By Martha Wallace - 2016

In 1941, President Roosevelt ordered that all industry essential to the war effort be non-discriminatory in all hiring practices without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin.

Workers who felt that discrimination had occurred could file a formal complaint with the FEPC and the situation would be investigated and changes made where appropriate and possible.

The files for Region 12, containing letters, complaint forms, and more, are stored in the National Archives, Pacific Region, San Francisco, California. A complete indexing of these files is in the attached PDF.

Do you know of someone who might have been concerned about discrimination? Fill in the information you know and then check the database to see if there are records. If there are records, contact the National Archives located in San Bruno to have them pull the records. Then you can visit to see the originals and learn more about what happened.

The thrill of a letter with your ancestor's signature is not to be missed!

WWII War Industry Workers and Discrimination Files

The FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) existed from 1941 to 1945 and served to arbitrate conditions of discrimination in war-related industries. The records for northern California, Portland, and Seattle produced in the San Francisco office of the FEPC had been stored away and rarely investigated until the creation of a database, now available at the National Archives, Pacific Region. The records contain many stories of courageous men and women who filed a complaint with the FEPC. The records are a valuable resource for those who are researching family history, war-time industry, the labor movement, and civil rights.

Complaints fell into the categories of race, religion, national origin, and citizenship, and could be lodged against a business, union, or government agency.

Background for FEPC – RG 228

The Fair Employment Practices Committee existed from June 1941 to June 1946 (Executive Order 8802). It was created by President Franklin D. Roosevelt after A. Phillip Randolph, the head of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, threatened a march on Washington unless something was done to correct the great injustices in employment discrimination that were occurring, not only among blacks, but also because of religion and nationality. The committee was to assure that there “be no discrimination in the employment of any person in war industry or in government by reason of race, creed, color, or national origin.” Cases were only those that could be traced to essential wartime industries. (The Fair Employment Practices Commission that we know today was created in 1950.)

For the first two years, the committee existed only in Washington, DC, with little funding and power. In May 1943 (EO 9346) it was expanded to 13 regional and 5 sub-regional offices with power (and funding) to investigate claims, conduct hearings, and take steps to eliminate discrimination. San Francisco was a regional office and handled all cases on the west coast, including Washington, Nevada, and Oregon, with a sub-office in Los Angeles. Harry L. Kingman was the Regional Director, Region XII, San Francisco.

Hiring by wartime industries was done in two general ways:

- Requests for workers would be sent by a company or a government service (for example, Alameda Naval Air Station) to the USES (United States Employment Service)
- Requests for workers would be sent to the union by a company with a union contract.

The kinds of complaints fall into several general categories.

1. The supervisor was giving preference to others.
2. The company had a policy against hiring (a certain type of person)
3. The other workers wouldn’t tolerate working with (a certain type of person)
4. The union wouldn’t allow the hiring of (a certain type of person)

Explanations of categories

1. Supervisors often gave preference in types of jobs and promotions to whites, giving the blacks the dirtier jobs and not advancing them to positions which had better conditions and higher pay. The excuse was often that the blacks (or other minorities or nationalities) did not have the skills, although in many cases the complainant had received government training for the better position, and often had moved to the Bay Area from the Midwest or the South to take advantage of the job opportunities. Often black workers doing the same job as white workers received less pay.
2. Company policies and practices did not allow the hiring of certain groups. Often the excuse was that the whites, or whites from the South, would not tolerate working with the minorities. This translated into the need for separate facilities (changing rooms, office too small, etc.), which presented space and location problems. Another excuse was the lack of skills of minorities as a group. For example, black women who took tests, usually failed, even though they had more education (two years college in one case, a BS and masters' work in another), training, and experience than the younger unskilled white girls. The question arose of how the tests were scored. Often the reason was plainly just a hiring policy and the company was asked to change it. The response was, "Oops, we made a mistake," or "the manager was on vacation when the job request was sent in."
3. The other workers wouldn't tolerate working with minorities. As explained above, companies said they tried to deal with this at great cost and inconvenience. The FEPC often sent a pamphlet "How Management Can Integrate Negroes in War Industries," or would help the company deal with this.
4. Unions had written into their charters that blacks and/or women were not allowed to join. The companies, especially the shipbuilding companies, had contracts with the unions and would not hire anyone who did not have a "ticket" from the union. Once this was challenged, the unions created auxiliaries for blacks, but although the blacks paid full membership, they did not receive full membership benefits, including insurance, voting rights, and the right to certain types of jobs – usually the better jobs in terms of conditions and pay. Companies said they would hire minorities if the unions would let them. Unions also claimed a conflict between EO 8802 and congressional prohibitions that companies could not interfere in the internal affairs of unions (Wagner Act).

A California Supreme Court Case, James vs. Marinship and the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers (February 1944) dealt with union discrimination. It laid the foundation for the breakup of the auxiliary system and threatened the whole closed shop agreement with shipbuilders. It effectively vacated the union's claim to representation over blacks who worked in the shipyards, ordered the union to grant blacks equal membership with other shipyard workers, and forbade officers of California locals to attempt to enforce international regulations regarding operation of the auxiliary systems. Segregated and discriminatory unions were illegal in the state of California. Once a union attained a closed shop agreement it took on a quasi-public position because it held a monopoly of labor and could no longer claim the same freedom from legal restraints enjoyed by private clubs. "Its asserted right to choose its own members does not merely relate to social relations; it affects the fundamental right to work for a living."

Notes and Comments

- The files are full of amazing courage and hope. Letters to President Roosevelt, handwritten on tablet paper, say things like: “I read in the paper that you said to let you know if I was having problems.” Their dedication to the war cause is also evident.
- Letters to Mrs. Roosevelt were forwarded to the San Francisco office and a letter was sent to the complainant with a slip of paper saying, “In answering the enclosed, please say you are doing so at Mrs. Roosevelt’s suggestion.”
- When the situations are described, the discrimination is often so blatant and the opportunities so obvious for retaliation against a complainant, that it is clear that it took amazing courage to come forth with the complaint.
- C. L. Dellums was instrumental in the founding of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and was the west coast vice president. He was one of the principal organizers of the March on Washington Movement in 1941 (that led to the founding of the FEPC). He was also the western regional director of the NAACP, and letters from him are in many files. The Oakland Amtrak station is dedicated to him and there is a statue of him there. He was the uncle of former Congressman Ron Dellums of Oakland.
- Harry Kingman, from Stiles Hall, Berkeley, was head of the San Francisco office of the FEPC. He was a professional baseball player, and active in housing and civil rights issues before and after his work with the FEPC.
- Joseph James was instrumental in pursuing many cases of discrimination. (See James v. Marinship)
- The USES (United States Employment Service) was under the Federal Security Agency and Social Security Board of the War Manpower Commission.
- Unions were often charged with discrimination because their membership policies did not allow minorities to join.

Complaint procedure and file contents

The files often contain multiple copies of the same documents.

Read the file back to front to get chronological sequence.

- Sometimes began with a personal letter (often handwritten on notepaper to President Roosevelt) or a referral from the USES on form 510
- Filled out FEPC complaint form – sometime skipped if a form 510 is sent
- Letter from FEPC to company/person accused, reciting Executive Orders #8802 and #9436 and asking for information about hiring policies
- Sometimes asked the company for information on distribution of employees and hiring records
- Follow-up letters when there was no response, including telegrams – common occurrences
- Often the manager/supervisor/person in charge was out of town or ill and would respond later
- Sometimes actual union referral card was included
- FEPC often sent brochures on non-discrimination and training
- Interviews with complainant and accused
- If non-discrimination was claimed or changes made by the company, a letter was sent to the company asking for a copy/statement of their policy and asking for a letter sent to complainant offering consideration at the next opening w/copy to FEPC
- Final report – contained the best summary of the case and the steps taken; often referred to note of thanks from the complainant
- Often dropped because they were unable to contact complainant; sometimes closed due to lack of merit or jurisdiction of the case; sometimes satisfactorily closed with change in policy
- Notes (often handwritten) made during the case re phone calls

James v. Marinship

In January 1944, in Rhode Island, the Boilermakers local had voted to allow African-Americans to join, but was blocked by the international union. With Thurgood Marshall participating, an injunction was obtained against the Boilermakers and auxiliaries were declared illegal.

In February 1944, in James v. Marinship Corp., 25 Cal. 2d 721, 155 P.2d 329, the Marin County, California, Superior Court held that a union could not exclude Negroes from membership in the union when at the same time there was a closed shop in the industry. The case was upheld in the California Supreme Court.

Marinship and the Boilermakers had a closed shop contract requiring workers to be members of the union or its auxiliary. Members of the auxiliary were not allowed to vote in union elections, although they paid the same dues. Other benefits, such as insurance and job opportunities were not equal. Marinship began laying off the workers who had not joined the auxiliary. Protests were organized. The union claimed the right of a private club to determine membership.

The court held that once a closed shop was obtained (closed shops were legal), the union became a quasi-public entity and must observe national and state policies on non-discrimination. Auxiliaries were thus determined to be illegal.

War Manpower Commission
Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:

Every day we hear over the radio and read in the papers that more workers are needed for defense industries. Then, in direct contradiction to this urgent request for more defense workers, about 300 Negroes are fired from their jobs in the shipyards because of their refusal to be segregated into an auxiliary local of the Boilermakers Union. Just on the face of things, it looks to me as though the President's order regarding employment discrimination of minority groups doesn't mean very much.

If the War Manpower Commission is sincerely endeavoring to serve the purpose for which it was created (and I believe it is) why don't you do something about this disgraceful situation where loyal Negro American citizens are pulled off their jobs because they refuse to be treated as inferiors. How can we win the war with such things going on in our country?

Sincerely yours,

Ruth Stovall
