INTRODUCTION

AMONG the many things in the present volume of "North Riding Records" inviting, or perhaps calling for, comment, one seems to stand forward with something like a superior claim. What I refer to is the incorporation in the contents of the volume of two or three contemporary records of a formal partition and subsequent inclosure of certain areas of land which previously had been open, undivided, and common. And the claim to notice put forward by such matters depends upon the fact that, practically, these transactions have already become things that are forgotten, and indeed things that have left not only no trace, but, for the most part, no tradition even, that they ever have been.

This may seem either to imply considerable antiquity—a space of time long enough to justify rather than only warrant oblivion—or that the transaction in question was one of little general interest, or one that affected but a few persons only, and those of small account. But the inference, in either form, would be a mistaken one: for the antiquity is not great, and the persons whose interests were affected were not a few, and, relatively to the community of which they were members, by no means insignificant.

But in order to illustrate what I am advancing as clearly as I can, I advert to the fact that, to my knowledge, there have been in what was the original parish of Danby—comprising the townships of Danby and Glaisdale, and embracing an area of nearly 23,000 acres of land—first and last, no fewer than seven (and, I believe, eight) such partitions and consequent processes of inclosure; and that, with the exception of two of them, I have met with no written record to perpetuate their memory; whilst in my intimate and always inquiring intercourse with the people of the said parish, spreading itself over a period of forty-five years, I have failed to find any living memory of either of them. Of one affecting an area of close upon 200 acres of land, and the interests of nineteen Freeholders (or the genuine 'Yeomen' of the olden time), and dating within the last quarter of only last century, I have reason to think that no actual, practical recollection exists in the minds of half a dozen people in the whole district; while, as to the other, although it is barely eighty-five years old yet, I am strictly accurate in saying that, but for the written record of it which reposes in the quiet dignity of oblivion and unsmirched parchment in the 'Freeholders' Chest,' I have never met with even the very slightest allusion to it in the mouths of the inhabitants.

And yet such things as these are by no means unimportant matters in the economic history of a parish, or the district it may form a part of. They are historical landmarks, and, still more, most opportune and singularly helpful stepping-stones across the streams of difficulty which so often bar the progress of the historical inquirer, whose object it is to get back to the veritable past of our country's economic conditions.

If in this present Year of Grace, 1891, I cast a mind's-eye view (a very close as well as comprehensive one, extending to every individual field or inclosure in my own parish and in no insignificant portion of Glaisdale also), or avail myself of the 'bird's-eye view' afforded by the admirable six-inch Ordnance Survey, I contemplate a total acreage of inclosed and cultivated land such as to require no smaller figures than 11,250 to represent it. And if I endeavour to obtain an analogous and equally comprehensive view, as afforded by the Survey that was taken just over eight centuries back, what I see is a total of (according to my own view) twelve hundred acres of land inclosed and cultivated, as land was inclosed and cultivated then; or (according to the views of two of my friends who dissent from my mode of calculation) at most of two thousand two hundred and fifty acres. And even this enlarged estimate, it will be observed, leaves a balance of no less than nine thousand acres of land, now and for long not only walled or fenced in, but subjected to the processes of cultivation, to be accounted for as the resultant of subsequent partitioning and inclosing transactions — transactions, moreover, spreading themselves, as is known, over widely divergent periods and their concomitant economic arrangements.

It may perhaps be remarked that the parish cited is, in many particulars, an exceptional one, and that in no case can it be regarded as a typical one, or one from the economic history of which much that is of general interest or application can be learnt. But I cannot help thinking that the remark would be inapplicable in both its members. In the first place, it is scarcely so exceptional as may be by some assumed, seeing that it forms a part of a district embracing some two hundred and fifty thousand acres, all more or less of the same nature as itself, and besides that, that it was precisely parallel in condition and circumstances to a vast number of analogous areas in a vast number of other districts of our English country. And in the second place, even if it were much less typical than it is, still the vestiges of progressive, if not gradual, inclosure could not fail to be generally instructive and, to the historical inquirer, genuinely interesting.

Because, if we look back to the time when the terrine could be described under the terms—"Silva pastilis tres leucas longa, et tres lata," bearing in mind at the same time that the bare moor is not included in the said estimate, we are enabled to contemplate the age of assarts, pure and simple; the age of grants of five-and-twenty acres, or upwards to a full carucate (or approximately a hundred acres), to men who became, by the terms and conditions of the grants, "liberi tenentes," and who held their grants in severalty, and dealt with them accordingly, in matters of inclosure as well as otherwise; the age of other grants, in tenancy however, not in freehold, to enterprising or improving occupiers or cultivators; the age, finally, of the coalition between the joint owners of pasturage and other rights in given localities (acquired by purchase, every one of them) for the purpose of exchanging antiquated and growingly unsatisfactory privileges against actual and tangible shares in the soil itself which supplied the origin and basis of the rights surrendered. Each of these ages, however varying or diversified the principle or principles influencing the economic action of the period, saw the clearing or 'ridding' of areas wood-begrown or stone-bestrewed, and each in its turn beheld the demarcation and protection of the clearings or riddings with fences of some sort; it might be (and was for long) of the mere temporary character of the frail but usual dead-wood hedge atop of an earthen bank or dyke; or it might be of the rude and rough dry stone wall, of which it would be a cruel slander to say that it was 'built'; its materials seeming to have been rather carelessly rolled together or artlessly piled one upon another, such modern niceties as laying in regular courses or mutually adjusted layers, with intermediate bonds or through-stones, not appearing to have as yet been patented, possibly not even thought of.

Perhaps it may help us in our attempted retrospect, if I quote a few lines from a little book written by a very clear and able author (Sir Frederic Pollock; "The Land Laws," p. 5). He says, "Let us imagine ourselves placed on some commanding point within the boundaries of a great English estate, looking over its mansion-house and its park, its fields and pastures, its woods and wastes. Over against us there rises an open hill, covered, it may be, with brilliant gorse and heather in their season, and fringed and crested with wild woods. These are open and common lands, over which many persons have rights of putting so many beasts to graze, of cutting turf and underwood for the use of their habitations, and the like, according to the custom of the country and place. Such rights were explained by our law-books until quite recently, so as to make them fit into a complete feudal theory of land holding. They were supposed to have been granted by the lord of the manor to his tenants, or to have grown up within his domain by way of sufferance or usage, till the long-continued approval of successive lords passed from a matter of favour into a matter of right. This, or something like it, may sometimes have happened. But in general the true history is just the other way. The people who exercise the rights of common exercise them by a title which, if we could trace it all the way back, is far more ancient than the lord's. Their rights are those which belonged to the members of the village community long before manors and lords of the manor were heard of. Perhaps there are also in the neighbourhood, fields which are enclosed and cultivated part of the year, and during the other part thrown open for the common use of the several occupiers, or, it may be, of a larger class of persons. Such arrangements are relics of the time when separate ownership of land was in its infancy. These and other ancient communal rights are often vested in the inhabitants of the parish, which may well be thought to represent a still older community, and to preserve in such lingering usages some traces of its original constitution."

These extracts are perhaps sufficient for our purpose, well and to the point as the author continues to write in the subsequent paragraphs; and, 'for our purpose,' I would emphasize the sentences which speak of the "rights which belonged to the members of the village community long before manors and lords of the manor were heard of," and of "the time when separate ownership of land was still in its infancy."

It is easy to carry the mind back to a time when the people exercised rights of common "by a title which, if we could trace it all the way back, was far more ancient than the lord's." Indeed in these northern or "Danish counties" it is difficult to avoid making just such a retrospective survey. For it seems almost grotesque to assume that a system which recognized the sanctions involved in what was expressed by the Danish term 'bylaw' in all their operative fulness, whose head and centre was actually in the local or provincial Thingwall—a system which actually continued to control the action of the lord in respect of new inclosures down to the year 1650 or thereabouts—originated only at some time subsequent to the Conquest and the de facto still (and much) later manor of the law-books. Neither is it difficult to recognize the traces of the time when "separate ownership of land was in its infancy," although the intermediate steps between the epochs and their polities thus formulated may have left but few such traces, and those very dimly imprinted.

But given the fact that the late mediæval lord, and down even to the time when he began to be almost a modern personage, was guided and (as I think) controlled by the advice and de facto consent of the "Bailiff and his officers" in all matters of allotment of what had previously been 'common,' and its subsequent, or rather consequent, inclosure, it is absolutely and obtrusively apparent that such "advice and consent" would and could only be accorded concurrently with not merely the non-infringement, but the most careful safeguarding, of the already (and from time out of mind) existing rights of the neighbouring commoners. Less than this can scarcely be postulated.

Put this into other words, or sketch it out roughly in another way, and it may be represented thus:—It is thought desirable, or the request is made, that in a given part of the lordship three separate allotments and inclosures may be made by three several parties, more than possibly, perhaps even probably occupiers of land in the near vicinity. Such inclosures, however, affect the rights and interests of commoners A, B, C, and so on to M or N, or even to the end of the alphabet. But still neither A, B, nor C, nor any other has limitless rights. Every one of them, each in his own order, is, by the very spirit of the "bylaw" system, absolutely forbidden and prevented from encroachment on, or overburdening, the common pasture. A may have a right to five summergates, ten average or autumn-gates for his cattle, and to take a certain amount of brushwood for the convenience of the tenement he occupies. B may have the right, a very rare one, as I am inclined to think, of tethering a horse in the common pasture. C may have no summergates, but fifteen or twenty averish gates, and garthsel rights as well as the rest. But this is all a matter of easy calculation. A, B, C, down to Q require such and such a number of summergates, such and such a number of autumn-gates, one or two, here and there, so many days' mowing, and so on throughout. We have heard of "three acres and a cow," and such of us as know what can be done in that way with limited portions of land, have laughed at it. But, at least, it helps us to see that, if among eighteen or twenty occupiers it is necessary to provide for one hundred and fifty such rights as those just mentioned, it is a simple thing, and especially in the hands of men who are practically and thoroughly conversant with the system and the district alike, to set apart so much of the sylva pastilis, the rough woodland pasturage, as shall amply meet every one's just and ascertained rights and privileges.

And that is precisely what such documents as that which is printed below on pp. 245-249 touching the allotment by mutual consent of the parties interested, of such and such an area of common pasture within the parish of Welburn, and its resulting inclosure, in reality depend upon and take their immediate origin from.

Not that all that is alleged in the preceding sentences is palpably evident in the writing adverted to ; or even inferentially apparent to such an extent as to carry inevitable conviction with it. Because there is an intermediate transaction which has to be assumed, of which, in many cases, no authentic or anything like contemporary record is known to exist, or has any such semblance of ever having been, as may be evidenced by tradition.

Fortunately, however, there is extant the fullest and clearest evidence that can be desired of the requisite nature and connected with a case that is in all respects analogous or parallel, even if we may not venture to say similar. What I refer to is not simply, or so much, the partition and inclosure of the Low Wood common pasture in Glaisdale (a copy of the award respecting which is in my possession), as the series of Counterparts of Conveyances, of all of which (as far as they are extant, with small exceptions) I have abstracts, and which supply the connecting link between the status of the Commoners relatively to the lord previously to 1650, and the status of the Commoners from 1656 and on to the date of their joint action in partitioning and severally inclosing their respective shares of the late common pasture in 1769.

The total area thus or then partitioned was 185 acres and a few perches. The total number of persons—Freeholders, all of them—interested in this area in virtue of their rights of commonage, inclusive of summergates, autumn or averish gates, an occasional right to tether a horse, rights of taking garthsel or hedge-boot, or to mow so much hay as could be compassed in a day or a given number of days, and one or two other and minor matters, was nineteen. These rights, it hardly need be said, varied greatly in composition, and as greatly in amount. Some had many beast- or cattle-gates, some had few. Here, one had many gates of one sort, and few of the other ; there, the conditions might be reversed. Only a few had the right of mowing, and only two, I think, possessed the right of tethering a horse.* Nearly, if not quite, all had hedge-boot, and, as it would appear, restricted fire-wood privileges—restricted, I mean, to the taking of brush-wood for burning—what we now-a-days call ‘kindling.’ Timber for building and

* This is undoubtedly noteworthy, in whatever way it is sought to account for it. Probably the explanation which will suggest itself at once to many who are conversant with the beast-of-draught usages of even a century ago, and particularly in old-fashioned or out-of-the-way places, is that, as compared with oxen, the horse was very little used in purely agricultural processes. As lately as 1847 the largest farmer in this parish used as many oxen as he did horses on his land and in ordinary ‘leading.’

repairing-purposes was obtainable by the Freeholders at large, elsewhere, and under different conditions. And the award states that these nineteen Freeholders, being "then seized in fee-simple, as tenants in common, of the parcel of pasture-ground" in question, and "each of them being entitled to a proportionable share of the said pasture and the soil thereof, according to the number of cattle-gates which each of them had therein," did by Indenture "agree that the said pasture should be set out, divided, and allotted to and amongst the said respective proprietors according to the numbers of their respective cattle-gates, and so as each of them might have proportionable share, quantity and quality considered, of the said pasture according to the number of such respective cattle-gates, in order that such allotments might be inclosed by the said respective proprietors."

Now, there are among the counterparts of conveyances, all dated in 1656, to which I have made reference above, and notwithstanding the fact that rather more than one-sixth of the total number of the said counterparts is missing, no less than eighteen specifying the circumstance that these very rights and privileges in the common pasture we are speaking about are mentioned as being, in like manner with the freehold lands named in the same conveyances actually purchased by, and made over to, the several purchasers specified in the several deeds; and these are the terms that are in the formal law language employed:—(after mentioning the lands already inclosed that are conveyed) "together with three beastgates in a pasture called &c., with garsell and other accustomed rights and privileges"; "four gates in a close called &c., and garcell their, to take, cut, and carry away for hedgeing and fenceing any parte of the closes or groundes belonginge the said messuage or tenement" (the subject of the conveyance, of course); "and also one and a half beastgate in one summer pasture in common called &c., with garsell and all other rights and privileges," &c., as before; and then again, in the same document, "three other summer gates in the same pasture with &c., as aforesaid."

And it is by aid of these records that we are enabled to recognize the source and origin of the Freeholders' rights, in virtue of which they stand in a position to agree to divide and become the "proprietors" of the several divisions or shares in the given pasture-ground in due course allotted to them.

But even this is by no means the full and satisfactory explanation of the whole transaction, and all that bears connection with it. For of necessity the question arises, as to the right or power to sell possessed by the party or parties of whom the predecessors of the Freeholders in question purchased their several rights. And indeed this is a question of no little importance; and certainly of no less complexity than importance. Because, although it is quite clear who was the vendor, it is by no means clear, apart from inquiry, how much he had to sell, and what were the limitations or terms of the sale. All this is rather matter of inference than of positive information resting on precise statement.

The original "engagement, promise and agreement" bearing upon the transfer of what was sold was that "the Manor and Lordshippe of Danbye, with the demeasne lands, messuages, farmes, tenements, royaltyes, priviledges, and hereditaments thereunto belongynge, late the landes and possessions of Henrye, late Earle of Danbye, with theyre and everye of theyre appurtenances, shall bee sold and conveyed unto" two persons named and any others the two may elect to nominate, "uppon this speciall TRUST and Confidence:—That all and every the Tennants and Farmors within the said Manor and Lordshippe shall have full freedome and power to buy and purchase all and singuler such there severall and respective farmes and landes as are now held and enjoyed by them respectively, att such reasonable rates and values as they are now agreed to be sold att."

In the next place "Grant is made," but well on to twenty years later, by Samuell Leavingston and John Agar, the two persons specified in the earlier deed, and three others, Trustees, to Mr. J. Dawnay, "of the Mannor and Castle of Danby, with the Courtes Leete, views of Frank pledge, Courtes Barron, and perquisites and profittes of Courtes; also the site of the said Castle of Danby, and all those lands, closes, and intacks of arrable, meadow and pasture ground adjoyninge upon the said scyte of the said Castle, then in the occupation of" such and such parties. Besides this, the further grant to the same purchaser, of twenty-three several farms and tenements as specified, as well as of other lands and hereditaments, is declared, and also "of all those Free Rentes, Quitt Rents or Rentes of Assize, issuinge and goinge out of all those severall messuages, farmholdes, or tenements within the sayd mannour or Lordshippe of Danby hereafter mentioned, and parcell of the sayd mannour and Castle," specifying in all no less than eleven such farmholds or messuages, all of which of course were freehold, as is more fully set forth in the Schedule of purchasers and properties annexed. Besides these eleven freehold tenements thus alleged, we have ten others separately named in the Schedule just mentioned, as bought by the purchasers of the lands to which they severally appertained. So that this gives a total of no less than twenty-one Freeholds (of the ancient type) as existing at the time of the transfer of the Manor, Castle, and Lordship of the place.

Further still, we find this in the Counterpart which is really that of the Conveyance to Mr. Dawnay, and specifying what is called the "Grant" to him by Levingstone and his fellows:—"And whereas the said John Dawnay hath been elected and chosen by the full consent and approbation of the Freeholders within the sayd manor to be theyre Cheife Lord and purchaser of the sayd Mannor and Royalties before-mentioned, and of the Wasts and Comons thereof . . . with other the premisses above-mentioned, which was done as well for the orderinge, preserveringe, and disposinge of the sayd wasts and comons with profitts and benefitts thereof . . . for the common good and benefitt of all and every the Freeholders and theyre tennants within the sayd mannour, to the ends, intentes, and purpose that the sayd wasts and commons may not be inclosed, improved, or incroached, either by the sayd John Dawnay . . . or any other persons whatsoever . . . IT IS THEREFORE COVENANTED, granted, concluded and agreed upon by and betweene all and everye the partyes to these presentes, and the sayd John Dawnay doth covenant, promise and agree with the sayd Samuell Leavingston (and his co-Trustees) that he will not at any time after the date hereof inclose or take up in severallty, or improve for his owne use and benefitt, all or any part of the commons or wasts belonginge to the sayd mannour or Castle, or otherwise willingly permitt and suffer any Freeholder or any other person or persons whatsoever to inclose or take up all or any of the sayd wasts and commons, nor any part thereof, nor shall or will at any time hereafter willingly permitt or suffer any person or persons whatsoever, save such as are or shall be his owne tennantes of all or any part of the premisses, and inhabytinge in Danby, or such as are or shall be Freeholders within the sayd mannour or theyre tennants, to grave, digge, pull upp, or gett or carry away any manner of turfes, peates, &c."

Out of the many points of significance calling for attention in the extracts thus given, the more salient appear to me to be—

That the whole body of existing tenants and occupiers form one of the parties to the transaction of sale and purchase.

That Mr. John Dawnay, the eventual purchaser of Castle, Manor, and the various rights, privileges, royalties, &c., thereto appertaining, is actually and effectively one of the said "tenants and occupiers."

That, among them, there are not less than twenty-one recognizable Freeholders in the ancient sense of liberi tenentes.

That they formally elect and choose, and with the approbation of the Freeholders within the said manor, Mr. Dawnay to be their chief Lord and purchaser of the manor and its Royalties, and of the wastes and commons concerned.

That this is avowedly done for the due ordering, preserving and disposing of the said wastes and commons for the common good and benefit of all the said Freeholders and their tenants within the said manor.

And that throughout the whole business their common rights are most carefully safeguarded against any and every encroachment or infringement, of whatever kind.

When we give even a moderate amount of attention to the various considerations suggested by these selected points, one of our first thoughts is very likely to be "How extremely valuable as well as interesting would be a detailed report, or at the least a précis of the minutes that might have been, probably were, made of the proceedings taken at the diverse conferences and consultations of the parties which must have preceded the formulation of the terms and conditions of the projected bargain and sale." But even so, it is difficult to conceive that we should have obtained a much clearer view of the potential influence of the general body of "the tenants and occupiers," in Trust for whom Levingstone and his associates were acting. We certainly should not see more clearly that it was the general body of tenants of the premises, inhabiting in Danby, or Freeholders within the said manor and their tenants, to the utter exclusion of all outsiders whatsoever, who were the contracting party of the one part, as much as the Lord of the Manor (with all and sundry its appurtenances), on the other. Certainly, with such a report or précis before us, we should have a clearer perception of the relative positions, as to power and rights, of the vendor and the purchasers, and of the grounds of the procedure taken in the days, both recently and long since past, on occasion of a formally sanctioned inclosure from—in contradistinction to an encroachment upon—what had hitherto been unappropriated common. For such inclosures were proceeding at the time of the transaction we are discussing. To specify but two instances :—One of considerable area is mentioned as only in part walled in ; and, as regards another, the inclosure had not as yet been commenced. But the Conveyance in this instance authorizes the fencing in of the proposed inclosure by the new proprietor "as it was formerly sett forth by the Baliffe and Officers for Sir John Danvers, late Lord of Danby." The Bailiff was and is the Lord's officer ; but the same cannot be said of those who are named "officers" acting with the Bailiff in the business in hand. They were and are—and I believe have been from time immemorial (probably or certainly preceding the Conquest)—a popular body, owing their appointment and office to election by the general body of "tenants and occupiers."

But apart from this clearer perception, as I have termed it, of the relative positions, as to power and rights, of the vendor and the purchasers, and of the grounds of the procedure taken in the matter of duly authorized inclosure of hitherto common as well as open lands, I do not think that we should be permitted or enabled to see more clearly or distinctly that the Lord quâ Lord had no supreme or autocratical power in the matter; that, as to his power and rights, he was no more independent of the existing body of "tenants and occupiers," with their rights and privileges, than they, on their part, were independent of him, the Head of the Lordship, with his rights and powers, call them by whatever name we like to employ, Royalties, or any other. However these several rights, privileges, powers may have admitted of precise definition and description then, I do not think we shall be very gravely misrepresenting matters if we say that the rights, and privileges, and powers of the one appear to have been complementary to the rights, and powers, and privileges of the other. The Lord's rights, whether we call them 'royalties' or 'manorial,' were undoubtedly real and potential. But so were the rights and privileges of the tenants and occupiers, freeholders and non-freeholders, and possibly as definite as, if not more definite than, those of the Lord. We have had occasion to notice the care that was taken to obviate the possibility of inclosure of any part of the common, or any other encroachment, by the new Lord, chosen and elected (as he was) to be the chief Lord by the general body of tenants and occupiers, to his own use and benefit; and we know that it was precisely the same with respect to the Lord under the former régime. However much a matter of fact it might be that no single acre, no single inch, of the common could be inclosed without his sanction, it was as much a matter of fact that he himself was equally unable, per se, to inclose a single acre or a single inch for his own pleasure or profit.

But, as it would appear to me, the principle which underlies and explains the whole of this curious and, as I think, interesting and instructive transaction, is the principle of amalgamation. What the Lord had to sell, inclusive of manorial rights, privileges, royalties, as well as the soil or land in fee simple, the existing body of "tenants and occupiers," by and through their Trustees, covenant and agree to purchase, retaining collectively and individually their own equally-real and anciently established rights and privileges; and thus all the rights of proprietorship became vested in the body of the purchasers collectively, and when the several covenanted divisional bargains had been fully and legally completed, each individual bargainer became a resultant or consequent "Freeholder" in the fullest modern sense. He owned the land he had bought, with all in the way of right or privilege that belonged to it. And that being so, if certain Freeholders, A, B, C, up to R, S, T, or even to X, Y, Z, chanced to share among them the exclusive rights to and in any definite area of inter-communable ground, it became competent to them, on common or mutual agreement and understanding among themselves, to throw all their rights, of whatsoever kind, inclusive of that of de facto proprietorship of the soil itself, into one common stock ; and the principle or principles of partition having been equally agreed upon, to receive each for himself proportionably to the amount or value of his several interest, such and such a calculated portion of the entire area of soil concerned. Such, at least, is clearly the principle proceeded upon in this singularly noteworthy case of the subdivision and final appropriation in severalty of the ancient common pasture, called the Low Wood, in Glaisdale.

As considered from the point of view thus opened up, it is at once seen that the document printed at pp. 245-249 is one of no small interest and, I think it may be added, value. The matter of regret is that we do not know the antecedent circumstances of the case as we know those attaching to the previous history of the Low Wood instance. If we did, it is probable that, amid a great and general similarity, we should find some points, whether more or fewer, notable or insignificant, of divergence, and even of difference. That would perhaps be inevitable under the divergency, according to locality, of custom of the country, manorial claim or rights, and the thousand and one other things that are known by the students of ancient law and custom to have had being and influence. The misfortune really is that we have so very few cases to fall back upon: for the very divergencies and differences adverted to as more than possible, would tend, and even more than instances of coincidence, to add to the knowledge, scanty enough in some respects, already possessed touching the ancient manor, its history, and essential peculiarities, if not even its origin and early progress.

Perhaps it may be expedient to devote a few sentences to a passing notice of the second case of analogous, rather than like, partition and allotment brought under notice on pp. 283-288. Here the partition is de facto between two Lords of adjacent manors, subject only to the commonable rights of four other persons or parties. The common to be divided, however, lies in two different parishes as well as in two different manors, the boundaries of the latter (and those of the parishes as well, presumably, if not as a matter of course) being perfectly well defined and ascertained. It may be on this account that, though the two principals, and equally the four others interested in a subordinate manner, are all fully and formally agreed, a part of the agreement is that an Act of Parliament shall be obtained to authorize and confirm the partition and allotments already agreed upon among the parties interested. At all events, the Act was applied for and duly obtained and acted upon. In other matters there was a sufficient amount of identity in the principles adopted by the Commissioners employed as the basis of their award. The one of the two great Lords concerned held lands and tenements of nearly double the annual value of those held by the other, and the allotments which had to be made to the lesser parties in compensation for pasture and other rights resigned, were made in the same proportion out of the two great divisions severally allotted to the principals, and on the same principle of the annual value of the lands they held, to which lands the surrendered rights in either case belonged. Of the four parties concerned, two were landowners, the others the Master of the Hospital of Well, and the Rector of one of the two parishes containing the lands it was intended to allot and inclose.

I would only further remark that more than one reference to the matters dealt with more at length in the preceding observations will be found in the following pages. And it has been my chief motive in penning them to endeavour to illustrate, as far as might be within the space allotted, a subject that has already become more or less obscure, and is likely to pass into complete oblivion at no distant period, if not at least in part obviated by some attempt or other, such as the present, to rescue it.

As to the matter adverted to in the earlier part of the Introduction to last year's Volume of the North Riding Records, namely, the Moated Mound, Moat-hill, Moot-hill, it is again a matter of regret, that I find myself unable to add anything, either very precise or very much to the point, as regards the main question or questions at issue. I have, however, personally examined one of the Kirkcudbrightshire Moats, as these hills in that district are locally termed, the peculiar claim on my interest possessed by which lay in the fact that its local name is Mark Moat. Very little in the way of either observation or inquiry sufficed to prove that there could be no possible connection between it and the idea—almost an exploded one by this time—connected with the assumed ancient 'mark-moot.' That phantasmal notion "of unsupported conjecture" might have found a more plausible semblance of reasonableness if the name had been applied to a moated mound only about some mile and a half distant, to which, however, the more trustworthy, albeit antiquated, folkspeech had given the name of 'The Castle Hill.' Defence and not 'folk-moot,' or meeting of the people for council or the like, had evidently been the reason or cause for its construction, or (to speak more correctly) adaptation. It was a strong place by nature, made stronger yet by deep trench and palisade-crowned vallum. That too is, and to a singularly marked degree, the essential character of another of these remarkable Moats or Moat-hills with which the district in question abounds. It is one of the most striking pre-historic strong places or fortifications I have ever seen. Very much the same may be advanced with respect to the earthworks near Middleham Castle, involving, as they do, an interior mound still possessing an earthen parapet. Another like mound with a parapet, as well as a moat on the most exposed or accessible side, at Lofthouse in this district, has been visited, and like the one at Gilling, which led to the mention of the subject in these pages, has been so altered and modified and disguised by building operations carried out upon and near it, that I was scarcely able to recognize the features which were perfectly familiar to me forty years ago. I repeat, and with even more emphasis than I used last year, that we "want a really complete list of these curious and usually well-defined earthworks."

It will be seen, on even cursorily glancing through the contents of the present volume, that it is no more deficient in many and various matters calculated to interest both the philologist and the archaeologist than either of its predecessors. I do not, however, propose to draw attention to these and such-like matters in this place; and all the less, because in most instances I have dealt with the subjects that arrange themselves under such headings in the notes.

As to the Indentures, of abstracts of which in great part the present volume will be found to consist, tolerably copious illustrations of their character and composition are given in the earlier part. Later on, however, a much more compendious process has been employed, and what may be styled the merest sketch possible of the contents of each, compatible with adequacy and correctness, has been given. Stale and dry as these records may seem to be from certain points of view, still the genealogist, the antiquarian, the inquirer after lost or obsolete or fast decaying customs, uses, expressions, will find no little to interest him, and even possibly to add to his stores of information, or at least to suggest some of the sources from which such additions may with confidence be looked for.

On the whole, casting a retrospective view over the nine volumes which now constitute the publications of the North Riding Record Society, but few will be found to question the statement that a very large amount of curious and interesting matter has been disclosed by aid of the investigation the Quarter Sessions Records have been subjected to; or, that the matter in question bears intimate relations to the history of the Riding, and in relation alike to social, economic, cultural, and progressive movement. That more might have been done with access to such sources, and with such stores at command, the Editor will be the last to deny. Conscious from the first of no little inadequacy for the task entrusted to him, all that he can say at the close of his labours, in the way of apology for any shortcomings, is that he has faithfully tried to do his best.

DANEY,

January 15th, 1892.

P.S.—On re-perusal of the abstract printed pp. 245–249, I would like to add to what I have said above, this ; namely, that while the Welburn Moor partition and appropriation document both gives to, and receives from, the Low Wood partition much in the way of illustration and explanation, there is still a lack of certain particulars of such a nature as to make us sensible how nearly we miss having a very instructive example before us. The agreement is described as being made between the Earl of Carlisle of the one part, and fifteen others, freeholders, possibly—or at least owners of common rights—on the other. The assumption we are ready to make at first sight, or on the impulse of the moment—I think are only not justified in making—is that the agreement is an agreement between the Lord of the Manor on the one part, and those fifteen freeholders or commoners on the other. But it is not so, at least as far as the terms employed throughout the document are concerned. There is not even so much as a veiled hint as to the existence, and much more the possession, of manorial rights from beginning to end. The whole area to be divided is estimated at one hundred and sixty acres, and the rights and interest of the parties to the agreement, the Earl the one, the fifteen the other, party, are defined by and limited to the sole and exclusive property of and in the said moor, which became a divisible property only by virtue of the fifty-eight beastgates at which the said area was “stinted or stocked.” And when it comes to the partition and consequent allotment, the language employed in speaking of the Earl’s allotted share is, “I do award, allot, assign, and set out to the Rt. Honble the Earl of Carlisle . . . in severalty, in lieu of his beastgates in the said parcel of ground, sixty acres and five perches of land . . . in the said moor, as the same are now markt and staked out,” without any the slightest reference to any manorial or other rights exclusive of just such, and only such, rights as were possessed by the fifteen other persons who constituted the other party to the agreement. As far as appears from the document itself, the arrangement between the Earl and the fifteen is precisely the arrangement that was made among the nineteen freeholders of the Low Wood transaction, and without any the least reference to any other party standing in the same relation to them that Sir John Danvers occupied relatively to the Danby freeholders.

QUARTER SESSIONS RECORDS.

ORDERS MADE AT DIVERS SESSIONS.

THIRSK, Qu. Sessions at, April 24, 1750.*

Upon the oaths of Edw. Hare of Nosterfield, in the parish of Well, husbⁿ., and Tho. Gainforth of the same, husbⁿ., that on the 3rd, 9th, and 11th days of January last the said Edw. Hare was owner of one grey bull, two red cows, and one hassled cow† which were in the distemper, did cause the said cattle to be killed and buried according to his Majesty's Order in Council of March 22, 1747, a certificate was granted by this Court that the said Edw. Hare was entitled to £7. 15. for the said cattle killed and buried as aforesaid; Ordered that one of the C.C^s. for every division in this Riding do constantly attend the fairs, markets, and other places of public sale for horned cattle, to inspect and examine all certificates for cattle which shall be brought there for sale, in order to prevent any jobbers, farmers or others, from exposing any cattle to sale who have not had the same forty days in their custody, or otherwise from acting in any respect contrary to an Act of 1749; and in case the said C.C^s. shall be prevented from attending the said fairs, &c., by sickness or other extraordinary business, the Petty Constables of the place where the fair shall be held, to make the like inspection, and to give information to a neighbouring J.P. if they find any person offending contrary to the above Order.

* The repeated references made, and both in the text and the notes, throughout the last thirty pages of last year's Records, cannot but have attracted the reader's attention; and in that connection the Editor has thought it expedient to go through the first half of the Volume in the N. R. collection, lettered on the back "Orders—1748 to 1753," with the view of ascertaining alike when the infliction terminated, and what means of prevention or cure continued to be adopted in the interval. The latter are represented in these opening pages, and the former will be noted on arriving at the proper place.

† "HAZLED. Pronounced 'hazzeld.' Speckled red and white, or rather, with the hairs of these colours intermixed, so that it is hard to say in some cases which predominates. At GUISBROUGH, July 10, 1753.

Ordered that the fairs, &c., be from henceforth open'd in the two divisions of Langbarugh and Whitby Strand until further Order, and it is the opinion of this Bench that it would be at present an advantage to the whole Riding if all fairs, &c., were opened at this time, but refer themselves to the general Qu. Sessions to be holden at Northallerton on Thursday next for their approbation as to the other divisions within the said Riding.

INFORMATIONS.†

Informations taken before John Hopton, Esq., September 23, 1691 :
Against Stephen Cornforth, late of Screwton, for catching twenty unseasonable or kipper salmon in the river Swale at Morton ;

Against Marmaduke Etherington, late of Screwton, for the like.

Against Will. Bulmer, late of Greenhills, in the parish of Ainderby Steeple, for killing ten pheasants with a handgun charged with powder and hail-shot ; against David . . . , late of Leeming, for killing ten ducks with a hand-gun &c. ; against John Tod, late of Fairholme, yeomⁿ, for the like ; against John Warde, late of Skipton-on-Swale, for snaring twenty partridges at Morton, not being qualified to keep nets.

The 20th of March, 1692.—A noate of the goods which was feloniously taken out of Thomas Mennell shopp, a quaker in New Malton, which was brought before me by the Constables thereof, which said goods was found in the possession of these persons which are hereunder named :—In John Willowby's possession, 13 plaine irons, two raysors, one comb, and a cork screwe ; in Mr. Anderson's possession, a knife and a forke, a paire of buckells, and a corke screw ; in John Stamper possession, one small chezell ; in Thomas Stamper

* This appears to be the last Order made in reference to the Murrain among the Cattle. The first mention of the Plague in this Series seems to be at p. 262 of Vol. VIII., dated April 28th, 1747, and the date of the present Order is July 12th, 1753, showing that the trouble had lasted over fully six years. The serious nature of the visitation may be fairly estimated on perusal of the particulars given at p. 283 of the last Volume, wherein the losses sustained by one man alone—Daniel Calvert—are systematically detailed. In the Volume now under notice, the Schedule to which the affidavit on p. 283 was appended, is given in its parallel columns, and precise exactitude.

† What follows under this heading, and the two further headings of "Presentments" and "Petitions," is selected from among the multifarious contents of the Sessions Rolls belonging to the year 1691. There are in all no less than six Rolls belonging to this year alone, and some of them from thirty to fifty several documents. Most of them are quite valueless from any point of view, and many are curious from the merely local interest point only. Not a few, however, are of a wider range than only this, and it would have been easy to increase the extracts almost indefinitely, and in such wise that each selection should have presented something noteworthy or curious appertaining to it. But it was thought better to press on to what was of more historical interest, and which will be met with in the post-joined lists of Papists and others, and especially in the abstracts of deeds enrolled, to be given at a not very far distant future page.

possession, three gouges, fouer chezells, fouer plaine irons, a pair of spurs, a pair of compasses, a twoo foot rule, a knife, a forke, a corke screw, twoo pair of buckels, a mortizing chezell and an inkehorn ; in John Petergill possession, one chezell, twoo fyles, one gimlett, one paire of compasses, a parsey* bitt and a knife.

The day and year abovesaid these goods above mentioned was then brought by the Constables of New Malton before me.

19th April, 1693.—George Mennell's information taken upon oath before me : who saith that he did hear John Reeves, late of New Malton, confess with the takeing of these goods above mentioned out of his father's shopp, and dispose of them to these persons which are here above named.—Geo. Mennell. Taken and sworn the day and year abovesaid, before me, Tho. Worsley.

The information of John Thompson of Whitby, appoynted press-master by Arthur, Lord Viscount Irwin, Vice-Admirall of the County of Yorke, taken upon oath the 21st day of April, 1693.

This informer saith that April 11 instant, he having impressed a seaman, servant to Tho. Hays of Whitby, master and marriner, one John Lynskell with Will. Lynskell and Rich. Stonehouse, came and rescou'd him from this informant ; the said John Lynskell telling this informant that he was going to sea with him, and that he had nothing to do to press him, and should not have him, upon which the said John Lynskell assaulting this informant beat him ; and the said Will. Lynskell tooke a pistoll from him, this informant, and told him if ever he was out of his now imploy he would break his neck, and hath since deny'd to return his pistoll, and the said Rich. Stonehouse abusing him by words violently beat him, and his wyfe who came to his assistance, and further saith not.—John Thompson. Taken and sworn before me the day and year abovesaid, W. Hustler.

* It must be but a surmise, and nothing more assured, that can be put forward in the way of explanation here. I can only suspect, taking the article meant as one not at all unconnected with the other articles named in the list of goods stolen, that the relationship is with what in the Cleveland tongue was usually, and frequently is still, called a "nail-passer," in plain English, a gimlet. Halliwell, I see, moreover, gives "passer" as a Leicestershire name for a gimlet. I do not mean that I take "parsey bitt" as synonymous with gimlet, because that tool is mentioned under its proper name just before. But if its proper meaning be given to "bit," and the nature and use of the instrument called the "centre-bit" be borne in mind, I think the idea that "parsey bitt" may be a corruption of passer-bit or passing-bit, may possibly be regarded as not quite unreasonable.

PRESENTMENTS.

Presentments at BEEDALL, July 21, 1691.

Tristram Blith, late of Starbotton, yeomⁿ., for buying and getting into his hands twenty rough hides, value 6s. each, and selling them again without tanning them ; Tho. Metcalfe and Alexander Blith, late of Askrig, yeomen, for the like ; Rich. Dalton, shoemaker, of Ellinton, for making shoes with leather insufficiently tanned and selling them to their Majesties' subjects ; Geo. Baiteman, of Middleham, for making shoes with leather mixed with horse-skin ; Geo. Askwith of Ellingstring, shoemaker, for making shoes with leather not sufficiently tanned ; Henry Cliffe, late of Northallerton, currier, Inspector and Sealer of tanned hides, for sealing a hide not sufficiently tanned ; Will. Simpson, late of Snape, taylor, for the using the trade of a barber chyrurgeon, not having been apprenticed to it ; Timothy Wainde, late of Firby, yeomⁿ., for uttering of false and scandalous words to the defamation of a certain Alice Bovill, viz.—“Thou bewitched my stot” ; * the stocks at Kirby Wiske as very ruinous for want of repair, so that malefactors and disturbers of the peace cannot be imprisoned in them, and the inhab^{ts}. of Kirby Wiske ought to repair the same ; the common pin-fold at Kirby Wiske as very ruinous for want of repair.

 PETITIONS.

These are to certify that the new house adjoining to Smarbar Hall, in Swaledale in the County of Yorke and Diocese of Chester, is sett apart for a publique meeting-house for Protestant Dissenters, and is desired may be recorded, and a certificate thereof given according to a late Act of Parliament made 1. William and Mary.

John Holland. Dan. Smith.

Pray lett him have a certificate for the house mentioned in this note. †

* This is worth notice. I believe it is correct to say that in this case the finding of the Grand Jury was “No bill.” And the suggestion is, that had we the Sessions Rolls throughout to refer to, it might be found that many bills of the sort were thrown out, and that thus the paucity of witchcraft cases previously commented on might be explained.

† This is inserted as showing the nature and, at least, occasional form of the application made to Quarter Sessions for the licence necessary before a house or building could be set apart legally for use by nonconformist worshippers.

The humble Petition of John Lowerance of Stoxley.

Whereas the humble petitioner was a soldier in the service of King Charles I., under the command of Sir Will. Pennyman (in his own company), and in the said service suffered great damage and now, being very old and not able to gitt out of doores to relieve myself and family, therefore humbly requests the honourable Bench to comiserate the poor condition of the humble petitioner, who shall ever pray for the &c.

To the Right Worshippfull their Majesty's Justices now assembled at the General Sessions at Beedall the humble petition of Ellen Winn, now wife of Henry Winn of Fingall.

Humbly sheweth that your petitioner was born at Aisgarth of good and honest parents, daughter of one Michael Tunstall, deceased, was a person of very good repute, of civil and honest carriage and behaviour: and as far as we know carried herself quietly, honestly, and civilly here amongst her neighbours as long as she continued at Aisgarth, insomuch we verily believe the report, slander or aspersion now laid upon her by one Susannah Edmundson of Fingall to be false: because as long as she was with us we knew no such thing by her.

We the inhab^{ts}. of Aisgarth whose names are hereunto subscribed do certify the truth of the abovesaid petition, witness our hands, 19th day of July, 1691.

The humble Petition of the inhab^{ts}. of the Constabery of Beedall sheweth that one George Harrison an inhab^t. whoe formerly gott an Order of Sessions that the said Constabery should pay him 6*l*. a week towards his maintenance when he was in distress, and hath paid him till now : now the said Geo. Harrison is now able to work and has received every day when in work 9d. a day all this barke time, for chopping of barke, besides working of the tanner* traid, and now at this very time is with a sister of his at Lartington, who would maintain him without any allowance of his pention.

* This petition involves a somewhat curious question. The man is, one will hardly gainsay, a “tanner by trade.” And yet he works during the “barke time” at “chopping of barke.” If we look into Bardsley’s “English Surnames,” or Lower’s “Patronymica Britannica,” or any of the books of the authors who copy blindly from them, what we find is – “BARKER. A tanner, from his using bark of trees in his trade.” Surely the present entry betokens a difference, at least a distinction, between a tanner by trade and one who worked at the bark employed in the trade. It is quite true that we have in “Promptorium Parvulorum” “Barkyn lethyr” defined by Latin words which mean “to tan leather,” and “Barkare,” by words meaning “tanner,” and “tannare idem quod Barkare”: so that there can be no doubt that Barker and Tanner had come to be synonymous by the date of the Dictionary quoted. But still, our entry shows that a man who “worked at the barke” was not necessarily a “tanner”; nor yet that the converse was true. The true account seems to be that the verb “to bark leather,” seems to have given origin to the noun “barker,” the man whose trade it was to bark leather, tan and bark being really perfectly synonymous: the mistake made by both the authorities named, and their obsequious followers, being that they allow no other origin for the English surname Barker, than that suggested by the trade of the tanner: the truth being that nine out of ten of our English Barkers spring from men whose business-designation in the middle ages was Bercarius, or sheep-fold-man.

Cockson of Old Elvett in or near the City of Durham, spinster, of the second part, and Tho. Cockson of the City of London, gentⁿ., of the third part. Whereas the said Tho. Cockson being intituled to the yearly sum of £5 for his life, chargeable upon the lands and tenements in the parish of Lan- chester in the county of Durham, late the estate of Geo. Coxon,* deceased, father of the said Elizabeth, hath at the request of the said Elizabeth joyned in a conveyance of the premisses to, or in trust for, the said Geo. Meynell and his heirs : and the said Geo. Meynell did thereupon at her request make and enter into a bond in the penal sum of £100 conditioned for the payment of the yearly sum of £5 with- out deduction to the said Tho. Cockson for his life : now this Inden- ture witnesseth that in consideration of the premisses, and for the further securing of the payment of the said sum, and also in considera- tion of 5s. of lawfull money by the said Tho. Coxon to the said Geo. Meynell paid on or before the sealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said Geo. Meynell hath granted and confirmed to the said Tho. Coxon an annual rent charge of £5 out of that mess^{es}. or tenement and farm in West Dalton or Dalton Ryall, now in the occupation of Will. Heslup under the yearly rent of £70.

Taken at Aldbrough, August 13, 1722, before Matth. Smales.

Signed, sealed and delivered (the impression of a five-shilling stamp appearing on the parchment) in the presence of us, John Ewsby, John Eden : Inrolled Sept^r. 11, 1722, before me Will. Reveley.

* The diversity in the ways of spelling this name may be remarked upon—Cookson, Cockson, Coxon. The general subject of such variations is one of some considerable interest to others besides the professing derivationist of personal and place names ; and it would be easy to write several pages of illustration and elucidation.

Indenture April 18, 1722, between Anne Cockson of Old Elvett, widdow of Geo. Cockson, gentⁿ., Elizabeth, daughter and heir of the said Geo. Cockson, and Tho. Metcalfe of Richmond, gentⁿ., of the other part, witnesseth that the said Anne, Elizabeth and Tho. Cockson in consideration of the sum of 5s. to them in hand paid by the said Solomon Wycliffe and Tho. Metcalf have bargained and sold and by these presents do bargain and sell unto the said Solomon Wycliffe and Tho. Metcalf all that mess^{es}. and farm and all the lands, grounds and heriditaments thereunto belonging at Colpighill, in the parish of Lanchester, now in possession of Mich. and John Willey; and all the other mess^{es}., &c., and all lands, &c. in possession of Geo. Metcalf may be in actual possession of the said mess^{es}., &c., and may be thereby enabled to accept a grant and release of the reversion and inheritance thereof to them and their heirs for ever to such uses and purposes as in the said grant shall be mentioned.

* The application of this designation of calling at the date given is worth noting. It had already four centuries previously become a family rather than merely personal name. The form and particulars of the document at large are peculiar. The delimitation of the land demised is indeed strangely vague and indefinite; and it is by no means apparent what the quality or description of land actually was. It is scarcely freehold, and yet one cannot say it is either copyhold or common.

* This name is one of a class which are all of them suggestive. When one's attention has been adequately aroused, it becomes a matter of continually recurring remark, that such names as Kirk Field, Chapel Hill, Chapel Garth, or Chapel or Kirk with some other suffix, as in the present case, abound almost all over the country. From my own individual experience I am led to think that in pre-Reformation times, every township had its chapel, while in not a few instances there might even be a second chapel within the limits of the said township. Thus, while the parish of Lythe had its chapel of ease at Egton, I have grounds for asserting that the number of chapels besides in different parts or constituent townships of the parish, was not less than seven, and, I have reason to believe, really included two others. In the case before us, while the former existence of a chapel at or near the locality named is certainly indicated, it is at least as certainly suggested that near it was a held, or spring, of some notoriety. One hardly dares, in the absence of personal knowledge of the place, go further and suggest what the nature of the notoriety may have been.

† An archaic name in its form, and as such worth passing notice. It is, however, more likely to have been imposed by "Danish-speaking" people, than by men of Danish nationality :—a principle, forgetfulness or ignorance of which vitiates the work of the majority of our place-name derivists.

‡ The alternative form of the term here is distinctly noticeable.

* This, I think, is, as a document involving a variety of matters of interest to such as care to note old usages and customs, old or obsolete terms, and matters cognate or connected with them, one of the most fertile and communicative I have almost ever met with. We have Newton Pasture, Newton Lower Pasture, the New Close Pasture, all specified: we have the characteristic description of the Oxgang, and a little close over against the said mess^{se}. ; an oxegang of land, arable, meadow and pasture lying dispersedly in the townfields of Newton in several pieces, all in the mannor, &c. of Newton and now in the tenure of the said John Thomas ; two beastgates in the lower pasture of Newton ; a beastgate in Langbargh Riggfield ; three avarage gates in Newton Fields in avarage time ; two and a half wintergates in the pasture ; the sixth part of a gate in the new close pasture ; the fourth part of a summer-gate in a place called Milnbeck, some years in the Summer Pasture and other years in Langbargh Rigg fields, as accustomed ; two sheepgates in the Fallowfield, and a beast gate in Newton-Ings from Lady Day to the third day of May as fully and to all intents and purposes as the said John Thomas hath held and doth now hold and enjoy the same, and also so much of the ground and soile of the said pastures as doth belong to and will fall to the shares of the owner of the said mess^{se}. and oxgang of land in respect of the said cattlegates when the said pastures shall come to a partition or division, together with all manner of houses, outhouses, &c. and the reversion, &c. to the only proper use and behoofe of the said John Thomas.

Indenture, May 4, 1723, between Bradshaw Peirson of the one part, and John Jackson of Great Ayton, gentⁿ., of the other part, witnesseth that the said Bradshaw Peirson hath granted, &c. unto the said John Jackson by vertue of an Indenture of bargain and sale for one year, dated the day next but one before the date of these presents, and of an Indenture of release dated the day next before the date of these presents between Benjamin Pyne of the one part and the said John Jackson of the other part, purporting the conveyance of a mess^{se}., oxegang of land, &c. to the use of the said John Jackson by the said Benjamin Pyne, the mess^{se}. with two orchards and a garth on the back-side thereof in the town of Newton ; an oxgang of land, arable, meadow and pasture lying dispersedly in several parcells in the townfields, that is to say, one rood piece adjoining on the Milnbeck on the “arable, meadow and pasture, lying dispersedly in the townfields in several pieces” . . . beast-gates, average gates in “avarage time,” summer-gates, winter-gates, all mentioned ; the fact that such gates might and did vary as to their location in different years ; sheep-gates named, the duration of time as to which some of these “gates” were limited, and the distinction between winter-gates and summer-gates, set out for notice in a marked way. And besides all this there is the more than admitted probability that all these several rights or privileges were approaching a foreseen termination—“when the said pastures shall come to a partition or division.” One such “partition or division,” the formal award connected with which I copied out in full a few months ago, was singularly instructive as well as interesting. Its date was thirty-five years later than that of the present document.

* This document from the quality of its contents is even of greater interest than the last, with which in other respects it is most closely connected. In fact it supplements the other in a singular manner by reason of the details it proceeds to give as to local matters, in which the former was deficient. The present term, or wand, is one I have not previously met with in this connection. That its signification is a division, rather than a "measure," of land is, of course, apparent; that it was a long and narrow division, or slip, is surely to be inferred; and I think it is more than an inference that it was a slip of pasture-land as distinguished from arable. If that be so, it shuts out any supposition that the term is an abbreviation of wandales: for the wandalles originally were long divisions or slips of the common-field of the vill. I am inclined to couple it with the winds or wynnds of the old towns of the North of England as well as Scotland. There were, for instance (if not "there are") "weends" (so sounded) in Yarm, and these winds were lanes or alleys, not so very narrow, several of them. The pronunciation of wind, with the i long, in Cleveland is "weənd," the a syllable being as short and sharp as possible; and provided only the term wand was pronounced waind, as I think it must have been, the connection of the word might be looked upon as established. But the origin or derivation would still be to seek. Halliwell gives the word "wand, to inclose with poles," but with no further information. It is quite possible that these wands were marked out by the aid of dowells or stubs, set at the ends of the slips at proper distances apart: nor do I know that that consideration is inconsistent with what is stated before. My fishing-rod in Berwickshire fifty years ago was usually called my "wahnd."

† I have contended, in opposition to Mr. Seebohm and others, that these pieces of land, or rather the pieces of land called "butts," did not depend for their names on the circumstance of their abutting on this or that object or thing; but that they were the short ends of "lands" cut off from the longer portions or slips they belonged to by casual circumstances, such as the passage of a road or a foot-way, a small water-course or what not. This idea is singularly confirmed by these entries.

‡ This is Mr. Seebohm's "gore" or "gored acre." At p. 6 he writes "corners of the fields which, from their shape, could not be cut up in the usual acre or half-acre slips, were sometimes divided into tapering strips pointed at one end and called "gores" or "gored acres." The more customary name for these angular-shaped pieces in the more purely Scandinavianised parts of the district was "wra," a term of much more frequent occurrence in the North Riding than gore or gair.

In the Freeholders' Wood near Aysgarth falls, there are said to be growing thirty different varieties of the "dog-rose." There must have been a similarly distinguished spot at this place.

Indenture, Nov. 11, 1726, between Geo. Rickerby of Richmond, Blacksmith, and Marg^t. Rickerby of Richmond, widow, of the one part, and Paul Wilson of the same, Shiller,* of the other part, witnesseth that

* This is an occupational designation or description with which I have no previous acquaintance. That the fundamental idea of the verb to shell is that of separation there can be, I think, no doubt whatever. In the old English of the former half of the fifteenth century the terms "shille-fruit" = our 'shell-fruit,' "shilyyn-nottis" = our 'to shell nuts,' "shillynge of coddys cornys, as benys, peson, and oder lyke" = our 'the shelling of husk or shell-covered corn (or other grains), as beans, peas, or the like' prepare the way for Halliwell's "Shillin, shelled oats;" Jamieson's Sheal, Shill, Shool, to take the husks off seeds," Shill, Shilling, schilling, grain that has passed through the mill and been freed from the husk;" not to mention other and analogous expressions. When we remember the somewhat Joe-Millerish definition of oats attributed to Johnson, and bear in mind that the food of the mediæval peasant, and indeed of others much higher than he in the social scale, was not customarily made of the finest of wheat flour; and even that oat-cake in some form or other constituted no small portion of the daily diet in hundreds of households in divers parts of Yorkshire down to a period that many among us recollect, it becomes self-suggesting that there naturally must have been many localities marked by the presence of what (for an illustrative object) may be termed a "shillin-mill." But that assumes also the presence of a person who would be, rather than only might be, designated a 'Shiller.' It may be added that the same idea of separation underlies the terms Shilstones and Shilling-stones given by Halliwell as having the meaning of 'slates.' The list of words belonging to the standard English, as well as to Provincial forms of it, depending on the stem which supplies our common English skill would be long enough to occasion a little surprise to one not much in the habit of pursuing such studies.

* This name would clearly seem to be a corruption of Lusthorns. In this immediate vicinity there is a place called Slaitron Park, the actual name being Sloethorn Park. But I do not notice the name simply to indicate this latent corruption. It is the prefix which attracts most attention. What it really is is uncertain, but if ascertained it will be found to involve an archaic name of some interest. In this parish is a Loosehow anciently Lushou. I have a note of a Lushow keld in another district, another of the personal name Losward, and so on. Ferguson connects the prefix with O. H. G. leod, liuz, people, and it may be rightly. With another archaic Looschow elsewhere, the name is of interest.

Indenture July 15, 1728, between Dame Elizth. Stapylton of Aiskew in the parish of Beedale, widdow, on the one part, and Will. Alder of Beedale, gentⁿ., of the other part, witnesseth that the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton, in consideration of a competent sum of money and of the yearly rents and covenants herein-after reserved and agreed upon, hath demised, &c. to the said Will. Alder a mess^{ge}. with the garth to the same belonging and the parcel of ground called Moor-close, one acre, in Beedale, with all houses, outhouses, &c., except and always reserved out of the present demise of lease all manner of wood, timber, trees, mines and quarries of what kind soever standing, &c. upon the said premises with free liberty of ingress, &c. to the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton, her assignes, servants and agents to fell, cut down, digg for, lead and carry away the same to have and to hold for twenty-one years at the yearly rent of 10s., and if it shall happen the said yearly rent to be arrear, behind or unpaid by the space of fifteen days after the day when the same ought to be paid it shall be lawful for the said Dame

Elizth. Stapylton into the said demised premises to re-enter and the said Will. Alder to eject, expell and putt out : and the said Will. Alder doth covenant, &c. to pay the said rent, and also at his own proper cost and charges during the said term well and sufficiently to repair, &c. the houses, buildings, hedges, ditches and fences in, upon or belonging to the said premises, and at the end of the said term peaceably and quietly to leave and yield up the said premisses in good and sufficient repair, and also yearly during the said term to plant and sett three good, thriving young trees of oak, ash or elme, and the same so planted from time to time afterwards to preserve and cherish in a carefull and husbandly manner, and in case they or any of them dye to plant others in their room and place,* and further to grind all the corne and grain which he shall expend in his family at the water corn mill or mills† of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton in Beedale or Aiskew, so that the same be sufficiently and lawfully grinded, and shall perform two boon days work with a labourer in every year when, where and as the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton shall desire or give notice to him for the performing thereof, and it shall be lawful for the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton or her stewards, servants or workmen at all times during the said term in a fitt time and manner to enter into and view the said houses, buildings and premisses, and the state of reparation thereof, and give, or leave notice in writing at the said house of such reparations as shall be then wanting, and the said Will. Alder shall within three months next after any such view and notice and warning shall be given to him of any default or want of repairs or amendments to be made shall well &c. repair such defaults &c. as shall happen to be found, and the said Will. Alder shall not willingly suffer any common or usual ways or passages for carriages, draughts or plows, or horse-ways or paths to be made, increased or incroached ‡ in or upon the said premisses by any persons not having any right or interest thereunto, and it shall be lawful for the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton to at all times within the said term to enter into and have so much of the demised premisses as in the same year shall be

* The condition here inserted is noteworthy, and although the number of trees required to be planted yearly may appear to be small, still the provision is a wise one. The consequences of the denudation to which many parts of the North Riding especially have been subjected during the present century, are far more disastrous than is usually allowed for.

† Curious as showing the maintenance of a feudal custom down to the late period indicated by the date of the present document.

‡ Long before the date of this deed a lessening of the number of extant "ways or passages" had become the rule, rather than the multiplication of the same; and it is rather difficult to conceive the necessity for such a covenant as this in the present or any deed of the same kind. There may have been, and probably there were, local reasons for its conception and insertion.

meet to fallow and to ear,* plow and fallow the same according to the usage of country there in that behalf without any lett &c. of the said Will. Alder, and that all the muck or dung that shall be made by the horses, cattle or neat kept on the said premisses shall be bestowed, laid and spread yearly upon the arrable lands of the said premisses in a husbandlike manner whereof most need shall be and not elsewhere, and likewise the said Will. Alder will at his own cost, &c. bear, pay and discharge one full half part of the tax commonly called the land tax, and further that he shall not at any time plow, digg, harrow or break up without the consent and assent of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton first had in writing: nevertheless it is agreed that the said Will. Alder shall and may ear and sow any of the arrable land two years together during the said term and not above, and after that shall fallow and plow and let the same lye one year fallow, and moreover he shall not at any time make, suffer, &c. any manner of waste, spoil or distruction in or upon the premisses, or in or upon the houses, buildings, trees, woods or underwoods thereof, except by the assent &c. ; but, as much as he may, shall withstand and hinder the same, and he shall not at any time make any voluntary sale of, or sell, lop, crop or top any of the trees, &c. growing or to be growing upon the said premisses, but only for the repairing the houses or lands, or mound or bound † thereof, and in such sort as is herein agreed, and save only such as shall be made and done

* The phraseology here seems to call for a little in the way of comment. The usual definition for "to ear" is simply "to plough": but the juxtaposition of the words "ear" and "plough" here is such as at least to suggest that the two words as they are so employed can scarcely be regarded as precisely synonymous. A little below we meet with the phrase "may ear and sow any of the arable land," which reminds us of Piers the Plowman:—

I have an half acre to erye. bi the heighe weye ;
 Hadde I eried this half acre. and sowen it after,
 I wolde wend with yow.

where the sowing follows the earing. Fully admitting that the primary meaning of the word "ear" is to plough, yet I think that we have a practical distinction between mere plowing and actual "earing" suggested for our observation in these instances. The plowing that preceded the fallow was simply plowing; the "earing" which preceded the sowing was less simple. I think it included all the tillage requisite to prepare the land for the reception of the seed. And if we allow for the nature of the fallow in medieval, and still later, times, it must become apparent that adequate preparation of land for seeding with corn involved something more than just the turning over of the trodden, weed- and grass-grown surface with one single "aither," as our old Cleveland word expresses the act of ploughing.

† We have here not simply an unusual or at least little-used word, but one which involves some little philological interest. Halliwell gives "Mound. A fence or hedge. East.", which does but the more decisively accentuate Skeat's remark that "the sense of hillock is due to confusion with the commoner word mount." The true meaning of medieval mound was protection, guard. And from the idea of protection to that of a guarding fence the transition is not at all difficult.

by the consent of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton, and lastly, he shall not at any time give, sell, grant, bargain or alien his estate-lease, interest or term in the demised premisses for longer time than from year to year only, or charge or incumber the same to any persons other than his own wife, child or children without the agreement, licence and consent of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton first &c.

* We have here specified a circumstance of little interest in itself, but still of a nature to affect the researches of the student of place-names very considerably, and to lead on to increased difficulty in the way of identifying localities named in old documents or localizing old boundaries, enclosures, properties, and the like, named in ancient and interesting documents. In fact the wanton, uncalled-for, and often nonsensical changes of names that are perpetually being made in all parts of the country are in one sense to be deplored, rather than ridiculed. Indeed I could give a list of such changes made within the last few years in this district alone, comprising not a few so silly and so totally inappropriate, such as would raise a rather unsympathetic stare in many people's eyes. And the process is still going forward. One such instance of "progress" seeks to supplant a name that has subsisted for eight or ten centuries, at least, by another depending on the merely fortuitous vicinity of what is now a great man's house.

Usual covenants against incumbrances the rents, duties and services to the chief lord of the fee only excepted and foreprized. Power of redemption by payment of £70 and interest on November 11th next; covenant that no benefit of survivorship shall be taken by the said Elizabeth or Hellen Wynn if either of them shall happen to die before the said sum is paid.

John Mayes of the Freerage near Yarum, Esq., 2.

Tho. Smith of Yarum, Blacksmith, and Anne his wife, and Robert their eldest son, 3.

* The circumstance that the words "paddock" and "parrock" are here dealt with as synonymous is worthy of passing notice. Professor Skeat remarks that "it is tolerably certain that paddock is a corruption of parrock, another form of park. . . . The unusual change from r to d may be due to some confusion with paddock, a toad; cf. poddish for porridge." The most curious and, at the same time, illustrative delineation of what a park, parrock, or paddock actually was in the old days, with which I am acquainted, is in the Rievaulx Chartulary, where Abbot Ailred concedes the privilege of enclosing a free park (liber parcus) sixty feet long by as many broad.

WITNESSETH in consideration of £60 to the said Anne Reed and £30 to the said John Mayes by the said Tho. Smith paid.

Indenture September 29, 1732, John Rooke of Hagworme Hills alias Quarrells in the parish of Dalby, yeomⁿ., and Leonard Rooke of the same, 1.

Philip Sturdy of Scalton, gentⁿ., 2.

John Close of Oulston, gentⁿ., 3.

WITNESSETH in consideration of £120 paid to Philip Sturdy by John Close.

Grant by Philip Sturdy and John and Leonard Rooke of a mess^{se}, with a garth, an orchard, a garden, a close called the Close under the orchard, seven acres, also all that spring of wood and the spring or springs of water* adjoining or belonging to the said last-mentioned close; a close lying next to the gate of the said mess^{se}, being part of a close called Leafields, four acres; a close called Leafield or Corn-close,†

* The fortuitous conjunction of the phrases "spring of wood" and "spring or springs of water" in this particular instance, is by no means without its interest, almost even to the chance reader. Halliwell gives the word Spring with the definitions "Quick; a young wood; a young tree," adding "Still in use in Suffolk. The term was also applied to a single rod or sprig." And this again is in a measure illustrated by what Richardson's English Dictionary adduces as one of the significations of the noun spring, namely, "each shoot of vegetation, a plant shooting or germinating." The illustrative quotation affecting this is from Holland's Plinie (b. xvii. c. 21). "Now, these oilets are properly (in twigs or sets of trees) those buds called where the new spring first shooteth forth." But still we can hardly, at the present time, regard the word spring as signifying a wood—usually small and young in growth—in the light of a standard word; and possibly a few sentences from Professor Skeat's admirable Dictionary may not prove inapplicable. "The word to spring is frequently applied in M. E. poetry to the leaping forth of a spark from a blazing log of wood. We still say of a cricket-bat that is cracked or split, that it is sprung. Besides, the sense "to split, burst" is that of Icelandic springa. Derivatives are spring a leap, also the time when young shoots spring or rise out of the ground, also a source of water that wells up, a crack in a mast, &c."

† The alternative here—Leafield or Corn-close—is not without its significance. I am aware that, in dissenting from the usual signification for Lea, Ley, Lay, as given without qualification by the usual authorities in such matters—I have Skeat, Halliwell, Richardson, &c., open before me—viz., "a meadow," "meadow, pasture-grass land," I am laying myself open to animadversion. Still, my early recollections, as a native of the south of England, equally with my more mature knowledge of the sense of the word as continually used in this district two or three centuries ago, forbid me to assent to it. As a boy I was familiar with the terms "clover-ley," "oat-ley," which certainly did not mean either meadow or pasture properly so-called, and still less grass land: least of all, however, untilled land, which is taken to be the meaning of the Pr. Pm. "Lay, lond not telyd." And again, here in the north, I may venture to say that in the written description of lands sold in this place in the year 1656, I find first and last from eighty to a hundred field names depending in some form or other on this word lea or ley; and that, without an exception, as far as my knowledge extends, the names imply the very reverse of meadow or pasture or grass land, or uncultivated land. I hold that, in all the cases I refer to, the word ley implies not only cultivation, but cultivation for the purpose of growing corn. That is eminently true, of the Essex "clover-ley." The clover-seed had been sown among the springing corn of the year before. It had grown there and when the corn-crop had been cut and carted, was left to grow for the coming year, when, in its own order and turn it was cut, made into hay for the farming stock, and carted, and the land whence it had been removed was the ley; which again, in its due order and turn, was ploughed up and duly cultivated, probably, as was the wont then, made to bear a crop of beans. And just so, in this district, the Leas, Leafields, Leeses, and so on without end, were all closes which were anything rather than meadow, and only pastures in the sense four acres; a close called Cote-flatt, ten acres, all in Hagworm-hills alias Quarrells aforesaid between certain places called Well-field and Skewsby-lane, with all houses, &c.

Power of redemption on payment by John or Leonard Rooke to John Close of £120 and interest March 29th next.

In the name of God Amen, I Anthony Huntley of Shadforth in the county of Durham, yeomⁿ., do make, publish and declare this to be my last will, &c. : Imprimis I do hereby give and devise unto my son Anthony Huntley, his heirs, &c., all my mess^{ges}., lands, &c., at Hunton and Hudswell or elsewhere in the county of York to hold to him and his heirs for ever, subject nevertheless and hereby charged with the payment of £100 to my son Ralph Hurtle within twelve months next after my death; item I give to my wife Mary Huntley all my mess^{ges}., &c., at Shadforth (which I hold by lease for twenty-one years from and under the Lord Bishop of Durham) for her life, and my will and pleasure is, and I do direct that my said wife shall, out of the rents, &c., of the said premises, at the expiration of the first seven years and so from time to time as there shall be occasion, renew the lease thereof, and I hereby declare that the said premises devised as aforesaid are, and shall be taken to be in lieu, barr and recompense of any dower or title which she may have or claim to any of my lands, &c., in the said county of York; and after the death of my said wife I give the said premises at Shadforth unto my two sons Thomas and John Huntley, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common and not as joynt tenants; and I do hereby charge the said premises devised to my said son Anthony Huntley with the payment of £8 which I owe to Mr.

that, when the corn crops grown on them were removed, the cattle were let in to graze upon whatever herbage might be left. The meadows and pastures proper were in entirely different localities, namely, in the wild undivided launds, thwaites, or what not, common to it might be half a dozen or half a score, or (quite possibly) to twice or three times that number of farmers. It is not intended to deny that these closes or fields might and did from time to time, be, as we should express it now, "laid down to permanent grass." No doubt, that happened perpetually, and probably the term "ley londe," "lee lande" originates in that way. Prof. Skeat refers his readers to Mr. Way's note on the Pr. Pm. Lay, where nearly every example quoted really implies the occasional, if not the alternate, cultivation I contend for. One of these examples does this rather quaintly, for it is "Ruricola, a tyleare of leylonde," wherein the tillage is actually expressed; just as it is implied in the quotations involving the word selio, which essentially denoted a division in the common arable field (or one of them) of the vill or township it belonged to; which had its turn of lying fallow, of course, but was as regularly tilled in the ordinary rotation as the rest.

Jefferson ; item I give to my said three sons Thomas, John and Ralph all my household goods ; item I give to my two sons Thomas and John all my ready money, and such other sums of money which shall at the time of my death be due to me upon any security whatsoever, and all the rest of my personal estate not herein-before disposed of I give unto my said wife Mary Huntley, whom I hereby make executrix of this my last will, hereby revoking all former wills. * Our first thought—at least, our second—on noting this expression, no doubt will be that we have here an instance of the use of the word employed precisely identical with rather than only parallel to the use of ‘the same word in the sentence “In my Father’s house are many mansions.” It is well to bear this meaning in mind, as also that of a nearly connected word, namely manerium, often used in the ordinary form of “manor” and, as to its meaning, confused with the very indefinite sense often associated with that term. As Sir F. Pollock well remarks (Oxford Lectures, p. 128), “It is certain that down to the fourteenth century the word ‘manerium’ did not convey the same meaning that ‘manor’ does to a modern lawyer. It was rather the principal house of the estate, the capital ‘messuage’ of later conveyancers. The word describes a material building having a definite situation. A manerium had doors or gates; it might be in good or in bad repair; it might be burnt down.” Ignorant or careless writers, especially on matters of local history, are perpetually blundering over the varying ideas comprehended in the word “manor,” not allowing for any difference such as that just noticed, or even for that involved, in so many instances, in the Domesday application of the word.

* It is at once obvious that this word is used in a sense varying from that in which it is currently used in our everyday intercourse with people. Professor Skeat, in an interesting and instructive illustration of the verb to ceil, notices that "the verb to syle meant at first to canopy, to hang with canopies, as in 'All the tente within was syled with cloth of gold and blew velvet.' The word was afterwards extended so as to include the notion of covering with side-hangings, and even to that of providing with wainscoting or flooring." With this statement in our mind we have no difficulty in conceiving the nature of the "ceileing" which, with the partitions in the message granted, was granted also in like manner with the message itself.

Grant by the said Tho. Markham and Marm. Palmes of the premises mentioned in the last indenture unto the said Marm. Lawson to hold the same to the use of the said Heneage Dering for one thousand years, after the expiration of the said term to the use of the said Marm. Lawson.

* The matter involved in this term is one which has occupied my mind for several months past, and still I have hardly succeeded in working it out to my own complete satisfaction. It is, I think, one of no little interest as connected with the housing of the agricultural classes in late mediæval and sixteenth and early seventeenth-century times, and the slow progressive development of domestic comfort if not refinement. The association is very closely with the matters referred to at pp. 23-26 of my recently-published volume, "Forty Years in a Moorland Parish," and I am not without hope that before the publication of the present volume I shall be in a position to throw more light upon the general subject. [See 3rd Edition, Appendix H.]

† These names, Nunsid, Priest-capp (the meaning of which is doubtful), and Biggin-house, all involve matter of history. Considerable grants in the place concerned (Ugthorpe) were made to Guisborough Priory, and lesser gifts bestowed on one of the local Priors for female recluses, or Nunneries. There is reason to conclude that the place last-named had belonged to Guisborough.

§ A reminiscence of the onetime practice of setting apart a given portion of land for the continued production, year after year, of one given or specified crop. In like manner line-lands, wheat-lands, oat-lands or haver-lands, barley-lands, bean-lands, pease-lands are met with in old and mediæval records connected with almost every part of this district.

In the name of God Amen, I Ralph Bell of Sowerby in the parish of Thirsk, Esq., being of perfect mind and memory do make this my last will : First I give my soul to God that gave it, and my body to be buried in the churchyard of Thirske near my relations, and as to all my manners, &c., and real estate whether in possession or reversion and all my leasehold estate for life or lives or for years (except the house in Sowerby I now live in which my wife shall have for all the term of years that shall be to come at my decease) I do give, devise and dispose of the same in manner &c. : first I give and bequeath unto my loving wife Rachell Bell all my household goods, linnen, bedding, plate, jewells, apparell, and all the furniture, goods, utensils and stock which I shall have in my dwelling-house at Sowerby and outhouses, and all the furniture and utensils in my gardens, and my coach-chaise and horses, and all my other horses, beasts and stock of cattle or sheep that shall be upon any grounds in my possession at the time of my decease ; and I do moreover give unto my said loving wife £100 to be paid her within six months after my decease : item, I give &c. unto the said Rachell Bell my loving wife an annuity of £200 out of my real estate for her life in lieu and satisfaction of her jointure : item, I give to my brother John Bell an annuity of £50 for his life, nevertheless under this

I can give may be afforded by a reference to a former award, dating in the last quarter of last century, in virtue of which the soil and ground of a certain common pasture in this parish was apportioned among the holders of common rights therein. These rights involved the pasturage of so many cows or beasts, in other words, so many cattlegates, the right to take brushwood for making or repairing fences, so many days or so many "swaiths" of mowing, &c. The total extent to be divided was just under 200 acres, and the number of right-holders was 19. One freeholder's share amounted to about 46½ acres, another's to 36 acres, the next largest share being 17 acres ; while several were between 3 and 4, and one as low as 1½. My conclusion, from the means of information available to me, is that, at the least, in this parish only, 1,000 acres have in this way been apportioned and divided up among members of the freeholders' body since 1656, becoming from the completion of the division their absolute freehold property. The process through which this became possible is too long to explain here.

proviso that if my said brother do upon any accompt contradict or oppose this my last will or give any trouble or disturbance to my said loving wife, or to my nephew Ralph Consett in the peaceable enjoyment of what I herein give to them respectively, then the said annuity given to my said brother shall cease, &c. : item, I give unto my sister Consitt children, my sister Denison's children, and my sister Gaskell's children which shall be living at the time of my decease, to each of them £100 apiece: item, I give, &c. to my nephew Ralph Consett of Thirske, gent^r., and his heirs my manor of Thirske and all other my manors &c. and real estate whatsoever, and also my leasehold estates whether for life or &c. (my said dwelling-house only excepted), and all other my estates both real and personall whether in possession, reversion or remainder, to have and to hold to him, his heirs, &c. for ever, charged with the said annuities: and my will also is, and I do hereby further order that my said nephew Ralph Consett procure an Act of Parliament to change his surname of Consett to that of Bell, and write and use that name in a constant way after my decease: and I do make and appoint my said nephew the sole executor of this my last will, hereby revoking all other wills heretofore by me made, declaring this to be my last will whereunto I have put my hand and seal this 19th day of May, 1731.

I Ralph Bell do hereby republish, ratify and confirm this my last will, and my mind and will is that my nephew Ralph Consett shall have and enjoy to him and his heirs for ever all the lands, &c. which I have purchased since the making of my said will as well as what by my said will I have before given to him, as witness my hand this 24th day of March Anno Dni. 1731-2.

Whereas by my last will dated May 19, 1731, I have given unto Rachell Bell my loving wife (among other things) an annuity of £200 out of my real estate for life: now I considering that my circumstances are altered since the making of my said will whereby I am enabled to make a further and better provision for her maintenance as my widow, I Ralph Bell do therefore by this my codicill annexed to my said will (and which I desire may be taken as part thereof) give, &c. to my said loving wife over and above the said annuity another annuity of £150 to be paid out of my said real estate. Geo. Robinson, late of Bedale, gentⁿ., was summoned to answer to Tho. Walburn of a plea that he render to him £136 which he oweth to, and unjustly deteineth from, him, and so forth, and whereupon the same

* This is an application of a well-known term previously unknown to me. Skeat gives "char, a turn of work. Also chare; 'and does the meanest chares.' . . . M.E. cherr, chearr, cher, char. It means (1) a time or turn; (2) a turning about; (3) a movement; (4) a piece or turn of work," with a good many references to correlated Teutonic words. We have the perfectly analogous and exceedingly common expression in this district "to do one's own turns." I have repeatedly heard it applied in the case of old or failing people:—he (or she) is still able "to do his (or her) ain to'nns"; but we do not make much use of the word char or chare in any form, and it is not altogether easy to explain the transition of idea which led on to its application in the term employed in the text—a fact which perhaps makes the occurrence of the word only the more interesting. The definition of a 'half-chear' in the final paragraph, limiting it to six days' mowing, is not without its significance or bearing upon the question, and perhaps gives some sort of clue to the particular which principally led to the use of the word, inasmuch as it more than possibly suggests the number of "days'-works" concerned in the chear, "days'-works" being a quite customary term used in the same connection.

Thomas by Edw. Carter his attorney saith that whereas the aforesaid George, April 15, 1735, at Bedale, by his certain writing obligatory had acknowledged himself to be holden to the same Thomas in the aforesaid £136 to be paid unto the same Thomas when he should be thereunto required, nevertheless altho' often required the said £136 to the same Thomas hath not yet rendered, but to render them to him he hath hitherto refused and hath doth refuse, whereupon he saith that he is injured and hath damage to the value of £20 and therefore bringeth suit and so forth, and he produceth here in Court the writing aforesaid which testifyeth the debt aforesaid, and the aforesaid George by John Thompson his attorney cometh and defendeth the force and injury, and the same attorney saith that he is not informed by the same George his clyent of any answer for the same George to the aforesaid Thomas in the plaint to be given, and he saith nothing else thereunto, whereby the same Thomas remaineth undefended therein against the aforesaid George: therefore it is considered that the aforesaid Thomas do recover against the aforesaid George his debt aforesaid and his damage by reason of the detainer of that debt to 50s. to the same Thomas of his assent by the Court here adjudged, and the aforesaid George in mercy and so forth.

here. The usual form it takes in men's mouths is "bottery," where the bot is the customary clipping of the sound implied in burt, "burtree" being itself, as I take it, the equivalent of "boretree."

* A note on such an obvious contraction or corruption of the original name Stonehouse may seem, at first sight, to be somewhat superfluous. Perhaps, however, it may not be so in reality. There are, I take it, at the present time about two hundred and fifty houses in this parish. Of these, two are of red brick, two of wood, and the rest of stone. It is obvious that, while John and Thomas of the Woodhouse, and Robert and John of the Brickhouse, would still be distinctions for the said John, Robert, John and Thomas; John, Robert or Thomas of the Stonehouse would be none. The immediate inference, therefore, is that up to the time when such a name as John or Thomas of the Stonehouse became practically a full name, or Christian and Surname united, houses built of stone were not common, probably were the very reverse of common—the distinct exception, and not the rule. But this is a fact that is, for the most part, ignored by not a few of those who seek to account for names both of persons and places. That the difficulty of recognizing the origin of the name spelt Stonus in the text, originated early and was a very sensible one, is tolerably plain. Thus I have in my earliest parish register somewhere about nine or ten variations of this one name, and the true origin seems to be nearly the only possible form which does not occur;—Stonas, Stoneas, Stonus, Stonous, Stanas, Staneus, Stainus, and so forth, but no approximation to Stonehouse. The same is true of other names of old or ancient origin, involving the same final element. Thus, I have common English Bakehouse disguised under the form of Bacchus, as well as identifiable under the mask of Backus. Indeed the prevalent form of the name in all this part of England is Backhouse. A more curious illustration of the same nature is found in the name (personal as well as of place) Lofthouse. We have a place so named in the North Riding, and there is another in the West Riding. All sorts of vague guesses as to its origin have been made, and all of them wide of the mark, on the same principle that truly Stonas, Stonus, Stainas, &c., are wide of the mark—namely, by reason of forgetting or ignoring the character of nineteen out of twenty, if not forty-nine out of fifty of the ordinary dwellings of the mass of the population of the mediæval times. They were mere huts or hovels, as easily removed as set up—there being frequent covenants or concessions, in ancient documents, providing or conceding this liberty of removal—consisting of little but rafters and thatch, with rude gable-ends of wattle and daub, or rough planks, or, in such a stone-abounding country as this, mortarless stonework. Of all wrecks of original fifteenth century houses I have made acquaintance with in this district—and they are not a few—the introduction of a chamber or upstairs room was quite a late innovation. And a house of two stories, or with a “loft” above the ground-floor, in the ancient days would be amply remarkable enough to afford a name for the place. And that name would be in the customary locative, or dative plural, Lofthusum, occasionally spelt Logthusum or Loctusum.

* The preceding deed is one which scarcely ought to be passed without some little notice. It belongs to a class of records which are not of an obtrusive nature, but which still are illustrative of proceedings, a knowledge of which helps to clear up many dark passages of local history in a diversity of places. It is in many cases known, in many more suspected, that what was once not so much open as, in a certain sense, common land—at least apparently such—has in some way or other been enclosed, apportioned or allotted, and permanently divided and fenced accordingly. The present document gives us a glance at the manner in which such allotment and enclosure could be and was legally and permanently made. To my knowledge, many similar, or at least analogous, allotments, with subsequent separate inclosure have been made in my own parish; and it is not long since I obtained and copied one of the "Awards" by virtue of which one of these transactions had been carried through.  Joseph Ryder, late of East Witton and now of Spennithorn, yeomⁿ, 2.
 Tho. Pickersgill of High Burton in the parish of Masham, yeomⁿ, 3.

RECITAL of a grant made by the said Jas. Allen, August 2, 1725, to Chr. Ascough, gentⁿ, of a close of pasture ground called Moor-close, thirteen acres, in Thornton Steward for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, redeemable on payment of £140 and interest on the 2nd day of Feb^r. then next ensuing; and of the payment unto the said Chr. Ascough of £65. 11. Aug. 21, 1727, so that there only remained £80 due on the said mortgage; and of a further loan of £60 from the said Chr. Ascough also charged on the premises by an indenture of Nov^r. 1, 1729; and of an assignment of the said close to John Metcalfe of Kirby Malzeard by the said Chr. Ascough, in consideration of £140. Nov^r. 4, 1730, for the remainder of the said term; and of a grant of the said close for the residue of the said term to the said Joseph Ryder made May 1, 1736, by the said John Metcalfe in consideration of £150. 10., and the said Jas. Allen in consideration of £9. 10.; and of a grant made by the said Jas. Allen April 29, 1730, to the said Joseph Ryder of the three closes of pasture ground in Thornton Steward called Bancks, Hull-close and Hull Pasture, together forty-four acres, for the term of three thousand years, redeemable on payment of £120 and interest Nov^r. 11th then next; and of indentures made April 27, 1731, Nov^r. 3, 1733, and May 1, 1735, whereby the said Jas. Allen did charge the said three closes with the payment to the said Joseph Ryder of three additional sums of £50, £50 and £80 and interest; and of a conveyance unto the said Joseph Ryder Nov^r. 11, 1737, of the three closes of meadow ground called the Back of the Town-closes, together eighteen acres, in 200 acres in extent, was not moor, but common pasture of the rough woodland description. There was in it some timber, and also plentiful brushwood ("garsel" it was termed), as well as multitudinous cattle-rakes all implying pasture, and some meadow. No fewer than nineteen persons were interested in this wide, wild pasture-ground, and the amount of their rights or interest varied to such an extent that in one instance the equivalent allotment was rated as high as 46½ acres, the lowest ranking at 1¼ acres. Now, as this is one of at least six or seven similar instances in this one parish only, all memory of which has faded away among the people themselves, and as it is quite without the boundaries of Inclosure by Act of Parliament, and equally without those of Inclosure by virtue of the consent or direction of the Lord of the Manor and his officers, it is easy to conceive how much latent local history is involved in the mere recollection of these transactions, and how valuable every remnant of record, whether formal like that in the text, or accidentally preserved like my "Award," really becomes in any attempt to chronicle or account for what has taken place in the economic history of a district or even of a single parish.

Thornton Steward; and of an account stated between the said Jas. Allen and Joseph Ryder whereby there is now due to the said Joseph Ryder upon the said securities £650, and he requiring payment thereof the said Tho. Pickersgill has consented to lend the said sum and hath also lent to the said Jas. Allen the further sum of £40, and thereupon it is agreed that the said premises and securities shall be assigned to the said Tho. Pickersgill.

WITNESSETH in consideration of the said agreement, and of the payment of the said sums.

Grant by the said Joseph Ryder and Jas. Allen of the said Moor-close, and the said Bancks, Hull-close and Hull-pasture for the remainder of the said terms, and of the said last mentioned three closes for ever, redeemable on payment of £690 and interest after $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. Nov^r. 11th next.

* I have ventured this emendation partly as being one called for under the circumstances of the case ; but the rather because of the further illustration it affords of the meaning and use of the word itself. In my "Glossary" I have defined Helm as "a shed in the fields, a hovel or hut." Halliwell gives the meanings "a hovel, a kind of outhouse." The extension of meaning and application, then, afforded in the text is not without its value.

Samuel Nichols, late of Blean, but now of Raydale in the parish of Aisgarth, yeomⁿ., and Francis Nichols, his son and heir apparent, 2.

WITNESSETH in consideration of £1,800 paid by the said Sam Nichols and his son.

Grant by the said Sir Will. Gerard of the mess^{es}. called Raydale*

* There is matter in this one grant for the writing of a short essay on local nomenclature, rather than only of a series of a dozen detached and compressed notes. It is

House, and all the buildings, yards, fronts, &c. ; also the closes, inclosures, dales* and parcels of arable land, meadow and pasture ground thereto belonging called James-ing, the Acre-ing, the Raydale-feild, the Low-ludgefeild†, the Hoggbancks‡, the Dentry-fall, the West-crooks, the Rough-close, Craydale-green, the Gill-foot-parrock, New-park, the Green, the Paradise, the Purgatory§, the Out-raydale, by no means easy, in the first place, to determine under what head to classify the name Raydale, whether as a place-name proper, or merely as what may be regarded as an instance of the Common-field-name section. To me it would appear most probable, and from divers considerations (some of which will appear in the following note), that it comes under the second category. But, assuming that to be so, the question still remains as to what the prefix itself really is. I am familiar with the local names—and in duplicate or triplicate, more than one of them—of Raysdale or Raisdale, Raisbeck, Raithwaite or Raethwaite, Ra-bec, Ra-gill, Raeburn or Rayburn, &c., &c., and although random derivationists may find no difficulty in assigning the connection of the prefix, I confess that I am utterly uncertain about it. Thus, to instance as briefly as I can, I know two Raysdales in the North Riding, and of one of them I have the following forms of variants, Raythesdale, Reydhisdale, Reydesdale, Raydysdale, Rathesdale, Raysdale, Raisdale, most of them from five to seven centuries old. I have recently met with a thirteenth-century “Stane Rathes,” as the name of a place or an object now called Stone Raise, where the word “Raise” would appear to be identical with the North England name for a cairn of stones ; and it is much more than probable that the primary element in Raythesdale, Rathesdale is the same as in the thirteenth-century document. But this instance alone may serve to indicate the great difficulty there is in deciding as to what the true form in the case of the names given in the above list may actually be. And this throws doubt on the existence of any actual connection between the forms Raydale, Raethwaite, Ra-bec, &c, and Raysdale, Raisbeck, &c. Besides, there may be two or three origins of the initial Ra or Ray, of which it is likely O. Norse wra or ra is not the least probable. It is, beyond question, a very important fact in the local nomenclature of the district. So much for the prefix. As to the suffix, see next note.

* “Dales” here means, unquestionably, shares, divisions, portions. It is the same word as in Wandale, daila prati, and so forth, coincident with dole, deal, &c. It is a question if the -dale in Raydale has any further significance than that thus indicated. There seems to be no reason to assume that the locally descriptive term or name Raydale is of wide or extensive local application, that, in other words, it designates a considerable area, an area of the nature of a township, or anything thereunto approximating. In the Bilsdale Raysdale, as in Bilsdale itself, the term dale has the significance of a hill-country valley. In Raydale it probably means no more than a divided or allotted portion or share.

† Halliwell gives two excellent illustrations of the ancient use of the word luge in the sense of a “lodge or hut,” and of taking up one’s quarters in the sense in which we speak of lodging anywhere for the night. No doubt, Lodge-field would be the modern form of Ludgefeild.

‡ Besides two or three Swinestys in adjacent parishes, we have Swinedale in Moorsham, two if not three Catbanks in this parish, and there is little reason for doubting that Hoggbank originates in the same way as Catbank, or either of the scores of like names.

§ Parker (“Glossary of Architecture”) defines Paradise as “a small private apartment or study ; also the garden of a convent : the name was likewise sometimes given to an open court or area in front of a church, and occasionally to the cloisters, the South-raydale, the Little-fell, the Hawes, the Elvy-shawes, the Middle-tongue, the Gavel*, the Wald and Waldside†, the Beldhaw‡, the New-close, the Wood alias Cow-pasture, the Startling-pasture§, the Blea||, the High-paddock, the Low-paddock, Cooper-ellers, Smalldales-heads, the Smalldale-feet¶, and Eight-acre, and the ground and soil of all the said several closes; all that field or pasture ground called Cow-close alias Knight-cow-close, all that field or pasture ground called Bardale-head, with common right unto the two last mentioned pastures belonging, all which premises are in the tenure of the said Sam. Nichols by virtue of an assignment of a lease made to Will. Bayne by Sir Will. Gerard, late of Garswood, deceased, Nov. 13, 1718, for the term of twenty-three years, which said lease and term of years was by the said Will Bayne, assigned over to the said Sam. Nichols for a valluable consideration Oct. 22, 1722, the said Raydale being under the ancient yearly fee farm rent of £12. 13. 4., and the said Knight-cow-close and Bardale-head, under the ancient yearly fee farm rent of 24s., all which premises are sett, lying and being within the parish of Aisgarth, and are part of the manner or lordship of Middleham: to be and even to the whole space included within the circuit of a convent." Plots of ground, so situated and so termed will be frequently met with in various parts of the country. For instance, there is a house, with its garden and ground, a little south of the parish church at Scarborough, thus designated; one among several that might be specified. No doubt the name became more loosely applied in post-dissolution times; and it is equally little a matter of uncertainty that the more conventional sense of Paradise would in divers instances be made to supersede the conventional sense; and, that done, the transition of thought from paradise to its opposite, would lead on to the imposition of the name Purgatory to other inclosures. Hence the name in the text.

* I am unable to explain this word. It is not unfamiliar to me, but so far I can throw no light either on its meaning or its application, save only that it appears to designate an area of land. Thus to give but one instance of its occurrence, in the "Black Book of Hexham" (vol. ii., p. 68), is the entry "Et super le Miln-gavell i acra et i roda," which, from the context, leaves no possible escape from the conclusion that Miln-gavell is the name of a parcel of land.

† I take "wald" to be merely another form of wold, weald. Indeed the form "wald-side" leaves no room for any other hypothesis.

‡ This is probably Beeld-haugh or Beeld-haw, the latter syllable meaning sheltered enclosure—sheltered, that is, by wall or bank.

§ This must be Startle Ing. I have made acquaintance with a Stirtle Ing in this part of the world, and I have heard a part of the plough-handle called the stirtle or stertle

|| This name by itself is so unintelligible that one is almost compelled to assume that there is some omission. As a word qualifying a noun, blae, bleea, blea is of perpetual occurrence in northern local and especially Common-field names.

¶ A name which occurs two or three lines higher, viz., Gillfoot Parrock, fully explains the use of the word feet in the present instance. As a final remark it is not uninteresting to observe that this remarkable list of names includes all the three forms, paddock, parrock, and park.

* This is an unusual word, and the meaning is not absolutely certain. Its connection probably is with the Cleveland word huff, to swell or become puffy. Moist, undrained meadow land has a tendency to (as it appears) swell or rise on either side of the foot in walking over it. As I have noticed in the Cleveland Glossary, Mr. Wedgewood gives hoove as an alternative form to huff. "Huffed up with air," and "bladders hooved with wind," are two illustrative phrases cited in the same place, the latter being also quoted by Skeat under the word HUFF. Halliwell gives two or three instances of provincial words with more or less of the same application and general significance.

* The amount of the latent economic history of a place or district involved in its old local names, and especially its field-names, it may fairly be said, is but little suspected in the majority of instances. This one name alone conveys the information, that a part of what had once been a sheet of water, and had then, in accordance with the wonted progress of nature, become a swampy piece of land, still, when first named as an area of land (and probably down to the date of the present indenture), retained within its limits traces of its extraction. There are 'Carrs' in one part of this parish including many score acres of land, at the north-eastern limits of which are certain rough enclosures called still (as they were three centuries ago) 'Pundermires.' The carrs are now, and have long been, fertile fields, but, without any exception, the soil is "peaty," and consequently gives other irrefragable evidence to prove that, in times gone by, water has stood there to the depth of many feet in some parts; but universally, throughout the whole area, to a sufficient depth to allow Grant by the said Tho. Metcalfe and Clare his wife of the premises comprised in the last deed.

TRUSTS : To sell and dispose of the same and with the money arising thereby to pay the said £300 to the said Troth Saltmarsh, and in the next place for raising the further sum of £300 for the paying such other of the debts of the said Tho. Metcalfe as he for that purpose shall give an account of to the said trustees to be by them paid ; and that the clear remainder of the said money shall be paid to such persons and in such manner and to such intents and purposes as the said Tho. Metcalf and Clare his wife shall at any time jointly during their joint lives direct, and until such direction the interest of the said money shall be paid to the said Tho. of trees even, as well as brushwood, &c., being submerged. 'Pundermires' is still undrained, or only superficially drained ; and, within my own recollection, certain portions of the enclosures so named could not be walked over at all, and others only at the risk of getting 'bogged.' The composition of the present name tells the same story as to the locality of which it forms a part. The same principle is involved also in the names "the Hays," "the Thwaytes," "Haw-end," and the other names involving the element 'haw.' 'Thwaytes' implies the prevalence there once of rough forest growth, brushwood as much as timber, with glades or launds interspersed such as to afford much pasturage—the sylva pastilis of Domesday, in short. Haw and Hay are radically the same word, and tell of enclosure in each case ; but of enclosure going on at two different times ; one of them the time when the Anglo-Norman hay had the preference or predominance, the other the period of the predominance of the more English form haw. Other matters of the same kind suggest themselves as extant in other of the names given in the list.

RECITAL that the said Tho. Metcalfe and Clare his wife, in Easter term last past, did acknowledge and levy a fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo. unto the said Samuel Colton and Fr. Healey of the said mess^{ges.}, lands, and premises, which fine was levied of the said premises by the name of two mess^{ges.}, a cottage, ten acres of land, sixty acres of meadow, seventy acres of pasture, pasture for sixty-two beasts, common of pasture for all manner of cattle, and common of pasture with the appurtenances in Marsett and Gaell in the parish of Aisgarth.

WITNESSETH further and it is hereby covenanted, and the true intent and meaning of the said Tho. Metcalf and Clare his wife now is, and before the levying of the said fine was, and was declared and agreed to be, that the said fine should enure and be to the use of the said Samuel Colton and Fr. Richard Robinson of Sunderland-by-the-Sea in the county of Durham, gent^{n.}, 3.

RECITAL that William Riddell, Esq., late father of the said Jane, being seized for life of the manor, mess^{ges.}, lands, &c., herein-after mentioned, with the reversion thereof to the said Jane and her heirs, and the said Jane before her marriage with the said Mark Riddell, did by Indenture of May 22, 1686, grant to the Right Hon. Richard Lord Viscount Preston of the kingdom of Scotland, the Right Hon. George Lord Dartmouth, Baron of Dartmouth, Master of Horse to his late Majesty, James Graham, Esq., Keeper of the Privy Purse to his said Majesty, and Francis Guynne, Esq., the manor, farm or capital mess^{es}. called Hunton alias Hunton Grainge, with the rights, &c., and all houses, buildings, meadows, feedings, &c., marshes, Courts Leet, Courts Baron, &c., for one thousand years with a proviso for redemption by the payment of £1,575, which said money was not paid, whereby the estate and interest of the said Viscount Preston, Lord Dartmouth, James Graham, and Fr. Gwynne in the premises became absolute in law; and of the assignment of the said manor, mess^{es}., &c., by the said Viscount Preston, Lord Dartmouth, Jas. Graham, and Fr. Gwynne, May 12, 1687, to James Stanford of London, Esq., Resident for his Highness the Duke of Newburgh, Prince Palatine of the Rhine, in consideration of £1,573 paid to them and £627 paid to the said William and Jane Riddell for the remainder of the said term, redeemable by the said William and Jane Riddell on payment of £2,310, which sum did include the principal sum of £2,200 with the interest thereof for one year; and the said Jas. Stanford having afterwards lent to the said William and Jane Riddell the further sum of £500, they did by a deed of April 14, 1688, covenant with him that the said manor, &c., should be a security as well for the said £500 as for the said £2,200; and that there was a failure in the payment of the said sums whereby the said estate and term became absolute in law unto the said Jas. Stanford; and that he afterwards died, having first made his last will, dated Nov^r. 20, 1695, and appointed Edward Burdett, Esq., and the said Stephen Tempest executors thereof, which said Stephen Tempest, after the testator's death, proved the said will in the Prerogative Court at York, and took upon him the execution thereof, and he alone or together with the said Edw. Burdett thereby became intituled to the said manor, &c., for the residue of the said term; and that the said Edw. Burdett is since dead, and before his death released all his estate, right, title, and interest in the premises to the said Stephen Tempest, and the said Stephen Tempest, after the death of the said James Stanford, did pay to the executors of Barbara Newton, widow, £966. 13. 6., being due to them upon a subsequent mortgage of the said premises and of a moiety of a colliery called Bensham colliery in the said county of Durham, heretofore the estate of Will. Riddell, Esq., deceased, and thereupon took an assignment thereof in trust for the said Stephen Tempest; and the said Jane Riddell married the said Mark Riddell and had issue by him the said Edward Riddell, her only son and heir, and she and her said father are both of them long since dead; and forasmuch as there is now due unto the said Stephen Tempest upon the said mortgage £4,200, the same being awarded and settled at that sum by John Rudd and John Mayes, Esquires, to whom the said parties submitted and referred themselves for that purpose, and the said Mark Riddell having conveyed his interest in the premises to the said Edward Riddell, the said Richard Robinson hath agreed with the said Edward Riddell for the absolute purchase of the said manor of Hunton and all other the said premises, save the said part or share of the said colliery, for £5,000, and the said Stephen Tempest having an immediate and pressing occasion for the said money due to him as aforesaid, before proper conveyances can be prepared and executed, the said Rich. Robinson, at the request of the said Mark and Edw. Riddell, hath now advanced and paid to the said Stephen Tempest the said £4,200.

WITNESSETH that the said Stephen Tempest hath received from the said Rich. Robinson the said sum of £4,200 in full of all moneys due to the said Stephen Tempest from the said Mark and Edw. Riddell; and that the said Edw. Riddell hath received of the said Rich. Robinson £800.

* Among many matters worthy of notice in this and others of the leases which follow, is that to the mention of which this note is appended. It is not that the condition specified is an unusual one : on the contrary, it is the customary one in not a few of the mediæval charters, the scope of which was such as to admit of or lead to the naming of such matters. It was the rule—a rule that scarcely was conceived of as admitting of an exception—that all territorial dependents should have their needful grinding done at the mill of the lord. And the remarkable thing in the present instance is that this feudal usage or right should still have been maintained and insisted on as late as the end of the first quarter of last century. It would be curious to ascertain precisely when this old custom really became generally obsolete.

† Here again is the persistence of an ancient right and custom brought under our observation. For long periods antecedently to the date of this lease, had most of the old customs, of which boon-service was one, been commuted, over wide districts, for an equivalent in the shape of a money payment. But the Lady Elizabeth Stapleton still, in 1722, continues to exact the performance of the boon-day service, in whatsoever way it might chance to be incident on the tenants of this or that particular messuage or tenement forming part of her property. In the present case it is three days' labour with team and carriages. In other cases, the three days' service is to be rendered with a labourer ; and other corresponding variations will be noticed in the sequel. The name and the idea still survive in this district, and both in connection with the Landlord and with the Township. So many days' "draught-work," or so many "boon-days" on the highway, are well-understood expressions here. Only, in the case of the lord and the township alike, some quid pro quo, either in the form of a cash equivalent, or of some immunity, in requital of the draught-work done is implied or understood.

months after any such view and notice or warning shall be given to him of any default or want of repairs to be made to repair and amend all such defaults and lack of repair as shall happen to be found; and that he shall not willingly suffer any common or usual ways, or passages for carriages, droughts or plows, or horseways, or paths to be made, increased, or encroached in or upon the said premises by any persons not having any right or interest thereunto.*

* It is scarcely possible that such a sentence as this should escape the notice of the student, if even that of the commonly thoughtful ordinary reader. No landlord in this year of grace, 1891, so much as dreams of making his ingoing tenant covenant with him that he will not, during the term of his tenancy, permit a common way for carts, ploughs, what not, to be made, or a right of way exercised, over the land he is to become the tenant of. The proposing tenant himself would be the first to protest against such a liberty being taken, or such a right being even tentatively set up over the land in his occupation. The mere fact, then, that such a clause as this is found in a lease such as the present, and, in point of fact, in more than one of the leases granted by the same lady, leads on to something in the nature of enquiry. I am inclined to think that customary usages, if not quasi-rights, of the kinds specified had existed largely in times ante-dating systematic enclosures, and still more the establishment of farms comprising contiguous, or at the least adjacent, lands in place of the series of strips in Common-fields. Just as now the wayfarer, the driver with cart or waggon, makes his way, drives his draught, what way he will across 'the common,' so, in the time of the Common-field system of agriculture, within certain limits, ways and paths were made almost ad libitum. In this parish, where all had been one property under one lord up to 1656, not a few traces of the condition of matters in the particulars noted remained to be identified then, and are preserved for our instruction in the many Counterparts of Conveyances of the several portions into which the property was divided in the year just named. Thus, in one of these conveyances, after mention made of the several closes, &c., conveyed, the document proceeds, "with right of way to and from the Butterwhate-closes through the grounds called the Castle-grounds, for carts and all manner of carriages, &c." Another gives "free libertie and passage with a yoked draught and their carriages to and from the close called Stackgarth through an intack lately taken up, belonginge to the farm now in the occupation of" So-and-so. A third gives the right to pass along a certain part of a field belonging to another owner and occupant, to take down a certain part of one of the enclosing walls, and so to proceed through the next field to the destination specified; the part of the wall taken down being to be replaced. But not only this, I myself, in virtue of my occupancy of a field close to my house—one of two I bought many years ago on that account, and transferred to the patron of the living, have the right to pass with "a draught and its carriages" through a field occupied by A, through another occupied by B, through a third occupied by A, through a fourth and fifth occupied by C, as well as along a lane past his premises—between them and his garden—and out through another inclosure of his on to 'the common.' Two other instances of the same kind also occur within a quarter of a mile of this house on the north-west side of it. It is easy to see how, when survivals of old days and their usages, such as these, may be quoted, it was necessary to put restrictions on the liberty or license which had existed through many ages, when once the old system had "passed away" and in a certain sense "all things had become new." It would be easy to continue these remarks with some prolixity. Probably, however, enough has been advanced to serve as an adequate illustration of the paragraph commented on.

Power to the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton at every time convenient within the last year of the said term to enter into and have so much of the said premises as in the same year shall be meet to fallow, and to ear,* plough and fallow the same or any part thereof, according to the usage of the country there in that behalf without any let or disturbance of the said John Holmes, or any other person by his assent or procurement; covenant that all the muck or dung which shall be made by any horses, cattle or neat kept in and upon the said premises shall be bestowed, laid and spread yearly in and upon the arable lands of the said premises in a husbandlike manner where most need shall be; and that the said John Holmes shall not at any time during the said term, plough, dig, harrow or break up any part of the said premises without the consent and assent of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton, nevertheless it is agreed that he may ear and sow any of the arable land two years together during the said term and not above, and after that shall fallow and plough and let the same lie one year fallow,† and shall not make or suffer to be made any manner of waste, spoil or destruction in or upon the said premises, or any houses, buildings, trees, woods, or underwoods thereto except by the assent of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton, but, as much as he may, shall withstand the same; and he shall not make voluntary sale of, or sell, lop, crop, or top any of the trees, woods, or underwoods thereof growing or to be growing upon the said premises but only for the repairing of the houses, or lands or mound or bound thereof, save only such as shall be done by the consent of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton; and lastly, he shall not give, sell, bargain, grant, or aliene his estate, lease, interest, or term in the said premises exceeding the quantity of twenty acres, directly or indirectly, for longer time than from year to year only, or charge or incumber the same to any persons other than to his wife, child, or children, or to his executor, without the agreement and licence of the said Dame Elizth. Stapylton.

† These covenants touching the agricultural management of the period are very well worth passing notice. Many of the conditions involved have been in principle, if not in express terms, insisted upon in late or still extant agreements entered into on taking land to rent. The rules as to manuring, at least as to the manner in which the manure made on the holding, is to be applied; as to taking two corn-crops off the same piece of land, and the like, as well as not ploughing out fresh land without special permission from the landlord, have their exact counterparts down to the present day. It is not yet a common thing—though quite as little an unknown thing—to let a trustworthy as well as competent tenant manage the land he rents according to his own judgment and experience in these and other particulars,

* The reference in the preceding paragraphs to Whitby Bridge, the Order for its repair, and the expences incurred in carrying out the said Order, and the present notice of the continuance of the payment to the occupier of certain lands in the vicinity of How Bridge, in acknowledgment of his sufferance of the transit of passengers over his land in time of flood, are useful as indicating the slow progress of effectual bridge-building in the North Riding. * This, with a preceding Order touching the same matter, and no less as supplemented by a closely succeeding Order, is not without its interest in illustrating the method of official and other procedure in the provision of the more effectual bridge accommodation imperatively called for by the advance of economic improvement, and the increase of traffic thereby occasioned.

dale in the parish of Aisgarth be licensed for the public worship of Almighty God by a congregation of Protestant Desenters; the Thr. to pay the Deputy Sheriff 5s., his expences for whipping Will. Thompson at Middleton Tyas, July 18 last; Rob. Frank, late of Hackness, house carpenter, to be fined 6s. 8d., he being indicted at this Sessions for maliciously and unlawfully breaking the windows in the dwelling-house of one John Richardson of Hackness, and other enormous crimes, such as threatening to kill, destroy or maim the said John Richardson when he had an opportunity, for which he is Ordered by this Court to be committed to the Castle of York, there to remain until he shall pay the said fine and find two sureties for his good behaviour, himself to be bound in £50, and his sureties in £25 each; whereas at Thirsk Sessions, April 16, the wood bridge over the river Eure at Masham stood indicted for want of repair, and whereas at Northallerton Sessions, July 18 last, an Order was made that the said bridge should be taken down and rebuilt with stone, and that the Rev. Edw. Place, John Milbank and John Dodsworth, Esquires, should employ persons to buy materials for building the said stone bridge and should make contracts for the building of the same, and do other things as in the said Order are particularly mentioned, but no power is thereby given to them to build the said bridge in such convenient place as they or any of them should think proper: Now it is hereby Ordered that the said bridge shall be built of stone upon the river Eure at Masham aforesaid, either upon the old foundation where the decayed wood bridge now stands, or in such convenient place near to the same as shall be approved of by the said Justices; whereas an Act of Parliament was made in the twentieth year of the reign of his present Majesty intituled an Act for repairing the road leading from Catherick Bridge to Yarm, and from thence to Stockton in the county of Durham, and from thence through Sedgefield to the city of Durham, and whereas by colour of the powers given by the said Act at a meeting of Will. Sutton, Will. Sleigh, Tho. Peirse, Ralph Wheatley, Rowland Burdon, Henry Brown, John Wilson, and David Burton, being eight of the trustees nominated and appointed (amongst others) for putting in execution the said Act, at the house of Mrs. Ann Scaife's in Stockton, March 20, 1750-1, they did make an Order in the following words, to witt:—whereas it appearing to the trustees that the carriers of lead on the said road do load and unload the same several times in one day in order to avoid the payment of the tolls, for the preventing whereof it is hereby Ordered that all carriers of lead shall for the future pay the whole tolls payable at the three turn-pikes gates erected upon the said road at Low Worsall, Mark Stone, and North Cowton on passing through any one of them, and be permitted to pass through the other two of the said gates toll free: and whereas John Potts of Low Worsall, yeomⁿ., since the making of the said Order has been compelled at diverse times within two months last past to pay tolls more than once in one day, to witt—5*d*. in the morning, and 3¼*d*. upon his return in the evening before twelve of the clock at night for the same cart drawn by the same two horses passing and repassing through the same turnpike gate at Low Worsall contrary to the said Act, for which grievance the said John Potts has appealed to this Court : Now upon hearing the evidence given on behalf of the said John Potts, and hearing Council, as well on his behalf as of the Thr^r. and commissioners and trustees of the said turnpike, we are of opinion that the said tolls taken of the said John Potts as aforesaid is a great grievance and is very partial and oppressive to the said John Potts, and is contrary to the said Act : and whereas Geo. Lun of Low Worsall did also appeal to this Court from the like grievance done to him, and Rob. Nicholls of Scorton did also appeal for being compelled to pay at North Cowton turnpike gate 11¼*d*. for once passing through the same with a cart and three horses, to both which appeals the said Thr^r., &c., made no defence but agreed that the same were grievances, and submitted themselves to the judgment of this Court, and this Court doth accordingly adjudge and determine that the tolls so taken of the said Geo. Lun [?] and Rob. Nicholls are very great grievances and contrary to intention of the said Act ; whereas by the Act for repairing the Road leading from Catherick Bridge to Yarm it is enacted (among other things) that it shall be lawfull for the Justices in the North Riding and in the county of Durham at their respective Qu. Sessions after September 29, 1747, if they think fit to appoint one or more fit persons to survey and view the ruinous roads by the said Act directed to be amended, and to enquire of and concerning the application of the tolls and duties taken and received in pursuance of the said Act, and in case such persons shall find any misapplication of the said moneys, or any other abuses of the powers or authorities given by the said Act, they shall certify the same to the said Justices at their respective Sessions, who are thereby authorized and empowered and required to hear, examine and finally determine the same without further or other appeal : and whereas complaint has been made unto us at this Court that several grievances and abuses of the powers given by the said Act have been made on the said turnpike road, therefore we, in pursuance of the said Act, do appoint Geo. Hutchinson of Maunby, gentⁿ., and Rob. Hutton of Newby Wisk, gentⁿ., to survey, view, and inspect the said road and to inquire concerning the application of the tolls and duties, and in case they shall find any misapplication of the money collected and raised by virtue of the said Act or any other abuses of the powers thereby given they shall thereupon certify the same in such manner as by the said Act is directed.

TO ALL TO WHOM THIS PRESENT INDENTED WRITING SHALL COME Samuel Milbourn of Thirkclby, yeomⁿ., sendeth greeting. Whereas by articles of agreement indented, dated Nov^r. 3, 1747, between the Right Hon. Henry Earl of Carlisle of the one part, and Samuel Skelton of Bulmer, gent., John Pindar of Mountain, clerk, John Milbourn of Scarbrough, schoolmaster, John West of Welburn, gentⁿ., Francis Blake of the same, yeomⁿ., George Foster of Foston, roper, Francis West of Welburn, weaver, John Taylor of Marton, yeomⁿ., John Bradley of Welburn, mason, Tho. Arnett of the same, lab^r., William Wrea of Flaxton, yeomⁿ., Peter Stead of Welburn, mason, Robert Nightingale of the same, Thomas Nightingale of Yestrop Park, yeomen, and Christopher Robson of Whitwell, mason, of the other part, thereby reciting that there was then a large parcel of pasture ground called Welburn Moor, lying within the township of Welburn, containing by estimation one hundred and sixty acres, which was then stinted or stocked for the whole year at fifty-eight beastgates, and that the said parties to the said articles had the sole property of and in the said moor exclusive of all others, and were seized of the said beastgates in the manner mentioned in the said articles; and further reciting that the said parties to the said articles for the improvement of their several interests and properties in the said parcel of pasture ground, had agreed that the same should be inclosed, severed and divided, and that a specifick part and share thereof should be allotted to each of the said parties in lieu of, and in satisfaction for, and in proportion to, their several beastgates therein : therefore the said parties to the said articles, for the better dividing and inclosing of the said parcel of pasture ground, did thereby nominate and appoint me, the said Samuel Milbourn, to be their commissioner in the manner, and with and under and subject to the rules, orders, provisoes, and directions therein mentioned, provided, and agreed upon, and that a true and distinct survey should be made by me, or some other person or persons as I should in that behalf nominate, of the said parcel of ground on or before the 1st of May then next, and that on or before the 11th day of November, 1748, all the said parcel of ground should by me be set out, ascertained, divided, assigned and allotted unto and amongst the said several owners of the said beastgates in such quantities, shares and proportions as by me should be adjudged and determined to be a full recompence, equivalent and satisfaction for all the right and interest that the said several owners respectively then had, or might claim, or be intitled unto in the said parcel of ground : and that immediately after I should have completed the partition and allotments of the said parcel of ground I should draw up an award in writing which should express and contain the quantity in statute measure of acres, roods, and perches contained in the said parcel of ground, and the quantity of each and every parcel thereof assigned to the respective parties intitled to the same, and a description of the scituation, buttals, and boundaries of the same parcels respectively, and should also contain orders and descriptions for fencing the same allotments, and for making and laying out proper roads, ways, and passages in and through the same premises, and for the repairing, supporting, cleansing and maintaining all the ditches, fences, gates, drains, bridges and styles necessary to be made in and upon the same for the purposes of the said agreement, which said instrument should be ingrossed upon parchment and signed by me and enrolled with the Clerk of the Peace for the North Riding ; and that the lands and grounds so to be allotted to the said owners should be in full satisfaction for all right of pasturage, and that after the execution of the said award such right should cease : and whereas I did before May 1st last make a true and distinct survey and admeasurement of the said parcel of pasture ground, and the same contains in statute measure one hundred and fifty-eight acres and three roods,

Now KNOW YE that I, the said Samuel Milbourn, having several times viewed the said parcel of ground, and having well and duly weighed and considered the said admeasurement and survey and each and every of the said proprietors' right and interest, and all other matters and things referred to me by the said articles, do this day in pursuance of and by virtue of the several powers and authorities to me given by the said articles, and every other authority to me in anywise belonging or appertaining, make, publish and declare this my award, order and determination touching the premises as follows : I do award, allot, assign and set out to the Right Hon. the Earl of Carlisle and to his heirs and assigns in severalty in lieu of his beastgates in the said parcel of ground sixty acres and five perches of land lying together in the said moor as the same are now markt and staked out, adjoining in one part thereof on the allotment herein-after mentioned of the said John Pindar, and in the residue thereof on the allotment of the said Fr. In witness whereof I the said Samuel Milbourn have to this my award set my hand and seal, Nov^r. 11, 1748. Samuel Milbourn. Signed, &c., in the presence of us, James Taylor, William Conyers.*

* I have given this award more in full than in the case of the great majority of the matter derived from these books of Inrollments, and principally, because, while it belongs to a very interesting class of documents, it throws no little light on a series of modifications in the tenure and ownership of large tracts of land, which modifications have already passed out of practical recollection in many parts of the country, and bid fair eventually to escape any sort of recognition whatever. The cases referred to are those in which certain freeholders, who chanced to possess among them the exclusive right of pasturage, in whatever form, in a given Common-pasture, combined together by mutual agreement to modify their ancient and peculiar interests in the said pasturage, and its site, by jointly surrendering such rights, and accepting in lieu of them such shares or proportions of the soil of the pasture-place itself as should be allotted to them by a duly qualified and formally designated arbiter (or body of arbiters) duly appointed for the purpose. The arbiter's principle of action, of course, was to allot to each owner an amount of land such as should be as just an equivalent as could possibly be arranged, out of the common area of land, for the several rights surrendered ; taking care at the same time to arrange for and regulate means of access to each several lot, its due fencing, in many cases its water privilege or supply, the preservation of adequate or established footpaths, the creation of new stiles or overgangs, in aid of the same object, in the fences required in the process of inclosure, and so forth. In this parish alone (inclusive of Glaisdale) I am aware that no less than seven of these awards have been made, and, I believe, all since the beginning of the last century. Of five of them I can obtain no written record, even the traditional recollection of them having passed entirely away. Of one of them, dating nearly a hundred years ago, the award—or rather a counterpart or copy of it—has passed through my hands ; while the other, as late in date as the first decade of the present century, exists still in the venerable Freeholders' Chest. In connection with the evanescent economical history of the parish concerned, the present document is of no ordinary interest.

* When one calls to mind the fact and the nature of such transactions as that which was the occasion of the last note, and still more the fact and the nature of the much earlier operations of commenced systematic inclosure, there is still no difficulty in realizing the occasion, or rather the necessity, for the creation of such strings of field-names as we have in the list here given, which per se is simply tedious and uninteresting, but by no means so if taken in its proper connection.

The Right Hon. Thomas Bruce Brudenell, Lord Bruce, Baron of Tottenham in the county of Wilts, John Blackwell of Stamford in the county of Lincoln, Esq., Master and Warden of the Hospital of Well, John Dodsworth of Watlass, Esq., 3.

Whereas there is a certain open common field or moor called Canswick Moor, alias Watlass Moor, in the several manors of Snape, Well, and Watlass, containing three hundred and ninety acres, the bounds and limits of which said several manors have for many years last past been well known and distinguished, and it is hereby declared and agreed by and between the said Earl of Exeter and John Milbanke, as Lords of the Manors of Snape and Well and Watlass, that the boundary to divide that part of the said moor belonging to the said Earl of Exeter from that part belonging to the said John Milbanke shall be as follows: viz. beginning at a place called Readings Nooke, being a corner of the hedge of the enclosed ground called the Readings, which said corner is about sixty-four yards distant from the gate called Scroglane Gate, and from thence extends and goes in a direct line, leaving How Hill on the left hand and the water Flodder on the right, to that part of the hedge called Solomon's Hedge adjoining upon the said common lying west or north-west of, and at about one hundred and eighty yards distance from Solomon's Stone and that part of the said Solomon's Hedge where the said boundary terminates, being contiguous to the cross hedge nearest to the said Solomon's Stone on the north-west side thereof, and running east and west or north-east and south-west, and dividing two closes now or late of Sir Marmaduke Wyvill adjoining upon the said moor; and it is further agreed that all that part of the said moor lying on the south-east side of the said boundary, containing two hundred and sixty-eight acres, shall be deemed and taken to be part of the said manors of Snape and Well belonging to the said Earl of Exeter, and that all that part of the said moor which lyeth on the north-west of the said boundary, containing one hundred and twenty-two acres, shall be taken to be part of the said manor of Watlass belonging to the said John Milbanke; and whereas the said Earl of Exeter, Lord of the said Manors of Snape and Well, and also in right of several mess^{ges}., lands, farms, and premises within the said manors, of the yearly value of £1,500, the said John Milbanke as Lord of the said Manor of Watlass and in right of several mess^{ges}., &c., of the yearly value of £700, the said Tho. Bruce Brudenell, Lord Bruce, in right of several mess^{ges}., cottages, or tenements within the said manor of Snape of the yearly value of £31, and of a mess^{ge}. called the Gildykes of the yearly value of £15, the said John

Blackwell, as Master and Warden of the Hospital of Well, in right of several mess^{es}., &c., belonging to the said hospital of the yearly value of £150, and the said John Dodsworth, in right of a mess^{es}. or farm, lands and premises within the said manor of Watlass of the yearly value of £4, are severally and respectively intituled to a right of common for depasturing of sheep and other cattle in, over, and upon the said open common field or moor called Canswick Moor, alias Watlass Moor, and no other person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, hath or have any property, right, title, or interest in, unto, or upon the said open moor; and whereas the said open common field as it lies open, commonable and uninclosed doth at present produce very little profit to the respective owners thereof and is incapable of being improved unless the same was to be inclosed and divided: therefore it is hereby covenanted, consented to, and agreed upon by and between all the said parties to these presents that a division and inclosure shall be made of the said open common field, and that allotments shall be made thereof by commissioners to be nominated and appointed for that purpose unto and amongst the several owners in proportion and according to their respective shares, rights and interests therein, and in the manner hereinafter mentioned, and that the respective shares shall be held and enjoyed by the parties and those claiming under them in severalty for ever according to their respective estates and interests in the lands and premises in right of which the said allotments shall be made, in lieu of, and as a compensation for, their several common and other rights, &c., in the said common as the same is now undivided; and it is also declared that the share of the said common to be allotted to the said Earl of Exeter shall be such part of the said moor as lyeth on the south-east side of the said boundary, containing two hundred and sixty-eight acres, and the share to be allotted to the said John Milbanke shall be such part of the same as lyeth on the north-east side of the said boundary, containing one hundred and twenty-two acres, subject nevertheless to such shares, &c., as the said Lord Bruce, John Blackwell and John Dodsworth are severally intituled to, and that the allotments to be made to them shall be made in the manner following:— Two third parts thereof out of that part of the moor within the manor of Snape and Well, and one third out of that part within the manor of Watlass according to the boundary of the said manors herein-before described; and it is hereby further agreed that application shall be made to this present Session of Parliament for an Act to inclose and divide the said common field and to carry this agreement into execution, the charges and expences whereof, and of soliciting the same, and of surveying, measuring and laying out the said moor, and all charges of commissioners and other incidental charges touching the said inclosure and division and the allotments to be made, shall be jointly borne and paid by every respective owner according to the number of acres, quantities, parcels, shares, and proportions of ground which each owner shall have allotted to him.

west side thereof &c. ; and the said Lord Bruce shall fence the east end of his said share.

And that John Blackwell, another proprietor having right in the said common as Warden of the said Hospital of Well, shall hold to him and his successors for ever twenty acres of the said moor next adjoining to the said general boundary, being the south-east side thereof, out of the said Earl of Exeter's part of the said moor, and ten acres on the north-west side of the said boundary out of John Milbanke's part, and that the same shall and do adjoin one upon another, and adjoining on the lands allotted, &c., to the said Lord Bruce on the west end, and on the lands allotted to John Dodsworth on the east end ; and that the said Earl of Exeter shall inclose, &c., the part so allotted to the said John Blackwell on the south-east side thereof &c. ; and the said John Milbanke shall fence the same on the north-west side thereof &c. ; and the said John Blackwell and his successors shall fence the east end thereof ; and the said John Blackwell shall have a way to and from the said allotments in, over, and through that part of the said moor belonging to the Earl of Exeter as he shall or may have occasion.

And the said John Dodsworth shall hold one acre on the south-east side of the said boundary and half an acre on the north-west side of the said boundary adjoining one upon another, adjoining on the lands allotted to the said John Blackwell on the west end thereof, and on the other part of the said moor belonging to the Earl of Exeter and John Milbanke on the east end thereof ; and the Earl of Exeter shall inclose the south-east side, and John Milbanke the north-west side of the said allotment ; and the said John Dodsworth shall have a way to the said allotments through that part of the said moor belonging to the said John Milbanke as he shall have occasion.

And that the Rev. John Stapylton, Clerk, Rector of Watlass, in respect of his glebe land within the said manor of Watlass having right of common in the said field, shall hold in severalty to him and his successors for ever three acres on the south-east side of the said boundary, and an acre and a half on the north-west side thereof, and that the same shall adjoin one upon another, and adjoining upon the road leading from Bedale to Masham on the south-east side, and on the other part of the moor belonging to the Earl of Exeter and John Milbanke on the west end, and on another part of the moor belonging to John Milbanke on the north west, and on the road adjoining to Readings Nooke on the east end thereof ; and that the said Earl shall inclose the west end from the said road from Bedale to Masham to the said boundary, and the said John Milbanke the other part of the said west end, and north-west side of the said allotment to the road leading to Watlass &c.

And we do further award, &c., that the said Earl of Exeter shall
