DIRECTOR'S NOTE

It's truly amazing, when you stop to think on it, that Peanuts has celebrated such tremendous success, and for so long, since 1950. Charles M. Schulz has been quoted as saying, in the Green Bay Press Gazette, in 1975, "Well, frankly, I guess I did expect it, because, after all, it was something I had planned for since I was 6 years old." He went on to say that he didn't, of course, know that Snoopy was going to go to the moon, or that the phrase "happiness is a warm puppy" would prompt hundreds of other such definitions, or that "security blanket" would become a part of American language, but he did hope that he'd contribute something to a profession that he loved "all my life."

From the time I was little, and reading The Des Moines Register (or having it read to me, prior to the time that I could do that for myself), Charlie Brown, Linus, Snoopy et al were strong figures to my family; my dad never left the house without reading Peanuts first.

Why? It's about innocence, hope, perseverance, the power of dreaming and friendship. Characters are distinct, with Charlie Brown being, really, the 'middle ground,' what Schulz called the "everyman." They remind us of basic goodness and simplicity, all of which are important to this production, I think.

Each of us has enjoyed working on this production – this term marking our first term, as a department, back on campus and in a theatre, moving forward again from the pandemic. While many things are still unknown, and there's still some uncertainty, it has been a joy to be together – not unlike these children in the show, who TRULY enjoy one another. And THIS reminds me of another quote of Schulz, widely distributed over the years, but I think first said in an interview with the Pottsville Republican: "To create something out of nothing is a wonderful experience." He, of course, was referring to his cartooning. Though we've certainly had a 'something,' namely a timeless, delightful script and score, to create this production has been a wonderful experience. It's our hope that you enjoy it, as well.
