Picture of a US Airways A320 for reference of the US Airways Livery.

Description

The US Airways Livery will have a white Radome and upper fuselage, with the US Airways logo printed off-centered to the left of the center of the plane, with curvy gray stripes at the end of the fuselage to near the center off-centered by the right.

The vertical stabilizer and rudder will be in sapphire blue (#0E2E62) with straight darker blue stripes at a 330° angle and a thin straight dark blue strip to meet a white strip separating the red at the top of the tail. The tail will also have the US Airways US Flag logo in the middle in white.

The lower half of the fuselage is sapphire blue separated by a white and red line from the upper fuselage until near the cockpit winds when they will bend down and connect on the underside of the plane past the landing gear. US Airways offers a picture of the livery and a labeled picture of an Airbus A320.

Express Livery & Special Liveries + proposed special liveries

US Airways has three official special liveries which are an inverted version of the main livery, and two state liveries which are the State of Nevada and the State of Arizona, and currently there are three other proposal liveries, only which 1 has an unofficial image proposal.

There will only be one of each proposal livery plane, as each serves as a way to express the past of an airline or express US Airways values. The US Airways Express livery is the same as the US Airways main livery, but including the word “EXPRESS” after the US Airways Logo.
