Introduction

In the last decade, more and more start-ups are launched each year. IT-related companies make up a great proportion of this group. Some of them failed but others survived and changed the life of everyone, such as Airbnb, Mobike, deliverro and much others. But how entrepreneurs fund their projects? Generally, Start-ups follow a path consisted in 5 stages from the point of view of finance (showed in the picture). The first one is the pre-seed stage, where founder validate his/her idea to continue the project. In this stage, self-funding and friends/family are the most common funding due to the relative small capital need. The second stage consists in building the final product requiring a great amount of resources. Entrepreneurs often appeal for crowd-funding or angel investments at this stage. The next stage is product launch, also known as early stage of a start-up where the company starts making profit. The fourth stage is the Growth one, where Venture Capital rounds (A,B and C) play important role. The possible last stage is IPO when the company entered into the maturity phase. Some of start-ups are sold at one of the stage before its IPO.

This study basically aims to find out who are those Business Angels and why they are able to fund start-ups. It is organized in four parts: Literature Review, Methodology, Business Angels' description and Data Analysis.

At the beginning of the this work, it will talk about the extension of previous paper related to the Business Angels' Profile to give a reference to this thesis.

At the second part, it makes know the methodology the author followed along all the paper.

In the paragraph of Business Angels' description, 990 Business Angels will be described with more relevant information. This content is based on the data previously collected updated to 2014.

In the last part of this paper, the mentioned data about 990 Business Angels will be analyzed together with data of other Business Angels which is previously collected, resulting a data analysis about a total of 4806 Business Angels. As result of the analysis, it can be said some trends to better understand the origin of Business Angels through diagrams and charts.

Methodology

The work began with a data collection, where 990 worldwide Business Angels' information updated to 2014 are collected, this include gender, number of investments, work experience, work sectors, education and entrepreneurship information. Most of the data is coming from business information platforms such as Crunchbase and LinkedIn. Data table (Attachment A) is computed considering investor location, birth place, investor actual location, their gender, availability of information, number of contacts on LinkedIn, number of investments, number of companies invested, experience years, educational information (Bachelor, Master, MBA, Pd.H), sectors Business Angels have ever served, year of the first investment and entrepreneurship, that is the number of start-ups a Business Angel founded or co-founded.

Business Angels' Description

Business Angels are individuals who provide capital for a business start-up (normally at the seed stage) in exchange for convertible debt or ownership equity. Business Angels, different from other type of investors, may also contribute to start-ups with their specific resources and knowledge which helps start-ups to success in the market. Following are descriptions of 990 Business Angels with correspondent code number in the excel file (attachment A).

Company: none

Entrepreneurship: 1

Mike Homer was hired by Apple Computer in 1982, where he served as the technology adviser to the firm's chief executive, John Sculley. He followed with a position as marketing vice president at GO Corp., an early pioneer in creating software for mobile computers and personal digital assistants that did early work in pen-based computing. Homer was a vice president at the Netscape in the 1990s at the dawn of the World Wide Web. There, Homer developed the company's initial business plan and played a pivotal role in obtaining the private financing necessary to allow the company to progress to its 1995 initial public offering. He developed marketing plans for Netscape in 1994 at a time when few people had ever heard of the Internet. During the period where Microsoft challenged Netscape's early browser dominance with its Internet Explorer product, Homer headed the firm's marketing department as it faced bitter competition from Microsoft, a challenge that ultimately resulted in an antitrust suit. Homer helped argue that Microsoft had abused its monopoly power in the operating system market to push out Netscape's browser in favor of its own.

Following AOL's acquisition of Netscape in 2000, Homer founded Kontiki, a peer-assisted content delivery technology company, that was purchased by VeriSign in March 2006 for $62 million, with a proviso that the rights to use the firm's technology would be donated to the non-profit Open Media Network. Lee Strafford is an English businessman, the former chairman of Sheffield Wednesday F.C., the Football club based in Sheffield, South Yorkshire. Strafford is also co-founder of NetStart. He was also co-founder and CEO of successful UK ISP PlusNet. Strafford became chairman of Sheffield Wednesday on 7 January 2009 and quickly made significant changes to the club including signing a charitable sponsorship deal with Sheffield Children's Hospital.[2][3] However, it was announced on 17 May 2010 that Strafford had resigned, having failed to ensure that the club stayed in the Football League Championship caused by apparent major disruption within the boardroom.[4] Following his resignation Strafford engaged in a corporate whistle-blowing process, exposing various issues which directly contributed to the club's plight, a plight which almost resulted in the club being placed into administration. The club was bought by Milan Mandaric on 14 December 2010.

Mandarin's bid was supported by the club's bankers and major creditor, the Co-Operative Bank, in favour of an alternative bid by members of the incumbent board.[5][6][7][8]

Strafford made his name with Sheffield-based Internet provider PlusNet. He took PlusNet from 7 to 200+ employees and from £0 to £100 million market cap, with the company eventually being sold to British Telecom for only £67 million. During his time as CEO, the business went through three sale processes, 6 years as a reporting segment of Insight Enterprises Inc, a (NASDAQ listed Fortune 500 business), one AIM IPO, two and a half years as a plc and was eventually sold to BT Group in January 2007.

Strafford has spent much of the time since the sale of PlusNet working with Sheffield City Council and the two Sheffield Universities with a view to helping to create more technology start-ups in the region and establishing better support for existing technology businesses.

In December 2010 Strafford became a founding private sector board member of the Sheffield City Region Local Enterprise Partnership (<http://www.sheffieldcityregion.org.uk/>), working with a specific focus on the Creative and Digital industries agenda for the city region, while also working with the rest of the board on driving economic growth as a whole in the city region.

In June 2012 Strafford co-founded Dotforge,[9] a pre-Seed Tech accelerator. Dotforge supports digital start-ups drawn from around the world and supports them through its programmes which are run primarily in Sheffield.

In November 2016 Strafford launched Accelerated Digital (ADV) Ventures <http://accelerated.ventures>. ADV is a venture investment company investing in and supporting startups & scaleups in the Tech (Digital) sector. Its initial geographic focus is on UK based companies. Strafford is a co-founder and the CEO.
