No one, I should think, who has even done nothing more than look into Ovid's Fasti, will refuse his assent to the following words of Hercules Ciofanus, one of the earliest editors of this poem: Ex omnibus, says he, veterum poetarum monumentis nulum hodierno die exstat opus, quod, aut eruditione aut rebus quæ ad Romanam antiquitatem cognoscendam pertineant, hos Ovidii Fastorum libros antecellat. In effect we have here ancient Roman history, religion, mythology, manners and customs, and moreover much Grecian mythology, and that portion of the ancient astronomy which regards the rising and setting of the different constellations. These altogether form a wide field of knowledge; and in my opinion there is not, in the whole compass of classical literature, a work better calculated to be put into the hands of students.

Accordingly the Fasti are read at some of our great public schools and at several of the private ones, and I have lately had the gratification of seeing this very edition adopted at one of the most eminent of the great schools. The name of the master of that school, did I feel myself at liberty to mention it, would be a warrant for the goodness, at least the relative goodness, of the present edition.

At the same time I will candidly confess that the work falls far short of my own ideas of perfection in this department of literature. Circumstances, which it is needless to mention, caused it to be executed in a very hurried manner and without the necessary apparatus of books. It was in fact undertaken, written, and printed in little more than two months. This is mentioned in explanation of, not in excuse for, its defects—for no such excuse should be admitted.

The text is that of Krebs, the latest German editor; from which however I have occasionally departed, especially in the punctuation. In the notes will be found the most important various readings of the fifty-eight MSS. of this poem which have been collated. I have also adopted the Calendar of Krebs' edition, as being on the whole the best, and as its copiousness enables it to supply the place of arguments to the several books.

In the Introduction I have given such matter as the student should be acquainted with previous to commencing the poem. The study of it will, I trust, be found to be of advantage.

My plan in writing the notes was, to be as concise as was compatible with a full elucidation of the meaning of the author. While therefore no difficult passage is left without at least an attempt at explaining it, I have avoided swelling out my notes with mythic or historic notices and narrations which may be found in the Classical Dictionary. I suppose, for example, the student to know, or to be able easily to discover, who Hercules and Romulus were, and where Mount Hæmus lies. Perhaps it would have been better if the notes on the first two or three books had been more copious; those on the three last are, I believe, sufficiently so.

Many references will be found to Niebuhr's History of Rome, and to my own Mythology of Greece and Italy. For those to the former work I may perhaps be entitled to thanks, as leading the attention to the noble discoveries of the Bacon of history, as he is justly styled by Dr. Arnold. This last eminent scholar is himself engaged on a History of Rome, of which a part has appeared, and which promises to form a permanent portion of our historic literature. In my own epitome of the Roman history sufficient information on the portions of it alluded to will be found by those who have not access to the work of Niebuhr. For the accuracy and fidelity of the translation of Niebuhr's history by my friends Hare and Thirlwall, I can pledge myself without any reservation. It may be useful here to add, that the dates in the following notes are those of the Varronian chronology, and not the Catonian as in my History of Rome.

With respect to my Mythology, I may boldly say it is the only work on the subject in our language. Even the first edition (which is the one referred to in the notes) received the approbation of the most competent judges, and the second has been so much enlarged and improved as to form in reality a new work. At the same time, I do not enjoin the study of it: the references were merely intended for the use of those who desire something more than the ordinary superficial acquaintance with mythology.

The errata, or typographical errors, are more numerous than they should have been; but a complete list of them will be found on the page opposite the commencement of the poem. There are, however, two or three errors of a graver kind, which I may here rectify.

The reader will observe perhaps with surprise how completely I mistook the sense of Lib. II. vv. 619, 620; though it is so obvious. The passage might possibly bear the sense which I have given it; but it surely is not what the poet meant. I was led into the error by v. 566. My interpretation certainly gives the more poetical sense, and it is curious enough that I have since met with the very same idea in one of the plays of our old dramatist Ford:

“ These holy rites perform'd, now take your times
 To spend the remnant of the day in feasts.
 Such fit repasts are pleasing to the saints
 Who are your guests, though not with mortal eyes
 To be beheld.”

In the note on Lib. III. v. 845, the remark on furta is trifling; for that word is equivalent to fures, as servitia is to servi, operæ to operarii, etc., such being one of the peculiarities of the Latin language. The time of the death of the Fabii is given incorrectly in the note on Lib. II. v. 195 : it should be “the Quinctilis of the year 277.”

There is, I believe, no other error of any importance. Should another edition be called for at any future time, I shall endeavour to make it more complete.

Of the Rising and Setting of the Stars.

THE attention of a people who, like the ancient Greeks, dwelt in a region where, during a great part of the year, the night might be passed in the open air, and no mists or clouds obscured the heaven, must have been early drawn to those luminous points which are scattered over it in such profusion. They must have early learned to distinguish various clusters of them, and thence to give them appropriate names. Accordingly, in the most ancient portion of Grecian literature, the Homeric and Hesiodic poems, we find various groupes of the stars designated by peculiar names. Such are Orion, the Hyades, the Pleiades, the Bear or Wain, the Dog and the Ploughman or Bear-ward (Boötes or Arcturus). The case was the same in the East; we meet in the book of Job (c. ix. 9.) names for the Pleiades, Hyades and Orion, and (xxvi. 14.) the constellation named the Great Serpent. The people of ancient Italy appear to have done the same: the Latin name of the Pleiades was Vergiliæ, that of the Hyades Suculæ, the seven stars, which form the constellation of the Great Bear, were named by them the Septem Triones, or Seven Oxen; for, as they go round and round the pole without ever setting, the analogy between them and the oxen, which trod out the corn by going round and round the area, or threshing-floor, was an obvious one. Doubtless, the brilliant constellation Orion, had a peculiar Latin name; which has not come down to us ; of the others, none but Greek appellations occur.

A very short acquaintance with the face of the stellar heaven sufficed to shew, that it did not always remain the same. During a part of the year Orion flamed in full magnificence on the sky, and, to the eye of the Grecian herdsman and hunter, he and his Dog pursued the Bear, who kept watching him while the Pleiades (Peleiades, pigeons) were flying before him ; at another season the sky was destitute of this brilliant scene. It was soon observed that the stars made 'their exits and their entrances' at regular periods, corresponding with the changes which took place in the course of nature on earth, and these coincidences were marked and employed for agricultural purposes. A people who have no regular scientific calendar, always contrives a natural one, taken from celestial or terrestrial appearances. Thus the North American Aborigines designate times and seasons by the flowering of certain plants ; the ancient Greeks appear to have done something of the same kind, for one of Hesiod's designations of a particular season is, when the thistle is in blossom ; we ourselves call the first season of the year the Spring, (i. e. of plants,) and our Transatlantic brethren term the autumn, the Fall (of the leaves).

The Greeks, however, seem early to have seen the superior accuracy and determinateness of the celestial phenomena. In the didactic poem of Hesiod, this mode of marking the times of navigation and of rural labours is frequently employed, and its use was retained by the countryfolk of both Greece and Italy far into the time of the Roman empire. Those who wrote on rural subjects or natural history, employed it ; we meet it in Aristotle, as well as in Pliny and Columella.

When intercourse with Egypt and Phœnicia had called the thoughts of the Greeks to natural science, the rude astronomy of their rustic forefathers became the subject of improvement. The name of Thales is, as was to be expected, to be found at the head of the cultivators of this science. He is said to have been the first who taught to distinguish between the real and apparent rising and setting of a constellation ; which implies a knowledge of spheric astronomy. His example was followed and observation extended by others, and as rain, wind, and other aërial phenomena were held to be connected with the rising and setting of various signs, the times of their risings and settings, both apparent and real, were computed by Meton, Eudoxus, and other ancient astronomers. The tables thus constructed were cut on brass or marble, and fixed up (whence they were called παραπήγματα,) in the several cities of Greece, and the peasant or sailor had only to look on one of these parapegmata, to know what sign was about to rise or set, and what weather might be expected. Without considering the difference of latitude and longitude, the Romans borrowed the parapegmata, like every thing else, from the Greeks. The countrymen, as we learn from Pliny (xviii. 60, 65), ceased to mark the stellar heaven, a Kalendarium rusticum siderale, (Colum. ix. 14) taught him when the signs rose and set, and on what days he was to expect sacrifices and festivals. When Virgil (G. I. 257.) says, it is, (as Voss observes,) more probable that it is one of these calendars, and not the actual heaven that he means.

Nec frustra signorum obitus speculamur et ortus, Temporibusque parem diversis quattuor annum.

Before the time of Thales it was, of course only the visible and apparent risings and settings of the signs that were the subject of observation. But astronomers now learned to distinguish these phenomena into three kinds. These they termed the cosmic, acronych, and heliac risings and settings. The cosmic rising or setting (κοσμικὸς ἐπιτολή, or δύσις,) was the true one in the morning; the acronych (ἀκρόνυχος,*) the true one in the evening; the heliac, (ἡλιακός) the apparent rising in the morning or setting in the evening. A star was said to rise or set cosmically, when it rose or set at sun-rise; it rose or set acronychally, when it rose or set at sun-set; it rose heliacally, when in the morning it just emerged from the solar rays, it set in the same manner, when in the evening it sank immediately after him.

Two general observations may be made here. 1. In the morning the true rising precedes the apparent one, perhaps several days. 2. In the evening the apparent setting precedes the real one. To illustrate this. Let us suppose it 'spring time when the sun with Taurus rides,' the Hyades which are in the head of Taurus will rise with the sun, but lost in his effulgence they will elude our vision; at length when in his progress through the Tauric portion of the ecliptic, he has left them a sufficient distance behind him, their rising (as his motion in the ecliptic is contrary to his apparent diurnal motion,) will precede his by a space of time which will allow them to be seen. The real evening setting of a star, is its sinking at the same moment with the sun below the horizon, its heliac setting, is its becoming visible as he is setting and then disappearing, that is ceasing to be visible after sun-set, in the western part of the hemisphere. Thus the sun and the Hyades may actually set together several days before they become sufficiently elongated from him, to admit of their being seen before they set.

There are thus three risings, and three settings of a star, namely :—

The true morning rising,	i. e. the cosmic.
The apparent morning rising,	i. e. the heliac.
The true evening rising,	i. e. the acronych.
The true morning setting,	i. e. the cosmic.
The true evening setting,	i. e. the acronych.
The apparent evening setting,	i. e. the heliac.

Of these, the one which is most apt to engage the attention, is the acronych or true evening rising, that is the rising of the star at the eastern verge of the horizon, at the moment the sun is sinking on the western side. It is of this I think, that Hesiod always speaks. The attention of the constructors of parapemata does not seem to have been directed to the risings of the stars at different hours of the night.

Of the Roman Year.

Nothing is better established by competent authority, than that two kinds of year were in use among the ancient Romans, the one of ten, the other of twelve months. In the usual spirit of referring their ancient institutions to those whom they regarded as their first kings, the ten-month year was ascribed to Romulus, the improved one of twelve months to Numa. This was the current opinion, such as we find it in the following poem; some ancient writers, however, such as Licinius Macer and Fenestella, to whom we may perhaps add Plutarch, rejected the ten-month year as a mere fiction. Their opinion has been adopted by the great Joseph Scaliger, who asserts that the Roman year always consisted of twelve months. Both opinions may, I think, be maintained, the Romans may, from the beginning of their state, have had a year of twelve months, which I would call the Roman year, and yet have used along with it a year of ten months, which, for reasons which will presently appear, I call the Etruscan year. I will commence by shewing that a year of ten months was in use even in the time of the republic.

Ten months was the term for mourning; the fortunes of daughters, left by will, were to be paid in three instalments of ten months each; on the sale of olives, grapes on the vine, and wine in the vessels, ten month's credit was given; the most ancient rate of interest also supposes a year of ten months. It may further be noted, that even Scaliger, who rejected this year, could not avoid remarking, how singular it was, that the household festivals of the Saturnalia and the Matronalia should be the one at the end of December, the other at the beginning of March. He did not perceive that this would seem to indicate a time when, at the end of a year of ten months, these two festivals were one, and male and female slaves together enjoyed the liberty of the season.

These are mere presumptions; a nearer approach can be made to certainty. There was nothing the ancient inhabitants of Italy more carefully shunned, than drawing down the vengeance of the gods, by even an involuntary breach of faith. It was also the custom, especially of the Etruscans, to make peaces under the form of truces, for a certain number of years. Now we find that, in the year 280, a peace was made with Veii for 40 years. In 316 Fidenæ revolted and joined Veii, which must then have been at war with Rome, but 316—280, is only 36, yet the Romans, though highly indignant, did not accuse the Veientes of breach of faith. Suppose the truce made for 40 ten-month years, and it had expired in the year 314. Again, in 329, a truce was made for twenty years, and Livy says that it was expired in 347, but 347—329 is 18 not 20. Let the year have been of ten months, and the truce had ended in the year 346. These are Etruscan cases, but we find the same mode of proceeding in transactions with other nations; a truce for 8 years was made with the Volscians in 323, and in 331 they were at war with Rome, without being charged with perjury.

This ten-month year was that of the Etruscans who were the most learned and cultivated people of the peninsula. As the civil years of the Latin and other peoples were formed on various principles, and differed in length, the Romans at least, if not the others, deemed it expedient to use, in matters of importance, a common fixed measure of time. On all points relating to science and region they looked up to the Etruscans; it was, therefore, a matter of course that their year should be the one adopted.

This Etruscan year consisted of 304 days, divided into 38 weeks of eight days each. It is not absolutely certain that it was also divided into months, but all analogy is in favour of such a division. Macrobius and Solinus say, that it contained six months of 31, and four of 90 days, but this does not seem to agree with weeks of eight days; perhaps there were nine months of four weeks and one of two, or more probably eight of four weeks and two of three.* This year, which depended on neither the sun nor the moon, was a purely scientific one, founded on astronomical grounds and the accurate measurement of a long portion of time. It served the Etruscans as a correction of their civil lunar year, the one which was in common use, and, from the computations which have been made, it appears that, by means of it, it may be ascertained that the Etruscans had determined the exact length of the tropical or solar year, with a greater degree of accuracy than is to be found in the Julian computation.

Like the Etruscans, the Romans employed for civil purposes a lunar year, which they had probably borrowed also from that people. This year, which, of course, like every year of the kind, must have consisted of twelve months, fell short of the solar year by the space of 11 days and 6 hours, and the mode adopted for bringing them into accordance was to intercalate, as it was termed, a month in every other year, during periods of 22 years, these intercalated months consisting alternately of 22 and 23 days. This month was named Mercedonius. In the last biennium of the period no intercalation took place. As five years made a lustre, so five of these periods made a secle, which thus consisted of 110 years or 22 lustres, and was the largest measure of time among the Romans.†

The care of intercalating lay with the pontiffs, and they lengthened and shortened the year at their pleasure, in order to serve or injure the consuls and farmers of the revenue, according as they were hostile or friendly toward them. In consequence of this, Julius Cæsar found the year 67 days in advance of the true time, when he undertook to correct it by the aid of foreign science. From his time the civil year of the Romans was a solar, not a lunar one,‡ and the Julian year continued in use till the Gregorian reformation of the Calendar.

We thus see that the civil year of the Romans always consisted of twelve months, and that a year of ten months was in use along with ### § 3.

Of the Months and Days of the Roman Year.

When it was believed that the year of 304 days was the original civil year of the Romans, and evidence remained to prove that the commencement of the year had, in former times, been regulated by the vernal equinox, instead of the winter solstice, it seemed to follow, of course, that the original year of Romulus had consisted of but ten months. The inconvenience of this mode of dividing time must have been thought to have appeared very early, since we find the introduction of the lunar year of twelve months ascribed to Numa, who is said to have added two months to the Romulian year, which, it would thus appear, was regarded as having been a year of ten lunar months. This placing of the lunar twelve-month year in the mythic age of Rome, I may observe, tends to confirm the opinion of its having been in use from the origin of the city.

The ancient Israelites had two kinds of year, a religious and a civil one, which commenced at different seasons. Their months also originally, we are told, proceeded numerically, but afterwards got proper names. As the month Abib is mentioned by name in the book of Deuteronomy, I hazard a conjecture, that the civil and religious years had coexisted from the time of Moses, and that the months of the former had had proper names, while those of the latter proceeded numerically. Is there any great improbability in supposing the same to have been the case at Rome? The religious year of ten months, as being least used, may have proceeded with numerical appellations from its first month to December, while the months of the civil year had each their peculiar appellation derived from the name of a deity, or of a festival. It is remarkable that the first six months of the year alone have proper names; but the remaining ones may have had them also, though, from causes which we are unable to explain, they have gone out of use, and those of the cyclic year have been employed in their stead.†

* On the subjects treated of in this section, see Niebuhr on the Secular Cycle, in his History of Rome, and Scaliger de Emendatione Temporum.

† That this is by no means improbable is evident from the circumstance, that the name of the intercalary month, Mercedonius, is to be found in no Latin writer. It would be unknown to us, if Plutarch had not chanced to mention it.

The oriental division of time into weeks of seven days, though resulting so naturally from the phases of the moon, was not known at Rome till the time of the emperors. The Etruscan year, as we have seen, consisted of weeks of eight days, and in the Roman custom of holding markets on the nundines, or every ninth day, we see traces of its former use, but a different mode of dividing the month seems to have early begun to prevail.

In the Roman month there were three days with peculiar names, from their places with relation to which the other days were denominated. These were the Kalends (Kalendæ or Calendæ,) the Nones, (Nonæ) and the Ides (Idus or Eidus). The Kalends (from calare, to proclaim,) were the first day of the month; the Nones (from nonus, ninth) were the ninth day before the Ides reckoning inclusively; the Ides, (from iduate, to divide,) fell about, not exactly on, the middle of the months. In March, May, July and October, the Ides were the 15th, and, consequently, the Nones the 7th day of the month; in the remaining months the Ides were the 13th, the Nones the 5th. The space, therefore, between the Nones and Ides was always the same, those between the Kalends and Nones, and the Ides and Kalends, were subject to variation. Originally, however, it would appear, the latter space also was fixed, and there were in every month, except February, 16 days from the Ides to the Kalends. The months, therefore, consisted of 31 and 29 days, February having 28. In the Julian Calendar, January, August and December were raised from 29 to 31 days, while their Nones and Ides remained unchanged. It was only necessary then to know how many days there were between the Kalends and Nones, as the remaining portions were constant. Accordingly, on the day of new moon, the pontiff cried aloud Calo Jana novella* five times or seven times, and thus intimated the day of the Nones, which was quite sufficient for the people.

We thus see that the Roman month was, like the Attic, divided into three portions, but its division was of a more complex and embarrassing kind; for while the Attic month consisted of three decades of days, and each day was called the first, second, third, or so, of the decade, to which it belonged; the days of the Roman month were counted with reference to the one of the three great days which was before them. It is an error to suppose that the Romans counted backwards. Thus, taking the month of January for an example, the first day was the Kalends, the second was then viewed with reference to the approaching Nones, and was denominated the fourth before the Nones; the day after the Nones was the eighth before the Ides; the day after the Ides, the nineteenth before the Kalends of February.

The technical phraseology of the Roman Calendar ran thus. The numeral was usually put in the ablative case, and as the names of the months were adjectives, they were made to agree with the Kalends etc. or followed in the genitive, mensis being understood. Thus, to say that an event occurred on the Ides of March, the term would be Idibus Martiis, or Idibus Martii (mensis). So also of the Kalends and Nones, for any other day the phrase would be, for example, tertio Kalendas, i. e. tertio (die ante) Kalendas or tertio (die) Kalendarum. The day before any of the three principal days was pridie (i. e. priore die) Kalendas or Kalendarum, Nonas or Nonarum, Idus or Iduum.

Another mode of expression, was to use a preposition, and an accusative case. Thus, for tertio Nonas they would say ante diem tertium Nonas, which was written a. d. III. Non. This form is very much employed by Livy and Cicero. It was even used objectively, and governed of the prepositions in and ex. We thus meet in ante tertium Nonas, and ex ante diem Nonas, in these authors. Another preposition thus employed is ad, we meet ad pridie Nonas.

As the Romans reckoned inclusively, we must be careful in assigning any particular day to its place in the month, according to the modern mode of reckoning. We must, therefore, always diminish the given number by one, or we shall be a day behind. Thus, the 5th of June being the Nones, the 3d is III. Non. but if we subduct 3 from 5 we get the 2d instead of the 3d of the month. The rule then is, as we know the days on which the Nones and Ides fall in each month, to subduct from that day the Roman number minus 1, and we have the day of the month. For days before the Kalends, subduct in the same manner from the number of days in the month.

The days of the Roman year were farther divided into fasti, nefasti and endotercisi,* or intercisi, which were marked in the Kalends by the letters F. N. and EN. The dies fasti were those on which courts sat, and justice was administered; they were so named from fari to speak, because on them the Prætor gave judgement, that is spoke the three legal words, Do (bonorum possessionem), Dico (jus), Addico (id de quo quæritur); the dies nefasti, were festivals, and other days on which the courts did not sit; the dies intercesi were those days, on only a part of which justice might be administered. Thus, we are told that some holidays were nefasti, during the time of the killing of the victim, but fasti, inter cæsa et porrecta (exta), again nefasti while the victim was being consumed on the altar.

Manutius, by merely counting up the number of the dies fasti in the Julian Calendar, found that they were exactly 38 in number. This strongly confirms what has been said above, respecting the division of the cyclic year into 38 weeks, and is one among numerous instances of the pertinacity with which the Romans retained old forms and names, even when become no longer applicable; for as 38 days were quite insufficient for the business of the Forum, a much larger number of other days, under different appellations, had been added to them long before. The making the market days fasti was, we are told,* the act of the consul Hortensius.

Of the Roman Fasti.

The Roman patricians derived from their Tuscan instructors, the practice, common to sacerdotal castes, of maintaining power by keeping the people in ignorance of matters which, though simple in themselves, were of frequent use, and thence of importance. One of the things, which such bodies are most desirous of enveloping in mystery and confining the knowledge of to themselves, is the Calendar, by which religious rites and legal proceedings are regulated. Accordingly, for a long time, the Roman people had no means of learning with certainty what days were fasti and what not, but by applying to the pontiff, in whose house the tables of the fasti were kept, or by the proclamation which he used to make of the festivals which were shortly to take place. As we have seen above, the knowledge of the length of the ensuing month could only be obtained in the same manner. This, and the power of intercalating, gave a highly injurious degree of power to the pontiffs.

Accordingly, nothing could exceed the indignation of the senate when, in the year 440, Flavius, the clerk or secretary of App. Claudius, as a most effectual mode of gaining the popular favour, secretly made tables of the Calendar and set them up about the Forum.† Henceforth the dies fasti and nefasti, the stative festivals, the anniversaries of the dedications of temples, etc. were known to every one. The days of remarkable actions, such as the successes and reverses of the arms of the republic, were also noted. Copies for the use of the public and individuals were multiplied; the municipia and other towns of Italy, as the fragments which have been discovered shew, followed the example of Rome, and the colonies, in this as in every thing else, presented the mother-city in little. The custom was transmitted to modern Europe, and, in the Calendar part of our own Almanacks, we may see a copy of those Fasti, which once formed a portion of the mysterious treasures of the patricians of ancient Rome.

These were the Fasti Sacri or Kalendares, but the word Fasti was applied to another kind of register, named the Fasti Historici or Consulares, which contained the names of the magistrates of each year, especially the consuls, and the chief events of the year were set down in them, so that they formed a kind of annals of the state. When we read of the name of any consul, as was the case with L. and M. Antonius, being erased from the Fasti by a senatusconsult, it is always these Fasti that are meant.

Of Ovid's Poem on the Fasti.

Among the choir of poets who shed glory on the reign of Augustus, the first place for originality may be claimed by P. Ovidius Naso. His Heroic Epistles had no model in Grecian literature; his Art of Love, the most perfect of his works, was equally his own, though didactic poetry had been cultivated in Greece; his Metamorphoses bore perhaps a resemblance to a lost poem of Nicander or Callimachus; but unless a work of this last poet, presently to be noticed, was of the same kind with it, Grecian literature contained nothing resembling his Fasti.

To a poet like Ovid, of various powers and great command of language, few subjects could have appeared to possess more 'capabilities,' to use a hackneyed but expressive term. He had here an opportunity of displaying his power in the light, easy, and graceful style, when narrating the adventures of the gods of Grecian theology; while the real and legendary history of his country afforded subjects which might have called forth the highest powers of genius, and have awakened the sympathies of every Roman reader. Here, however, I think he has failed; Ovid in fact very much resembled a distinguished poet of our own days, who, like him, excels in the light and amatory, and sportive style, but whose efforts in the grave and dignified are not equally successful. In reading the poem, I have sometimes asked myself if it would not have been better had the Fasti of Rome been the theme of the Mantuan instead of the Pelignian bard. Where Ovid fails Virgil would certainly have succeeded, and the Regifugium and fall of the Fabii would have come down to us in strains equal to those which celebrate the wars of ancient Italy. Whether the reverse would have been the case, and that, in those lighter and more familiar parts, where Ovid succeeds Virgil would have failed, I take not on me to decide; but I should reckon much on the taste and judgement of the author of the Georgics. Still, even in the higher parts, we know not to what disadvantage even Virgil's verses might have competed with the venerable Annals of Ennius, with whom he rather seemed to shun than to seek collision. This is a question, however, which can never be decided, and, much as I delight in the poetry of Virgil, I regard him as inferior in genius to Ovid. Virgil depends on others, he always imitates; Ovid borrows rarely, in composition he is always best when most independant.

I do not think that Ovid had any model for his Fasti; the idea might have been suggested to him, as it is thought, by this verse of Propertius (iv. l. 69) :

Sacra, diesque canam et cognomina prisca locorum, with which he concludes a poem, in which he feigns himself to be shewing to a stranger the principal monuments of Rome. Callimachus, too, had written a poem which, like all the poetry of the Alexandrian period, was well known at Rome and was quoted by Varro, Martial, Servius and others. Its title was Αἴτια, and, from its name and the few fragments and scanty accounts of it which remain, it appears that it treated of the causes of matters relating to the gods and ancient heroes of Greece. From an epigram in the Anthology, we learn that he feigned that he was transported in a dream to Mt. Helicon, and there received his information from the Muses. The epigram ends thus :

Αἰ δὲ δι εἰρομένῃ, ἀμφ' Ὀγγυγίων Ἡρώων
Αἴτια καὶ μακάρων εἶρον ἀμειβόμεναι.

It is uncertain whether the poem was in heroic or elegiac measure. Ovid appears to have been acquainted with it, for (Trist. v. 5. 33.) when speaking of the dividing of the flame on the pyre of the Theban brothers he adds—

Hoc, memini, quondam fieri non posse loquebar,
Et me Battiades iudice falsus erat.

The difference, however, between this poem and the Fasti, must have been considerable. A Greek poet, named Butas, according to Plutarch (Rom. 21.), wrote αἰτίας μυθώδεις ἐν ἐλεγεῖοις τῶν Ῥωμαϊκῶν, from which he quotes these two verses relating to the Luperci, and in explanation of their custom of striking those whom they met—

'Ἐμποδίους τύπτοντας ὅπως τότε φάσγαν' ἔχοντες
'Ἐξ' Ἀλβης ἔθειον Ῥωμύλος ἠδὲ Ῥέμος.

This might appear to have been the model of Ovid's poem, but it is unknown when Butas lived, and he may as well have written after as before the Latin poet.

On the whole, I think Ovid's claim to originality in this poem cannot justly be contested. Even though he may have taken the idea of it from others his mode of treating the subject is his own.

When Ovid first conceived the idea of writing a poem on the Roman Fasti, it is not likely that he was very well furnished with the requisite knowledge. Any one, who is familiar with the internal history of literature, knows how common it is for a writer, especially a poet, to select a subject of which he is sufficiently ignorant, and then to go in search of materials. Such appears to me to have been the case with Ovid, and the errors into which he falls prove that though a diligent enquirer, as I think he was, he never arrived at accuracy in history or science; with Grecian mythology he was intimately acquainted, and here he is superior to Virgil, whose knowledge of the history and institutions of ancient Italy much exceeded his.

The Annals of Ennius, the historical works of Fabius Pictor and his successors down to Livy, contained the history of Rome, and these works, it is evident, Ovid had studied; for the institutions and their origins his chief source must have been the writings of L. Cincius Alimentus, the contemporary of Fabius Pictor, the most judicious investigator of antiquities that Rome ever produced. The various Fasti, such as those of his contemporary Verrius Flaccus, of which fragments have been discovered and published,* contributed much information, and various passages of the poem intimate that personal inquiry and oral communication aided in augmenting his stores of antiquarian lore. His astronomical knowledge was probably derived from the ordinary Calendars, and as they were not strictly correct, and the poet, in all probability, did not apply himself with much relish to what he must have viewed as a dry and uninviting study, we are not to look in him for extreme accuracy on this head, and must not be surprised to meet even gross blunders.

Two points are to be considered respecting this poem, namely, the time when it was written and published, and whether, when published, it contained any more than the six books which have come down to us.

The mysterious relegation of Ovid to Tomi, on the coast of the Euxine, took place A. U. C. 762, in the fifty-second year of the poet's age. In the long exculpatory epistle to Augustus, which forms the second book of his Tristia, he mentions the Fasti as a work actually written, and dedicated to that prince, but interrupted by his exile. The poem itself contains many passages which were evidently addressed to him. On the other hand, it is actually dedicated to Germanicus, the adoptive son of Tiberius, and L. I. v. 285, he mentions the triumph of that prince over the Catti, Cherusci and Angevarii, which, according to Tacitus (Ann. II. 41.), took place in the year 770, which was the year of the poet's death. It would, therefore, seem to follow at once that this is the true date of the publication of the poem, were it not that Tacitus (II. 26.) tells us that the triumph had been decreed by the senate in the year 768, so that the poet's words may be proleptical. The other, however, is by far the most natural and probable interpretation of his words. It is confirmed by a passage (L. II. 55. et seq.) in which he praises Tiberius as the builder and restorer of the temples of the gods, and in this very year 770, as we learn from Tacitus, the emperor repaired and dedicated the temple of Liber, Libera and Ceres, that of Flora and that of Janus. We may, therefore, venture to assert that the year 770 was that of the publication of this poem. We are now to enquire whether any more appeared than what has come down to us.

In the epistle to Augustus, above alluded to, Ovid says,

Sex ego Fastorum scripsi totidemque libellos;
Cumque suo finem mense volumen habet.
Idque tuo nuper scriptum sub nomine, Cæsar,
Et tibi sacratum sors mea rupit opus.

Hence it has become the prevalent opinion that he wrote twelve books, of which the half has perished. This appears certainly to follow plainly enough from the words of the poet, but the silence of the ancients respecting the last six books is strong on the negative side, for of all the quotations which we meet of this work, particularly in Lactantius, there is not a single one that is not to be found in the books which we possess. I, therefore, agree with Masson, in his life of the poet, that the meaning of those verses is, that he had collected his materials for the whole work, and digested them under the different months, and in part versified them. This is applying no force to the verb scribo; we should recollect that Racine, when he had his materials collected and his plot arranged, used to say Voilà ma tragédie faite! We cannot say whether Ovid had versified the last six books; for he may have done so, and they may have been lost at the time of his death. There is a curious coincidence between the fate of Ovid's Fasti and Spenser's Faerie Queene; of each we have but the one half, and it is a matter of controversy respecting the remaining books of each, whether they were never written, or, having been written unhappily chanced to perish.

The earliest edition of this poem with notes was in the works of Ovid, edited by A. Navagero, a Venetian nobleman, and printed by Aldus, in the year 1502. An edition appeared at Basle, in 1550, edited by J. Micyllus, with the commentaries of several men of learning. Hercules Ciofani, a native of Sulmo, edited in 1578—1580, the works of his compatriote poet. In the Fasti he used twelve of the best MSS. and he added a body of notes on the whole of Ovid's works, which were afterwards printed separately, by Plantin, at Antwerp. The next who devoted his labours to the Fasti was a young Sicilian nobleman, named Carlo Neapolis, who wrote, at the age of twenty one, a commentary on this poem, which was published at Antwerp, in 1639, under the title of Anaptyxis ad Fastos Ovidianos. The celebrated N. Heinsius also undertook the task of elucidating this pleasing poet, whose entire works, castigated by the aid of upwards of sixty MSS. and of great learning and critical sagacity, he gave to the light, in 1658—1661, at Amsterdam, in 3 Tom. 12. with brief notes. Finally, appeared at the same place, in 1727, in 4 vols. 4. the works of Ovid, edited by Peter Burmann; this editor gave a revision of the text of Heinsius, which he occasionally altered, and he added, in whole or in part, the notes of the preceding commentators.

These were the principal editions of this poem previous to the present century. I should add that G. C. Taubner published an edition of it at Leipzig, in 1747, with a selection of notes from preceding commentators, to which he added his own observations; and that C. W. Mitscherlich published at Göttingen, in 1796—98, in 2 vols. 8vo. the works of Ovid with an amended text. But in the year 1812, G. E. Gierig, who had already published an edition of the Metamorphoses with a commentary, gave out the Fasti in a similar manner. He has revised the text, and his notes are generally extremely good, though liable to the charge of needless prolixity in some parts, and too great brevity in others. It is however, a valuable edition on the whole, and the best for general use. In the Oxford edition of the works of Ovid, published in the year 1825, the entire notes of this critic have been given.

J. P. Krebs, who had thirty years before translated this poem into German, gave an edition of it for the use of schools in 1826. His attention was chiefly directed to the text, and he has most carefully given all the various readings, to which he adds parallel and explanatory passages from other writers, and the dates of the several events which are mentioned in the poem. Beyond this his notes do not extend. His text has been adopted for the present edition, but I have noticed only the various readings of greatest importance.

LIBER I.

TEMPORA cum causis Latium digesta per annum,
Lapsaque sub terras ortaque signa canam.
Excipe pacato, Cæsar Germanice, vultu
Hoc opus, et timidæ dirige navis iter ;
Officioque, levem non aversatus honorem, 5
Huic tibi devoto numine dexter ades.
Sacra recognosces annalibus eruta priscis,
Et quo sit merito quæque notata dies.
Invenies illic et festa domestica vobis.
Sæpe tibi pater est, sæpe legendus avus ; 10

1. Tempora in Virgil. (Ecl. iii. 42. Geor. i. 257,) is the seasons, here it denotes the festivals and other remarkable days of the year. —Latium, adj. Latin, Latius annus is the solar year.

2. Lapsa ortaque signa. The subject of the poem is the Roman festivals, and the rising and setting of the constellations. See Introduction, § 1.

3. Cæsar Germ. son of Drusus Claudius Nero, and nephew of Tiberius, by whom he was adopted at the desire of Augustus. See Tacit. Annal II. 73. Suet. Calig. 1-4.—Pacato vultu, etc. as if he were a deity.

5. Heinsius and Burmann, following some of the best MSS. read officii.....In tibi devoto munere, which gives a good sense. Lenz, Mitscherlich and Krebs, prefer the present reading.

7, 8. See Introd. § 4.

9. Vobis, your family, i. e. the Claudii, or rather the Julii, into which he had been adopted.

10. Pater, Tiberius ; avus, Augustus, who had adopted Tiberius.

Quæque ferunt illi pictos signantia fastos,
 Tu quoque cum Druso præmia fratre ferēs.
 Cæsaris arma canant alii, nos Cæsaris aras,
 Et quoscumque sacris addidit ille dies. 15
 Annue conanti per laudes ire tuorum,
 Deque meo pavidos excute corde metus.
 Da mihi te placidum, dederis in carmina vires,
 Ingenium vultu statque caditque tuo.
 Pagina iudicium docti subitura movetur
 Principis, ut Clario missa legenda deo. 20
 Quæ sit enim culti facundia sensimus oris,
 Civica pro trepidis quum tulit arma reis.
 Scimus et, ad nostras quum se tulit impetus artes,
 Ingenii currant flumina quanta tui.
 Si licet et fas est, vates rege vatis habenas, 25
 Auspice te felix totus ut annus eat.

Tempora digereret quum conditor urbis, in anno Constituit menses quinque bis esse suo.

11. Germanicus and his brother, the poet says, will perform actions and receive honors similar to those of Augustus and Tiberius. Drusus was the son of Tiberius; and therefore, only the adoptive brother of Germanicus.—Pictos. the Fasti, were like all other books, adorned with various colours.

13. Aras. The altars dedicated by Augustus, perhaps the altars raised to him, Hor. Ep. II. 1. 15. The following line shows the former sense to be preferable.

15–20. All the terms annue, etc. used here, are such as would be addressed to a deity.—Laudes, praiseworthy deeds.—Tuorum, like vobis, v. 9.—Pagina for liber.—

Movetur scil; with awe. He personifies the book.—Clario Deo. There was a celebrated oracle of the Clarian Apollo, near Colophon, in Asia Minor, which Germanicus himself once consulted. Tac. Annal. xii. 22.

21, 22. Germanicus had pleaded causes publicly with success, Suet. Cal. 4. Dion. 56. 26.

23–25. He had written Greek comedies, Suet. ut sup. He also made a version of Aratus which is still extant.

26. Totus annus, i. e. the whole poem on the year.

27. Tempora, the parts of the year, i. e. months and days.—Cond. urb. Romulus.

28. See Introd. § 2.

- Scilicet arma magis, quam sidera, Romule, noras, Curaque finitimos vincere major erat. 30
- Est tamen et ratio, Cæsar, quæ moverit illum, Erroremque suum quo tueatur habet.
- Quod satis est utero matris dum prodeat infans,
 Hoc anno statuit temporis esse satis.
- Per totidem menses a funere conjugis uxor 35
 Sustinet in vidua tristia signa domo.
- Hoc igitur vidit trabeati cura Quirini,
 Quum rudibus populis annua jura daret.
- Martis erat primus mensis, Venerisque secundus,
 Hæc generis princeps, ipsius ille pater. 40
- Tertius a senibus, juvenum de nomine quartus,
 Quæ sequitur numero turba notata fuit.
- At Numa nec Janum, nec avitas præterit umbras, Mensibus antiquis apposuitque duos.
- Ne tamen ignores variorum jura dierum : 45
 Non habet officii Lucifer omnis idem.
- Ille Nefastus erit, per quem tria verba silentur :
 Fastus erit, per quem lege licebit agi ;
 Neu toto perstare die sua jura putaris :
 Qui jam Fastus erit, mane Nefastus erat. 50

33, 34. That is ten lunar months.

35, 36. This is putting the effect for the cause, the mourning was for ten months, because that was the length of the original year.—Tristia signa, the signs of grief, such as avoiding society, wearing mourning, &c.

37. Trabeati, Romulus wore the trabea. Liv. I. 8.

38. Populis, i. e. civibus.—Annua jura daret, i. e. regulated the year. v. 27.

40. Princeps, head or origin. Venus was the mother of Æneas, Mars the father of Romulus.

41. See the beginning of Books III. and IV.

42. Quinctilis, Sextilis, September, &c.

43. Nec avitas, See below II. 19, et seq.

45–62. See Introductio. § 3.

50. Qui jam, &c. a half holiday, the latter part of the day might be devoted to business.

Nam simul exta deo data sunt, licet omnia fari,
 Verbaque honoratus libera prætor habet.
 Est quoque, quo populum jus est includere septis :
 Est quoque, qui nono semper ab orbe redit.
 Vindicat Ausonias Junonis cura Kalendas : 55
 Idibus alba Jovi grandior agna cadit :
 Nonarum tutela deo caret. Omnibus istis
 — Ne fallare, cave — proximus Ater erit.
 Omen ab eventu est, illis nam Roma diebus
 Damna sub adverso tristia Marte tulit. 60
 Haec mihi dicta semel, totis haerentia fastis,
 Ne seriem rerum scindere cogar, erunt.

Ecce tibi faustum, Germanice, nuntiat annum,
 Inque meo primus carmine Janus adest.
 Jane biceps, anni tacite labentis origo, 65
 Solus de superis qui tua terga vides,

52. Honoratus, as bearing office. It was applied with peculiar propriety to the Prætor whose edicts were called the Jus honorarium.

53. The Dies comitiales on which cum populo licebat agi, i. e. laws might be proposed, &c.—Septis the wooden palings, within which the people were assembled in the Campus Martius, to pass laws.

54. The Nundinæ. Every ninth day the country people come into Rome to attend the market. By the Hortensian law, these days were made fasti in order that their rustic disputes might be settled.

55. On all the Kalends the Pontifex Minor and the Regina Sacrorum sacrificed to Juno who was by some regarded as the moon. For the name Juno see my Mythology, p. 461.—Junonis, Heinsius would read Junonia.

56. A sacrifice of a lamb was offered on the Capitol to Jupiter on the Ides of each month.

57. The Nones were not under the care of any deity.

57–60. The days following the Kalends, Nones and Ides were termed Atri, black or unlucky, as on these days, the Romans had met with their most memorable defeats at the Cremera, the Allia, and elsewhere. A public calamity on any particular day of any one month rendered ater, that day in every other month.

61, 62. I say it once for all.

63. For the mythology of Janus, see Mythology, p. 466, et seq.

65. An. tac lab. denotes the noiseless pace of time.—Origo as the year began with January.

66. See his figure. Mythology,

- Dexter ades ducibus, quorum segura labore
 Otia terra ferax, otia pontus agit.
 Dexter ades patribusque tuis, populoque Quirini,
 Et resera nutu candida templa tuo. 70
 Prospera lux oritur : linguisque animisque favete ?
 Nunc dicenda bono sunt bona verba die.
 Lite vacent aures, insanaque protinus absint
 Jurgia ; differ opus, livida lingua, tuum.
 Cernis, odoratis ut luceat ignibus æther, 75
 Et sonet accensis spica Cilissa focus ?
 Flamma nitore suo templorum verberat aurum,
 Et tremulum summa spargit in æde jubar.
 Vestibus intactis Tarpeias itur in arces,
 Et populus festo concolor ipse suo est. 80
 Jamque novi præeunt fascēs, nova purpura fulget,

Plate xii. 4.

67. Ducibus, perhaps Tib. and Germ. after the victory gained by the latter over the Catti and Cherusci, and other German tribes, A. U. C. 770 ; it may, however, include Augustus and other generals.

68. Terra ferax, the ζείδωρος ἀρσπα of Homer.

69. Tuis, Burmann would read tui as it seems awkward to say the Patres Jani and the Populus Quirini. Quirinus was a name of Janus (Janum Quirinum ter clusit Suet. Aug. 22.) and Gierig thinks the true reading might have been Quirine. After all it was perhaps the constraint of the metre that made the poet express himself thus.

70. Candida templa, either as being built of marble, or on account of those who frequented them on festival days, being clad in white. Gierig inclines to the latter, I should prefer the former sense.

71. Lin. anim. fav. ἐσφημεῖτε by using no words of ill omen and by admitting no thoughts but what were good.

75. Odor. ig. with the frankincense, cinnamon, saffron, &c. which were burnt on the altars.

76. Spica Cilissa, the saffron from Mount Corycus in Cilicia.—Spica, the chives or filaments of the saffron.—Sonet, when the saffron was good it crackled in the fire.

77. Aurum, the gilded roof of the temple.

79, 80. Vest. intact. with new or white garments, the Roman toga was white.—Concolor, a festal or happy day was metaphorically termed white.—Tarp. Arces, the Capitol. It was the practice ever since A. U. C. 601 for the consuls elect, followed by the people, to go in procession to the Capitol and offer a sacrifice to Jupiter.

81, 82. The consuls entered on their office on this day.—Purpura, the toga prætexta or trabea

Et nova conspicuum pondera sentit ebur.
 Colla rudes operum præbent ferienda juvenci,
 Quos aluit campis herba Falisca suis.
 Jupiter, arce sua totum quum spectet in orbem, 85
 Nil nisi Romanum, quod tueatur, habet.
 Salve, læta dies, meliorque revertere semper,
 A populo rerum digna potente coli!
 Quem tamen esse deum te dicam, Jane biformis?
 Nam tibi par nullum Græcia numen habet. 90
 Ede simul causam, cur de cœlestibus unus,
 Sitque quod a tergo, sitque quod ante, vides.
 Hæc ego quum sumptis agitare mente tabellis,
 Lucidior visa est, quam fuit ante, domus.
 Tum sacer ancipiti mirandus imagine Janus 95
 Bina repens oculis obtulit ora meis.
 Obstupui, sensique metu riguisse capillos,
 Et gelidum subito frigore pectus erat.
 Ille tenens dextra baculum, clavemque sinistra,
 Edidit hos nobis ore priore sonos : 100
 Disce, metu posito, vates operose dierum,
 Quod petis, et voces percipe mente meas.
 Me Chaos antiqui—nam res sum prisca—vocabant.

worn by magistrates.—Ebur, the curule chair.

83. Rudis operum, that had never been worked.

84. Herba Fal. &c., the land of Falerii in Etruria, whence the animals for sacrifice were chiefly brought, the water of the Clitumnus, in Umbria, was supposed to make them white, Virg. G. II. 146.

85. Arce, either the Capitol, or the dome of Heaven, see Met. I. 163. Virg. Æn. I. 223.

88. Pop. ver. pol. the Romanos rerum dominos of Virgil.

89. The poet here commences his enquiry into the mythology of Janus.

90. There was no deity worshipped in Greece whose attributes were the same as those of Janus. A curious similarity has been traced out between him and the Ganesa of India.

93. Tabellis, his writing-tables.

94. A usual sign of the presence of a Deity.

100. Ore priore, his front face. See his image.

101. Val. oper. dier. Poet engaged on the days.

103. First opinion, Janus was

- Adspice, quam longi temporis acta canam.
 Lucidus hic aër, et, quæ tria corpora restant, 105
 Ignis, aquæ, tellus, unus acervus erant.
 Ut semel hæc rerum secessit lite suarum,
 Inque novas abiit massa soluta domos;
 Flamma petit altum, propior locus aëra cepit,
 Sederunt medio terra fretumque solo. 110
 Tunc ego, qui fueram globus et sine imagine moles,
 In faciem redii dignaque membra deo.
 Nunc quoque, confusæ quondam nota parva figuræ,
 Ante quod est in me, postque videtur idem.
 Accipe, quæsità quæ causa sit altera formæ, 115
 Hanc simul ut noris officiumque meum.
 Quidquid ubique vides, cælum, mare, nubila, terras,
 Omnia sunt nostra clausa patentque manu.
 Me penes est unum vasti custodia mundi,
 Et jus vertendi cardinis omne meum est. 120
 Quum libuit Pacem placidis emittere tectis,
 Libera perpetuas ambulat illa vias.
 Sanguine letifero totus miscebitur orbis,
 Ni teneant rigidæ condita bella seræ.
 Præsideo foribus cœli cum mitibus Horis : 125
 It, redit officio Jupiter ipse meo.
 Inde vocor Janus. Cui quum Cereale sacerdos

the World.

105-110. Compare Met. I. init.

113, 114. His back and front figure were the same, a memorial of the time when the world was in a chaotic state of confusion, all its parts being alike. This is a very silly explanation.

115. Second opinion, see below v. 135-140.

116. His office of door-keeper (Janitor) of heaven and earth.

120. The cardines of heaven, if they are meant, are the cardinal points, where according to the poetic creed of the Augustan age there were doors for the gods to go in and out of heaven. Stat. Theb. i. 158, vii. 35. x. 1. See Mythology, p. 39.

121. He represents Peace and War as persons in the custody of Janus.—Placidis as being the abode of Peace.

122. Perpetuas, long.

125. See Hom. Il. v. 749, et seq. Mythology p. 150.

127. Janus a janua.

Imponit libum farraque mixta sale,
 Nomina ridebis ; modo namque Patulcius idem,
 Et modo sacrificio Clusius ore vocor. 130
 Scilicet alterno voluit rudis illa vetustas
 Nomine diversas significare vices.
 Vis mea narrata est : causam nunc disce figuræ ;
 Jam tamen hanc aliqua tu quoque parte vides.
 Omnis habet geminas hinc atque hinc janua frontes, 135
 E quibus hæc populum spectat, at illa Larem.
 Utque sedens vester primi prope limina tecti
 Janitor egressus introitusque videt ;
 Sic ego prospicio, cœlestis janitor aulæ,
 Eoas partes Hesperiasque simul. 140
 Ora vides Hecates in tres vergentia partes,
 Servet ut in ternas compita secta vias.
 Et mihi, ne flexu cervicis tempora perdam,
 Cernere non moto corpore bina licet.
 Dixerat, et vultu, si plura requirere vellem, 145
 Se mihi difficilem non fore, fassus erat :
 Sumpsi animum, gratesque deo non territus egi,
 Verbaque sum spectans pauca locutus humum :
 Dic, age, frigore quare novus incipit annus,
 Qui melius per ver incipiendus erat ? 150

127, 128. Cereale libum, the Janual, a kind of cake offered to Janus. Festus sub. voc.---Imponit on the altar.---Far mix. sal. the Mola salsa.

129, 130. Patulcius (à pateo) the Opener, Clusius (à claudo) the Shutter; sacrificial names of Janus.

133. Vis i. e. officium.

134. From what I have said you already in part perceive it.

137. Primi tecti, the first part of the house, i. e. the entrance.

141, 142. The three-faced Hecate, (see her figure Mythology, Plate III. 2.) was placed at the triviæ, or the point where a road branched off (like the Greek  $\Upsilon$ ) so that a face looked down each road.

149, 150. The poet naturally asks why the year began in the middle of winter and not in the spring. This gives him an opportunity of introducing the following lovely description with which compare, Virg. G. II. 324, et seq. Lucret I. 5, et seq. and below III. 236 et seq. IV. 87 et seq.

Omnia tunc florent, tunc est nova temporis ætas,
 Et nova de gravidō palmite gemma tumet,
 Et modo formatis operitur frondibus arbos,
 Prodit et in summum seminis herba solum,
 Et tepidum volucres concentibus aëra mulcent,
 Ludit et in pratis luxuriatque pecus.
 Tum blandi soles, ignotaque prodit hirundo,
 Et luteum celsa sub trabe fingit opus.
 Tum patitur cultus ager, et renovatur aratro.
 Hæc anni novitas jure vocanda fuit. 160
 Quæsieram multis : non multis ille moratus,
 Contulit in versus sic sua verba duos :
 Bruma novi prima est, veterisque novissima solis :
 Principium capiunt Phœbus et annus idem.
 Post ea mirabar, cur non sine litibus esset
 Prima dies. Causam percipe, Janus ait.
 Tempora commisi nascentia rebus agendis,
 Totus ab auspicio ne foret annus iners.
 Quisque suas artes ob idem delibat agendo,
 Nec plus quam solitum testificatur opus. 170

153. Oper. frond. Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig on the authority of nine MSS. read amicitur vitibus ; four MSS. have amicitur frondibus which I should feel disposed to prefer.

154. Seminis herba appears to be the corn which had been sown and was now coming up ; one MS. reads graminis.

157. Ignota, the stranger, as the swallow returns in spring.

158. Lut. fing. opus. her clay-built nest : Fingere is the proper term when speaking of pottery or any work in clay.

163. Bruma, the winter-solstice after which the days begin to lengthen.

165-170. It was usual with all classes of the people to practice a little at their respective trades, or occupations on the Kalends of January by way of omen and not for payment. Thus the shoemaker or the fuller did some little job or another, the peasant some rural work, the pleaders skirmished a little in the forum, &c.—Delibat, i. e. leviter attingit.

- Mox ego : Cur, quamvis aliorum numina placem,
 Jane, tibi primo tura merumque fero ?
 Ut per me possis aditum, qui limina servo,
 Ad quoscumque voles, inquit, habere deos.
 At cur læta tuis dicuntur verba Kalendis, 175
 Et damus alternas accipimusque preces ?
 Tum deus incumbens baculo, quem dextra gerebat,
 Omina principiiis, inquit, inesse solent.
 Ad primam vocem timidas advertitis aures,
 Et primum visam consulit augur avem. 180
 Templata patent auresque deûm, nec lingua caducas
 Concipit ulla preces, dictaque pondus habent.
 Desierat Janus : nec longa silentia feci,
 Sed tetigi verbis ultima verba meis :
 Quid vult palma sibi rugosaque carica, dixi, 185
 Et data sub niveo candida mella cado ?
 Omen, ait, causa est, ut res sapor ille sequatur,
 Et peragat cœptum dulcis ut annus iter.
 Dulcia cur dentur, video : stipis adjice causam,
 Pars mihi de festo ne labet ulla tuo. 190

171-174. The reason is here required and given, why the Romans when about to sacrifice to any other of the gods, first made offerings to Janus. The old historian, Fabius Pictor, said it was because Janus first taught to use spelt (far) and wine in sacrifice. Macrobius says because he was the first who erected temples to the gods in Italy. Others give other reasons equally unsatisfactory.

175-182. In our own custom of wishing each other a happy new year, &c. may still be witnessed, the practice of which the poet here asks the reason. The bona verba were used for the sake of omen.—Ulla lingua, any tongue which then utters a prayer.—Caducas, unavailing.

186, 187. The strenæ (Fr. étrennes) or New Year's gift—Palma, dates, the fruit of the palm, (caryotæ) covered with gold leaf, were a part of the strenæ.—Carica the σχᾶς, or dried fig.—Cado, some MSS. read facio.

189. Stipis, pieces of money were then as now a part of the New-year's gift. Augustus himself, as inscriptions shew, did not scruple to receive money as his strenæ on the Kalends of January. See Suet. Aug. 91.

Risit, et, O quam te fallunt tua sæcula, dixit,
 Qui stipe mel sumpta dulcius esse putes !
 Vix ego Saturno quemquam regnante videbam,
 Cujus non animo dulcia lucra forent.
 Tempore crevit amor, qui nunc est summus, habendi ;
 Vix ultra, quo jam progrediatur, habet.
 Pluris opes nunc sunt, quam prisci temporis annis,
 Dum populus pauper, dum nova Roma fuit,
 Dum casa Martigenam capiebat parva Quirinum,
 Et dabat exiguum fluminis ulva torum. 200
 Jupiter angusta vix totus stabat in æde,
 Inque Jovis dextra fictile fulmen erat.
 Frondibus ornabant, quæ nunc Capitolia gemmis,
 Pascebatque suas ipse senator oves ;
 Nec pudor in stipula placidam cepisse quietem, 205
 Et fenum capiti supposuisse fuit.
 Jura dabat populis posito modo consul aratro,
 Et levis argenti lamina crimen erat.

191--218. The praises of ancient simplicity, and censure of the vices of his own times,—a common place with Ovid and the other poets.

191. Quam te fallunt, etc. How little you know the character of your own times.

193, 194. Such was hardly the case even in the golden age.

Pris. tem. an. In the years of the olden time.

199. Martigena, Mars-begotten, like terrigena, etc.

201. Angusta æde, either the temple of Jupiter Feretrius, built by Romulus on the Capitol, and which was not quite fifteen feet long, or that built by Numa, or rather any temple of those ancient times.—Vix totus stabat seems to mean that the statue was in a sitting posture, and the roof of the temple so low, that it would not admit of its being placed erect in it.

202. Fictile fulmen. The images of the gods at Rome, in those times, were of baked clay, manufactured in Etruria. Even the four-horse chariot which was placed on the Capitoline temple, when first built, was of baked clay. Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. I. 491.

208. Levis lamina is employed to express more strongly the simplicity of those days, as if the possession of even the smallest quantity of the precious metals was a crime. Fabricius, when censor, A. U. C. 478, put out of the senate Cornel. Rufinus, who had been twice consul and dictator, for having ten pounds weight of wrought silver.

At postquam Fortuna loci caput extulit hujus,
 Et tetigit summos vertice Roma deos ; 210
 Creverunt et opes, et opum furiosa cupido,
 Et, quum possideant plurima, plura volunt.
 Quærere, ut absumant, absumpta requirere certant :
 Atque ipsæ vitiis sunt alimenta vices.
 Sic, quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab unda, 215
 Quo plus sunt potæ, plus sitiuntur aquæ.
 In pretio pretium nunc est ; dat census honores,
 Census amicitias ; pauper ubique jacet.
 Tu tamen, auspiciam cur sit stipis utile, quæris,
 Curque juvent nostras æra vetusta manus. 220
 Æra dabant olim ; melius nunc omen in auro est,
 Victaque concedit prisca moneta novæ.
 Nos quoque templa juvant, quamvis antiqua probemus,
 Aurea ; majestas convenit ista deo.
 Laudamus veteres, sed nostris utimur annis ; 225
 Mos tamen est æque dignus uterque coli.
 Finierat monitus ; placidis ita rursus, ut ante,
 Clavigerum verbis alloquor ipse deum :
 Multa quidem didici : sed cur navalis in ære
 Altera signata est, altera forma biceps ? 230

210. Rome would appear to be personified in this place.

212, 213. The union of luxury and avarice, Sallust Cat. 5 and 12. They vie in gaining that they may consume, in regaining, what they have consumed, and these very alternations (of avarice and luxury) are the aliment (or support) of (these) vices.

215, 216. The usual comparison of avarice to the dropsy. See Hor. Carm. II. 2. 13.

217, 218. In pret. pret. a play on words.—Dat census, etc. Hor. Epist. I. 6. 36.

219. Cur sit. Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig, read si sit.—Quæris, means you will probably ask, or you wish to know, for the poet had not yet asked this question.—Ausp. utile, good omen.

220. Æra vetusta, the stips or as, was a copper coin. In the old times, the Romans had none but copper money. See Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. I. 449 et seq.

223. Nos, we, the gods, or I, Janus.

226. The manners of each time are suited to it, and should be followed.

227. Monitus, acc plur of the substantive. Five MSS. read monitis.

229, 230. The old Roman coin

Noscere me duplici posses in imagine, dixit,
 Ni vetus ipsa dies extenuaret opus.
 Causa ratis superest : Tuscum rate venit in amnem
 Ante pererrato falcifer orbe deus.
 Hac ego Saturnum memini tellure receptum ;        235
 Cœlitibus regnis ab Jove pulsus erat.
 Inde diu genti mansit Saturnia nomen :
 Dicta quoque est Latium terra, latente deo.
 At bona posteritas puppim servavit in ære,
 Hospitis adventum testificata dei.                240
 Ipse solum colui, cujus placidissima lævum
 Radit arenosi Tibridis unda latus.
 Hic, ubi nunc Roma est, incædua silva virebat,
 Tantaque res paucis pascua bubus erat.
 Arx mea collis erat, quem cultrix nomine nostro    245
 Nuncupat hæc ætas, Janiculumque vocat.
 Tunc ego regnabam, patiens quum terra deorum
 Esset, et humanis numina mixta locis.
 Nondum Justitiam facinus mortale fugarat :
 —Ultima de superis illa reliquit humum—        250 bore on one side the figure of a ship; on the other, a two-headed Janus.

232. The impression on the old coins was, of course, often effaced by time and use.

234. Falcifer Saturn. See Mythology, p. 465, Virg. Æn. viii. 315 et seq.

241. The Janiculum on the left, or Tuscan bank of the Tiber. See vv. 245, 246.

242. Aren. Tib. the fluvius Tib. of Horace, Carm. I. 3.—Radit, like rodet and mordet, is very appropriately applied to a stream. See Hor. Carm. I. 22, 8.

243. Virg. Æn. viii. 314. Pro-pert, iv. 1. Tibul. II. 5, 25. This contrast of the former and the present state of the Seven Hills, was a favorite theme with the poets of the Augustan age.—Incædua uncut, i. e. ancient, denoting in general a wood, which was an object of religious awe and veneration.

245. Arx. The dwelling of the princes of the heroic ages was usually on an eminence, like the castles of the feudal chiefs of the middle ages.

247, 248. In the golden age.

249, 250. See Met. I. 89, et seq. 150. Hesiod ἔργα 195. Mythology, 258—262.

Proque metu populum sine vi pudor ipse regebat ;
 Nullus erat justis reddere jura labor.
 Nil mihi cum bello, pacem postesque tuebar.
 Et clavem ostendens, Hæc, ait, arma gero.
 Presserat dora eus : tunc sic ego nostra resolvo, 255
 Voce mea voces elicente dei :
 Quum tot sint Jani, cur stas sacratus in uno,
 Hic ubi juncta foris templa duobus habes ?
 Ille manu mulcens propexam ad pectora barbam,
 Protinus CEBalii rettulit arma Tati, 260
 Utque levis custos armillis capta Sabinis
 Ad summæ Tatium duxerit arcis iter.
 Inde, velut nunc est, per quem descenditis, inquit,
 Arduus in valles et fora clivus erat.
 Et jam contigerat portam, Saturnia cujus 265
 Dempserat oppositas insidiosa seras.
 Cum, tanto veritus committere numine pugnam,
 Ipse meæ movi callidus artis opus,
 Oraque, qua pollens ope sum, fontana reclusi,
 Sumque repentinas ejaculatus aquas. 270
 Ante tamen calidis subjeci sulfura venis,
 Clauderet ut Tatio fervidus humor iter.

251. Pudor, Αἰδώς.

257, 258. The Romans gave the name of Jani to arches, like that of Templebar, in London, under which people passed from one street into another. They were always double, people entering by one and going out by the other, every one keeping to the right. Lenz, understands by Jani, in this place, temples of Janus, of which there were three at Rome.—Stas sacratus have a statue. For. duob. the fish and the ox-market. This temple was built by Duilius.

260. CEbalii, alluding to the fancied descent of the Sabines, from the Lacedæmonians, one of whose ancient kings CEBalus is said to have been. Tati,—One MS. reads Titi, which Heinsius and Gierig adopted. For this story, see Met. xiv. 771, et seq. and Liv. I. 11.

261. Levis custos Tarpeia.---
Levis, light-minded.

264. Arduus clivus, a steep path.

265. Portam, the Palatine gate. ---Saturnia, Juno.

267. Tanto numine, Scil. Juno.

268. Meæ artis, that is, of opening.

269. He caused streams of hot sulphurous water to gush out of the ground.

Cujus ut utilitas pulsis percepta Sabinis,
 Quæque fuit, tuto reddita forma loco est ;
 Ara mihi posita est parvo conjuncta sacello : 275
 Hæc adolet flammis cum strue farra suis.
 At cur pace lates, motisque recluderis armis ?
 Nec mora, quæsiti reddita causa mihi.
 Ut populo reditus pateant ad bella profecto,
 Tota patet dempta janua nostra sera. 280
 Pace fores obdo, ne qua discedere possit :
 Cæsareoque diu nomine clausus ero.
 Dixit, et, attollens oculos diversa tuentes,
 Adspexit toto quidquid in orbe fuit.
 Pax erat, et vestri, Germanice, causa triumphii 285
 Tradiderat famulas jam tibi Rhenus aquas.
 Jane, face æternos pacem pacisque ministros,
 Neve suum, præsta, deserat auctor opus.

Quod tamen ex ipsis licuit mihi discere fastis :
 Sacravere patres hoc duo templa die. 290

274. When after the repulse of the Sabines, the hot waters ceased to flow, and the place became as it was before.

275, 276. This earliest temple was exceedingly small, containing nothing but a statue of the god, five feet high. Procopius (de Bell. Goth.) describes it. Strue. The strues---was a kind of cake.

277. The well known circumstance of the temple of Janus being open in time of war, closed in time of peace.

279-281. For what is probably the true reason, see Niebuhr's Roman History, I. 287, or Mythology, p. 467.

283. Diversa tuentes, on account of his two faces.

285, 286. This was A.U.C. 770, when on the vii. Kal. Jun. Germanicus triumphed over the Catti, the Cherusci, and the Angivarii, Tacit. An. II. 41.---Fam. Rhe. ag. the river, as was usual with the poets, put for the people who dwelt on its banks, to denote that the Germans now obeyed Rome.

287. Face, fac.---Ministros pacis, Tiberius and Germanicus.

288. May not he (Germ. or Tib.) who has procured this peace for the empire, break it by resuming arms.

289, 290. The poet now ceases to discourse with Janus, and informs the reader of what he had found in the Fasti, namely, that two temples had been consecrated, at different times, on the Kalends of January.

Acceptit Phœbo Nymphaque Coronide natum
 Insula, dividua quam premit amnis aqua.
 Jupiter in parte est; cepit locus unus utrumque,
 Junctaque sunt magno templa nepotis avo.

Quid vetat et stellas, ut quæque oriturque caditque,
 Dicere? promissi pars fuit ista mei.
 Felices animos, quibus hæc cognoscere primis,
 Inque domos superas scandere cura fuit!
 Credibile est illos pariter vitiisque locisque
 Altius humanis exseruisse caput. 300
 Non Venus et vinum sublimia pectora fregit,
 Officiumve fori, militiæve labor.
 Nec levis ambitio, perfusaque gloria fuco,
 Magnarumve fames sollicitavit opum.
 Admovere oculis distantia sidera nostris, 305
 Ætheraque ingenio supposuere suo.
 Sic petitur cœlum, non ut ferat Ossan Olympus, Summaque Peliacus sidera tangat apex.

291, 292. A. U. C. 462, in consequence of a plague at Rome, by the direction of the Sybelline books, an embassy was sent to Epidaurus, and one of the serpents sacred to Æsculapius was brought to Rome; a temple was built to the god on the island in the Tiber. See Met. xv. 622---744. Ph. n. Cor. nat. Æsculapius. See Mythology, p. 384.

293, 294. In parte est, is a sharer in the day and place. The temple of Jupiter in the island was dedicated by C. Servilius Duumvir, some time after the second Punic war.

295---310. Being now for the first time about to perform the other part of his promise, namely, to note the risings and settings of the stars, he prefaces it by the praises of the astronomers. See Introd. § 1.

299, 300. As the study of astronomy elevates the mind above the terrestrial abode of men, so it raises, or should raise it, above all mean and groveling pursuits and ideas.

305. They have brought the distant stars to our eyes. Gierig, following one MS. for nostris, reads terris, a reading which Burmann approved, though he did not adopt it.

307, 308. Alluding to the Aloïdes, Otus and Ephialtes, Hom. Od. xi. 304---316. Virg. G. I. 280. Hor. Carm. III. 4, 49.

Nos quoque sub ducibus cœlum metabimur illis,
 Ponemusque suos ad stata signa dies. 310

Ergo ubi nox aderit venturis tertia Nonis,
 Sparsaque cœlesti rore madebit humus ;
 Octipedis frustra quæruntur brachia Cancri :
 Præceps occiduas ille subivit aquas.

Institerint Nonæ, missi tibi nubibus atris 315
 Signa dabunt imbres, exoriente Lyra.

Quattuor adde dies ductos ex ordine Nonis,
 Janus Agonali luce piandus erit.

Nominis esse potest succinctus causa minister,
 Hostia cœlitibus quo feriente cadit ; 320

Qui calido strictos tincturus sanguine cultros,
 Semper, Agatne, rogat ; nec nisi jussus agit.

Pars, quia non veniant pecudes, sed agantur, ab actu
 Nomen Agonalem credit habere diem.

Pars putat hoc festum priscis Agnalia dictum, 325
 Una sit ut proprio littera dempta loco.

An, quia prævisos in aqua timet hostia cultros,
 A pecoris lux est ista notata metu ?

311---314. The cosmic setting of Cancer, on the morning of the 3d January, the third before the Nones. See Introd. §. 1.

316. The cosmic rising of Lyra, which was usually attended with rain.

317, 318. On the 9th January was celebrated the festival of Janus, named the Agonia or Agonalia, the origin of which name the poet now proceeds to discuss.

319--322. One etymon was ago, to do, as the papa or officiating minister of the altar cried Agone ?

Shall I act ? before he struck the victim.—Agatne. Four of the best MSS. read Agone ; they are followed by Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig.

323, 324. A second from agor, because the victims were led to the altar. Both equally silly.

325, a third ; quasi Agnalia from Aгна.

327, 328. A fourth from the Greek ἀγωνία, ἀγωνιάζειν—In aqua, the vessels of water by the altar in which the knives were placed.

- Pars etiam, fieri solitis ætate priorum
 Nomina de ludis Craia tulisse diem. 330
- Et pecus antiquus dicebat Agonia sermo :
 Veraque iudicio est ultima causa meo.
- Utque ea nunc certa est, ita Rex placare Sacrorum Numina lanigeræ conjuge debet ovis.
- Victima*, quæ dextra cecidit victrice, vocatur ; 335
 Hostibus amotis hostia nomen habet.
- Ante, deos homini quod conciliare valeret,
 Far erat, et puri lucida mica salis.
- Nondum pertulerat lacrimatas cortice myrrhas
 Acta per æquoreas hospita navis aquas ; 340
- Tura nec Euphrates, nec miserat India costum, Nec fuerant rubri cognita fila croci.
- Ara dabat fumos, herbis contenta Sabinis,
 Et non exiguo laurus adusta sono.
- Si quis erat, factis prati de flore coronis 345
 Qui posset violas addere, dives erat.
- Hic, qui nunc aperit percussi viscera tauri,
 In sacris nullum culter habebat opus.
- Prima Ceres avidæ gavisa est sanguine porcæ,
 Ulta suas merita cæde nocentis opes. 350

329, 330. A fifth from the Greek ἀγῶνες ludii.

331. A sixth, which the poet approves, from Agonia, an old name for cattle.

333, 334. A ram was the victim offered on this day by the Rex Sacrorum.

335, 336. Two trifling etymologies. The victima, he intimates, was offered after a victory; the hostia, in time of peace, when there was no enemy, hostibus amotis. Krebs reads a motis: almost all the MSS. a domitis.

337—456. A long digression on the origin and causes of the various sacrifices offered to the gods.

338. The Mola salsa.—Pura, because it purifies or keeps from decay.

340. Hospita navis, a foreign ship.

343. Herbis Sabinis. The Savin, called by the Greeks βράθυ. Duorum generum est, says Pliny, altera tamaraci similis folio, altera cupresso.

344. A loud crackling of the leaves of the bay or laurel in the fire was a good omen.

347. This was in the golden age, before animals were slain in honor of the gods.

349. He now proceeds to ex-

- Nam sata, vere novo, teneris lactentia succis, Eruta setigeræ comperit ore suis.
 Sus dederat pœnas. Exemplo territus hujus
 Palmite debueras abstinuisse, caper.
 Quem spectans aliquis dentes in vite prementem, 355
 Talia non tacito dicta dolore dedit :
 Rode, caper, vitem : tamen huic, quum stabis ad aram,
 In tua quod spargi cornua possit, erit.
 Verba fides sequitur : noxæ tibi deditus hostis
 Spargitur affuso cornua, Bacche, mero. 360
 Culpa sui nocuit : nocuit quoque culpa capellæ.
 Quid bos, quid placidæ commeruistis oves ?
 Flebat Aristæus, quod apes cum stirpe necatas
 Viderat inceptos destituisse favos.
 Cærula quem genitrix ægre solata dolentem, 365
 Addidit hæc dictis ultima verba suis :
 Siste, puer, lacrimas ! Proteus tua damna levabit,
 Quoque modo repares, quæ periere, dabit.
 Decipiat ne te versis tamen ille figuris,
 Impediant geminas vincula firma manus. 370
 Pervenit ad vatem juvenis, resolutaque somno
 Alligat æquorei brachia capta senis.
 Ille sua faciem transformis adulterat arte :
 Mox domitus vinclis in sua membra redit,
 Oraque cærulea tollens rorantia barba, 375
 Qua, dixit, repares arte, requiris, apes,
 Obrue mactati corpus tellure juvenci :
 Quod petis a nobis, obrutus ille dabit.

plain how the altars came to be stained with the blood of animals. This was caused chiefly by the anger of the gods, on account of the mischief which they did.

357. Κῆν με φάργης ἐπὶ ρίζαν, ὄμως ἔτι καρποφορήσω Ὅσσον ἐπιπέσαι σοι, τράγε, θυομένω. Eucnus in Anthol. Gr. T. I. p. 165, Jacobs.

363. Aristæus, the son of Apollo, by the nymph Cyrene. See Virg. G. iv. 281—558. Mythology, p. 294—296. This tale, after all, gives not the reason why the ox was offered in sacrifice.

- Jussa facit pastor. Fervent examina putri
 De bove : mille animas una necata dedit. 380
 Poscit ovem fatum. Verbenas improba carpsit, Quas pia dis ruris ferre solebat anus.
 Quid tuti superest, animam quum ponat in aris
 Lanigerumque pecus, ruricolæque boves ?
 Placat equo Persis radiis Hyperiona cinctum, 385
 Ne detur celeri victima tarda deo.
 Quod semel est triplici pro virgine cæsa Dianæ,
 Nunc quoque pro nulla virgine cerva datur.
 Exta canum vidi Triviæ libare Sapæos,
 Et quicumque tuas accolit, Hæme, nives. 390
 Cæditur et rigido custodi ruris asellus.
 Causa pudenda quidem est, huic tamen apta deo.
 Festa corymbiferi celebrabat Græcia Bacchi,
 Tertia quæ solito tempore bruma refert.
 Dî quoque cultores gelidi venere Lyçæi, 395
 Et quicumque joci non alienus erat :

381. Some popular legend probably assigned this silly cause. — Verbena, herbs gathered in a sacred place.

385. Persis, Persia.—Hyperiona, the Persian Mithras, the presiding deity of the Sun, identified by the Greeks with their god Helius, also called Hyperion.

387. Quod, because; given by Heinsius from the best MSS. others read quæ.—Trip. Dianæ, identifying her with Hecate. See above, v. 41.—Virgine, Iphigenia.

389. Sapæos, a people of Thrace. Herod. vii. 110. Most MSS. have Sabæos, or Saphæos, but incorrectly.—Vidi. When Ovid was going into exile, at Tomi, A. U. C. 763, he passed through Thrace.

391. Custodi ruris, Priapus. This god who was chiefly worshipped at Lampsacus, was said to be the offspring of Bacchus and Venus. See Mythology, p. 205.

393. Festa, etc. the Trieterides, celebrated once in every three years.—Corymbiferi, Bacchus was frequently represented crowned with bunches of ivy-berries. Some MSS. read racemiferi.—Celebrabat, Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig, read celebrabas, on the authority of two MSS.

395. Di cultores Lyçæi. Scilicet the Pans and Satyrs, the gods of Arcadia. Gierig, on the authority of some of the best MSS. reads Lyçæi. For Pan, etc. see Mythology, p. 198---205.

Panes, et in Venerem Satyrorum prona juvenus,
 Quæque colunt æmnes solaque rura deæ.
 Venerat et senior pando Silenus asello,
 Quique rubro pavidas inguine terret aves. 400
 Dulcia qui dignum nemus in convivia nacti

 Pars aderant positis arte manumque comis.
 Illa super suras tunicam collecta ministrat,
 Altera dissuto pectus aperta sinu.
 Exserit hæc humerum, vestem trahit illa per herbas,
 Impediunt teneros vincula nulla pedes. 410
 Hinc aliæ Satyris incendia mitia præbent :
 Pars tibi, qui pinu tempora nexa geris.
 Te quoque, inexstinctæ Silene libidinis, urunt.
 Nequitia est, quæ te non sinit esse senem.
 At ruber hortorum deus et tutela Priapus 415
 Omnibus ex illis Lotide captus erat.
 Hanc cupit, hanc optat : sola suspirat in illa :
 Signaque dat nutu, sollicitatque notis.
 Fastus inest pulchris, sequiturque superbia formam.
 Irrisum vultu despicit illa suo. 420
 Nox erat, et, vino somnum faciente, jacebant
 Corpora diversis victa sopore locis.

398. The Næides and other nymphs.

400. Priapus.

403. Parce is to be joined with miscendas.

407. That is, succincta.

410. Vincula nulla, they were barefoot. It is to be recollected that in the heroic ages, after which the poets modelled the life of the gods, the attendants at meals were females.

412. Pan.

414. Nequitia, lust.

420. She evinces her haughty contempt of him by her looks.

- Lotis herbosa sub acernis ultima ramis,
 Sicut erat lusu fessa, quievit humo.
 Surgit amans, animamque tenens vestigia furtim 425
 Suspenso digitis fert taciturna gradu.
 Ut tetigit niveæ secreta cubilia Nymphæ,
 Ipsa sui flatus ne sonet aura, cavet.
 Et jam finitima corpus librabat in herba :
 Illa tamen multi plena soporis erat. 430
 Gaudet, et, a pedibus tracto velamine, vota
 Ad sua felici cœperat ire via.
 Ecce rudens rauco Sileni vector asellus
 Intempestivos edidit ore sonos.
 Territa consurgit Nymphæ, manibusque Priapum 435
 Rejjicit, et fugiens concitat omne nemus.
 Morte dedit pœnas auctor clamoris : et hinc est
 Hellespontiaco victima grata deo. 440
 Intactæ fueratis aves, solatia ruris,
 Assuetum silvis innocuumque genus,
 Quæ facitis nidos, quæ plumis ova fovetis,
 Et facili dulces editis ore modos.
 Sed nihil ista juvant, quia linguæ crimen habetis, 445
 Dîque putant mentes vos aperire suas.
 Nec tamen id falsum : nam, dîs ut proxima quæque,
 Nunc penna veras, nunc datis ore notas.

423. Ultima, the most remote.

425. Animam, his breath.

426. Digitis scilicet pedis, his toes.
 A beautiful description of one stealing on tip-toe.

436. Omne nemus, all the gods in the grove.

440. Hellesp. Deo. Priapus, the god of Lampsacus, on the Hellespont.

445. Linguæ crimen. Still ascribing a revengeful character to the gods, he supposes them to be pleased with the sacrifice of the birds, who revealed their intentions to mankind.

447. Dis ut proxima. Flying high towards heaven. "Ye birds, That singing up to heaven gate ascend."—MILTON.

448. Penna, the Præpetes; ore, the oscines, as they were styled in the language of augury.

- Tuta diu volucrum proles tum denique cæsa est,
 Juveruntque deos indicis exta sui. 450
- Ergo sæpe suo conjux abducta marito
 Uritur in calidis alba columbia focis.
- Nec defensa juvant Capitolia, quo minus anser

- Te quoque lux eadem, Turni soror, æde recepit,
 Hic ubi Virginea campus obitur aqua.

453. See Liv. v. 47, for this well-known story.

454. Inachi lauta. Isis the Egyptian deity, supposed to be the same with Io, the daughter of the river-god, Inachus. See Met. I. 747, et seq. Mythology, 367.—Lauta, dainty, as lautioribus cibis utens, such as the livers of geese. Isis was much worshiped at Rome at this time.

455. Deæ Nocti. A cock was sacrificed to Night, as being odious to her.—Ales, like the Greek ορνίς, the bird κατ' ἐξοχήν.

456. Tepidum diem, the dawn, warm after the chill of the night.—Provocat, calls forth.

457. The cosmic rising of the Dolphin, on the ninth of January.

459. Postera lux, the tenth of January, which, according to the poet, was the bruna, or middle of winter. Columella and Ptolemy place it on the 4th January, the day before the Nones; Pliny, xviii. 5, makes it the viii. Kal. Jan. or 25th December.

461. Aurora. Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig read nupta, on the authority of seven MSS.

462. The Carmentalia, on the 10th, or III. Id. of January.—Arcad. deæ. Carmenta, the mother of Evander; her altar was at the Carmental gate, at the foot of the Capitol.

463. Turni soror, Juturna. See Virg. Æn. xii. 134, et seq.

464. The temple of Juturna stood in the Campus Martius, by the Aqua Virgo, which Agrippa had brought thither on account of its excellence.

- Unde petam causas horum moremque sacrorum? 465
 Dirigat in medio quis mea vela freto?
 Ipsa mone, quæ nomen habes a carmine ductum,
 Propositoque fave, ne tuus erret honos.
 Orta prior Luna,—de se si creditur ipsi—
 A magno tellus Arcade nomen habet. 470
 Hic fuit Evander, qui, quamquam clarus utroque,
 Nobilior sacræ sanguine matris erat,
 Quæ, simul ætherios animo conceperat ignes,
 Ore dabat vero carmina plena dei.
 Dixerat hæc, nato motus instare sibique, 475
 Multaque præterea, tempore nacta fidem.
 Nam juvenis vera nimium cum matre fugatus
 Deserit Arcadium Parrhasiumque larem.
 Cui genitrix flenti, Fortuna viriliter, inquit,
 —Siste, puer, lacrimas!—ista ferenda tibi est. 480
 Sic erat in fatis, nec te tua culpa fugavit,
 Sed deus; offenso pulsus es urbe deo.

 Est aliquid magnis crimen abesse malis.
 Conscia mens ut cuique sua est, ita concipit intra 485
 Pectora pro facto spemque metumque suo.
 Nec tamen ut primus mære mala talia passus;
 Obruit ingentes ista procella viros.

467. Quæ nomen, etc. Scil Carmenta.

496, 470. Orta, etc. The Arcadians called themselves προσελήνοιοι as having existed before the Moon.—Tellus, scil gens.—Arcade, Arcas, the son of Jupiter and Callisto. See Met. II. 401, et seq. Mythology, p. 387.

471. Evander was the son of Mercury and Carmenta. According to Servius, on the Æneis, his father was Echemus, and I am inclined to think that Ovid followed this last genealogy.

473. Ætherios ignes, the inspiration of the god.

474. Plena may be joined either with carmina, or with the nominative to dabat.

475. Motus, civil discord.

476. Time verified her predictions.

478. Parrhasium, for Arcadian, part for the whole. Evander dwelt at Pallantium.

- Passus idem, Tyriis qui quondam pulsus ab oris

491. Iason is always a trisyllable. For Tydeus and Jason, see Mythology under their names.

493. "Ἀπας μὲν ἀῆρ ἀιετῶ περᾶσιμος, Ἀπασα δὲ χθῶν ἀνδρὶ γενναίῳ πατρὶς. Eurip. frag. Comp. Hor. Carm. II. 9.

494. Vacuo, etc. the air.

495. Hor. Carm. II. 10. 15.

498. Hesperiam tenet. He reaches Italy, not, as Gierig understands it, he held his course for Italy.

500. Sailed up against the stream.---Tuscis, as flowing by Etruria.

501. There was a place in the Campus Martius, named Terentum, where was an altar of Dis and Proserpine, at which secular games were celebrated. I rather incline to think with Gierig, that the vada Terenti was a part of the river near the Terentum.

502. The abodes of the Aborigines.

503---508. The furor divinus comes over her; her hair is disheveled; her countenance becomes stern; by signs she directs the steersman to turn the ship to the land; she is hardly restrained from jumping out of the vessel.

—the flattery of the poet.

511. Hospita, stranger.

515--518. The future greatness of Rome.

519. The fleet of Æneas. All the following events occur in the last six books of the Æneis.

520. Femina, Lavinia.

521. Pallas, the son of Evander, slain by Turnus, and avenged by Æneas.

523, 524. The future conquest of Greece by the Romans. Virg.
Æn. I. 283.

525. Troy was walled by Neptune. Eight MSS. read mania for Pergama.

526. Num, etc. Are those ashes
(of Troy) nevertheless not higher than the whole world? i. e. Will not Rome spring from them?

527. A tradition, followed by Cato, Strabo, Dio Cassius, and others, related that Anchises came to Italy. Perhaps Ovid followed the same tradition.

528. According to Dionysius.
(I. 67,) the temple of the Penates, whom Æneas brought from Troy, was near that of Vesta. Others (Tacit. An. xv. 41) thought that they were in the temple of that goddess.

Tempus erit, quum vos orbemque tuebitur idem,

 De numero tauros sentit abesse duos.

529. Julius Cæsar who was Pontifex Maximus, and was deified after his death. Some think it is Augustus who is meant.

531. Augustos seems to be equivalent to Cæsares.

532. Hanc domum, scil : the Cæsarian.

533. Tiberius, by adoption the son of Augustus, and grandson of Julius Cæsar, both of whom were deified. His affected reluctance to accept the imperial dignity is well known. Tac. An. I. init.

534. Pondera, the weight of empire.

536. Augusta Julia. Livia, the wife of Augustus, adopted by his testament into the Julian family. This prediction of the poet was accomplished by the emperor Claudius, who placed Livia among the gods.

539. Exsul, Evander.

540. The poet had probably his own miserable place of exile in view.

542. Arcade, Evander.

543. Hercules, when driving the oxen of Geryon from the isle of Erythea. See Mythology, p. 320.

545. For this adventure with Cacus, see Virg. Æn. viii. 190, et seq. Liv. I. 7.---Tegeæa, Arcadian.

Nulla videt taciti quærens vestigia furti :
 Traxerat aversos Cacus in antra ferox ; 550
 Cacus, Aventinæ timor atque infamia silvæ,
 Non leve finitimis hospitibusque malum.
 Dira viro facies, vires pro corpore, corpus
 Grande, pater monstri Mulciber hujus erat ;
 Proque domo longis spelunca recessibus ingens, 555

 Ora super postes affixaque brachia pendent,
 Squalidaque humanis ossibus albet humus.
 Servata male parte boum Jove natus abibat :
 Mugitum rauco furta dedere sono. 560
 Accipio revocamen, ait, vocemque secutus
 Impia per silvas ultor ad antra venit.
 Ille aditum fracti præstruxerat objice montis :
 Vix juga movissent quinque bis illud onus.
 Nititur hic humeris,—cælum quoque sederat illis— 565
 Et vastum motu collabefactat onus.
 Quod simul evulsum est, fragor æthera terruit ipsum,
 Ictaque subsedit pondere molis humus.

 Occupat Alcides, adductaque clava trinodis 575
 Ter quater adversi sedit in ore viri.

553. Pro corpore, suited to his body.

559. Servata male, having ill kept, i. e. lost.

560. Furta, the stolen oxen.

564. Opus. The Greeks used their ἔργον in the same sense. Homer says that twenty-two waggons (juga) would not have moved the rock with which Polyphemus closed the mouth of his cave.

565. When he supported the heavens for Atlas. See Mythology, p. 324.

575. Occupat, attacks him. Jussit quatuor admoveri canes, qui

Ille cadit, mixtosque vomit cum sanguine fumos, celeriter occupavere feram. Curtius, ix.—Clava trinodis, his knotty club. It was of the wood of the oleaster (κότινος) or wild olive.—Trinodis, a definite for an indefinite.

581, 582. The Ara Maxima of Hercules was in the Forum Boarium. According to Virgil, it was built by Evander.

583, 584. The apotheosis of Hercules.

587, 588. The usual sacrifice to Jupiter on the Ides, was a lamb, (see above, v. 57,) here it is a wether.

589. On the Ides of January, A. U. C. 727, Octavianus, after a speech full of hypochri-tical moderation, restored to the Senate and People such of the provinces as were in a state of tranquillity, retaining those which were still disturbed.—The Senate, on account of this, decreed him the title of Augustus.

591. Generosa atria, the halls of the different noble families at Rome.—Ceras, the waxen images of their ancestors, under which were inscribed their titles and actions.

593. Africa etc. P. Cornelius Scipio Africanus.—Isauras. P. Servilius Isauricus.

594. Cretum. Q. Cæcilius Metellus Creticus.

Hunc Numidæ faciunt, illum Messana superbum ; 595
 Ille Numantina traxit ab urbe notam.
 Et mortem et nomen Druso Germania fecit.
 Me miserum, virtus quam brevis illa fuit !
 Si petat a victis, tot sumat nomina Cæsar,
 Quot numero gentes maximus orbis habet. 600
 Ex uno quidam celebres, aut torquis adeptæ,
 Aut corvi titulos auxiliaris habent.
 Magne, tuum nomen rerum mensura tuarum est :
 Sed qui te vicit, nomine major erat.
 Nec gradus est ultra Fabios cognominis ullus ; 605
 Illa domus meritis Maxima dicta suis.
 Sed tamen humanis celebrantur honoribus omnes :
 Hic socium summo cum Jove nomen habet.
 Sancta vocant augusta patres : augusta vocantur
 Tempia sacerdotum rite dicata manu. 610

595. Numidæ. another Q. Cæcilius Metellus, the predecessor of Marius, in the war against Jugurtha.--Messana. Claudius Caudex was sent to the aid of the Mamertines in Messana. He relieved the town, but derived no title from it. His statue and deeds, however, stood in the Atrium of the Claudii.

596. Numantina. Scipio Æmilianus.

597. Druso. Drusus, the brother of Tiberius, and father of Germanicus, to whom the poem is dedicated, died in consequence of a broken leg, caused by his horse falling on him in the summer-camp on the Rhine, A. U. C. 745. The senate decreed the title of Germanicus to him and his children.

598. Quam brevis. How short-lived ! Paternulus speaks in high terms of the virtues of Drusus.

602. M. Valerius Corvinus. Liv. vii. 26.

603. Magne. Cn. Pompeius Magnus.

604. C. Julius Cæsar.

605, 606. When Fabius (A.U.C. 449.) divided the lower class of people into the four tribes named the Urbanas he was given the title of Maximus, which adhered to his family.---Nec gradus ullus, of comparison, playing on the magne of v. 603.

608. Hic. Augustus.

609. The Greeks rendered Augustus by σεβαστός, from σέβω, to venerate. This name was considered beyond any human title.

610. Sacerd. manu. The Pontifex, when dedicating a temple, held one of the door-posts.

Hujus et augurium dependet origine verbi,
 Et quodcumque sua Jupiter auget ope.
 Augeat imperium nostri ducis, augeat annos :
 Protegat et vestras querna corona fores.
 Auspicibusque deis tanti cognominis heres 615
 Omine suscipiat, quo pater, orbis onus.

Respiciet Titan actas ubi tertius Idus,
 Fient Parrhasiæ sacra relata deæ.
 Nam prius Ausonias matres carpenta vehebant :
 —Hæc quoque ab Evandri dicta parente reor— 620
 Mox honor eripitur, matronaque destinat omnis
 Ingratos nulla prole novare viros ;
 Neve daret partus, ictu temeraria cæco
 Visceribus crescens excutiebat onus.
 Corripuisse patres ausas immitia nuptas, 625
 Jus tamen exemptum restituuisse, ferunt.
 Binaque nunc pariter Tegeæa sacra parenti
 Pro pueris fieri virginibusque jubent.
 Scorteæ non illi fas est inferre sacello,
 Ne violent puros exanimata focos. 630
 Si quis amas ritus veteres, assiste precanti :
 Nomina percipies non tibi nota prius.

611. I do not think, with Gierig, that the poet derives augurium from augustus. It appears to me that he deduces them both from augeo. Loca quoque religiosa et in quibus augurato quid consecratur augusta dicantur ab auctu vel ab avium gestu gustu. Suet. Aug. 7.

614. An oak-leaf garland, the symbol of protection, hung over the door of the Palatium; a laurel, the emblem of victory, stood on each side.

615. Tiberius, who bore the name of Augustus.

617--636. The Carmentalia were repeated on the 18th Kal. Feb. or the 15th of the month.

617. Actas, scil. exactas, past.

619. Matres. scil. Matronæ.---
Carpenta, the carpentum, was a covered two-wheel carriage. The etymon given by the poet is unworthy of attention.

629. Scorteæ, things made of skin or leather.

631. Precanti, by any one who is praying.

Porrima placantur Postvertaque, sive sorores,
 Sive fugæ comites, Mænali Nympha, tuæ.
 Altera, quod porro fuerat, cecinisse putatur : 635
 Altera, versurum postmodo quidquid erat.

Candida te niveo posuit lux proxima templo,
 Qua fert sublimes alta Moneta gradus :
 Nunc bene prospicies Latiam, Concordia, turbam :
 Nunc te sacratæ restituere manus. 640
 Furius antiquum populi superator Etrusci
 Voverat, et voti solverat ante fidem.

633. Porrima. This goddess is so named only in this place, and by Servius, on Æn. viii. 336. Macrobius (Sat. I. 7.) calls her Antevorta. Varro, apud. A. Gellius (N. A. xvi. 6.) speaking of women who had a difficult labour, says, hujus periculi deprecandi causa aræ statutæ sunt Romæ duabus Carmentibus; quarum altera Postverta nominata est, Prosa (alii Prorsa) altera; a recti perversique partus et potestate et nomine. We have here the true meaning of this feast of the Carmentalia, about which our poet has been puzzling.

634. Nympha, scil. Carmenta. Virg. Æn. viii. 336. Thus Homer, (Il. iii. 130,) calls Helen a nymph. See Mythology, p. 206, note. For nympha, in this place, eight MSS. read diva.

635. Porro, usually denotes the future; in this place, it evidently denotes the past. Burmann knows no other instance of its occurrence in this sense.

637. On the following day, the xvii. Kal. Feb. the most ancient of the five temples of Concord at Rome, had been vowed, A. U. C. 386, by L. Furius Camillus. It was repaired and dedicated anew by Tiberius, A. U. C. 762. The temple of Juno Moneta (Warner) stood on the site of the house of Manlius on the Capitol; a flight of 100 steps led from the temple of Concord up to it.—Candida lux, auspicious day, as being that on which the temple of Concord was dedicated.—Niveo, as being built of marble.

639. The temple being on the side of the Capitol over the Forum.

640. Socratæ manus of Tiberius. Every thing belonging to the emperor was sacratum and sanctum.

641. Antiquum, scil. templum? Neapolis, I think is wrong, in taking antiquum to be used adverbially for olim, and joining it with pop. sup. Etr. Burmann, as he enclosed it in brackets, also understood it adverbially. Antiquum, which is unquestionably the right reading, is that of only three MSS. The others read antiquam or antiquus, or antiqui or antiquo.—Populi, etc. merely a designation of Furius, and has nothing to do with the occasion of the vow, —Ante, olim.

643. On the occasion of the Licinian rogations. Niebuhr, on this subject, prefers the authority of Ovid to that of Livy, who says, Prope ad secessionem.---venit.

644. Opes, the Plebeians.

645. A compliment to Tiberius. The first temple was built in consequence of civil discord; the second, in consequence of victories gained over the most formidable foes of Rome.—Passos, etc. Germany (i. e. the Germans) holds forth her dishevelled locks, vanquished by the Roman arms, under thine auspices. Jam tibi captivos mittet Germania crines; Culta triumphatæ munere gentis eris, says our poet (Am. I. 14,) to a lady, as the false hair used at Rome mostly came from Germany. Nations, when conquered, were said porrigere, to surrender, those things for which they were distinguished. Thus he says, (Trist. II. 227.) Nunc porrigit arcus Parthus eques timida captaque manu, see below, V. 593. It is therefore supposed, that a condition of the peace was the delivery of a large quantity of hair for the use of the Roman wig-makers. There is nothing very sublime in this.

646. Dux, Tiberius.

647. Libasti, You have offered.

648. Quam colis ipse, by your love of peace.

649. Hæc. scil. templa. This place is very obscure. Some MSS. read hanc.---Rebus, the commentators say, by the harmony in which she lived with Augustus.—Ara, by an altar, which they suppose she placed in the temple of Concord.

650. Magni Jovis, Augustus, the vicegerent of Jove on earth.

651. The passage of the sun into Aquarius, the xvi. Kal. Feb. ---Hæc. scil. tempora. The first editions, and two MSS. read transieris. Two other MSS. read transierit, which I should incline to prefer, and make hæc refer to dies or to lux, v. 637. Heinsius would read Nox, or Lux ubi transierit.

653, 654. On the 10th Kal. Feb. Lyra sets heliacally.—Oriens, scil. Sol.

 Pagus agat festum ; pagum lustrate, coloni,
 Et date paganis annua liba focis. 670

655, 656. The following day (Jan. 24,) Regulus, the bright star in the breast of the Lion, sets cosmically. The poet is mistaken here ; according to Columella, he sets on the 27th of January.

657, 658. The Romans (see Macrob. Sat. I.) had two kinds of festivals, the Stativæ and the Conceptivæ. The former were fixed to certain days, and were marked in the Fasti ; such were the Agonalia, Carmentalia, Lupercalia, etc. : the latter were annually given out, (indicebantur) for certain, or even uncertain days, by the magistrates or priests ; such were the Feriæ Latinæ, the Paganalia, Sementinæ, Compitalia, etc. Seven MSS. read Sementinæ ; seven read Sementiva ; twelve Sementita. Sementinæ (seu væ) feriæ : dies is appellatus a Sementi, quod Satio- nis causa susceptæ. Varro. L. L. V.

661. The time was well known, but not the exact day.

669. Pagus. Servius Tullius divided the Roman territory into Pagi. In each Pagus was an altar, on which a common sacrifice was offered every year by the Pagani, or people of the Pagus. This festival was called the Paganalia. The origin of our word Pagan, is curious. As the country people held out longest against Christianity, Pagan became equivalent to heathen, and we find it at last applied to Mohammedans ! —Lustrate, by leading the victims round it. See Virg. G. I. 339, et seq. Ovid here follows Tibullus, Eleg. II. 1.

670. Liba, πέλανοι, cakes brought by the different families of the pagus.

LIBER II.

JANUS habet finem : cum carmine crescit et annus.

Alter ut hinc mensis, sic liber alter eat.

Nunc primum velis, elegi, majoribus itis :

Exiguum, memini, nuper eratis opus.

Ipse ego vos habui faciles in amore ministros, 5

Quum lusit numeris prima juventa suis.

Idem sacra cano, signataque tempora fastis.

Ecquis ad hæc illuc crederet esse viam ?

Hæc mea militia est : ferimus, quæ possumus, arma,

Dextraque non omni munere nostra vacat. 10

1. Crescit. Some MSS. read crescat.

2. Ut hinc. Most MSS. read ut hic; three of the best ut it. The present reading is the conjecture of Heinsius.

3, 4. The Elegiac measure which is employed in this poem, was usually appropriated to subjects which had not much dignity in them. Such had been his preceding compositions in this species of verse.

5. Alluding to his Amores, Ars

Amandi, etc.--Faciles, ready, compliant.

6. When my early youth sported in numbers adapted to it.

7, 8. I now sing the festivals, etc. Would any one think that idle love-verses would have led the way to such a theme?

9, 10. Militia, dextra, munere, all words relating to military service. See Hor. Car. iv. 1.---Ferimus, most MSS. read gerimus.---Vacat. Seven have caret.

Si mihi non valido torquentur pila lacerto,
 Nec bellatoris terga premuntur equi,
 Nec galea tegimur, nec acuto cingimur ense :
 —His habilis telis quilibet esse potest—
 At tua prosequimur studioso pectore, Cæsar, 15
 Nomina, per titulos ingredimurque tuos.
 Ergo ades, et placido paulum mea munera vultu
 Respice, pacando si quid ab hoste vacas.
Februa Romani dixere piamina patres :
 Nunc quoque dant verbo plurima signa fidem. 20
 Pontifices ab Rege petunt et Flamine lanas,
 Quis veteri lingua Februa nomen erat ;
 Quæque capit lictor domibus purgamina certis,
 Torrida cum mica farra, vocantur idem.
 Nomen idem ramo, qui cæsus ab arbore pura 25
 Casta sacerdotum tempora fronde tegit.
 Ipse ego Flaminicam poscentem februa vidi :
 Februa poscenti pinea virga data est.
 Denique quodcumque est, quo pectora nostra pientur,

14. Habilis, fit. Any one can be a soldier.

16. Nomina, i. e. deeds of name. --- Titulos, is employed in the same manner.

17, 18. He continues the adulatory style in which he at first addressed him.

19. The poet now begins an inquiry into the origin of the name of the second month.---Februum: Sabinis purgamentum et in sacris nostris verbum. Varro de L. L. V. ---Piamina, the καθαρμοὶ of the Greeks, whatever was used in purification, and in removing the ἄχος, or piacular guilt. Five MSS. read piacula, which signifies the same thing.

20. Scil. the word is still frequently used in this sense.

21. Rege, the Rex Sacrorum.---Flamine, the Flamen Dialis.---Lanas. As Clemens Alexandrinus enumerates the ἑρτα πύρρα among the articles used by the Gentiles in purification Neapolis conjectures that this wool was red.

23. Lictor, of the Flamen Dialis.---Sertis, one MS. cernis, three ternis, one acernis. Heinsius proposes tersis.---Domibus, the house of the Flamen.

24. The Mola Salsa.

25. Arbore pura, the pine, as making pure.

27. Flaminicam, the wife of the Flamen Dialis. Some MSS. read Flaniniam or Flamineam.

Hoc apud intonsos nomen habebat avos. 30
 Mensis ab his dictus, secta quia pelle Luperci
 Omne solum lustrant, idque piamen habent ;
 Aut quia placatis sunt tempora pura sepulcris,
 Tunc quum ferales præteriere dies,
 Omne nefas omnemque mali purgamina causam 35
 Credebant nostri tollere posse senes.
 Græcia principium moris fuit. Illa nocentes
 Impia lustratos ponere facta putat.
 Actoriden Peleus, ipsum quoque Pelea Phoci
 Cæde per Hæmonias solvit Acastus aquas. 40
 Vectam frenatis per inane draconibus Ægeus
 Credulus immerita Phasida juvit ope.
 Amphiaræides Naupactoo Acheloo,
 Solve nefas, dixit. Solvit et ille nefas.
 Ah nimium faciles, qui tristia crimina cædis 45
 Fluminea tolli posse putetis aqua !

30. Intonsos, i. e. priscos, anti-quos. Intonsus Numa, below V.
 264. Intonsus Cato. Hor. Car.
 II. 15. There were no barbers at Rome, till A. U. C. 454.

33. See below, v. 433, et seq.
 ---Tempora pura, because the guilt and evil had been removed.

37. In the mode usual in his time, Ovid assigns a Grecian origin to this opinion. It was however common to Greece, Italy, and the East, and was a part of the Law of Moses. Homer makes mention of it more than once.
 Thus when Ulysses had slain the suitors, he says to Euryclea, Οἷσε θέειον ἡρηῦν κακῶν ἄκος, οἷσε δέ μοι πῦρ, ὄφρα θεειώσω μέγαρον.
 According to the legend, (See Mythology, p. 94.) Apollo himself required purification for having slain the Python.

39. Actoriden, Menætius the father of Patroclus who had slain by accident Cleonymus or Æanes.

--Pelea. Telamon and Peleus slew their brother Phocus. Peleus fled to Thessaly to Actor, or to Eurytion, the son of Actor, by whom he was purified, and having had the misfortune to kill his benefactor, he was purified by Acastus. The poet evidently makes a mistake here. See Mythology, pp. 279 and 414.

41. Ægeus received Medea when she fled after the murder of her children.—Credulus, too easily believing.—Phasida, Colchian.
 See Mythology, 279, 352.

43. Amphiaræides. Alcæon, the son of Amphiaræus, put his mother Eriphyle to death. Mythology,
 p. 434.—Naupactoo scil. Ætolian.
 Naupactus is in Ætolia, but not near the Achelous.

45. Faciles, credulous.

Sed tamen—antiqui ne nescius ordinis erres—

Primus, ut est, Jani mensis et ante fuit.

Qui sequitur Janum, veteris fuit ultimus anni ;

Tu quoque sacrorum, Termine, finis eras. 50

Primus enim Jani mensis, quia janua prima est ;

Qui sacer est imis Manibus, imus erat.

Postmodo creduntur spatio distantia longo

Tempora bis quini continuasse Viri.

Principio mensis Phrygiæ contermina Matri 55

Sospita delubris dicitur aucta novis.

Nunc ubi sint illis, quæris, sacrata Kalendis

Templa deæ : longo procubuere die.

Cetera ne simili caderent labefacta ruina,

Cavit sacrati provida cura ducis, 60

Sub quo delubris sentitur nulla senectus.

Nec satis est homines, obligat ille deos.

Templorum positor, templorum sancte repostor,

Sit superis, opto, mutua cura tui.

Dent tibi cœlestes, quos tu cœlestibus, annos, 65

Proque tua maneant in statione domo.

47--54. This passage is hard to understand. If in the year of Numa Pompilius, which is the one spoken of, January was the first month, how could February be the last? Perhaps, though this is at variance with v. 48, the poet here, as in I. 43, 44, only means that Numa added two months to the Romulian year, in which case February would be the last. See Introductio. § 2.—Tu quoque, etc. The intercalation was made after the Terminalia, that is, the 23d of February.—Postmodo, etc. this regulation of the Decemvirs, is spoken of no where else.—Tempora continuasse. “Efficisse ut hi duo menses, nullo interposito, se exciperent, cum antea distarent longo spatio decem ipsis mensibus interjectis,” Gierig. As the year is a circle, must not the two ends have joined?

55. The poet here catches at the opportunity of praising Tiberius. The temple of Juno Sospita, near that of the Mother of the Gods on the Palatine hill, had been dedicated on the Kalends of February, but was now fallen.

62. This is going the utmost length of flattery.

66. Man. in stat. Keep guard. A military phrase.

Tum quoque vicini lucus celebratur Asyli,
 Qua petit æquoreaꝝ advena Tibris aquas.
 Ad penetrale Numæ, Capitolinumque Tonantem,

67. Romulus opened the Asylum on the Kalends of February, that is, on the day of his year corresponding thereto.

69. Penetræ Numæ. The temple of Vesta, in the Atrium of which, called the Regia, Numa resided.

70. The Capitolium and the Arx were two parts of the same hill. Liv. III. 18, V. 47.

74. Purpureis, bright. This is a usual sense of this word.

76. The cosmic setting of Lyra.

77. The acronych setting of Leo.

79. On the third of February, the Dolphin sets heliacally.—Cælatum, set or embossed.

81. Alluding to the aid which the Dolphin gave Neptune in his courtship of Amphitrite.

82. This story of Arion is told by Herodotus, I. 23.

84. Et seq. comparing him to Orpheus.

 Captaque erat lyricis Ausonis ora sonis.
 Inde domum repetens puppim conscendit Arion, 95
 Atque ita quæsitâ arte ferebat opes.
 Forsitam, infelix, ventos undamque timebas ;
 At tibi nave tua tutius æquor erat.

 Quid tibi cum gladio ? dubiam rege, navita, pinum.
 Non sunt hæc digitis arma tenenda tuis.
 Ille metu pavidus, Mortem non deprecor, inquit :
 Sed liceat sumpta pauca referre lyra.

91. Cynthia. Diana, the moon.
101, 102. An exclamation of the poet.

107. A long trailing robe of the richest purple, the dibaphe.

109, 110. This distich was justly suspected by Heinsius. There is a corruption in it, which it is now, perhaps, impossible to cure. Burmann understands by penna, an arrow; others think it denotes a hard feather which the swan gets when old.—Trajectus. Four MSS. read Threicius.

112. Describing the effect of his plunge into the sea.

115. Pretium vehendi, Scil. carmen.

Dî pia facta vident ; astris delphina recepit

126. Heroi pedis. Hexameters.

127. On the nones of February, A. U. C. 752, Valerius Messala addressed Augustus in the senate-house in these words, Senatus te consentiens cum Pop. Rom. consti-

128. Eques. Ovid was of the equestrian order.

132. The πάτηρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε of Homer, the Divum pater atque hominum rex of Virgil.

134. Comparing the paltry defences erected by the first founder of Rome, with the strength of the city under its second founder, as Augustus was styled.

135, 136. See Livy, I. Romulus was only formidable to the little states around his town ; Augustus reduced both the East and the West under the sway of Rome.

- Tu breve nescio quid victæ telluris habebas :
 Quodcumque est alto sub Jove, Cæsar habet.
 Tu rapis, hic castas duce se jubet esse maritas.
 Tu recipis luco, submovet ille nefas. 140
 Vis tibi grata fuit, florent sub Cæsare leges ;

 Adspicies geminos exseruisse pedes.

139. The rape of the Sabines is opposed to the laws against adultery, etc. of Augustus.---Duce se, by his own example.

140. The Asylum opposed to the vigorous administration of justice by Augustus.

142. The favourite title of Augustus and of Tiberius was Princeps. scil. Senatus ; διοπότης μὲν τῶν δοῦλων, αυτοκράτωρ δὲ τῶν στρατιωτῶν, τῶν δὲ ἑὴ λοιπῶν πρόκριτος (Princeps) εἰμί, was a usual saying of Tiberius.

143. There may be an allusion here to Augustus' forgiveness of Cinna and others.

144. Mars and Julius Cæsar.

145. The cosmic rising of Aquarius.---Puer. Idæus, Ganymedes, son of Tros, king of Troy, fabled in aftertimes to have been made this constellation.

146. Liquidas, means clear and not liquid.---Nectare, as being cup-bearer of the gods.

149. Spring began on the 9th of February, the V. Idus.

153. On the III. Idus Arctophylax, or Bootes, rises acronychally.

- Inter Hamadryadas jaculatricemque Dianam 155

155---192. The poet had already told this tale. Met. II. 401---530. See also Mythology, p. 387.

Et gemuit : gemitus verba parentis erant.
 Hanc puer ignarus jaculo fixisset acuto,
 Ni foret in superas raptus uterque domus.
 Signa propinqua micant. Prior est, quam dicimus Arcton;

 E quīs dux fieri quilibet aptus erat. 200
 Carmentis portæ dextro via proxima Jano est.
 Ire per hanc noli, quisquis es, omen habet.

193. The Faunalia were celebrated on the Ides. The island in the Tiber contained the temple of Faunus, as well as those of Æsculapius and Jupiter. It was built by the Ædiles with the money arising from fines, and dedicated A. U. C. 509. There was another Faunalia on the nones of December. Hor. Car. III. 18. For Faunus, see Mythology, p. 477.

195. See Niebuhr's Roman History, II. 192---195, and 200---203. It is his opinion that the Fabian Gens, disgusted with the obstinate refusal of their order to grant the just claims of the Plebeians, retired with their clients, and a part of the Plebeians, to the number of 4,500, as related by Dionysius, and founded a colony on the banks of the Cremera, in Etruria. They left Rome on the Ides of February, A. U. C. 275, and were cut off by the Tuscans on the 18th of the following Quinctilis, the very day on which the defeat was sustained at the Alia some years afterwards. The poet has evidently fallen into a great error here.

196. The number of the Fabii is always given as being 306.

198. Arma professa, which they had promised.

199. Castris. From the context, this must have been the abodes of the family at Rome. He may, perhaps, mean their settlement on the Cremera, v. 207.

201. They went out at the Carmental gate. The Roman gates, as has been already observed, were Illa fama refert Fabios exisse trecentos.

 Non aliter, quam quum Libyca de rupe leones
 Invadunt sparsos lata per arva greges. 210
 Diffugiunt hostes, inhonestaque vulnera tergo
 Accipiunt: Tusco sanguine terra rubet.
 Sic iterum, sic sæpe cadunt. Ubi vincere aperte double. People went out by one, and came in by the other. Ever after this day, no one went through the gate by which the Fabii had passed. The way was named Via Scelerata or Infelix.—Jano, that is, probably, simply the gate through which they passed.

203, 204. These lines are wanting in some of the best MSS. Gierig, though unsatisfied with them, thinks they are necessary to the narration. It does not seem so to me. We have only to understand the poet thus: they went out, etc. v. 199, the way by which they went is next etc. v. 201, to have a very good sense.

206. Hibernis, produced by the melting of the snow. It was now the spring. See note on v. 390.

214. Parant, scil. the Tuscans.

225, 226. The poet, as if present, calls out to them.—Simplex, incautious, unsuspecting of guile.

237. Herculeæ gentis. It was the tradition of the Fabian family that they derived their origin from Hercules, by a daughter of Evander.

239. Niebuhr ut supra, shews that the Fabius who remained at Rome, must have been then a grown man. He thinks the cause of his staying behind was his differing in politics from the rest of the family.

241. The celebrated Fabius Maximus Cunctator, the man who shewed how to vanquish Hannibal.

243. The day after the Ides these three signs, which lie close together, rise acronychally.

247. The inferior gods offered sacrifices to the superior. See below, iv. 423. Æschyl. Prom. 526, et seq.

254. Eam, the tree for the fruit.

255. Figs ripen very fast (Pliny, xv. 19,) so that this is not badly invented.

260. Tenuit is used here in a double sense.

263. Lactens, that is, full of juice. It was peculiarly used of the fig.

264. De nullo, etc. It was an opinion of the ancients, that for sixty days before the figs ripened, the ravens were affected by a looseness of bowels, which obliged them to abstain from every thing humid. Pliny, X. 12. Ælian. V. II. II. 5.

267. The Lupercalia were celebrated on the 15th February, the xv. Kal. Mart. The poet here, according to the custom of the Latin poets, confounds the ancient Italian deity, Faunus, with the Pan of the Arcadians. On these occasions, a theory or a legend was always devised to explain the manner in which the worship had been introduced. For Pan, see Mythology, p. 198.

272. He most haunts the Arcadian mountains, or, he is most worshiped there.

273. Pholoë, the mountain of that name.

274. This is an error, the Ladon falls into the Alpheus.

277. Equarum. Several MSS. read aquarum, which reading Burmann defends, as Pan is called ἄκτιος by Theocritus. Idyll. V. 14.

278. Instead of Pan ovium custos.

280. That is, there was no town there at the time.

281. The Arcadians were always regarded as of the Pelasgian race.

282. The Flamen Dialis always bore a part in the Lupercalia.

285. The first reason; they imitated the god himself.

289. The second; they commemorated the ancient mode of life in Arcadia. It was said that Jupiter was born in this country. Callim. H. I.

290. See above, I. 469.

291. Feris. One MS. reads feræ; another feræ; another et feræ.—Usus, occupations.

292. Erat. One MS. reads erant, which is adopted by Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig.

- Nullus anhelabat sub adunco vomere taurus : 295

 Nullus adhuc erat usus equi, se quisque ferebat.

 Garrulus in primo limine rivus erat.

299. Sub Jove, same as sub dio, in the open air.

301. Detecti, scil. the naked Luperi.

302. Opes, that is, the want of wealth.

303. The third reason for the nudity of the Luperi.—Faunus, scil. Pan.

305. Dominæ, Omphale, queen of Lydia, to whom Hercules was sold by Mercury.

310. Aurato sinu. Her robe had threads of gold woven into it, or was embroidered.

311. Umbracula, the σκιᾶδία, the modern umbrella.—Rapidos.

This is the reading of eleven MSS. the rest have tepidos, which is very tame. Rapidos well expresses the consuming power of fire.

313. Tenebat, scil. Omphale, thus subit, v. 315. Some MSS. read tenebant.

314. Hesperus is beautifully styled roscidus, as the dews of evening accompany his appearance in the summer-season. The poet gives him a dark-coloured horse, as the sky is then becoming every moment darker ; for the opposite reason, a white horse is given to Lucifer. "Hesperus, that led The starry host, rode brightest." Milton.

321. Vincla, either the wrists or the arm-holes of the tunic, which would appear to have had running-strings in them.

324. Scindebant. Seven MSS. read stringebant.

326. Tela minora, the arrows opposed to the club.

329. Previous to a sacrifice, à Venerè abstinebant.—Pia sacra, like pia tura, pium fur.

337. Captata, felt by groping. One MS. reads tractata.

Reppulit. E summo decidit ille toro. 350
 Fit sonus : inclamat comites, et lumina poscit
 Mæonis. Illatis ignibus acta patent.

359. A fourth reason for this custom.—Peregrinis causas Latinas. Three MSS. read peregrinæ; two read causam. Perhaps the best reading would be peregrinis causas Latinam.

360. Suo pulvere, in his own (i. e. Italian) course.

361. Scil. at the Lupercalia.

363. Transsuta. Others read transfixa, transita, or trajecta.

367, 368. These lines are wanting in three MSS. and are probably spurious.—Cæstibus. Six MSS. read vectibus, which Heinsius prefers, as the cæstus was unknown to the old Romans, and pitching the bar (vectis) was a common exercise of the Roman soldiery. The poets, however, troubled themselves little about minutiae of this kind. Some MSS. have vestibus.

- Dicta facit, Fabiique simul. Venit irritus illuc 375

 Albula, quem Tibrin mersus Tiberinus in unda
 Reddidit, hibernis forte tumebat aquis. 390

375—378. Fabius, says the legend, was over the comrades of Remus, and Quinctilius over those of Romulus; and those under them were named from them. The truth is, the Fabian family were of the Sabine, the Quinctilian, of the Roman part of the nation.

380. Quod bene cessit. Several of the best MSS. read gessit. Some qui bene gesset.

381. He now proceeds to inquire into the origin of the names Lupercal and Lupercalia, and takes this occasion of relating the early history of the founders of Rome.

383. Ilia. Most MSS. read Silvia.

385. Pueros. The reading of most MSS. is parvos. Burmann observes, that the ancients did not use parvos without a substantive for children.

387. Recusantes, unwillingly; refusing as far as they dared. Burmann proposes reluctantes or repugnantes.

389. Albula. This was an ancient name of the Tiber. The Romans, aping the Greeks in this, as in every thing else, deduced the name Tiber, from that of a fabled king.

390. Hibernis. Neapolis would infer from this, that Romulus and Remus were born in the winter. This is pressing poetic language too close; the Latin poets used Hiems, and its kindred adjectives, as the Greeks did χειμών, and the terms derived from it. The meaning is, the river was swollen by the rains which had lately fallen. If we wished regularly to confute Neapolis, we might refer him to v. 413, as the wolf does not bring forth in winter.

391, 392. The different Fora or markets at Rome, were in the valleys between the hills. The Circus Maximus was three stadia and a half long, and one broad. It is probably to express its magnitude that he uses valles in the plural, as the measure imposed no necessity.

393. According to the account given by Dionysius from Fabius Pictor, they came down with the babes from the summit of the Palatine hill, and laid them in the water, which now washed its foot.

394. Et. Two MSS. read an, which Heinsius adopts and justifies by a number of examples, and which is certainly the more elegant.

396. Iste, scil. Romulus.

398. Esse, scil : patrem. This ellipsis well expresses the doubt and hesitation of the speaker.—Susplicor. Three MSS. read suspicer.

400. Præcipiti, critical, dangerous.

401. Si non etc. The ancients believed that a god could not, any more than a man, be in more places than one at the same time. Hence the jest that Diana could not save her temple at Ephesus from the flames, as she was aiding the birth of Alexander the Great, in Macedonia.

408. Scil : the fate of Rome.

409. Appulsus. Eight MSS. read impulsus, which Lenz prefers, as expressing the force with which the water drove them, but they were not in the current of a stream, and the motion of the retiring water must have been very gentle.

412. Rumina, from rumis or ruma, the same as mamma. This must have been the original name ; the derivation from Romulus is futile. In the time of Varro, as he informs us, (De L. L. iv.) a new ficus ruminalis was planted in the Comitium, which was standing when the poet wrote. It withered in the reign of Nero. Pliny, xv. 18.

413. Feta, i. e. enixa, as the context shews.

416. Perdere. Two MSS. read prodere.—Cog. manus. scil : the hands of Amulius.

417. She shews her affection for the babes by the motion of her tail.

419. They might be known to be the offspring of Mars by the wolf, his sacred animal, coming to feed them, and by their shewing no signs of fear.

420. Promissi, i. e. destined by nature.

423. Another cause, a Grecian origin, from Mt. Lycæum, in Arcadia.

424. Faunus, scil. Pan.---Lycæo. Pausanius, who mentions Ζεὺς λύκαιος, does not give this epithet to Pan. He speaks, however, of his temple on Mt. Lycæum. In an epigram of Leonidas, we meet λαγωβόλα Πανὶ Λυκαίῳ.

425. Barren women placed themselves in the way of Luperci, as they ran about striking people with their goat-skin thongs, as the contact of the sacred lash was supposed to produce fecundity.—Herbis, etc. the usual modes of obtaining the power of bearing children.

428. Optatum. One MS. which is followed by Heinsius and Gierig, has optati.

433. Instead of increasing the number and strength of his people by their having offspring, he had only brought on himself and them the war with the Sabines.

435, 436. The grove of Juno Lucina. Varro, L. L. iv.

440. Mira, wonderful things.

441. Italidas. Several of the best MSS. read Italias.—Sacer hircus. Four MSS. read caper hirtus, in favour of which, it is urged, that as the caper was a gelt hircus, the wonder was the greater; and v. 445, a caper is sacrificed. I should feel disposed to adopt this reading, which is that of Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig.

443. His name has not come down to us.

444. Etruria was renowned for augury.

449, 450. Two derivations of Lucina; one from lucus, as if she was so named from being worshiped in a grove; a second from lux, as the light proceeded from her. This last might identify Juno Lucina with the moon, and with the Eileithyia of the Greeks. See Mythology, p. 154.

451. Facilis seems to answer to πρᾶμηντις, an epithet of Eileithyia.

453—458. On the day of the Lupercalia, the sun entered Pisces, and winds began to blow, which continued for six days.

461. Dione, Venus. In Homer, this goddess is the daughter of Dione. Ovid confounds them, as he does the Hyperion and Helius (Sol) of Homer.

462. In the Giant-war. See Mythology, p. 238.

471. Others say, the goddess and her son turned themselves into fishes at the approach of Typhon.

Nec violant timidi-piscibus ora Syri.

Proxima lux vacua est : at tertia dicta Quirino. 475

Qui tenet hoc nomen, Romulus ante fuit ;
Sive quod hasta curis priscis est dicta Sabinis :
—Bellicus a telo venit in astra deus—

Sive suum regi nomen posuere Quirites :
Seu quia Romanis junxerat ille Cures. 480

Nam pater armipotens, postquam nova mœnia vidit,
Multaque Romulea bella peracta manu,
Jupiter, inquit, habet Romana potentia vires :
Sanguinis officio non eget illa mei.

Redde patri natum : quamvis intercidit alter, 485
Pro se, proque Remo, qui mihi restat, erit.

Unus erit, quem tu tolles in cœrula cœli ;
Tu mihi dixisti : sint rata dicta Jovis.

Jupiter annuerat ; nutu tremefactus uterque
Est polus, et cœli pondera sensit Atlas. 490

Est locus : antiqui Capreæ dixere paludem.
Forte tuis illic, Romule, jura dabas.

473, 474. He confounds, in the usual manner, the Aphrodite of the Greeks, and Venus of the Latins, with the Atergatis or Derceto of the Syrians.—Timidi, scil. Deorum, pious.

475. There was no festival, and nothing remarkable on the XIV. Kal. Mart. The Quirinalia were on the following day. He takes this occasion of relating the end of Romulus and his apotheosis. See Livy, I. 13. It occurred on the Nones of Quinctilis.

477—480. Three derivations of the name Quirinus. The first is the true one. See Mythology, p. 472.

484. Officio. The care and labour of Romulus.

487. This is a line of Ennius. It also occurs, Met. xiv. 814.—The poet, in this account of the Assumption of Romulus, evidently keeps close to the Annals of the old poet.

491. The Palus Caprea, or Capreæ, was in the Campus Martius.—Capreæ. Some MSS. read Capræ; one Capream, which is adopted by Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig. The Greeks called it ἄγρος ἢ ζορκὸς ἔλος.

492. Jura dabas. According to most accounts he was reviewing the army. The poet may, however, have used these words

Sol fugit, et removent subeuntia nubila cœlum,
 Et gravis effusus decidit imber aquis,
 Hinc tonat, hinc missis abrumpitur ignibus æther. 495
 Fit fuga: rex patris astra petebat equis.
 Luctus erat, falsæque Patres in crimine cædis;
 Hæsissetque animis forsitan illa fides:
 Sed Proculus Longa veniebat Julius Alba,
 Lunaque fulgebat, nec facis usus erat: 500
 Quum subito motu nubes crepuere sinistrae.
 Rettulit ille gradus, horrueruntque comæ.
 Pulcher, et humano major, trabeaque decorus
 Romulus in media visus adesse via,
 Et dixisse simul, Prohibe lugere Quirites: 505
 Nec violent lacrimis numina nostra suis.
 Tura ferant, placentque novum pia turba Quirinum,
 Et patrias artes militiamque colant.
 Jussit, et in tenues oculis evanuit auras.
 Convocat hic populos, jussaque verba refert. 510 only in a general sense, to denote any exercise of his authority. The assembly of the Roman people on the Campus Martius was always regarded as an exercitus. See Niebuhr on the Centuries. Rom. Hist. Vol. I.

493. Sol fugit, in consequence of the darkness. It is not necessary, with Dionysius and others, to suppose an eclipse.

496. See Hor. Car. III. 3, 15. This circumstance was evidently in the Annals of Ennius, from which both poets derived it.—Fit fuga, hence this day was also called the Populifugium.

498. Fides, belief or opinion.

500. Luna fulgebat, consequently there could not have been an eclipse of the sun. Livy says, that Romulus appeared prima luce, at the dawn of day. Several MSS. read surgebat. I prefer the common reading, as the poet, by saying that Proculus carried no torch, evidently means to express bright moon-light.

501. Sinistræ, the lucky side, according to Etrurian augury.—Nubes crepuere. Several MSS. read Sepe tremuere, or sonuere.

503. The usual signs of divinity.—Trabea. See above, I. 37. Plutarch says, that Romulus appeared ὄπλοις λαμπροῖς καὶ φλέγουσι κεκοσμημένους. As the poet here uses the word trabea, I would take jura dabas above, v. 492, in its simple sense.

510. Populos, the Romans and Sabines, or probably as above, I. 38, for cives. Many MSS. read patres.

Templâ deo fiunt. Collis quoque dictus ab illo,
 Et referunt certi sacra paterna dies.
 Lux quoque cur eadem Stultorum festa vocetur,
 Accipe : parva quidem causa, sed apta subest.
 Non habuit tellus doctos antiqua colonos : 515
 Lassabant agiles aspera bella viros.
 Plus erat in gladio, quam curvo laudis aratro :
 Neglectus domino pauca ferebat ager.
 Farra tamen veteres jaciebant, farra metebant,
 Primitias Cereri farra resecta dabant. 520
 Usibus admoniti flammis torrenda dederunt,
 Multaque peccato damna tulere suo.
 Nam modo verrebant nigras pro farre favillas ;
 Nunc ipsas ignes corripuere casas.
 Facta dea est Fornax : læti Fornace coloni 525
 Orant, ut fruges temperet illa suas.
 Curio legitimis nunc Fornacalia verbis
 Maximus indicit, nec stata sacra facit ;
 Inque Foro, multa circum pendente tabella,

511. Collis, the Quirinal. Festus, with much greater probability, supposes it to have derived its name from the Sabines from Cures having settled on it. Niebuhr thinks there was a town on it named Quirium, whence came the name Quirites, at first peculiar to the Sabine portion of the Roman people.

512. The Quirinalia were stativa. See note on I. 657.

513. Another name for the Quirinalia was the Stultorum Feriæ, because those who from ignorance, or from having been on a journey, or from want of time, or any other just cause, had not sacrificed with the rest of the people on the Fornicalia, which was an indictive festival, (see preceding note) did so on the Quirinalia. The poet takes this occasion of relating the supposed origin of the Fornicalia.

519. Jaciebant, cast, i. e. sowed.

526. Temperet, that is, keep from burning.

527. Curio. Romulus, we are told, divided the people into 30 curiæ, over each of which was a curio. The Curio Maximus presided over the 30 Curiones.—Leg. verb. ex gr. Lavatio Deum Matris est hodie. Jovis epulum cras est. Æsculapii geritur celebraturque vindemia. Lectisternium Cereris erit Idibus proximis. Arnobius, L. vii.

529. Multa tabella. On which was inscribed in what Curia each part of the people was to worship.

Signatur certa Curia quæque nota ; 530
 Stultaque pars populi, quæ sit sua Curia, nescit :
 Sed facit extrema sacra relata die.

Est honor et tumulis. Animas placate paternas,
 Parvaque in extinctas munera ferte pyras,
 Parva petunt Manes. Pietas pro divite grata est 535
 Munere. Non avidos Styx habet ima deos.

Tegula porrectis satis est velata coronis,
 Et sparsæ fruges, parcaque mica salis,
 Inque mero mollita Ceres, violæque solutæ.
 Hæc habeat media testa relictæ via. 540

Nec majora veto : sed et his placabilis umbra est.
 Adde preces positis et sua verba focus.

Hunc morem Æneas, pietatis idoneus auctor,
 Attulit in terras, juste Latine, tuas.
 Ille patris Genio sollempnia dona ferebat ; 545
 Hinc populi ritus edidicere pios.

At quondam, dum longa gerunt pugnacibus armis
 Bella, Parentales deseruere dies.

Non impune fuit. Nam dicitur omine ab isto
 Roma suburbanis incaluisse rogis. 550

Vix equidem credo : bustis exisse feruntur,
 Et tacitæ questi tempore noctis avi ;
 Perque vias urbis, Latiosque ululasse per agros
 Deformes animas, vulgus inane, ferunt.

533. The Feralia, in honour of the dead, were celebrated on the 19th of February, as this was formerly the last month of the year. Festus derives Feralia, à ferendis epulis vel a feriendis pecudibus.—Varro, ab inferis et ferendo epulas. The derivation from inferis is nearest the truth.

537. Porrectis. One MS. which is followed by Heinsius, and the other editors, reads projectis.

542. Sua verba, suitable words.

545. See Virg. Æn. v. 94, et seq.

548. Par. dies, the days on which the Parentalia were celebrated.---Deseruere, neglected.

554. Deformes, scil. simulacra modis pallentia miris, or, as Lenz understands it, having no certain form.

Post ea præteriti tumulis redduntur honores, 555
 Prodigiiisque venit funeribusque modus.
 Dum tamen hæc fiunt, viduæ cessate puellæ :
 Expectet puros pinea tæda dies.
 Nec tibi, quæ cupidæ matura videbere matri,
 Comat virgineas hasta recurva comas. 560
 Conde tuas, Hymenæe, faces, et ab ignibus atris Aufer. Habent alias mæsta sepulcra faces.
 Dî quoque templorum foribus celentur opertis,
 Ture vacant aræ, stentque sine igne foci.
 Nunc animæ tenues et corpora functa sepulcris 565
 Errant : nunc posito pascitur umbra cibo.
 Nec tamen hæc ultra, quam, tot de mense supersint
 Luciferi, quot habent carmina nostra pedes.
 Hanc, quia justa ferunt, dixere Feralia lucem.
 Ultima placandis Manibus illa dies. 570
 Ecce anus in mediis residens annosa puellis
 Sacra facit Tacitæ : vix tamen ipsa tacet ;
 Et digitis tria tura tribus sub limine ponit,

557. Viduæ puellæ, either widows, or, if viduæ is taken in its general sense, simply unmarried women. Two MSS. read avidæ.

558. Puros dies, days not devoted to gloomy or melancholy matters, like the Feralia.

559, 560. Quæ etc. opposed, it would appear, to the viduæ of v. 557.—Hasta. It was the custom to divide the hair of a virgin-bride with the point of a small spear.

560. Torches were used at funerals and at the Parentalia, as well as at weddings.

563. During this time, the temples of the gods were closed, and no sacred rites performed.

566. That the souls of the dead loved to partake of food, is an opinion as old as the time of Homer. See the νεκρία in the Odyssey.

567, 568. The Feralia, or last day for appeasing the Manes, was the XII. Kal. Mart, from which, to the end of the month, there were exactly eleven; that is, six and five days. Some have thought that the poet meant six feet only, and that therefore the Feralia were the VIII. Kal. Mart, but this is contradicted by v. 684, and by an ancient calendar which places them on the XII. Kal. Mart.

569. See note on v. 533.

571. He now relates the rites performed on this day to the goddess Muta or Tacita, to bind the tongues of detractors. Neapolis thinks that the reason of uniting Qua brevis occultum mus sibi fecit iter.

 Tum cantata ligat cum fusco licia plumbo ; 575
 Et septem nigras versat in ore fabas ;

 Vina quoque instillat. Vini quodcumque relictum est,

 Illa modo in silvis inter coryleta jacebat :
 Nunc in cognatas desiliebat aquas.
 Convocat hic Nymphas, Latium quæcumque tenebant,
 Et jacit in medio talia verba choro :
 Invidet ipsa vitatque, quod expedit illi, them with the Parentalia, may have been to give effect to the maxim, de mortuis nil nisi bonum. — Annosa, Heinsius would read vinosa or pannosa.

574. Brevis, i. e. parvus.

575. Plumbo. Black lead was employed in magic. One or two MSS. read rhombo, which is adopted by Heinsius and Gierig, and which I should also feel disposed to adopt. The rhombus or spindle, and the black or party-coloured threads were of great use in magic. See Virg. Ecl. viii. 75.

576. Seven, like three, was a magic number.

578. Mænæ. The mæna was a small fish of little value, which was salted and eaten by the poorer sort of people. It was used on this occasion symbolically, and was an appropriate offering to the goddess of Silence. This, which is the reading of only two MSS. has been adopted by all the editors: the MSS. in general read menta or mintha.

581. Vinximus. Vincire was the appropriate word to express the hindrance of any action by magic art.

583. This legend must have been invented long after the Romans had become acquainted with Grecian Mythology, as their ancient religion knew nothing of choirs of nymphs, or of amours of the gods. See Mythology, p. 450.

585. Indomita, ἄδαμάστῳ. Many MSS. read immodico, and victus for captus.

Vestra soror summo jungere membra deo.
 Consulite ambobus : nam quæ est mea magna voluptas,
 Utilitas vestræ magna sororis erit.
 Vos illi in prima fugienti obsistite ripa, 595
 Ne sua fluminea corpora mergat aqua.
 Dixerat : annuerunt nymphæ Tiberinides omnes,
 Quæque colunt thalamos, Ilia diva, tuos.
 Forte fuit Naïs, Lara nomine : prima sed illi
 Dicta bis antiquum syllaba nomen erat, 600
 Ex vitio positum. Sæpe illi dixerat Almo,
 Nata, tene linguam : nec tamen illa tenet.
 Quæ, simul ac tetigit Juturnæ stagna sororis,
 Effuge, ait, ripas : dicta refertque Jovis.
 Illa etiam Junonem adiit, miserataque nuptam, 605
 Naïda Juturnam vir tuus, inquit, amat.
 Jupiter intumuit : quaque est non usa modeste,
 Eripuit linguam, Mercuriumque monet,
 Duc hanc ad Manes : locus ille silentibus aptus.
 Nympha, sed infernæ Nympha paludis, erit. 610
 Jussa Jovis fiunt. Accepit lucus euntes.
 Dicitur illa duci placuisse deo.
 Vim parat hic : vultu pro verbis illa precatur,
 Et frustra muto nititur ore loqui.
 Fitque gravis, geminosque parit, qui compita servant, 615
 Et vigilant nostra semper in æde, Lares.

598. The nymphs of the Anien, the god of which, according to our poet (Am. III. 6, 45,) espoused the mother of Romulus. Horace (Car. I. 2, 17,) unites her to the god of the Tiber.

600. That is, her name was Lala, from λαλία.

601. He makes her the daughter of the god of the river Almo.

605. Nuptam scil. Junonem. The common reading of the MSS.

is nuptas; some have nymphæ or nympham. It is evident that the poet wished to express the busy meddling loquacity of Lara, as it would have sufficed to set Juturna on her guard.

615. The Romans had both public and private Lares. The word Lar, is Etruscan, and signified Lord. See V. 128, et seq. and Mythology, pp. 481, 482.

Proxima cognati dixere Caristia cari,

617--638. On the XI. Kal. Mart. was held the domestic feast, named the Caristia, from carus. "Convivium etiam solenne majores instituerunt, idque Caristia appellarunt, cui præter cognatos et affines nemo interponebatur ; ut si qua inter necessarios querela esset orta, apud sacra mensæ et inter hilaritatem animorum, fautoribus concordia adhibitis, tolleretur." Valer. Max. II. 1.

619. He gives the reason why the Caristia followed immediately after the Feralia, that the dead might visit their friends, and have their share of the feast. See above note on v. 566.

625. Who thinks his father or mother lives too long.

628. Ino. For all the persons mentioned here, see my Mythology, under their names.

631. The Genii, and all the domestic gods, were called Di boni, ἄγαθοὶ δαίμονες. The Lares or Penates are meant here.

633. Libate dapes. Place a portion of the food (dapes) on a patella to be set before the gods, i. e. the Lares. Libare, dapes, patella and honor, are all the appropriate terms.

634. Incinctos, that is, succinctos. See V. 217. 675. Persius Sat. V. 31.

635. Nox ultima, the latter part of the night towards morning. Most MSS. read humida.

636. Larga. One or two MSS. read parca, which Heinsius and Gierig adopt without hesitation. —Precaturi manu. Heinsius conjectures precaturæ manus, which reading is adopted by Gierig. In their editions the line runs thus: Parca precaturæ sumite vina manus.

637. It was considered highly culpable not to join the name of the prince in their supplications on occasions like this. Hence we seem to have derived the custom of drinking the king's health.

639. On the VIII. Kal. Mart. was the festival of the Terminalia, instituted, as was said, by Numa.

640. The Terminus or boundary, which also represented the god, was either a stone or a post of wood placed in the ground.

643. He here gives a minute description of the mode of worshipping the god of boundaries.—Duo domini, the owners of the ground on both sides.

644. Bina, same as duo.

645. Curto testu, a small earthen vessel. Heinsius has proved by abundant examples, that this was a usual sense of curtus.

648. Rami. These were driven into the ground, or rather into the sod-built altar, to keep the wood which was piled up from tumbling about.

650. Canistra, the basket in which were the corn, &c. to be used.

654. Candida, clad in white.

- Spargitur et cæso communis Terminus agno : 655

659. This is the hymn of the poet, rather than of the rustics.

663. The well-known story of the combat between three hundred Lacedæmonians and as many Argives, for the possession of Thyrea. See Herod. I. 82. Lucian, Charon, Valerius Maximus, &c.

665. Lectus, read ; for when the three surviving Argives had run home with the news of their victory, thinking all the enemies dead, he got up, piled a trophy, and inscribed it with his blood. All the MSS. read tectus ; lectus is the conjecture of Barthius, as Statius, Theb. iv. 47, says, Et Lacedæmonium Thyre lectura cruorem. It is almost certain that it is the true reading ; the exclamation in the following line appears to confirm it.

667. See the story in Livy, I. 55.

669. Inventus. Five MSS. read conventus, which Heinsius and Gierig have adopted. Gierig interprets it cum ad cum convenissent augures. I must doubt if conventus ever occurs in this passive sense. Burmann proposes tunc lentus.

670. Unde in Capitolio superna pars tecti patet quæ lapidem ipsum Termini spectat, nam Termino non nisi sub divo sacrificabatur. Servius on Æn. ix. 448.

Nec tu vicino quidquam concede roganti, 675

 Hoc cupiant fratres, Tarquiniusque pater,

680. It is well known that Æneas landed in this part of the country. See Virgil, Livy, &c.

682. The boundary of the Roman dominion was at one time between the fifth and sixth milestone on the Laurentine way.—How it was enlarged in the days of the poet ! A sacrifice to Terminus was still offered on that spot.

684. A play on words.

685. The Regifugium, or banishment of the Tarquins, is placed by the poet on the 24th February, the VIII. Kal. Mart. One very ancient MS. reads quintus, which reading is adopted by Neapolis and by Petavius, who accuses Ovid of gross negligence. One MS. reads Septimus extremo.

687. See the whole history in Livy, I. Niebuhr (Rom. Hist. I. 486,) justly gives the palm to the narrative of the historian over that of our poet. The modern historian's criticism of the whole story is exceedingly well worthy of perusal.

690. Livy, I. 53. It is the story of Zopyrus, transferred from Herodotus (III. 154,) to the Roman history.

694. Hoc Ithacus velit, et magno mercentur Atridæ. Virg.

 Creditus offenso procubuisse pede. 720

703. This also is taken from Herodotus, (v. 92) who tells us that Thrasybulus, the tyrant of Miletus, employed the same mode of giving counsel to Periander.

704. Sectus. Most MSS. read septus. The former is much to be preferred. Seco is frequently used of rivers.

706. In the ordinary narrative they are poppies.

713. The poet in his haste or negligence confounds matters here, for this response was given to their question, of who should be king of Rome. See Livy.

716. Turba. There were but two sons of Tarquin sent to consult the oracle.

Cingitur interea Romanis Ardea signis,
 Et patitur lentas obsidione moras.
 Dum vacat, et metuunt hostes committere pugnam,
 Luditur in castris : otia miles agit.
 Tarquinius juvenis socios dapibusque meroque 725
 Accipit, atque illis rege creatus ait :
 Dum nos difficilis pigro tenet Ardea bello,
 Nec sinit ad patrios arma referre deos ;
 Ecquid in officio torus est socialis ? et ecquid
 Conjugibus nostris mutua cura sumus ? 730
 Quisque suam laudant. Studiis certamina crescunt,
 Et fervent multo linguaque corque mero.
 Surgit, cui clarum dederat Collatia nomen ;
 Non opus est verbis, credite rebus, ait.
 Nox superest : tollamur equis, urbemque petamus. 735
 Dicta placent : frenis impediuntur equi.
 Pertulerant dominos. Regalia protinus illi
 Tecta petunt : custos in fore nullus erat.
 Ecce nurum regis fuis per colla coronis
 Inveniunt posito pervigilare mero. 740
 Inde cito passu petitur Lucretia. Nebat ;
 Ante torum calathi lanaque mollis erant.
 Lumen ad exiguum famulæ data pensa trahebant,
 Inter quas tenui sic ait ipsa sono :
 Mittenda est domino—nunc, nunc properate, puellæ—
 Quamprimum nostra facta lacerna manu.

729. Torus socialis, i. e. uxor.—In officio, faithful. Fundanos in officio esse. Liv. viii. 19.

733. Cui clarum, etc. When Tarquin took Collatia from the Sabines, he made his uncle, Egerius, governor of it, whose son was thence named Collatinus. A different, and much more probable origin of names of this kind, is given by Niebuhr. Rom. Hist. I. 293.

739. Nurum, the wife of Sextus Tarquinius. Nodell ad Avian, p. 108, proposes nurus. It is nurus in Livy. The poet (v. 725,) has, however, spoken of but one of the young Tarquiniis.—Coronis, several MSS. read capillis, but compare v. 772.

744. Tenui, a low, soft voice.

746. Lacerna, a thick, warm, military cloak.

Quid tamen audistis?—nam plura audire potestis—

Quantum de bello dicitur esse super?

Postmodo victa cades, melioribus, Ardea, restas,

Improba, quæ nostros cogis abesse viros. 750

Sint tantum reduces. Sed enim temerarius ille

Est meus, et stricto quolibet ense ruit.

Mens abit, et morior, quoties pugnantis imago.

Me subit, et gelidum pectora frigus habet.

Desinit in lacrimas, intentaque fila remittit, 755

In gremio vultum deposuitque suum.

Hoc ipsum decuit: lacrimæ decuere pudicam,

Et facies animo dignaque parque fuit.

Pone metum, venio, conjux ait. Illa revixit,

Deque viri collo dulce pependit onus. 760

Interea juvenis furiales regius ignes

Concipit, et cæco raptus amore furit.

Forma placet, niveusque color, flavique capilli,

Quique aderat nulla factus ab arte decor.

Verba placent, et vox, et quod corrumpere non est: 765

Quoque minor spes est, hoc magis ille cupit.

Jam dederat cantum lucis prænuntius ales,

Quum referunt juvenes in sua castra pedem.

Carpitur attonitos absentis imagine sensus

Ille: recordanti plura magisque placent. 770

Sic sedit, sic culta fuit, sic stamina nevit,

Neglectæ collo sic jacuere comac,

Hos habuit vultus, hæc illi verba fuere,

Hic decor, hæc facies, hic color oris erat.

747. This is said to intimate the retired life which Lucretia led.

749. You will certainly be conquered at last; you hold out against better (i. e. braver) men. Dum pugnant Danaï dum restat barbarus Hector, Propert, III. 7,

31. Nunc paucis plures vix restatis. Liv. xxiii. 45.

755. Intenta, drawn. Most MSS. read incepta.

765. Et quod, etc. Her modesty. Tum forma, tum spectata castitas incitat. Livy.

Ut solet a magno fluctus languescere flatu, 775
 Sed tamen a vento, qui fuit, unda tumet :
 Sic, quamvis aberat placitæ præsentia formæ,
 Quem dederat præsens forma, manebat amor.
 Ardet, et injusti stimulis agitatus amoris
 Comparat indigno vimque dolumque toro. 780
 Exitus in dubio est. Audebimus ultima, dixit.
 Viderit, audentes forsne deusne juvet.
 Cepimus audendo Gabios quoque. Talia fatus
 Ense latus cinxit, tergaque pressit equi.
 Accipit ærata juvenem Collatia porta, 785
 Condere jam vultus sole parante suos.
 Hostis, ut hospes, init penetralia Collatini :
 Comiter excipitur : sanguine junctus erat.
 Quantum animis erroris inest ! parat inscia rerum
 Infelix epulas hostibus illa suis. 790
 Functus erat dapibus : poscunt sua tempora somni.
 Nox erat, et tota lumina nulla domo.
 Surgit, et auratum vagina liberat ensem,
 Et venit in thalamos, nupta pudica, tuos,
 Utque torum pressit, Ferrum, Lucretia, mecum est, 795
 Natus, ait, regis, Tarquiniusque loquor.
 Illa nihil : neque enim vocem viresque loquendi,
 Aut aliquid toto pectore mentis habet.
 Sed tremit, ut quondam stabulis deprensa relictis
 Parva sub infesto quum jacet agna lupo. 800
 Quid faciat ? pugnet ? vincetur femina pugna.
 Clamet ? at in dextra, qui necet, ensis adest.
 Effugiat ? positis urgentur pectora palmis ;
 Tunc primum externa pectora tacta manu.

785. Ærata, covered with brass. mouth of Lucretia herself.

787. Hostis ut hospes. This play on words was not disdained even by Livy, who puts it in the 788. He was second cousin to Collatinus.

Instat amans hostis precibus, pretioque, minisque : 805
 Nec prece, nec pretio, nec movet ille minis.
 Nil agis ; eripiam, dixit, pro crimine vitam :
 Falsus adulterii testis adulter erit.
 Interimam famulum, cum quo deprensa fereris.
 Succubuit famæ victa puella metu. 810
 Quid, victor, gaudes ? hæc te victoria perdet.
 Heu quanto regnis nox stetit una tuis !
 Jamque erat orta dies : passis sedet illa capillis,
 Ut solet ad nati mater itura rogum ;
 Grandævumque patrem fido cum conjuge castris 815
 Evocat : et posita venit uterque mora.
 Utque vident habitum, quæ luctus causa, requirunt,
 Cui paret exsequias, quove sit icta malo.
 Illa diu reticet, pudibundaque celat amictu
 Ora. Fluunt lacrimæ more perennis aquæ. 820
 Hinc pater, hinc conjux lacrimas solantur, et orant,
 Indicet : et cæco flentque paventque metu.
 Ter conata loqui, ter destitit, ausaque quarto.
 Non oculos adeo sustulit illa suos.
 Hoc quoque Tarquinio debebimus ? eloquar, inquit, 825
 Eloquar infelix dedecus ipsa meum.
 Quæque potest narrat. Restabant ultima ; flevit,
 Et matronales erubuere genæ.
 Dant veniam facto genitor conjuxque coactæ.
 Quam, dixit, veniam vos datis, ipsa nego. 830
 Nec mora ; celato figit sua pectora ferro,
 Et cadit in patrios sanguinolenta pedes.

807. Compare v. 809. Pro crimine, as a means of criminating you.

808. Adulter, scil. Sextus himself.

825. Hoc, scil. that I am obliged to relate my own disgrace. How infinitely superior is Livy here. It is probable that he kept much closer to Ennius than Ovid chose to do.

- Tunc quoque jam moriens, ne non procumbat honeste, Respicit. Hæc etiam cura cadentis erat.
- Ecce super corpus communia damna gementes, 835
 Obliti decoris, virque paterque jacent.
- Brutus adest, tandemque animo sua nomina fallit,
 Fixaque semanimi corpore tela rapit ;
- Stillantemque tenens generoso sanguine cultrum,
 Edidit impavidos ore minante sonos : 840
- Per tibi ego hunc juro fortem castumque cruorem,
 Perque tuos Manes, qui mihi numen erunt,
- Tarquinius pœnas profuga cum stirpe daturum.
 Jam satis est virtus dissimulata diu.
- Illa jacens ad verba oculos sine lumine movit, 845
 Visaque concussa dicta probare coma.
- Fertur in exsequias animi matrona virilis,
 Et secum lacrimas invidiamque trahit.
- Vulnus inane patet. Brutus clamore Quirites
 Concitat, et regis facta nefanda refert. 850
- Tarquinius cum prole fugit. Capit annua Consul Jura. Dies regnis illa suprema fuit.

Fallimur? an veris prænuntia venit hirundo,
 Et metuit, ne qua versa recurrat hiems?

833. Euripides (Hec. 568,) says of Polyxena ἡ δὲ καὶ θνήσκουσ' ἄμωσ Πολλὴν πρόνοιαν εἶχεν εὐσχήμωσ πεσεῖν.

837. Brutus signifies stupid, foolish. Niebuhr shews well the inconsistencies and contradictions in the whole history of Brutus.

845. Ad verba. Eight MSS. read adversa.—Sine lumine, as being now sunk in death.

846. Concussa coma. Gierig thinks this is an allusion to the Jupiter of Homer, and condemns it; most justly, no doubt, if it is such, but of that I am by no means certain.

847. Fertur scil. effertur.

848. Tears for her own hard fate; hatred (invidia, odium) of the tyrant.

853. Columella, xi. 2, says, that the swallow is seen on the VII. Kal. Mart. Pliny, II. 47, says, Favonium quidam a. d. viii. Kal. Mart. Chelidonium vocant ab hirundinis visu.—Veris prænuntia ἦρος ἀγγελος ἱμερόφωνος ἀηδών. Sappho.

854. Qua scil. parte.

Sæpe tamen, Progne, nimium properasse quereris, 855
 Virque tuo Tereus frigore lætus erit.

Jamque duæ restant noctes de mense secundo,
 Marsque citos junctis curribus urget equos.
 Ex vero positum permansit Equiria nomen,
 Quæ deus in campo prospicit ipse suo. 860
 Jure venis, Gradive; locum tua tempora poscunt, Signatusque tuo nomine mensis adest.
 Venimus in portum libro cum mense peracto.
 Naviget hinc alia jam mihi linter aqua.

855. For Progne and Tereus, see Met. vi. 425, et seq. Mythology, p. 341.

857. The Equiria or horse-races on the Campus Martius, in honour of Mars, were held on the

III. Kal. Mart.

861. Your month (tua tempora) demands a place in my poem.

864. Mihi. Five MSS. read mea.

LIBER III.

BELLICE, depositis clypeo paullisper et hasta,
Mars, ades, et nitidas casside solve comas.
Forsitan ipse roges, quid sit cum Marte poëtæ.
A te, qui canitur, nomina mensis habet.
Ipse vides manibus peragi fera bella Minervæ; 5
Num minus ingenuis artibus illa vacat?
Palladis exemplo ponendæ tempora sume
Cuspidis; invenies et quod inermis agas.
Tum quoque inermis eras, quum te Romana sacerdos
Cepit, ut huic urbi semina digna dares. 10

1. As the first book began with the praises of Janus, so here the poet invokes Mars; in the next book we shall find him calling upon Venus.—Depositis, etc. as the poet's occupation is a peaceful one.

3, 4. A question and answer.

5—8. As Minerva, who, especially in the Roman theology, was a deity, who presided over the arts of peace, engaged also in those of war; so Mars might for a time lay aside his arms, and attend to the song of the poet.—Cuspidis. Several MSS. read cassidis. The general sense is the same.

9. He takes occasion here to sing the most celebrated adventure of the Roman god, Mars. It comes with peculiar propriety in this place, as the month had been named after the god by his son,

Silvia Vestalis—quid enim vetat inde moveri?—

Sacra lavaturas mane petebat aquas.

Ventum erat ad molli declivem tramite ripam :

Ponitur e summa fictilis urna coma.

Fessa resedit humi, ventosque accepit aperto 15

Pectore, turbatas restituitque comas.

Dum sedet, umbrosæ salices volucresque canoræ

Fecerunt somnos, et leve murmur aquæ.

Blanda quies victis furtim subrepit ocellis,

Et cadit a mento languida facta manus. 20

Mars videt hanc, visamque cupit, potiturque cupitam,

Et sua divina furta fefellit ope.

whose birth it relates. For the difference between the Greek Ares and the Roman Mars, see Mythology, p. 79 and 459.---Romana sacerdos. The affair occurred at Alba, and Rome did not yet exist. Heinsius would read Trojana, another critic proposes regina, as in Virgil, Æn. I. 227. There is no need of any change; poets did not always attend to accuracies of this kind.

11. Silvia. One MS. reads Ilia, which reading has been adopted by Heinsius.---Moveri scil. carmen, like the cantusque movete of Virgil.

12. It was the office of the Vestals to draw water, for the purpose of washing and sprinkling the temple, and cleansing the sacred vessels. Servius on Æn. vii. 150, says, Vestæ libare non nisi de Numicio flumine licebat.

13. Molli, etc. beautifully expresses the gentle descent to the river.

14. Then, as now, women carried their earthen pitchers on their heads. Speaking of Amygone, our poet says, (Am. I. x. 6,) Cum premeret summi verticis urna comas and Propertius of Tarpeia (iv. 4, 16,) at illi Urguebat medium fictilis urna caput.

16. Restituit, settled. Two MSS. which are followed by Heinsius, read composuit; but as Burmann justly observes this supposes leisure, and the use of a mirror, whereas restituit places before us a girl hastily settling up her hair, as we express it.

17, 18. Compare Virg. Ec. I. 55, and Hor. Epod. II. 26.

21. The descent of Mars, as Addison, I believe, first observed, is to be seen represented on ancient Roman coins.---Cupitam. This is the reading of two of the best MSS. and of Diomedes, the grammarian, who quotes this verse: all the other MSS. read cupita. Heinsius, in his note, shews that potior governed the fourth case, in the best authors, and Priscian (xviii. 23,) says, Omnes auctores, potior illius et illum et illo.

22. Fefellit, concealed.---Divina ope, i. e. by his own power.

Somnus abit: jacet illa gravis. Jam scilicet intra Viscera, Romanæ conditor urbis, eras.
 Languida consurgit, nec scit, cur languida surgat, 25
 Et peragit tales arbore nixa sonos:
 Utile sit faustumque, precor, quod imagine somni
 Vidimus! An somno clarius illud erat?
 Ignibus Iliacis aderam, quum lapsa capillis
 Decidit ante sacros lanea vitta focos. 30
 Inde duæ pariter— visu mirabile—palmæ
 Surgunt. Ex illis altera major erat,
 Et gravibus ramis totum protexerat orbem,
 Contigeratque nova sidera summa coma.
 Ecce meos ferrum patruus molitur in illas! 35
 Terreor admonitu, corque timore micat.
 Martia picus avis gemino pro stipite pugnant
 Et lupa. Tuta per hos utraque palma fuit.
 Dixerat: et plenam non firmis viribus urnam
 Sustulit.—Imperat, dum sua visa refert.— 40
 Interea crescente Remo, crescente Quirino,

26. Sonos, words. Two MSS. read preces.

27. Utile, etc. The well-known Roman formula, Quod bonum, felix faustumque sit.—Imagine somni, in a dream.

28. An somno, etc. Was it more than a dream, than a mere ένύπνιον?

29. Ig. II. The perpetual fire of Vesta brought from Troy by Æneas. Virg. Æn. II. 296.

30. This circumstance was ominous, as the sacred fillet was taken by the Pontifex off the head of a Vestal condemned for breach of vow. Dionysius, when describing the fate of the Vestal, Oppia, or Opimia, says, αὐτὴν μὲν τῆς κορυφῆς ἀφελόμενοι τὰ στέμματα, καὶ πομπεύοντες δι' ἀγορᾶς, ἐντὸς τειχοῦς ζῶσαν κατώρυξαν.

31. Compare the dream of Astyages, portending the birth of Cyrus. Just. I. 4.—Palmæ, emblems of victory. It is probably the meaning of the poet that they sprang from the ground, though inde would appear to refer rather to the fillet.

35. Molitur, i. e. vibrat. Virg. G. iv. 331.

36. Admonitu, scil. deorum, the vision.

37. The woodpecker, as well as the wolf, was sacred to Mars. In the old legend, (see v. 54,) the woodpecker also contributed to nourish the exposed babes.

Cœlesti tumidus pondere venter erat.
 Quo minus emeritis exiret cursibus annus,
 Restabant nitido jam duo signa deo :
 Silvia fit mater. Vestæ simulacra feruntur 45
 Virgineas oculis opposuisse manus.
 Ara deæ certe tremuit, pariente ministra,
 Et subiit cineres territa flamma suos.
 Hæc ubi cognovit contemptor Amulius æqui,
 —Nam raptas fratri victor habebat opes— 50
 Anne jubet mergi geminos. Scelus unda refugit :
 In sicca pueri destituuntur humo.
 Lacte quis infantes nescit crevisse ferino,
 Et picum expositis sæpe tulisse cibos ?
 Non ego te, tantæ nutrix Larentia gentis, 55
 Nec taceam vestras, Faustule pauper, opes.
 Vester honos veniet, quum Larentalia dicam :

43, 44. A periphrasis for ten months.--Emeritis. Qui merere desiit, having completed his task or service, was called Emeritus.

45. The poet himself informs us, (VI. 295,) that there was no statue in the temple of Vesta. Gierig supposes that he did not know this at the time he wrote this part of the poem. But it is well known that he kept it a long time by him, altering and revising it. I again repeat, that we are not to look for extreme accuracy in the ancient poets. There were statues of Vesta outside of the temple.

46. See below, VI. 614.

48. The sacred flame drew back as it were, and became nearly extinct. Nothing more terrified the Romans than the extinction of the Vestal flame; it was to them a sign, as Dionysius says, τοῦ ἀφαισμοῦ τῆς πόλεως.

50. Opes, the kingdom. He here gives the reason why Amulius interfered, not that of his calling him contemptor æqui.

51, 52. He had already related this at length, II. 385, et seq.

53, 54. It was the common tradition, it was in the poem of Ennius, which every one knew, and was probably the subject of some of those old ballads about Romulus, which Dionysius says still existed in his time.

55. Larentia, the wife of the shepherd, Faustulus, and nurse of Romulus and Remus. All the MSS. but two read Laurentia.

56. Vestras, scil. tui et Larentiæ.--Opes, house, mode of living, etc.; see II. 413, on the aid rendered to the founders of Rome.

57, 58. The Larentalia were in December. The poet did not live to perform his promise; he probably could not write the Fasti.

Acceptus Geniis illa December habet.
 Martia ter senos proles adoleverat annos,
 Et suberat flavæ jam nova barba comæ : 60
 Omnibus agricolis armentorumque magistris
 Iliadæ fratres jura petita dabant.
 Sæpē domum veniunt prædonum sanguine læti,
 Et redigunt actos in sua rura boves.
 Ut genus audierunt, animos pater editus auget, 65
 Et pudet in paucis nomen habere casis :
 Romuleoque cadit trajectus Amulius ense,
 Regnaque longævo restituuntur avo.
 Mœnia conduntur, quæ, quamvis parva fuerunt,
 Non tamen expedit transiluisse Remo. 70
 Jam, modo qua fuerant silvæ pecorumque recessus,
 Urbs erat, æternæ quum pater urbis ait :
 Arbiter armorum, de cujus sanguine natus
 Credor, et ut credar, pignora certa dabo,
 A te principium Romano ducimus anno : 75
 Primus de patrio nomine mensis eat.
 Vox rata fit, patrioque vocat de nomine mensem.
 Dicitur hæc pietas grata fuisse deo.

away from Rome.—Acceptus geniis. On account of the Saturnalia, when indulgebant genio. See Virg. G. I. 300.

61, 62. This reminds one of the early proofs of his being born to rule, exhibited by Cyrus. It is by no means improbable, that his legend was transferred to Romulus and Remus. That of Paris (Mythology, p. 438,) is somewhat similar, as also that of Habis. See Justin. xlv. 4.

64. Actos, i. e. abactos, by the robbers.

65. Editus, told. Five MSS. read agnitus.

66. Nomen habere, scil. to have their fame confined to a few cottages.—Paucis, most MSS. read parvis.

70. A euphemism, sparing the fame of Romulus.

71. Pecorum. Three MSS. read pecudum, two nemorum, which Burmann prefers.

72. Æternæ urbis. So the Romans loved to call their city.

75. He thus returns to the subject in hand.

78. As he shewed by removing Romulus to heaven, and by giving victory and fame in arms to the Romans.

Et tamen ante omnes Martem coluere priores ;
 Hoc dederat studiis bellica turba suis ; 80
 Pallada Cecropidæ, Minoïa Creta Dianam,
 Vulcanum tellus Hypsipylea colit :
 Junonem Sparte Pelopeïadesque Mycenæ :
 Pinigerum Fauni Mænalis ora caput.
 Mars Latio venerandus erat, quia præsidet armis. 85
 Arma feræ genti remque decusque dabant.
 Quod si forte vacas, peregrinos inspicere fastos :
 Mensis in his etiam nomine Martis erit.
 Tertius Albanis, quintus fuit ille Faliscis :
 Sextus apud populos, Hernica terra, tuos. 90
 Inter Aricinos Albanaque tempora constant Factaque Telegoni moenia celsa manu.
 Quintum Laurentes, bis quintum Æquicolus asper,
 A tribus hunc primum turba Curensis habet.
 Et tibi cum proavis, miles Peligne, Sabinis 95
 Convenit : hic genti quartus utrique deus.

79. The poet now becomes a grammarian, and argues learnedly. —Priores, the Latins.

80. Hoc scil. the worship of Mars. Several MSS. read hæc.

81. Minoïa, etc. The Cretans worshiped a goddess named Dictynna, who was regarded as being the same as the Artemis of the other Greeks, and the Diana of the Latins. See Mythology, p. 100.

82. Tellus Hyps. Lemnos. The slaughter of the men of Lemnos by their wives, and the saving of Thoas, by his daughter Hypsipyle, is a well known event. When Valean was flung from Olympus, by Jupiter, he fell in Lemnos. Hom. Il. I. 93.

83. See VI. 47. Hom. Il. iv. 51.

84. Mænalis ora, like Ausonis ora, II. 94.

86. Remque decusque, wealth and fame.

87. Peregrinos, i. e. of other Italian peoples, and you will find that they also had a month called after Mars.

91, 92. The people of Aricia and of Tusculum follow the same rule as the Albans, making March the third month. According to Krebs, the construction is, Inter Ar. et Alb. et Teleg. manu facta mœnia celsa constant tempora. It is harsh taken any way.

94. First after three months, that is, the fourth.

95, 96. March was the fourth month also to the Pelignians, and their Sabine ancestors. For the best account of all these peoples of ancient Italy, see Niebuhr's Roman History.

Romulus, hos omnes ut vinceret ordine saltem,
 Sanguinis auctori tempora prima dedit.
 Nec totidem veteres, quot nunc, habuere Kalendas,
 Ille minor geminis mensibus annus erat. 100
 Nondum tradiderat victas victoribus artes
 Græcia, facundum, sed male forte genus.
 Qui bene pugnabat, Romanam noverat artem ;
 Mittere qui poterat pila, disertus erat.
 Quis tunc aut Hyadas, aut Pliadas Atlanteas 105
 Senserat, aut geminos esse sub axe polos ?
 Esse duas Arctos, quarum Cynosura petatur
 Sidoniis, Helicen Graja carina notet ?
 Signaque, quæ longo frater percenseat anno,
 Ire per hæc uno mense sororis equos ? 110
 Libera currebant, et inobservata per annum
 Sidera : constabat sed tamen esse deos.
 Non illi coelo labentia signa movebant,

97, 98. In reality he only followed the Alban, or rather general Latin calendar, in which March was the third month.

101, 102. Compare Hor. Epist. II. 1, 156. Virg. Æn. vi. 850.—Male forte, same as non forte, imbelles.

103, 104. War was the science of the Romans.—Pugnabat. Three MSS. read pugnarat.

105. The Hyades and Pleiades are always spoken of together by the poets, as being near each other in position.—Pliadas Atlanteas. See IV. 169, Πληιάδων Ἀτλανγενοῦν ἐπιτελλομενάων. Hesiod. See Mythology, p. 52 and 418.

106. The Arctic and Antarctic poles.

107, 108. Cynosure (κυνὸς οὐρά) was a name of the Lesser Bear : Helice (ἑλική) from its revolving round the pole, a name of the Greater Bear. Omnes qui Peioppnesum incolunt priore utuntur Arcto ; Phœnices autem, quam a suo inventore (Thaete) acceperunt, observant Cynosuram ; et hanc studiosius perspicendo diligentius navigare existimantur. Hygin Poët Astron. II. 2.

111. Libera, as being unobserved, left to themselves, as it were ; subjected to no laws.

112. Constabat, &c. Burmann and Gerig take the meaning to be : they believed the stars to be divinities. May it not be : nevertheless, though ignorant of astronomy, they believed in the gods ? A stroke at the learned infidelity of the poet's own days, like Gray's, "No very great wit, he believed in a god."

113, 114. A play on words as usual. Movere signa cœlestia seems rather harsh, but it is not without example. Numeri movent astra, Lucan, I. 640. Carmina quis ignes movimus aërios, Cinna in Anthol. Lat. T. I. p. 441. Movabant is the reading of seven MSS. six read notabant; all the rest tenebant.—Quæ magnum, etc. See Livy, II. 59. One of the best MSS. reads prodere, which Heinsius and Bentley (on Hor. Ep. I. 67,) prefer.

115, 116. A bundle of hay tied on a pole, is said to have been the standard used by the Romans in their early days.—Tuas, of Germanicus.

118. Manipularis. The soldiers belonging to one company, that is one manipulus, or standard, were called manipulares.

119--122. See Introduction, § 2.

119. Indociles, untaught. This passive sense is not unusual.—Ratione, science scil. astronomy.

120. The Lustres or periods of five years, were smaller by ten months, two for each year, at that time when there were but ten months in the year. Gierig's note is "Lustra quinquennalia tunc nondum condebantur a Romanis." This looks as if he did not understand the passage, though Neapolis had briefly, but clearly explained it.

124. See above, I. 33.

126. Spatii novis, the decades.

127. Pares. This is the reading of the best MSS. and editions; the greater number of the MSS. read patres. It is difficult to ascertain the meaning of the poet here. Scaliger, Lipsius and Dan. Heinsius think he means the members of the senate, who were equals in age or in property, See Livy I. 8 and 17, and, as Niebuhr has shown, it is highly probable that the Roman senate originally consisted of one hundred members divided into ten decuries. On the other hand Neapolis who is followed by Gierig, understands it of the army, as in each legion the soldiers equal in age and strength, were divided into ten centuries,

Romulus, Hastatos instituitque decem ;
 Et totidem Princeps, totidem Pilanus habebat

 Cedit ab Iliacis laurea cana focis.

(centum denos orbes) of each of the three ranks, viz. Hastati, Principes and Pilani or Triarii. The passage is exceedingly obscure, and I cannot satisfy myself respecting it; I however rather incline to the opinion of the first named critics, and the circumstance of patres being the reading of so many MSS. proves that it has generally been so understood. In this case we should place a colon after Romulus, and a comma or semicolon after decem.

130. There were three hundred Equites in each legion, each mounted on a horse supported by the state, hence called legitimus. They were divided into ten turmæ or troops.

131, 132. The three divisions of the Roman Patricians: the Ramnes were the original Romans, the Titiensis the Sabines; the origin of the Luceres is a mere conjecture. See Niebuhr's Rom. Hist. Vol. 291-- 293.

134. See above, I. 35.

136. Signa, proofs or arguments. He goes on with farther proofs of March having been the first month of the ancient Roman year.

137—142. The laurels were changed in the month of March, at the houses of the Flamens, and of the Rex Sacrorum, the temple of Vesta, and the Curia Prisca, by which last, Neapolis understands the four ancient Curie, (See above II. 527,) which still, a Festus tells us, remained in Rome, the singular being employed for the plural.—Vesta quoque, etc. Does he speak of a statue of Vesta? See above on v. 45. The following passages are of importance. Romani initio annum decem mensibus computabant, a Martio auspicantes; adeo ut ejus die prima de (in?) aris Vestalibus ignem accenderent; mutarent viri-

143, 144. Hujus etiam mensis prima die ignem novum Vestæ aris accendebant ut, incipiente anno, cura denuo servandi novati ignis inciperet. Macrob. ut supra.—Arcana and Dicitur, because none but the Vestals dare enter the temple.

145, 146. A second proof is, the festival of Anna Perenna being in this month. See below, v. 523, et seq.—Fides, proof, ground of belief.

147, 148. A third argument; previous to the second Punic war, the magistrates, that is, the consuls, as it would appear, used to enter on their offices in March. The poet is not quite correct in this assertion: the Regifugium (see above, II. 685,) was at the end of February; hence, of course, the first consuls entered on their office in March; but A. U. C. 291, the day was the Kal. Sext. A. U. C. 304, the Ides of May, and from A. U. C. 600, the time of the Hannibalian war, the Kal. Jan. It is probable that the poet, knowing that this last change was made A. U. C. 600, inferred from the Regifugium, that previously the consuls had begun to exercise their magistracy in March. There is no proof that he studied the Annals with a critical eye.—Perfide Pœne. Hannibal, with the usual Roman calumny of the greatest man of antiquity.

149. A fourth and incontrovertible argument.

151. Oliviferis. The Sabine land was famous for olives. Columella, v. 8, 5. Mutusca, in that country, is called by Virgil (Æn. vii. 711,) olivifera.—Deductus, the proper term to denote his being brought with pomp and ceremony to Rome. One MS. reads devec-tus.

153. Samio, Pythagoras, who was erroneously supposed to have been the instructor of Numa.—Qui posse, etc. a periphrasis of

154. Egeria. See below, v. 261, et seq.

155. In consequence of the imperfect nature of the Roman year, and the arbitrary manner in which the Pontifices, for party and political purposes, made the intercalations, it had fallen into such sad confusion, that the festivals fell at the wrong parts of the year. Accordingly, Julius Cæsar, as Pontifex Maximus, with the aid of M. Flavius and of Sosigenes, made it correspond with the course of the sun, after the manner of the Egyptian year. For this purpose, he had to add no less than sixty-seven days to the year 708. These he inserted between November and December, and, as the intercalary month also fell in this year, it consisted of fifteen months.

157---160. Cæsar was not yet a god, but the poet could not let pass an occasion of displaying his wit, and flattering the imperial family.

161. Moras Solis. The time the son spends in the signs of the Zodiac.

162. Exactis, certain.

163---166. The Julian year of 365 days 6 hours; the day, which the hours of four years made, being added at the end of the lustre. —Junxit. Two MSS. read auxit. —Quarta. Many MSS. read quinta. —Consummatur, to complete, to make up of parts. Some MSS. have consumatur, which Heinsius preferred.

167. The poet now begins to inquire of the god why the Matronalia, a festival on which the matrons sacrificed to Juno, and sent presents to each other, and received them from their husbands, should be on the Kalends of the month sacred to the god of war. The deity assigns five causes.

168. Witness Homer's invocations to the Muses.

169. "Cum a viris soleas coli," Gierig. When you preside over manly occupations, is the interpretation of Lenz. May it not be, Since thine occupations are all of a manly character?

173, 174. I, a god whose chief value is in arms, am now, for the first time, called to the pursuits of peace. By the poet or by the matrons? Gressus, etc. alluding, perhaps, to his name Gradivus, v. 169.

177. See above, I. 101.

179. First cause, the rape of the Sabines.

180. Hujus, scil. Romæ. Some MSS. read urbis.

184. The straw-roofed cottage, said to have been the abode of Romulus, was still standing on the Palatine, in the time of the poet.

Cum pare quæque suo coëunt volucresque feræque,

195, 196. They (the neighbouring peoples) have the connubium, or intermarry with nations at ever so great a distance, but their women all looked down on the Romans.

197. Patriam, like thy father's, to take by force what was refused to entreaty.

198. Tolle preces, away with entreaties. Thus, tolle moras, Met. xiii. 556. Tolle querelas, Hor. Ep. I. 12. 3.

199, 200. Consus, etc. In this parenthesis the god addresses the poet. The readings of the MSS. differ very much here. Most have Illo festa die dum s. s. facis, making it a part of the advice of the god to his son. Heinsius followed those which read, Ipsa festa die d. s. s. canes. Illo or illa—festa or facta—canes, canas, coles, facis, are the readings of various MSS. The present reading, with canet instead of canas, was proposed by Gronovius, and adopted by Gierig. The Consualia were on the XV. Kal. Sept. It is a pity that the poem does not go so far, as Ovid might have given us some additional information respecting Consus. See Mythology, p. 473.

202. It is not at all unlikely that, as Donza supposes, he glances here at the war between Julius Cæsar, and his son-in-law, Pompey.

203. The war lasted to the third year.

205. Dictam, appointed.

206. Nurus, Hersilia, the wife of Romulus.

219. The construction is, ut (feminæ quæ erant) passis capillis tetigere, etc.

223. Seen for the first time.

224. Taubner thinks that by pinching the babes, they made them cry Ah! vœ! which sounded like ave! Much as Ovid loved to play on words, I can hardly suspect him of this.

230. Œbalides. See I. 260.

231—234. Second cause. Was this the real cause, or is it because Ilia was a mother by me, that the matrons hold their feast on the Kalends of my month ?

235---244. Third cause. It was fit that in the season of fecundity the matrons should pray to Juno for offspring. Compare this description of the spring with that in I. 151, et seq. See also Hor. Car. iv. 7.---Hiems. adop. gel. the glacialis hiems of Virgil.---Victæ. Several MSS. read lapsæ ; one mæstæ. Heinsius proposes ictæ, but as Burmann justly observes, why alter so excellent a reading as victæ ?---Detonsæ, some of the older MSS. read excussæ.---Virida. This is the reading of the best and oldest MSS. and was adopted by Heinsius. Burmann and Gierig follow those which read uvida ; some have humida.---Tenero. Some MSS. read gravido, which is, perhaps, the true reading. See above, I. 152. One MS. reads in tumido.---Occultas vias, the cæca spiramenta of Virgil, G. I. 89.---Hora, season, like the Greek ὥρη.

Et pereunt victæ sole tepente nives ;

244. Taubner, who is followed by some translators, explains this line thus : " quarum proles vel militis officio fungatur, vel sacerdotio s. votis oportet." Its plain meaning is, as given by Gierig :

whose service and vows is childbirth. Et rudis ad partus et nova miles eram, says our poet (Her. xi. 48,) in the person of Canace. See above, II. 9.

245---248. The fourth cause, because the temple of Juno Lucina, on the Esquiline hill, was first opened for worship on the Kalends of March.

245. Ubi rex, etc. Ten MSS. read ibi rex R. two regi R. which reading is adopted by Heinsius, and retained by Gierig. The excubiæ were held by Romulus on the Esquiline, at the time that he suspected Titus Tatius of bad faith.---Agebat. Several of the best MSS. have habebat.

246. Esquilias alii scripserunt ab excubiis regis dictas. Varro, iv. 8. Ovid seems to follow the same etymology : the true one is from esculus.---Qui. This is the reading of all the MSS. Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig read qua.

251. The fifth cause. Juno, the mother of Mars, loves married women, who, in return, honor me. The Grecian Hera, by the way, was the mother of Ares ; but the same was not the case with the Italian Juno and Mars. See Mythology.—Matrum. Heinsius adopts matris on conjecture, which reading is received by Burmann and Gierig. Some MSS. have matres.

254. Cingite caput, of the statue of the goddess, says Gierig, perhaps of the worshipper.

259. As the Salii bore the sacred ancilia through the city on the Kalends of March, the poet now proceeds to enquire into the origin of this institution. See Livy, I. 20.

261. Nympha, scil. Egeria.—Nemori, etc. See v. 263—275.—Operata. Seven MSS. read adoperata.

262. Facta. Some MSS. read facta, others sacra.

263. Met. xv. 479, et seq. Virg. Æn. vii. 761, et seq. This account of the grove of Aricia is a complete digression in this place. Aricia, and its grove, lay at the foot of the Mons Albanus.

265. An Indiges, named Virbius, was worshiped here, who was identified with Hippolytus.

267, 268. This practice may be witnessed at the present day, in every country where the Roman Catholic religion prevails.—Longas sepes. The wall, says Neapolis, surrounding the sacred grove.

269, 270. It was the custom for women, whose prayers to this goddess had been heard, to carry lighted torches from the city to the grove of Aricia. See Propert, II. 23, 39.

271, 272. The priest of Diana, in this grove, called Rex Nemo-rensium, was always a runaway slave, who had slain his predecessor in office. He always went armed, to protect himself from aspirants to his dignity. Strabo calls this a barbarous and Scythian custom, and it led to the idea of the Arician Diana, being one with the Tauric Artemis.

274. Bibi. The other editions, following some MSS. read bibes.

283. Vertitur, is changed.

285. This legend was related in the same manner by the historian Valerius Antias, from whom Ovid probably took it. As Livy, I. 20, relates the matter differently, it probably was not in the Annals of Ennius. It was evidently founded on the adventure of Menelaus with Proteus. Hom. Od. iv. See also Virg. 321. Sum. ded. ab arce. The reading of the best MSS. is Valida perductus ab arce : some of the best have val. veniet ded. ab arce or arte ; some nostra perd. ab arte.

322. Nubila, etc. He mixes, according to custom, the Greek and Italian mythologies : the oath, by Styx, was peculiar to the former. See Hom. Od. v. 185.—Nubila, as the Styx, was supposed to exhale a dense vapour.

323. Carmina, magic verses.

325. Scire nefas homini. Is not for man to know. Quid crastina volveret ætas Scire nefas homini. Stat. Theb. III. 562. See Hor. Car. I. 11. 1.

327---330. Some modern writers suppose that the ancient Etruscans possessed the art of conducting the lightning which Franklin discovered, or, according to them, re-discovered, and that it is exhibited in this poetic narrative. Their conjecture is, they think, confirmed by the fate of Tullus Hostilius, which they attribute to his ignorance of the proper mode of conducting the electric fluid.---Minores, posterity.

337. Ambage remota. As this seems not by any means to accord with what follows, Gierig renders ambage circumlocution, as opposed to the brevity with which the god speaks. One MS. reads remissa. The dialogue of Jupiter and Numa will be easily understood.

342. Piscis. According to Plutarch, the mana. See above, II. 578, note.

346. Pignora certa, the ancile. Celestial gifts of this kind, on which the safety of the state were supposed to depend, were common in antiquity.

347. Æthera motum. Vidisti motu sonitus procurrere cælo. Profert, II. 16.

352. Crastina, scil. crastinas res, what will happen to-morrow.

357. Virg. Ec. viii. 14.---Rorataque. Many MSS. read rorata.

359. Acerno. Five MSS. read eburno, but see Met. iv. 486. Virg. Æn. viii. 178.

363. It was the custom of the Romans to cover their heads when praying, or performing any other religious rite, lest any thing of ill omen should present itself to their view. See Virg. Æn. iii. 405.

367. Evolverat. This is the reading of five of the best MSS. two read emerseerat, which Heinsius, Burmann and Gierig have received, and which I should prefer. See v. 517. Most read emoverat ; one commoverat, another ostenderat.

369. Sine nube. It was therefore supernatural. Compare Hor. Car. I. 34. 6. Virg. Æn. vii. 141.

371. Two of the best MSS.

read, A media subito cœlum discedere visum est, which Heinsius prefers. Virgil (Æn. ix. 20,) has medium video discedere cœlum, and if this last be, as I am inclined to think it is, the true reading, it is not unlikely that Ovid imitated this line of the Æneis : if it is not, the line is the work of some grammarian, and formed from the Virgilian verse.

372. Submisere. One MS. has surrexere manus, which Burmann prefers. For this sense of sub, see Virg. Ec. vi. 38. x. 74, submittere cornua. Petron. 126, 18, 3. Submissas tendunt alta ad Capitolia dextras. Silius, xii. 640.

377. Ancile. Ancile vocatum quia ex utroque latere erat recisum, ut summum infimumque latus

pateret, Festus. Ancilia dicta ab ancisu, quod ea arma, ab utraque parte, ut peltæ Thracum, incisa. Ancisia Saturnio in carmine. Varro, L. L. iv. Ovid evidently follows the same etymology. According to Juba, whom Plutarch copies, it is derived from ἀγκύλον, curved, and should be spelt ancyle. It is, however, certainly an old Latin word, and is by all Latin writers properly spelt with an i. It is well known that y is no Latin letter, yet we constantly meet Sylla for Sulla. From Plutarch's description of the ancile, we may collect that it was of an oval form.

381. Cælata, i. e. sculpta, or simply, made.

383. His morals were as perfect as his skill.

384. Clausit opus, simply, completed the work.—Ulli, some MSS. read illi; one illud, which Heinsius and Gierig have adopted.

387. The Salii, clad in brazen armour, and striking the ancilia with their daggers as they sang the old verses ascribed to Numa, went through the city dancing to the sound of pipes.

393. It was not considered lucky to marry on the Kalends of March, as the ancilia were carried on that day. This day was also considered inauspicious for commencing a journey. Suet. Otho. 8. Livy, xxxvii. 33.

396. Conditâ, laid up in the temple.

397, 398. The Flamen Dialis wore a peculiar kind of white hat, called apex, without which he never went out; his wife wore a flame-coloured robe, named venenatum, and a peculiar kind of band about her head, called rica. (See Gellius, N. A. x. 15,) hence the poet says, cincta. Cincta Flaminica veste velata Festus. Some MSS. have sancta; others capitis distincta, one apicatis cura. It was enjoined by law on the Flaminia, not to cut her nails, comb her hair, etc. on certain days.

399—402. One of the Fishes set acronychally on the 3d March, the V. Non.

403. Rorare genis. Five MSS. read rutilare; two comis.

405. The poet commits an error here. Arctophylax rises acronychally, instead of setting on the 5th March.

407. Vindemitor, προτρυσγητήρ, a star in the right shoulder of the Virgin, which now rises acronychally.

409. The story of Ampelos is told differently by Nonnus, in his Dionysiacs. See Mythology, p. 174.—Intonsum, denotes youth and beauty; it is therefore an epithet of Apollo, ακερσεκόμης.—Satyris, to denote the lewdness of the Nymph, says Burmann. It may, however, mean merely one of the Satyrs. Some MSS. read Satyro.

411, 412. These two lines were suspected by Heinsius. They are certainly very indifferent, but without them the narrative seems imperfect. Ovid would hardly have omitted an allusion to the name of Ampelos.

414. Vehit. This is the reading of five of the best MSS. all the rest have tulit.

415---428. On the 6th of the month, Prid. Non. A. U. C. 741. Augustus was made Pontifex Maximus. The P. M. presided over the Vestals.

417. Quisquis ades etc. The Vestals, as it would appear, who alone could enter the temple.---Canæ. This is the reading of two of the best MSS. ; the rest have castæ, one gratæ. See Virg. Æn. ix. 259.

422. Vides. All the older MSS. have videt or vident ; one Vesta videt.---Pignora juncta, the pledges of empire, in the temple of Vesta, were the Eternal Fire, and the Palladium (Livy, v. 52, xxvi. 27.)

to these now was joined.---Augustus. The force of flattery could no farther go.

423. This is the reading of three of the best MSS. and adopted by Heinsius, and the succeeding editors : the other MSS. have Di v. T. d. p. ferenti.---Dignissima præda, Vesta.

424. Gravis, i. e. gravatus, laden. See Virg. Æn. II. 296. Three MSS. read pius.

425. The Julian house into which Augustus had been adopted, derived their lineage from Æneas. I do not, however, see the relationship to Vesta, unless it be through Kronus, (Saturn) who was her father, and whose granddaughter, Venus, was the mother of Æneas.

428. Dux, Augustus. This was probably written before the poet left Rome, and he did not alter it.

429—448. An account of Vejovis, whose temple was dedicated by Romulus, on the Nones of March.

429. The reading of the older MSS. was Una nota est Marti : Nonis sacra.—Una nota, the Nones of March were distinguished by one mark in the Fasti, one event had taken place on them.

430. The space between the Arx and the Capitol, in which the Asylum and the temple of Vejovis were, was called Inter duos lucos. Livy, I. 8, τὸ μεθόριον ἐν οἶν ἑρυσμῶν. Dionysius, II. 15.

435. He now enquires into the origin of the name of this god.

437. The statue of Vejovis represented a youthful figure, without any thunderbolts, in his hand. He may, therefore, be Young Jupiter.

443. There was the figure of a she-goat standing beside it; a farther proof, as Jupiter was suckled by the goat, Amalthea.

445. The country-people, called ill-grown corn vegrandia, (Vegrandes et imbecillæ oves. Varro, R. R. II.) and vescus with them, was equivalent to parvus. From all this he infers, that Vejovis is Little Jupiter. This is not convincing. See Mythology, p. 468, where it is shewn that Vejovis was probably a god of the underworld.—Colonæ. Many of the best MSS. read colono. Eleven have colone (colonæ); one colonæ, which Heinsius adopted. Gierig follows the MSS. which read coloni, and he is, perhaps, right in so doing.

449, 450. The heliac rising of Pegasus on the Nones. For Pegasus, see Hesiod. Th. 280, et seq. and 325. Met. iv. 784, v. 256. Mythology, pp. 223, 364.—Variabunt. Eight MSS. read vallabunt, which Heinsius adopted.

451. Gravida cervice is rather a curious mode of expression. Medusa was pregnant by Neptune, and when Perseus cut off her head, Pegasus sprang forth (prosiluit, ἐξέθοπε Hes) with the blood: hence the poet says, gravida cervice. He was named Pegasus, as being born at the springs (πηγάς) of Ocean.

455. See the story of Belleophon.

456. The Horse-fount (ἵππου-κρήνη Hippocrene) in Aonia (Bœotia), said to have been produced by a stroke of the hoof of Pegasus.—Fodit. Nine of the best MSS. read fudit. Rutilius (Itin. I. 264,) says, Musarum ut latices unguia fodit equi. Avienus (in Arat. Phæn. Equo.) cornuque excita repente Lympha Camenalem fudit procul Hippocrenen. I think fudit the more poetic term.

458. The astronomers of the present day reckon eighty-nine stars in Pegasus.

459—516. The Crown of Ariadne rises acronychally on the 8th March, the VIII. Id. For the story of Theseus and Ariadne, see Met. viii. 175---182. Ars Amandi, I. 531---564, Her. x. Hor. Car. II. 19. Catul. lxiv. 52, et seq. Mythology, pp. 411, 412.

the beauty of his hair. See Met. III. 421 and 555, iv. 13. The common reading was, what appears the most obvious, depexis. Some of the best MSS. read depexos, agreeing with Indos.

466. Some of the best MSS. read venit. For the Indian expedition of Bacchus, see Mythology, P. I. chap. xiv.

476. My case is told or repeated.

480. Dedoluisse, have ended my grief; have died.

493. At puto, etc. Ironically.

495. See Hor. Sat. I. 3, 38.

499. Matrem Pasiphaë. The story is well known.

500. Bacchus was represented horned, in consequence of the identification of him with the Phrygian Sabazius. Mythology, p. 168. Hence he was called βουκερως, ταυρόκερως.—Me tua, etc. The best and most numerous MSS. read Me juvat et lædit: one, me viat et lædit; another me tua me lædit or laudat: three of the best have the reading of the text, the rest me tua sed lædit. Heinsius gives from conjecture, me tua. At hic laudi est, which Gierig has received.

503. A play on words as usual.

Tu mihi juncta toro mihi juncta vocabula sumes ;
 Jam tibi mutatæ Libera nomen erit ;
 Sintque tuæ tecum faciam monumenta coronæ,
 Vulcanus Veneri quam dedit, illa tibi.

 Qui tamen ejecta si forte tenebitur unda,
 Cœlius accipiat pulverulentus equos.

Idibus est Annæ festum geniale Perennæ,
 Haud procul a ripis, advena Tibri, tuis.

512. Libera. The Italian religion, as I have observed after Niebuhr, (Mythology, p. 455,) delighted in representing the deities presiding over any object in pairs of males and females. Hence, with Liber, the god of wine, was joined a goddess Libera, and when the Greek and Italian religions came to be mingled, she was identified with Proserpine. Ovid alone makes her the same with Ariadne. I forgot to notice this under the head Liber Pater (Mythology, p. 469). I should be inclined to derive Liber from libo, λειβω, instead of libero.

514. Vulcanus Veneri. One MS. reads Neptunus Thetidi. I suppose Homer was running in the head of whoever he was that made this improvement.—Tibi. One MS. reads mihi, which Burmann has received.

517—522. On the 14th or Prid.

Id. was another Equiria.—Demerserit. Several of the good MSS. read quum deseret or deserit; others quot demserit; some quum demserit; three of the best dimiserit; others demiserit; one totidemque remisertit; another of the best dimerserit, whence Heinsius formed the present reading.

518. Purpureum, bright, see II. 74. Virg. Æn. vi. 641, purpureum lumen, scil. Solis.

522. If the Tiber, as was so frequently the case, had overflowed the Campus Martius, the races were run on the Campus Martialis on the Cœlian hill.

523—696. On the Ides was the festival of Anna Perenna.—Geniale, i. e. quo genio indulgetur. See v. 58.

524. Between the Milvian bridge and the point of confluence with the Anien.

 Arserat Æneæ Dido miserabilis igne: 545
 Arserat exstructis in sua fata rogis:
 Compositusque cinis, tumulique in marmore carmen

527. Sub Jove. See II. 299.

529. Ibi. Several MSS. read sibi.

532. Ad numerum. They reckon the cups.

536. Suit the action to the word by making gesticulations.

537. Posito, scil. in honour of the goddess.—Duras, awkward, inelegant.

541, 542. Heinsius and Burmann think with a great deal of probability, that a good many verses are lost after this distich.

Burmans supposes that the monks who copied the MSS. left them out, on account of their indelicacy.

543. He now commences his enquiry into the character and history of Anna.—Errat, is uncertain. Six MSS. read errant.

544. Fabula nulla, no legend or tradition.

545. For the whole story of Dido and Æneas, see the Æneis I. and IV.—Arserat, the usual play on words.

brings Anna thither. Battus was the founder of the Grecian colony at Cyrene.

581. Crathidis. The Crathis was a river in Magna Græcia, near Thurii.

582. Parvus. Two MSS. read

Purus, which Heinsius and Gierig prefer. There are abundant instances of the use of purus in the sense of free from trees.

587. Subducere, to draw up, to furl.

594. Is. Two MSS. read hic.

Figitur ad Laurens ingenti flamine litus
 Puppis, et expositis omnibus hausta perit. 600
 Jam pius Æneas regno nataque Latini
 Auctus erat, populos miscueratque duos.
 Litore dotali solo comitatus Achate
 Secretum nudo dum pede carpit iter,
 Adspicit errantem, nec credere sustinet Annam 605
 Esse. Quid in Latios illa veniret agros?
 Dum secum Æneas, Anna est! exclamat Achates.
 Ad nomen vultus sustulit illa suos.
 Quo fugiat? quid agat? quos terræ quærat hiatus?
 Ante oculos miseræ fata sororis erant. 610
 Sensit et alloquitur trepidam Cythereiūs heros:
 Flet tamen admonitu mortis, Elissa, tuæ.
 Anna, per hanc juro, quam quondam audire solebas
 Tellurem fato prosperiore dari;
 Perque deos comites, hac nuper sede locatos, 615
 Sæpe meas illos increpuisse moras.
 Nec timui de morte tamen: metus abfuit iste.
 Hei mihi! credibili fortior illa fuit.
 Ne refer. Adspexi non illo pectore digna

 At tu, seu ratio te nostris appulit oris,
 Sive deus, regni commoda carpe mei.
 Multa tibi memores, nil non debemus Elissæ.

602. Populos duos. The Trojans and Aborigines, under the common name of Latins. See Livy, I. 2.

613. Italy.

615. Deos comites, the Penates which he had brought with him from Troy, Æn. I. 6, xii. 192.—Increpuisse, “signis quibusdam datis,” Gierig. Virgil does not mention this. Ovid was, perhaps, thinking of the message brought from Jupiter by Mercury, etc.

617. Morte scil. Didonis.

618. Credibile, than what I believed, or could have believed.

619. Ne refer, tell not the tale.

621, 622. Ratio, your own choice.—Deus, fortune. See Hor. Sat. I. 1, 2.

623. Memores, scil. sumus debere.

Nomine grata tuo, grata sororis, eris.
 Talia dicenti—neque enim spes altera restat— 625

 Orta Tyro regnum Libyca possedit in ora :
 Quam precor ut caræ more sororis ames.

 Mente premit tacita, dissimulatque fremens ;
 Dona que quum videat præter sua lumina ferri 635
 Multa palam, mitti clam quoque multa putat.
 Non tamen exactum, quid agat. Furialiter odit,
 Et parat insidias, et cupit ulta mori.
 Nox erat : ante torum visa est adstare sororis
 Squalenti Dido sanguinolenta coma, 640
 Et, Fuge, ne dubita, mæstum fuge, dicere, tectum,
 Sub verbum querulas impulit aura fores.
 Exsilit, et velox humili super arva fenestra
 Se jacit ;—audacem fecerat ipse timor—
 Quaque metu rapitur tunica velata recincta, 645
 Currit, ut auditis territa dama lupis.
 Corniger hanc cupidis rapuisse Numicius undis

 Sidonis interea magno clamore per agros

627. Paratus, dress. Met vi. 451.

633. Falsum vulnus, causeless wound of jealousy. Virg. Æn. I. 36, iv. 67 and 332. Two MSS. read tacitum.

635. Præter sua lumina, before her eyes. Seven MSS. limina. Heinsius puts a colon after ferri, and a comma after mitti.

637. Exactum. She has not yet determined.

642. Sub verbum as she spoke.

647. Corniger, a usual epithet of rivers, (Virg. G. IV. 371. Æn. viii. 77.) on account of their roaring or their windings. The Numicius was between Larentum and Lavinium.

 Jam quoque, quem secum tulerant, defecerat illos 665
 Victus et humanis usibus apta Ceres.
 Orta suburbanis quædam fuit Anna Bovillis

654. "Si Nympha antea Anna dicta, non opus erat ab amne nomen suum deducere," Gierig. The fact is, the poet here confounds two etymons, an old one from amne perenne, and a later one from Anna the sister of Dido. Was Anna mentioned in the poem of Nævius? or did Virgil first give it vogue? It is a Semitic name, and occurs in Scripture.

657. A second opinion, Anna is the Moon.

658. A third, she is Themis; a fourth Io or Isis.

659, 660. A fifth, made her a daughter of Atlas, and one of the Nymphs who reared Jupiter. These however are said to have been the two daughters of Melissa, or simply the nymph Amalthea.

There is however another tradition which commits the rearing of the infant deity to the Hyades, who were the daughters of Atlas.

661. A sixth theory, derived Anna from anus, and devised the following legend, which the poet thinks not unlike the truth.

663. The famous secession of the Plebs. A. U. C. 260, to the hill beyond the Anien, three miles from Rome, afterwards named from this circumstance the Mons Sacer.

667. Bovillæ or Bovilla was a Latin town not far from Rome, on the Appian Way.—Suburbanis does not mean close to the city, for Horace (Ep. I. 7, 77.) calls his Sabine country-seat suburbana rura.

Pauper, sed multæ sedulitatis, anus.
 Illa levi mitra canos redimita capillos
     Fingebat tremula rustica liba manu. 670
 Atque ita per populum fumantia mane solebat
     Dividere. Hæc populo copia grata fuit.
 Pace domi facta signum posuere Perennæ,
     Quod sibi defectis illa tulisset opem.
 Nunc mihi, cur cantent, superest, obscena puellæ, 672
     Dicere : nam coëunt certaue probra canunt.
 Nuper erat dea facta ; venit Gradivus ad Annam,
     Et cum seducta talia verba facit :
 Mense meo coleris : junxi mea tempora tecum :
     Pendet ab officio spes mihi magna tuo. 680
 Armifer armiferæ correptus amore Minervæ
     Uror, et hoc longo tempore vulnus alo.
 Effice, dî studio similes coëamus in unum.
     Conveniunt partes hæ tibi, comis anus.

673. Can any thing be more silly than this account of the origin of an ancient Italian deity? I have elsewhere (Mythology p. 479) observed, what little taste and elegance of imagination, and I may add sense, the Romans displayed in the origins which they invented for their gods. The real etymon of Anna Perenna is, I think, annus, as the poet himself would appear to have seen: see vv. 145, 146. Perhaps, according to the principle noticed above on v. 512, she was a female corresponding to a god Annus. It is curious to observe the resemblance which has been traced out between her and the Indian Anna Purna in the Asiatic Researches.

675. He now undertakes to explain by a legend, why at the festival of Anna Perenna in-decorous verses were sung by young women. The mystics would here, of course, talk to us of the symbolic wisdom of ancient priests and sages, but the more probable reason is to be found in the rude simplicity of an agricultural race, like the ancient Latins, and other peoples of Italy, which also gave origin to the Fescennine verses. On occasions like this, however, one should always bear in mind these words of Johnson, "The original of ancient customs is commonly unknown; for the practice often continues after the cause has ceased; and concerning superstitious ceremonies it is vain to conjecture; for what reason did not dictate, reason cannot explain." Rasselas, Chap. 48.

- Dixerat : illa deum promisso ludit inani, 685
 Et stultam dubia spem trahit usque mora.
 Sæpius instanti, Mandata peregrimus, inquit :

 Oscula sumpturus subito Mars adspicit Annam ;
 Nunc pudor elusum, nunc subit ira, deum.
 Ridet amatorem caræ nova diva Minervæ ;
 Nec res hac Veneri gratior ulla fuit.
 Inde joci veteres obscenaque dicta canuntur, 695
 Et juvat hanc magno verba dedisse deo.
 Præteriturus eram gladios in principe fixos,

696. Verba dedisse, to have deceived.

697. Julius Cæsar was slain on the Ides of March, A. U. C. 709. The senate directed, that in future this day should be called Parricidium, and that no senate should ever sit on it. Suet. Cæs. 88.

698. Locuta, scil. to the poet.

703. Vidit. Two MSS. read servat. Compare Virg. Ec. v. 56.

704. A temple was raised to Cæsar. A. U. C. 712. three years after his death.

707. It was observed by the historians that all the murderers of Cæsar perished within three years after him.

April is the cosmic rising of the middle of the Scorpion.

713—790. On the following day were the Liberalia, which the poet now sings.

716. Parvus inermis erat, scil. Jupiter. Most MSS. read eras, applying it to Bacchus. Gierig is not satisfied with either reading, and he thinks the passage corrupt.

718. Expletum completed, brought to maturity.—Onus, most MSS. opus.

719. The expedition of Bacchus.

721. Pentheus. See Met. iii.

722. Met. iv. 22.

723. Met. iii. 597, et seq.

726. Vilis anus, a mean, or common old woman. Seven MSS. three of which are of the best, read Vitisator, but the correctness of the present text is proved by the following passage of Varro L. L. V. Liberalia dicta, quod per totum oppidum eo die sedent sacerdotes Liberi, hedera coronatæ anus, cum libis et foculo pro empotore sacrificantes.

flumina: the present, which is far preferable, is that of three of the best and four other MSS.

741—744. Compare Virgil G. IV. 64, et seq. The practice is too well known among ourselves to require any elucidation.

743. Levis senex, Silenus, who was bald. Most MSS. read lenis.

769. Nysiades. There was a Nysa in Bœotia, in Thrace, in India, in Arabia. It was probably the Bœotian that the poet meant. See Met. III. 313.—Noverca, Juno.

771. On the Liberalia, the youths who had attained the age of sixteen laid aside the prætecta, which they had hitherto worn and assumed, the toga virilis, pura, recta, or libera, as it was variously called. The poet gives four reasons for its being done on the Liberalia.

773. First reason, Bacchus, like Apollo, was ever young. See Met. iv. 17.

775. Second reason, because he was a father, (Liber Pater.) The Romans however called all their gods patres. ex. gr. Jupiter, (Jovis pater Ζεὺς πατήρ), Dis-

Commendant curæ numinibusque tuis ;

 Sed dîs, non studiis ille dabatur honos.
 Luce sua ludos uvæ commentor habebat : 785
 Quos cum tædifera nunc habet ipse dea.
 Ergo, ut tironem celebrare frequentia posset,

 Itur ad Argeos—qui sint, sua pagina dicet—pter, Mars-pter, Janus pater, Pater Neptunus, Pater Silvanus. (Hor. Epod. ii. 21.) etc.

777. Third reason, and perhaps the true one, because his name Liber coincided with the adjective liber.

779. Fourth reason, because as the people used to come from the country into Rome on the Liberalia to see the plays, it was deemed a good opportunity for giving a youth the toga virilis, when all his friends and relations were present.

781. Alluding to L. Quinctius Cincinnatus, ille dictator ab aratro. Flor. I. 11.

782. Alluding, perhaps, to the story of Scipio, who, on shaking the hand of a country voter, as he canvassed him, said, Prythee, friend, dost walk on thy hands? and thereby lost his election. I, however, rather think that the poet had only in view the effeminacy of his own days.

784. Studiis, scil. musices et poeseos, taste.

786. Tædifera dea, Ceres.

787. Tironem. The youth who took the manly gown was named a tiro, and the day, dies tirocinii. He was accompanied from the Capitol to the Forum, and thence home by a great number of his relatives, friends and clients.—Celeb. freq. Frequentia me usque ad Capitolium celebravit. Cic. Una dies media est, et fiunt sacra Minervæ, poses that the Argei were the reputed burial-places of some of these noble Argives.—Sua Pagina, its own part of the Fasti. He means, perhaps, V. 621, et seq.

793, 794. On the same day (XVI. Kal. April,) the Kite rises acronychally.—Proclinis is the reading of two of the best MSS.; five of the best read proclivis, some have declivis; the greater number declinis.—Miluus, a trisyllable (like Iason, Iulus, Iambus, silua, Suevos, etc.) is the reading of the best MSS.: the rest have Milvius. The constellation of the Kite, Krebs says, is not mentioned by any Greek writer on astronomy, before the time of Ovid. It is quite uncertain where he got the following legend. 798. That is to slay the monster about to be described.

801. Compare Virg. Æn. vi. 549.

803, 804. This reminds one strongly of the sacrifice of the horse of Hindoo Mythology. See Southey's Curse of Kehama, viii.

805. Briareus. See Hom. Il. I. 402. According to Homer and Hesiod, Briareus was one of the Hundred-handed, and the ally of Jupiter. Ovid appears to make him a Titan.—Adamante. The adamas of the poets is iron, or rather steel. Adamas lapis durissimus, qui nec ferro cedere dicitur. Pliny, H. N. xxvii. 4.

809—850. On the XIV. Kal.

April, began the festival of Minerva, named the Quinquatrus, Quinquatres, or Quinquatria.

810. Nomina quæ. Several MSS. have numinaque adjunctis. Quinquatrus : hic dies unus a nominis errore observatur, proinde ut sint quinque dies, dictus ab Tusculanis ; post diem sextum Idus similiter vocatus Sexatrus, et post diem septimum Septimatrus ; sic hic, quod erat post diem quintum Idus, Quinquatrus, Varro, L. L. V. Festus gives the same derivation. It is in favour of Ovid that the festival lasted exactly five days, but this may have been the effect, and not the cause of the name.

811. The gladiatorial combats with which the festival of Minerva, as the goddess of war, were celebrated, did not begin till the second day. As the Minerva of the Romans was certainly no war-goddess, till she was identified with the Pallas Athena of Greece, I am inclined to think that the origin of this mode of worshiping her will be found in the account given by Herodotus, (iv. 180, 189) of the worship of the Lybian goddess, whom he makes to be the prototype of Pallas Athena. To shew how modes of worship were transferred ; the Athenians had, in the time of the empire, combats of gladiators in a theatre on their Acropolis, in honour of their patron-goddess. See Philostratus' Life of Apollonius, L. iv. c. 7. For Pallas Athena and Minerva, see Mythology, pp. 119 and 462.

812. Illa nata die. "Illa die nata Minerva, quatenus ei templum in Aventino dedicatum, quod notat Verrius. Etiam Calend. Vin-dob. N. Minervæ." Gierig.

815. See Juvenal. Sat. x. 118.—Ornate, scil. with garlands.

816. Doctus, skilful.

817, 818. Spinning.

819, 820. Weaving.—Stantes telas, the stamina or warp.

821---826. The fuller, the dyer, the shoemaker and the carpenter. For Tychius, see Hom. II. vii. 221, for Epeus. Id. Od. viii. 492, Virg. Æn. II. 264.

- Nec quisquam invita faciet bene vincula plantæ
 Pallade, sit Tychio doctior ille licet ;
 Et licet antiquo manibus collatus Epeo 825
 Sit prior, irata Pallade mancus erit.
 Vos quoque, Phœbea morbos qui pellitis arte,
 Munera de vestris pauca referte deæ.
 Nec vos, turba fere censu fraudata, magistri
 Spernite ; discipulos attrahet illa novos. 830
 Quique moves cælum, tabulamque coloribus uris,
 Quique facis docta mollia saxa manu.
 Mille dea est operum : certe dea carminis illa est.
 Si mereor, studiis adsit amica meis.
 Cœlius ex alto qua mons descendit in æquum, 835
 Hic ubi non plana est, sed prope plana via est :
 Parva licet videas Captæ delubra Minervæ,
 Quæ dea natali cœpit habere suo.
 Nominis in dubio causa est. Capitale vocamus
 Ingenium sollers : ingeniosa dea est. 840
 An, quia de capitis fertur sine matre paterni

827, 828. The Physicians. There is an inscription in Gruter Minnervæ Medicæ. The reader needs not to be reminded of the medical character of Phœbus Apollo.

829. This is a sadly perplexing line. Seven MSS. read censu fraudante; others sensu fraudante; four sensus fraudata; one of the best censu fraudata; two of the best sensu fraudare; one of the best turba feræ sensus fraudare; two verba feri; three deam, censu fraudata, which Burmann and Gierig have adopted. The present reading is the common one, with a slight change of feri, which gives no good sense, to feræ. Matthiæ conjectured, and gave the same reading. I think the poet meant the bad payment and bad treatment which the school-masters so frequently met with at Rome.

831, 832. The sculptors, painters and statuaries.---Tabulam, etc. The Encaustæ, as they were called, who burned-in wax, spread over the place to be painted.---Mollia, smooth or soft, as it were, to the eye.

835. There was a small temple of Minerva Capta on the rise of the Cœlian hill, of which name the poet now tries, but in vain, to discover the origin.---Captæ. Six MSS. capitæ; others castæ. This shews the negligence and temerity of the transcribers.

838. See on v. 812.

Vertice cum clypeo prosiluisse suo ?

 Hic quoque corruptus cum semine nuntiat Helles
 Et juvenis Phixi funera sorte peti.
 Usque recusantem cives, et tempus, et Ino

843. It was the custom when a town was taken, to bring its gods to the abode of the conquerors.--- Falerii was captured by Camillus, A. U. C. 361. See Livy, v. 24.

844. Littera prisca, the old name of the goddess, or the old books, the Annals.

845, 846. This passage is difficult. For ex illo most MSS. have exilio; many for reperta, read recepta. It is the fures, and not the furta, which should be punished. Capitalis lucus, ubi si quid violatum est, capite violatoris, (two MSS. vigilatoris) expiatur. Festus.

849, 850. On the last day of the Quinquatrus, the X. Kal. Apr. was the Tubilustrum. According to Varro and Festus, the trumpets were purified in the Atrium Sutorium. On the X. Kal. Jun. there was a Tubilustrum to Vulcan. For deæ in this place, three of the best MSS. read deo, which Heinsius adopts, and understands it of Mars. Gesenius also prefers this reading. In Verrius, we find Ferix Martis, and Laur. Lydus (de Mensibus, p. 85,) says, τῇ πρὸ δέκα καλανδῶν Ἀπριλλίων κάθαρμὸς σάλπιγγος καὶ κίνησις τῶν ὀπλῶν, καὶ τιμαὶ Ἄρεως καὶ Νερίνης, ἣν ἠξίουσι εἶναι τὴν Ἀθηνᾶν νερίνη γάρ (ἐν τῇ Σαβίνων γλώσσῃ) ἡ ἀνδρία ἐστὶ. This Nerine-Minerva was probably the fortis dea.

851---876. The sun enters the Ram, and the poet takes the occasion of telling the story of Phrixus and Helle. See Mythology, p.

- Compulerant regem jussa nefanda pati ; 860
 Et soror, et Phrixus velati tempora vittis
 Stant simul ante aras junctaque fata gemunt.
 Adspicit hos, ut forte pependerit æthere mater,
 Et ferit attonita pectora nuda manu :

 Utque fugam capiant, aries nitidissimus auro
 Traditur. Ille vehit per freta longa duos.
 Dicitur infirma cornu tenuisse sinistra
 Femina, quum de se nomina fecit aquæ. 870
 Pæne simul periit, dum vult succurrere lapsæ,
 Frater, et extentas porrigit usque manus.
 Flebat, ut amissa gemini consorte pericli,
 Cacruleo junctam nescius esse deo.
 Litoribus tactis aries fit sidus : at hujus 875

 Canuerint herbæ rore recente quater ; 880
 Janus adorandus, cumque hoc Concordia mitis, Et Romana Salus, araque Pacis erit.

296.---Nunc, on the last day of the Quinquatrus, as it was the day after the XI. Kal. Apr. which last was that of the entrance of the sun into the Ram. See the Kalendarium.

863. Pependerit. Their mother was Nephelè, cloud. See also v. 805.

865. Thebes was built by the Sparti (Sown) who sprang from the serpent's teeth.

870. The Hellespont, Helle's-sea.

874. Cæruleo deo. Neptune.

877. The vernal equinox on the VII. Kal. Apr.—Eos, Aurora.

879. Four days after the VII. Kal. Apr. was a festival of Janus, Concord, Health and Peace. Augustus raised statues to these three last-named deities.

Luna regit menses. Hujus quoque tempora mensis Finit Aventino Luna colenda jugo.

883, 884. Servius Tullius built a temple to Diana on the Aventine, Livy, I. 45. Tac. An. xv. 41. Ovid, like the other poets, makes Diana and Luna, as they really were, identical. See Mythology, p. 463, ALMA, fave, dixi, geminorum mater Amorum.

Ad vatem vultus rettulit illa suos.

Quid tibi, ait, mecum? certa majora canebas.

Num vetus in molli pectore vulnus habes?

Scis dea, respondi, de vulnere.—Risit, et æther 5

Protinus ex illa parte serenus erat.—

Saucius, an sanus, numquid tua signa reliqui?

Tu mihi propositum, tu mihi semper opus.

Quæ decuit, primis sine crimine lusimus annis:

Nunc teritur nostris area major equis. 10

1. The poet, when about to commence the month of April, invokes Venus, to whom that month was sacred.—Divi. Four MSS. followed by Heinsius and Gierig, read vati, which is, I think, more Ovidian.—Gem. Amor. It is doubtful who these two Loves were, whether the **Epos* and **Iuepos* of Hesiod (Th. 201.) i. e. the Cupido and Jocus of Horace, (Car. I. 2. 33.) or the celestial and terrestrial Loves of Plato, or the Eros and Anteros of Cicero, (N. D. iii. 23.) See Mythology, p. 112.

4. Alluding to his Amores, etc.

See II. 5.

5. Risit, etc. Compare Virg. Æn. I. 225.

7. The poets of the Augustan age were fond of comparing love to military service, and employed the terms of Roman discipline when speaking of it.

9. Love was suitable and becoming to youth. Compare Hor. Ep. I. 14, 36.

10. See II. 360. Pulsanda est magnis area major equis. Amor. III. 15, 18, alluding to the races in the Circus.

Tempora cum causis annalibus eruta priscis,
 Lapsaque sub terras orta que signa cano.
 Venimus ad quartum, quo tu celeberrima, mensem ;
 Et vatem, et mensem scis, Venus esse tuos.
 Mota Cytheriaca leviter mea tempora myrto 15
 Contigit, et, Cœptum perface, dixit, opus.
 Sensimus, et subito causæ patuere dierum.
 Dum licet, et spirant flamina, navis eat.
 Si qua tamen pars te de fastis tangere debet,
 Cæsar, in Aprili, quo tenearis, habes. 20
 Hic ad te magna descendit imagine mensis,
 Et fit adoptiva nobilitate tuus.

 Alterius voluit mensis habere locum ;
 Principiumque sui generis revolutaque quærens
 Sæcula, cognatos venit ad usque deos. 30

11, 12. Repeated from I. 1, 2, 7.

15. The myrtle was the favourite plant of Venus. Dixit (Venus) et a myrto (myrto nam cincta capillos Constiterat) folium granaque pauca dedit. Sensimus acceptis numen quoque, purior æther Fulsit, et a toto pectore cessit onus. A. A. III. 53. Compare Burns' Vision, last stanza.

18. While I have the inspiration of Venus.

20. Cæsar, Germanicus.—Tenearis. You (i. e. your attention) may be detained. See Trist. iv. 10, 49. Hor. Ep. I. 1, 81.

21, 22. The waxen figures (imagines) of all their ancestors, stood in the halls of the noble Romans, and they had all a stemma, or genealogy of their family, which descended from the first author of it. Venus, as mother of Æneas, was at the head of the stemma of the Julii, into which family Germanicus was entered by adoption, I. 3, 10, notes.

23. Pat. II. Romulus, the son of Ilia.—Scriberet, i. e. describe-ret in menses.

24. Auct. suos. Mars and Venus.

27. There were all the Alban kings between Æneas and Romulus.

29, 30. He traced his lineage up to the gods.

Dardanon Electra nesciret Atlantide cretum ?
 Scilicet Electran concubuisse Jovi ?
 Hujus Erichthonius : Tros est generatus ab illo :

 Non dedignata est nomen habere Venus,
 Hinc satus Æneas, pietas spectata per ignes,

 Venimus ad felix aliquando nomen Iuli,
 Unde domus Teucros Julia tangit avos. 40
 Postumus huic, qui, quod silvis fuit ortus in altis,
 Silvius in Latia gente vocatus erat ;
 Isque, Latine, tibi pater est : subit Alba Latinum :
 Proximus est titulis Epytos, Alba, tuis,
 Ille dedit Capii recidiva vocabula Troiæ, 45
 Et tuus est idem, Calpete, factus avus.
 Quumque patris regnum post hunc Tiberinus haberet,

31. Nesciret, i. e. Quis nesciret ?

32. Scilicet is usually joined with the preceding line, and a semicolon placed after it; but see I. 29, II. 241, IV. 627. For this genealogy, see Hom. II. xx. 215, et seq. Virg. G. III. 35. Mythology, p. 435.

37, 38. See I. 527. Virg. Æn. III. 148.

39. Aliquando, at length.

40. See Livy, I. 3. Virg. Æn. I. 268.—Teucros. This name of the Trojans does not occur in Homer and the older Greek poets, and but rarely in the later. Like Græcus, Graius, it is constantly employed by the Latin poets.

41—56. Ovid has also given the series of Alban kings, in Met. xiv. 609, et seq. but somewhat differently. This list differs from that in Livy only by omitting Æneas, after Silvius, and by giving Epytos for Atis, and Calpetus for Capetus. The list in Dionysius differs but little. This writer adds Silvius to the names of all, after the grandson of Æneas. For these Alban kings, whose names are, beyond doubt, a fiction of later times, to fill up the space which the chronology of the Greeks gave between the fall of Troy and the building of Rome, see Livy, I. 3. Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. I. 202. Compare the equally veracious poetic genealogy of the British kings in Spenser's Faerie Queene, B. II. c. x.

46. Calpete. The reading of several MSS. is Capete, but the metre requires Calpete, which Neapolis gave from Dionysius and Eusebius.

Dicitur in Tuscæ gurgite mersus aquæ.
 Jam tamen Agrippam genitum, Remulumque nepotem

 Nec tibi sit mirum Graio rem nomine dici :
 Itala nam tellus Græcia major erat.
 Venerat Evander plena cum classe suorum : 65
 Venerat Alcides, Graius uterque genus.
 Hospes Aventinis armentum pavit in herbis
 Claviger, et tanto est Albula pota deo.
 Dux quoque Neritius. Testes Læstrygones exstant :

48. Tuscæ aquæ, of the Albula, II. 389.

61. The ancients gave two etymons of the name April, one Greek, quasi Aphrilis, from, Ἀφροδίτη, the name of Venus, and its supposed root, ἀφρός: the other Latin, from aperio. Ovid, to gratify the Julian family, adopts and defends the former, which is by far the less probable. Secundus mensis, ut Fulvius Flaccus scribit et Junius Gracchus, a Venere, quod ea sit Ἀφροδίτη. Varro, L. L. V.

63. He tries to obviate the objection, that an ancient Roman name could not have been derived from the Greek.

64. The south of Italy, as being filled with Grecian colonies, and larger than Greece Proper, was named Magna Græcia.

65—68. See I. 471, 543, V. 643.

69. Dux Neritius. Ulysses, from the hill Neritus, in Ithaca, Hom. Od. ix. 21.—Læstrygones. Od. x. 120. This tribe of cannibals was placed by some of the localisers of the Homeric fables at Formiæ, in Campania.

Et quod adhuc Circes nomina litus habet. 70
 Et jam Telegoni, jam mœnia Tiburis udi
 Stabant, Argolicæ quod posuere manus.
 Venerat Atridæ fatis agitatus Halesus,
 A quo se dictam terra Falisca putat.
 Adjice Trojanæ suasorem Antenora pacis, 75
 Et generum CEniden, Appule Daune, tuum.
 Serus ab Iliacis, et post Antenora, flammis
 Attulit Æneas in loca nostra deos.
 Hujus erat Solymus Phrygia comes unus ab Ida :
 A quo Sulmonis mœnia nomen habent, 80

70—72. Ææa, the isle of Circe, was supposed to be the promontory, Circeii.—Circeii, insula quondam immense mari circumdata, at nunc planities, Pliny, H. N. iii. 5, 9. Tusculum was said to have been founded by Telegonus, her son by Ulysses. For the Læstrygones and Circe, see Mythology, pp. 241, 242. Tibur was said to owe its origin to Tiburnus, Catillus and Coras, three brothers, who led thither a colony from Argos. Hor. Car. II. 6, 5. Virg. Æn. vii. 670.—Udi, on account of the Anien, and the rivulets and springs about it. See Hor. Car. III. 29, 6; also I. 7, 13.

73. Halesus. See Amor. III. 13, 31. Virg. Æn. vii. 723. Halesus was said to have been a son or grandson of Atreus, who, on the murder of Agamemnon, fled to Italy, where he founded Falerii, and introduced the worship of Juno. The worship of Juno, both in Argos and Falerii, probably gave occasion to the legend, and the name Halesus was formed from Falisci. F. and H. are commutable. See on v. 630.

75. See Hom. II. vii. 348, et seq. Hor. Ep. I. 2, 9. The tradition was that, being allowed to depart from Troy by the Greeks, he came into Italy at the head of a colony of Paphlagonian Heneti, and founded Patavium, now Padua. See Livy, I. 1. Virg. Æn. I. 242.

76. Diomedes, grandson of CEnus, king of Ætolia, came, after his return from Troy, to Apulia, where Daunus, the king of the country, gave him his daughter in marriage, and a share of his dominions. Met. xiv. Virg. Æn. xi. 246. There were in Apulia the Diomedis campi, and, on the coast, the Diomedea insula.

77. Serus. According to Virgil, the wanderings of Æneas lasted seven years.

79, 80. Why should not the gelidus Sulmo in the Appenines, the chief town of the Sabellian Pelignians, and the birth-place of our poet have a foreign origin, as well as Rome and Patavium? The reader needs scarcely to be told, that accidental similarities of names are the source of all these tales. The city of Tours in France, I have read, was founded by Turnus, Sulmonis gelidi, patriæ, Germanice, nostræ.

Me miserum! Scythico quam procul illa sola est!

Ergo ego tam longe?—sed supprime, Musa, querelas;

Non tibi sunt mæsta sacra canenda lyra.

Quo non livor abit? Sunt qui tibi mensis honorem 85

Eripuisse velint, invideantque, Venus.

Nam, quia ver aperit tunc omnia, densaque cedit

Frigoris asperitas, fetaque terra patet;

Aprilem memorant ab aperto tempore dictum,

Quem Venus injecta vindicat alma manu. 90

Illa quidem totum dignissima temperat orbem:

Illa tenet nullo regna minora deo:

Juraque dat coelo, terræ, natalibus undis,

Perque suos initus continet omne genus.

Illa deos omnes—longum est narrare—creavit: 95

Illa satis causas arboribusque dedit:

Illa rudes animos hominum contraxit in unum, the rival of Æneas, and his tomb was long to be seen there! See Selden's notes on Drayton's Poly-Olbion, Song I.

82. The natural regret of an exile at the recollection of his country.

85---89. A second and much more likely etymon of April. Hujus mensis nomen ego magis puto dictum, quod ver omnia aperit. Varro, L. L. V. Cincius also, a name of great authority, was of the same opinion, as we are informed by Macrobius, Sat. 1. 12. His reasons were: there was no festal day, and no remarkable sacrifice to Venus appointed by the ancients in this month, and the name of Venus was not mentioned with those of the other gods in the Salian hymns. Varro also says, that neither the Latin nor the Greek name of Venus was known in the time of the kings. For the difference between Aphrodite and Venus, see Mythology, pp. 105 and 464.

90. Injecta manu. Manus injectio quotiens, nulla judicis auctoritate expectata, rem nobis debitam vindicamus. Servius, on Æn. x. 419.

91---116. He argues, in defence of Venus, from her dignity and power. Compare Lucret. 1. 1, et seq.

93. Natalibus, from which she herself was born.

95. Creavit. All the deities worshiped in Greece, as we may see in the Theogony of Hesiod, were born like mankind, Venus excepted, and even she in Homer, has a father and a mother.

117—124. He now argues from the claims which Venus had on the gratitude of the Romans. 125—132. He argues from the beauty of spring, as being suited to Venus. Compare III. 235.

Vere nitent terræ : vere remissus ager.
 Nunc herbæ ruptâ tellure cacumina tollunt ;
 Nunc tumido gemmas cortice palmes agit.

126. Nitent. Some MSS. read vivent.

131. From the III. Id. Nov. to the VI. Id. Mart. the sea was said to be closed, and the ships were laid up on shore. In spring they were launched anew. See Hor. Car. I. 4, 3.

134. Et vos, etc. A periphrasis of the meretrices, who wore a toga instead of the stola (longa vestis) worn by women of character. Scriptus hæc illis, quarum nec vitta pudicas Attingit crines, nec stola longa pedes. Ep. ex. Pont. III. 3, 54.

135. These washings of the statues of the gods were common among the Greeks and Romans. There is a hymn of Callimachus on the washing of that of Pallas.

See Spanheim's notes on it.—Redimicula, the strings or ribbons which tied on the cap or bonnet. Virg. Æn. ix. 616.

139. Sub myrto. That is crowned with myrtle, as is manifest from Plutarch Numa, 19, and Laur. Lydus de Mens, p. 19.

145. The temple of Fortuna Virilis or Fors Fortuna, was built by Servius Tullius outside of the city on the banks of the Tiber. Dionys. iv. 27. Varro L.L. V.

146. See v. 139.—Calida. This is the reading of fifteen MSS. the rest have gelida.

151. None of the commentators make any remark on this custom. The poet accounts for it in the usual way by a legend.

157---160. A. U. C. 639, as a Roman knight named Elvius was returning to Apulia from the plays at Rome with his daughter Elvia, the maiden who was on horseback was struck with lightning in such a manner, that her clothes were thrown up, and her tongue forced out, the trappings of the horse were also scattered. The Vates being consulted, declared that it portended infamy to the Vestals and to the knights. Enquiry was made, and three Vestals, Æmilia, Licinia and Martia, were found to have been carrying on an illicit intercourse with some of the knights. The Sibylline books directed that two Greeks and two Gauls should be buried alive, to appease some strange gods, and a statue raised to Venus Verticordia, that she might turn the hearts of the women from iniquity. The statue was dedicated by Sulpicia, the wife of Fulvius Flaccus, as she bore the highest character for chastity and purity of manners. See Plutarch Quæst. Rom. Plin. H. N. viii. 35. Val. Max. viii. 15. Jul. Obsequens, c. 97.

165. The IV. Non. the Pleiades (called by the Romans Vergiliæ,) set heliacally according to Neapolis, acronychally according to Taubner, who maintains that the heliac setting was not till three days afterwards. See Intro. § 1.

166. Queruntur. Quevor is used of the song of birds. See Hor. Epod. 2. 20. Lucretius (iv. 588.) and Horace (Car. iii. 7. 30.) employ it to express the soft and sweet tones of the pipe.

167. See II. 500. Met. i. 493.

169 Pliades. It is thus spelt here and elsewhere in all the MSS. ---Humeros, etc. The Pleiades or seven stars in the back of the Bull, were said to be the daughters of Atlas who supported the heavens, consequently when they set, their father's shoulders were eased of a portion of their burden. When a constellation is added to heaven, the weight is increased. Met. ix. 273.

171---179. Reasons why, though the Pleiades were seven, but six could be seen.

179---372. On the 4th of the month, Prid. Non. began the great festival of the Megalensia or Megalesia, celebrated in honor of the mother of the gods, the Phrygian Cybele, whose worship was introduced into Rome, A. U. C. 547. 180. Titan, the Sun, who is frequently so called by the Latin poets. See on IV. 919. Ovid also calls the Moon, Titania.

181. Berecynthia, i. e. Phrygian, from Mt. Berecynthus.

181. Idææ. Cybele, was so named, from Mt. Ida.

183. Semimares. The Galli, or priests of Cybele.—Tympana, tambourins.

184. Æra, etc. cymbals.

185. The statue of the goddess was carried through the streets by a Phrygian man and woman.

187. Stage-plays were always performed at the Megalesia, Livy, ut supra, and xxxvi. 36. See also the inscriptions of Terence's comedies.

188. The days of the Megalesia were Nefasti. See Introd. § 3.

190. Lotos. The wood of the Lybian lotos was chiefly employed for the manufacture of pipes.—Theophr. Hist. plant. iv. 3. Plin. H. N. xiii. 17, 32.

191. Cybeleïa. Cybelean, from Mt. Cybele.—Neptes, grand-daughters, the Muses. As the Greeks identified the Phrygian Mother of the Gods, with their Rhea, the spouse of Kronus, and mother of the Kronides or Olympians, Cybele, of course, became the grandmother of the Muses. The Ops of the Italians, with whom the Romans identified her, resembled Cybele much more nearly than Rhea did, who appears to have been an allegorical personage. See Mythology, p. 50.

195. Erato. Our poet invokes this muse for the same reason, A. A. II. 16. Apollonius Rhodius calls on Erato, when about to relate the loves of Jason and Medea, and Virgil (Æn. vii. 37,) addresses her when he is going to tell of the war between Turnus and Æneas, for the sake of Lavinia, whom the former hero loved.

197. Reddita, etc. scil. by Heaven and Earth. The whole story is told by Hesiod Theog. 464, et seq. Mythology, p. 42.

204. Parce, forbear.—Fidem, the tradition, as the cause of belief.

205. Guttur. One of the best MSS. reads viscere, which is followed by Heinsius and Gierig. Three have gurgite.

208. Ardua Ide, would seem here to be the Phrygian Ida, but Hesiod, and the general tradition, made the Cretan Ida to be the scene of the infancy of the god.—Jamdudum, forthwith. Virg. Æn. II. 103.

209. Rudibus. Most MSS. read manibus ; two of the best rudibus, four of the best sudibus, which is also the reading of Lactantius, in his quotation of this verse. Inst. I. 21. In the Greek narratives, the word is ἐρχειρίδια, ζίφρα, and δόρατα, with which the rudes, foils or blunt swords, best agree. Lo-beck proposes tudibus.

210. The Curetes are those who, in the Cretan legend, danced their πυρρίχην, or armed dance, about the cradle of Jupiter ; the Corybantes were regarded as the attendants of the Mother of the Gods. The poet here evidently alludes to the resemblance between their name and κόρυς, a helmet.

Præbeat insolitas ad juga curva jubas?

 Et modo, Tolle faces! Remove, modo, verbera! clamat.

219. Compare Virg. Æn. vi. 785. Lucret. II. 607.

220. The poet and the muse are not quite right here. Cybele, as the symbol of the earth, was very naturally crowned with towers. Quod autem turritam gestat coronam, ostendit superpositas esse terræ civitates, quas insignitas turribus constat. Servius on Æn. III. 113. But the fact is, Ovid was entangled in the Euhemerie or anthropomorphising system, which prevailed so much in his time. See Mythology, pp. 19, 20, 442.

221. Secandi, scil. by the Galli.

223. For the story of Attis, as told somewhat differently by Dio-dorus, see Mythology, p. 192; see also Catullus, LXIII. and the notes of Doering.

225. Tueri, to be the ædituus of her temple.

226. Puer esse, to be a virgin, if the term may be used.

231. Ovid frequently uses Naïs as synonymous with Nympha. He is peculiarly incorrect here, for the nymph in question, as the daughter of the god of the river Sagaris, must have been a real Naïs, and yet he makes her a Hamadryad. For the Nymphs, see Mythology, p. 206.

233. Credens, etc. His madness thus commenced.

Sæpe Palæstinas jurat adesse deas.
 Ille etiam saxo corpus laniavit acuto,
 Longaque in immundo pulvere tracta coma est ;

236. Palæstinas deas. As the whips and torches are mentioned, there can be no doubt that these were the Furies, but why they were thus called, none of the commentators can say. Marsus shews, from an old MS. of Cæsar's Commentaries, that Palæstæ was a town of Epirus, in which country the Furies had a temple. This, though bad, is the only explanation we have. One MS. reads Palestrinas, another Palatinas.

247. Now comes the narrative of the introduction of the worship of the Magna Mater into Rome, A. U. C. 547. See Livy, xxix. 10, 11, 14. xxxvi. 36. Valer. Max. viii. 15, 3. Silius. Ital. xvii. init. Compare Met. xv. 622---744.

266. Negat. This was not the case according to Livy.

272. Rome derived her origin from Phrygia.

276. From the following description of it, given by Arnobius, (Adv. Gen. vii. p. 285.) it is quite evident that this symbol of the Mother of the Gods was an ærolithe. Ex Phrygia nihil quidem aliud scribitur missum rege ab

Attalo, nisi lapis quidem non magnus, ferri manu hominis sine ulla impressione qui posset, coloris furvi atque atrî, angellis prominentibus inæqualis. A more accurate description of the external appearance of an ærolithe could not easily be given.

277. Nati, Neptune. Let the reader trace this voyage on the map.

305. The Eponymus, or reputed head of the Claudian family, was a hero named Clausus. Virg. Æn. vii. 706. Attus Clausus was the name of the Sabine chief, who, with his gens and their clients, came to Rome, where they were received among the Patricians, and became famous in Roman story 308. Acta rea, was charged with. A law term.

310. Ad rigidos. "Apud severos," Gierig. I think he is wrong, and that the meaning is, she was too free of her tongue against the old men, perhaps ridiculing them, and despising their admonitions.—Senes. Several MSS. read sonos.

312. As true of the present day as of the time of Ovid.

326. Was there a play acted at the Megalesia, of which this was the subject ?

329, 330. This would appear to indicate the spot where the river divided. See on v. 292.

335. Coronatam. The custom of adorning the prows of vessels with garlands, must be familiar to every reader of the classics. See Virg. G. I. 304, Æn. iv. 418.

339. Canus sacerdos, the Archigallus, or chief priest of Cybele, as Neapolis thinks.

340. It was the custom to wash the image of the goddess and her chariot every year in the Almo. Qui lotam parvo revocant (renovant) Almone Cybeben. Lucan. I. 600.

346. Boves. The car of Cybele was drawn by heifers.

347. The sacred stone was committed to the care of P. Corn. Scipio Nasica, the son of Cneius, who had fallen in Spain, as being the most virtuous man in Rome. It was brought into the temple of Victory, which was on the Palatium. The temple was not finished until thirteen years after, and the stage-plays acted on that occasion were, according to Valerius Antias, the first ever performed at Rome.—Non perstitit. This is the reading of six of the best and of other MSS. and of the old editions ; four of the best, and three others have tunc extitit, which is the reading adopted by Heinsius and Gierig. I think the present reading gives the more Ovidian sense, scil. the name of the author did not remain unchanged ; it was Metellus, it is Augustus. See v. 351.

 Quum tanto Phrygia Gallica distet humus?

 Amnis it insana, nomine Gallus, aqua.

350. The Phrygian man and woman who carried the goddess about, collected small pieces of money. This, by the Greeks, was called μητραγυρτείν. The poet gives a cause, and a wrong one for it.

353. It was the custom for the principal persons at Rome to give mutual entertainments, at the time of the Megalesia. This was called mutitare. Quam ob causam Patricii Megalensibus mutitare soliti sint, Plebs Cerealibus? Gellius, xviii. 2.

354. Indictas. "Proprie de non vocatis, sed qui sponte veniunt ad epulas. Suet. Ner. 27. Vitell. 13. Male interpretes a sacerdotibus indictas capiunt." Burmann.

355. Bene mutarit. Having exchanged her obscure Phrygian abode for the capital of the world. This reason is too trifling to be noticed.

357. Institeram. "Institueram, quærere volebam," Gierig.—Primi. See on v. 347, or is it first in point of dignity, or first in order in the year?

359. See Virg. Æn. vi. 787.

361. Qui se, etc. The Galli or priests of Cybele were voluntary eunuchs.

363. Vir. Cyb. Cybele was a mountain of Phrygia.—Alt. Cel. Celænae, a mountain and town, at one time the chief place in Phrygia; the river Mæander rose on its summit, and the Marsyas not far from it.

364. An. nom. Gal. Gallus in Phrygia, unde qui bibit insanit more fanatico, Vibius Sequester de Flumin. Pliny, (H. N. xxxi. 2. 5,) following Callimachus, enumerates the Gallus among those whose waters were good for persons afflicted with the stone, and adds, Sed ibi in potando necessarius modus, ne lymphatos agat. As, however, no river ever had this quality, we may be allowed to doubt the correctness of this etymology.

367. Herbosum moretum. The moretum called by the Greeks μύττωτον or τρίμμα was a mess composed of garlic, parsley, rue, coriander, onions, cheese, oil and vinegar pounded up together. See the description of the mode of making it in the poem called Moretum, ascribed to Virgil.—Herbosum, an account of the parsley, etc.

371. Elisæ, bruised or pounded, the part. of elido; most MSS. read elixæ.

373---376. The temple of Fortuna Publica on the Quirinal hill, was dedicated on the Nones of April---Motis scil. amotis.—Pallantias, Aurora, as being daughter to the Titan Pallas. This genealogy, as far as my knowledge extends, is peculiar to the Latin poets. In Hesiod, Eos or Aurora is the daughter of the Titan Hyperion and niece to Pallas---Levarit. "Jugo solverit," Gierig.—Niv. eq. Such were suited to the candida Luna. In an epigram ascribed to Ovid, her car is drawn niveis juvencis. The fiction was caused by the horned moon. Nonnus and Claudian gives her the same.---Fort. Pub. This temple was vowed, A. U. C. 549, by the consul Sempronius on the eve of a battle with Hannibal. It was dedicated ten years afterwards by Q. Martius, Ralla created Decemvir for the purpose.

377. Tertia lux, scil. Megalesium, the day after the Nones.---Ludis. The plays were acted on this day.

Perfida magnanimi contudit arma Jubæ. 380
 Dux mihi Cæsar erat, sub quo meruisse Tribunus
 Glorior. Officio præfuit ille meo.
 Hanc ego militia sedem, tu pace parasti,
 Inter bis quinos usus honore Viros.
 Plura locuturi subito seducimur imbre; 385
 Pendula cœlestes Libra movebat aquas.
 Ante tamen, quam summa dies spectacula sistat,
 Ensifer Orion æquore mersus erit.

Proxima victricem quum Romam inspexerit Eos,
 Et dederit Phœbo stella fugata locum; 390

380. Perfida. After the usual fashion of the Romans, to call rebels and traitors all who opposed them, or the victorious party among them. It was thus that Napoleon used to style the Spaniards rebels and insurgents. I need hardly observe that Juba king of Mauritania was most faithful to the cause of Pompey and the republic. He and Scipio put an end to their lives after their defeat by Cæsar, hence the poet applies to him the term magnanimus, which denotes courage, as the Romans greatly approved of those who escaped from disgrace and insult by voluntary death. Compare Hor. Car. I. 37. 21. The victory was gained, A. U. C. 708. See Hirtius Bell. Afric. 94. Florus iv. 2. 69.---Contudit. Virg. Æn. I. 264.

381. Meruisse, to have served.

383, 384. Sedem, scil. in the orchestra, where Ovid sat, as having been a Decemvir; not the fourteen rows where he might have sat of right, as belonging to the equestrian order, but to a seat on which the tribune could have no claim. The Vigintiviratus was an office, through which men rose to the senate. Of the Vigintiviri, three had charge of the execution of capital punishments, three of the mint, four of the roads, ten (the Decemvirs) of assembling the Centumvirs, and presiding when they sat for the trial of causes.

385. Imbre. The Roman theatres were not roofed. There was usually an awning drawn across to keep off the sun. See Lucret. IV. 73.

386. Pendula Libra. On the day after the Nones, the VIII. Id. Libra was in the sky all through the night, and was usually attended by rain. Pendula is a very appropriate term for Libra.

388. Ensifer. The better MSS. read ensiger.

389. The following day (VII. Idus.) began the Ludi Circenses or Cereales, in honour of Ceres. Tac. An. xv. 53, 74.---Inspexerit, looked down on.

Circus erit pompa celebr, numeroque deorum :
 Primaque ventosis palma petetur equis.
 Hinc Cereris Ludi. Non est opus indice causæ ;
 Sponte deæ munus promeritumque patet.
 Messis erant primis virides mortalibus herbæ, 395
 Quas tellus nullo sollicitante dabat ;
 Et modo carpebant vivaci cespite gramen,
 Nunc epulæ tenera fronde cacumen erant.
 Postmodo glans nata est. Bene erat jam glande reperta,
 Duraque magnificas quercus habebat opes. 400
 Prima Ceres homini ad meliora alimenta vocato
 Mutavit glandes utiliore cibo.
 Illa jugo tauros collum præbere coëgit ;
 Tum primum soles eruta vidit humus.
 Æs erat in pretio : chalybeia massa latebat. 405
 Heu heu perpetuo debuit illa tegi !

391. On the first day of the festival, a pomp or procession, led by the principal men of the state, moved from the Capitol through the Forum to the Circus. The procession was closed by the images of several gods carried on men's shoulders. This pomp is described by our poet. Am. III. 2. 43, and by Dionysius, vii. 72. Some critics maintain that the Cereales were but a part of the Ludi Circenses, which last were a festival of all the gods. See Suet. Jul. 76. Tacitus certainly, in the passage first referred to above, says, Circensium ludorum die, qui Celeri celebratur, but Ovid seems to make no distinction.

392. Ventosis, swift as the wind, θειειν ανέμοισιν ὁμοίον, Hom. II. x. 437, of the horses of Rhesus, ποδήνεμος, is an epithet of Iris.

395. According to the Epicurean system of philosophy, in vogue in his days, the poet regards the original condition of man, as similar to that of the beasts that graze.

398. Ten. fron. cac. "Teneræ frondes arborum," Gierig. The shoot or tender bough, with its fresh juicy leaves.—Erant. Most MSS. erat.

401. Compare Amor. III. 10. Met. v. 342. Virg. G. I. 147. Lucret. v. 937.

405. Χαλκίῳ δ' ἐργάζοντο μέλας δ' οὐκ ἔσκε σιδήρος. Hesiod. Ἔργα, 150.—Chalybeia massa, iron, from the Chalybes who manufactured it.

406—408. This longing for the continuance of peace, and aversion to war, is to be found in all the poets of the Augustan age. It may have been partly flattery to Augustus, but I rather think it arose from the previous state of war which had lasted so long, and caused so much ruin and misery. Something of the same kind may

422. Henna or Enna, was an elevated valley-plain, nearly in the centre of Sicily. Cicero, Verr. iv. 48.

423. Arethusa, the nymph of the fount in the island at Syracuse.

445. Patruus. Pluto, the brother of Jupiter and Ceres.

466. Sues. "Melius poëta omisisset in hac narratione," Gierig. It is probable that this was a reason given for swine being offered to Ceres. See v. 414.

467—480. See all these places on the map, and compare Virg. Æn. III. 687, et seq. The poet, we may observe, follows no regular topographical order in enumerating them.

470. The Gelas, at whose mouth Gela was built, was a very rapid eddying stream.

470. Megara or Megaris, formerly called Hybla, was near Syracuse. Pangie or Pantagiæ, was a small stream near Leontini.

473. Compare Virg. Æn. viii. 418.

474. Messana, was anciently called Zancle, which, in the Sicilian language, signified a sickle, which the place resembled in form. Thuc. vi. 4.

477. Heloria tempe. The Helorus entered the sea near Pachynus. The Greeks called all those long narrow wooded glens, through which a river ran, τέμπεα or τέμπη.

497. Ceres, therefore, kept her 'dragon yoke' in this cavern.

499, 500. Ovid, in this place, agrees with Virgil and Apollonius Rhodius, in placing Scylla on the Italian, Charybdis on the Sicilian side of the strait. In the Metamorphoses, xiv. he reverses the positions. Here too, like Virgil, Ec. vi. 74, he confounds this Scylla with the daughter of Nisus.

504. Triste, ἀγέλαστος πέτρα, was the Greek name.

507. Eleusin. This is the reading of the best MSS.

- Dicitur hoc Celei rura fuisse senis.
 Ille domum glandes excussa que mora rubetis
 Portat, et arsuris arida ligna focus. 510
 Filia parva duas redigebat rupe capellas,
 Et tener in cunis filius æger erat.

 Tecta suæ subeat quantulacumque casæ.
 Ille negat.—Simularat anum, mitraque capillos

 Sospes eas, semperque parens ! Mihi filia rapta est.
 Heu ! melior quanto sors tua sorte mea ! 520
 Dixit, et, ut lacrimæ,—neque enim lacrimare deorum est—
 Decidit in tepidos lucida gutta sinus.
 Flent pariter molles animis, virgoque senexque.

of the legend was invented to account for the mystæ, or persons just initiated, not taking food till the evening. Οἱ τὰ μυστήρια παραλαμβάνοντες λέγονται ἐν ἀρχῇ μὲν μύσται μετ' ἐνιαυτὸν δὲ ἐπόπται καὶ ἔφοροι. Suidas.

550. Triptoleмум. He is called Demophoon in the Homeridian hymn. I would recommend the reader to compare that hymn, or the analysis of it in my Mythology, with this narrative of Ovid.

563. The poet here sets out on another excursion with the goddess, in which he is as negligent of order as ever. For example, coming from Eleusis, she must have passed the Piræus, on her way to Sunion.

 Cognita: commissi præmia raptor habet. 590

567. Ionium rapax. The Ionian sea was to the west of Greece. As I cannot suspect the poet of making such wilful confusion, I assent to those who suppose he meant by it the sea on the coast of Ionia in Asia.

Nunc gravidum pecus est : gravidæ nunc semine terræ.

620. On this account, in seasons of public mourning, the Cerealia were not celebrated, as the mourning matrons could not appear at them.

620—624. A. U. C. 457. Q. Fabius Maximus, when advancing against the camp of the Samnites, vowed a temple to Jupiter Victor, Liv. x. 29. The temple of Liberty was dedicated on Mt. Aventine, in the time of the second Punic war, by the father of Tiberius Gracchus. Liv. xxiv. 16. The Atrium Libertatis was repaired A. U. C. 559, by the censors Pætus and Cornelius Cethegus.

625. Luce secutura. The XVIII. Kal. Maii. There was frequently hail and rain at this time. Columella, xi. 2.

627. Scilicet, ut fuerit, be this as it may. This reading was formed by Heinsius. Eight MSS.

read scilicet et fuerit, eleven sit licet ut fuerit, the remainder have sit licet et fuerit, which Gierig prefers, and explains thus: "Sit ita, ut eo die intendum grando cadat, et fuerit ita et olim."—Mutinensia arma. The battle of Mutina was fought A. U. C. 710, against Antony, by the consuls Hirtius and Pansa, and the proprætor, Octavianus Cæsar. One of the consuls was severely wounded, and the other slain in the action; and as Octavianus either would not, or knew not how to use the victory, Antony escaped to Liguria. The flattery of the poet, therefore, goes a little too far.

629. Veneris, scil. mensis Veneris.

630. The Fordicidia were on the 15th April. Fordicidia a fordis bubus. Bos forda quæ fert in ventre ; quod eo die publice immo- lantur boves prægnantes in curiis complures. A fordis cædendis Fordicidia dicta, Varro, L. L. V. He also (R. R. II. 5, 6,) names the festival Hordicidia and Hordicalia, and the adjective Hordus, which was the Sabine word.

635. Curia. The singular for the plural. See last note and II. 527.

637. Ministri, the popæ, or Victimarii.

639. Virgo. The eldest of the Vestals. The ashes were reserved to purify the people on the Palilia at the end of the month.

641. Now comes a legend as usual, to explain the origin of this practice.

649. Compare Virg. Æn. vii. 81, et seq. Faunus is, as before, confounded with Pan.

651. This divining sleep was called by the Latins, incubatio ; by the Greeks, ἐγκοίμησις. Incubare dicuntur proprie hi, qui dormiunt ad accipienda responsa, Servius on Virg. l. c.

655. Intonsum, II. 30. All the following practices were usual, on occasions of consulting the gods in this way. The reason of them is apparent.

662. Somnia nigra. Compare v. 547. Tibull. II. 1, 89, Μελανοπτερέγγων μᾶτερ Ὀνειρών, Eurip. Hec. 71.

669. Errantem, IV. 261. I should here, on account of nemori, be inclined to take this word in its primitive sense.—Conjux, Egeria.

673—676. On the 15th April, A. U. C. 724, Augustus was saluted Imperator.—Cyth. diem. prop. ire. He appears here to have had Homer in view, who gives this power to Juno, Ἡέλιον δ' ἀκάμαντα βοῶπις πότνια Ἥρη Πέμψεν ἐπ' Ὀκεανοῖο ροῆς ἀέκοντα νέεσθαι. II. xviii. 239.

677, 678. The XV. Kal. Maias, the Hyades, called by the Latins, Suculæ, a cluster of stars in the head of the Bull set acronychally. See below, V. 163, et seq.—Ubi. Some MSS. read tibi.—Dorida. Doris, the daughter of Oceanus, wife of Nereus, and mother of the Nereïdes, is like her daughter Amphitrite, frequently put for the sea.

679, 680. The Cerealia still continued. On the XIII. Kal. Maias, there were horse-races in the Circus.—Carcere. The carceres were the place in which the horses stood, with a cord stretched before them, on the dropping of which they started; the starting-place.—Partitos, started.

681, 682. "Addebatur his ludis, hoc eodem die combustio vulpium ob vetus damnum," Neapolis. "Die. 19, Apr. vulpes in Circensibus comburuntur." Gierig; from which I think we are to infer that these critics, and those who transcribe them, consider the burning of the foxes to have formed a part of the celebration of the Cerealia in the Circus at Rome. I do not find in any of the old Calendars that such was the case, and the narrative of the poet would, as appears to me, restrict this practice to the district of Carseoli. See particularly vv. 709, 710.—Missæ, scil. at Carseoli?

—Vinctis. This is the reading of one MS. only, but that one of the best; it has been received by Heinsius and Gierig; almost all the rest have junctis; three cinctis; one victis. Five give the line thus: Cur. ig. tædis unctis ardentia missæ.

683. Carseolis, at Carseoli. One of the best MSS. reads pars coli, from which Heinsius made, and received into the text, Carseoli. This town was on the Valerian road, leading from Rome to the country of the Pelignians.

684. Ingeniosus. Ingenium is used speaking of soil and plants. Nunc locus arborum ingenii, Virg. G. II. 177. Arbores silvestres sui cuiusque ingenii poma gerunt, Columella, R. R. III. 1.

685, 686. Ovid (v. 81,) was a native of Sulmo, the chief place of this country. Compare Amorr. II. 16, 1.—Humida. One MS. gives as a different reading wida; several have obvia.

687. Solitas. Twelve MSS. read fidas.

Is mihi multa quidem, sed et hæc, narrare solebat,
 Unde meum præsens instrueretur opus : 690
 Hoc, ait, in campo—campumque ostendit—habebat
 Rus breve cum duro parca colona viro.
 Ille suam peragebat humum, sive usus aratri,
 Seu curvæ falcis, sive bidentis erat.
 Hæc modo verrebat stantem tibicine villam :
 Nunc matris plumis ova fovenda dabat ;
 Aut virides malvas, aut fungos colligit albos,
 Aut humilem grato calfacit igne focum.
 Et tamen assiduis exercet brachia telis,
 Adversusque minas frigoris arma parat. 700
 Filius hujus erat primo lascivus in ævo,
 Addideratque annos ad duo lustra duos.
 Is capit extremi vulpem convalle salicti :
 Abstulerat multas illa cohortis aves.
 Captivam stipula fenoque involvit, et ignes 705
 Admoveret. Urentes effugit illa manus.
 Qua fugit, incendit vestitos messibus agros :
 Damnosis vires ignibus aura dabat.

689, 690. It appears from this and other passages that Ovid, besides consulting the Fasti and other books, was diligent in the collection of such oral traditions, as might aid him in explaining old customs and religious rites.

692. Duro, hardy, like duri messorios, juveni, humeri, etc. The following is a very pleasing description of an industrious peasant and his wife of ancient times. It would apply, without any alteration, to many a rustic couple in modern Italy.

693. "Peragebat humum. "Mihi non satis placet; Codd tamen nihil varietatis suppeditant." Gierig.

694. Curvæ falcis. "Falcis usus erat etiam ad premendas umbras ruris opaci. Virg. G. I. 155, et seq. Unde apparet describi hic diligentissimum colonum,"—Gierig. As the poet is speaking of a small farm in a plain, I would here restrict the meaning of falcis, which is placed immediately after the plough, to sickle. For curvæ, eleven MSS. followed by Hein-sius and Gierig, read cavæ. One of the best has sive citruæ.

695. Tibicine. The tibicen was a prop set against the wall of a house, to keep it from falling out.

703. Extrem. conval. Sal. In the end of a valley planted with willows, that is, among the willows which grew at the end of the valley. Two of the best MSS. read sub valle, which is the reading given by Heinsius and Gierig.

704. Cohortis. Duo erant ovilaria sive cohortes ; una in plano, in qua pascabantur gallinæ ; altera sublimis, in qua erant columbæ in turribus aut summa villa. Varro, R. R. III. 3, 6. The cohors was the Greek χόρτος. It was round, as the following passage of Cato (Orig. iv.) shews, Mapalia vocantur ubi habitant ; ea quasi cohortes rotundæ sunt.—Aves, like the Greek ἄρνιθες. See on I. 455.

709—712. These lines, I think, prove the custom to have been peculiar to Carseoli. Compare the account given in the book of Judges of Sampson making use of foxes to set fire to the corn of the Philistines.

713. On the 20th April, the Sun enters Taurus.

714. A periphrasis of Aurora. Compare Met. xiii.

579. See Virg. Æn. vii. 25. Homer calls Eos κροκόσπελος, to which the lutea of the Latin poets corresponds. The lutum was a plant, whose juice dyed yellow. The Greek poet also styles this goddess ροδοδάκτυλος and ροδόπηχυσ, but as far as I know, no Greek poet gives her rose-hued horses or chariot.

715. Duce, etc. the Ram.

716. Victima major, scil. the Bull—a bad periphrasis!

717—720. In the ancient, as in the modern representations of the stellar heaven, only the forepart of Taurus was drawn. Hence, it could not be said whether it was a bull or a cow. Some, therefore, said, that it was the heifer into which Io had been changed ; others, the bull which had carried Europa. In either case, it was an object of aversion to Juno.

721. On the XI. Kal. Maias, was the festival of Pales, the goddess of shepherds, named the Pa-lilia, and celebrated by the Romans as the birthday of Rome, (γενέθλιον τῆς πατριῶος), the day of the foundation of the city. The poet, therefore, dwells on this important day at considerable length.—Abiit. The last syllable is long, on account of the following pause. Two MSS. give abit, exoriturque.—Palilia. Some MSS. read Parilias. Palilia dicta a Pale, quod feriæ ei deæ fiunt, Varro, L. L. V. Pales dea pastoralis est, cujus dies festus Palilia dicuntur, nisi quod quidam a partu Iliæ Parilia diceremaluerunt, Carisius Inst. Gram. I. p. 55. Solinus, c. 1, and the Scholiast on Persius, Sat. I. also mention this derivation. This last quotes from Cicero's Philippics the following passage, which is not now to be found in them: Palilia, quæ nunc Parilia mutatis literis dicimus. Parilia is also the term used by all the Greek writers, except Plutarch. There is certainly, no doubt, but that both Palilia and Parilia were in use in the time of Ovid, and that, perhaps, many regarded the latter, which would appear to come so naturally from pario, to be the true name of a festival of spring, when every herb and tree brings forth, and beast and bird produce their young. But still, as the name of the goddess was always Pales, we may be quite sure that Palilia was the original name of the festival.—Poscor, scil. ad Palilia. Poscimur Aonides. Met. v. 333. Poscimur. Hor. Car. I. 32. 1, to his lyre.

722. Pales. Pales dea est pabuli, quam alii Vestam, alii Matrem Deum volunt. Hanc Virgilius genere feminino (Magna Pales) appellat, alii, inter quos Varro, masculino genere. Servius on Virg. G. III. 1. This male deity was viewed as the servant and bailiff, as it were, of Jupiter. Serv. on Ec. v. 35. Arnobius adv. Gentes, III. p. 123. Perhaps, according to the principle stated above, on III. 512, there was, after the usual manner, a deity of each sex united in office.

725. De vitulo cinerem. See v. 637, et seq.

726. Februa. See II. 19.

727. Palilia tam publica quam privata sunt. Et est genus hilaritatis et lusus apud rusticos, ut congestis cum fœno stipulis ignem magnum transiliant his Palilibus, se expiari credentes, Varro. See also Tibull. II. 5. Propert. iv. 1. The simple origin of this ceremony lay in the belief of the purifying nature of fire, (see v. 785) and something similar was practised by the people of the North of Europe in their heathen state; as also nearly down to the present day among the Celtic population of Ireland and Scotland. But the Romans must assign a historical cause for this, as for all their other customs; so we are told by Dionysius, that when Romulus was building the city, he had fires kindled before all the tents, and made the people jump through the flames to expiate themselves.

729. Navalibus. The usual comparison of a poem to a ship, and the progress of composing it to a voyage, II. 863. Modern poetry will also furnish instances. See, for example, Spenser's Faerie Queene, B. II. c. xii. st. 42. "Now strike your sailes yee iolly mariners, For we be come unto a quiet rode," etc.

731. See v. 639.

733. Sanguis equi, etc. This would seem to contradict the following assertion of Solinus. Et observatum deinceps, ne qua hostia Parilibus cæderetur, ut dies iste a sanguine purus esset. Plutarch also says, 'Εν ἀρχῇ δ' ὡς φάσιν, οὐδέν ἐμψυχον ἔθνον. But, like the calf, whose ashes were used, this horse was not sacrificed on the Palilia. October equus appellabatur, qui in Campo Martio mense Octobri Marti immolabatur, cujus cauda, ut ex ea sanguis in forum distillaret, magna celeritate perferebatur in regiam, Festus. The Regia here spoken of, must have been the Atrium Vestæ, see on II. 69. The blood of the horse's tail was preserved here, along with the ashes of the calf, (v. 639,) to be used on the Palilia.

734. Culmen is here the same as culmo.—Inane, as the beans had been taken out.

735. Ad. prim. crep. Ὑπὸ νύκτα. This was always done in the evening.—Lustra. Several good MSS. read lustrat, others lustret.

736. The ground on these occasions was swept clean and sprinkled with water.

739. Cærulei fumi. This is to be understood of the bluish smoke-like vapour which rises from sulphur when burning.—Viv. sulf. Vivum, quod Græci apyron vocant, nascitur solidum, hoc est gleba, Pliny, H. N. xxxv. 15, 50. Sulphur was of great use in purification, see above, on II. 37. Ipseque ter circum lus- travi sulfure puro. Tibull. I. 5, 11.

741. Maris rores, λιβάνωτις, rosemary. This is the reading of two of the best and ten other MSS.; some have maris rorem, the rest give mares oleas, which Heinsius and Gierig prefer. "Lectio doctior (says the latter,) quam ut a librario proficisci potuerit." Olives were used in purification, Virg. Æn. vi. 230, and the trees were divided into male and female. Plin. H. N. xvi. 19. On the other hand, the ros marinus, and the herba Sabina, are mentioned together in Virg. Culex. 402.—Tædam. Sextum genus (pinus) est tæda proprie dicta, abundantior succo quam reliqua, liquidior quam picea, flammis et lumini sacrorum etiam grata. Plin. H. N. xvi. 10. See Virg. Æn. vii. 71, and above, II. 25.—Herb. Sab. See I. 343.

743. Lib. de mil. The people of Italy made a sweet kind of bread and cakes of millet. Plin. H. N. xviii. 10.—Fiscella, or fiscina, a basket made of rushes or willow twigs, Virg. G. I. 266. A basket of millet was part of the offerings on the Palilia.

745. Daps apud antiquos dicebatur res divina, quæ fiebat aut hiberna semente aut verna, Festus. Hence, Heinsius would read dapi. Gierig thinks the dapes was the feast of the rustics themselves, of which a pail of milk formed a part, see v. 780. Compare II. 657, and Tibull. II. 5, 99.—Resectis. The MSS. differ greatly, giving relictis, paratis, remotis, resectis.

749. Here follows a catalogue of the transgressions, by which the superstition of antiquity thought that the anger of the rural gods might be provoked.—Sacro, scil. in loco. Many MSS. read sacra, scil. loca.

755. Degradinat, says Gierig, may be for the simple grandinat, like depluere for pluere. The word occurs scarcely anywhere else. Burmann would read dum degrandinet, till the hail is over—a reading which I would willingly adopt.

759. Fontana. One MS. reads montana.

761. Labra Dianæ, the lavacra or bathing places of Diana and her nymphs, alluding to the fate of Actæon. See Met. III. 161, et seq.

769. Referat, etc. Compare Virg. Ec. I. 35.

770. When making cheese. Compare Tibull. II. 3. 15.

778. Rore. Ros, like the Greek δρόσος, was used for the simple aqua. See Met. III. 164, and Valken. on Eur. Hipp. 121. Lenz renders in vivo rore in this place, by, In the fresh dew of evening! A proof of the liability of translators and commentators to mistake the meaning of even plain passages.

779. Camella. This was a kind of wooden vessel used by country-people.

780. Sapa. Sapatam appellabant, quod de musto ad mediam partem decoxerant, Varro de vita pop. Rom. p. 240. Sapa fit musto usque ad tertiam partem mensuræ decocto. Plin. H. N. xiv. 9.

785. Vitium, etc. Compare Virg. G. I. 89. Omne per ignem excoquitur vitium.

786. Duce. The dux ovium in this place is evidently the shepherd, who, as we have seen, used to leap through the straw-fires. In the South of Europe, the shepherds generally walk at the head of their sheep.

787—790. Τὸ πῦρ καθαίρει, τὸ ὕδωρ ἀρπύζει. Plutarch, Q. R. 1.

791. Aqua et igni interdici solet damnatis, quam accipiunt nuptæ; videlicet quia hæc dux res humanam vitam maxime continent, Festus. Ad facienda fœdera aqua et ignis adhibentur; unde contra quos arcere volumus e nostro consortio ei aqua et igni interdiciamus, id est rebus quibus consortio copulamur, Servius on Æn. vii. Banishment, we may observe, was unknown to the Roman law; the Interdictio aqua et igni, which had the effect of obliging a man to quit his country, was all that was pronounced against him. See Niebuhr's Roman History, II. 62—64.

792. Nova conjux. The bride and bridegroom used to touch fire and water.

800. Innocuum, safe; when he was escaping from the flames of Troy. Virg. Æn. II. 632.

801. Hoc. Several MSS. read nunc from which Heinsius made num. The reading of the text, besides resting on the authority of the greater number of MSS. is much to be preferred.

807. Ipse locus, etc. This very part of the poem, this very mention of the birth-day of Rome, gives me the occasion, calls on me to relate the origin of the city. Gierig refers causas to the enquiry which the poet had been on, and understands it thus: "Quid ego altius causas illius ritus accesso, cum ipse locus, quem incolimus, aut, si ita mavis, in quo tractando jam versor, eas mihi suppeditat?" The reading of most MSS. is ipse locum causas vati which Marsus interprets: By chance as it were, we are come to this place, where we must treat of the origin of the city.

808. Factis. This is the reading of all the MSS. Heinsius conjectured festis, which he introduced, most unwarrantably, into the text.

 Longa sit huic ætas, dominæque potentia terræ :

817. Volucres. They were vultures, to which, as they injure neither cattle nor corn, the Romans gave great authority in augury.

821. All that follows was done in accordance with the ritual-books of the Etruscans. A deep (ad solidum) round pit was dug in the future Comitium. This pit was called Mundus. Into it was thrown a portion of all necessary natural productions, and each person cast into it a little of the earth of his native country. From this as a centre, the circuit of the city was described, Plutarch Rom. 11.

824. Fungitur. Most of the old MSS. read finditur, which Gierig has received. The meaning would be, the altar was cleft with the heat of the fire, like ground with that of the sun.

825. When the mundus had been made, the founder yoked a bull and a cow to a plough which had a brazen share, and made a deep furrow, to mark the line of the walls, those who followed him taking care to turn all the clods inwards; when he came to the place where a gate (porta) was to be, he lifted the plough and passed over it, (portavit).

830. Vobis. Twelve MSS. read bonis.

831. Dominæ, "Domina, quæ habet imperium in omnes. V. vs. 859." Gierig. Surely it was Rome, not the earth that was to be the mistress. Two of the best MSS. read domitæ, which I think gives a better sense. See v. 861.

833. Tonitru lævo. Læva fulmina prospera existimantur, quoniam læva parte mundi ortus est, Plin. H. N. ii. 53. 55. Elsewhere he says, Fulmina læva prospera, quia sacrificantis vel precantis lætus lævum dextrum est ejus qui postulata largitur.

837. Celer. According to Dionysius and Plutarch, Celer was one of the companions of Romulus, and overseer of the building of the walls. In reality he was only a personification of the Equites, who were called Celeres. See Niebuhr, Roman History, Vol. i. 325.

843. Rutro. The rutrum was a kind of spade, rutrum, ut ruitrum, a ruendo, Varro, L. L. iv. Rutro, in the text, is the conjecture of Heinsius ; the greater part of the MSS. read retro ; some rastro, six ultra, one ristro. There can be little doubt of rutro being the true reading, as it is the term used by other writers.—Occupat. See I. 575, and Met. xii. 343.

855. The Romans were not called Quirites till after their union with the Sabines. Compare Virg. Æn. vi. 776.

856. Remus, a tradition said, was buried on the Remarian hill, a little way from Rome.

860. Nominis hujus, i. e. Cæsaris.

863—900. On the IX. Kal. Maias, was celebrated the festival, named Vinalia, in honour of Jupiter, or, as some said, of Venus. Masurius apud Macrobian. (Sat. I. 4,) says, Vinaliorum dies Jovi sacer est, non, ut quidam putant, Veneri. And Varro (L. L. V.) Vinalia dicta a vino. Hic dies Jovis non Veneris. Hujus rei cura non levis in Latio; nam aliquot locis vindemiæ primum a sacerdotibus publica fiebant, ut Romæ etiam nunc; nam Flamen Dialis auspicatur vindemiam, et, ut jussit vinum legere, agna Jovi facit, inter cujus exta cæsa et porrecta flamen prorsus vinum legit. According to Festus and an old Kalendar, there was another Vinalia, called rustica, on the 19th August, and it is evidently of this last that Varro speaks. Ovid seems to have confounded the two, which Pliny (H. N. xviii. 29,) accurately distinguishes. Perhaps, both were sacred to Jupiter, and the circumstance of a festival of Venus falling on the vernal Vinalia, may have led to the supposition of its being sacred to her. Plutarch (Q. R. 45,) calls it Veneralia.

866. Multa agrees with apta, and is equivalent to valde. Some MSS. read culta, which Heinsius prefers.—Professorum. When a woman at Rome wished to become a meretrix, she went before the Ædiles and professed, that is, informed them of her intention. She was then entered among the togatæ, (v. 134). See Suet. Tib. 35. Tac. Ann. II. 85. The same mutatis nominibus is the case at the present day at Rome, Paris, and other cities on the continent. — Quæstibus. Alexis, in his comedy, called Ἰσοστάσιος, says of them, Πρώτον μὲν γὰρ ἐς τὸ κέρδος καὶ τὸ συλᾶν τοὺς πέλας, τᾶλλα αὐταῖς παρέργα γίνονται.

869. Sisymbria. The sisymbrium, also called thymbræum, was an odoriferous plant growing in dry places.

870. The garlands of roses were bound with rushes.

871. A temple was dedicated to Venus Erycina at the Colline gate, A. U. C. 571, Liv. xl. 34. There was another temple of this goddess on the Capitoline hill, built by the direction of the Sibylline books, and dedicated A. U. C. 537. Syracuse was taken A. U. C. 540. Ovid, as Neapolis observed, appears to have committed two errors here ; one, in confounding the two temples of Venus Erycina at Rome ; the other, in making the building of a temple depend on an event which did not happen till after it had been built. Gierig defends him in the former case by saying, that v. 873—875, are merely a passing notice of the second temple : in the latter, his defence is, “Fortasse tamen Noster, more poetarum, a parte bellum Punicum secundum indicare voluit.” Greater poets, however, than Ovid, have fallen into as great errors.

874. Eryx. This mountain was near Drepanum, on the west side of Sicily. There was on it a magnificent temple of Venus, the erection of which was ascribed to Æneas and the Trojans. Virg. Æn. v. 759. It is, I apprehend, far more probable, that the Venus Erycina was the Astarte or Moon-goddess of the Phenicians, who was identified with Aphrodite and Venus, and that the founders of the temple were the Carthaginians.

877, 878. The poet would here seem to intimate, that though the festival of Venus and the Vinalia fell on the same day, they were different. See v. 899.—Quæritis. See on V. 1.

880. Adorat. One MS. has adoptat, which Heinsius and Gierig follow.

882. Equo vel pede. In horse and foot.

887. Cato in primo libro Originum ait, Mezentium Rutulis imperasse, ut sibi offerrent quas diis primitias offerebant, et Latinos omnes similis imperii metu ita vocasse : Jupiter, si tibi magis cordi est nos ea tibi dare potius quam Mezentio, uti nos victores facias, Macrob. Sat. III. 5.

888. Lacubus. The lacus or vat, was the vessel placed under the wine-press, to receive the liquor that ran out.

894. Feres. One of the best MS. reads feras, which Heinsius and Gierig receive, as it is a vow. The meaning is, that as the Rutulians had vowed or promised the produce of the following vintage to Mezentius, Æneas promises it, in case of victory, to Jupiter.

897. Venerat, etc. On account of the custom of treading out the grapes. Met. II. 21, Virg. G. II. 8. 898. Vina. Five MSS. read vota.

901—904. On the VII. Kal. Maias, six days from the end of the month, was the middle of spring; the acronych setting of the Ram, rain, and the rising of the Dog, also fell on this day.

904. Signa dant imbres. The rains shew themselves. Signa dare is the Greek ἐπισημαίνειν. Were it not that the meaning of this expression is so incontrovertibly shewn by I. 315, 316, one might be disposed to understand it with Taubner, of the constellations portending rain.—Exoriturque Canis. Here is a tremendous error of our poet, for, according to Columella, Pliny, Ptolemy, and to the actual fact, the Dog sets instead of rising at this time. Thus also, Virgil, (G. I. 217,) Candidus auratis aperit cum cornibus annum Taurus, et averso cedens Canis occidit astro. One of the best MSS. reads occidit atque Canis, but I fear this is only the emendation of some one who saw the error into which the poet had fallen.

904. Nomento. Nomentum was a town of the Sabine country; a road named the Via Nomentana led to it from the Viminal gate at Rome. On the following narrative, Gierig observes, “Similia figmenta, vv. 685 et III. 541.” I do not see the necessity of supposing these to be fictions. What was more natural than for the poet, when about to write a poem on the Fasti, to direct his attention to things which he had not hitherto heeded, and to inquire into the meaning of what appeared to him deserving of notice.

906. Candida pompa. The persons who formed this pomp or procession were clad in white, that is, their togæ were either new, or had been scoured for the occasion. Pompa is the reading of ten MSS. all the rest have turba.

907. Flamen, scil. Quirinalis, v. 910.—Antiquæ Robiginis. The festival of this goddess was called the Robigalia, and was said to have been instituted by Numa, (Plin. xviii. 69, 3,) hence the poet says, antiquæ. Robigalia dicta ab Robigo. Secundum segetes huic

Exta canis flammis, exta daturus ovis.

Feriæ Robigo via Claudia ad milliarium quintum, ne robigo frumentis noceat; sacrificium et ludi cursoribus majoribus et minoribus fiunt, Verrius Flaceus in Fastis. Inde et Robigus deus et sacra ejus VII. Kal. Maias Robigalia appellantur, Servius on Geor. I. 151. In all these places, we may see, as also in Gellius, (v. 12,) it is a god Robigus that is spoken of; on the other hand, in this place, of Ovid and in Lactantius, (De Fal. Rel. I.) and Columella, it is a goddess Robigo. May we not thence infer, that as in so many other cases (see above on III. 512. IV. 722,) so in this the dualistic principle of Roman theology may be discovered? Finally, the names Robigo, Robigus, Robigalia, were frequently written Rubigo, etc.*

908. Catularia porta Romæ dicta est, quia non longe ab ea ad placandum Caniculae sidus frugibus inimicum rufæ canes immolaban-

*tur, ut fruges flavescerent ad maturitatem perducerentur, Festus. It would appear as if there was some slight mistake here, as it was, as Festus himself tells us, (see preceding note) the god Robigus, and not the Canicula, to whom the sacrifice was made. This is also proved by the word rufæ, for rob, a word of the same origin was equivalent to ξανθός, whence (Fest. s. v.) the peasants said robos boves. The Canicula however was the cause of the dog being sacrificed. Columella (R. R. x. 342). also notices this rite. Hinc mala Rubigo virides ne torreat herbas Sanguine lactentis catuli placatur et extis. Ovid alone mentions the sheep.*

910. Edidit, etc. that is prayed to this effect.

911. Aspera. The Robigo, ερυσίβη, μίλτος, or mildew, i. e. meal-dew, (It is mehlthau in German,) is a red glutinous powder, which ate into or consumed the stalks of the growing corn, and made them asper, scabri.

913. Secundis, several MSS. read secundi.

919. Titan. So the Latin poets named the Sun, either as being the same with Hyperion the Titan or his son, Hes. Th. Mildew was thought to be produced by the rays of the sun acting on the moisture left on the stalks by dew or fog. Plin. xviii. 28.

923. Robigo signifies rust as well as mildew.

933. At the right hand of the Flamen was a woolen towel, (mantele) with the fringes, or rather the nap on it, (villis solutis) for

936. Obscenæ, of ill omen on account of the howling.

939. The Canicula was said to be Mæra, the dog of Erigone the daughter of Icarus an Athenian, to whom Bacchus gave wine, which he shared with his workmen, who thinking he had poisoned them, put him to death. Erigone, by means of the dog discovered his

941. Pro, instead of.

942. The true cause of many superstitious practices, in which the mystics find such deep meaning.

943. Phr. Ass. fratre a periphrasis of Tithonus, Ovid appears to make a mistake here and to confound Tithonus with Ganymedes, as according to most writers, Tithonus was the son of Laomedon, the son of Ilus the brother of Assaracus, whose grand-nephew therefore Tithonus was.—Titania. This is the reading of only two MSS. and was first admitted into the text by Burmann. Heinsius however had approved of it. All the rest give Tithonia, which Heinsius shews to have been frequently employed by Statius and by Valerius Flaccus but thinks that in all these places it should be changed into Titania. Aurora is called Titania, for the same reason as Diana (Luna) is called so, (Met. III. 173,) and their brother, Sol Titan; see on v. 919.

945. The Floralia began on the IV. Kal. Maias.

946. See V. 183, et seq.

949. As it was requisite that the Pontifex Maximus should reside in a public building, near the temple of Vesta, Augustus, when raised to this dignity, assigned a part of his Palatium to the public service, and removed thither the sacred fire of Vesta—Aufert, claims.—Cognati. See III. 425. Some MSS. read cognato.

1—110. The poet here enters into a long inquiry on the subject of the origin of the name of May. To free the discussion from dryness, and to give it a dramatic air, he introduces the Muses disputing on this subject.—Quæritis. See iv. 878. He addresses his readers in general, and not Germanicus alone, as elsewhere.

7. The poet would appear in this place to confound the springs of Aganippe and Hippocrene, which, though both on Mt. Helicon, were distinct in situation.

But he had already (Met. v. 312,) distinguished them, so that we must regard the present as a slip of his memory. Aganippis, like Ausonis, Mænalis, etc. is evidently an adjective.

8. Med. equi, Pegasus. See III. 544.

9. Polyhymnia. The name of this Muse in all the Greek writers, from Hesiod down, is Πολυμυμία; by Ovid and by Horace, (Car. I. 1, 33,) she is called Polyhymnia, a name which could not be written in Greek.

 Hinc sata Majestas, quæ mundum temperat omnem, 25
 Quaque die partu est edita, magna fuit.

11-54. The first opinion. Maius derived its name from Majestas, the daughter of Honos and Reverentia. Sunt qui hunc mensem ad nostros Fastos transisse commemorant, apud quos nunc quoque vocatur Deus Maius, qui est Jupiter, a magnitudine et majestate dictus. Macrobius, Sat. I. 12.

10. Mente notant, mark in their mind or commit to memory.

11. Compare I. 103. Met I. 1. et seq. xv. 239. In these places he speaks of four elements, here of but three, regarding the air and the æther as one.

12. Omne opus. The whole mass. Some MSS. read onus. See on I. 564.

16. I doubt if it was judicious to personify here.

19. It was in the reign of Saturn that this confusion prevailed, hence no gods are spoken of but Titans, the children of Heaven and Earth; such were Oceanus and Tethys. It would be pressing the poet too closely to ask who the Dei advenæ could be in the reign of Saturn.

24. Lenz, who thinks that it is the banquets of the gods of which the poet speaks, in the language of the Roman triclinium, understands by legitimis toris the couches in such being properly arranged, and the guests placed according to their rank. Gierig rightly understands it of the marriage of Honour and Reverence.

25. Quæ, etc. Three of the best MSS. read hos est dea censa parentes, which Heinsius and Gierig adopt. Compare Hor. Car. I. 12. 15.

26. Magna fuit, scil. Majestas, like Minerva.

28. Aurea, i. e. adorned with gold.---Sinu, robe; part for the whole. Compare II. 310.

29. Pudor et Metus. The Αἰδώς and Νέμεσις of Hesiod, (Ἔργα 200.)

30. Vultus. One MS. reads cultus; either reading gives a good sense.

31. Suspectus, a regard, respect for.

34. Dum senior. See IV. 197.

35. For the Giant-war, see Met. I. 151. et seq. Virg. G. I. 278. Hor. Car. III. 4. 49. Mythology. p. 238.

rals in their triumphs, giving dignity to them. I know not where the poet got this beautiful fiction of the birth and power of Majesty. It has, I think, a Roman rather than a Grecian air, "Haud dubie poetæ antiquiori debet." Gierig.

54. The poet appears to intimate that each opinion was maintained by three of the Muses. For the names, characters, and attributes of these goddesses, see Mythology, p. 146.

55. The second opinion. Maius and Junius came from Majores and Juniores. Fulvius Nobilior in Fastis, quos in æde Herculis Musarum posuit, Romulum dicit postquam populos in majores minoresque divisit, ut altera pars consilio, altera armis rempublicam tueretur, in honorem utriusque partis hunc Maium sequentum mensem Junium vocasse. Macrobius, I. 12.

57. Αἰδεῖσθαι πολιοκροτάφους, εἴκειν δὲ γέροντων Ἐδρης καὶ γε-ρώων πάντων, Phocyl. 207. Cicero (Sen. 18.) praises the Lacedæmonians highly for their respect for old age, on the advantages of which he makes his Cato dilate, but properly adds non cani, non repente auctoritatem accipere possunt, as this depended on a well-spent life, and, as Menander says, Οὐχ' αἱ τρίχες ποιοῦσιν αἰ λευκαὶ φρονεῖν, Ἄλλ' ὁ τρόπος ἐνίων ἐστὶ τῆ φύσει Γέρων.

59. Παλαῖος αἶνος Ἔργα μὲν νεωτέρων, Βουλαι δ' ἔχουσι τῶν γηραιτέρων κράτος. Eurip. frag. Melan.

60. Same as Pugnabant pro aris et focis.

64. This derivation of Senatus is also given by Cicero (Sen. 6.). Dionysius (II. 12.) doubts whether the corresponding Greek term γερονσία came from age or from honour (γέρας).---Mite a very appropriate term, "Juventus est fervida, senectus mitis." Gierig.

66. In the early times of Rome,

Et medius juvenum, non indignantibus ipsis, the maturity of years was much regarded in the appointments to office. When Corn. Scipio was looking for the Ædileship (A. U. C. 539) the tribunes opposed him because he had not attained the lawful age, Liv. xxv. 2. By the Lex Villia Annalis passed A. U. C. 574. the age for the Quæstorship was made 31, for the Ædileship 37, the Prætorship 40, and the Consulship 43 years.

67. Compare Sall. Jug. 11.

68. See Horace Sat. II. 5. 17.

70. Censuram, the right of reprimanding.

71. Patres. See Liv. I. 8. Sall. Cat. 6. Vell. Patere. I. 8.---Pectora. Several MSS. read corpore.

74. Tangor, I am led to believe.

75. It was probably said that this was done by Romulus at the request of Numitor.

76. Sustinuisse. "Non sustinet alterum qui non potest non satisfacere ejus precibus," Gierig. Compare Met. xiv. 788. Liv. xxxi. 13.

77, 78. June, the poet thinks, being named a juvenum nomine, is no slight proof of the correctness of the foregoing etymology. But the origin of June itself is to be proved.---Præp. hon. Six MSS. proposito honori, some have propositum, five give the present reading, the rest propositi. Heinsius proposes præposito honori, which Krebs adopts.

79---110. The third opinion. The month derived its name from the Pleias Maia. Cincius mensem nominatum putat a Maia, quam Vulcani dicit uxorem, argumento-que utitur quod flamen Vulcanalis, Kal. Maiis huic deæ rem divinam facit. Macrob. Sat. I. 12. Again Contendunt alii Maiam Mercurii Matrem, mensi nomen dedisse.---

There is a festival of Mercury in this month which is in favour of the Pleias; but, on the other side, Maia seems to be an old Italian deity, the female, perhaps, of Maius, (see on v. 11,) and is justly regarded as the Earth, (see on v. 148,) who, under the name of Bona Dea, was worshiped on the Kalends. The marriage of Vulcan and Maia accords with Grecian, not with Italian theology. See on III. 512.

79. Hedera, the ornament of learned brows, and therefore suited to the Muse of the Epos.

80. Prima sui chori, Calliope is placed by Hesiod and all succeeding writers at the head of the list of the Muses. Perhaps in this place the chorus may be those of her sisters, who thought as she did on this subject.

81. Oceanus and Tethys were two of the Titans, the children of Heaven and Earth.

82. Μνήσομαι Ὀκεανοῦ βαθυῖ-ῥόον· ἐν γὰρ ἐκείνῳ Πᾶσα χθων, ἅτε νῆσος ἀπείριτος, ἐστεφάνωται.
 Dionys. Perieg. 3. For proof that the ancient poets represented the Ocean as a huge river which flowed round the earth, see Mythology, pp. 35, 228.

89--90. The country, its rivers and mountains put for the people. For the ante-lunar origin of the Arcadians, see I. 469.

101. Cinctutis, same as succinctis, which is the reading of several MSS. The Luperci were so called, because they ran, ἐν περιζώμασι, cincti subligaculis.

102. Celebres vias, the crowded streets.—Vellera secta, the goat-skin thongs. Several MSS. read verbera.

103. This is the way in which Evander chiefly testified his veneration for Mercury, by naming a month after the god's mother. As to the fact of his being his son, see above I. 471. According to Macrobius, (ut supra) traders sacrificed in this month to Maia and Mercury.

104. Compare Hor. Car. I. 10, 6. For the mythology of Mercury, see my Mythology, pp. 124 and 460.

105. Pietas, i. e. dutiful regard to his aunts, the Pleiades. The lyre, or phorminx, of which the invention was ascribed to Hermes, had seven strings. Ἑπτὰ δὲ συμφώνους ὄων ἐτανύσσετο χορδᾶς. Homer, H. Merc, 25.

108. See on v. 64.

111—128. On the Kalends of May, the star named Capella (αἶξ) which is in the right shoulder of the Heniochus or Charioteer, a constellation on the north side of the Milky Way—rises heliacally, according to Neapolis ; cosmically, according to Taubner. Is it not acronychally, according to Ovid ? Pliny (xviii. 26,) makes it take place the VIII. Id Maias.—Ab Jove, etc. Ἐκ Διὸς ἀρχώμεθα, Aratus Phæn. I Virg. Ec. III. 60.

113, 114. According to Eratosthenes (Catast. 13,) Musæus said, that when Jupiter was born, Rhea gave him to Themis, by whom he was committed to Amalthea, who had him suckled by her goat. Amalthea, we are told by Theon, (ad Arat. 64,) was the daughter of Olenus. Others say, that Amalthea was the name of the goat, and that she had two kids, which were raised with herself to the skies by her grateful nursling. There is no part of Grecian mythology more obscure than the early history of Jupiter.—Nascitur, i. e. oritur.—Pluviale. Compare Met. III. 594, Virg. Æn. ix. 668, on which Servius says, Supra Tauri cornua est signum, cui Auriga nomen est. Retinet autem stellas duas in manu, quæ Hædi vocantur et Capram—quorum et ortus et occasus gravissimas tempestates faciunt.

115. Naïs, for Nympha, the species for the genus.

119. Aëriis, lofty, tall, rising into the air.

123. Cinxit. One of the best MSS. which is followed by Hein-sius and Gierig, reads cinctum.---Recentibus, the MSS. also read decoribus, decentibus, viventibus.

129---147. The altar of the Guardian (Præstites) Lares was erected on the Kalends of May.

130. Curius. Manius Curius Dentatus, the conqueror of the Sabines and of Pyrrhus. There is an apparent difficulty here, as, according to Varro, T. Tadius, the Sabine king built a temple to the Lares, and Dionysius (iv. 14) tells us, that the Compitalia were instituted in their honour by Servius Tullius. The history of Tadius, however, is so purely mythic, that little stress can be laid on the above circumstance, and the fact of the previous worship of the Lares at Rome, does not militate against that of the erection of an altar to them by Curius. The present reading Vov.....Cur, was given by Ciofanus, from one MS. of the highest authority ;

Voverat illa quidem Curius : sed multa vetustas
 Destruit, et saxo longa senecta nocet.
 Causa tamen positi fuerat cognominis illis,
 Quod præstant oculis omnia tuta suis.

 Et sunt præsentés, auxiliumque ferunt.
 At canis ante pedes, saxo fabricatus eodem,

 Exagitant et Lar, et turba Diania, fures :
 Pervigilantque Lares, pervigilantque canes.
 Bina gemellorum quærebam signa deorum,
 Viribus annosæ facta caduca moræ :

that of the other MSS. and the previous editions, is Ara erat quidem illa Curibus, and it is a matter of great doubt which is the genuine one. One MS. for voverat, reads struxerat.

137. Stabat, scil. at the altar erected by Curius.

140. Grata, agreeable. Compitalia dies attributus Laribus ; ideo ubi vicæ competunt tum in competis sacrificatur ; quotannis is dies concipitur. Varro, L. L. V. There were 265 compita Larium at Rome. Pliny, III. 9.

143, 144. See vv. 129, 130.

145. Mille, a definite for an indefinite number.—Qui. trad. etc. Compitales Lares ornari bis anno constituit vernis floribus et æstivis. Suet. Aug. 31.

146. Numina trina, scil. the two Lares, and the Genius of Augustus. Hor. Car. iv. 5, 34. See IV. 954.—Vici, the streets.

148—158. The temple of Bona Dea was dedicated on the Kalends of May. It is disputed who this goddess was. Varro said she was Fatua or Fauna, the daughter of Faunus, who was so chaste that she never let herself even be seen by men. Macrobius (I. 12,) tells us, that Corn. Labeo said she was Maia. v. 79. As she is also said to have been the same with Ops, and a pregnant sow was the victim offered to her, (Festus, s. v. Damium,) which was also the victim to Tellus, (Hor. Ep. II. 1, 143.) I think it extremely probable, that Bona Dea was only one of the names of the goddess of the earth.

149. Moles nativa, a natural rock. It was on the Aventine.

152. Regna. Three of the best MSS. followed by Heinsius and Gierig, give signa.

155, 156. See on IV. 305. It is not certain, however, that it was Claudia Quinta, "Hæc Appia illa Claudia probatæ pudicitiae femina." Neapolis.

157, 158. Compare I. 649.

159—182. On the second of May, the wind Argestes began to blow, and the Hyades rose.—Hyperionis. Aurora, the daughter of Hyperion.

161. Argestes, called also Caucasus or Corus, was the north-west wind, and was considered to be very cold.—Mulcebit. Five MSS. read miscebit, which Burmann approved, and Gierig adopted.

162. A Cal. aq. For vessels sailing from the east coast of Italy to Greece, the north-west wind, also called by the Greeks Iapyx, was eminently favourable. Hor. Car. I. 3, 4. Most MSS. read a capreis, four a campis, three a canis, one qua canis. The reading of the text was given by Neapolis from a MS. of no great authority.

163. The rising of the Hyades acronychally. This, perhaps, is an error, for Pliny (xviii. 66,) says VI. Non. Maii Cæsari Suculæ matutino oriuntur.

166. There are three derivations

Tethyos has neptes, Oceanique senis.
 Nondum stabat Atlas humeros oneratus Olympo, Quum satus est forma conspiciendus Hyas. 170 of this name, one which the poet follows from ῥεν to rain; a second from the letter Y, which the constellation was thought to resemble; a third from ῥs sus, which is supported by the Latin name Suculæ. I am disposed to prefer this last, (Mythology, p. 418,) as also are Götting and Nitzsch, two distinguished critics of the present day.

171. Atlas was the father of Hyas and the Hyades.

182. Illā scil. pietas.—Nomina, etc. "Sed si nauta Græcus Hyadas ab imbre vocavit, ut vs. 166, recte admonitum est, quid opus erat idem nomen etiam ex mythis repetere. Ita poetæ sententia secum pugnat." Gierig; who had already observed, that grege Hyadum, v. 164, was an allusion to the derivation from ῥs.

183—378. The poet now returns to the Floralia, which he had briefly noticed at the end of the preceding book. These games were instituted according to Pliny, (xviii. 29.) A. U. C. 516. ex oraculis Sibyllæ, ut omnia bene deflorescerent. Velleius (I. 14.) gives A. U. C. 513. as the date; which is the true one. The Floralia began on the 28th of April, and ended on the 3d of May.—Mater florum. "Matres earum rerum dicuntur Deæ quibus præsent," Gierig. For the general principle see Mythology, p. 6.

189. Circus, that is, the games of the Floral Circus, which were continued into May. The Circus Floræ was in the sixth region of the city. For these games, see vv. 371, 372.—Theatris, the spectators who testified their approbation by clapping of hands, etc. Tota theatra reclamant, Cicero Orat. III. 50.

190. Munere. Munus was properly used only of gladiatorial shews. The poet in employing it here, uses a poet's privilege.

195. Chloris eram, etc. The name Chloris, is akin to  $\chi\lambda\acute{o}\eta$  grass, and  $\chi\lambda\omega\rho\acute{o}s$  green, flourishing; Flora is related in the same way to Flos. Chloris and Flora are therefore kindred terms, and the latter is not, as the poet says, derived from the former. I am not certain that the older Grecian Mythology acknowledged a goddess of flowers. Lenz infers from the poem of Catullus on Berenice's hair, which is a translation from Callimachus, that the Greeks had an ancient legend about Chloris, the wife of Zephyrus, which the Alexandrian poet transferred to Arsinoë, the wife of Ptolemy Philadelphus, and that Ovid probably derived it from the Aïtia of Callimachus. Nonnus, (xi. 363, xxxi. 106. 110,) is the only Greek poet, who, to my knowledge, notices this story of Chloris. From his late age he is of little authority, and the Italian Fauns are actors in his heterogeneous poem. According to Varro, (L. L. V.) Flora was an ancient Sabine deity, whose worship was brought to Rome by Tatius, and when we consider the rural character of the ancient Italian religion in general, there can be but little doubt of its having always recognised a patroness of the flowers. The silly, tasteless fiction, transmitted to us by Plutarch, (Q. R. 35,) and the Fathers of the Church, of Flora having been a courtizan, who left her wealth to the Roman people, on condition of their celebrating games in her honour, and of the Senate having, out of shame, feigned that she was the goddess of flowers—is utterly undeserving of notice.

197. Campi felicis. The Campus Felix of Ovid was, I think, Rem fortunatis ante fuisse viris.

 Quæ fuerit mihi forma, grave est narrare modestæ :
     Sed generum matri repperit illa deum. 200
 Ver erat : errabam : Zephyrus conspexit. Abibam :

the Ἠλύσιον πεδῖον of Homer, (Od. iv. 564,) rather than the μακάρων νήσους of Hesiod, (Ἔργα, 170). See Mythology, pp. 36 and 229. Compare Hor. Epod. xvi. 41. The localisers of the fictions of the poets make the Canary Isles to be this blissful region.

203. For this Athenian legend of Boreas carrying off Orithyia, the daughter of Erechtheus, as she was dancing in a choir of maidens on the banks of the Ilissus, see Met. vi. 677. Herod. vii. 189, Mythology, pp. 227, 346. Orithyia, I may observe, signifies mountain-rusher, (Ὀρει θύουσα) and was, therefore, a good name for the spouse of the North-wind. Athenian vanity made her a mortal, and daughter of an Attic king.

211. Generoso, of the finest kinds. Pruna generosa, Met. xiii. 818, generosa uva, Rem. Am. 567. generosum pecus. Virg. G. III. 75.

216. Comæ, the flowers, IV. 38.

217. The Horæ are the goddesses of the Seasons. They were the daughters of Jupiter and Themis. Hesiod. Theog. 900.—Incinctæ, i. e. succinctæ. See II. 634. Pictis vestibis, πέπλους ἐννύμεναι ἐροσεροῦς ἀνθῶν πολυτερπῶν, says the Orphic Hymn (xlii. 6,) of them. For vestibus, three MSS. read floribus.

219. The Charites or Graces were also the children of Jupiter ; they presided over social enjoyments, and were the bestowers of all grace and elegance. The occupation of the Charites and Horæ among the flowers is thus beautifully described by the author of the lost poem, named the Cypria, "Εἰματα μὲν χροίας τότε αἱ Χάριτες τε καὶ Ἀῦραι Ποίησαν καὶ ἔβαψαν ἐν ἄνθεσιν εἰαρινοῖσιν, Οἷα φοροῦσ' Ὀραι, ἐν τε κρόκῳ ἐν θ' ὑακίνθῳ, Ἐν τ' ἰὼ θαλέθοντι, ῥόδου τ' ἐνι ἄνθεϊ καλῶ, Ἡδέϊ, νεκταρέῳ, ἐν τ' ἀμβροσίαις καλῶ-κεσσιν Ἄνθεσι Ναρκίσσου καλλυχρόου. For the Horæ and Charites, see Mythology, p. 150—153.

221. It is not unlikely that the poet, who does not say where the garden of Flora was, placed it mentally on the western margin of the earth, where so many of the wonders of ancient Grecian fable lay. See vv. 233, 234.

223. Hyacinthus, a Spartan youth, beloved by Apollo, and turned into a flower of his own name. Met. x. 162. Therapnæ was a town of Laconia.

225. See Met. III. 407, et seq.

226. Alter et alter, scil. that he and his shadow were not different persons.

227. Crocus, Met. iv. 283. Attis above, IV. 223. In the Met. (x. 103,) Cybele changes him into a pine-tree, but Arnobius (v. p. 181,) says, Fluore de sanguinis viola flos nascitur, et redimitur ex hac arbos (pinus). Adonis, the son of Cinyras, was turned into an anemone. Met. x. 728. See Mythology, pp. 109, 110.

229. In Homer, Hesiod, and Apollodorus, and the Greek poets and mythographers in general, Ares, the god corresponding to the Italian Mars, is the son of Jupiter and Juno. The present legend I regard as the fiction of some Italian, or, perhaps, of a Greek who was desirous of ministering to the vanity of the Romans. I think that many legends were invented in this way. Such, for example, is the tale of Faunus and Hercules (above, II. 305, et seq.) devised to explain a custom of the Roman Luperci. They are wrong who think that the taste and talent for devising mythes ceased, when real history began. The present legend is only to be found in Ovid; but Festus evidently alludes to it, for, treating of the etymon of Gradivus, he says, Vel, ut alii dicunt, quia gramine sit natus.

233. Compare Hom. II. xiv. 301. Met. II. 509.—Facta. Heinsius, on the authority of one MS. reads furta.

243, 244. Somewhat like her declaration in Virgil, Flectere si nequeo Superos Acherunta movebo, which may have been in Ovid's mind.

245. Vox erat in cursu. This may refer either to Juno or to Flora; but it is evident that the poet is speaking of Juno, and means that as she proceeded in her complaint, she marked the change in the countenance of her auditress. Taubner's interpretation is curious; he supposes the meaning to be: Juno spoke as she ran! Compare VI. 362, and Met. xiii. 508.

251. Oleniis. Olenus was a town of Achæa. There was another of this name in Bœotia.

253. Qui dabat. Probably Zephyrus.

257. Thrace, on the left of the Propontis, was regarded as the birth-place and favourite abode of Mars, on account of the martial character of the people.

259. This strengthens what I said above respecting the late age of the fiction.

261. Coronis. He calls the flowers crowns or garlands, not as being the crown of the plant, for that is true of all that follow, but as being used for making them.

He goes on to say that Flora presided over blossoms, as well as flowers.

265, 266. This is said no where else of the olive. Of the almond, we read, "Ὅρα τὴν ἀμυγδαλὴν τῷ καρπῷ βριθομένην τοιγαροῦν εὐετηρίας τεκμήριον μέγιστον. Theophil. Probl. nat. 17. See also Virg. G. I. 187.

267. Compare Virgil, G. I. 228. 268. See II. 68.

269. The poet could not abstain from taking advantage of a figurative employment of the word flos, and, ascribing to Flora, what did not belong to her. "Quæ de vino sequuntur, ea melius abes-

The flos and nebula of wine, are the light scum which comes upon its surface when new. Si vinum florere incipiet, sæpius curare oportebit, ne flos ejus pessum eat et saporem vitiet. Columella, R. R. xii. 30. Flos vini candidus probatur; rubens triste signum est, si non is vini color sit—Quod celeriter florere cæperit, odoremque trahere, non exit diutinum. Plin. H. N. xiv. 21.

273, 274. The flower of youth—another figurative employment of the word.

277. He now proceeds to relate the historic origin of the Floral games.

279. Compare Sallust, Cat. 25, Docta psallere, saltare et multa alia, quæ instrumenta luxuriæ sunt.

281. Hinc et locupletes dicebant loci, hoc est agri, plenos. Pecunia ipsa a pecore appellabatur. Plin. xviii. 3.

283. The subject of the Roman public land, and the Agrarian law, has been treated and explained in a most masterly manner by the illustrious Niebuhr, but it would be impossible to do justice to his views in the compass of a note. I must, therefore, refer the reader to his Roman History, Vol. II. p. 129, et seq. (Hare and Thirlwall's translation,) or Vol. II. p. 353, et seq. (Walter's translation). A sufficiently full account of these matters will be found in Nos. xv. and xxii. of the Foreign Quarterly Review. In my Outlines of History, (p. 72,) I have given a brief account of them.—Populi saltus. These were the pascua, the public pastures, for the liberty of grazing which a rent was to be paid to the state, but of which the payment was frequently eluded by favour or power. Etiam nunc in tabulis Censoriis pascua dicuntur omnia, ex quibus populus reditus habet, quia diu hoc solum vectigal fuerat. Pliny, ut supra.

Idque diu licuit, pœnaque nulla fuit.
 Vindice servabat nullo sua publica vulgus : 285
 Jamque in privato pascere inertis erat.
 Plebis ad Ædiles perducta licentia talis
 Publicios ; animus defuit ante viris.
 Rem populus recipit : mulctam subiere nocentes.
 Vindicibus laudi publica cura fuit. 290
 Mulcta data est ex parte mihi : magnoque favore
 Victores ludos instituere novos.
 Parte locant clivum, qui tunc erat ardua rupes.
 Utile nunc iter est, Publiciumque vocant.
 Annua credideram spectacula facta ; negavit : 295
 Addidit et dictis altera verba suis.
 Nos quoque tangit honos, festis gaudemus et aris :
 Turbaque cœlestes ambitiosa sumus.
 Sæpe deos aliquis peccando fecit iniquos :

287, 288. L. and M. Publicii Mallioli, were Ædiles Plebis, A. U. C. 513. The poet here, as elsewhere, shews his superficial knowledge of the history of his country, for A. U. C. 457, ab Ædilibus Pl. L. Ælio. Pæto, et C. Fulvio Curvo ex multatitia pecunia, quam exegerunt pecuariis damnatis, ludi facti, pateræque aureæ ad Cerevis positæ. Liv. x. 23, and a road was made A. U. C. 462, by the Curule Ædiles, out of similar fines. Liv. x. 47. As by the Licinian law, no one was allowed to put more than 100 head of black, or 500 head of small cattle on the public pastures, these fines were probably imposed on those who had exceeded that number.

291. Besides the institution of the Floral games, a temple, of which the poet does not speak, was built to Flora out of that money, which was repaired by Tibertius, A. U. C. 773. Tacit. An. II. 49.

292. Victores, scil. the Ædiles.

293. Clivus Publicius ab ædilibus plebei Publiciis, qui eum publice ædificarunt. Varro, L. L. iv. Festus, who gives a similar account, adds, munierunt, ut in Aventinum vehicula Velia venire possent. A clivus, was a carriage-way up a hill.

298. Turba, etc. This low idea of their gods, was one of the greatest blemishes of the theology of the Greeks and Romans. It pervades all their mythology. See above, on I. 445. Hom. II. ix. 497. Similar notions still prevail in modern Italy, and in many other countries.

299. Iniquos, that is, incensed or unfavourable, the contrary of æquos.

 Et subita frondes decutiuntur aqua.

305. Thestiaden, Meleager. See Met. 270, et seq. Hom. Il. ix. 527, et seq. Mythology, p. 287.

307. Tantaliden. Agamemnon, descended from Pelops, the son of Tantalus. The Grecian fleet, as is well-known, was detained at Aulis by the anger of Diana.—Vela, Neapolis read tela, and thought of Niobe.

308. Virgo est, from whom, therefore, more mildness was to be expected.

309. See above, III. 265.—Dionen. Venus. See II. 461.

311. Oblivia, forgetfulness ; or rather neglect.

312. Præteriunt, i. e. neglected to celebrate the Floral games.

Nec volui fieri, nec sum crudelis in ira :	325

329. In the consulate of L. Postumius Albinus, and M. Popilius Lænas, A. U. C. 581, it was directed that the Floral games should be celebrated every year.

331. The Floralia were of an exceedingly lascivious character. The utmost license of language prevailed, and, at the sound of trumpets, lewd women came forth and ran and danced naked before the spectators. The Fathers of the Church, Arnobius and Lactantius, are unsparing in their censure of them. When Cato once appeared at them, the people were so awed at his presence, that they would not call on the women to strip. Val. Max. II. 10. This practice probably gave occasion to the legend already noticed, see on v. 195, of Flora having been herself a meretrix. Ovid views matters here with a more lenient eye.

335, Tempora, etc. He is not now narrating what took place at the Floralia, but showing how the gifts of Flora ministered to joy and pleasure.--Sut. cor. crowns made of rose-petals sewed together. There were also pacitiles coronæ, or crowns made of various flowers, Jam tunc coronæ deorum honos erant, et Larium publicorum privatorumque, ac sepulchrorum et Manium, summaque auctoritas pacitili coronæ. Sutes Saliorum sacris invenimus et sollemnes cænis. Transiere deinde ad rosaria, eoque luxuria processit, ut non esset gratia nisi mero folio. Plin. H. N. xxi. 3, 8.

336. It was the custom at banquets to shower down roses on the guests and the tables. See. v. 369.

337. Dancing was looked upon by the Romans as highly indecorous and unbecoming in a respectable person. See Corn. Nep. Epam. I. Corte on Sall. Cat. 25. 2. None danced but those who were drunk.—Philyra, the interior bark of the linden or lime-tree. It was much used for making these festive crowns. Plin. H. N. xvi. 14. xxi. 3. Hor. Car. I. 38. 2---Incinct. capil. Incinctus seems here to be used for the simple cinctus; elsewhere (II. 635, V. 217. 675,) it is equivalent to succinctus.

338. Imprudens, etc. Scarcely knowing what he is doing, he is whirled about by the art taught by wine, i. e. he dances. Ille liquor docuit voces inflectere cantu, Movit et ad certos nescia membra modos, Tibull. I. 2. 37. For vertitur some MSS. read utitur, which is perhaps the better reading.

339, 340. This custom of lovers among the ancients is well known. See. IV. 110. At lacrimans exclusus amator limina scæpe, Floribus et sertis operit, postesque superbos Unguit amaricino, Lucret. iv. 171. Hence Heinsius would read sarta fores, than which emendation Gierig thinks nothing can be more certain.

343. Acheloë. The name of this river is here as in Virgil (G. I. 9,) used for water in general.

343. See III. 513.

347. Scena levis, etc. the light, the comic, the farcical opposed to the grave, tragic scene.----Cothurn. deas., is either the grave, stately goddesses, or, what is nearly the same thing, those who used to be introduced on the cothurned, or tragic stage, such as Diana and Minerva.

351. Here Flora is again opposed to the serious, respectable goddesses.—Tetricis, grave, severe. Tetrica et tristis Sabinorum disciplina, Liv. I. 18.---De magna. Ten MSS. read dea magna.

352. Plebeio choro, scil. the Meretrices, who were of course of low birth.

353. Specie, the beauty of youth.

415, 416. Lyra rises acronychally the III. Non.

417, 418. One part of the Scorpion sets cosmically the day before the Nones. Pridie Nonas Maias Nepa medius occidet. Columella, R. R. xi. 2. Nepa is used for Scorpio, by Manilius and others, as well as Columella.

419---492. The Lemuria began on the VII. Id. and lasted for three days, but not continuously, as appears from v. 491, and an ancient Calendar. The Mundus (See on IV. 821,) was regarded as the door of the under world, and was believed to be open three days in the year for the spirits of the departed to revisit the earth. Festus v. Mundus. There may be some relation between these three days

Ritus erit veteris, nocturna Lemuria, sacri :

422. Tacitis Manibus, i. e. the Lemures, whom (v. 481,) he calls animas Silentum. According to Ovid's account, the Lemures were, what we term, disturbed spirits. Nonius says, they were larvæ nocturnæ et terrificationes imaginum et bestiarum.

423. See I. 27.

427, 428. It would appear from this, that it was thought that in the time of Romulus, the Feralia, (II. 533,) and the Lemuria, were one, and were celebrated in the third month, which was named a majoribus.

429, 430. Compare IV. 490. Virg. Æn. iv. 522, viii. 26. If there is any imitation, I would say that it was Apollonius Rhodius, whom Ovid had in view.—Præbet, scil. nox. Some MSS. read somnos, or somnum silentia præbent.

431. Ille. He who is, that person who is.

432. Vincula, scil. pedum, calcea, I. 410. It was the custom to bare the feet when going about any magic operation. See Met. vii. 182. Virg. Æn. iv. 518. Hor. Sat. I. 8, 23.

433. Signa, etc. Neapolis says, “Est crepitus ille, qui fit nostro ævo in quavis saltatione, sive comica, sive rustica, digito scilicet medio adeo presse juncto cum pollice, ut lapsus in palman strepitum edat.” This explanation is adopted by Gierig, but as he observes from Met. ix. 299, that “digitis pectinatim inter se junctis impediabant aliquid,” and the poet here says digilis (not digito) junctis, I think the mode may have been to lock the fingers in one another, by which means the thumbs were joined in the middle, and then to make a noise by bringing the hands smartly together.

Occurrat tacito ne levis umbra sibi ;

 Aversusque jacit ; sed dum jacit, Hæc ego mitto ;
 His, inquit, redimo meque meosque fabis.
 Hoc novies dicit, nec respicit. Umbra putatur
 Colligere, et nullo terga vidente sequi. 440
 Rursus aquam tangit, Temesæaque concrepat æra,
 Et rogat, ut tectis exeat umbra suis.
 Quum dixit novies, Manes exite paterni !
 Respicit, et pure sacra peracta putat.
 Dicta sit unde dies, quæ nominis exstet origo, 445
 Me fugit. Ex aliquo est invenienda deo.
 Pljade nate, mone, virga venerande potenti :

436. Nigras, etc. Compare II. 576. For ante, several MSS. read ore, which Heinsius preferred.

437. Aversus jacit, throws them behind him. Compare Virg. Ec. viii. 101.

438. Redimo, etc. That you may no longer haunt my house. Quibus temporibus in sacris fabam jactant noctu ac dicunt se Lemures extra januam ejicere. Varro de Vita Pop. Rom. apud Nonium. Faba Lemuralibus jacitur Larvis, et Parentalibus adhibetur sacrificiis, et in flore ejus luctus litteræ apparere videntur. Festus.

439. Novies, like ter, (v. 435,) for numero deus impare gaudet, (Virg. Ec. viii. 75,) was probably of magic efficacy. Compare Met. xiii. 951.

440. This superstition reminds one of that of sowing the hempseed on All-Hallows' Eve. See Burns' Halloween, st. xvi.—xx.

441. Temesæa æra, simply copper. Temesa, called by the Latins Tempsa, was a town in Brutium. It is supposed to be the Temesa of the Homeric ages, to which (Od. I. 184,) the Greeks resorted to barter iron for copper. See Mythology, p. 232. For the abundance of copper in ancient Italy, see Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. I. 450—452. Of its use on the present occasion, we may observe, that Sophron in one of his Mimes, said, Κύων βαύξας λύει τὰ φάσματα, ὡς καὶ χαλκὸς κροτηθεῖς. The Scholiast on Theocritus, tells us, that Ὁ τοῦ χαλκοῦ ἦχος οἰκείος τοῖς κατοικομένοις, on which Neapolis says, "Observe illa et respice ad hodiernum modum." He was a Sicilian.

447. Pljade nate, Mercury. All the editions read Pleiade. But see note on IV. 169.—Virga, the well known gestamen of Ἑρμῆς χρυσόρραπις. Compare Hom. II. xxiv. 43. Od. v. 47. Virg. Æn. 242. Hor. Car. I. 10, 17, 24, 15.

Sæpe tibi Stygii regia visa Jovis.

 Et male veloci justa soluta Remo ;
 Faustulus infelix, et passis Acca capillis
 Spargebant lacrimis ossa perusta suis.
 Inde domum redeunt sub prima crepuscula mœsti, 455

 Umbra cruenta Remi visa est assistere lecto,
 Atque hæc exiguo murmure verba loqui :
 En ego dimidium vestri parsque altera voti
 Cernite sim qualis ! qui modo qualis eram ! 460
 Qui modo, si volucres habuissem regna jubentes,
 In populo potui maximus esse meo.
 Nunc sum elapsa rogi flammis et inanis imago.
 Hæc est ex illo forma relicta Remo.
 Heu ! ubi Mars pater est ! si vos modo vera locuti, 465
 Uberaque expositis ille ferina dedit.
 Quem lupa servavit, manus hunc temeraria civis
 Perdidit. O quanto mitior illa fuit !
 Sæve Celer, crudelem animam per vulnera reddas,
 Utque ego, sub terras sanguinolentus eas ! 470
 Noluit hoc frater. Pietas æqualis in illo est.
 Quod potuit, lacrimas in mea fata dedit.

448. His office of ψυχοπομπὸς is well-known. He was, therefore, the god who was most likely to be able to tell the origin of the name Lemuria.

450. He does not, as usual, introduce the god himself speaking, but informs the reader of what he had learned from him.

451. Tumulo condidit. Compare Virg. Æn. III. 67.

452. See IV. 841, et seq.—Male veloci. Like servata male, I. 559.

456. Utque erat. As they (each of them) were. Two of the best MSS. read sicut erant, but the metre is against this reading.

457. Compare Virg. Æn. II. 270.

471. Pietas, etc. His brotherly love is equal to mine.

Hunc vos per lacrimas, per vestra alimenta rogate,
 Ut celebrem nostrō signet honore diem.
 Mandantem amplecti cupiunt, et brachia tendunt : 475
 Lubrica prensantes effugit umbra manus.
 Ut secum fugiens somnos abduxit imago,
 Ad regem voces fratris uterque ferunt.
 Romulus obsequitur, lucemque Remuria dixit
 Illam, qua positis justa feruntur avis. 480

483. Lemures, νυκτερινοὶ δαίμονες. Glossæ.

486. See II. 557.

487. Plutarch (Q. R. 86,) gives, among other reasons, why the Romans did not marry in May, ὅτι πολλοὶ Λατίνων ἐν τῷ μηνὶ τούτῳ τοῖς κατοικομένοις ἐναγίζουσι. He elsewhere informs us, that it was only widows who married on holidays.

490. The celebrated Alessandro Tassoni, as Burmann observes, treats largely in his Pensieri Diversi, L. viii c. 2. of this superstition, which still existed in his time at Ferrara.

493—544. The second day of the Lemuria fell on the V. Id. on which day therefore Orion set.—Bœotum. Orion was born in Bœotia, according to most writers. Pindar makes Chios his birth-place. The following narrative occurs in several writers besides Ovid. See Mythology, p. 415—419.

494. Falsus eris, you will be mistaken.

495. Frater. Tzetzes on Lyc. Cass. 328, says it was Apollo. As according to Hesiod, Neptune was the father of Orion, our poet is, I think, the more orthodox.

497. Compare Virg. Ec. II. 66. Hor. Epod. II. 61. Compare also the whole narrative with the delightful story of Philemon and Baucis, in the Metamorphoses. viii. 626. et seq.

504. Parent promissis, is equivalent to: They accept his invitation.

506. Ignis, etc. The same is said of Philemon and Baucis; they had therefore but the one hot meal a day. This way of keeping in, and blowing up a fire, is familiar to any one who has been in a country where wood or peat is the fuel.

509. Calices, earthen pots or pipkins to go on the fire. This is rather an unusual sense of the word.—Inde, of them. Compare IV. 171. Virg. G. III. 308, 490.

510. Testu suo, by its lid, I should suppose.—Fumant. Several MSS. read spumant or spumat, 519. Lino, a linen covering.

525. Prima, etc. Heinsius, who is followed by the other editors, reads primæ mihi cura juventæ, which is the reading of three of the best, and five other MSS. Two of the best read prima mihi cura juventa; others cara mihi prima juventa; one prima mihi grata juventa. I think, with Krebs, that there is force in the repetition of cara. Burmann proposes flore juventæ.

526. Cognita. Seven MSS. have condita.

542. Curva spicula, its claws.
 —Gemelliparæ, an epithet of Latona, peculiar to our poet.

545—598. On the IV. Id. there were Circensian games in honor of Mars Ultor. Augustus built (A. U. C. 725,) in his own Forum a temple to this god, which he had vowed at the time of the battle of Philippi. Suet. Aug. 29.—Mundo, the sky. It is often used in this sense by Manilius. Four MSS. read cælo.

546. Coarctat, contracts, shortens.

549. Bellica signa, i. e. the clash of arms.

557. Impius. Rome was under the protection of the gods; Augustus was a god himself. It was, therefore, impiety to take arms against them.

560. Ornant signis fictilibus aut æreis inauratis ædium fastigia. Vitruv. Archit. III. 2. We know not of what gods the statues were on this temple of Mars.

561. Diversæ figuræ, differing in form from those used by the Romans. These, and the arma of the next line, were probably carved on the doors, or piled or suspended at them.

563. Proximum a diis immortalibus honorem memoriæ ducum præstitit. Itaque et opera cujusque, manentibus titulis, restituit, et statuas omnium triumphali effigie in utraque Fori sui porticu dedicavit. Suet. Aug. 31.—Hinc, then, or from the temple.—Caro. Heinsius and Gierig read after two of the best MSS. sacro.

565. Romulus, the son of Ilia, bearing the spolia opima of Acron. Liv. I. 10.

566. The titles and deeds of the great men were inscribed on the bases of their statues.

567. The name of Augustus was, according to custom, inscribed on the temple.

580. To whom is unknown the fate of Crassus, and the recovery of the captured ensigns of Rome by Augustus, the theme of every Augustan poet's praise ?

603—620. On the 14th May, Prid. Id. the head of the Bull rises cosmically. The poet now inquires into its origin. See IV. 717—720.—Prior, scil. dies. Idibus is a dative.

605. For the story of Europa, see Met. II. 833, et seq. Hor. Car. III. 27. Mythology p. 408. It is also most beautifully told by the Greek poet Moschus, in his second Idyll.

607. Jubam. It is rather unusual to speak of the juba, (mane) of a bull. Ovid however does so elsewhere. Am. III. 5. 24. This description was, perhaps as Gierig observes, taken from some painting, but that in Moschus (v. 122) is similar. Τῇ μὲν ἔχεν ταύρον δολιχὸν κέρασ, ἐν χειρὶ δ' ἄλλη Εἴρνε πορφυρέας κόλπου πτύχας..... Κολπώθη δ' ὤμοισι πέπλος βαθὺς Εὐρωπείης, Ἰστίον οἶα τε νηός, ἐλαφρίζεσκε δὲ κούρην. And in Lucian's Dialogue of Zephyrus and Notus, it is said, ἡ δὲ τῇ λαιᾷ μὲν εἶχετο τοῦ κέρατος, ὡς μὴ ἀπολισθάνοι, τῇ ἑτέρα δὲ ἡνεμωμένον τὸν πέπλον ξυνεῖχε. Compare III. 869.

613, 614. How truly Ovidian this is!—Prudens, on purpose. This word is a contraction of providens.

621—662. On the Ides of May, after having performed the sacrifices appointed by the law, the Pontifices, the Vestal Virgins, the Prætors, and such other of the citizens as were legally qualified, proceeded to the Sublician or ancient wooden bridge, and threw from it into the Tiber thirty images of men formed of bullrushes. These figures were called Argei. See Dionysius I. 19 and 38. Argei fiunt e scirpeis virgultis: simulacra sunt hominum triginta (in the old MSS. xxiv.): et quotannis a ponte Sublicio a sacerdotibus publice jaci solent in Tiberim. Varro, L. L. VI. Argeos vocabant scirpeas effigies, quæ per virgines Vestales annis singulis jaciebantur in Tiberim. Festus. I have departed from the usual division in this place, and made a separate section of 621—662, as the Argei were thrown on the Ides, and Taurus rose Prid. Idus.—Virgo, scil. Vestalis, one, as is so frequently the case, put for the whole. See preceding part of this note.—Pris. vir. This is explained by what follows.

622. Roboreo, i. e. Sublicio so called a sublicis, the piles on which it was built, hence Plutarch calls it ξυλίνην γέφυραν. Dionysius III. says of it ἦν ἄχρι τοῦ παρόντος διαφυλάττουσιν, ἰερὰν εἶναι νομίζοντες· εἰ δὲ τι πονήσειεν αὐτῆς μέρος, οἱ ἱεροφάνται (Pontifices) θεραπεύουσι, θυσίας τινὰς ἐπιτελοῦντες ἅμα τῇ κατασκευῇ πατρίους. The Sublician was the ancient original bridge of Rome, and a superstitious reverence frequently attaches to things of this nature. I need scarcely observe, that we have here the origin of the word Pontifex.

623. The first opinion respecting the origin of this custom: the ancient Romans used to throw their old men, when they were arrived at the age of sixty, into the Tiber, and drown them. This the poet very properly seems disposed to reject, and whatever may

Fama vetus : tum quum Saturnia terra vocata est, 625

Talia fatidici dicta fuere dei :

Falcifero libata seni duo corpora, gentes,

Mittite, quæ Tuscis excipiantur aquis.

Donec in hæc venit Tirynthius arva, quotannis

Tristia Leucadio sacra peracta modo ;

have been the case with a tribe of the ancient Indians, (see Herod. III. 38,) or with the Battas of modern times, there is no ground for suspecting the people of ancient Latium of such barbarity.

625. A second opinion : it commemorated the time when human sacrifices were offered at Rome. I have, in various parts of my Mythology, hinted my opinion, that human sacrifices were totally unknown in the heroic ages of Greece, and that all legends relating to such are comparatively late fictions. I now extend this theory to Italy, and assert that there are no testimonies, on which we can rely, of such a practice having prevailed in it in those times, when the poet says it was called Saturnia terra. The opinion, of which the poet now speaks, evidently arose from the confounding of Saturnus, the Italian god of husbandry, with 'Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with blood Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears,' the 'grim idol' of the Phœnicians and Carthaginians.

626. According to Dionysius, the oracle given by the god at Dodona to the Pelasgians was as follows ; Στείχετε μαιόμενοι Σικελῶν Σατουρνίαν αἶαν, ἢ δ' Ἀβοριγενέων Κοτύλην, οὗ νᾶσος ὀχέεται. Οἷς ἀναμυχθέντες δεκάτην ἐκπέμψατε Φοίβῳ, καὶ κεφάλαια Ἄδῃ, καὶ τῷ πατρὶ πέμπατε φῶτα. Arnobius, (adv. G. II. p. 91,) says, Cum ex Apollinis monitu patri Diti ac Saturno humanis capitibus supplicaretur. I need hardly observe, that the aforesaid oracle cannot be older than the Alexandrian period of Grecian literature.

630. Leucadio. Leucas, now Santa Maura, on the coast of Acarnania, was originally a peninsula. It has long been an island. The celebrated Lover's Leap was there. Strabo (x. 2.) says, Ἦν δὲ καὶ πατριον τοῖς Λευκαδίοις κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἐν τῇ θυσίᾳ τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος ἀπὸ τῆς σκοπῆς, (the Lover's Leap,) ριπτεῖσθαι τινα τῶν ἐν αἰτίοις ὄντων ἀποτροπῆς χάριν. He adds, that birds, and a kind of wings, were attached to these criminals to break the fall, and that there was a number of persons below in small boats to save them, and to put them beyond the bounds of the country.

631. Macrobius (Sat. I. 7,) says, that he persuaded the people ut faustis sacrificiis infavusta mutarent, inferentes Diti, non hominum capita, sed oscilla ad humanam effigiem arte simulata, et aras Saturnias, non mactando viros, sed accensis luminibus excolentes, quia non solum virum sed et lumina

Herculis exemplo corpora falsa jaci.
 Pars putat, ut ferrent juvenes suffragia soli,
 Pontibus infirmos præcipitasse senes.
 Tibri, doce verum: tua ripa vetustior urbe. 635
 Principium ritus tu bene nosse potes.
 Tiberis arundiferum medio caput extulit alveo,
 Raucaque dimovit talibus ora sonis:
 Hæc loca desertas vidi sine mœnibus herbas:
 Pascebat sparsos utraque ripa boves. 640

φῶτα (see the oracle,) significant. The following note of Burmann's is too curious to be omitted, "Similem fere ritum Lipsiæ a meretricibus celebratum scribit Pfeiffer Rerum Lipsiensium, L. III. § 18, illas scilicet solitas olim primis jejunii quadragenarii (Lent) diebus imaginem stramineam deformis viri, longa pertica suffixam, sequente omni meretricum agmine, tulisse ad Pardam flumen, ibique, cum carminibus in pallidam mortem, præcipitasse; dicentes se lustrare urbem, ut sequenti anno a pestilentia esset immunis."—Illum. Fama vetus, (v. 625,) is understood.—Quirites, proleptically, as there were no Quirites as yet.

633. A third opinion: which appears to have arisen from the misunderstanding of a proverb, Cum in quintum gradum pervenerant, atque habebant sexaginta annos, tum denique erant a publicis negotiis liberi atque expediti et otiosi: ideo in proverbium quidam putant venisse, sexagenarios de ponte dejici oportere, id est quod suffragium non ferant, quod per pontem ferebant. Nonius. Exploratissimum illud causæ est quo tempore primum per pontem coperunt comitiis suf- fragia ferre, juniores conclamare, ut de ponte dejicerentur sexagenarii: quia nullo publico munere fungerentur; ut ipsi potius sibi quam illis deligerent imperium, Festus.

635. Tibri, etc. The reader will call to mind Gray's "Say father Thames," etc. in his Ode on the Distant Prospect of Eton College, and I hope, at the same time, recollect with contempt the tasteless criticism of Johnson, who, curious enough, had put an exactly similar apostrophe to the Nile into the mouth of the princess Nekayah, in his own Rasselas. Was this passage of Ovid in the mind of that maker of beautiful poetic mosaics?

637. Arundiferum. The river-gods were usually represented crowned with reeds. Met. ix. 3. Virg. Æn. viii. 34.

638. Rauca ora. As he uses the verb dimovet, ora, in this place, must signify lips, and hoarse lips is rather a hardy expression. Heinsius proposed glauca. A hoarse voice is very naturally ascribed to a river-god. Compare Virg. Æn. ix. 124.

639. Compare Virg. Æn. viii. 360.

Et quem nunc gentes Tiberin noruntque timentque,
 Tunc etiam pecori despiciendus eram.
 Arcadis Evandri nomen tibi sæpe refertur :
 Ille meas remis advena torsit aquas.
 Venit et Alcides, turba comitatus Achiva. 645
 Albula, si memini, tunc mihi nomen erat.
 Excipit hospitio juvenem Pallantius heros :
 Et tandem Caco debita pœna venit.
 Victor abit, secumque boves, Erytheïda prædam,
 Abstrahit. At comites longius ire negant : 650
 Magnaque pars horum desertis venerat Argis.
 Montibus his ponunt spemque Laremque suum.
 Sæpe tamen patriæ dulci tanguntur amore ;
 Atque aliquis moriens hoc breve mandat opus :
 Mittite me in Tiberin, Tiberinis vectus ut undis 655
 Litus ad Inachium pulvis inanis eam.
 Displicet heredi mandati cura sepulcri :
 Mortuus Ausonia conditur hospes humo.
 Scirpea pro domino in Tiberin jactatur imago,
 Ut repetat Graias per freta longa domos. 660
 Hactenus. Ut vivo subiit rorantia saxo
 Antra, leves cursum sustinuistis aqnæ.

646. See II. 389. IV. 48. Liv. I. 3.

647. Pallantius, from his native town Pallantium, in Arcadia. He calls him Nonacrius heros, v. 97.

660. The only foundation of this legend is the accidental resemblance between Argei and Ἀργεῖοι. Of the origin of the word Argei, I can offer no conjecture; the ceremony seems to me to have been symbolical. Perhaps, like the Leucadian rite, (see on v. 630) it had some analogy with that of letting go the Scape-goat under the Mosaic law. In the number of the images (thirty) I discern a relation to the thirty curies into which the original Romans were divided: or, perhaps, a more general one, to the political number of Latium. See Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. II. 18, et seq.

661. Hactenus, scil. locutus est Tiberis.

663—692. A temple was dedicated to Mercury on the Ides of May, A. U. C. 258. Liv. II. 21, 27.—Clare, etc. Compare Hor. Car. I. 10. which ode Ōvid, very possibly had before him.

665. Pacis, etc. "Mercurius pacis et armorum arbiter propter eloquentiam et prudentiam qua excellit." Gierig. I rather think it was as being Caducifer, the herald of the gods.

671. Te. etc. The name of the Roman Mercurius comes evidently from Merx, and there can be little doubt of his having been originally merely the god presiding over commerce. When he was identified with the Greek Hermes, he acquired the offices above mentioned. For Hermes, see Mythology, p. 124.

673. Est aqua, etc. "Hoc solum testimonio probant viri docti extra portam Capenam, via Appia, aquam fuisse ita nuncupatam; qua populus, qui negotio et quæstui operam dabat, his Idibus lustrari solitus." Neapolis.

674. Numen habet, it has a divine efficacy.

675. Incinctus tunicas. "Cingulo; e quo marsupium auri monetalis propendebat. Hic vetus mercatorum habitus." Neapolis. The MSS. in general read tunica.

676. Purus, scil. ipse.---Suffita scil. sulfure. Most MSS. read suffusa.

678. Omnia, etc. his goods, all the things that he had to sell. He, of course, as v. 676 shews, had brought the holy water home for this pious use.

 Abstulerant raptas Phœben Phœbesque sororem

680. Solita fallere. The character of the trader was in bad odour in ancient Rome for honesty; for trade was considered an illiberal employment, and no man of respectability engaged in it.

684. Non audituri, who should not hear, whom I did not wish to hear.

692. Ortygias boves, the oxen of Apollo. For the story, see Met. II. 685, et seq. the Homeridian hymn to Hermes, or my analysis of it. (Mythology, p. 126—128.) See also Hor. Car. I. 10. 9. Ortygian, is used by the poet as equivalent to Delian, as Ortygia was one of the names given to Delos. For the true situation of Ortygia, and the way in which it was confounded with Delos, see Mythology, pp. 99 and 254.

693—720. On the XIII. Kal. Jun. the sun enters the Twins. Columella, who is followed by Neapolis, has XV. Kal. Jun.—Precor scil. te Mercuri!—Mel. pet. scil. than the merchant.

697. Quot sunt. etc. i. e. twelve.

Tyndaridæ fratres, hic eques, ille pugil. 700
 Bella parant, repetuntque suas et frater et Idas, Leucippo fieri pactus uterque gener.
 His amor, ut repetant, illis, ut reddere nolint,

 Sed visum celeri vincere turpe fuga.

 Qua cervix humeros continuata premit.
 Ibat in hunc Idas, vixque est Jovis igne repulsus :
 Tela tamen dextræ fulmine rapta negant.
 Jamque tibi cælum, Pollux, sublime patebat, 715
 Quum, Mea, dixisti, percipe verba, Pater.
 Quod mihi das uni cælum, partire duobus :
 Dimidium toto munere majus erit.
 Dixit, et alterna fratrem statione redemit :
 Utile sollicitæ sidus uterque rati. 720
 Ad Janum redeat, qui quærit, Agonia quid sint :

Elaïra, Ilaïra or Hilaïra, as it is variously written, the two daughters of Leucippus were promised in marriage to their two cousins Idas and Lynceus, the sons of Aphareus. The Tyndaridæ, Castor and Pollux, who were also cousins, carried off the maidens by force, and matters proceeded as is related in the text. See Theoc. Idyll. xxii. Pindar. Nem. x. Mythology, p. 391.

705. Cæbalides, either as being the grandsons of Cæbalus, Paus.

III. 1, or because they were Laconians. See on I. 260.

708. Aphidna. The best known Aphidna is the Attic deme of that name. According to Steph. Byz. (sub. voc.) there was an Aphidna in Laconia.

719. See Hom. Od. xi. 301. Virg. Æn. vi. 121.

720. Utile, etc. They were ἀρωγοναῦται δαίμονες. See Hor. Car. II. 3, and 12, 27.

723. Canicula rises (it should be sets, Plin. xviii. 27,) on the XI Kal. Jun. See on IV. 936.

725. The Tubilustria were on the X. Kal. Tubilustrium appellatur, quod eo die in atrio sutorio sacrorum tubæ lustrantur. Varro, L. L. V. See III. 849.

726. Puræ, as being sacred, or as being now cleaned or purified.

727. Inde, then, in the place of the next day, IX. Kal. in the Calendar. "In Calendario antiquo legebantur notæ hæc Q. R. C. F. quæ dupliciter legi poterant, vel:

quando rex comitiavit fas, vel: quando rex comitio fugit," Gierig. The king is, of course, the Rex Sacrorum. Dies, qui vocatur sic, Quando rex comitiavit fas, dictus ab eo, quod eo die rex sacrificulus dicat ad comitium, ad quod tempus est nefas, ab eo fas. Varro L. L. V. Ἔστι γοῦν τις ἐν ἀγορᾷ θυσία πρὸς τῷ λεγομένῳ Κομητίῳ πατριος, ἣν θύσας ὁ βασιλεὺς κατὰ τάχος ἀπεισι φεύγων ἐξ ἀγορᾶς. Plutarch, Q. R. 63.

730. On the VIII. Kal. Jun: the temple of Fortuna Publica had been dedicated. This is probably the temple of Fortuna Primi-genia, of which Plutarch speaks, de For. Rom. 10. Σέρβιος Τύλλιος ἰδρύσατο Τύχης ἱερὸν Καπιτωλίῳ τὸ τῆς Πριμιγενείας λεγομένης. See IV. 375. It is not unlikely that, as Gesenius conjectures, Ovid read the PR. in his Calendar pop. Rom.

Hanc ubi dives aquis acceperit Amphitrite,
Grata Jovi fulvæ rostra videbis avis.

Auferet ex oculis veniens Aurora Booten, Continuaque die sidus Hyantis erit.

i. e. pop. pot. of the text, instead of Primigenia. On the same day Aquila rises in the evening.

733. The following day VII.

Kal. Bootes sets heliacally, and on the VI. Kal. the Hyades rise in the same manner.

Impetus hic sacræ semina mentis habet.

1—100. The poet, as he had done in the preceding months, commences June, by a discussion of its name. The gods, as usual, appear on the scene, and, as there were three etymons of the name of the month, three deities are introduced.

2. Quæ placeant, etc. You shall chuse for yourself.

3, 4. Alluding, perhaps, to the Epicurean spirit of the age.

5. Est Deus, etc. He expresses the same sentiment elsewhere. See A. A. III. 549. Pont. III, 4, 93. Κούφον χρῆμα ποιητῆς ἐστὶ καὶ πτηνὸν καὶ ἱερὸν, καὶ οὐ πρότερον οἶός τε ποιεῖν πρὶν ἂν ἐνθεὸς τε γένηται, καὶ ἐκφρῶν καὶ ὁ νοῦς μήκετι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐνῆ. Plato Ion. Ego non puto poetam grave plenumque carmen sine caelesti aliquo mentis instinctu fundere. Cicero, Tusc. I. 26. Poeta quasi divino quodam spiritu inflatur. Id. Arch. 8.—What is rare is the subject of admiration, and nothing is rarer than poetic genius in a high degree ; hence the ancients looked on it as something divine, or, as proceeding from the favour, and even the immediate inspiration of the gods. Nothing is more true than poeta nascitur non fit, but it is equally true of other things, the musician and the painter, nay, I might add, the carpenter and the tailor, are born, not made. But of some species, the supply is much larger than of others.

6. Impetus hic, the furor poeticus

Fas mihi præcipue vultus vidisse Deorum :

13. Præceptor arandi. Hesiod, the author of the oldest agricultural poem, his Works and Days. He lived at Ascera, a village of Bœotia, at the foot of Mt. Helicon. In v. 22, of his Theogony, it is said of the Muses, αἰ νῦ ποτ' Ἡσιόδον καλὴν ἐδίδαξαν ἀοιδῆν, Ἄρνας ποιμαίνονθ' Ἑλικῶνος ὑποζαθέοιο. See A. A. I. 27. Propert II. 10. 25, 34. 79, Virg. Ec. II. 70. 29. See Hom. II. iv. 59. According to Hesiod, Th. 454, and the Homeridian hymn to Venus, v. 22, Hestia (Vesta) was the first-born of Kronus and Rhea. Ovid evidently followed Homer, without perfectly understanding him.

31. Hunc (Capitolinum) antea montem Saturnium appellatum prodiderunt, et ab eo late Saturniam terram. Antiquum oppidum in hoc fuisse Saturniam scribitur. Ejus vestigia etiam nunc manent tria; quod Saturni fanum in faucibus: quod Saturnia porta quam nunc vocant Pandanam: quod post eadem Saturni in ædificiorum legibus parietes postici muri sunt scripti. Varro, L. 34. In the Capitoline temple, Juno and Minerva had chapels on each side of that of Jupiter. The left-hand one was Juno's. The custom of uniting these three deities was derived from the Etruscans. See Mythology, p. 453.

35. Pellex, the Pleias Maia, see V. 85. Compare Virg. Æn. I. 39.

37. Regina. The Juno Regina of the Romans, was the Queen Kupra of the Etruscans, whose statue was brought to Rome by Camillus, when Veii was taken A. U. C. 359. Liv. v. 21.

39. For the origin of the name Lucina, see on II. 449. For faciant mensem luces, one of the best MSS. reads faciam pueris lucem, alluding to another cause of the name.

40. This is awkwardly expressed, for she wants to shew that the month was named from her, and not she from the month. Taubner supposes a hypallage. It is possible that nomina may be used here in the sense of fame, renown. See III. 66.

Romans. Liv. viii. 14. For Lavinium, most MSS. read Lavinium, but this offends the metre.

61. Tibur Argeo positum colono. Hor. Car. II. 6, 5. See on IV. 71. Tibur, now Tivoli, was on the Anien.

62. Prænest. deæ, scil. Fortunæ. Fortunæ apud Prænesten ædem pulcherrimam ferunt fuisse. Schol. Juven. xiv. 90.

65. Hebe, called by the Romans Juventas, advances as the advocate of a second opinion. Fulvius Nobilior in Fastis Romulum dicit, postquam populum in majores minoresque divisit, ut altera armis rempublicam tueretur, in honorem utriusque partis hunc Maïum, sequentem Junium vocasse. Macrob. Sat. I. 12. For the marriage of Hebe, the daughter of Jupiter and Juno, with Hercules, see Homer, Od. xi. 604. Hes. Th. 950.

75. Origine mensis. There is the same kind of ambiguity here, and in v. 77, as above, v. 40. It is plainly (see v. 88,) the intention of the poet to shew that the month derived its name from the juvenes, and not from the goddess Juventas.

77. Titulum, the honour. See IV. 115.

79. Nomine, on account of.

83. Ab annis, i. e. ab ætate.

90. Dissimulata, concealed, hidden, it would have been no longer visible.

91, 92. Concordia, the advocate of a third opinion, from jungo, is here introduced in a very timely and appropriate manner. For the reparation of the temple of Concord by Tiberius, see I. 637.—Apol. lauro. See III. 139. The laurel is mentioned on account of the victories of Tiberius.—Placidi, etc. Concordia, he means, was the inspiring deity of the peace-loving prince, and concord was his work.

99. Ite pares. As I give not the preference to any, having the fate of Paris before my eyes.

101—182. On the Kalends of June was the festival of an ancient Roman deity, named by our poet

Unde datas habeat vires, obscurior ævo
 Fama; sed e nostro carmine certus eris.
 Adjacet antiquus Tiberino lucus Helerni: 105
 Pontifices illuc nunc quoque sacra ferunt.

 Nequidquam multis sæpe petita procis.
 Rura sequi jaculisque feras agitare solebat,
 Nodosasque cava tendere valle plagas. 110 and Macrobius, Carna or Carneia; by Tertullian, Cyprian, and Augustine, Carda or Cardea. Nonnulli putaverunt, Junium mensem a Junio Bruto, qui primus Romæ consul factus est, nominatum, quod hoc mense id est Kal. Jun. pulso Tarquinio sacrum Carnæ deæ in Cælio monte voti reus fecerit. Hanc deam vitalibus humanis præesse credunt, ab ea denique petitur ut jecinora et corda, quæque sunt intrinsicus viscera conservet. Et quia cordis beneficio, cujus dissimulatione Brutus habebatur, idoneus emendationi publici status existit, hanc deam, quæ vitalibus præest, templo sacrauit. Cui pulte fabacia et larido sacrificatur, quod his maxime rebus vires corporis roborantur; nam et Calendæ Juniæ fabariæ vulgo vocantur, quod hoc mense adultæ fabæ divinis rebus adhibentur. Macrob. Sat. I. 12. The name is here evidently derived a carne. The Fathers of the Church, on the other hand, as they join their Cardea or Carda with deities, named Forculus and Limininus, (from fores and limen) deduced her name from Cardo, to which origin Ovid also plainly alludes.

103, 104. This confirms what I have said above on V. 229, respecting the Roman origin, and the late date of several legends. Though the personages in this are Italian, the manners are Grecian.—Vires, her power.

105. Antiquus. Three of the best MSS. read antiqui. They are followed by Heinsius and Gierig. I think it the better reading. Compare Hom. II. xi. 166. Virg. Æn. xi. 851.—Tiberino. See IV. 291. One MS. reads Tiberini, three Tiberinæ Hilernæ.—Helerni, Hilerni and Hylerni, are various readings. Who or what Helernus was is totally unknown. Heinsius thinks that the lucus Helerni might have been the same with the lucus Asyli, (II. 67,) but this last was on the Capitoline hill, and Ovid evidently assigns some place a little way from Rome as the situation of the former.

106. Sacra ferunt. Both the offerer (Virg. Æn. 111, 19,) and the priest (Id. G. 111, 446,) are said sacra ferre. For ferunt, one MS. reads canunt.

107. Cranen. Two MSS. read Granen, which has been received into the text by Heinsius and Gierig. Two have Gramen, one Grangen.—Priores, the ancients. See I. 329, IV. 329.

Non habuit pharetram : Phœbi tamen esse sororem
 Credebant ; nec erat, Phœbe, pudenda tibi.
 Huic aliquis juvenum dixisset amantia verba,
 Reddebat tales protinus illa sonos :
 Hæc loca lucis habent nimis, et cum luce pudoris. 115
 Si secreta magis ducis in antra, sequor.
 Credulus ante subit. Frutices hæc nacta resistit,
 Et latet, et nullo est invenienda loco.
 Viderat hanc Janus, visæque cupidine captus
 Ad duram verbis mollibus usus erat : 120
 Nympha jubet quæri de more remotius antrum :
 Utque comes sequitur, destituitque ducem.
 Stulta ! videt Janus, quæ post sua terga gerantur ;
 Nil agis, en ! latebras respicit ille tuas.
 Nil agis, en ! dixi. Nam te sub rupe latentem 125

 Hoc pretium positæ virginitatis habe.
 Sic fatus, virgam, qua tristes pellere posset
 A foribus noxas,—hæc erat alba—dedit. 130

113. Dixisset. Si, is understood. The copyists stumbled at this ellipse, for four MSS. read Huic si quis, one si dixit, another Huic aliquis dixit. There are, however, examples of it. Dedisses huic animo par corpus. Plin. Ep. I. 2, 8. Dares hanc vim M. Crasso ; in foro, crede mihi, saltaret. Cic. Off. III. 19. Compare Hor. Sat. I. 3, 15.

117. Resistit, stops. II. 86.

126. Occupat amplexu, embraces, seizes in his arms. See on I. 575. De Jano non mihi facile quidquam occurrit, quod ad probrum pertineat ; et forte talis fuit ut innocentius vixerit et a facino- ribus et flagitiis remotius. Augustinus de Civ. Dei. vii. This tale must have escaped the knowledge or the memory of the zealous Father. But does not what he here says of this ancient Italian deity offer a strong confirmation of what has been already observed respecting the purity of the old Italian religion ?

129. Virgam. Heinsius, without having the authority of any MS. reads spinam.

130. Alba, scil. spina. See v. 165. The same power is ascribed to the πάμνος, which is the same as the Alba Spina (whitethorn), by Dioscorides, I. 119. λέγεται ἐξ

 And Festus says, Striges maleficis mulieribus nomen inditum est, quas volaticas etiam vocant, alluding to the same opinion. The belief of the power of witches to transform themselves into animals, is not yet totally extinct among the vulgar in our own country. For the power of magic-verses, carmina,

155. We do not read anywhere else of the Arbutus being used for this purpose. Perhaps, it was on account of its being ever green like the laurel. Diogenes Laertius (iv. 7, 10,) tells us, that when Bion was sick, γράφει δὲ δὲκεν εὐμαρῶς τράχηλον εἰς ἐπωδήν, ῥάμνον τε καὶ κλάδον δάφνης ὑπὲρ θύρην ἔθηκεν.

167. Garlic was also thought to be efficacious for this purpose; it was also good to fasten to each arm of the child an eye taken out of a live hyæna. Ignorant people always love cruel and barbarous remedies; we have instances enough among ourselves.

199. The temple of Bellona vowed by Appius Claudius, in the midst of a battle, in the Etruscan war, A. U. C. 458, (Liv. x. 19.) was dedicated on the III. Non. Jun. Pliny, (H. N. xxxv. 2. 3.) says, App. Claudius posuit in Bellonæ æde majores suos placuitque in excelso spectari et titulos honorum legi. Just what one might expect from one of the proud Claudii!

205. Before the temple of Bellona was a small area, or open place, which reached to the upper part of the Circus Flaminius. In the area before the temple, stood the celebrated pillar. It was in the temple of Bellona that the senate gave audience to such foreign ambassadors as they would not admit into the city, here also they received the generals who were returned from war. See Livy, passim. Bellona dicitur dea bellorum ; ante cujus templum erat columella, quæ bellica vocabatur, supra quam hastam jaciebant quum bellum indicebatur. Festus. Circus Flaminius.—Ædes Bellonæ versus portam Carmentalem. Ante hanc ædem columna index belli inferendi. P. Victor de region. urb. Reg. ix. Livy (I. 32.) describes the ceremony of throwing the spear. Originally, when the Roman territory was small, and the hostile states were close at hand, the Fetial used to cast the spear into the enemy's country; afterwards the practice of merely casting it over the pillar of Bellona was introduced.—Templo is the reading of two MSS. of high character, all the rest read tergo.

Est ibi non parvæ parva columna notæ.
 Hinc solet hasta manu, belli prænuntia, mitti,

209. At the other end of the Circus Flaminius was the temple of Hercules Custos. Neapolis thinks there were two temples of Hercules in this Circus, one built by order of the Senate in compliance with the directions of the Sibyllian verses; the other erected by Fulvius Nobilior, and repaired by Philippus. 213—218. On the Nones was the anniversary of the dedication of the temple of the ancient Sabine deity, named Sancus, Dius (Deus) Fidius and Semo. Of these names, we may observe, that Sancus is also written Sangus and Sanctus, which last is manifestly a corruption; that from the second was formed an ordinary oath of the Romans, Medius fidius, equivalent to Mehercle (The Greeks who rendered Fidius by πίστιος, made him the same with Hercules); that Semo, which is, perhaps, a contraction of Semihomo, is equivalent to Indiges, and, therefore, corresponds pretty exactly with the ἦρως of the Greeks, in its later sense. (Mythology, p. 273). For Pater Semo, see on III. 775. Most MSS. read Semi- pater, some Semicaper, but inscriptions prove the correctness of the present reading.—Ælius Galus Dius Fidius dicebat Diovis (Jovis) filius, ut Græci Διόσκουρον Castorem, et putabat hunc esse Sanctum ab Sabina lingua, et Herculem ab Græca. Varro, L. L. IV. Saint Augustine, (De Civ. Dei. xviii.) in accordance with the system which represented the gods of ancient Greece and Italy, as having been nothing but deified mortals, says, Sabini regem suum primum Sancum, seu, ut alii, Sanctum, retulerunt in Deos. Cato, in his Origines, says, Nomen (scil. Sabinorum) esse impositum ex Sabo Divi Sancti Gentilis filio. And Silius Italicus (viii. 422,) says, Ibant et læti ; pars Sanctum voce canebant Auctorem gentis ; pars laudes ore ferebant, Sabe, tuas ; qui de patrio cognomine primus Dixisti populos magna dititione Sabinos. The pater Sabinus of Virgil (Æn. vii. 178,) would appear to be the same with Sabus. Before I quit this deity, I must notice the curious mistake into which Justin Martyr and Tertullian fell, in consequence of the resemblance between Semoni and Sinoni. They gravely assert, that, seduced by his magic arts, the Romans erected a statue to Simon Magus, and adored him as a god !

217. I think Ovid intimates very plainly here his belief that the Sabines, when they settled at Rome, raised a temple on the Quirinal to their ancient god, Sancus. History, however, makes no mention of it, and Sancus is not among the deities to whom, according to Varro, L. L. IV. Tatius erected temples. Dionysius, (iv. 58,) speaking of the treaty made by Tarquinius Superbus, with the Gabines, says, τούτων ἐστὶ τῶν ὀρκίων μνημείον ἐν Ῥώμῃ κείμενον ἐν ἱερῷ Διὸς Πιστίου ὃν Ῥωμαῖοι Σάγκτον καλοῦσιν ; which temple, he tells us (ix. 60,) stood on the Quirinal (ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἐνναλίου λόφου), was begun by Tarquinius, and dedicated by the consul, Spurius Postumius, on the Nones of June, A. U. C. 288.

219. Est mihi, etc. Ovid speaks of his daughter also in his Tristia (iv. 10, 75,) Filia me mea bis prima fecunda juventa, Sed non ex uno conjuge fecit avum. Her name is not known, but it would appear that she was married to a senator, for Seneca (de Con. Sap. 17,) says, In senatu flentem vidimus Fidum Cornelium, Nasonis generum.

229—231. See III. 398.—Detonsos. The readings of the MSS. differ greatly, some have detonso, two detenso, three detonsum, one detonsa, another dentoso, two give the present reading. Detonsi crines does not signify hair that is cut close, but what is merely clipt at the ends, which we are to suppose was the case with that of the Flaminia.—Buxo. The Roman combs, like some of our own, were made of box-wood.—Depectere. See III. 465.

235. On the VII. Id. Arctophylax or Boëtes, sets in the morning.—Lycaona, Arcas, the grandson of Lycaon, II. 153. et seq. If this is not an oversight of the poet, Lycaon is put for Lycaonides, just as it is supposed, that even Homer uses Hyperion for Hyperionides. See above I. 385. "Ita Ἀμφιτρύων pro Ἀμφιτρωνίδης, Pindar Nem. IV. 32. ubi vid. Schol. et Olymp. x. 42. Μολιόνες pro Μολιονίδαί ubi vid. Schmid." Burmann.—Phæbe. One would rather have expected Phæbus. He probably meant an allusion to Diana, who had transformed Callisto. Phæbe seems to be put for night.

237. Gram. Campi. Compare Hor. Car III. 7. 26. iv. 1. 39. A. P. 162.

241—248. After the defeat of the Roman army by Hannibal at the Trasimene lake, in which the consul C. Flaminius was slain, A. U. C. 537. the Sibylline books were consulted, according to custom, and by their direction, Ludi magni were vowed to Jupiter, and temples to Venus Erycina, and to Mars. Liv. xxii. 9. Does not this tend to confirm what I have observed above (see on IV. 874.) respecting the Phœnician origin of Venus Erycina? Every one knows the Roman custom of endeavouring to gain over the deities of their enemies.

Lætaque purpurea luce refulsit humus.

247. Adspicit, etc. "Inter illam diem, qua vota soluta sunt, et Idus interjacent sex luces. Falso Neap. putabat Ovidiam hoc disticho, VI. Id. exprimere voluisse." Gierig. I think however Neapolis is right, for the setting of Arctophylax was on the VII. Id. unless we suppose that the temple of Mens was dedicated on that day, and in that case, where was the necessity for vv. 247, 248?

249—460. On the V. Id. were the Vestalia. The poet goes at great length into this subject. See I. 528. III. 417, et seq. 697. et seq. IV. 949.

253. Non vidi. Perhaps he means to intimate, that Vesta as the principle of fire, had no visible anthropomorphic form, like the other deities. Compare v. 298. —Valeant, etc. away with, adieu to. Compare Hor. Ep. II. 1. 80. Ter. Andr. iv. 2. 13. The Greeks used their χαίρω, in the same sense.—Mendacia, fictions. See Hor. A. P. 151.

257. Dena quater, etc. The temple of Vesta was built by Nu-ma, Αὐτὸς πρῶτος ἱερὸν ἰδρυσάμενος Ῥωμαίοις Ἑστίας, καὶ παρθένους ἀποδείξας αὐτῇ θυηπόλους. Dionys. II. 65. See also Plut. Num. 9 and 11. Liv. I. 20.—Palilia. See on IV. 721.

258. Flammæ custos, scil. Vesta, Vell. Pat. II. 131. The deities were called the guardians (custodes) of the objects over which they presided. Compare II. 277.

259. Metuentius, etc. Compare Met. I. 322.

261. Quæ nunc, etc. Compare I. 199, et seq. III. 183, A. A. III. 118.

263. Hic locus, etc. Ἐδείματο πλησίον τοῦ τῆς Ἑστίας ἱεροῦ τὴν καλουμένην Ῥηγίαν οἶον τε βασιλειον οἶκημα. Plut. Num. 14. Habitabat propter ædem Vestæ. Solin. 2. As Lipsius justly observed, Ovid confounds the Regia and the Atrium Vestæ. The Vestals dwelt in the Atrium. Virgines quum vi morbi Atrio Vestæ coguntur excedere, matronarum curæ custodiæque mandantur. Plin. Ep. vii. 19, 2. Correct by this the note on II. 69.

Magna, scil. for those times.

265. The temple of Vesta was round, ἱερὸν ἐγκύκλιον—ἀπομιμούμενος τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ συμπαντος κόσμου. Plut. Num. 14. Rotundam ædem Vestæ Numa consecravit, quod eandem esse terram credebatur, eamque pilæ forma esse, ut sui simili templo dea coleretur. Festus. "Neque Noster sibi constat ; namque hic et vs. 460. Vestam facit terram, vs. 291, vivam flammam." Gierig.

Et Terra. Three MSS. read quæ Terra.

268. Focus, ignis.

269, 270. Compare Met. I. 12.

271—276. These six verses are wanting in all the MSS. but seven, only one of which is of the first order. In one they come after v. 280. "Videntur mihi spurii esse, namque 1. quo referes vs. 273, locata ? Ad terram, vs. 269 ? At alia subjecta interposita sunt, volubilitas et angulus. Non ita negligenter Ovidius scribit. 2. Sententia inest inepta ; cum in medio mundo sit, non esset in medio, nisi convexa foret. 3. Eadem sententia sed melius expressa legitur, vs. 279, et seq." Gierig. I think he is right, and that these lines should be rejected.—Ipsa volubilitas, etc. The orbis rotundus is evidently the world, (mundus) and not the earth. Mundi volubilitas, quæ nisi in globosa forma esse non potest. Cic. N. D. II. 19. Yet, from the connexion, it is of the volubility of the earth that the poet speaks, and he would thus appear to inculcate the Pythagorean or Copernican system, which he surely did not hold.—Qui, etc. it (scil. the earth) has no salient angles to press the matter (partes) external to it, i. e. the air.

Stat globus, immensi parva figura poli ;
 Et quantum a summis, tantum secessit ab imis
 Terra. Quod ut fiat, forma rotunda facit. 280
 Par facies templi : nullus procurrat in illo

 De tribus impatiens restitit una viri.
 Quid mirum, virgo si virgine læta ministra
 Admittet castas in sua sacra manus? 290
 Nec tu aliud Vestam, quam vivam intellige flammam ;
 Nataque de flamma corpora nulla vides.
 Jure igitur virgo est, quæ semina nulla remittit,
 Nec capit : et comites virginitatis habet.
 Esse diu stultus Vestæ simulacra putavi : 295

277. The celebrated sphere of Archimedes, which represented the motions of the sun, moon, and five planets around the earth. It was enclosed in a glass-case, hence he says, aëre clauso, and it appears from this passage of Ovid, and from Cicero, Rep. I. 14, and Athen. v. 11, that it was preserved at Syracuse in their time. See Cic. Tusc. I. 25, Claudian. Epigr. 68.—Arce, is the reading of three MSS. all the rest have arte.—Syracosisio. All the MSS. read Syracosisio, which is repugnant to the metre. Heinsius corrected it. The Greeks used Συρακόσιος, as well as Συρακούσιος. Compare Virg. Ec. vi. 1.

282. Tholus, a dome, round roof. "Tholi forma est οὐρανοειδής." Neapolis.

285. Ῥεῖα—Κρόνῳ τέκε φαιδιμα τέκνα, Ἰστίην, Δήμητρα καὶ Ἥρην χρυσοπέδιλον. Hes. Th. 453. Observe how all the names are changed into Latin ones!

288. Impatiens viri, unmarried. Compare Met. I. 478. See Mythology, p. 72. Ovid assigns two reasons for her having virgin-priestesses. 1. Because she was a virgin herself. 2. Because she was the principle of fire, which produces nothing. Cicero (Leg. II. 12.) gives two more. Vestæ colendæ virgines præsumt, ut advigiletur facilius ad custodiam ignis, et sentiant mulieres in natura feminarum omnem castitatem pati.

Mox didici curvo nulla subesse tholo.
 Ignis inextinctus templo celatur in illo ;
 Effigiem nullam Vesta, nec ignis, habent.

 Nunc quoque, quum fiunt antiquæ sacra Vacunæ,

299, 300. Vesta a vi stando ! Well might Gierig say, "mira est hæc etymologia." The Greeks derived Ἑστία from ἴστημι. Terram nonnulli Vestam esse pronuntiant, quod in mundo stet sola, cæteris ejus partibus mobilitate perpetua constitutis. Arnob. adv. Gen. III. p. 119. Μένει Ἑστία ἐν θεῶν οἴκῳ μόνη. Plat. Phædrus.

301. Quod fovet. Focus a fovendo id est calefaciendo. Festus—another equally sound piece of etymology !

302. Prim. æd. the porch or entrance of the house.

303. Vestibulum. "De etymo hujus vocalæ aliud sentit Nonius, aliud Varro, hoc Ovidianum nemo. Servius: Vestibulum ut Varro docet, etymologiæ non habet proprietatem, sed fit pro captu ingenii." Neapolis.

304. Affamur, etc. We say O Vesta ! who etc. Vestæ nomen a Græcis est ; ea est enim quæ ab illis Ἑστία dicitur. Vis autem ejus ad aras et focos pertinet. Itaque in ea dea, quæ est rerum custos intimarum, omnis et præcatio et sa- crificatio extrema est. Cic. N. D. II. 27. Ταῖς Θυσίαις οἱ Ἕλληες ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης τε αὐτῆς (Ἑστίας) ἤρχοντο καὶ ἐς ἐσχάτην αὐτὴν κατέπανον. Cornut. N. D. 28. See the Homeridian hymn to Hestia, or Mythology, p. 73. The reading of this line is very different in the MSS. some have Quæ famur Vesta, others Quæ famur vestra est, or Quæ f. Vestam ; one Quæramus Vestam, another Quæramur, another Dicimus O Vesta, which Ciofanus and Neapolis preferred ; the present reading is that of three MSS. and was adopted by Heinsius.

305. Ante focos. before the altars. Compare Virg. Æn. vii. 175.

306. Mensæ credere, etc. See Hom. Od. vii. 201.

307, 308. Nunc quoque, etc. These verses are parenthetic. He shews, by instancing one case of its use at the present day, the antiquity of the custom of sitting at the sacrificial feast.—Vacunæ. See Hor. Ep. I. 10. 49. Vacuna ap. Sabinos plurimum colitur.

Ante Vacunales stantque sedentque focos.
 Venit in hos annos aliquid de more vetusto :
 Fert missos Vestæ pura patella cibos. 310
 Ecce, coronatis panis dependet asellis,
 Et velant scabras florea sarta molas.
 Sola prius furnis torrebant farra coloni ;
 Et Fornacali sunt sua sacra deæ.
 Suppositum cineri panem focus ipse parabat, 315
 Strataque erat tepido tegula quassa solo.
 Inde focum servat pistor, dominamque focorum,
 Et quæ pumiceas versat asella molas.
 Præteream, referamne tuum, rubicunde Priape,

Quidam Dianam, nonnulli Cere-rem esse dixerunt; alii Venerem, alii Victoriæ, deam vacationis, quod faciat vacare a curis. Sed Varro primo rer. divin. Minervam dicit, quod ea maxime hi gaudent qui sapientiæ vacant. Schol. Cruq. in loc.

309. More vetusto, scil. of offering to Vesta at the sacrifices to the other gods. Gierig, I think is wrong, in understanding it of the custom of sitting before the altars.

310. Missos cibos. Some portion of the sacred food was sent on a clean plate to the temple of Vesta. Was it it from the sacrifices in general, or only from those to Vacuna?

311. Ecce, etc. It was usual on festivals and holidays, to put garlands on such animals as had a share in them, or were in any way sacred to the deity, in whose honour they were held. See I. 663. V. 52. Tibull II. 1. 8. Wernsdorf. Exc. VII. to Grat. Cyneg. in the Poetæ Minores, Tom. I. p. 261.

At the Vestalia, the mills stopped working, the mill-stones were wreathed with garlands, and the asses were likewise crowned, and had bread hung about their necks. See on v. 347. Vesta coronatis pauper gaudebat asellis, says Propertius (iv. 1. 21.) speaking of ancient times.

313. See II. 525.

315—316. Panem primo cinis calidus et fervens testa percocit; deinde furni paullatim reperti sunt et alia genera. Seneca Ep. 90. Panem testicium sic facito.—Ubi bene subegeris defingito coquitoque sub testa. Cato R. R. 74. Testu-atum, quod in testu caldo coquebatur. Varro L. L. IV. The poet's description agrees rather with that of Seneca, and is nearly the common mode of baking cakes at the present day.

317. This is the true reason, why the millers and bakers kept the Vestalia. There was no reason, but his inability to resist the temptation, for telling the following story.

Dedecus? est multi fabula parva joci. 320
 Turrigera frontem Cybele redimita corona
 Convocat æternos ad sua festa deos.
 Convocat et Satyros, et, rustica numina, Nymphas.
 Silenus, quamvis nemo vocarat, adest.
 Nec licet, et longum est epulas narrare deorum: 325
 In multo nox est pervigilata mero.
 Hi temere errabant in opacæ vallibus Idæ:
 Pars jacet, et molli gramine membra levat.
 Hi ludunt, hos somnus habet; pars brachia nectit,
 Et viridem celeri ter pede pulsat humum. 330
 Vesta jacet, placidamque capit secura quietem,
 Sicut erat positum cespite fulta caput.
 At ruber hortorum custos Nymphasque deasque
 Captat, et errantes fertque refertque pedes.
 Adspicit et Vestam; dubium, Nymphamne putarit, 335
 An scierit Vestam: scisse sed ipse negat.
 Spem capit obscenam, furtimque accedere tentat,
 Et fert suspensos, corde micante, gradus.
 Forte senex, quo vectus erat, Silenus asellum
 Liquerat ad ripas lene sonantis aquæ. 340
 Ibat, ut inciperet, longi deus Hellesponti,
 Intempestivo quum rudit ille sono.
 Territa voce gravi surgit dea. Convolat omnis
 Turba; per infestas effugit ille manus.

320. Compare I. 391 et seq.

325. Nec licet. "Respicit Tantalum fabulam, qui epulis admotus, cum ibi acta narrasset, pœnam sensit." Burmann.

327. Vallibus. Most MSS. read collibus.

329. Brachia nectit, scil. in the dance. Compare Hor. Car. II. 12. 17. In both these places brachia is, I should think, equivalent to manus. They did not waltz in those days.

330. Compare Hor. Car. I. 37, I, III. 18. iv. 1, 27.

345, 346. Heinsius, and, after him, Krebs, regarded this distich as an interpolation. But, if we take away these two verses, the relative to quem (v. 347,) is ille, (v. 344) which, though Krebs asks, "Asinus an Priapus?" is, beyond question, the latter; unless, with Neapolis, we read illa, and then the antecedent would be the ille of v. 342. I can see no objection to v. 345; there is a difficulty, and, I should suspect, a corruption, in the following verse. It would seem from it that, as Neapolis observes, "hujus (asini) exta quotannis oblata aræ Vestali," a practice, of the existence of which we have no other proof, and which would be at variance with the whole of the poet's narrative, the object of which is, to give a reason for Vesta's favour to the ass. "An unquam a Romanis asinus Priapo mactatus sit, dubito; nec unquam Vestæ asini exta oblata sunt." Krebs. The whole difficulty might be removed if we were to read jacit, or some such word, governed of Lampsacos, for damus. It is evident that these verses were in the copy of Ovid's Fasti, used by Lactantius, for he manifestly (Inst. I. 21,) takes the story from him. Lampsaceni asellum Priapo quasi in ultionem mactare consueverunt; cum enim hic deus Vestæ dormienti vim inferre conaretur, asinus intempestivo clamore eam excitavit. Hinc libido insidiatoris detecta. Apud Romanos eundem asellum Vestalibus sacris in honorem pudicitiae conservatæ panibus coronant.

347. Diva memor. See end of preceding note. The zealous Father adds, Quid turpius? quid flagitiosius quam si Vesta beneficio asini virgo est?—De pan. monil. "Quod attinet ad formam panis—in modum coronæ fuisse existimo. Hæ coronæ sunt quæ Valentinianus et Valens in Lege De annonis civicis et pane gradili vocant bucellas. Soli Siculi hanc vocem hodie retinent qui materna lingua hujusmodi panes dicunt bucellatos; Castellani vocant rosquillas." Neapolis. I imagine these are nothing more than those cakes or loaves made in the shape of a ring, which are so commonly to be met with even in France. It is probable that a number of these were strung together, and hung about the necks of the mill-asses. Perhaps, as Neapolis observes, this will be illustrated by the following passage in the Plutus of Aristophanes, Κ'αγὼ γ' ἀναδῆσαι βοῦλομαι Εὐαγγελιά σ' ἐν κριβανωτῶν ὄρμαθῶ Τοιαῦτ' ἀπαγγείλαντα.

349. He makes a digression here, as he is on the subject of bread, to relate the origin of the altar on the Capitol to Jupiter Pistor.—Nom. quam pret. celeb. The altar was small, and of little account. "Jovem Pistorem nemo novit præter Nostrum et Lac-

363, 364. So the matter is related by Livy and Florus ; according to Plutarch, they were slain in the Forum.—Ærata atria. "In quibus statuæ æneæ dispositæ." Gierig. I do not recollect to have read anywhere that the statues of their ancestors in the Atria of the Roman nobles, in the olden time, were of bronze. In our poets' days, there were even golden figures in them, but of a different kind. See Lucret. II. 24. Ærata, like aurata, which is the reading of two MSS. may mean simply adorned with brass. Lipsius proposed cerata ; Heinsius reserata, which agrees with the patentia atria of Livy, the patentes domos of Florus, and the apertas januas of Val. Max. III. 117.—Picta Veste. The triumphal robe of purple and gold.

395. The poet was, or feigns he was, once during the Vestalia, coming along the street, named the Via Nova, which led into the Forum, when he saw a lady (matrona) coming down it barefoot. An old woman of the neighbourhood observing his surprise, gave him, as he says, the following explanation. As Vesta had a temple near the Via Nova, (Liv. v. 32.) it was probably thither that the lady was going to worship.

401. Before the Cloacæ were constructed, the valleys between the hills of Rome were little better than marshes, in consequence of the frequent inundations of the Tiber. Locus palustris tum fuit Lacus Curtius, in foro, antequam cloacæ sunt factæ. Varro, L. L. IV.

403. Curtius Lacus. For the supposed origin of this name, see Liv. I. 13. vii. 6. It retained its name, like so many places in London, and other cities, after its nature had been totally changed. —Siccas aras, as the place was now drained. Forum Romanum. Ara Saturni in lacu Curtio. P. Victor, Reg. VIII. Ovid may have meant this altar alone, or it and others which were in that place.

405—408. At qua Velabri regio patet ire solebat Exiguus pulsa per vada linter aqua. Tibull. II. 6, 33. Qua Velabra suo stagnabant flumine, quaque Nauta per urbanas velificabat aquas. Propert. iv. 9, 5. Aventinum montem maxime puto dictum ab advectu; nam olim paludibus mons erat ab reliquis distinctus. Itaque eo ex urbe qui advehebantur ratibus quadrantem solvebant; cujus vestigia, quod ea, quatum itur, Velabrum, et unde adscendebant ad Rumam, Nova Via:

Nil præter salices crassaque canna fuit.
 Sæpe suburbanas rediens conviva per undas
 Cantat, et ad nautas ebria verba jacit.
 Nondum conveniens diversis iste figuris
 Nomen ab averso ceperat amne deus. 410
 Hic quoque lucus erat juncis et arundine densus,
 Et pede velato non adeunda palus.
 Stagna recesserunt, et aquas sua ripa coërcet :
 Siccaque nunc tellus. Mos tamen ille manet.
 Reddiderat causam ; Valeas, anus optima ! dixi : 415
 Quod superest ævi, molle sit omne, tui !

 Mœnia Dardanides nuper nova fecerat Ilus :

lucus et sacellum Larum. Velabrum dicitur a vehendo ; velaturam facere etiam nunc dicuntur, qui id mercede faciunt. Varro, L. L. IV.—Pompas, scil. Circenses.—Cantat, etc. In this place, the present tense must be used for the past, as she is speaking of the state of the Velabrum in former times.

409, 410. The Tuscan street, in which there stood a statue of Vertumnus, was here. In vico Tusco Vortumnus stat deus Etruriæ. Varro, L. L. IV. Tuscus ego (Vertumnus) et Tuscis orior.—Romanum satis est posse videre forum. Hac quondam Tiberinus iter faciebat, et aiunt Remorum auditos per vada pulsa sonos. At postquam ille suis tantum concessit alumnis, Vertumnus verso dicor ab amne deus. Propert, iv. 2. For Vertumnus, see Mythology, p. 474.

411. Hic, in this place i. e. the Via Nova.—Lucus, a sacred grove, as the word scarcely ever occurs in any other sense. It may have been undergrown with reeds and rushes.

412. Pede velato, with a shod foot—an unusual employment of velo.

415. Causam. “Causam positi calcei censet ex antiqua necessitate in eos annos perdurasse, non ex numinis reverentia : ad quem respexit etiam apud antiquos nudipedis incessus.” Neapolis. The rejected cause is however much more likely to be the true one. Etiam in this note contains an allusion to the barefoot processions in Catholic countries.

417. Cetera, etc. All that remains to be told about Vesta, he had heard when a boy, perhaps been taught at school, and he supposes the case may have been the same with others.

419. For this account of the Palladium, see Apollodorus, III. 12. or Mythology, p. 437.

473—562. On the III. Id, as tradition related, the temple of Mater Matuta was dedicated, and the festival of the Matrاليا instituted in her honour, by Servius Tullius. For an account of this goddess, see below on v. 550.

474. Equis. This is the reading of sixteen MSS. three of which are of the best quality, all the rest read aquis, which is the reading of Heinsius and Gierig, and which, though less picturesque, is more probably the right one. In favour of equis, may be quoted Met. xv. 189, quumque albo Luci-

484. Vatis opus. Two of the best MSS. read navis iter, which Heinsius and Gierig have received; one has vatis iter. Ovid, no doubt, frequently employs this metaphor, (see on IV. 729,) but it does not please me in this place.

Juven. II. 3. Augustine also mentions a goddess, Stimula. In Liv. xxxix. 12, it is lucus Similæ. Neapolis and Heinsius think that it is the grove of Fauna Fatua, or the Bona Dea, which Ovid means, as Macrobius (I. 12,) when speaking of Maia, or the Bona Dea, says, Bæoti Semelam credunt, nec non eandem Fauni filiam dicunt.

550. Hic deus, etc. We may now enquire who Mater Matuta and Portunus were, and how they came to be identified with the Leucothea and Palæmon of the Greeks. Mater Matuta was worshipped, as we see, at Rome by the matrons: she was also adored at Satricum, a town of the Volscians (Liv. vi. 33. vii. 27. xxviii. 2.) perhaps the goddess, whose rich temple near Cære was, according to Diodorus (xv. 14.), plundered by Dionysius of Syracuse, was Mater Matuta. From all that we can learn of her, there appears no reason whatever for regarding her as a marine deity. On the other hand, Lucretius, (v. 655.) says, Tempore item certo roseam Matuta per oras Ætheris Auroram defert et lumina pandit; and I think those critics are right who take Aurora in this place, like aura, Virg. Æn. vi. 204, for a common substantive, the dawning light, and Matuta for the goddess who brings it forth, and spreads it over heaven. Matuta would then exactly correspond with the Ἥως of the Greeks. Her name, also, leads to this conclusion. Manum dixere clarum, unde etiam mane post tenebras diei prima pars; inde Matuta quæ Græcis Leucothea. Nonius. Matuta significat Auroram. Matutinum tempus inde dici vix monendum est. Priscian, II. p. 591. If Matuta is thus the Clara Dea, how easy was the identification of her with the Leucothea (White Goddess) of the Greeks, at a time when the Romans had lost the true sense of their ancient religion, and wished to derive all their manners and institutions from Greece! The worship by the Roman matrons of Mater Matuta, the dispenser of light, was as natural as that of Juno Lucina; and it is probable, (see on v. 559,) that originally they prayed to her for the preservation of their children. A slight resemblance of name, and a similarity of office, may also have produced the identification of Palæmon and Portunus or Portumnus. I need hardly repeat that the old Italian religion did not recognise the marriages and births of deities, or the deification of mortals. Before I quit this subject, I will attempt to elucidate a passage of Milton's Paradise Lost. In B. xi. v. 133, we read, "Meanwhile, To resalute the world with sacred light Leucothea wakes." As Eos is never called by this name, I was long of opinion that this was a slip of the poet's memory; but I now think that he may have derived it from the passage of Nonius quoted above, or have deduced it from those verses of Lucretius.

551. He here gives a trifling explanation of the custom of not admitting female slaves into the temple of Matuta. Plutarch however tells us, (Q. R. 16.) that one was always brought in and well cuffed by the matrons. As according to the same writer, the same kind of exclusion was practised at the temple of Leucothea in Chæronea, the custom may have come from Greece to Rome.

559. Plutarch (Q. R. 17.) asks Διὰ τί παρὰ τῇ θεῷ ταύτῃ τοῖς μὲν ἰδίους τέκνοις οὐκ εὐχονται τ' ἀγαθὰ, τοῖς δὲ τῶν ἀδελφῶν; He gives the same reason with Ovid. I rather think they did originally pray for their own children, but a change was made when Matuta became Leucothea.

563. On the day of the Matralia, A. U. C. 664, in the Marsian or Social war, the consul P. Rutilius Lupus fell in battle. Tradition, it would seem, related that the voice of the goddess Matuta had predicted to him his fate.

565. Flumen Toleni, like amnis Eridani, amnis Cocyti. The Tolenus, now the Turano, flows from the Marsian into the Sabine country, and enters the Velinus near Reate.

566. Purpureum. This is the reading of all the MSS. but one, which has purpureo, the reading of all the editions since that of Heinsius, who introduced it into the text. Krebs, has, I think, shewn his taste, by bringing back purpureum, and joining it with the verb, and not with flumen. The verse thus strikingly reminds one of these lines of Milton : "While smooth Adonis from his native rock Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood Of Thammuz yearly wounded."

567. According to Appian, T. Didius was one of the Prætors in the Marsian war, but we have no account of his death. We learn from the epitome of Livy 75, and from Velleius, that Porcius was slain the following year, and the Fasti inform us, that he was consul for that year. Burmann would therefore read Porcius, but there is no necessity for a change. Ovid had access to authorities which are lost to us, and none that we have contradict him.—Pallantide. Pallantis, like Pallantias is a name of Aurora. See IV. 373.

569—636. On the same day with the temple of Mater Matuta; by the same person (Servius Tullius); in the same place (the Forum Boarium) the temple of Fortune was dedicated. Servius raised two temples to this goddess, viz. that of which Ovid now speaks, and another on the banks of the Tiber. The former, as it would appear to Bona or Virgo Fortuna, the latter to Fors Fortuna, or Fortuna Virilis. Dionys. IV. 27. See below on v, 776.

570. Auctor est M. Varro factam a Tanaquile togam regiam undulatam in æde Fortunæ, qua Servius Tullius fuerat usus.—Servii prætextæ, quibus signum Fortunæ ab eo dicatæ coopertum erat, duravere ad Sejani exitum. Plin. H. N. viii. 48. 74. Varro himself, (de Vit. Pop. Rom. apud Nonium) says, evidently speaking of this statue, Et a quibusdam dicitur esse Virginis Fortunæ, ab eo quod duabus undulatis togis est opertum, proinde ut tum reges nostri undula- tas et prætextatas togas soliti sunt habere. Varro, therefore, regarded the covered statue as that of the goddess. Ovid asserts that it was Servius. This statue was of gilt wood.

575. This amour of Fortuna with Servius Tullius, is also noticed by Plutarch de Fort. Rom. 10. Qu. Rom. 26. It is one of the many adaptations of Grecian ideas to Roman story.

577, 578. Plutarch (de Fort. Rom. 10) says, ὥστε καὶ συνεῖναι δοκεῖν αὐτῇ τὴν Τύχην διὰ τινος θυρίδος καταβαίνουσα εἰς τὸ ἐωρμάτιον, ὃ νῦν Φερεστέλλαν πύλην καλοῦσι. I have not met with any thing more respecting the Porta Fenestellæ. Onuph. Panvinius (De Rep. Rom. p. 60.) thinks it was a gate of the Palatium not of the city. Some MSS. read Fenestratæ, others Fenestrile, Fenestræ, Fenestrale, Fenestralis, etc.

ἐξ ἐκείνου τοῦ δεινοῦ καὶ μυσταροῦ πάθους Ἀσεβῆς ὑπὸ Ῥωμαίων καλεῖται. Dionys. iv. 39. In Livy, it is called the Virbius Clivus; by Solinus, the Clivus Olbius; and Festus mentions the Vicus Orbis. Were it not for these Latin testimonies, one might almost suspect that Dionysius meant to intimate that it was at first called the Vicus Felix.

612. Sub. imag. Tul. which represented Tullius.

619. Ore, etc. "Pudor intel, quo tenebantur Romani propter Servium impie et nefarie interfectum, qui retinebat eos, ne os ejus revelarent. Si revelassent, patuisset pudorem illum ab iis esse positum." Gierig. The address to the matronæ, in the following line, would lead me rather to think that the meaning is: Female modesty (with an allusion to Tullia,) will begin to be departed from at Rome, the day that the face of Tullius is uncovered.

624. Rex septimus. That is reckoning Titus Tatius. Several MSS. read sextus in.

625. This is also related by Dionysius, (iv. 40,) and by Valerius Maximus (I. 8. 11).

627. Dionysius (iv. 2.) relates this legend also, and says, that he had found it in several of the Roman histories. See Liv. I. 39.

629. Peractis. Two MSS. of the first order read paratis, which Heinsius and Gierig have received. Of the common reading, Heinsius says, "Quomodo peracta sacra si vinum foco post affunderetur?" and Gierig, "Vulgo peractis quod ferri non potest." In its defence, Krebs says, "Hostia mactata in epulis sacris iterum libabatur."

630. Ornatum focum. The sacred hearth or altar was adorned and dressed, preparatory to a sacrifice.

633. Loco fovet. The old reading was foco sedet. Burmann gave the present one from six MSS. "Locus pars illa dici solet, quæ feminae sexum indicat." Gierig.

636. Contigit, he (Vulcan) touched. See Liv. I. 39. Com-

640. Vedius Pollio, a man of great luxury, left, by will, to Augustus, his house, which covered a great extent of ground. Augustus, under pretext of its being too large, threw it down, and built the Porticus Liviae on its site.

641. Compare Sall. Cat. 12.

643. Sub crim. reg. Alluding perhaps to the case of Valerius Poplicola, (Liv. II. 7.) or of Sp. Cassius, or M. Manlius.

Idibus Invicto sunt data templa Jovi. 650

Et jam Quinquatrus jubeor narrare minores.

Nunc ades o cœptis, flava Minerva, meis.

Cur vagus incedit tota tibicen in urbe ?

Quid sibi personæ, quid stola longa, volunt ?

Sic ego. Sic posita Tritonia cuspide dixit : 655

—Possem utinam doctæ verba referre deæ !—

Temporibus veterum tibicinis usus avorum

650. On the Ides of June a temple had been dedicated to Jupiter, and the Lesser Quinquatrus were celebrated.—Invicto. As no temple of Jupiter Invictus is spoken of by any ancient writer, Neapolis properly considered invicto here to be an epithet, and not a cognomen. He therefore, following an ancient MS. printed it as a common adjective. Heinsius and Burmann did the same. Gierig and Krebs print it as an epithet.

651. For the Quinquatrus Majores see III. 809. Of these Varro, L. L. V. says, Quinquatrus minusculæ dicte Junie Eidus ab similitudine majorum, quod tibicines tum feriati per urbem vagantur et conveniunt ad ædem Minervæ. The notice in Festus is to the same effect. See also below on v. 657.

653—692. This story is told also in the same way by Plutarch, Quæst. Rom. 55. and somewhat differently by Livy ix. 30. and by Valer. Max. II. 5.

654. Stola. This is the reading of six MSS. all the rest have toga, but it is manifest from Plutarch, that the present is the right reading, for he says of the musicians, ἐν ἐσθήσιν ἀνθιναῖς καὶ γυναικείαις ὄντες.

656. Possem utinam. One MS. reads pace velim, which is the reading given by Heinsius and Gierig.

657. Musica nisi grata esset diis, profecto ludi scenici placandor. deor. causa instituti non essent, nec tibicen omnibus supplicationibus in sacris ædibus adhiberetur, nec cum tibicine triumphus ageretur ; non Apolline cithara, non Musis tibicæ ceteraque id genus essent attributa ; non tibicinibus, per quos numina placantur esset permissum aut ludos publice facere, aut vesci in Capitolio, aut Quinquat. minusc. id est Eidibus Junii urbem vestitu, quo velint, personatis temulentisque per-vagari. Corsorinus de Die Natali, 12.

- Magnus et in magno semper honore fuit.
 Cantabat fanis, cāntabat tibia ludis :
 Cantabat mæstis tibia funeribus. 660
 Dulcis erat mercede labor : tempusque secutum,
 Quod subito Graiæ frangeret artis opus.
 Adde quod Ædilis, pompam qui funeris irent,
 Artifices solos jusserat esse decem.
 Exilium mutant urbem, Tiburque recedunt : 665
 —Exilium quodam tempore Tibur erat.—
 Quæritur in scena cava tibia, quæritur aris,
 Ducit supremos nenia nulla toros.
 Servierat quidam, quantolibet ordine dignus,
 Tibure, sed longo tempore liber erat. 670

661, 662. The labour was sweetened by the reward, i. e. the honour of eating in the temple of Jupiter, but (so que must be understood,) a time came which broke the work of Grecian art, i. e. pipe-music, as the invention of the pipe was ascribed (see v. 697) to the Grecian goddess Pallas Athena.—Graiæ. This is the reading of four of the best MSS. and of some others. The rest have gratæ, which I should prefer, if I were sure that Ovid knew that the cithara was the ancient and national instrument of Greece, in opposition to the tibia of Asia and Italy. The time of which the poet speaks here, was according to Livy, A. U. C. 442, when they were prohibited by the censors Ap. Claudius and C. Plautius, from eating in the Capitoline temple.

663. Ædilis. It is uncertain who this ædile was. Pighius conjectures Ap. Claudius who he says was Curule ædile, A. U. C. 440.

In the xii. Tables (A. U. C. 305.) was the following law respecting funerals, Tria si volet ricinia et vincula purpuræ et decem tibicines adhibito. Hoc plus ne facito. It would appear that this law which had fallen into neglect, was put in force by the ædile, of whom the poet speaks.

665. Exilium was not banishment; it was, to use the words of Niebuhr, “nothing but the act, whereby a man renounced the freedom of his own city, by taking up his municipal franchise—in a city which had a sworn treaty of isopolity with Rome.” See on IV. 791. I am not however sure that Ovid uses it here in its proper sense. See on v. 685.

666. Compare Ep. ex Pont. I. 3. 81.

669. Servierat. He was a freedman. According to Livy it was the government of Tibur who had recourse to the following stratagem, when envoys had been sent to them from Rome.

Rure dapes parat ille suo, turbanque canoram
 Convocat. Ad festas convenit illa dapes.
 Nox erat, et vinis oculique animique natabant,
 Quum præcomposito nuntius ore venit :
 Atque ita, Quid cessas convivia solvere? dixit : 675
 Auctor vindictæ jam venit, ecce, tuæ!
 Nec mora; convivæ valido titubantia vino
 Membra movent: dubii stantque labantque pedes.
 At dominus, Discedite, ait; plastroque morantes
 Sustulit. In plastro sirpea lata fuit. 680
 Alliciunt somnos tempus, motusque, merumque,
 Potaque se Tibur turba redire putat.
 Jamque per Esquilias Romanam intraverat urbem;
 Et mane in medio plaustra fuere foro.
 Plautius, ut posset specie numeroque Senatam 685

671. Dapes, probably a sacrifice. See on IV. 745.

671. Auctor vindictæ, your patron or former master. The vindicta used here for liberty, was the rod which the lictor laid on the head of the slave who was about to be manumitted.

680. Sirpea lata. Several MSS. read scirpea "Lego sirpea lata fuit. Sirpare veteribus pro colligare, Græcis πλέκειν. Ergo sirpea, colligatum, τὸ πλέγμα. Tegitacula igitur quædam e vimine contexta circa plastrum erat, sudibus munita ut expanderetur ne aliquid decideret." Neapolis. Quæ alicumenta ducunt sirpea (Al. scirpea), quæ virgis sirpatur (scirpatur), id est colligando implicatur, in qua stercus aliudve quid vehitur. Varro, L. L. IV. The same writer makes the difference between a plastrum and a scirpea, tragula, vehiculum or arcerra, as it was variously called, to consist in this, that the former was open, the latter closed. Plutarch, on this occasion, calls them ἀμάξας δέρρεσι κυκλιῆ περικαλυπτομένας. The simple meaning is, they were sent in covered carts to Rome.

685. Plautius. This is the conjecture of Pighius; almost all the MSS. read Callidus, two of the best give Claudius, as a various reading, some have cautius. There must be a proper name, and, if we are to follow Livy, it can be no other than Plautius. This is confirmed by a medal of the Plautian family (Eckhel, Vol. v.) bearing on one side a female mask, with the inscription L. Plautius: on the other, a winged Aurora driving four horses, with Plancus inscribed. This medal evidently commemorates the act and the time of day. Ovid, perhaps, followed a peculiar version of the story, and it would not in the least surprise me, if in it the musicians had been ordered by the senate to quit Rome, and go to Tibur, for, if this trick had been played by the desire of the senate, why seek thus to deceive them? If the musicians had not been ordered to leave Rome, what is the meaning of vv. 689, 690? In this case, Ovid will have used exilium, v. 663, in its later sense of banishment to a certain place. He was himself relegated to Tomi, and, in his Tristia, he frequently calls himself an exul.

687. Tibicina, a sing. for a plural.

696. Hæc turba, the tibicines. For the following story of Marsyas, see Met. vi. 383. Mythology, pp. 93, 123.

 Scilicet hic olim Volscos Æquosque fugatos

711. On the XVII. Kal. Jul. the Hyades rise acronychally.—Dodoni Thyene. Some MSS. read Dodoni Dione, and Dione was worshiped at Dodona (Mythology, p. 105.); but Pherecydes says that the seven Hyades who nursed Bacchus, were also called Dodonides, and Thyene is, in him, one of them. See Hygin. Astr. II. 21.

712. Agen. bov. See on III. 658. IV. 717.

713. Purg. Vestæ. See v. 227.

715. On the XVI. Kal. Favonius begins to blow.

717. On the same day (XVI. Kal.) the upper part of Orion rises acronychally. How Neapolis blunders here! "Eadem luce cum Sole Orion simul emergit; nec est cur ambigas an agat de ortu cosmico."

718. None of the commentators makes any remark on this line, which is not devoid of difficulty. Is stella serena the sun, which, when in the horizon, is on the verge of the two hemispheres? Is it Orion, of which Hyginus (Astr. III. 33.) says, Orionem a zona et reliquo corpore æquinoctialis circulus dividit? Or, finally, is stella for stellæ, as IV. 390? But what then is meant by geminos polos? After this line most MSS. insert III. vv. 401, 402.

719. Prol. Hyr. See V. 493, et seq.

720. The following night (XV. Kal.) the Dolphin rises.—Continua. See V. 734.

721. A. U. C. 323, the dictator, A. Postumius Tubertus, triumphed after his defeat of the Volscians and Æquians, on the Algidus. For the importance of this victory, see Niebuhr, (II. 449—452.) who, referring to this place of Ovid, says, that it was gained A. D. XIII. Kal. Quintil. or 18th June, the day of Collin and Waterloo.

Hanc quoque quum patriis Galatea receperit undis,

723. Suburb. triumph. As the Algidus was between Tusculum and the Alban Mount. See on III. 667.

725. On the XIII. Kal. Jul. the sun enters Cancer. Columella (R. R. xi. 2. 49.) gives the same day. A temple was dedicated on this day to Minerva on the Aventine.

729. On the XII. Kal. Jul. in the time of Pyrrhus, a temple was dedicated to a god named Summanus. Pyrrhus entered Italy A. U. C. 473.—Nurus. Aurora, who was married to his son, Tithonus.

731. Summano. The poet, we may observe, is not certain who this god is. The following passages may help to remove the doubt: Pluto qui etiam Summanus dicitur, quasi Summus Manium. Mart. Capella, II. p. 40. Pluto Summanus, appears in Inscriptions. Romani fulmina diurna attribuunt Jovi, nocturna Summano. Plin. H. N. II. 52. Quum Summanus in fastigio Jovis Opt. Max.—e cœlo ictus esset. Cic. Div. I. 10. P. Victor (Reg. XI.) places in the Circus Maximus the Ædes Ditis patris, and a fragment of an old Calendar has on this day Summan. ad. Circ. Max. Varro, (L. L. IV.) joins Summanus with Vulcan, and says, that Tatius built a temple to him. It is thus, I think, tolerably certain, that this god was the same with Dis and Orcus, and with the Hades or Pluto of the Greeks. See Mythology, p. 468.

733—762. On the evening of the same day, Ophiuchus rises.—Patriis, Galatea was one of the Nereïdes.

733. Juvenis, Æsculapius.—Avitis, of his grandfather Jupiter.

- Plenaque securæ terra quietis erit ;

763—768. On the IX. Kal. Jul. A. U. C. 537, the consul, C. Flaminius, in opposition to the auspices, gave battle to Hannibal at the Trasimene lake.—Vincere. To fight and to conquer were with Germanicus the same, according to the poet.

769. On the VIII. Kal. Jul. A. U. C. 551, Syphax was overcome by the Roman and Masinissa. Liv. xxx. 3—13.

770. Hasdrubal. It is uncertain what Hasdrubal is meant. Perhaps he who was overcome and slain at the Metaurus, A. U. C. 547. Liv. xxvii. 49.

771. Tacitis annis. Compare I. 65.

773. Honores, the festival.

776—784. The same day was the anniversary of the dedication of the temple of Fors Fortuna. Dies Fortis Fortunæ appellatus ab Servio Tullio rege, quod is fanum Fortis Fortunæ secundum Tiberim extra urbem Romam dedicavit Junio mense. Varro, L. L. V. There was another temple of this goddess in the same place, built A. U. C. 459. Carvilius consul de reliquo ære ædem Fortis Fortunæ de manubiis faciendam locavit prope ædem ejus deæ ab rege Serv. Tullio dedicatam. Liv. x. 46. Fors Fortuna is evidently the same with the Fortuna Virilis of IV. 145, and this last name appears to have originated in a mistake, for the true name of the goddess is Fors, not Fortis, Fortuna. Fors Fortuna, in quo incerti casus significantur magis. Cic. Leg. II. 11. 28. Aliud Fortuna est, aliud Fors Fortuna; nam Fors Fortuna est cujus diem festum colunt qui sine arte aliqua vivunt: hujus ædes trans Tiberim est. Donat. Ter. Phorm. v. 6. 1. Dionysius (iv. 27.) and Plutarch (De Fort. Rom.) render it in Greek, Τυχη ἀνδρεία, or ἰσχυρὰ or ἀριστευτική. Ovid in this place agrees with them, but Cicero could hardly, I think, have made a mistake.

776. In Tib. rip. It is disputed on which side of the river the temple was. Donatus (see preceding note,) places it on the further side. "Templum situm in Transtiberina regione vel ex eo patet quod Naso subdit, vel ponte vel navicula illud adeundum." Neapolis. But, with this critic's leave, Ovid says no such thing, he merely says that they might go by land or by water, and, if the temple was the other side of the river, "transmisissent flumen non decurrissent," as Gierig justly observes.

781. Compare on v. 627.

784. Templa propinqua. Did Ovid ascribe the foundation of the two adjoining temples to Servius?

785. Suburb. æde, i. e. of Fors Fortuna.

787. As this was the VIII. Kal. the belt of Orion rose heliacally on the VI. Kal. Μηνὶ τῷ αὐτῷ κέ (xxv.) Ὀρίων ἐὼς ἄρχεται ἀνατέλλειν εἰσὶ δὲ τροπαὶ θερινὰ. Aëtius.

 Marcia, sacrificio deductum nomen ab Anco, the VIII. Kal. Columella (R. R. xi. 2.) VIII. et VII. et VI. Kal. Jul. Solstitium, Favonius et calor. Perhaps, as Neapolis says, he was here only giving the various statements of the Parapegmata.

791. On the V. Kal. the temple of the Lares in the Forum, (P. Victor, Reg. VIII.) and that of Jupiter Stator, vowed by Romulus, (Liv. I. 12.) were dedicated.

792. Hic, etc. "In ejus vicinia taberna coronariæ ejusdam doctæ fuisse videtur." Krebs.

795. IV. Kal. Jul. was the dedication of the temple built to Romulus, under the name of Quirinus, on the Quirinal hill. See II. 511. It was repaired and dedicated anew by Augustus.

796. Trabææ. Compare I. 37, II. 503. Trab. Quir. tuæ. is equivalent to tibi trabeate Quirine! It is a harsh mode of expression.

797. Tempus, etc. is equivalent to : This is the last day of June.

799. A. U. C. 575, M. Fulvius Nobilior built a temple to Hercules in the Flaminian Circus, in which he placed the statues of the Muses which he had brought from Ambracia. Plin. xxxv. 36. Eumenius, in Or. pro rest. Sch. c. 7, says, that Fulvius had learned in Greece that Hercules was Musagetes, or leader of the Muses. Heyne (Opusc. Acad. II. p. 305.) doubts greatly of this, and I have met with nothing to confirm it. This temple was repaired A. U. C. 767, by Marcius Philippus, the uncle by marriage (v. 809.) of Augustus. Suet. Aug. 29.

802. Marcia casta. She was married to Fabius Maximus, with whose family Ovid (Ep. ex Pont. III. 1. 75.) appears to have been connected by marriage.

803. Sacrificio. Ancus Marcius, qui longe antiquissimum ratus sa-

In qua par facies nobilitate sua.
 Par animo quoque forma suo respondet in illa ;      805
 Et genus, et facies ingeniumque simul.
 Nec, quod laudamus formam, tam turpe putaris ;
 Laudamus magnas hac quoque parte deas.
 Nupta fuit quondam matertera Cæsaris illi.
 O decus, o sacra femina digna domo !      810
 Sic cecinit Clio : doctæ assensere sorores.
 Annuit Alcides, increpuitque lyram.

cra publica, ut ab Numa instituta erant, facere. Liv. I. 32.

808. Laudamus, etc. Witness the following epithets of their goddesses, used by the Greek poets, ἐὐκομος, λευκώλενος, καλλίσφυρος, καλή.

812. Lyram. This is the reading of five MSS. the rest have lyra. Increp. lyr. is simply, struck the lyre. Threiciam digitis increpuisse lyram. Her. III. 3. 18. See Hor. Car. iv. 15. 1, for the meaning of the other form.

* * * In five of the best MSS. of this poem, the following four verses are found. They look like the commencement of a seventh book. See Introduction, §. 5.

*Si novus a Jani sacris numerabitur annus, Quintilis falso nomine dictus erit.
 Si facis, ut fuerant, primas a Marte Kalendas, Tempora constabunt ordine ducta suo.*
