfaidh mé Sp.8 p.67.

In addition to the conjugational intermix listed above, there is also the sporadic adoption of the second conjugation verbal adjective termination - [I] by some verbs of the first conjugation e.g. cleachtaí 'practised', glacthaí 'taken' etc. (See Verbal Adjective for examples).

Bearing all the above examples in mind, one can sympathise with the view expressed by Quiggin and suggest that to speak of 'the hopeless confusion of the two conjugations' need not necessarily be putting it 'too strongly'.

THE IRREGULAR VERBS

cluinstean 'to hear'

The verb mothughadh/mothachtáil very often appears for this verb. Questions 213-15 and 387-91 of LASID also yield similar results in areas of Donegal. Hamilton (Tory 194) states that 'the verb moithigh is more common than this verb [cluinstin]'. In this area, both mothughadh and cluinstean may be used by the same speaker. Thus my question 'Caidé an áit i gcuala tú sin?' received the response 'Ní fhuil a fhios agam caidé an áit i gcuala mé é. Sé an bharamhail gur ag m'athair a mhoithigh mé é. Cf. 'Mhothaigh sé leanbh beag ag caoineadh istigh sa bhinn, agus chualáí sé an mháthair ag bagar ar an leanbh:'

[janhə [əd]	Dhéanfaidh siad
Passive [janhər]	Dhéanfar

The independent form dhéanfaidh¹ has the dependent forms [N'anhI] an ndéanfaidh? and [N'i hanhI] Ní dhéanfaidh.

Conditional (Secondary Future)

Sg. 1. [janhIN']	Dhéanfainn
2. [janha]	Dhéanfá
3m. [janhət [ə]	Dhéanfadh sé
3f. [janhət [i]	Dhéanfadh sí
Pl. 1. [janhət [IN']	Dhéanfadh sinn
2. [janhət [IV']	Dhéanfadh sibh
3. [janhət [əd]	Dhéanfadh siad
Passive [janhI]	Dhéanfaí

The independent forms dhéanfadh have the dependent forms [N'anhU] An ndéanfadh? [N'i hanhu] occ. [N'i anhu] Ní dhéanfadh.

Imperfect

Sg. 1. [N'i:N']	Ghnínn
2. [N'i:χ'a]	Ghnítheá
3m. [N'i:ət [ə]	Ghníodh sé
3f. [N'i:ət [i]	Ghníodh sí
Pl. 1. [N'i:ət [IN']	Ghníodh sinn

3. [N'i:ət [əd]	Ghníodh siad
Passive [N'i:χ'i ; N'i:hi]	Ghníthí

The independent forms ghníodh have usually the dependent forms of the conditional although [N'i hanət [ə] Ní dhéanadh sé etc. are occasionally heard.

1 I have one example of an independent form [d'anhI] déanfaidh .

The independent passive occurs as [N'í han̩I] Ní dhéantaí or more commonly as [N'í han̩I] Ní dhéanfaí/dhéanthaí.

Past Subjunctive

The past subjunctive may have the dependent forms of the imperfect or more usually the dependent forms of the conditional.

Imperative

Verbal Adjective

[d'a(:)ntə] (rarely [d'a:ntI])

Déanta (rarely déantaí) fagháil 'to get'

There is a strong tendency among younger people and adults who do not speak Irish continually to use the independent form for the dependent thus [da jo:t [ə] Dá gheobhadh sé 'Were he to get'.

[hi:lən tɔmas gə jo:ən] Shíleann (sic.) Tomás go gheobhann 'Thomas thinks you do (get)'. [nɑ joət [ə] nach gheobhadh sé. 'that he would not get'. The following conversation occurred between Sp.1 and Sp.13.

Sp.1 Gheobhaidh siad an grant.

'They will get the grant'

Sp.13 Ní gheobhaidh leoga.

'Indeed, they will not'.

Sp.1 Ná nach bhfuighidh?

'Won't they?'

This use of the independent stem for the dependent is also recorded in other dialects.

Present

Sg. 1.	[jɛv'əm], [jɛv' m'ɪ[ə]	Gheibhim, gheibh mise
2.	[jɛv' tu], [jɛv'ən tu]	Gheibh tú, gheibheann tú
3m.	[jɛv' [ə], [jɛv'ən [ə]	Gheibh sé, gheibheann sé
	[jɛv' [i], [jɛv'ən [i]	Gheibh sí, gheibheann sí
Pl. 1.	[jɛv' m'wɪd']	Gheibh muid
	[jɛv' [IN'], [jɛf' [IN']	Gheibh sinn
2.	[jɛv' [IV']	Gheibh sibh
3.	[jɛv' [əd], [jɛv'ən [əd]	Gheibh siad, gheibheann siad
Passive	[jɛf'ər]	Gheibhthear

The independent forms [jɛv'], ([jɛv'ən]) Gheibh/gheibheann usually have the dependent forms [N'í a:n] Ní fhaghann. Sp.3 had [N'í jɛv' [I[ə], [ər jIV' [I[ə] Ní gheibh sise, ar gheibh sise? when asked to translate 'She does not get, does she get?' These were not typical of his normal speech however.

A consuetudinal present form [jɛv'í] gheibhidh, is sometimes heard - this being based on forms such as sílídh, bídhd etc.

The dependent stem is always fagh-, I have never heard faigh- e.g. [[In' ə dɔ:i ə wɔ:n [əd] Sin an dóigh i bhfaghann siad ... 'That is how they get ...' [N'í a:n [IN'] Ní fhaghann sinn. 'We do not get'.

Past

[fuər ɪn']	Fuair sinn
2. [fuər ɪv']	Fuair sibh
3. [fuər əd]	Fuair siad
Passive [fuəɾəs]	Fuarthas

The stem fuair is the same for independent and dependent forms thus, [gə wɔɾəs] go bhfuarthas 'that was obtained'. The negative forms [N'ɪ wuər' m'ə] Ní fhuair mé 'I did not get' have been dealt with by Quiggin (Qu. §199). Sp.10 has often [N'ɪ uər'] Ní fhuair.

Future

Sg. 1. [jo(:)ə m'ə], [joɪ m'ə]	Gheobhaidh mé

2. [joə ɪv']	Gheobhaidh sibh
3. [joə əd]	Gheobhaidh siad
Passive [johər]	Gheobhthar

The independent forms of [jo:I] gheobhaidh have the dependent forms [N'ɪ wɪ:] ní fhuighidh, [nɔ wɪ:] nach bhfuighidh 'who will not get' (nach bhfuídh Gallagher 6).

The dependent passive (neg.) is [N'ɪ wɪ(:)hər] Ní fhuighthear.

Conditional

Sg. 1. [jo:N']	Gheobhainn
2. [joha]	Gheobhthá

3m. [jo:ət [ə]	Gheobhadh sé
3f. [jo:ət [i]	Gheobhadh sí

2. [jo:ət [IV']	Gheobhadh sibh
3. [jo:ət [əd]	Gheobhadh siad
Passive [jo:wI], [jo:χ'i]	Gheobhtháí

The independent forms [jo:u] gheobhadh have the dependent forms [N'i wI:u] ní fhuigheadh. The dependent forms for the conditional and imperfect and the past subjunctive are intermixed. The principal forms are: [gə wI:u] go bhfuigheadh, [gə wai^ət [ə] go bhfaigheadh sé and [gə wə:u] go bhfaghadh.

The dependent passive forms heard were: [N'i wI:χ'i] ní fhuighthí, [gə wəhI] go bhfaghtháí.

Imperfect

Sg. 1. [jɛv'IN']	Gheibhinn
2. —

2. [jɛv'ət [IV']	Gheibheadh sibh
3. [jɛv'ət [əd]	Gheibheadh siad
Passive —	('Gheibhthí', OCGC 169)

The independent forms [jɛv'u] gheibheadh have usually the dependent forms of the conditional (which see). The more usual being [N'i wI:u] Ní fhuigheadh.

Past Subjunctive

This can take any of the dependent forms for the conditional/imperfect (see above): [N'í wI:t ʃən tʲk'ə gə d'í: gə wɔət ʃə f'ie nɑ:uφu i] Ní fhuigheadh sé an t-uisce go dtí go bhfaghadh sé fiadh a shnámhfadh í 'He could not get the water until he would get a deer that would swim it'. [a waha k'ɔn mai ɔku] Dá bhfaghthá cionn maith

2.	[t'í(:)fət [Iv']	Chífeadh sibh
3.	[t'í(:)fət [əd]	Chífeadh siad
Passive	[t'í:fI]	Chífí

The dependent forms chífeadh have the dependent forms [N'í ek'u] Ní fheicfeadh.

The dependent passive form is [N'í ek'í] Ní fheicfí.

The second singular forms [hi:fʷa], [t'y:fa] have been heard.

Passive	[t'í:fI]	(Condit.)

The independent stem was used as a dependent form in the following example: [durt' [ə gə d'i:t [ə b'ala] Dubhairt sé go d(t)chíodh sé bealach 'He said that he used to see a road'.

The dependent forms, historical feiceadh are phonetically identical to conditional feicfeadh with the result that the independent imperfect can also be chífeadh (=condit.) or the periphrastic [bə yra: l'ɛʃən f'ek'al'] Ba ghnáth leisean feiceáil 'He used to see'.

[a v'ek'ət [Iv'] Dá bhfeiceadh sibh Past. Subj. 2 pl.

Present Subjunctive

1 sg. [gə v'ek'i m'ə] go bhfeicidh mé 'that I may see'. The forms of the past and present subjunctive are homonymous with the conditional and future (see Imperfect Tense).

Imperative

The imperative 3 sg. [nə f'ek'u ə'nin'ə] Ná feiceadh a'n-duine 'let no-one see' has been heard. The second person has the suppletive forms amharc, amharcaighidh. (see further p.280)

 3. [t'e:n [əd], [hè:n [əd]] Téigheann siad, théigheann siad

The forms [t'e:n] téigheann and [hè:n] théigheann may be used by the same speaker, thus: [t'e:ən [əd] téigheann siad 'they go' and [hè:ən [ə] théigheann sé 'he goes', both Sp.3. (These forms, téigheann/théigheann, are discussed by O'Rahilly (IDPP, 172) and Ó Baoíll, 235f. See also tig/thig in this work).

The form t(h)éid may also be heard [kə b'I dɔ:i ə d'e:d' ə tom] Cá bith dóigh i dtéid an t-am 'Whatever way time passes'.

The response [N'i hɛ:i] ní théighidh (!) was heard on one occasion.

The form [rahən] rachann (based on the future stem rach-) is quite commonly heard among the younger generations and middle-aged people to the extreme east of the area.

The relative form is usually [ə hɛ:ns] [ə hɛ:jəns] a théigheanns.

The independent forms [t'e:ən] téigheann occur in the independent: [d'e:ən [ɛjən] an dtéigheann seisean? 'does he go?'

3. [rahət [əd]	Rachadh siad
Passive [rahI]	Rachthaí

The independent forms [rahu] rachadh occur in the independent: [N'í rahu] ní rachadh etc.

Imperfect

It is only rarely that the conditional may appear for the imperfect. The old imperfect forms occur regularly — as do the periphrastic forms.¹

Sg. 1. [hè:n' [ə]	Théighinn-se

2. [hè:ət [Iv']	Théigheadh sibh
3. [hè:ət [əd]	Théigheadh siad

The independent forms [hè:u] théigheadh occur in the dependent: [N'í hè:u] ní théigheadh etc.

A Falgarrow speaker had a form based on the present stem théid: [hè:d'ət [ə ər' ə rəhər gə k'Il 'darə] Théideadh sé ar an rothar go Cill Dara 'He used to go to Kildare on his bicycle'.

Subjunctive

The past subjunctive is quite frequently heard for this verb.

1 sg. [a d'è:n'] Dá dtéighinn. 2 sg. [a d'èha], [a d'è:χ'a] Dá dtéightheá. 3 sg. m. [a d'è:t [ə] Dá dtéigheadh sé. 2 pl. [a d'è:t [Iv'] Dá dtéigheadh sibh.

1 English questions, however, usually resulted in the latter, thus: 'I used to go to the fair' was translated [bə ɣra: l'qm ɣɔl' qn ɣ:nI] Ba ghnáthach liom a ghoil chun amaigh, by one speaker yet [hè:n' [ə g' dāusə] Théighinnse chuig damhsa, 'I used to go to a dance', occurred in his normal speech. See Imperfect.

The present subjunctive may also be heard in normal conversation - in addition to set phrases such as [gə d'e: tu sLɑ:n] Go dtéighidh tú slán 'Safe journey' - [sɔlə d'e: tu ʃiər] sula dtéighidh tú siar 'before you go west (to Tangaveane)'; yet [sɔlmɔ̃ d'è:n tu] sulmá dtéigheann tú 'before you go' is also to be heard.

Imperative

I have only heard imperative forms for the second person. These have been the suppletive forms: [gɔ:] gabh 2 sg., and [gɔ:əg'i] gabhaigidh 2 pl: [nɑ gɔ: dɑ xɔ:ər] Ná gabh dá chomhair 'Do not go near him'.

Verbal Noun

Usually [gɔl'] goil - usually lenited when not preceded by ag, [N'i hɪg' l'ə] ə ɔl' (xɔl') Ní thig leis a ghoil 'He cannot go'. The form dul (O. Ir. dol) is found in some phrases (s.v. dul). The form goil seems to be an admixture of gabháil and dul.

ithe 'to eat'

Present

Sg. 1.	[Iχ'əm], [i:səm]	Ithim, íosaim
2.	[i:sən tu]	íosann tú
3.	[iχ'ən [ə], [i:sən [ə]	Itheann sé, íosann sé
Pl. 1.	[i:sən m'wɪd']	íosann muid
	[i:sən [IN'ə]	íosann sinne
2.	[iχ'ən [Iv'], [i:sən [Iv']	Itheann sibh, íosann sibh
3.	[iχ'ən [iətsən], [i:sən [əd]	Itheann siadsan, íosann siad
Passive	[It'ər]	Ithtear

The old present stem itheann has been replaced by, or occurs along side of the present stem íosann - based on the future stem íos(f)aidh. In response to LASID q298 'he eats three meals a day', Sp.1 answered [iχ'ən [ə t'r'i: χra: sə La:] while Sp.3 answered [i:sən [ə t'r'i: huər'ə sə La:] and Sp.10 [i:sən [ə t'r'i: χra: 'nse La:]. Yet Sp.3 had [iχ'əmsə] ithim-sa 'I eat', but [i:sən [e]fən ; m'wíd' ; [əd] íosann seisean/muid/siad. 'He, we, they eat'. Similarly Sp.10 had [N'i ihəm] Ní ithim 'I do not eat', yet [N'i i:sən [I]ə ; [IN'ə;]əd] Ní íosann sise, sinne, siad 'She, we, they do not eat'.

The reversal of this was seen with Sp.15 who had [iχ'ə m'ə] ithfidh mé 'I shall eat', where the future stem was based on the present stem ith-. The same speaker had íosann sé 'he eats'! Sp.10 had mostly íosfaidh forms but an ithfidh sise 'will she eat?'

Sp.1 did seem to distinguish between the ith- and íos- stems fairly well e.g. [i^x' e: nɔ i:sər də je: ə] Ith é nó íosfar 'do dhéidh é' 'Eat it, or it will be eaten after you'.

2. [d'i:sət [Iv']	D'íosfadh sibh
3. [d'i:sət [əd]	D'íosfadh siad
Passive [d'i:sI]	D'íosfaí

In addition to d'íosfadh forms Sp.10 had [N'i iχ'ət [I[ə ɪf']] Ní ith(f)eadh sise uibh 'She would not eat an egg'. Sp.3 had d'íosfadh forms plus [d'iχ'u] D'ith(f)eadh, pausa form, and [d'if'ət [iətsən] D'ithfeadh siadsan 'They would eat'.

The imperfect can have d'íosfadh forms or the periphrastic ba ghnáth le construction. Translating English 'I used to eat more when I was young' Sps.3 and 10 answered [bə ʏra: l'om N'is mo: iχ'ə nər' ə v'i m'ə ɔ:g] Ba ghnáthach liom níos mó a ithe nuair a bhí mé óg.

I have only heard íosfadh forms for the past subjunctive.

The [iχ'u] forms above could be original imperfects itheadh ; although ithfeadh, conditionals based on the present stem, only with silent f, may be another possibility.

3.	[d'ér [əd], [d'ér'ən [əd], [abren [əd]	Deir siad, deireann siad, abrann siad

Forms with [d] are also heard this has been discussed under Phonology (see [d]). [d'ɪr'-] may also be heard cf. 'Adirim, adeirim' IGT.

It has been my experience to hear deir(eann) forms more often than abrann forms.¹ Abrann can occur in both independent and dependent forms [abrən [I[ə] abrann sise 'she says', [N'ɪ abrən [IN'ə] ní abrann sinne 'we do not say', both heard from Sp.3. [abrəm m'ə xod' ÖRNI] Abraim mo chuid urnaighe 'I say my prayers'. [N'ɪ abrən [əd] ní abrann siad 'they do not say', both Sp.10. The same is true for deir forms, thus: [d'èrəm] deirim 'I say', [N'ɪ hèrəm] ní dheirim 'I do not say', both Sp.3. [dər̩ s̩ə] deir sé 'he says', [N'ɪ hèrən] ní dheireann 'he does not (say)', both Sp.10.

The negative form [N'ɪ ɛr'ən [IN'ə] ní eireann sinne 'we do not say', also occurs.

Past
Sg. 1.	[durt ^(,) m'ə]	Dubhairt mé
2.	[durt tu]	Dubhairt tú
3m.	[durt ^(,) [ə] [dur [ə]	Dubhairt sé
3f.	[durt ^(,) [i] [dur [i]	Dubhairt sí

3.	[durt ^(,) [əd] [dur [əd]	Dubhairt siad
	Passive [hu:ru]	hubhradh

The independent forms [du:rt'] dubhairt have the dependent forms: [N'ɪr u:rt'] níor dhubhairt ; [ər^(,) u:rt'] ar dhubhairt? - or níor ubhairt, ar ubhairt? These forms have been satisfactorily explained by Ó Tuathail. 'The d in dúirt (past tense) is felt to be the particle do with the vowel elided. Hence the dependent forms occurs as úirt. Cf. gur rubhairt tu, Spir. Rose p.127'. SML xliii.

1 Indeed many of the abrann forms resulted from direct questioning, and deir(eann) forms were common in ordinary speech both as independent and dependent forms.

In addition to the passive forms [hu:ru] hubhradh, neg. [N'ir hu:ru] Níor hubhradh. I have heard [habru rɔd IN't'ait ahə dɔ: dɔ] hAbradh rud eighinteacht fá dtaobh dó 'Something was said about it'. Neg. [N'ir habru] Níor habradh. Sp.3 had [habru] babradh, yet [N'ir hu:ru] Níor hubhradh!

Due to sandhi there is always a [durt] form for the 2 sg. e.g. [kə'd'e: durt tu] Caidé dubhairt tú? 'What did you say?' This [durt] form is now spreading to situations where one would expect [du(:)rt'], [u(:)rt'] e.g. [ər urt tu]In' l'ɛ] Ar (dh)ubhairt tú sin leis? 'Did you say that to him?' [N'ir u:rt] Níor (dh)ubhairt! 'I did not!'

Future

Sg. 1.	[d'èrhə m'ə], [abrahə m'I[ə]	Déarfaidh mé, abróchaidh mise
2.	[d'èrhə tu]	Déarfaidh tú
3m.	[d'èrhə [ə]	Déarfaidh sé
3f.	[d'èrhə [i]	Déarfaidh sí
Pl. 1.	[d'èrhə m'íd']	Déarfaidh muid
	[d'èrhI [IN']	Déarfaidh sinn
2.	[d'èrhə [IV']	Déarfaidh sibh
3.	[d'èrhə [əp]	Déarfaidh siad

Passive

The independent forms [d'è(:)rhI] déarfaidh occur in the dependent forms as well: [N'èrhə tu] an ndéarfaidh tú? 'will you say?' The negative can occur as: [N'i hè(:)rhI] ní dhéarfaidh (théarfaidh) or [N'i e(:)rhI] Ní éarfaidh. Qu. (§181) attributes the latter to the older generation and the former to younger.

Other forms heard include: [abrahə mI[ə] abróchaidh mise 'I shall say', and the historical forms [əN əbərə ʃɛ[əN] an abóraidh seisean? 'will he say?' [N'í əbərə ʃIN'ə] ní abóraidh sinne 'we shall not say'. Speakers using these forms also had déarfaidh forms, both as independent and dependent forms.

Forms with [d] occur thus [dèrhə m'ə] déarfaidh mé 'I shall say'.

Conditional

Sg. 1. [d'èrhin'], [d'èrhìn']	Déarfainn
2. [d'èrha]	Déarfá
3m. [d'èrhət ʃə]	Déarfadh sé
3f. [d'èrhət ʃi]	Déarfadh sí
Pl. 1. [d'èrhu m'í'd']	Déarfadh muid
[d'èrhət ʃIN']	Déarfadh sinn
2. [d'èrhət ʃIV']	Déarfadh sibh
3. [d'èrhət ʃəd]	Déarfadh siad
Passive [d'è(:)rhI]	Déarfaí

The independent forms [d'è:rhu] déarfadh have the dependent forms: [N'èrhə hɔsə] an déarfá thusa? 'would you say?' and the negative varies between: [N'í hèrhət ʃə] ní dhéarfadh sé (théarfadh) 'he would not say', and [N'í erhI] ní éarfaí 'would not be said'. The lenited dependent forms with [hèrhu] seem to appear more often than those with [èrhu], yet Sp.1 had: [N'í hɛrhən'ʃə ʃin l'ɛ[gə d'ɔ:ə] Ní dhéarfainnse sin leis go deo 'I would never say that to him', and [N'í erhin'ʃə gə ro:] Ní (dh)éarfainnse go rabh 'I would not say so' - both from normal speech.

The historical dependent form may also be heard, although it appears to be yielding its ground to the independent forms, [N'í əbərət ʃIN'ə] ní abóradh sinne, 'we would not say'.

Forms with [d] may also occur e.g. [dɛrhət ʃəd] déarfadh siad 'they would say'.

Imperfect

While the imperfect is often expressed by the conditional forms or by the periphrastic construction, the old imperfect forms can still be heard. e.g. [d'ér'u o:n'] Deireadh Eoin ... 'Eoin used to say ...' 3 sg. m. [dér'ət [ə]], f. [d'ér'ət [i]] deireadh sé/sí.

The form [jér'u n f'ar [ɔ]] Dheireadh an fear seo ... 'This man used to say ...', was heard on one occasion cf. Dhiafruigh v's D'fhiafruigh p.241 p.348.

The hybrid form [d'ér'hu] deirfeadh is discussed under the Imperfect p.272.

Past Subjunctive

This is usually a conditional form but I have heard some examples [a n'ér'ət [i]] Dá ndeireadh sí 'Were she to have said'.

Imperative

The imperative forms heard were: 2 sg. [abər'] abair, 3 sg. [abrəd [ə]] arbradh sé and 2 pl. [abr'ig'i] abraigidh.

Verbal Noun

[ra:], [ra:t'] rád, ráidht

THE SUBSTANTIVE VERB

Present Indicative

Sg. 1. [ta m'ə]	Tá mé
2. [ta tu]	Tá tú

3m. [ta fə]	Tá sé
3f. [ta fi]	Tá sí
Pl. 1. [ta mʷi'd']	Tá muid
[ta fIN']	Tá sinn
2. [ta fIV']	Tá sibh
3. [ta fəd]	Tá siad
Passive [tahər]	Táthar

The independent forms [ta:] tá have the dependent forms [N'i:əi'] ní fhuil, [ən wíl'] an bhfuil? [mɔrə^lb wíl' ə^lnín'ə ɔN] Murab fhuil aonduine ann 'If there is no-one there'.

The dependent passive form is [ə wíl'hər] a bhfuilthear, indirect rel. [N'i:ə^lhər ə d'anu maran] Ní fhuilthear ag déanamh mórán 'Not a lot is being done'.

In one response I have heard: [o: ha:] Ó, thá! 'Oh, there is!' for the more usual [o: ta:] Ó, tá.

The form [χan (χan) 'il'h] Chan fhuil! is often heard in emphatic negative responses (see cha).

'I do not know' is most often [nɛl' (nɛl') 'is ɔgəm] which I write as Ní fhuil a fhios agam, although perhaps Ní fheil/Chan fheil (cf. Sc. G. dep. fheil O. Ir. -feil) might be more representative of this sound.

Present Habitual (or Consuetudinal Present)

Sg. 1. [b'i:m]	Bím
2. [b'i:n tu], [b'i:əN tu]	Bíonn tú
3m. [b'i:n fə], [b'i: fə]	Bíonn sé, bídh sé

2. [b'í:n [IV']	Bíonn sibh
3. [b'í:n [əd]	Bíonn siad
Passive [b'ihər]	Bíthear

The independent forms bíonn, less commonly bídh have the dependent forms [b'í:ᵀn] bíonn. The old bídh forms e.g. [b'í: k'ɔ: ər' ə χrɔk [In' hɔL] Bídh ceo ar an chnoc sin thall 'Mist gathers on yonder hill', have been discussed under the Present Tense p.253.

Past

Sg. 1. [v'í m'ə]	Bhí mé
2. [v'í tu]	Bhí tú
3m. [v'í [ə]	Bhí sé
3f. [v'í [i]	Bhí sí

Pl. 1.

[v'í [IN']	Bhí sinn
2. [v'í [IV']	Bhí sibh
3. [v'í [əd]	Bhí siad
Passive [v'ihər]	Bhíothar

The independent forms [v'í:] bhí have the dependent forms [N'í ro:] ní rabh, [gə ro:] go rabh.

The dependent passive is [rohər] rabhthar.

Future

Sg. 1. [b'è m'ə]	Béidh mé
2. [b'è tu]	Béidh tú
3m. [b'è [ə]	Béidh sé
3f. [b'è [i]	Béidh sí

Pl. 1. [b'è m'w'id']	Béidh muid
2. [b'è [IN']	Béidh sinn
3. [b'è [IV']	Béidh sibh
Passive [b'ehər]	Béithear

The independent forms [b'è:] béidh occur as dependent forms [N'i v'è:] ní bhéidh etc.

Conditional

Sg. 1. [v'èn']	Bhéinn
2. [v'èhə]	Bhéitheá
3m. [v'èt [ə]	Bhéadh sé
3f. [v'èt [i]	Bhéadh sí
Pl. 1.
[v'èt [IN']	Bhéadh sinn
2. [v'èt [IV']	Bhéadh sibh
3. [v'èt [əd]	Bhéadh siad
Passive [v'èhI]	Bhéithí

The independent forms [v'è(:)u] bhéadh occur as dependent forms [N'i v'è(:)u] ní bhéadh etc.

While [N'i v'èu], [N'i v'au] are usual for ní bhéadh, I have heard [N'i wau] on one occasion.

Note:[mər v'èn'[ə t̪osə k̪õ:ra] Mar bhéinn-se agus tusa ag comhrádh,
'Just like you and I would be conversing,'.

Imperfect and Past Subjunctive

Sg. 1. [v'i:N']	Bhínn
2. [v'i:ha]	Bhítheá
3m. [v'i:ət [ə]	Bhíodh sé
3f. [v'i:ət [i]	Bhíodh sí

Pl. 1. [v'i:t ʃIN']	Bhíodh sinn
2. [v'i:t ʃIV']	Bhíodh sibh
3. [v'i:t ʃəd]	Bhíodh siad
Passive [v'ihí], [v'i:h'i]	Bhíothaí

While the conditional forms or the periphrastic construction may occur for the imperfect, the old forms are commonly heard (see Imperfect p.265).

The independent forms [v'i:u] bhíodh occur as dependent forms [N'i v'i:u] ní bhíodh.

The past subjunctive is quite often heard (although the conditional can frequently stand in its place), e.g. [a m'i:N'ʃə a:bəLte nɔbər' ə ja:nu] Dá mbínn-se ábalta an obair a dhéanamh 'Were I able to do the work'. [ʃIn' ə tan'am' k'iənə ə v'er'en ʃəd ər' ə m'è:rLə a m'ihə ʃkr'i:uʷ ɔN] Sin an t-ainm céadna a bheireann siad air i mBéarla dá mbítheá ag scríobhadh ann 'It is indentical in English were you to be writing (in that language)'. [a m'i:t ʃIV' kɔsul' l'ənə χ'èl'ə] Dá mbíodh sibh cosamhail lena chéile 'Were you to resemble each other'.

Present Subjunctive

The present subjunctive is preserved in phrases such as [gə rō k'è:d mai hɔgəd] Go rabh cead maith agat 'Thank you very much', and in ordinary speech such as: [N'i Lɔrɪ ə'NɪN'ə gə ro əN tE: ɔ:ʰLte] Ní labharfaidh a'nduine go rabh an tae ólta 'No-one will speak until tea is over'. [b'ed'ɪr' nɑ m'èn'ʃə a:bəLte ɣɔl' suəs a mɔr ro] B'fhéidir nach mbéinn-se ábalta a ghoil suas, ach mur rabh ... 'I may not be able to go up but if I am not ...'.

THE COPULA*

Ó Siadhail (Celtica XV 117f.) has discussed the erosion of the copula in Modern Irish dialects. In this area some of the main uses of the copula are: for emphasis, in indentificatory sentences, with certain adjectives, with as to indicate provenance, with le to indicate ownership and with nouns in certain idioms.

[ʃiəd nə fʷI:L'í warəfəs kI:r'í]

'Siad na Faoilligh a mharbhfás caoirigh.

'It is the month of February which kills the sheep'.

[n'í ahən' ar ə v'í a:bəltə ja:nu]

Ní achan fhear a bhí ábalta a dhéanamh.

'It was not every man who could do it'.

[bə je: ə he:n' bə χ'ɔntI]

Badh é é fhéin ba chointaighe.

'He had only himself to blame'.

* The Copula is listed in this section, although as regards its status as a 'verb' in Modern Irish see D. Greene The analytic forms of the verb in Irish (Ériu xviii 108-12).

[əN' eskɪr'ə v'i ɔN]

An iascaire a bhí ann?

'Was he a fisherman?'

[sLat sɪl'ag'əs mo: nɑ [iəd ə b'a:r]

Slat saileoige is mó ná 's iad a b'fhearr.

'It was mostly sallow rod(s) for they were the best'.

[fɛ: [a:n ə b'a:r dI:fə]

'Sé Seán a b'fhearr daobhtha.

'John was the best of them'.

[nɛl' i's ɔɔəm k'Jokʊ [iəd nɛ LɔχlɛNI v'i nɛ gɔ:nI ɔntu nɑ nɑχ iəd]

Ní fhuil a fhios agam cé acu 's iad na Lochlannaigh bhí ina

'Few know that song'.

[N'ir v'ju: dɔ haxt ə'raʃ əN' [ɔn'h]

Níorbh fhiú dó theacht arais annsin.

'It was not worth his while to come back after that'.

[sa:r l'ɔmsə n g'ɛv'r'u]

Is fhearr liom-sa an geimhreadh.

'I prefer the winter'.

[N'i mai l'ɔmsə n k'In'al [In']

Ní maith liom-sa an cineál sin.

'I do not like that sort (of carry on)'.

[bas Belfast Connolly na^h a]

B'as Belfast Connolly nach ea?

'Was (James) Connolly not from Belfast?'

[əN as əN a:t' [ɔ hũ]

'Are you from this place (around here)?'

[l'ɔmsə n t'asəl]

Liom-sa an t-asal

'I own the donkey'.

[əs truə na ro tu ɔN ə'rE:r']

Is trua nach rabh tú ann aréir.

'It is a pity that you were not there last night'.

[b'ɛ:g'ən dũsə Im'aht]

B'éigean domh-sa imtheacht.

'I had to leave'.

In classificatory sentences there is a tendency to use the periphrastic construction: (copula) subject + substantive verb + preposition i. The sentence 'Is táilliúr óg aerach mé'¹ 'I am a spirited young tailor', heard in a song from Sp.1, is a rarity. A common form of classificatory sentence is the type: Maighistir scoile atá (a bhí) ann 'He is (was) a school teacher'. Where a copula sentence is used, the copula is often omitted, thus: 'Dhia, fear an-deas Mac an Ultaigh 'God (but) Mac an Ultaigh is a very fine man'.

Another common occurrence is the sentence-type: Tá sé ina an-fhidleoir 'He is a great fiddler'. The sentence-type Éan atá ann

1 TEXT 66 v.1.

'It is a bird' has been viewed in different lights.¹

There is a tendency for 'sé (< is é) to appear for 'sí (< is í) and 'siad (is iad). Thus: 'Casadh domh an cailín deas og a's ma casadh 'sé a labhair go géar' Sp.1 TEXT 62 v.2 (Cf. 'Acht má casadh sí a labhair go géar' Tory p.83.), 'Sé na cnámha a bhfuil an trom ann' 'It is the bones which constitute the weight (of the body)'. Yet, 'siad na sean-amhráin a badh deise' 'The old songs were the nicest'.

The old neuter form [ʃa] 'sea (< is ea) is very common in this area: A. Seo Micí 'Here (comes) Micky'. B. 'Sea' 'So it is'. Sílim-sa gurb ea [gər b'a] 'I think it is'.

In the formation of comparative forms of adjective the form níos (pres. and fut.) very often appears in the past and conditional for ní ba (níb before vowels, and f + vowel). Bhí sé níos gaiste ná an spád. 'It was quicker than the spade' Sp.3. (Bhí lá núb fhearr indé ann 'yesterday was a better day' Sp.3.) Bhí sé agam-sa níos fhearr 'I used to know it (song) better' Sp.5 (Shíl mé go rabh sé núb fhuide 'I thought that it was longer' Sp.5.) The following shows dual usage in the same sentence: B'fhéidir an chéad aonach eile go mbéadh na beathaigh capaill, go mbéadh sé i bhfad níos daoire agus go ndíolfá ar luach i bhfad núb fhearr é. 'Perhaps at the next fair the horses might be much more expensive and you might sell it (your horse) for a much better price' Sp.1.

Note also the forms 'An chéad subháilce fuair an Mhaighdean Mhuire nach/nár bh í sin an tsubháilce bhí mór' TEXT 70 Sp.5.

1 (a) A fronted or emphatic form of the sentence-type Tá sé ina fhear/ Tá mé i mo scoláire → Fear atá ann/Scólaire atá ionam (CGT §329; Ó Siadhail Celtica XV 117).

(b) A development of the negative type of sentence. Níl innte ach bean bhocht (IDPP 236).

The copula can be replaced by the substantive verb in sentences of the following type: Is doiligh mórán sessions a fhagháil 'It is difficult to find a lot of sessions' Sp.10. Cf. Tá sé doiligh cuidiughadh a fhagháil 'It is difficult to find help' Sp.10. Is doiligh fagháil comhgarach go leor acu 'It is hard to get near enough to them' Sp.3. Cf. Deir siad go bhfuil sinne doiligh a thuigbheáil 'They say that we are had to understand' Sp.3. Is doiligh mórán a dhéanamh ar bheagán 'It is hard to do a lot with little' Sp.2. Cf. Tá sé doiligh bríste a bhaint de thóin tarnocht 'It is hard to take trousers from a bare arse' Sp.2. O'Rahilly recorded the proverb: Is sleamhain iad leacacha an tighé mhóir (Misc. Ir. Prov. no.348). Sp.6 had the version: Tá leacacha an fhir uasail sleamhain 'The nobleman's flagstones are slippery'.

With those speakers given to English, provenance is indicated by the substantive verb, thus while Sp.3 had B'as Belfast Connolly (above) his brother Sp.4 had Chuala mé go rabh sí as Dún na nGall 'I heard that she was from Donegal (Town)'. Note also Tá sé as Doire 'He is from Derry', Commeen youth.

	[v'ər [IN'], [v'ər'ən [IN']]	Bheir sinn, bheireann sinn
2.	[v'ər [Iv'], [v'ər'ən [Iv']]	Bheir sibh, bheireann sibh
3.	[v'ər [əd], [v'ər'ən [əd]	Bheir siad, bheireann siad
Passive	[v'ert'ər]	Bheirtear

The independent forms [v'ər'], [v'ər'ən] bheir, bheireann have the dependent forms: [N'i ho:rən] ní thabhrann and [N'i hɔgən] ní thugann. The latter forms appear to be the more popular [nə kɾapən'] ə dɔgən [əd nə warbles ɔrhu] Na cnapáin a dtugann siad na 'warbles' orthu 'The lumps which they call "warbles"'; [N'í hɔgəm ə'fɪ'a dɔ:fə] Ní thugaim isteach dóbhtha 'I do not believe in them'; Note also, however: [rɔd ə dɔ:rən [əd black hives ɛr'] Rud a dtabhrann siad

 'black hives' air 'A thing which they call "black hives"'. [N'í horən tu] ní thabhrann tú 'you do not give' - both heard from Sp.5.

Confusion of independent and dependent forms of this verb.

In addition to the alternation between bheir/bheireann forms and tabhrann/tugann forms, there is the further confusion of independent and dependent forms (cf. SML xl.) This was apparent in the speech of those who spoke English a lot of the time. Thus while Sps.1 and 10 had ní thugann sé in response to LASID q.309 'He does not give', Sp.3 had ní bheireann sé. Sp.3 varied between the two usages thus: ní thugann seisean 'he does not give', and ní bheireann sinne 'we do not give', and dtabhrann siadsan 'do they give?' an bheireann tusa? 'do you give?'

In the future tense Sp.3 had: Bhéarfaidh an bealach sin thart siar annseo thú 'That road will lead you around to here'; while a Ballykerrigan man had: Tabharfaidh sin amach thú 'That will take you out'. The following was also heard from Sp.3: Ní bhéarfaí cead dó 'He would not be given permission'. Sp.3 did have forms such as ní thabharfaidh muid 'we shall not give', and ní thabharfainn 'I would not give'.

Past

Sg. 1. [hɔg m'ə]	Thug mé
2. [hɔg tu]	Thug tú
3m. [hɔg ə]	Thug sé
3f. [hɔg i]	Thug sí

Pl. 1. [hɔg mʷi'd']	Thug muid
[hɔg [IN']	Thug sinn
2. [hɔg [Iv']	Thug sibh
3. [hɔg [əd]	Thug siad
Passive [tɔgu]	Tugadh

The independent forms [hɔg] thug occur in the independent [əN dog tōsə] An dtug tusa? 'Did you give?' [N'i hɔg m'I[ə] Ní thug mise 'I did not give'.

The negative passive is [N'ir tɔgu] níor tugadh, although I have heard one example of [N'i tɔgu] ní tugadh.

Future

Sg. 1. [v'èrhə m'ə]	Bhéarfaidh mé
2. [v'èrhə tu]	Bhéarfaidh tú
3m. [v'èrhə [ə]	Bhéarfaidh sé
3f. [v'èrhə [i]	Bhéarfaidh sí

2. [v'èrhə [Iv']	Bhéarfaidh sibh
3. [v'èrhə [əd]	Bhéarfaidh siad
Passive [v'èrhər]	Bhéarfar

The independent forms [v'è:rhI] bhéarfaidh have the dependent forms [N'i ho:rhI] Ní thabharfaidh etc.

Conditional

Sg. 1. [v'èrhIN']	Bhéarfainn
2. [v'èrha]	Bhéarfá
3m. [v'èrhət [ə]	Bhéarfadh sé
3f. [v'èrhət [i]	Bhéarfadh sí

Pl. 1. [v'èrhu m'íd']	Bhéarfadh muid
[v'èrhət [IN']	Bhéarfadh sinn
2. [v'èrhət [Iv']	Bhéarfadh sibh
3. [v'èrhət [əd]	Bhéarfadh siad
Passive [v'èrhi]	Bhéarfaí

The independent forms [v'è:rhu] bhéarfadh have the dependent forms [N'í ho:rhu] ní thabharfadh etc.

The forms [N'í hurhit [i] Ní thiubharfadh sí (Class. Ir. -tiubhradh) were heard from one speaker.

[N'í ho:r'hu] ní thabhairfeadh may also be heard.

Imperfect - Past Subjunctive

The imperfect can be expressed by the conditional or by the periphrastic method [bə ɣɑ: l'om ar'əg'əd ə hort də nə bɔxtə] Ba ghnáthach liom airgead a thabhairt do na bochta 'I used to give money to the poor'.

It has proven virtually impossible to obtain a full paradigm of independent forms as English questions 'I used to go' etc. usually result in ba ghnáthach le -type answers. In ordinary speech, forms vary between: historical bheireadh; conditional bhéarfadh; and the new hybrid forms bheirfeadh. I list the old imperfect forms I have heard in ordinary speech:

[v'Ír'u o:n' [In' orhu] Bheireadh Eoin sin orthu 'Eoin used to call them that'. 3 sg. m. [v'ér'ət [ə] bheireadh sé, f. [v'ér'ət [i] bheireadh sí. 1 pl. [v'ér'ət [IN'ə] bheireadh sinne. 3 pl. [v'ér'ət [əd], [v'Ír'ət [əd] bheireadh siad. [Lɑ:nə ɡɔn'əl ə v'ert'i ər'] Lá na gCoinneal a bheirtí air 'It used to be called Candlemas'.

The imperfect is most commonly heard in phrases such as [f'ar ə dɔgət [əd dō:nəl ə χ'IN' ər']] Fear a dtugadh siad Domhnall an Chinn air 'A man they used to call Domhnall an Chinn'. The stem here is usually tugadh, although tabhradh forms are also to be heard. Forms heard included:

1 sg. [gə dɔɡIN' [ə] go dtugainn-se. 3 sg. m.(f.) [ə dɔɡət [ə ([i])] a dtugadh sé (sí). 1 pl. [ə dɔɡət [IN'ə] a dtugadh sinne. 3 pl. [ə dɔɡət [əd] a dtugadh siad. Pass. [ə dɔɡtI] a dtugtaí. 3 sg. [ə dorət [Iʃən] a dtabharadh seisean. 3 pl. [ə dorət [əd] a dtabharadh siad. Sp.11 had: [ə dorət [əd] a dtabhradh siad ... 'which they used to call' and [ə dɔɡən [əd] a dtúgann siad ... 'which they call'.

The conditional may occur for the past subjunctive e.g. [da dorhət [ə] dá dtabharfadh'se, 'were he to give'. The forms [(d)ə dɔɡu] dá dtugadh may also be heard. The form: Dá dtug(f)adh (dtugthadh?) [ə dɔku] duine ar bith comhairle duit-se 'Were anyone to give you advice', may be a hybrid form, or may have been influenced by the 2 sg. and passive forms of the past subjunctive i.e. [mər dɔka [In dɔ:] mur dtugthá (dtugfá?) sin dó 'were you not to give that to him'; [mər dɔkI [In' dɔ:] mur dtugthaí (dtugfaí?) sin dó 'were that not to be given to him'.

Imperative

There are forms based on tabhair and tug. From the Old Irish period, do.beir, -tabair 'gives' (Mod. tabhair) was supplied by do.uc(ca)i, -tuc(ca)i in the meaning 'bring', perfect do.uic, -tuicc, -tuc (Mod. thug). There was also an imperative 2 sg. tuic, tuc, pl. tucaid. Thus the 2 sg. forms tabair 'give' Ml. 27^c 12 and na tuic 'do not bring' Wb. 10^a 30. The tuc-forms later acquired 'give' meaning and in Murphy's Early Irish Lyrics we see example of tabair and tuc 'give' from the eleventh century:

'A Maire mín, maithingen

tabair fortacht dún,' (Murphy Lyrics 46)

'Tuc dam, do sheirc, a meic mo Dé.' (ibid 52)

Tabhair and tug may be heard in this dialect, and many speakers employ both. In answering versions of Wagner's English questionnaire Sp.1 nearly always had tabhair for 'give' while Sps.3 and 10 employed tabhair and tug e.g. tabhair domh qs.66, 217, 262, 307 Sp.1: qs.66, 217, 262, 313 (sg.) Sp.3: qs.66, 217, 262, 307 Sp.10: tug domh q.303, Sp.3 pl. tugaidh q.313 Sp.3: tug, pl. tugaighidh, q.313 Sp.10

Sp.6 usually had tug forms: 2 sg. [nə tʊg] ná tug; 3 sg. neg. [nə tʊgu] ná tugadh; 2 pl. [tʊgI ar'ə wai dI:f' hɛ:n'] Tugaidh aire mhaith daoibh fhéin 'Look after yourselves'.

Similar variations were found at pt.83 (LASID iv, 134-46):

tabhair domh qs.66 and 307: [təjəm] q.217: tug, tugaighidh q.313.

There is another form of the 2 sg.: [tɛim], [təim]. This has been heard by Quiggin 'tɛəm give me' (Qu. §156) and by Wagner at pt. 83 'təijəm' q.217.¹ This form is widely used in this area and I have heard it from many speakers: [tɛim ə t'isur (də Lā:u)] 'Give me the scissors (your hand)' Sp.1; [tɛim [In']] 'Give me that' Sp.3; [təim ə χ'ark [In']] 'Give me that hen' Sp.15.

No standard form of orthographical representation exists for this. It is not surprising, however, that an utterance of this kind should undergo severe contraction and change of form, cf. [hauit' ; hɔ(:)it'] 'here you are' which represents seo duit, and [gɔt' [ə] 'come here' which is explained as being derived from gabh annseo (written goitse in this work).²

1 It occurs in many Ulster dialects: 'tɛjəm (təijəm, təim) tabhair domh!' G. Teil. §396. 'Thaem or taem is used only in the second person singular of the imperative: hɛ:m/tɛ:m fənɪ - give me that'. Ross Goill §583. 'təim ə 'give me it' → Toghaim é, Lochl III 382, (Torr). 'tɛim' LASID q.66 pt.79 (Aranmore). 'təim' SML 214 (see also Lochl. III 212 n.l. - Tyrone)

2 Cf. Eng. Good Bye, a contraction of God be with ye.

For the 2 sg. of this verb I have heard: tabhair, tug and taigheam (?) in the speech of many speakers.

The forms of the imperative for this verb I have heard are:
 2 sg. [to:r'], [tor du^h], [tər du^h] tabhair, tabhair domh ; [tɔg] tug; [tèim], [tai^əm] taigheam. 3 sg. neg. [nə tɔgu] ná tugadh. 2 pl. [tor^(')əg'i], [tīr'īg'i] tabhairigidh; [tɔgəg'i] tugaigidh, alt. [tɔgI] tugaidh.

[rɔ̌g ʃIN']	Rug sinn
2. [rɔ̌g ʃIv']	Rug sibh
3. [rɔ̌g ʃəd]	Rug siad
Passive [rɔ̌gu]	Rugadh

The stem rug occurs in the dependent [N'í rɔ̌g m'ə ən'j'r'Im' ɔrhI] Ní rug mé a'n-ghreim uirthi 'I failed to catch hold of her'.

Forms such as [v'èr ʃə] bheir sé etc. may also be heard [b'èr'u ər' v'ert'] Beireadh ar bheirt 'Two people were caught'.

Future

Sg. 1. [b'èrhə m'ə]	Béarfaidh mé

2. [v'èrhət [IV']	Bhéarfadh sibh
3. [v'èrhət [əd]	Bhéarfadh siad
Passive [v'èrhI]	Bhéarfaí, -thaí

The independent forms [v'è(:)rhu] bhéarfadh occur in the dependent [N'í v'è(:)rhu] ní bhéarfadh etc.

Imperfect

The imperfect can be expressed by the conditional or by the periphrastic method as well as the historical forms [v'èr'ət [ə] bheireadh sé.

The new hybrid forms bheirfeadh may also be heard.

Imperative

2 sg. [b'èr'] beir. 3 sg. [b'èr'ət [ə] beireadh sé. 2 sg. [b'èr'Ig'i] beirigidh.

Verbal Noun

[b'r'èx'], [b'r'è] Breith

Confusion of breith and tabhairt

This verb is sometimes confused with tabhairt 'give' thus [bèr' l'at [In'] Beir leat sin or [to:r' l'at [In'] Tabhair leat sin 'Take that with you'. [b'èrhI [ə ɔrt] Béarfaidh sé ort 'It (lack of sleep) will catch up on you'. [v'èrhI n'arh'n' orhu] Bhéarfaidh an fhear-thainn orthu 'The rain will tire them out'.

The independent forms of the conditional and imperfect are identical for both verbs i.e. bhéarfadh, bheireadh. Thus [[i v'èrhu ə'f'ə'ə' i] Sí a bhéarfadh isteach í 'It is she who would carry it (rushes) indoors'. This goes back to O. Ir. beirid 'carries' thus: ar is do thabairt díglae berid in claideb sin 'for it is to punish (wrong-doers) he carries that sword' (gladium portat) Wb 66^a 13. Yet bhéarfadh (above) is regarded as the 3 sg. conditional of tabhairt thus: [v'èrhI n f'ar ə m'ən Luəhər' l'ɛ] ə'f'ə'ə' i] Bhéarfaidh an fear a mbéidh an luachair leis isteach í 'The man who has the rushes will carry them indoors (if there is no female by the name of Brighid in the house)'.

Given the semantic ranges of these two verbs,¹ and the fusion of their independent forms (above), some degree of interchange would seem inevitable.

Cf. [v'èrhI [ə l'ɛ] Ləhən'] Bhéarfaidh sé leis lochain 'He (badger) will carry off ducks'. [v'ər'ət [ə l'ɛ] m'I] ON λ:nI Bheireadh sé leis mise 'un aonaigh' 'He used to take me with him to the fair', (song).

3m. [t'Ig' [ə], [t'Ig'ən [ə]	Tig sé, tigeann sé
3f. [t'Ig' [i], [t'Ig'ən [i]	Tig sí, tigeann sí
Pl. 1. [t'Ig'ən m'w'íd']	tigeann muid
[t'Ig' [IN'], [t'Ig'ən [IN']	Tig sinn, tigeann sinn
2. [t'Ig' [IV'], [t'Ig'ən [IV']	Tig sibh, tigeann sibh
3. [t'Ig' [əd], [t'Ig'ən [əd]	Tig siad, tigeann siad

The independent forms [t'Ig'] tig, [t'Ig'ən] tigeann occur in the dependent [N'i hIg'] ní thig, [N'i hIg'ən] ní thigeann etc.

Lenited forms can also occur thus: [hIg' [əd ə'ra]] Thig siad arais 'They come back'. Sp.16 - Sp.3 had: [hIg' dI:n'i hart] Thig daoini thart 'People come around (visit this area)'; although [t'Ig'] tig or [t'Ig'ən] tigeann forms were more usual in his speech. (Cf. LASID map 243).

In the phrase t(h)ig le, the lenited forms usually occur thus: [hIg' l'om [In' ə janu] Thig liom sin a dhéanamh 'I can do that'; yet [t'Ig'(ən) [ə hi:t sə t'ax'tun'] Tig(eann) sé heat sa tseachtmhain 'He comes once a week'. This same tendency is observed elsewhere in Donegal.¹ While Sp.5 did say: [hIg' l'at [In' ə hort l'at] Thig leat sin a thabhairt leat 'you can take that with you'; she usually had an unlenited form e.g. [t'Ig' l'om pɔ:su Lɑ: ər' b'i ə'ní:] Tig liom pósadh lá ar bith anois 'I can marry any day now'. She also had unlenited forms in the conditional [t'ok'u l'IN' roun el'ə janu] Tioc-fadh linn round eile a dheanamh 'We could make some more'. [t'ok'u l'om [In' ə v'ə ɔgəm] Tiocfadh liom sin a bheith agam 'I could

1 'The present of teacht is lenited when it means "can"; hæg' L'om e: ek'al - I can see him; but when it means "comes" it is not lenited; t'æg' [ə gɔ m'ənək' - he often comes (but in this meaning tarann or tiocann is more common'. Ros Goill §74. Ó Baoill deals with this in his work (p.253f.)

(should) have learned that (song)'. It was more usual to hear [hɔku] thiocfadh from other speakers.

The stem tar- is very rare in this area and I have only heard two examples [tærəm] taraim 'I come' and [tærən [ə] tarann sé 'he comes' - this stem occurs occasionally in the Imperative, which see.

An analogical consuetudinal present form has been heard: [t'ɪg'i sɣər'əf'in nə kuɪχ'ə] Tigidh sgairbhsíon na cuaiche 'The cuckoo storm is wont to come'.

The relative forms can vary: [ə hɪg'əs], [ə hɪg'əns], [ə hɪg'(ən)] a thigeas, a thigeanns, a thig(eann).

I have only one example of the future sem in the present: [d'ɔkən [In nə g'itɪ b'ɔgə] An dtiocann sin 'na giotaí beaga? 'Does that come in small pieces?' A Commeen child.

Past

Sg. 1.	[hanɪk' m'ə]	[han'-]	[hèn'-]	Tháinig mé

Pl. 1. [t'ɔkə mʷid']	Tiocfaidh muid
[t'ɔkə ʃIN'ə]	Tiocfaidh sinne
2. [t'ɔkə ʃIv']	Tiocfaidh sibh
3. [t'ɔkə ʃəd]	Tiocfaidh siad

The independent forms [t'ɔkI] tiocfaidh (tiucaidh Gallagher 21) occur in the dependent: [N'i hɔkI] ní thiocfaidh etc.

Relative [hɔkəs] thiocfas.

Conditional

Sg. 1. [hɔkIN']	Thiocfainn
2. [hɔka]	Thiocfá
3m. [hɔkət ʃə]	Thiocfadh sé
3f. [hɔkət ʃi]	Thiocfadh sí
Pl. 1. [hɔku mʷid']	Thiocfadh muid
[hɔkət ʃIN']	Thiocfadh sinn
2. [hɔkət ʃIv']	Thiocfadh sibh
3. [hɔkət ʃəd]	Thiocfadh siad
Passive [hɔkI]	Thiocfaí

The independent forms [hɔku] thiocfadh occur in the dependent: [N'i hɔku] ní thiocfadh.

While the independent of this verb is usually lenited note the occasional forms thiocfadh liom 'I could' etc. discussed under the Present Tense of this verb.

Imperfect

The conditional may appear for the imperfect, although this verb preserves the old imperfect forms quite well. The periphrastic construction may also appear.

Sg. 1. [hIg'IN']	Thiginn
2.
3m. [hIg'ət [ə]]	Thigeadh sé
3f. [hIg'ət [i]]	Thigeadh sí
Pl. 1.

2. [hIg'ət [IV']	Thigeadh sibh
3. [hIg'ət [əd]]	Thigeadh siad

The independent forms [hIg'u] thigeadh occur in the dependent: [N'i hIg'u] ní thigeadh etc.

Subjunctive

The past subjunctive is quite commonly heard [a d'Ig'u nam[Ir' wai] Dá dtigeadh an aimsir mhaith¹ 'Were the good weather to come', Sp.1. [a d'Ig'u d'n'ə [t'ah qgəd] Dá dtigeadh duine isteach chugat 'Were a person to come into you(r house)', Sp.10. The conditional may also appear.

Passive [da:kI əN'[In' ə gə d'Ig'i n t'r'om] D'fhágfaí annsin é go dtig(th)í (?) an triomughadh 'It would be left there to dry'.

The present subjunctive is also quite commonly heard [gə d'Ig'ə m'ə ra]] go dtigidh mé arais 'until I come back', [mər d'Ig'i [ə] mur dtigidh sé 'if he does not come'.

For fuller examples of past and present subjunctive forms of these verbs see the discussion of these moods in this work pp.277 and 274.

1 Cf. Dá dtigeadh an aimsir mhaith ar mhuin gearr-fhiadh ní thiocfadh sé achmair go léor'. ZCP 29, 47 no.137 (LASID pt.83).

Imperative

There are several forms in use. I have heard [tar] tar 2 sg.
[na taru] Ná taradh 3 sg. neg. and [tarəg'i] taraigidh 2 pl.

gabh is also used thus: [go: ə' t'ah] gabh isteach 'come in' pl.
[go:əg'i t'ah] gabhaigidh isteach (Gabh may also be used to mean 'go').

The 2 sg. form [gət'ə] is extremely common (a contracted form of gabh annseo according to Ó Searcaigh). With the establishment of goitse (gaibhte?) as a 2 sg. form the plural ending [əg'i] is now added, thus: 2 pl. [gət'əg'i] goitsigidh 'come here'.

The Neuter Pronoun

The accusative form of the neuter pronoun ea(dh) < O. Ir. ed is heard in forms of the copula [fə] 'sea < Is ea.

O'Rahilly's statement¹ does not accurately apply to this area - see for example LASID map 297 '(we shall wash) ourselves' - Sps.1, 3 and 10 all answered Nighfidh muid sinn féin.

In this area sinn is used in the accusative and nominative (as the subject of an active verb). muid is still used as a verbal form and only rarely in the accusative. Speakers often vary the usage of sinn and muid. Thus in response to LASID q.39 'we tie' Sp.1 answered ceanglann sinn; Sp.3 ceanglann muid; Sp.10 ceangal muid (ceanglaigheann muid pt.83). In response to q.56 'we milk', Sps.1, 3 and 10 answered bligheann sinn (alt. bligh muid Sp.10: bligheann sinn pt.83). In response to q.57 'we did not milk them' Sp.1 answered, níor bhligh muid iad (similar response from pt.83), while Sps.3 and 10 answered níor bhligh sinn iad.

While no hard and fast rules can be drawn up, it can be stated that sinn survives not only as an accusative, but is also used as the subject of an active verb, although it is common to hear forms such as fuair muid and fuair sinn from the same speaker. (Compare the situation in Tory: 'Sinn is only used very rarely in place of muid in the accusative case; I have not noted its use in the nominative

1 'A characteristic of N. Ir. is that the pronoun sinn 'we, us' has been rarely discarded, being replaced by muid ... taken from the verbal inflection of 1 pl. pres. and fut.' IDPP 215f.

case.' Tory p.185 (c).)

Sinne is the usual emphatic form. I have only recorded one example of muid sinne : 'Sise a thóg muid sinne [m'wí] [IN'ə] 'It was she who reared us.' Sp.11.

It is quite common to hear the 2 sg. accusative form thusa suffixed to 2 sg. forms of the conditional or past subjunctive - An ndéanfá thusa é? 'Would you do it?'; Dá dtéightheá thusa isteach go teach 'Were you to go into a house.' The accusative forms of the 2 sg. and pl. can also be suffixed to the imperative forms - Imthigh thusa leat! 'You go away!'; Gabhaighidh ibhse 'un an bhaile! 'You go home!' - the nominative forms of the 2 pl. may also be heard - Luirgidh sibhse síos! 'Lie you down!' Sp.1; Tionntaighidh sibhse 'You turn' Sp.3.

The nominative form of the pronoun is employed in the vast majority of cases as the subject of active verbs in the third person, thus: tá sé 'he/it is'; tá sí 'she is'; tá siad 'they are'; Nevertheless Ó Baoíll (p.257f.) has listed a number of examples from Donegal and elsewhere of occasional employment of accusative forms. This is also a feature of this dialect e.g. Tá é [tə ə] ag tochairt ... 'He is digging ...' Sp.1. Tá é (shé?) [tə hə] ag toisiughadh 'It is starting ...' Sp.10. Tá iad [tə əd] Sps.1 and 3; Tá iad [təd] cailte 'They are lost' Sp.20. I have not recorded any examples from the 3 sg. fem. form.

I have recorded the nominative form sise, where the accusative form ise might be expected in the following: thug an Rí leis sise fosta 'God called her as well'. (Note also: Sise a thóg muid sinne Sp.11(above) and Seisean a bhí dá thiomáint 'He was driving' Sp.2.

Certain words in this dialect (and elsewhere) are masculine in gender but are referred to by a feminine pronoun e.g. cailín 'girl'; capall 'mare'; bád 'boat'. (Note how madadh is masculine when referring to a (male) dog and feminine when referring to a 'bitch' - 'Sé an tseanmhádadh a thóg é sin 'It was the old bitch which reared that one'.

Anaphoric Discord

Palmer (p.89) illustrates that the meanings of the first and second person forms of the personal pronouns are established situationally. In other words that they are deictic or 'pointing' words, whereas the forms of the third person are anaphoric in the sense that they refer to individuals already mentioned in the dialogue.

In this dialect when the pronoun refers to a female person the 3rd sg. fem. form is used e.g. Bhí Máire annsin aréir, an bhfaca tú í? 'Mary was there last night, did you see her?' The same is usually true for animals, Níor bhuaill mé ariamh í 'I never hit her' (referring to dog-bitch). Ar bhligh tu í? 'Did you milk her/it?' (cow).

With inanimate objects, however, this is not always so. Sp.1 usually referred to inanimate objects, which are feminine nouns, with the feminine independent pronoun í e.g. Bhéarfadh siad leobhtha abhaile í 'They would take it (fiddle = an fhídeál) home with them'; cf. tuagh a bhainfeadh í 'an axe that would cut it (stick = an tslat)' Sp.5. Some other speakers tend to use a masculine pronoun, or alternate between a masculine and feminine pronoun. Sp.1 referring to turf (= an mhóin) used í, agus í cruinn 'and it gathered (up)'. Sp.2 used é, le é a thabhairt isteach 'to bring it in'. Sp.3 referred to turf with í on some occasions, í a bhaint 'to cut it'; yet é on others - D'fhágfaí annsin é go dtigidh an triomughadh agus spréidhfeí é agus annsin chróigfeí é 'It would be left there until the drying would come and it would be spread and then footed'. Sp.2 also used é when referring to the fire (= an teinidh): Má leigeann tú síos an teinidh tá sé doiligh é a thabhairt arais 'If you let the fire go down it is hard to bring it back (light it up again)'.

The above examples are all taken from natural speech and as such reflect natural usage whereas with English questions such as: 'the wool must be carded before it is spun' LASID q.230; and 'it (turf) has to be dried properly' LASID q.573; it might be argued that English it might prompt Irish é/sé, nevertheless, as the following illustrate, Sp.1 used í/sí while Sps.3 and 10 used é/sé.

LASID q.230: Caithfear í a chardáil sulmá sníomhfar é. Sp.2 (Sp.1 corrects to í).

Caithfear an olainn a chardáil sulmá sníomhfar é. Sp.3.

Caithfear an olainn a chardáil sulmá ndéanfar snáth dó. Sp.10.

LASID q.573: Ní fhuil sí maith go leor. Sp.1.

Caithfidh sé a bheith tirim go leor sulmá ndtógfaidh

[No:kə(!)] tú é. Sp.3.

Caithfear é a thriomughadh go maith. Sp.10.

The fact that, from all appearances, the last generation of monoglot Irish speakers maintained anaphoric accord between feminine inanimate singular nouns and their referent pronoun (í), and that some speakers still do,¹ while others² use the masculine cum neuter pronoun é, suggests that fluency in the English language may have been decisive in the development of this anaphoric discord.

1 Usually those who have spent most of their lives speaking Irish, even though they do know English.

2 Usually those who have had occasion to speak English with relatives or neighbours - the mother of Sp.3 spoke English - or while engaged in work elsewhere - Sp.2 spent some years working in Belfast.

EMPHATIC SUFFIXES

Sg. 1. [sə] - sa [[ə] - se	Pl. 1. [Nə (nə)] - na [N'ə] - ne
2. [sə] - sa [[ə] - se	2. [sə] - sa [[ə] - se
3m. [sən] - san [[ən] - sean	3. [sən] - san [[ən] - sean
3f. [sə] - sa [[ə] - se

Intervocally, [s] may interchange with [ʃ] e.g. [ʔig'əʃən] aige-sean alt., [ʔig'əsən] aige-san; [ogetʃə] agat-sa, one example of [ogetʃə].

The forms -s(e)an may be replaced by -sa/-se e.g. [da χɔd'ʃə d'a:rhar'] dá chuid-se dearbhráthair 'for his brothers' (the same speaker did have [da χɔd'ʃən mak] dá chuid-sean mac 'for his sons'). [b'e:rLə f'r'i:d' ə gɔd'ʃə gE:l'Ik'] Béarla fríd a gcuid-se Gaedhilg 'English through their Irish'.

Alternatively -s(e)an may appear for -se/-sa or -ne/-na e.g. [ɔn mɔ:g'əsən] ann m'óige-san 'in my youth', [ar gɔd'ʃən] ár gcuid-sean 'ours', [N'í LIhət [IN'ʃən [i:s] ní luighfeadh sinn-sean síos 'we would not lie down'.

POSSESSIVES

The possessive adjectives are:

Sg. 1. [mə ; mɔ] mo (len.)	Pl. 1. [ar (ər)] ár (ecl.)
2. [də ; dɔ] do (len.)	2. [mər] bhur , mur (ecl.)
3m. [ə] a (len.)	3. [ə] a (ecl.)
3f. [ə] a (h before vowels)

As with other dialects cuid may be used with plural and unbounded nouns e.g. mo chuid eallaigh/cearc 'my cattle/hens'.

When used with the verbal noun in constructions of the type (do/ag/i) + poss. pron. + v.n., the prepositions often disappear e.g.

Tá mé 'mo [mɔ] shuidhe 'I am up (out of bed)'

Tá sí 'na [nə] luighe 'She is in bed'¹

Tá muid ár [ar] gcomhnuidhe ann 'We live there'

An bhfuil mé 'mur [mər] gcoinneáilt 'Am I holding you back?'

The possessive (emphatic or non-emphatic) may also be formed by the construction (article) + noun + s'agam, s'agat etc. e.g.

madadh s'agam-sa 'my dog'

ag an bhean s'aige 'at his wife'

Chuirfeadh sise an Ghaedhilg s'aici fhéin orthu

'She used to translate them into her own Irish' teach s'againne 'our house'

ag may also be used in constructions of the following:

Ní fhuil maith ar bith sa Ghaedhilg atá ag Seán

'John's Irish is very poor'

Deirbhshiúr den fhear a bhí aici

'A sister of her late husband's'

Tá mé m'aunt aige 'I am an aunt of his'

With children the use of ag is extremely common e.g.

Ní fhuil an cos (sic.) aige go maith 'His leg is bad'

Cur (sic.) suas é go dtí an leabaidh s'aige

'Put him up to his bed'

do may be used to express relationship e.g. dearbhráthair domh-sa 'a brother of mine', uncail dó 'an uncle of his'.

1 N.B. 'bhí siad 'a gcomhnuidhe' TEXT 36.

The definite article commonly appears in place of a possessive pronoun e.g. Tá an dá mhac ag obair 'Her (lit. the) two sons are working'. Cf. CGT §5.

ASPECTS OF THE CASE SYSTEM

Up to and including this century Donegal Irish (as with other Irish dialects) has been fairly conservative in the preservation of its case system. With the advent of bilingualism, there appears to have been a marked increase in the simplification of the case system, as Lucas remarked: 'In Ros Goill the noun is approaching the position in Welsh where there is a single form for all cases of the singular and another for all cases of the plural'. (Ros Goill viii f.) In this area there is great variation between the generations; the older, mainly Irish-speaking, distinguish the nominative, vocative, genitive and dative for some nouns, while the younger people (and those of the older generation who speak English on a regular basis) tend towards the simplified case system. As will be seen, however, there is variance among the older speakers. I have decided to discuss examples heard chiefly in normal conversation and to supplement these, in places, with material received in response to Heinrich Wagner's English questionnaire (LASID vol. IV p.xiii-xx). In comparing the material obtained by the questionnaire method with the material obtained from normal conversation it would appear that Wagner's statement regarding the grammatical forms collected by himself - while not always fitting into the tidy framework of 'Modern Irish Grammar' - are representative of current native Irish speech:

'I have reached the conclusion that, with regard to grammatical forms and to sounds, our informants have invariably given genuine material. As regards syntax and idiom, much of our collection may be corrupt, from the point of view of students of the older language, but most of these sentences occur in current Irish and would be used freely by our speakers if they still spoke Irish. We are concerned with linguistic reality, and not with an ideal language which may exist in the minds of the philologists'. (Lochl. I p.15)

Some collectors in the early part of this century (and later) seemed reluctant to accept 'nominatives' for 'genitives' or English loanwords occurring in Gaedhealtacht speech - cf. Cr. Chon. 115: 'A few Anglicisms were altered as follows :- ... The names of the helping companions containg mac without the article were asyntactic, thus - fios mhac fios &c. They have all been corrected to what grammar requires i.e.[fios mhac Feasa p.16]'.

Bergin (Ériu II, p.47) stated that: 'Irish grammarians have too often laid down rules for what ought to be said, before taking the trouble to find out what actually is said'. In the light of these statements and the above mentioned variation in forms (which is considerable, even within the speech of individuals) it can hardly be expected to draw up 'rules' for the case system in this dialect, which is at present undergoing a major transistion from a poly - to a monocase system. I shall endeavour, however, to indicate the main development in the case system.

THE VOCATIVE

The vocative is usually always marked by lenition in both the singular and the plural. The particle a may or may not be elided. [wuər tu ə hi:l'ə] An bhfuair tú é a Shíle? 'Did you find it Sheila?' [wa_l ə v'ik'i] Bhal a Mhicí 'Well, Micky'. [ə xɑ:rd'ə] a chairde '(Oh) friends', Sp.1 and 11 (song).

The inflected form may occur e.g. [ə lɑdI hɑlI] A shladaidhe shalaigh! 'Oh vile marauder!' Sp.2. Alternatively the ordinary nominative form may be heard [I^x' art] Ith, Art 'Eat (up) Art'.

THE NOMINATIVE SINGULAR

Nouns in this dialect are either masculine or feminine. In the majority of cases, most nouns retain their traditional gender although certain inconsistencies may occur e.g. an adhbhar 'the cause' (fem.) more usually an t-adhbhar (masc.), an t-ordóg 'the thumb' (masc.) more usually an ordóg (fem.)

Feminine nouns in the nominative singular lenite the adjective e.g. [k'ark 'yuh] cearc dhubh 'a black hen'.

The nominative in this dialect, in common with other Irish dialects, is also used as the accusative thus:

Bhí an t-uisce ach an áit 'The water was everywhere'

Snámh an fiadh an t-uisce 'The deer swam the water'

Even though some oblique cases have replaced the original nominative form, there is a growing tendency for nominative forms to replace inflected forms of the vocative, genitive and dative.

THE NOMINATIVE PLURAL

Very often the nominative plural serves as a 'common plural' (i.e. for all cases). There is some variation in forms used, with the ending -annaí [-əNI] becoming more widespread. The tendency for plurals to end in [I], [i], may, as O'Rahilly has suggested (IDPP 78), be due to dative plural -ibh → í.

[-ə] v [-I]

[krɔsəNə (-I)] crosanna(í) 'crosses', Sp.5, [bɔlkənə (-I)] balcanna(í) 'showers', Sp.11, [daihədəhə (-I)] daicheadacha(í) 'forties', Sp.3, [tɔltə (-I)] talta(í) 'lands'.

-annaí

[a:t'əNI] 'places', usually [a:t'əhə]. [maran pɔ:ləNI] 'a lot of holes', usually [pʷiL']. [krɔsəNə (-I)] 'crosses' Sps.1 and 3 - [krɔsə] Sp.5. [tɔməNI] 'bushes' Sp.11, usually [t'im']. [sLətəNI] 'rods', usually [sLətəhə]. [skrahə] alt., [skrahəNI] 'sods', Sp.3, [t'au'liəNI] ^{teahannaí (?)} 'families' Sp.3.

annaí is usually added to English words of one syllable e.g. jarannaí 'jars', vanannaí 'vans', bombannaí 'bombs', swampannaí 'swamps'.

Other variant plurals include:

[L'è:srI] 'cures', Sp.5, [L'è:srahə] Sp.2, [L'è:səNI] Sp.3. [garəntəhə] 'gardens', Sps.1 and 10, [garIəhə] Sp.3. [sɔɑ:lI] 'dishes', Sps.1 and 3, [sɔɑ:ltI] Sp.10.

Sp.5 had the form [L'o:r'] 'books' in a prayer, yet [L'o:rhI] in conversation .

The normal plural of fear 'man' is [f'ir'] yet cf. [t'r'é:n də f'ir'ə] 'plenty of men'.

In addition to [kɔgIəhə] 'wars', and [p'akIəhə] 'sins', I have heard [kɔgI] and [p'akI].

Some nouns have a special plural form when used with numerals e.g. [uər'əntə], [uər'əNI] 'times, hours', yet [t'r'i: huər'ə] 'three times'. [b'l'iəntə] 'years', yet [ɔxt m'l'iəNə] 'eight years'.¹ [p'i:n'əhə] 'pennies', yet [f:e p'i:n'ə] 'six-pence'.

THE GENITIVE SINGULAR

DEFINITE GENITIVE SINGULAR

The genitive in this dialect is undergoing a transition. Historically the definite article an (leniting) occurs before the genitive case of masculine nouns, and the definite article na (prefixing h-

1 Yet note trí scór bliadhanta (NUMERALS s.v. 60) to nouns beginning in a vowel) occurs before the genitive case of feminine nouns. While this holds good, to some extent, for those older speakers whose daily language is Irish, there is a growing tendency to form the genitive by placing the definite article an (leniting) before the nominative case of nouns of both genders. This 'neo-genitive' is extremely prevalent in the speech of the younger generations and has found its way into the speech of some of the older generations (many of whom alternate between traditional and neo-forms).

The following have been heard from younger speakers and older speakers who speak English on a fairly regular basis:

[mɑk əN' ar] mac an fhear 'the man's son' C. ; [ər sɔn ə ɣE:l'Ik'] ar son an Ghaedhilg 'for the Irish language' Sp.15; [ə'N'e:n wəhər'] i ndéidh an mháthair 'after the mother' C. - cf. [ə'N'è: əN' Ir'h]
i ndéidh an fhir 'after the husband' Sp.5; [fɑ 'hɔN'ə n wɑk] fá choinne an mhac 'for the boy' C. ; [tus ə t'r'ɔbləd'] tús an triobláid 'the start of the trouble' C. ; [mɔLɑ hə f'an] mullach an pheann 'the top of the pen' C. ; [də ɣu:l ə dərəs] de chúl an doras 'off the back of the door' Sp.4; [rɔbəl ə ɣauən'] ruball an ghamhain 'the calf's tail' Sp.2 - cf. [rɔbəl ə ɣaunə] ruball an ghamhna Sp.1. [d'er'u n v'I:]
deireadh an mhí 'the end of the month' C. - cf. [tu:s nə m'i:sə] tús na míosa 'the start of the month' Sp.1.

[kɔ:tə N'ar ɔ:əg] cóta an fhear óg 'the young man's coat' Sp.11a [ə gu:l ə t'ah u:r] i gcúl an teach úr 'in the back of the new house' Sp.10a ; [fə 'hɔN'ə NI:ɣ'ə wo:r] fá choinne an oidhche mhór 'for the big night' C.

The following have been heard in the normal conversation of

Sp.3.:

[fɔŋ'ə n jɛv'r'i] fá choinne an gheimhridh 'for the winter', yet [p'ap'ar n Lɑ: n'u^h] paipeár an lá indiu 'today's paper'; [ə du:s ə n
 'i'b'r'an'] i dtús an Aibreáin 'at the start of April', yet [ə n'ɛr'u n'i'b'r'an] i ndeireadh an Aibreán 'at the end of April'; [ər' hI:v' ə χr'ik'] ar thaoibh an chnoic 'on the side of the hill'; [k'art ə n asəl'] cart an asail 'the donkey cart'; yet [ə du:s ə n an'Im'] i dtús an ainm
 'at the start of the name'; [ə n'e: ə χɔgu d'ɛr'əna [In']] i ndéidh an chogadh deireannach sin 'after that last war'; [ə n'e:dan ə wɔnu [In' ɛl'ə] in éadan an bhunadh sin eile 'against that other crowd'. [ɔs kɔn'ə nə gI:χ'ə] ós coinne na gaoithe 'opposite the wind'; [tɔ:n nə baskad'ə] tóin na bascóide 'the bottom of the basket'; yet [ər' hɔn (ə m'e:l) ə wɔ:] ar shon (i mbéal) an bhó 'for (in the mouth of) the cow'. [ən' è:cɔn ə st'ir''Im'] in éadan an stoirm 'against the storm'; [bIλ:sɔ ə n 'if'] blaosc an uibh 'the shell of the egg'; [Lɑ:r ə n χrua] lár an chruach 'the middle of the stack'.

The following have been heard from Sp.10:

[su: nə k'Ir'k'ə (f'ɔ:|ə)] sugh na circe (feola) 'chicken (beef) soup'; [iv' nə n'Id'ə] uibh na nide 'the nest-egg'; [blû:sɔ nə h'iv'ə] blaosc na huibhe 'the shell of the egg'; [ɑ:wər nə bɔnag'ə] adhbhar na bunnóige 'the mixture for the bannock'; yet [ər wər ə χr'il'hag] ar bharr an chroithleog 'on top of the ear of corn'; [Luəχ ə n ɔ|In'] luach an olainn 'the price of the wool'; [gə d'i: d'ɛr'un t'axtun'] go dtí deireadh an tseachtmhain 'until the end of the week'; [l'ə kɔ] ə χɔd' ɛl'ə] le cois an chuid eile 'besides the rest'; [L'abI n ɣaunə] leabaidh an ghamhna 'the calf-bed'; [fa 'hɔn'ən (ər' χlag'In' ə) v'ahI] fá choinne (ar chloiginn) an bheathaigh 'for (on the head of) the horse'; yet [ər ɔŋk ə χ'ɔn ɛl'ə] ar amharc an chionn eile 'in view of the other one.

When a noun which is preceded by the neo-genitive singular of the definite article is qualified by an adjective, the nominative ^{form of the} adjective is normally lenited. This applies to both genders e.g. [ə gu:l ə xɾɔk wo:r] i gcúl an chnoc mhór 'at the back of the big hill'; [fə 'xöN'ə n v'e:r v'øg] fá choinne an mhéar bheag 'for the little finger'; both examples Sp.10. It is noteworthy that in response to the question 'the middle of the small window' Sp.1 answered: [La:r nə f'wín'ag'ə b'Ig'ə] lár na fuinneoige bige. Both Sp.1 and Sp.5 were fairly conservative in their speech - cf. Rása na muice duibhe ó Dhoire 'un na gCeall s.v. muc (part of prophecy). Note also ar thaoibh an bhealaigh mhóir 'on the roadside' Sp.10 - a set phrase.

Occasionally some feminine nouns retain their old inflected forms of the genitive but are preceded by the masculine form of the article e.g. [mak ə wā:ri:nə] mac an bhan-ríoghna 'the queen's son' Sp.19, [əg' ɔ:l ə vla:iχ'ə] ag ól an bhláithche 'drinking the buttermilk', [grIhə n'ib'r'ə] gnaithe an oibre 'matters relating to the work' - cf. [tu:s nə h'ib'r'ə] tús na hoibre 'the start of the work'; [d'er'u əN øbər'] deireadh an obair 'the end of the work'.

Some forms appear to be utterly corrupt e.g. [trəsnə nə f'wa:r'k'] trasna na pháirc 'across the field' Sp.3 - cf. [trəsnə nə pa:r'k'ə] trasna na páirce Sp.1

While the neo-genitive is gaining ground, some older forms of the genitive are preserved by all speakers, due to their everyday usage. e.g. [f'ar ə tI:] fear an toighe 'the man of the house'; [t'ax ə fəb'ill'] Teach an Phobail 'The Chapel'; [əf'Ig' ə f'wi't'] Oifig an Phoist 'The Post Office'.

With some of the younger (and older) generations who are much given to English the nominative may on occasions oust the genitive totally e.g. [k'QN ə f'ar əl'ə] cionn an fear eile 'the head of the other man'; [t'a u:r m'ihal] teach úr Micheál 'Michael's new house'; [d'Ír'u m'i: June] deireadh mí June 'the end of June'; [ə kɔ:r'u ə t̪i[k'ə] ag cóiriughadh an t-uisce 'mending the water (mains)'; [ər χu:l ə t'a sɔgɪn'ə] ar chúl an teach s'againne 'behind our house'.

INDEFINITE GENITIVE SINGULAR

There is a growing tendency for the nominative singular to occur where, historically, the genitive is expected. This appears to be more developed among the younger generations and among those of the older generations who are given to English-speaking.

Examples from this last mentioned group include:

[maran 'drɔ'fwi'l'] mórán drochfuil 'much bad blood' C. ; [ör'əd
 f''ɪnu] oiread fionnadh 'as much fur' C. ; [N'art mo:n'] neart móin
 'plenty of turf' C. ; [t'r'ɔmu mai fɔn'ə mo:n'] triomughadh maith fá choinne móin 'good drying for turf' Sp.10a; [ɣa: fɔ: [t'ə gi'ʃsɔ] dhá pháiste giorsach 'two wee girls' Sp.11b - cf. [pʷa: [t'ə g''iʃsɪ] páiste giorsaighe Sp.11a, yet [t'r'e:n ar'ək'əd] tréan airgead Sp.11a; [kə'd'e:n k'In'al bɔk ə'tɔn] Caidé an cineál boc atá ann? 'What sort of a boyo is he?' C.

Sp.3 showed great variation: [Lɔ: tɔ:rn'i (tɔ:rn'a)] lá tóirniche/tóirneach 'a thundery day' ; [tɪ: f'anən' (Luəhrə)] tuighe feannáin (luachra) 'white coarse grass (rush) thatch'; yet [tɪ:
 kɔhən ([ɔgəl)] tuighe cochán (seagal) 'straw (rye) thatch'; [kiv'r'ən f'è:r'] cuibhreann féir 'a field of hay', yet [ɔxtən f'è:r] uchtán féar 'an armful of hay'; [Lɔ: kɔ:rəi] lá comhráidh 'a day's conversation'; [k'Ip'in' sɔɪl] cipín solais 'a match'; [p'r'e:ətɪ pɔ:r'] préataí póir 'seed potatoes', yet [gən ɔglə [ɔkən] gan eagla siocán 'with no fear of frost', [gɔntənəs ar'əg'əd] ganntanas airgead 'scarcity of money'; [ʃaxtən' ə'wə:n' mai g'r'iən ɔgəs gɪ:] seachtmhain amháin maith grian agus gaoth 'one good week of sun and wind';

[maran u:sad' (dohər)] móran úsáid (dochar) 'a lot of use (harm)'.
 Sps.3 and 14 had [sa:LtI a:məd] sáltaí adhmaid 'wooden heels' - yet Sp.14 had [köl'ər a:məd'] coiléar adhmaid 'a wooden collar' cf.
 [saiχ'a a:məd'] soitheach adhmaid 'a wooden vessel', Sp.1. Sp.10 had [ʼaɴ'toməLt skI:L't'ə] an-tamallt scaoilte 'a long period of shooting', yet [ʃɔ:rt IN't'aht e:n] seort eighinteacht éan 'some sort of bird'; [ər'hi n'è: ba:s] aithridhe i ndéidh bás 'repenting after (one's) death'.

Sp.1 had [axən χ'In'al sɔ:rt'] achán chineál spóirt 'every type of sport', yet [ʃɔ:rt ər' b'i g'r'an] seort ar bith greann 'any sort of fun'. Sp.5 had [ʃɔ:rt i:n't'aht mɑdI] seort eighinteacht madaidh
 'some sort of dog', yet [d'anu mɑdu] déanamh madadh '(the) shape of a dog'.

When qualified by an adjective the inflected form of the genitive is not used, as far as I have observed, thus: [fə 'hɔɴ'ə tɔməLt b'ag] fá choinne tamallt beag 'for a little while', [fə 'hɔɴ'ə ɔ̀ŋk ə'N'e:
 stɔk b'ɔg ɔ̀gəs d'ər'u] fá choinne amharc i ndéidh stoc beag agus deireadh 'to look after a little stock and everything (else)'. Sp.1.

GENITIVE PLURAL

DEFINITE

There is a growing tendency for the common form of the plural to replace older forms of the genitive plural, nevertheless some nouns preserve the genitive, especially those belonging to the first and second declensions and often-used nouns from other declensions e.g.
caora 'sheep'. Hard and fast rules cannot be drawn up e.g. [ös k'ɔɴ nə mɔɔ:g] os cionn na mbróg 'above the shoes'. Sp.1 - yet [ə d'anu brɔ:gə] ag deanamh bróga 'making shoes' Sp.1. [rɔ:bəl (bɔ:iχ'a Sp.3) nə mɔ:k] ruball (bóitheach) na muc 'The pigs' tails/pigsty' Sps.1 and 3. [E:rkə (bɔ:iχ'a) nə mo:] adharca (bóitheach) na mbó 'the cows' horns/cowshed' Sp.3 - yet [fə 'hɔn'ə nə mɔ'h] fá choinne na mba 'for the cows' Sp.3. [ɔŋk nə su:l] amharc na súl 'the sight of the eyes' Sp.3, yet [ös k'ɔn nə su:l'ə] os cionn na súile 'above the eyes' Sp.3. Other examples of definite genitive plurals from Sp.3 include: [ə gu:l nə grɔk] i gcúl na gcnoc 'in the back of the hills', (cf. [ə ju:l nə gr'ik'] ag siubhal na gnoic 'walking the hills' Sp.8), [ös k'ɔn nə dIhə] os cionn na dtoighteach 'above the houses', [də χɔd lə:u] do chuid lámh 'your hands' (cf. [mər ɡɔd lə:uʷə] mur gcuid lámha 'your hands' Sp.10).

Examples of a common plural for the definite genitive plural from Sp.3 include: [m'i:L't'ə (əN' e:dən) nə səsənI] mílte (in éadan) na Sasanaigh 'the English miles/against the English', [ös k'ɔn nə m'w'ik'] os cionn na mboic 'in charge of the rogues' (also heard from Sp.11). Sp.3 did not eclipse in the following: [əN' e:dən nə hɛ:r'ənI] in éadan na hÉireannaigh¹ 'against the Irish'.

Sp.10 had the following genitive forms: [dɔl nə mɔlɔg] dall na mullóg 'cataract' (in sheep)' (also Sps.1 and 3), [m'I l nə m'ahɔg] mil na mbeachóg 'the bees' honey' (also Sp.3), [ə 'N'e: nə ɡ'ark] i ndéidh na gcearc 'chasing the hens' (also Sp.3). The following common plural forms were heard from Sp.10: [ə 'N'e:dən nə sɔɣərt'] in éadan na sagairt 'against the priests', [fə 'hɔn'ə nə skəuan'] fá choinne na scamháin 'for the lungs'.

Sp.5 had: [ənəhə nə grɔk] éanacha na gcnoc 'the birds of the hills', cf. [t'r'e:n kr'ik'] tréan cnoic 'plenty of hills', Sp.5. The following from Sp.5 illustrates the indeterminate occurrence of the genitive (v common) plural: Mórán daoíní a ghníos fá choinne na mbóitheach iad fá choinne an eallaigh agus na gcaoirigh 'A lot of people make them for the byres, for the cattle and sheep'.

There is a growing tendency, especially among the younger speakers, to use the nominative or 'common' plural form of the article na, instead of the genitive form na (eclipsing) e.g. [skɔl nə hɔləbnI] scoil an hAlbanaigh 'the Protestant school' C., [fə 'χÖN'ə nə b'ahI kapəL'] fá choinne na beathaigh capaill 'for the horses' Sp.15 - cf. Sp.3 above in éadan na hÉireannaigh.

INDEFINITE GENITIVE PLURAL

There is a strong tendency among all speakers to use a common plural in place of the genitive, but there is variation in the speech of the older people.

Sp.3 had: [maran b'r'ak (b'r'Ik')] mórán breac/bric 'a lot of trout', [t'r'e:n kīt'ag (kīt'agI)] tréan cuiteog/cuiteogaí 'plenty of worms', [ə gɔd' u: (u:əNI)] a gcuid úth/úthannaí 'their udders', [ʼan'rɔd iv'a (iv'əhə)] an-rud uibheach/uibheacha 'a lot of eggs'. [N'is mo: f'Ir'] níos mó fir 'more men', yet [ən m'è:d' (maran) f'ar] an méid (mórán) fear 'the number of (a lot of) men'. While he had: [è:L'in' k'ark] eillín cearc 'a brood of chickens', [maran kɔl'ag] mórán cuileog 'a lot of flies', he also had: [t'r'e:n krík'] tréan cnoic 'plenty of hills'.

Sp.1 had: [grIhə p'I[r'ag] gnaithe pisreog 'matters relating to superstitions', yet [maran p'I[r'agI] mórán pisreogaí 'a lot of superstitions'; [traif'ə! èv'l'agI] traifeal aibhleogaí 'a few embers', [ir'əd tim'] oiread toim 'as many bushes', yet [ə 'N'e: è:na ögəs Lɔhag] i ndéidh éanach agus luchóg 'hunting birds and mice'.

In set phrases or placenames a definite genitive plural may survive, while the indefinite genitive plural is replaced by the common plural in normal speech e.g. áit mhór fá choinne riabhógaí [rE:wagI] 'a place where larks gather' - said of the townland Mín na Riabhóg [rE:wag] Sp.6. Caithfidh sé go rabh an-rud broic [br'ik'] ann 'There must have been a lot of badgers there' - said of the townland Mín na mBroc [mrɔk] Sp.6. While the genitive plural of slat 'stick, wand' is preserved in Domhnach na Slat 'Palm Sunday', Sp.5 had cleas eighinteacht slatacha 'some class of sticks', and Sp.11 had cliabh slatacha 'a wicker creel'.

Some nouns (especially nouns for domestic animals) preserve an indefinite form of the genitive plural e.g. deascán/cnáp mór/scaifte caorach 'a flock of sheep' Sps.1, 3 and 10. ál muc Sp.1, ál banafán Sp.10 'a litter of pigs' - yet ál muca Sp.3. gráinnín/dornán géach Sp.1, scaifte géach Sp.10 'a flock of geese'.

THE VERBAL NOUN AND THE GENITIVE

DEFINITE SINGULAR

Where the genitive is expected, the historical genitive or the neo-genitive may follow the verbal noun. The younger speakers and those given to English-speaking tend towards the latter [ə kr'ɪn'ú suəs ə ɣE:l'Ik'] ag cruinniughadh suas an Ghaedhilg 'collecting the Irish' Sp.15 [ə rɔn ə ɣru bʷI:] ag rann an ghruth buidhe 'dividing the beestings' Sp.16.

Sp.3 tended strongly towards the neo-genitive [təhər ə kɔn'al't' ən E:nə] [In'ər'fad] Táthar ag coinneáilt an aonach sin ar fad 'That fair is still held'. [ə kɔ:r'ú ə t'aʰ] [ɔ] ag cóiriughadh an teach seo 'repairing this house', cf. [ə rɔn ən ar'əg'Id' kɔrhəm] ag rann an airgid comhthrom 'dividing the money evenly' Sp.5.

The following were obtained from questions from Wagner's English questionnaire:

ag glanadh (amach) an bhóithigh 'clearing out the byre' Sps.1 and 10.

ag blighe na bó Sp.1 ... an bhó Sp.10 'milking the cow'. (... na bó pt.83 q.42)

ag baint an chluimhrigh ... Sp.1, ... na gcleiteach ... Sp.3, ... an chluimhreach ... Sp.10 'plucking' (... an chluimhrigh pt.83 q.126) ag casadh an tsnáithe [tra:iχ'ə] Sp.1, ... an tsnátha [tra:] Sp.3 ... an tsnátha [t^əna:(N.B.↓)] Sp.10 'winding the thread' (... an tsnátha pt.83 q.222)

ag nighe an tsnátha Sp.1 and 3, ... an snáth(a) Sp.10 'washing the thread'.

ag déanamh an aráin Sp.1, ag suathadh an arán Sp.3, 'kneading the bread'.

ag ithe a dhinnéara Sp.1, ag ithe a dhinnéar Sps.3 and 10 'eating his dinner', (... a dhinnéar pt.83 q.302) ag foscladh an dorais Sps.1 and 10, ... an doras Sp.3, 'opening the door' (... an dorais pt.83 q.486) ag coigilt na teineadh Sps.1, 3 and 10 'kindling the fire' (... na teineadh pt.83 q.545)

ag tionntódh féir ('grass') Sp.1, ... an fhéir Sp.3, ... an fhéar Sp.10
'turning the grass' (... an fhéir pt.83 q.595)

There is a further, less common, tendency for the ordinary nominative to occur after the verbal noun e.g. [ə Lomu n baxtə] ag lomadh an bachta 'stripping the sod'.

INDEFINITE

The genitive singular may follow the verbal noun, alternatively the nominative singular may follow: [ə d'anú marəgI] ag déanamh margaidh 'making a deal' Sp.1, [ə d'anú ar'əg'id'] ag déanamh airgid

'making money', Sp.11 - [ə d'anu t'aχ] ag déanamh teach 'making a house' Sp.3. Sp.3 had: Tá sé maith fá choinne cur tuigheadh [tI:u] 'It is good for thatching', yet Ní fhuil mórán ag cur tuighe [tI:] 'Not many are thatching'.

In certain expressions the genitive is rarely, if at all, heard following the verbal noun e.g. [ə fa:l' b'I[a] ag fagháil biseach 'getting better', [əg' Iχ'ə g'r'Im'] ag ithe greim 'having a bite to eat', [ə d'anu maran] ag déanamh mórán 'doing much'.

Some example based on results from Wagner's questionnaire include:

ag déanamh nide Sp.1 ... nead Sps.3 and 10, 'making a nest' (q.131) ag ceannacht eallaigh Sps.1, 3 and 10, 'buying cattle' (q.165) ag déanamh aráin Sp.1 ... arán Sp.3 'baking bread' (... aráin pt.83 q.205) ag cur allais Sps.1 and 10 ... allas Sp.3 'sweating' (... allais pt.83 q.372) ag cur fola Sps.1, 3 and 10 'bleeding' (ibid. pt.83 q.475) ag baint mhónadh Sps.1, 3 and 10 'cutting turf' (... mónadh pt.83 q.553)

ag sábháil/déanamh féir Sps.1, 3 and 10 'making hay' (ibid. pt.83 q.587)

ag cur faobhair Sp.1 ... faobhar Sps.3 and 10 'sharpening (scythe)' (q.591) ag tarraingt isteach féir Sps.1 and 10 ... féar Sp.3 'drawing in hay' (... féir pt.83 q.601)

ag iompar lóid Sp.1 ... lód Sps.3 and 10 'carrying a load' (q.605)

ag cur leas¹ orthu Sp.1 ... ag cur amach leas Sp.3 and 10 'manuring' (q.629)

GENITIVE PLURAL

DEFINITE

When the verbal noun occurs before the plural article na the following noun may be, and usually is eclipsed, the form of the noun may be the historical genitive plural, or the common plural e.g. [ə kōr nə g'ɪ't'a] ag cur na gcleiteach 'moulting' Sp.3, [ə to:gaɪ (komu) nə no:ran] ag tógáil (cumadh) na n-amhrán 'recording (composing) the songs' Sp.3, [ə d'anu nə grɔsə] ag déanamh na gcrosa 'making the crosses' Sp.5.

With a lot of the younger speakers the nominative plural form of the article na (non-eclipsing) occurs where na (eclipsing) is expected e.g. [ə kōr suəs nə harɪ] ag cur suas na hearraidh 'raising the price of the goods', [ə d'i:əɪ nə tɪhə] ag díol na toighthe 'selling the houses' C., [ə d'rɪd'əm' ə'ɪt'a nə k'arkə] ag druidim isteach na cearca 'closing in the hens' C.

Some of the older speakers show variation e.g. [ə k'anəht nə mɔlt] ag ceannacht na molt 'buying the wethers', yet [ə kōr suəs nə fwa:n'i] ag cur suas na fáinní 'getting married' Sp.3 cf. a bhreith na n-uan 'to bear the lambs', yet ag díol na huain 'selling the lambs' Sp.3. Sp.10 had: ag lomadh na gcaorach 'shearing the sheep', and ag buachailleacht na mba 'herding the cows', yet ag lasadh na teinteacha 'lighting the fires', and ag foscladh na doirse 'opening the doors' Sp.10.

INDEFINITE

The genitive plural may occur after the verbal noun but there is a strong tendency for the common plural to occur. The following indicate the variance common in the speech of many speakers. Sp.1 had:

ag tógáil cloch 'lifting stones', yet ag tógáil leacacha 'lifting flagstones', and ag déanamh bróga 'making shoes'. Sp.3 had: ag buachail-leacht caorach agus muc 'herding sheep and pigs', yet ag déanamh amhráin 'composing songs'.

OTHER ASPECTS OF THE GENITIVE

bean, fear

The younger generations decline bean 'woman' and fear 'man' as follows: Singular (all cases) bean, fear. Plural (all cases) mná, fir. The genitive singular mná has been heard from Sp.1 and 6. créatúr mná 'a poor, unfortunate woman', Ná tug aird ar bhriathra mná 'Heed not the words of a woman'. - cf. baintreabhach mhná LASID pt.83 q.352. I have heard the genitive plural ban from Sp.1. In response to LASID q.353 'crowd of women' he responded deascán ban, while Sps.3 and 10 answered cruinniughadh/scaifte mná - cf. 'scaifte mná' LASID pt.83.¹ From younger people in the Commeen area I have heard: Ghníonn sé sight i ndéidh na mná 'He runs after the women a lot'. Caithfidh mé a ghoil amach fá choinne na mná seo 'I have to go out to collect these women'. Triúr mná 'three women', Sp.16, yet triúr ban Sp.11.

The genitive plural of fear 'man' varies between historical fear and the nominative plural form fir e.g. an méid fir/fear 'the amount of men' Sp.3; gráinnín fir 'a number of men', Sp.10a. The following from Sp.9 is indicative of the variance in forms.

Bhí motels ann fá choinne mná agus motels ann fá choinne fear agus bhí motel amháin ann agus bhí sé fá choinne fir agus mná.

'There were motels for women and motels for men and there were motels for both men and women'.

Arbhar

In a folktale Sp.8 had the old form of the genitive of arbhar

¹ Yet cf. further '[Lot ban^h]' lot ban 'a lot of women' for pt.83 - LASID IV, p.143 s.v. bean.

'corn, oats, cereal in general': ag bualadh arbha [arəwə] 'threshing corn'. Thurneysen (§333.2) describes O. Ir. arbor as an archaic neuter type, an r-stem in the nom. acc. sg., and n-stem in the remaining cases. The O. Ir. gen. sg. was arb(a)e. The Bardic schools had arbha as the genitive singular - cf. 'do chuir se meithel do buain arbha' BCC 204.4. By Keating's time a new form of the genitive singular, arhair, existed - see DIL s.v. arbur. Sp.1 had cuibhreann an arhair [arəwər'] 'the oats field' while Sp.10 had the neo-genitive cuibhreann an arbhar.

-amh > -adh (IDPP 77)

There is a tendency for nouns ending in -amh [u] to form their genitive by analogy with verbs ending in -adh [u]. Thus: [tɔ:rI] torrainh gen. sg. of torramh 'funeral' by analogy with [mɑdI] madaidh gen. sg. of madadh 'dog'. I have one example of [ə ɡɔd tɑlI] a gcuid talaimh.¹ The neo-genitive appears to dominate for this particular word thus an-rud talamh 'plenty of land', gabhaltas talamh 'a farm of land', ag fliuchadh an talamh 'soaking the ground' etc. This neo-genitive form [tɑlu] is found in the speech of both the younger and older generations.

muc

The historical genitive singular muice [mʷik'ə] is still heard from the older people (and neo-genitive muc [mɔk] from others). A form muic [mʷik'] was heard from Sp.3. Thus ruball an mhuic 'the pig's tail' (alt. cloigeann an mhuc 'the pig's head'). This would appear to be due to the influence of cnoc [krɔk] 'hill' gen. sg. cnoic [kr'ik'] -

1 Cf. gen. sg. thalaigh Maguire of Fermanagh, reference to be found in DIL s.v. talam. An alternative might be to suggest -imh → í cf. dative plural ibh → í s.v. NOMINATIVE PLURAL.

Sp.3 had muc baineann in response to LASID q.110 'sow'. (Cf. pigín muic 'piglet' Ros Goill p.347).

athara, máthara, Éireanna etc. (IDPP 214)

The tendency to add -a to the genitive singular of these words is most widespread in this dialect. Thus teach m'athara 'my father's house' Sps.1, 3 and 10 (LASID q.335); teach mo mháthara 'my mother's house', Sps.1 and 10 (LASID q.336) - cóta mo mháthair 'my mother's coat' Sp.3. While Sp.1 had bunadh na hÉireanna 'the people of Ireland' (LASID q.350), Sp.4 had daoíní na hÉireann. This latter form may or may not be a school-form¹ - cf. claidhe na teoranna 'the boundary fence' and cuid do chomharsana 'your neighbour's goods', yet teach na comharsan 'your neighbour's house', last three examples Sp.1.

Genitive plural -ann

I have only a few examples of genitive plurals in -ann : fá choinne na bpáirceann 'for the fields' Sp.11, and Padaí na bhFrocann 'Paddy of the Overcoats' (name of an old tramp) Sp.5.

Elision

Sometimes it is difficult to ascertain whether or not a particular form of a word is the inflected or the uninflected form of the genitive e.g. [wakə tu bat Im' ən am ər' b'i] An bhfaca tu bot ime (im?) in am ar bith? 'Did you ever see a "bat" of butter?' [ʃɔ:rt i'n't'əht n'iv' ə v'i ɔn] Seort eighinteacht nimhe (nimh?) a bhí ann 'It was some sort of poison'. [ə kuərtu n rɔd ə v'i kəl't'ə] ag cuartughadh an ruda (rud?) a bhí cailte 'searching for the thing that was lost'.

INFLECTIONLESS GENITIVES

Another factor which might assist in the spread of the common form of the noun (usually the nominative singular or plural), are those nouns whose nominative and genitive forms correspond e.g. ag tarr-aingt uisce 'drawing water', tréan bainne 'plenty of milk', mórán daoiní 'many people', tréan préataí 'plenty of potatoes'. Chaithfeá theacht leis an oiread seo tae agus an oiread seo siúchra agus an oiread seo plúr, 'You would have to make do with a certain amount of tea, sugar and flour' Sp.3. The effect of this, if any, would appear minimal in comparison to the effect of bilingualism.

GENITIVE FOR NOMINATIVE

Some forms of the genitive occur for the nominative e.g. go ríó-ghachta na glóir 'to the kingdom of glory' Sp.5 - cf. go Righeachta nimhe Gallagher 27. Bhí sé leis ó bhruinne 'He had it from the womb' (i.e. it came naturally to him).

Sp.1 had the following example: Bhí fraoch an-mhaith fá choinne teineadh a dhéanamh fosta 'Heather was also very good for making a fire'.

SANDHI

In the following example it is difficult to distinguish whether or not the noun is the genitive form airgid : Bhéarfadh sé do chuid airgid (airgead?) duit-se [... ar'æg'Id d'it'[ə] 'He would give you your money'.

The preposition [də] de is also used to form an indefinite genitive e.g. mórán de sean-rud (sic.) ag fás uirthi 'a lot of old growth on it (loch)'. [barlaht də Ir'æg'obər'] barraidheacht de fhir ag obair
'too many men working'. [rəun də xol'li ɔ:g ɔN] round de choiligh óga ann 'a number of young roosters there'. [bɔd'al d'f'k'ə uər] buidéal d'uisce fhuar 'a bottle of cold water'.

THE DATIVE SINGULAR

The inflected dative case is very much on the decline, nonetheless some of the older speakers preserve the dative case of some feminine nouns (cf. Lochl. III 305 n.l. - Torr). Examples include: leis an chuaich [χuI^x] 'with the cuckoo' Sp.1, ar do chois 'on your foot', de do chois 'off your foot' Sps.1 and 5, a fhad le cruaidh [kruI^x] an fhéir 'as far as the hay-stack' Sp.1, ar an chruaidh 'on the stack' Sp.8, sa chloich [χlɔⁱχ'] 'in the stone' Sp.6, ar an ghior-saigh [jiʃʃI] 'on the girl' Sp.11, ar an tseisrigh [t'ɪ[r'i]] 'on the plough' Sp.11, as an (leis an) ghréin [j'r'è:n'] 'out of (with) the sun' Sps.10 and 11, anna gcleibh [g'l'è:v'] 'in a creel' Sp.10, ar an (fán) ghealaigh [ja!I] 'on (around) the moon' Sps.1, 3, 10 and 11.

Nouns ending in -óg are very often inflected in the dative e.g. ar mo chasóg [χasag'] 'on my jacket' Sp.1, ina scorróg [skɔrɔg'] 'in his hip' Sp.2, sa chuinneog [χiⁿog'] 'in the churn' Sp.3, ar an fhídeog [i:d'ag'] 'on the whistle' Sp.6a, leis an bhallóg [wɔlɔg'] 'beside the ruins' Sp.11, ar eiteog [ɛt'ag'] 'flying' Sps.1, 3 and 10.

There is a great variance within the speech of individuals e.g. Thiocfadh sé ar do lámh ná ar do chois 'It would come upon your hand or your foot' Sp.1; ag an easóg* 'at the stoat', ar an fhuinneog 'on the window', Sp.5, yet ag an luchóg* 'at the mouse', san fhuinnseog 'in the ash' Sp.5, sa chisteanagh 'in the kitchen' Sps.1 and 5, fán chisteanach /chisteanagh 'about the kitchen' Sp.11, dhá chluais 'two ears' (dual) Sp.1 yet sa chluas 'in the ear' Sp.3, ar an fhuinneog Sp.1. LASID q. 498 'on the window', cf. ar an fhuinneog Sps.3 and 10.

Some forms of the dative which would appear to be absent from normal speech still survive in songs and folktales e.g. don mhnaoi óig 'to the young woman' Sp.1 TEXT 62 v.2 - normal dative is the nominative form bean; Nuair a bogadh innsa dígh iad 'When they became intoxicated with the drink' Sp.1 TEXT 64 v.8; ar an tslait 'on the branch' Sp.6 p.131 no.52 - le slat 'with a stick' Sp.5, sa nid 'in the lair' Sp.8 TEXT 40 - cf. ar an nead Sps.1, 3 and 10 in response to LASID q.132 'on the nest'; leis an mhuic 'with the pig' Sp.8 TEXT 40 - cf. normal dative muc < nominative.

Toigh [tI:] the dative singular of teach 'house', is usually confined to songs or set phrases e.g. ag toigh Khildea 'at Kildea's house' Sp.1 TEXT 67 v.1, go toigh an óil 'to the inn' Sp.1 TEXT 62 v.5; taobh thoir/thiar de thoigh an phobail/an tsagairt 'to the east/west side of the chapel/priest's house' Sp.8. Sp.10 did have one example in normal conversation; Má bhí tuighe le cur ar thoigh 'If a house needed thatching'.

The word clann 'children, family' occurs in the nominative when referring to 'children' or 'family' - cosamhail lena chlann fhéin 'like his own family' - and in the dative in surnames - Clainn 'Ic an Luain' 'the Mac Aloons', Clainn Ic Gaoithín 'the Mac Geehans'.

I have only one example of boin dat. sg. of bó 'cow' s.v. amharc fá.

A number of verbal noun forms ending in -ach occur in the dative e.g. ag búirfigh 'bellowing', ag méanfaigh 'yawning', ag scairtigh 'shouting', ag screadaigh 'yelling'.

As has been pointed out by previous scholars, there are quite a number of feminine nouns whose original nominative forms have been replaced by the dative singular e.g. abhainn 'river', binn 'gable' brocaigh 'badger set, fox den', léinidh 'shirt', olainn 'wool', tean-gaidh 'tongue' (LASID map 70), teinidh 'fire'.

In response to LASID q.569 'scraw' Sps.1 and 10 had sraith, while Sp.3 had scrath.

When the dative is preceded by the definite article an lenition normally follows e.g. ar an bhó 'on the cow', don chapall 'to the mare'. Nouns beginning in f are usually lenited e.g. ag an fhear 'at the man', nonetheless f may occasionally resist lenition e.g. ar an fharadh Sp.3 'on the roost', yet ar an faradh Sp.10.

Masculine nouns with vocalic initial normally drop the t- in the dative, but there is a tendency (especially among the younger generations) to retain the t- e.g. ag an t-am sin 'at that time' C. Sp.10 usually adhered to the older rule yet cf. Tá sé cruaidh ar an t-athair 'It is hard on the father'.

Masculine nouns beginning s- (except for sc-, sp-, st-) usually have t prefixed when preceded by the dative form of the article an e.g. sa tsneachta 'in the snow', although this may not always occur e.g. sa seomra 'in the room'. (Both examples from Sp.3).

THE DATIVE PLURAL

The dative plural form, ending in -(a)ibh is usually confined to set phrases (cf. CGT §70) e.g. Thug Aodh Ruadh leis é ar a chúlaibh [χu:ləv'] 'Hugh Roe took him seated behind him (on horseback)' Sp.8; sna Rosaibh [rɔsəv'] 'in the Rosses', alt., fá na Rosa [rɔsə] 'around the Rosses', sé ná seacht de mhíltibh [v'i:L't'iv']/mhílte [v'i:L't'ə] 'six or seven miles', [fə nə f'iəni'v'] fá na Fiannaibh 'about the Fenians'.

-abh

There is a tendency for aibh to occur as non-palatal -abh e.g. ar na mallabh [mɔLu] 'lately', Sp.11 [adru] eadrabh 'between you', Sp.5, cf. [f'iənu] Fiannabh v's [f'iənəv'] Fiannaibh 'Fenians' dat. pl.

DATIVE FOR NOMINATIVE (GENITIVE)

The forms Fiannabh/Fiannaibh 'Fenians', appear in the nominative: Caithfidh sé gurb iad na Fiannabh a chuir ann iad 'It must have been the Fenians who put them there'. Díolfaidh sé na buaibh [buəv'] 'He will sell the cows' Sp.5 - single example.

In TEXT 64 Sp.1 had several examples of sláinte na n-éanaibh 'the health of the birds', and only one example of sláinte na n-éanach.

THE DUAL

A special dual form of some nouns may occur (usually those feminine nouns with a special inflected form of the dative). The dual is identical in form to the dative singular. This form is becoming rare in this dialect. Examples include: dhá chluais 'two ears' Sp.1, dhá leith 'two halves' Sp.6. Sp.11 had both dhá ghiorsach 'two girls' and an dá ghiorsaigh 'the two girls'.

THE DEFINITE ARTICLE

Nouns in this dialect are masculine or feminine. There is no indefinite article. The nominative singular form of the article is an. With masculine nouns t- is prefixed in the word begins in a vowel e.g. [ə tɔm] an t-am 'the time'. With feminine nouns lenition follows the definite article if the nouns begin in b-, c-, f-, g-, m-, or p- e.g. [ə wɔ:ˠ] an bhó 'the cow'. If the feminine noun begins in s-, sl-, sn- or sr- then t- is prefixed e.g. [ə t'axtun'] 'the week'.

The dative singular form of the definite article is an (leniting) for nouns of both genders e.g. [l'ɛ] ən' ar] leis an fhear 'with the man', [dɔ̃n v'an] don bhean 'to the woman'. If the noun begins in s-, sl-, sn- or sr- then t- is prefixed e.g. [sə t'r'aχtə] sa tsneachta 'in the snow' (masc.), [l'ɛ[ə tlat] leis an tslat* 'with the stick' (fem.).

The historic genitive singular masculine form of the article is an, leniting, and prefixing t- to nouns beginning in s-, sl-, sn- and sr- e.g. [krI: ə v'alI] croidhe an bhealaigh 'the middle of the road', [tu:s ə tliö:dan'] tús an tslaghdáin 'the start of the cold'. The historic form of the feminine article is na, which prefixes h- to nouns beginning in a vowel e.g. [dərəs nə k'I[t'ənI] doras na cisteanaiġhe 'the door of the kitchen', [d'Ir'u nə hy:χ'ə] deireadh na hoidhche 'the end of the night'. The neo-genitive form of the singular article is an (for both genders) and behaves like the historic form of the masculine genitive singular.

The nominative (and dative) plural form of the article is na, prefixing h- to nouns beginning in a vowel e.g. [nə kl:r'i] na caoirigh 'the sheep', [ər nə h'iv'ahə] ar na huibheacha 'on the eggs'. (Both genders).

The historical genitive plural of the article eclipses the following consonant and prefixes n- to nouns beginning in a vowel e.g. [krɔ: nə g'ark] cró na gcearc 'the hen-house', [ə kɔ̃mu nə nɔ:rən] ag cumadh na n-amhrán 'composing the songs'. (Both genders). Alternatively, the genitive plural may correspond to the nominative (and dative) above.

THE ADJECTIVE

The attributive adjectives are generally mutated or inflected (by the older generations whose daily language is Irish) as follows:
Nominative (/accusative) masculine singular, no change e.g. [f'ar b'øg] fear beag 'a small man' [ə t'il'an mo:r] an t-oileán mór 'the large island'.

* Cf. leis an tslait p.131 no.52.

Feminine singular, lenition e.g. [b'an wɔxt] bean bhocht 'a poor woman', [ə χ'ark yu^h] an chearc dhubh 'the black hen'.

Dative masculine and feminine singular, lenition e.g. [mɔrən də rɔd wɔ:n] mórán de rud bán 'a lot of white stuff', [l'ɛ[ə wəhər' wɔ:r] leis an mháthair mhór 'with the grandmother', [dɔn wadu v'ɔg] don mhadadh bheag 'to the little dog'.

The simple preposition i, anna 'in', usually lenites the qualifying attributive adjective e.g. [ən əm γir'id'] in am ghoirid 'in a short while', [ɪnə d'aχ v'ag ɛl'ə] anna dteach bheag eile 'in another little house'.

Inflected forms of feminine dative singular forms are normally restricted to songs etc. e.g. [dɔn wɪ: ɔ:g'] don mhnaoi óig 'to the young woman'.

There are not many examples of the vocative qualified by an attributive adjective. The feminine singular lenites e.g. [ə χal'a wɔ:r γa:ltə] A chailleach mhór Ghallda 'Oh great Protestant hag'. The masculine singular lenites and attenuates e.g. [ə lɔdɪ hɔlɪ] A shladaidhe shalaigh 'oh vile marauder'.

In the genitive singular, the masculine forms are lenited and attenuated e.g. [lɔ:r ə v'alɪ wɔ:r'] lár an bhealaigh mhóir 'the middle of the road', [b'an ə'n'Ir ruɪ] bean an fhir ruaidh 'the red-haired man's bride'. Inflected forms of the feminine genitive singular, where they occur, do not lenite but attenuate and add e e.g. [bɔnə kruɪχ'ə g'ir'əm'ə] bun na Cruaiche Goirme 'the bottom of the Bluestack', [rɔ:sə nə m'w'ik'ə div'ə] rása na muice duibhe 'the race of the black pig'.

In the neo-genitive singular both genders lenite the nominative form of the adjective, see GENITIVE.

In the common plural¹ the adjective remains unlenited (exceptions dealt with below) and a or e is added e.g. [Nə dI:n'í b'øgə] na daoiní beaga 'the little people', [də Nə mra: bɔxtə] do na mná bochta 'for the poor women', [Nə plandI I:v'n'ə] na plantaí aoibhne 'the sweet young maids', [Lɔxt Nə hatI ardə] lucht na hataí arda 'the high-hatted ones'.

Masculine nouns whose plurals end in a palatal consonant usually lenite the adjective e.g. [b'r'ík' v'øgə] bric bheaga 'small trout', [o:ran' v'asərə waiχ'ə] amhráin mheasardha mhaithe 'fairly good songs'.

Nouns whose genitive plural corresponds in form to their nominative singular take the singular unlenited form of the adjective e.g. [m'í nə v'ar b'wI:] Mí na bhFear Buidhe 'July' (jocose), [do:na nə gas du^h] Domhnach na gcos dubh 'the Sunday of the black feet'.

Sps.1 and 10 usually had plural forms of the adjective qualifying nouns in the nominative plural, nonetheless, Sp.10 did have two examples of mná phisreogacha² 'witches', yet one example of mná phisreogach (TEXT 25). Sp.1 had one example of slatacha beag, this was the only example of this heard by me in the speech of Sp.1. This feature occurs more commonly in the speech of younger speakers given to English e.g. siopaí maith 'good shops', na Cruacha Gorm 'the Bluestacks', na páirceanna glas sin 'those green fields', lódannaí beag 'small loads'. Cf. Ros Goill §263 'But the plural termination of adjectives is very often dropped ...'

When an adjective is used to further qualify an attributive adjective the former is inflected in the same manner as the latter e.g. lá measardha socair 'a fairly settled day', fideal mheasardha mhaithe 'a fairly good fiddle', scéaltaí iongantacha maithe 'very (lit. wonderfully) good stories' - cf. amhráin mheasardha mhaithe 'fairly good

1 = Nominative/accusative, dative and genitive.

2 for phisreogach see METANALYSIS p.247.

The intensive prefix an 'very' (when prefixed to adjectives), 'great' (when prefixed to substantives) is extremely common in this area as is corr (See Vocabulary). While iongantach may be heard the people in this area do not seem 'much addicted to this' (IDPP 228, see also corr). Other lesser used examples are scannruighteach criosta 'extremely (lit. frightfully) cross', tréitheach maith/deas 'remarkably good/nice', coimhthigheach gann 'extremely (lit. strangely ,) scarce'.

As with other dialects there is adverbial employment of nouns and adjectives to qualify adjectives e.g. Tá seisean rud beag bodhar Art (sic.) 'He is a little bit deaf, Art'.

When a noun is qualified by both a genitive and an adjective, the adjective follows the noun e.g. maighistir óg scoile 'a young school teacher', lomairt mhór olna 'a large fleece of wool', tae-pot eile tae 'another pot of tea'.*

The comparative and superlative -igheacha/-íocha described by O'Rahilly (IDPP 215) may also be heard in this dialect e.g. [əʃ d'íl'iahə] is doiligheacha 'most difficult', [n'is sa:st'iahə] níos sástaíocha 'more satisfactory'. While láidir 'strong' is commonly heard in the comparative/superlative as [La:d'r'ahə (-rəhə)] láidreacha Sp.9 did have the old form Ba é ba láidre [La:d'ər'ə] 'It was he who was strongest' TEXT 41.¹

cruaidh 'hard', has lost its old nominative singular form *cruadh thus, [rɔd kruI] rud cruaidh 'a hard thing', pl. [rɔdI kruIjə] rudai cruaidhe cf. ruadh 'red' [f'ar ruə] fear ruadh 'red-haired man', [b'an ən' Ir ruI] bean an fhir ruaidh 'the red-haired man's bride', nom. pl.

1 Yet cf. Lochl. III 395 'Sé Goll an fear a ba láidreacha acu' (Torr, folktale).

* N.B. áit toighe ar bith TEXT 47.

[mɔdI ruə] madaidh ruadha¹ 'foxes'. It would appear that *tana 'thin, slender', has been influenced by cruaidh, thus nom. sg. [tɔnI] tanaidh 'thin', pl. [L'akəhə tɔnIjə] leacacha tanaidhe 'thin flagstones', *dlúth 'thick, dense' occurs in the oblique case, nom. sg. [dlu:I] dlúith.

Certain adjectives are regularly prefixed to the noun e.g. drochrud 'a bad thing', córrait 'the occasional place', seanbhean 'old woman', leathbhata 'large stick', gearrmhadadh 'a fairly good dog'.² In songs and prayers some old compounds still remain e.g. óigbhean 'young woman' (= bean óg in common speech), deislámh 'right hand' (= lámh dheas in normal speech).

See also NUMERALS. For níos v's níb/níba see COPULA.

I have one example of ní, the negative of the copula, leniting the following adjective ní mhinic a bhí sé gruamha TEXT 64 verse 4. Cf. McGonagle ZCP 35. 325.

DECAY OF INITIAL MUTATIONS

With speakers of all ages there is a tendency to leave initial s unlenited. This may happen rarely in the speech of some and quite often in the speech of others—usually, but it must be expressed not solely, in the speech of the younger generations. Examples include: suidhfinn 'I would sit', Ní shílfeadh na daoíní dadaidh de siubhal 'The people though nothing of walking', gráinnín de salann 'a drop of salt', dhá slabhra 'two chains', sleamhnóchainn 'I would slip',

1 Cf. IDPP 212 n.1.

2 Note also duine corr 'an odd, peculiar, person' - and madadh gearr 'a terrier' ZCP 29.88 (pt.83).

(shleamhuigh tú 'you slipped' same speaker) sluaistreachtaí amach deireadh 'everything used to be shovelled out', snaidhmneochtaí na cúplaí 'the beams would be joined'.

The same is true for f e.g. an-frithir (v's an-fhrithir) 'very sore', an-fiach ort fá choinne deoch 'gasping for a drink', an chéad oidhche de Feil Brighde 'the first night of St. Brigid's Eve', a fhad leis an feis 'along to the festivity', an-tugtha do fearthainn 'much given to rain', ar an faradh (alt. fharadh) 'on the roost'.

The majority of the above examples have been taken from the speech of the older generations whose daily language is Irish, examples for other consonants include: ar an bainne 'on the milk', cro-idhe do boise 'the middle of your hand', an-maróg 'a large pot-belly'. Those who are much given to English are extremely prone to this feature e.g. dhá fear 'two men', ró-fallsa 'too lazy', ar an fídeog 'on the whistle', dhá dearbhráthair 'two brothers', trí mí 'three months', dhá mhíle a chathamh ar teach Mollie 'to spend two thousand on Mollie's house', achan bliadhain 'every year', seanbabaí! 'old baby!' (lack of lenition for vocative and lack of lenition following sean).

Where t is expected to be prefixed to s this may not always arise e.g. an sál 'my (lit. 'the') heel', an seachtmhain (more usually an ts-) 'the week'. In the case of the nominative singular of feminine nouns the omission of t might be attributed to the confusion of gender (see below) but the following shows that this may not necessarily be so, an sluasaid 'the shovel', barr na sluaiste 'the top of the shovel' Sp.10 - cf. an tsnáthad 'the needle' Sp.1, yet an snáthad Sp.10.

In the dative singular (of both genders), and the genitive singular of (masculine) nouns beginning in s, t is not always prefixed where it might be expected e.g. sa saoghal 'in life', sa seandúine 'in the old man', ag an seanfhear 'at the old man (i.e. my father)' den súistín 'of the flail', ag casadh an tsnáithe/tsnátha 'twisting the thread' Sps.1, 3 and 10 in response to LASID q.222, cf. ag nighe an tsnátha 'washing the thread' Sps.1 and 3 (LASID q.233) yet ag sciúradh an snátha Sp.10.

The t- which is prefixed when masculine nouns beginning in a vowel are preceded by the nominative singular of the definite article may occasionally remain in the dative in the speech of some of the older people e.g. fá dtaobh den t-ocras 'about the famine', ar an t-athair 'on the father' s.v. iarraidh. It is much more common in the speech of those given to English e.g. fán t-airgead 'about the money', Sp.4, ar an t-(e)asal 'on the donkey', ag an t-am sin d'oidhche 'at that time of the night'. I have one example of na t-amhráin 'the songs' from a Commeen youth.

I have one example of an t-ocal¹ 'the word' < focal cf. an táth 'the reason' < an fáth X an t-adhbhar TEXT 44 - see METANALYSIS.

Where one would expect h prefixed to nouns beginning in a vowel this may be absent - see NUMERALS and PREPOSITIONS s.v. le.

It is not uncommon for feminine nouns to be treated like masculine nouns e.g. an t-áit 'the place' Sp.8 TEXT 42 (- usually an áit in his speech), an bucáid 'the bucket' Sp.10 an t-ordóg 'the thumb'. This feature is stronger in the younger generations. The same is true for attributive adjectives e.g. Sé Rosie bocht a bhíonn mall i gcomhnuidhe 'It is always poor Rosie who is late', lámh deas/clí 'right/left hand'. Note the following from Sp.3 an páirt bhán (!) 'the white part'.

The tendency for masculine nouns to be treated as feminine is much less common e.g. Léim an bheathach ... 'The horse jumped ...' Caitheadh an airgead lena dheisiughadh 'The money was spent to fix it'.

1 alt. tocal.

In addition to loss of eclipse in the definite genitive plural (which see) there is a growing tendency for initial consonants to remain unclipped among those given to English e.g. Fán go fuarfaidh sé 'Wait till it cools down', Commeen, Ní mó ná go tuigfeadh cuid acu* 'Some of them could barely understand', An fágfaidh mé? 'Shall I leave?', seacht bean 'seven women'.

NUMERALS

The following (obtained by questioning) are the forms of the cardinals as used in counting from one to twenty:

[hI:n ; hE:n ; hλ:n], [dɔ:], [t'r'i:], [k'ahər'], [ku:g'], [fɛ:], [ʃaxt], [ɔxt], [NI:], [d'èχ'], [hi:n'e:g], [dɔ: je:g], [t'r'i: d'e:g], [k'ahər^(d) d'e:g], [ku:g' d'e:g], [fɛ: d'e:g], [ʃaxt d'e:g], [ɔxt d'e:g], [NI: d'e:g], [f'iχ'ə (-h^(')-) ; f'iχ'].

a haon, dó, trí, ceathair, cúig, sé, seacht, ocht, naoi, deich, a haondéag (haoindeag) dó dheag, trí déag, ceathair déag, cúig déag, sé déag, seacht déag, ocht déag, naoi déag, fiche/fich'.

21, 22, 23 etc. [he:n əs f'iχ'], [dɔ: əs f'iχ'], [t'r'i: əs f'iχ'] a haon a's fich', dó a's fich', trí a's fich'.

When the cardinals are used with nouns the following forms occur (These examples are from natural speech):

1. [k'ON ə'wa:n'] cionn amháin. With the adjective, the attributive adjective directly follows the noun and is lenited if feminine e.g. caora mhór amháin 'one big sheep'.
2. Dhá precedes and lenites the singular of the noun¹ e.g. dhá theach 'two houses', dhá bharra 'two barrows'. With the older speakers the attributive adjectives are lenited and in the plural e.g. dhá amhrán mhaithe 'two good songs', dhá chomhráidhteach mhaithe 'two good conversationalists'. With younger speakers the adjective may remain as the nominative singular e.g. dhá bharra beag 'two small barrows'.

1 For the special forms of some feminine nouns see DUAL.

* Rare example from Sp.1.

When the article precedes dhá is delenited e.g. an dá bhliadhain 'the two years'. I have one example of the genitive bearrach dhá bhliadhain 'a two-year old heifer'.

3. Trí may: (a) lenite the singular form of the noun e.g. trí dhuisín /mhaidin/mhíle/lá/bhomaite 'three dozen/mornings/miles (thousand)/days/minutes'.

(b) take the plural form of the noun e.g. trí cinn/seachtmhainí/toighthe/cosa/troighthe/claigne 'three (nominal)/weeks/houses/feet/feet (measurement)/skulls'.

I have only one example of trí + noun + adjective, trí lá mhillteanacha dhoineanta 'three very bad days'.

Words in f may resist lenition e.g. trí focal 'three words'.

Some nouns show variance e.g. trí ba Sps.1 and 10, trí bhó Sp.3 'three cows'. Note trí/ceithre toighthe 'three/four houses' yet cúig theach 'five houses'.

The cardinals four, five and six inflect in much the same manner as three.

4. (a) Ceithre bhomaite/pháiste 'four minutes/children'.

(b) Ceithre cinn/toighthe/slata 'four (nominal)/houses/yards'.

Ceithre rotha bhreaghtha 'four fine wheels'.

Note also the unlenited form ceithre sópóg 'four stooks'.

5. Cúig phunnta/teach/bhomaite 'five pounds/houses/minutes'.

Cúig cinn/slata/ba 'five (nominal)/yards/cows'

Note cúig fód/fóid 'five sods'.

6. Sé lá 'six days'.

Sé scillinge/bliadhna/madaidh 'Six shillings/years/dogs'.

The numerals three - six take the plural form of the article e.g. na trí rud sin 'those three things', na cúig phunnta 'the five pounds', na Sé Chondae 'the Six Counties'.

From the few examples heard, these numerals eclipse in the genitive e.g. macsamhailt trí¹ gcéad slat 'about three hundred yards', macsamhailt trí ná cheithre slat 'about three or four yards'.

The numerals seven - ten eclipse and the noun may be in the plural or singular e.g. seacht/ocht/naoi/deich gcinn '(nominal) seven/eight/nine/ten', ocht dtonna (sg.) 'eight tons', naoi mbliadhna 'nine years', deich bpunnta 'ten pounds'.

The plural form of the article is used e.g. na seacht subháilcí 'the seven joys'.

I have no examples of nouns preceded by the cardinals seven - ten qualified by an attributive adjective.

Example of larger numbers include:

12. Dhá bhliadhain déag 'twelve years'.

15. Cúig toighthe déag 'fifteen houses', cúig bliadhna déag 'fifteen years'.

17. Seacht mbliadhna/dtoighthe/saithteáin/déag 'seventeen years/houses/stakes'. Alt. seacht míle dhéag 'seventeen miles'.

18. Ocht gcloigne déag 'eighteen (persons)'.

20. Fiche bliadhain 'twenty years', scór eallaigh 'twenty cows'.

24. Ceithre cinn fhichead 'twenty-four (sheep)', roimhe cheithre huair fichead 'before twenty-four hours'.

1 Lenition is absent due to homorganic -t + t-.

25. Cúig phunt' fhichead 'twenty-five pounds'.
30. Deich gcinn a's fiche 'thirty (sheep)', deich mbliadhn' a's fich' ó shoin 'thirty years ago'.
31. Cionn déag a's fich' [f'iχ'] 'thirty-one (sheep)'.
32. Dhá bhliadhain déag a's fich' [f'i] 'thirty-two years'.
35. Cúig cinn déag a's fich' [f'i^x] 'thirty-five (sheep)'.
40. Dhaichead, alt. dhaichead cionn 'forty'.
42. Dhá mhíle a's daichead 'forty-two miles'.
46. Sé bliadhn' a's daichead 'forty-six years'.
50. Deich gcinn a's daichead 'fifty (sheep)', deich mbliadhn' a's daichead 'fifty years'.
60. trí fichead [f'ih'id] alt. trí scór 'sixty', trí fichead bliadhain alt., trí scór bliadhnt' ó shoin 'sixty years ago'.
79. Trí scór a's naoi mbliadhna déag 'seventy-nine years'.
80. Ceithre scór 'eighty', ceathair ná chúig 'e scórthaí acu 'four of five score of them'.
89. Ceithre fichid agus naoi mbliadhna 'eighty-nine years'.
95. Ceithre scór agus cúig bliadhna déag 'ninety-five years'.
100. Céad bliadhain 'one hundred years', na céadtaí [k'è:tI] 'the hundreds'.
300. Trí chéad 'three hundred'.
- 1,000 Míle fear 'a thousand men', na mílte 'the thousands'.
- 1,200 [γa: χ'e:d d'e:g ə sLat qn] dhá chéad déag 'e slatá(sic.) ann 'twelve hundred yards in it'.

Some multiples of ten have rare forms such as [k'arəhə] ceathracha¹ 'forty', [kE:gwə] caogmhogha 'fifty', [[aχtwo sə t'r'i:]

1 'cethracha dam' forty oxen Sc.M² 6.

seachtmhogha a's a trí 'seventy-three', [ʃaxtwo 'is ə ʃaxt] 'seventy-seven'. Lucas (Ros Goill §306) suspects that forms like these last two may well be school forms.

Commercial transactions are usually conducted in English and consequently figures of this kind may be expressed in that language, yet cf. seacht bpunnta dhéag agus deich innsa tsean-airgead 'seventeen pounds ten (shillings) in the old money' s.v. scoilteadh, where two Irish speakers were involved in selling livestock to each other. Tá sé le tuitim naoi bpingne 'It (petrol) is falling ninepence (a gallon)'. Even numbers, such as £20, £40, £50, £100 etc. are usually expressed in Irish, but figures such as £3.75 for objects purchased from shops are often expressed in English.

Similarly dates are often expressed in English yet cf. i naoi gcéad déag fiche 's a dó 'in nineteen twenty two'. Figures of this kind had little use in this area until relatively recently and confusion may result e.g. i naoi gcéad ceathracha 's a sé a fuair m'athair-sa bás 'my father died in 946 (r. 1946)'¹ Note also TEXT 48 Dia ár sábháil bhí siud 'a thousand years ago' - cf. na milliúin bliadhain d'aois 'millions of years old' TEXT 35.

The concept of 'forties' and 'thirties' in referring to decades of this century is a relatively new one, Sp.3 had sna daicheada(í) 'in the forties', yet no fixed form existed for 'thirties' and he rendered this sna tríochadaí alt. ar na tríochairí. Note also forms such as 'sna nineteen forties'.

In alternative numerals nó/ná is placed between two cardinals

1 Cf. Deich bpunnta 'gus daichead míle for £50,000 -(£40,010?).

lenition usually follows nó/ná (but as will be seen below this is not always so).

For 'one or two X' the noun precedes ná e.g. lá ná beirt múnadh 'one or two turf (-cutting) days', cliabh ná beirt 'a creel or two'.

For 'two or three X' the noun follows dhá e.g. dhá asal nó a trí leobhtha 'two or three donkeys with them', dhá mhíle ná thrí 'two or three miles'.

For 'three or four X', 'five or six X' etc. the construction is cardinal + nó/ná (+ a) + cardinal + 'e (< de) + plural of noun e.g.

Trí ná a cheathair 'e mhadaidh eile 'three or four other dogs'.

Trí ná a cheathair 'e bhliadhna¹ 'three or four years'.

Ceathair ná chúig 'e phunta/mhíonnaí 'four or five pounds/months'.

Sé na seacht 'e chéadtaí/thraigheannaí 'six or seven hundred/feet'.

Mhairfeadh sé chóir a bheith a chúig ná sé déag 'e bhliadhnta

'It would last almost fifteen or sixteen years'.

Alternatively, the singular form of the noun may (rarely) follow 'e e.g. naoi ná deich 'e chionn acu 'nine or ten of them'.²

Ná may be omitted as in the following Tá corrbhaile anois agus an áit i rabh b'fhéidir ceithre, cúig teach, ní fhuil teach ar bith ann 'There is now the occasional uninhabited townland where formerly there were four, five houses'.

The 'personal' numbers from 2-10 are [b'ert' (b'í-)] beirt, [t'r'u:r] triúr, [k'arhər ; kahrər] ceathrar 'four', [ku:g'ər] cúigear [ʃeʃər] seisear, [ʃaxtər (-ur)] seachtar, [ɔxtər (-ur)] ochtar, [NIhər] naonbhar alt. [NI: glag'n'ə] naoi gcloigne, [d'ex'ər] deich- (n)eabhar alt. [d'è glag'n'ə] deich gcloigne.

1 N.B. 'e bhliadhnta below.

2 Note also Ceathair ná chúig 'e phunta above.

'One' is expressed by noun + amháin e.g. fear amháin 'one man'.

11-19 are expressed by cloigeann e.g. cloigeann déag 'eleven', cúig claighe déag 'fifteen'.

The personal or ordinary cardinal forms may precede personal nouns and variance occurs in the speech of many individuals - as will be seen there is also variance in inflection of the following noun.¹

Dhá stócach iongantacha deasa 'two very nice boys', dhá bhuachaill mhóra 'two big boys', dhá dhearbhráthair/ghiorsach 'two brothers/girls', trí dhearbhráthair agus dhá dheirbhshiúr 'three brothers and two sisters' - all examples Sp.11 yet cf. beirt chailín/nigheanach 'two girls/daughters', an bheirt deirbhshiúracha 'the two sisters', cúigear fear 'five men' Sp.11.

Another speaker had: beirt dearbhráthacha 'two brothers', yet an dá dhearbhráthair 'the two brothers'.

Sp.3 had: triúr dearbhráthair/deirbhshiúracha/fear 'three brothers/sisters/men', seisear mac 'six sons', yet dhá fhear 'two men', dhá nighean agus dhá mhac 'two daughters and two sons'.

Sp.8 had: ceithre pháiste 'four children', yet triúr fear 'three men'.

Sp.5 had: an dá bhean 'the two women', dhá dhuine/dheirbhshiúr 'two people/sisters', trí dhearbhráthair/deirbhshiúracha/dhuine chlainne 'three brothers/sisters/children'.

Other examples of personal numbers include: beirt fhear/ban 'two men/women', triúr fear/ban 'three men/women', cúigear dearbhráthair 'five brothers'.

Other examples of cardinal numbers include dhá fhear 'two men', (Commeen youth), dhá bhean 'two women', cúig fear 'five men', Sp.16, ceithre ghasúr agus sé ghiorsach 'four boys and six girls', Sp.19,

1 The following lists of examples all occurred in natural speech.

ocht Máire 'eight Marys'.

The so-called 'personal' numbers occur with more consistency when referring to a noun previously mentioned e.g. bó amháin ná beirt 'one or two cows'. Cheannuigh mé trí phéire a's chuir mé beirt arais 'I bought three pairs and sent two back', Tá ceathrar aige 'He has four (cows)' - (response).

Alternatively personal numbers may be used with de e.g. triúr den dath sin 'three of that colour'.

I have one example of beirt qualified by an attributive adjective - beirt de bhuachaillí óga 'two young boys'.

Note the lenition in cúigear nó sheisear acu 'five or six of them'.

The form dís 'two (persons)' would appear to be confined to poetry, the only examples heard being mo mhallacht don dís bhuachaill óg 'my curse upon the two young lads', an dís fear óg 'the two young men' (both examples TEXT 63).

I have one example of leathscór buachaill 'ten (lit. 'half a score') boys'.

The ordinals from one to seven occur in TEXT 70, which see. Only céad 'first' lenites - [ə χ'èd arh] an chéad fhear 'the first man', [ə dərənə (rarely dərə) f'ar] an darna (dara) fear 'the second man', [ə t'r'i(:)hu (t'r'iχ'u)] an tríomhadh .. 'the third ...' [ə k'a:rhu (k'ahrhu)] an ceathramhadh ... 'the fourth ...' [ə ku:k'u (ku:g'u)] an cúigeadh ... 'the fifth ...', [ə [ε]u] an seiseadh ... 'the sixth ...', [ə [axtu] an seachtmhadh ... 'the seventh', [əxtu f'ar] ochtmhadh ... 'eighth ...', [nīhu] naomhadh ... 'ninth ...', [d'əχ'u] deicheadh ... 'tenth ...'.

darna lenites when achan precedes e.g. achan darna bhliadhain 'every second year'.

With multiples of ten [E:nu (I:nu)] aonmhadh, [dohu (dɔ:u)] dómhadh are used e.g. an dómhadh lá fichead 'the twenty second day'.

The 'twentieth' was rendered [f'iχ'u] ficheadmhadh or fear a fiche 'the twentieth man', (cf. fear a daichead 'the fortieth man').

Where h is expected before a vowel this may not always arise e.g. an darna hearrach 'the second spring' Sp.1, yet an darna oidhche 'the second night' Sp.3, trí hordlaigh 'three inches' Sp.1 - trí ordlaigh Sps.3 and 10, trí (h)uaire 'three times' - cf. PREPOSITIONS s.v. le.

Nominal one is usually expressed by cionn e.g. cionn in achan seomra 'one (cross) in every room'. Fear and bean may be used for persons e.g. fear de na gasraí 'one of the boys', bean de na nigheanacha 'one of the daughters'. I have not recorded any impersonal use of fear and bean (cf. Tory 181).

In telling the time the article is used e.g. roimhe an dó dhéag 'before twelve o'clock', bhí sé an ceatha(i)r a chlog 'it was four o'clock'.

'to' is usually expressed by go dtí e.g. deich go dtí a haon 'ten to one', alternatively den may be heard e.g. cúig den dó dhéag 'five to twelve'.

'after' is expressed by i ndéidh e.g. leath i ndéidh a sé 'half-past six'.

Notes on the prepositions

ag ; chuig

The prepositions ag [i'g'] 'at', and [hī'g'] chuig 'towards' can interchange e.g. [nər' ə hehə [i'r' i'g' əL't' ə t'r'əxtə] Nuair a théighthéá soir ag (< chuig) Ailt an tSneachta 'When you would go over to Altatraght'.

Where ag occurs after a word ending in -th or -ch a form resembling chuig may be heard e.g. [gərə mai ɔgəd (hɔgəd)] Go rabh maith agat 'Thank you'

de ; do

The interchange of de 'of' and do 'for', goes back to Old Irish (cf. Thurn. §§831 and 832, see also Keat. xviii). As with other northern dialects the d in de is non-palatal, [də]. There is quite a variance between the pronominal forms as the following show:

de for do:

Sheinn sé cupla port ar an bhealach díobhtha [dI:fə] 'He played a tune on the road for them'.

Ní thabharfadh na hÉireannaigh díobhtha [dI:f] iad 'The Irish would not give them (ports) to them'.

do for de:

iad a chathamh duit [d'í'd'] 'to take (throw) them (wet clothes) off you'.

taobh thoir dúinne [du:n'ə] 'to the east of us'

Dhéanfaidh tú dearmad dó [dɔ:] 'You will forget it'

Dual Usage:

An bhfuil sé ag goil de [dɛ] ar fad? 'Is he still doing that?' Sp.3-Cf.

ag goil dó [dɔ:]/díobhtha [dI:fə] 'doing it/them' Sp.1.

Ní thearn sé úsáid ar bith dó [dɔ:]/de [də] 'They did not use it'.

B'éigean díobhtha [dI:fə]/dóbhtha [dɔ:fə] 'They had to'

In response to LASID q.379 'I have to shave myself', Sps.1, 3 and 10 answered: Caithfidh mé an fhéasóg a bhaint domh - yet cf. Ar eagla go dtiocfadh an tóir a's go mbainfí an óigbhean díom Sp.1 (song).

The preposition de is often reduced to [ə] e.g. [ə jè:χ'] 'e dhéith (dhíth) 'needed'.

When de, do occur before vowels (or fh + vowel) elision may not occur e.g. [g'ítə də a:məd] giota de adhmad 'a piece of wood' [də ar adə] do fhear fhada 'for a long man'.

Alternatively dh' may occur between (d)e and a noun beginning in a vowel (or f + vowel) e.g. [b'l'ien' gə L'è ə γy:] bliadhain go leith 'e dh'aois 'one and a half year old' Sp.10 - alt. [b'l'ien' gə L'é də I:] bliadhain go leith de aois Sp.3; [wíl' ɔ ə jè:m' ɔrt] An bhfuil seo 'e dh'fhéidhm ort? 'Do you need this?' These are regarded as reduplicated forms.

While the general rule is that lenition follows de, do, speakers fairly often do not lenite e.g. [maran də batI] móran de bataí 'a lot of sticks' Sp.3, [maran də d'f'Ír'] móran de duifir 'a lot of difference' Sp.1.

eadar

I have no examples of eadar leniting, thus: [ədər ən karIa ɔ̃gəs ə go:ʳ] eadar an carrfhiadh agus an gabhar 'between the stag and the goat'; [ədər aran ɔ̃gəs bʷan'ə] eadar aran agus bainne 'both bread and milk' - cf. Vocabulary s.v. eadar for further examples.

fá

This preposition usually lenites, but in the forms [fa dλ: də (dɔ:)] fá dtaobh de (dó) 'about, concerning', taobh is always eclipsed. (This particular preposition is conjugated by adding the pronominal forms of dó (or de) to [fa dλ:] fá dtaobh). I have only one other (isolated) example of fá eclipsing: fán mbunadh [mɔnu] a bhí ag imirt na gcártaí 'about the people who were playing cards'.

For the relationship between fá 'about' and faoi 'under', see Qu. §314.

i

The simple preposition i [ə] may still occur, usually in set expressions e.g. [ə wala] i bhfolach 'hiding'. The form in [ən ; ɛn] may be heard: [n'í ro mɔi ər' b'í ɛn bʷatə e:drɔm dɔ:] Ní rabh maith ar bith in bata éadtrom dó 'A light stick was of no use to him' Sp.1, [ən kɔndaí nə gal'IV'ə] in Condae na Gaillimhe 'in County Galway' Sp.3, [əŋ gy: dɔ:r'] in Gaoth Dobhair 'in Gweedore' Sp.5.

The form [ənə ; ɪnə ; ɔnə] may also be heard. I transcribed this anna - and do not regard it as a reduplicated form (IDPP 173)¹

1 I intend to show, elsewhere, that this form is to be equated with the simple forms aige (for more usual ag [ɪg']) and aire (for more usual ar [ər']). e.g. [ɪg'ə lɪn'r'u] ag (aige) loinnriughadh 'shining', [ər'ə d'ʒɔnɪ] ar (aire) Johnnie 'on Johnnie'.

e.g. [ɔ̃NƏ L'ɔ:r] anna leabhar 'in a book', [əNƏ d'ax IN't'ax̃t] anna dteach eighnteacht 'in some house', [əNƏ New York] anna New York 'in New York'. This form normally eclipses but I have one example of non-lenition: [d'ɪN'ə v'au d'ɪl'i ha:su əNƏ tra 'b'i:] Duine a bhéadh doiligh a shásamh anna tráth bídh 'A person who would be hard to please at mealtime'.

When used with the possessive pronouns, i behaves in this area as Hamilton has described for other Donegal dialects (Ériu XXXIV 135f.) i.e. the prescriptive forms *i mo, *i do, *i bhur occur as 'mo', 'do', 'mur (=bhur) or ann/in mo, ann/in do, ann/in mur. e.g. [ɔ̃N mɔ:ləsə] ann m'eolas-sa 'as far as I know', [v'i m'ə mɔ hI:] Bhí mé 'mo shuidhe 'I was up (out of bed)', [əN də fɔ:ᵀkə] ann do phóca 'in your pocket', [ta tu 'dɔN'd'ɪN'ə] Tá tú 'd'an-duine 'You are a wild fellow', [əN mər ga:s] in mur gcás 'in your case', [wɪl' [IV' mər sI: gə fɔ:l'] An bhfuil sibh 'mur suidhe go fóill? 'Are you up yet?'

The third persons usually occur as [NƏ ; nə] 'n-a [nə pɔ:ᵀkə] 'n-a póca 'in her pocket', [NƏ ɣ'ɪN'ə jas] 'n-a dhuine dheas 'a nice man', [NƏ nə:t' hɪ:n'] 'n-a n-áit fhéin 'in their own place'. N.B. 'bhí siad a gcomhnuidhe' p.357 n.1. See POSSESSIVES. I have heard the 1 pl. form: [Nɔl wɪl' mɔd' ar gɔ:nI ɔ̃N] Nach bhfuil muid áir gcomhnuidhe ann? 'Aren't we living there?'

le

When this preposition occurs before a ^{verbal} noun with vocalic initial h- (as would be expected) may be prefixed e.g. Tá siad an-mhaith le hithe [l'ə hɪx'ə] 'They are very good to eat'. (Cf. CGT §404). There is a noticeable tendency for this not to happen ^{before ordinary nouns} /e.g. [kɔsul' l'ə ɪN'un] cosamhail le oinniún 'like an onion' Sp.3. [kə d'as bʷI:

[l'ə e:da ər' b'i] comh deas buidhe le éadach ar bith 'as nice a yellow as any other cloth' Sp.1, [l'ə arəwʊr] le arbhar 'with corn' Sp.6, [l'ə a:rN'ɛ] le airnéis 'with pests (lice etc.)' Sp.10.

trasna, with the older Irish-speaking people takes the genitive e.g. trasna na bpáirceann 'across the fields', with the younger people it does not e.g. trasna an abhainn 'across the river', trasna an chnoc 'across the hill' Sp.13.

- ábalta. [a:bəltə ; a:əltə ; a:ltə ; ā:ntə] able. [m'eh'a a:bəltə IN'ʃə du] Could you tell me? capable, accomplished. [ro ʃə a:bəltə] Was he (the fiddle player) good? [f'ar mo:r a:bəltə] a big strong (capable) man.

CONCLUSION

The dialect here differs from that of south-west Donegal in several respects.

An important distinction is the occurrence of [t']/[d'] in this area and north Donegal generally (with the exception of Aranmore FGT §235), as opposed to the affricatives [tʃ]/[dʒ] in south Donegal. Wagner discussed this in G. Theil. §24 and later provided examples of the geographical distribution of these sounds in LASID.¹ Quiggin recorded [t'] and [d'] - 'I have not heard any tendency for [t'] to pass into [tʃ] as in parts of Connaught, Manx and Scots Gaelic'. Qu. §387.

The vowel [λ:] is still in use here - although as with other areas in central and north Donegal where [λ:] still survives, [I:] is making inroads. Quiggin recorded [λ:] in Meenawannia, and this would separate Meenawannia and this area from south-west Donegal.

LASID map III 'many an ... is iomaidh' occurs with non-palatal [s] at points 86, 85 and 84 but with palatal [ʃ] in this area. Unfortunately there was no attestation of the form is iomaidh in Quiggin's work, but LASID pt.83a, Doobin, which borders Meenawannia, had [ʃomi] - LASID vol. IV 147 q.111.

As has been stated, there is more internal contact between Tangaveane and Commeen, and between both these areas and the Fintown/Brocagh area than there is between Tangaveane and Meenawannia. While the occurrence of [t'], [d'] and [λ:] in Meenawannia Irish does distinguish it from the Irish of south-west Donegal, there are some features, in Meenawannia Irish which agree with the Irish of south-west Donegal.

Quiggin recorded [d'ar] and [d'æðən] for d'fhear 'your husband' and d'éadan 'your face (against you)'. Ó Searcaigh disputed the existence of forms with [d'] (FGT §247). His attack on Quiggin seems unfounded as Wagner recorded [d'ʒær] and [d'ʒe:dan (d'ʒed-)] for the same forms in Teelin (G. Theil. §497). In this area [in dè:dan] in d'éadan 'against you' agrees with north Donegal. It should be borne in mind that Quiggin (§404) also heard [det'uw] 'your refusal' i.e. v.n. of éitighim 'I refuse'.

1 Cf. maps 70, 121, 147, 241 and 247.

Final unstressed -ach in this area is usually pronounced [a], whereas LASID pts.86, 85 and 84 usually have [ax], [ax̩]. Quiggin usually has [ax̩] although he did say 'finally it ([χ]) is often so faint especially in the termination [ax̩] that at first I did not seem to hear it at all: The feeble articulation of this consonant is perhaps characteristic of Ulster Irish generally ..' Qu. §328. The disappearance of the voiceless fricative [χ] in final unstressed ach separates the area of this study from south-west Donegal, while Meenawannia again appears to lie between the two.

LASID map 108 'ten people deichneabhar' shows forms with [-n'h-], [-n'h-] for pts.86, 85 and 84 while [d'eix'ər] is recorded for pt.83. I have heard [d'ex'ər], [d'èhər] in Tangaveane and Commeen, but Quiggin (§111) recorded [d'ig'u:r].

Cha would appear to be used more widely here than in south-west Donegal or Meenawannia.

Tangaveane and Commeen do share some features in common with south-west Donegal.

Sinn is preserved much better here (and in south-west Donegal) than in many northern dialects where muid is preferred.

LASID map 244 'How are you?' shows Caidé mar s tá tú? for areas in south-west Donegal. Caidé mar atá tú? is the more usual form here, although I have attested Caidé mar s tá tú - principally in the western area, see Vocabulary s.v. mar.

As with south Donegal variation exists between tosach/toiseach - see Vocabulary s.v. tosach and cf. G. Theil. p.215 30.

Speakers in the area are aware of differences between their own Irish and the Irish of the Rosses and further north - see Vocabulary s.v. corraighil, iomlán and tost, where Sp.1 passed comments on what he described as Rosses Irish. Sp.6 spoke of people who used to visit this area with livestock.¹ A thorough investigation of the similarities and differences between here and the Rosses and dialects further north has yet to be carried out. However, features in this dialect such as the preservation of the imperfect² and the simultaneous introduction of the periphrastic method (a feature of north Donegal); and the preservation of the present subjunctive (cf. G. Theil §294) and the simultaneous introduction of the future in place of the present subjunctive (a feature of north Donegal) seem to indicate that this area is an important link between north and south Donegal.

Some similarities exist between this area and East Ulster - one of the principal similarities being the occurrence of [v] (beside [w]).

Ó hEochaidh recorded the following in regard to LASID pt.83 'De réir na gcuntas badh iad Clann Mhic a' Luain an chéad dream a tháinig ann agus b'as Tír Eoghain a díbrigheadh iad in aimsir na géar-leanúna'. ZCP 29 10. Wagner's material from LASID pt.83 has yielded some striking similarities between this area and Tyrone e.g. '[k'ɔku ɔku ə'sa:r L'at] → which do you prefer?' q.73; Tá mé ... sí ... sinne 'na shuidhe q.516³;

1 Cf. 'agus tá seanchas go leor sa cheanntar go fóill, fá dhaoíní as Na Rosa a thigeadh le h-eallach chun na gCruach'. ZCP 29 11.

2 Cf. G. Theil. §296 'ní féidir a rádh go mbéadh an gnáth-chaite a dul ar gcúl i dTeil.'

3 Cf. Tá mé 'mo shuidhe Sps.1, 3 and 10 in response to this question.

Ó Cathain recorded míobla 'bible', at LASID pt.83 (UCCT 3) cf. 'Míobla' SML xxii - yet note bíobla Sp.8.

Sp.11 (one of the Mac Aloon family from the Croaghs) did have some forms which were attested in Tyrone and East Ulster generally thus Nuair a thill sé 'when he returned'¹ and 'Bhí lady eile thiar annseo' 'There was another lady (woman) over here' cf. 'Bhí lady gallta ins an áit seo'. Lochl III 221 (Tyrone).

Having discussed the dialect in relation to its neighbours it now remains to comment on the internal condition of the dialect.

In this century each generation has seen the steady decline in the number of native Irish-speakers. Bilingualism has increased steadily and as O'Rahilly remarked 'wherever Irish still survives, its vocabulary tends gradually to shrink, and its grammar to break down, mainly in consequence of the lowered vitality of the language brought about by the encroachment of English and the rapid elimination of the monoglot Irish-speakers'. IDPP 245.

The above signs of language decay are all so painfully apparent in this area. The decline in vocabulary may be seen from the entries under buailteachas, righneálach and tachrán or proverb 16, which although remembered was no longer understood. The breakdown in grammar is blatantly obvious in the speech of those given to English-speaking. Where a young community exists English is making its inevitable appearance. W.B. Lockwood's estimation that 'Native Irish can be expected to become moribund early in the next century' appears all too true for this area. Sad tidings indeed, when one considers the way of life and vitality of language which Ó hEochaidh described in this area less than forty years ago.

1 When I told this to Sp.1 he became rather annoyed and told me that she had probably said Nuair a phill sé, but that I had not heard her properly(!).

INDEX

The following is primarily an index of Irish words, although English words have been included (underlined>). Numbers directly following words refer to pages; numbers in brackets refer to texts, and Roman numerals in brackets refer to verses in the case of songs and prayers. V indicates that the word can be found in the Vocabulary (pp.406-87). V s.v. indicates that the word is contained in the Vocabulary under the word which follows. 'See' refers to words cited in the Index. Occasionally a text reference is given where the word occurs frequently in the Text, or where the word in question e.g. faire, ortha is discussed. Features such as gen. sg., imperf. precede the page reference. Abbreviations are as set out in the Introduction, with the addition of Pd. which is used to indicate paradigms of verbs or prepositions.
