Jury Statements

Last year in this space, I complained that a large number of glass artists had stopped sending us slides – or had never gotten around to sending them in the first place. I explained that even if the jurors did not select a particular slide for publication, all of the slides were carefully catalogued and assigned a permanent place in the Museum's research library. We have had a most positive reaction, and we have received impressive updates from a variety of artists. One old friend from Europe raised an important question: "If the Corning Museum wants a historical record of the art of glassmaking in our time, why do they need a competition in which there are criteria such as excellence or function or esthetics or technique? For a historical record, you only have to ask the artists to send their slides and to inform you." He went on to opt for a "real" competition with "straight" criteria.

Now, I happen to love criticism only slightly less than I love being proven wrong, but I need the answers to three questions before acknowledging so fundamental a weakness in the New Glass Review. First, which artists do we invite? Second, how do we find the new ones? Third, how do we establish any kind of "straight" criteria for art, an activity that defies definition – even in glass?

Our answers have been: first, invite them all; second, invite them all; and, third, vary the jury to include as many points of view as possible. The only stated criterion is "newness," which is almost as undefinable as "art" and just about as subjective.

My friend has hit upon a number of tender spots: our slide holdings are not as comprehensive as they should be, and our criteria are probably less clear than they were 18 years ago. Perhaps we should draw up an invitation list for artists who have received some degree of recognition and simply publish what they send us; perhaps we should draw up tight guidelines for entrants and jurors, with special recognition for those who do best. It is worth thinking about, and we would welcome your thoughts.

There is plenty to criticize about the New Glass Review, and every year I seem to find a new problem area. This year, I was particularly conscious of how different our personal criteria as jurors seemed in comparison with the criteria or goals of many of the entrants. We are a jaded lot; we see the best, and we see it internationally and continuously. The slides we look at are often of work done in relatively parochial situations by young people with limited access to what is going on elsewhere. In some cases, photographic techniques are primitive and to make glass at all is a heroic achievement. Is it fair to judge a struggling student from, say, Albania with the same sophisticated rigor as the head of the glass department at, say, the Rhode Island School of Design? They certainly have different aspirations. The cultures in which they live have different tastes and standards. At the top of the heap, things come together: artists, collectors, dealers, and museum people travel extensively and know one another. The glass medium is singular in this respect. But what of the base on which it all rests: the new people, the countries in which the medium itself is new? If, as Ruskin believed, the success of an artist depends on the realization of his or her goals, not society's, we are doing something wrong.

Let me tell you about someone who is doing something right in my view – Gerhard Ribka (no. 75). His creature comes out of a stark, calligraphic abstraction, an arrangement of space so extraordinarily dynamic that it seems a language all its own, like a capital in an illuminated manuscript that somehow got squeezed. The person that emerges is pure creation, and yet is as convincingly real as if painted from life. What is more, he demands attention – like a character in a Dostoyevsky novel. There is a comic sense of the absurd, but the expression on the face and the stance of the body are disquieting. It looks like a maze of spontaneous accidents, except that Mr. Ribka does it again and again, and nothing is wasted.

Stained glass is a tough medium in that all the colors depend on transmitted light, which often results in a cloying, crowding-together brightness that diminishes serious content. (In painting, the contrast between transparent and opaque color is inherent.) Mr. Ribka is such a master of this medium that it is hard to imagine his little person in etzes Jahr an dieser Stelle beklagte ich, daß sehr viele Glaskünstler aufgehört haben, uns Dias zu schicken – oder von vorneherein nie Zeit gefunden haben, welche zu schicken. Ich erklärte, daß auch wenn die Juroren ein bestimmtes Dia nicht für die Veröffentlichung auswählen, alle Dias sorgfältig katalogisiert werden und ihnen ein fester Platz in der Forschungsbibliothek des Museums zugewiesen wird. Wir haben eine äußerst positive Reaktion erhalten und von einer Menge Künstler beeindruckende neueste Daten. Ein alter Freund aus Europa hat die Frage aufgeworfen: „Wenn das Corning Museum ein historisches Verzeichnis über Glaskunst in unserer Zeit aufbauen möchte, wozu braucht es einen Wettbewerb, in dem es Kriterien wie herausragende Leistung oder Funktion oder Ästhetik oder Technik gibt. Für eine historische Dokumentation braucht man die Künstler nur zu bitten, ihre Dias zu schicken und euch zu informieren.“ Er plädiert weiter für einen „wirklichen“ Wettbewerb mit „genauen“ Kriterien.

Zufällig liebe ich Kritik nur etwas weniger als mir einen Irrtum nachweisen zu lassen, trotzdem brauche ich vor dem Eingeständnis einer so fundamentalen Schwäche der New Glass Review die Antwort auf drei Fragen. Erstens, welche Künstler laden wir ein? Zweitens, wie finden wir die neuen? Drittens, wie legen wir überhaupt „genuine“ Kriterien für Kunst fest, ein Verfahren, das Definition herausfordert – auch im Glas?

Unsere Antworten sind gewesen: Erstens, alle einzuladen; zweitens, alle einzuladen; und drittens, die Jury zu variierten, um so viele Blickwinkel wie möglich einzuschließen. Das einzige festgelegte Kriterium ist „Neuheit“, das genauso undefinierbar ist wie „Kunst“ und genauso subjektiv.

Mein Freund hat auf eine Anzahl wunder Punkte hingewiesen: Unser Diabestand ist nicht so umfassend wie er sein sollte, und unsere Kriterien sind vermutlich weniger durchsichtig, als sie es vor 18 Jahren waren. Vielleicht sollten wir eine Einladungsliste für Künstler aufstellen, die einen gewissen Grad an Anerkennung erreicht haben, und einfach veröffentlichen, was sie uns senden; vielleicht sollten wir straffe Richtlinien für die Bewerber und Juroren aufstellen, unter besonderer Berücksichtigung derer, die am besten sind. Es ist wert darüber nachzudenken, und wir würden es begrüßen, wenn Sie sich dazu äußern.

Es gibt viel Kritik an der New Glass Review, und jedes Jahr scheine ich auf neue Problemgebiete zu stoßen. In diesem Jahr war ich mir besonders darüber bewußt, wie verschieden unsere persönlichen Kriterien als Juroren von den Kriterien oder Zielen vieler Bewerber scheinen. Wir sind ein übersättigter Haufen; wir sehen das Beste, und wir sehen es international und kontinuierlich. Die Dias, die wir uns ansehen, zeigen oft Arbeiten, die unter ziemlich beschränkten Umständen von jungen Leuten gemacht wurden, mit begrenztem Zugang zu dem, was anderswo vor sich geht. In einigen Fällen sind die photographischen Techniken primitiv und ist Glasmachen überhaupt eine heroische Leistung. Ist es fair, einen sich abmügenden Studenten aus sagen wir Albanien, mit der gleichen anspruchsvollen Härte zu beurteilen wie den Leiter der Glasabteilung, sagen wir, der Rhode Island School of Design? Sie haben sicherlich verschiedene Bestrebungen. Die Kulturen, in denen sie leben, haben unterschiedliche Geschmäcker und Standards. Oben an der Spitze kommen die Dinge zusammen: Künstler, Sammler, Händler und Museumsleute reisen extensiv und kennen sich untereinander. Das Glasmilieu ist in dieser Hinsicht einzigartig. Aber was ist mit der Basis, auf der alles ruht: den neuen Leuten, den Ländern, in denen das Medium selbst neu ist? Wenn, wie Ruskin glaubte, der Erfolg eines Künstlers oder einer Künstlerin von der Verwirklichung seiner oder ihrer Ziele abhängt und nicht von denen der Gesellschaft, dann machen wir etwas falsch.

Ich möchte Ihnen gern etwas von jemand erzählen, der aus meiner Sicht etwas Echtes tut – Gerhard Ribka (Nr. 75). Sein Geschöpf entspringt einer reinen, kalligraphischen Abstraktion, einem so außerordentlich dynamischen Arrangement von Raum, daß es wie eine Sprache an und für sich erscheint, wie eine Majuskel in einer illustrierten Handschrift, die abgedruckt wird. Die Person, die auftaucht, ist reine Schöpfung und trotzdem so überzeugend real, als wäre sie nach einem Modell gemalt. Und was noch wichtiger ist, sie verlangt nach Aufmerksamkeit – wie ein Charakter aus einem Roman von Dostojewski. Es gibt ein komisches Gefühl für das Absurde, denn gerade der Gesichtsausdruck und die Haltung des Körpers sind beunruhigend. Es sieht aus wie ein Gewirr aus zufälligen Ereignissen, abgesehen davon, daß Herr Ribka es ständig wiederholt und nichts verschwendet ist.

anything but glass. The artist uses black in mass, in line (to suggest leading?), and as texture to press into the transparent areas so that the light appears to bulge toward us as if through a gate. It is a haunting image.

Although I do enjoy coming out of retirement each year to take part in the Review, there is little pleasure in being responsible for disappointing so many people. The greatest joy, the pleasure that keeps me coming back, is knowing that I will see wonderful new work.

Stained Glass ist ein schwieriges Medium, weil die Farben von der Lichtdurchlässigkeit abhängen, die oft zu einem widerlichen, überfrachteten Glanz führt, der seriöse Inhalte herabsetzt. (In der Malerei ist der Kontrast zwischen transparenter und opaker Farbe von Natur aus da.) Herr Ribka ist solch ein Meister dieses Mediums, daß seine kleine Person kaum in etwas anderem als Glas vorzustellen ist. Der Künstler verwendet ausgiebig Schwarz, als Linie (um auf Bleiruten zu weisen?) und als Struktur, die transparente Flächen betont, so daß das Licht uns wie durch ein Tor entgegenzuquellen scheint. Es ist ein unvergessliches Bild.

Obwohl es mir Spaß macht, aus der Privatheit aufzutauchen und jedes Jahr an der Review teilzunehmen, ist es wenig angenehm für die Enttäuschung so vieler Leute verantwortlich zu sein. Die größte Freude, das Vergnügen, das der Motor für meine erneute Teilnahme ist, besteht in dem Wissen, daß ich wunderbare, neue Arbeiten sehen werde.

My three colleagues have provided insightful summaries of what we saw over the course of jurying New Glass Review 15. Therefore, I would like to limit my contribution to brief observations on several pieces.

For the second time in New Glass Review, Alessandro Diaz de Santillana has demonstrated that glassblowing has the potential to produce truly thoughtful (as well as attractive) sculpture. For some reason, many individuals striving to make art from blown glass rely on demonstrations of technical finesse and mistake hackneyed symbolism for intellectual content. This is not the case in De Santillana's Custode di Sabbia. It is indeed well crafted and takes advantage of the most beloved qualities of inflated glass – sensuous organic form and vibrant color – to produce a visually stunning object. However, the teetering and slightly suggestive shape and the deeply ringed surface require the viewer's genuine consideration; questions are raised that prevent the object from lapsing into the predictability of ornament.

I have mentioned Anna Skibská and her intricate flameworked glass sculptures in past issues of New Glass Review. Again this year, artists from Poland have entered fascinating work made from rods of glass manipulated over a flame. Over the past decade, the potential of this technique for sculpture has been developed by such artists as Ginny Ruffner and Susan Plum. The pieces from Poland represent a sensibility more aligned with the intricate style of Kari Russell-Pool (Dancing Pear Bottle). Seemingly absurd fragility and human scale impart an appealing sense of ephemerality to the Polish sculptures.

The peplos-clad Nike by Barbara Idzikowska evokes obvious references to antiquity and myth. The figure can also be read as an empty dress defined by intertwined lines reminiscent of the circulatory system or undecipherable script. The broken and painted sheet glass wings invite further feminine metaphors and comparisons. Paulina Komorowska-Birger's almost invisible glass drawing, Sled for Ann on Grass in Rain, hangs in the air by threads. Its minimal cartoonish lines come together as an ironic temporary landscape without sentimentality.

Outside of high-tech applications of industrial materials and stained glass, true incorporation of glass in architecture remains an unusual phenomenon. In collaboration with associates from the field of ceramics, Endre Gaál of Hungary has produced an impressive building facade from kiln-formed glass and clay. Arguments pro and con can be made regarding the appropriateness of classical elements attached to a modern building. However, Gaál's broken columns and capitals, entablature, and pediment remain admirable in their successful combination of materials as well as their monumental ambition.

One of the greatest long-term values of New Glass Review is the documentation of recent works by established artists. Like all of the other jurors, I struggle to decide whether or not to vote for outstanding objects that just do not seem new. This year's most difficult predicament was presented by Erwin Eisch (I am glad to say that Eisch is represented in New Glass Review 15 thanks to the opinion of a co-juror). Eisch is one of the most creative and sophisticated artists using glass today, and his "Picasso Head" series gets richer as it matures.

Meine drei Kollegen haben einsichtsvolle Zusammenfassungen dessen vorgelegt, was wir im Verlauf der Jurierung für die New Glass Review 15 gesehen haben. Deshalb möchte ich meinen Beitrag auf kurze Betrachtungen über einige Stücke begrenzen.

Zum zweiten Mal hat Alessandro Diaz de Santillana in der New Glass Review vorgeführt, daß dem Glasblasen das Potential innewohnt, wirklich gedankenvolle (und ebenso ansprechende) Skulpturen hervorzubringen. Aus verschiedenen Gründen verlassen sich viele Personen, die sich bemühen mit geblasenem Glas Kunst zu machen, auf das Demonstrieren von technischen Finessen und verwechseln einen abgedroschenen Formalismus mit intellektuellen Inhalten. Das ist bei De Santillanas Custode di Sabbia nicht der Fall. Es ist in der Tat hervorragend handwerklich ausgeführt und nutzt die am meisten geliebten Eigenschaften von überbewertetem Glas – sinnliche organische Form und schwingende Farbe –, um ein visuell überwältigendes Objekt zu produzieren. Dennoch erfordern die schwankende und leicht suggestive Form und die Oberfläche mit ihren tiefen Ringen die ungeteilte Aufmerksamkeit des Betrachters. Fragen werden aufgeworfen, die verhindern, daß das Objekt in die Berechenbarkeit des Ornaments abgleitet.

Ich habe Anna Skibská und ihre komplizierten Lampenglasskulpturen in der letzten Ausgabe der New Glass Review erwähnt. Auch dieses Jahr wieder haben polnische Künstler fesselnde Arbeiten aus Glasstäben eingereicht, die über einer Flamme bearbeitet wurden. In den vergangenen zehn Jahren sind die Möglichkeiten dieser Technik für den Bereich der Skulptur von Künstlern wie Ginny Ruffner und Susan Plum weiterentwickelt worden. Die Arbeiten aus Polen verkörpern eine Empfindsamkeit, die eher dem komplizierten Stil von Kari Russell-Pool (Dancing Pear Bottle) verbunden ist. Eine scheinbare absurde Zerbrechlichkeit und ein menschliches Maß verleihen den polnischen Skulpturen ein reizvolles Gefühl von Flüchtigkeit.

Die schwunglos gekleidete Nike von Barbara Idzikowska beschwört augenfällige Verweise auf Altertum und Mythen. Die Figur kann auch als eine leere Kleidungshülle gelesen werden, die durch verflochtene Linien, die an den Kreislauf oder eine unentzifferbare Schrift erinnern, gekennzeichnet ist. Die gebrochenen und bemalten Flachglasflügel ermutigen zu weiteren weiblichen Metaphern und Vergleichen. Paulina Komorowska-Birgers fast unsichtbare Glaszeichnung Sled for Ann on Grass in Rain hängt an Fäden in der Luft. Ihre feinen karikierenden Linien kommen zu einer ironischen temporären Landschaft ohne Sentimentalität zusammen.

Mit Ausnahme der High-Tech-Verwendung industrieller Materialien und der Bleiverglasung bleibt die wirkliche Eingliederung von Glas in Architektur ein ungewöhnliches Phänomen. In Zusammenarbeit mit Kollegen aus dem Gebiet der Keramik hat Endre Gaál aus Ungarn eine beeindruckende Gebäudefassade aus ofengeformtem Glas und Ton fertiggestellt. Hinsichtlich der Verwendung von klassischen Elementen bei einem modernen Gebäude kann man Pro-und-contra-Argumente finden. Gleichwohl bleiben Gaáls gebrochene Säulen und Kapitelle, bildhafte Darstellungen und Giebel in ihrer erfolgreichen Verbindung der Materialien genauso bewunderungswürdig wie ihr ungeheuerer Ehrgeiz.

However, I could not call it new. That decision might not make sense to the reader, especially in light of my support for other entries representing subtle variations on continuing themes by Peter Aldridge, Dan Dailey, Michael Glancy, Monica Guggisberg and Philip Baldwin, Danny Lane, Paul Marioni, Gerhard Ribka, Timo Sarpaneva, Cappy Thompson, Ann Wählström, and Jack Wax. I can only say that what may appear as insignificant departures, to me signaled change in a direction worthy of encouragement. A particularly striking example is Peter Aldridge's Portals of Illusion. Sculptures based on the effects of precision-machined optical glass are too often boring technical exercises. In this new sculpture, Aldridge again demonstrates his awesome craftsmanship, but in a grid of light and color that wisely returns to the simplicity of his earlier work. Without sacrificing his distinctive mathematical vocabulary, Aldridge's abstract passageway approaches more direct and lucid communication with the viewer.

Other artists took more evident new paths. Flo Perkins' serie Forget-me-Knots, with foliage more akin to barbed wire than to photorealistic flora, was a welcome surprise. Maud Cotter, who has been known for her stained glass constructions, showed Pool. The perforated steel vortex with glass collar seems to allude to turmoil rather than to reflection. Michael Scheiner's Shimmer, a crushing load supported and surrounded by flimsy glass fins, is an exquisite tension. Massive weight is re-emphasized by building the core of wet, and thus considerably heavier, clay into which the glass is wedged. Over the past several years, Danny Lane has more than adequately explored the potential of stacked glass for interior design. Now, the powerful, billowing rhythms of his Wall of China offer a more enduring esthetic. While C. Ruth King's Built Man is an impressive example of free-blown and hot-worked glass, it is most compelling as a disturbing object with its "Incredible Hulk" green torso perched on a pink toothpaste-like stand/shackle/campstool.

New Glass Review is the best place to see exciting pieces from people whose names are new. Harumi Yukutake's honeycombed Pea Pod Cell is a delicate organism composed of unlikely materials. Linda Zmina's Soul Sorter, like Karl-Heinz Garske's sliver of a half-submerged leaf boat, is simply a beautiful, mysterious object. The UFO vase by Hideyuki Takahashi has a still-molten feeling and walks that endearing line between "retro-kitsch" and innovative design. Light shifts back and forth on the edges of the stacked circles forming Susan Holland's Velocity Surface. They are reverse-engraved with the couplet "This is Where the Velocity Changes/The Velocity Changes Here." The cantilevered wing/plane of Josef Marek's Yellow Birdie feels Gothic and stark. Wedding Cake II by Robin Cass is a stitched-together tower with an icy iced surface. It is transformed from sardonic confection to architecture (a prison, a bunker); it is then anthropomorphized as protruding eyes, wire hair, and fluttering nerve endings.

New Glass Review 15, like its predecessors, is a strange and wonderful assortment. It says nothing about the state of contemporary glass, but much about the state of contemporary art, craft, and design.

Einer der größten Langzeitwerte der New Glass Review ist die Dokumentation der jüngsten Arbeiten etablierter Künstler. Wie alle anderen Juroren auch, kämpfe ich darum, ob ich für herausragende Objekte stimmen soll, die eben nicht neu scheinen, oder nicht. Der schwierigste Fall kam in diesem Jahr von Erwin Eisch. (Ich bin froh zu sagen, daß Erwin Eisch dank der Meinung eines Cojuroren in der New Glass Review vertreten ist.) Eisch ist einer der kreativsten und raffinertesten Künstler, der heute Glas verwendet, und seine „Picasso-Head“-Serie wird um so reicher, je reifer sie wird. Trotz alledem kann ich sie nicht neu nennen. Diese Entscheidung könnte dem Leser unsinnig vorkommen, besonders in Hinblick auf mein Eintreten für andere Einsendungen, die für subtile Veränderungen bei gleichbleibenden Themen stehen, wie bei Peter Aldridge, Dan Dailey, Michael Glancy, Monica Guggisberg und Philip Baldwin, Danny Lane, Paul Marioni, Gerhard Ribka, Timo Sarpaneva, Cappy Thompson, Ann Wählström und Jack Wax. Ich kann nur sagen, daß das, was wie eine unbedeutende Abweichung erscheinen könnte, für mich einen Richtungswechsel signalisiert, der eine Unterstützung wert ist. Ein besonders eindrucksvolles Beispiel ist Peter Aldridges Portals of Illusions. Skulpturen, die auf den Effekten von präzise bearbeitetem optischem Glas beruhen, sind allzuoft langweilige technische Pflichtübungen. In seiner neuen Skulptur führt Aldridge wieder sein ungeheures handwerkliches Können vor, allerdings in einem Gitter aus Licht und Farbe, das klugerweise zu der Einfachheit seiner frühen Arbeiten zurückkehrt. Ohne sein ausgeprägtes mathematisches Vokabular zu opfern, nähern sich Aldridges abstrakte Passagen einer direkteren und klareren Verständigung mit dem Betrachter.

Andere Künstler schlagen offensichtlicher neue Wege ein. Flo Perkins Serie Forget-me-Knot war mit einem Laubwerk, das Stacheldraht mehr ähnelt als einer photorealistischen Flora, eine willkommene Überraschung. Maud Cotter, die für Stained Glass Konstruktionen bekannt ist, zeigte Pool. Der perforierte Stahlwirbel mit einem Glaskragen scheint eher auf Aufruhr hinzudeuten als auf Reflexion. Michael Scheiners Shimmer, eine vernichtende Last, die von hauchdünnen Glasflossen gestützt und umgeben ist, stellt eine vorzügliche Spannung dar. Ein massives Gewicht wird dadurch zurückgenommen, daß der Kern aus ungebranntem, und deshalb beträchtlich wuchtigerem Ton besteht, in den das Glas verkeilt ist. Im Lauf der vergangenen Jahre hat Danny Lane mehr als hinreichend die Möglichkeiten von geschichteten Glas für das Interior Design erforscht. Jetzt bieten die mächtigen, wogenden Rhythmen seiner Wall of China eine dauerhaftere Ästhetik. Während C. Ruth Kings Built Man ein beeindruckendes Beispiel für frei geblasenes und heiß bearbeitetes Glas ist, ist es als beunruhigendes Objekt mit seinem „unglaublich ungeschlachten“ grünen Torso, der auf einem pinkfarbenen, zahnpastähnlichen Gestell/Bügel/Caminghocker thront, am herausforderndsten.

Die New Glass Review ist der beste Ort, um aufregende Stücke von Leuten zu sehen, deren Namen neu sind. Harumi Yukutakes wabenartiger Pea Pod Cell ist ein zerbrechlicher Organismus, der aus ungleichen Materialien zusammengesetzt ist. Linda Zminas Soul Sorter ist, wie Karl-Heinz Garskes Span eines halb untergetauchten blattartigen Bootes, ein wunderschönes, geheimnisvolles Objekt. Die UFO Vase von Hideyuki Takahashi, der ein Ausdruck des noch immer Schmelzens zu eigen ist, bewegt sich auf dieser liebenswerten Grenzlinie zwischen „Retro-Kitsch“ und innovativem Design. Licht flackert an den Rändern des geschichteten Kreises hin und her, den Susan Hollands Velocity Surface bildet. In ihre Rückseite ist der Reim „This is Where the Velocity Changes/The Velocity Changes here“ graviert. Der freistehende Flügel/die freitragende Fläche von Josef Mareks Yellow Birdie hat einen gotischen und starren Ausdruck. Wedding Cake II von Robin Cass ist ein zusammengesteckter Turm mit einer eisig gefrorenen Oberfläche. Er verwandelt sich von einem sardonischen Zuckergebäck zu Architektur (einem Gefängnis, einem Bunker); er wird dann durch hervortretende Augen, drahtiges Haar und flatternde Nervenenden anthropomorphisiert.

Die New Glass Review 15 ist wie ihre Vorgänger eine merkwürdige und wunderbare Zusammenstellung. Sie sagt nichts über den Stand des zeitgenössischen Glases, aber viel über zeitgenössische Kunst, Kunsthhandwerk und Design.

The criterion that the New Glass Review uses to select 100 pieces every year is "newness." Without a doubt, this has enabled the jurors to select a much wider range of ideas and concepts than would have been the case if they had chosen the "best hundred," and this practice encourages younger people to expand their talents. I reconfirmed the truth of this during my experiences as one of the jurors this year.

The merits and demerits of constantly asking for something "new" have been discussed repeatedly in the past. However, using this criterion is synonymous with the continual pursuit of the potential of contemporary glass art. After the whole procedure of judging was finished, I thought again about this key word, "newness," and became quite convinced that this criterion is certainly significant in determining the characteristics of the New Glass Review.

Work that merely displays a short-term novelty or an accidentally obtained effect cannot meet the requirements of the New Glass Review. If a work is to show this unique value of newness, namely, an outstanding originality, its creator must have an accomplished style, without which the work cannot be persuasive enough to be accepted.

On the other hand, a style that distinguishes itself from others may, after its unique value has been officially recognized, begin to become repetitive in its formulations, and it can soon become tedious.

Among the 888 entries, 152 were from Japan, which makes it the second largest contributor country, following the 394 entries from America. This, at a glance, seems to reflect a vitality in the Japanese glass world. However, disappointingly enough, many slides were of immature works, no better than trial articles with no sense of an established style.

While looking at each slide, I felt that because of the way the New Glass Review operates (that is, by examining only slides of works and also by advocating a "newness" in glass art), the competition attracts young artists or art students, not only from Japan but from all over the world, who consider it a casual venue in which to test their ideas. In fact, some slides revealed the entrants' easygoing expectation that they might be selected simply on the basis of good luck.

It must also be said that the works of not a few experienced artists have been rejected — works that undoubtedly would be chosen for the "best hundred" if the criterion were switched from "newness" to "quality." In this case, these artists should acknowledge that a degree of criticism has been given at the direction in which their art is going. To make a change does not necessarily mean to make progress. However, it might be relevant to question whether a continuous adherence to one's own established style will always help in developing artistic expression or, contrariwise, whether it will lead in the wrong direction, even to mannerism. If established artists seriously develop their artistic talents, despite working within the same style, there is no way that their works will be rejected merely because they are not "new."

Every year, there are many prominent artists, both experienced and new, whose absence is very much to be regretted.

Make no mistake, to select "new" works by 100 people out of 888 naturally requires a choice based on "quality," and, as a matter of fact, the "new hundred" come very close to being the "best hundred" as well. The selections made based on the subjective opinions of individual jurors cannot be completely objective; thus, the 100 selected works are not an absolute choice with which all will agree.

I hope artists at various stages of artistic development will understand the purpose and importance of the New Glass Review and positively participate in it as often as possible, if not every year, in order to evaluate their own works. This will enable the New Glass Review to be a reliable document that will truly record the most valuable "new" glass in the world every year.

Das Kriterium, daß die New Glass Review für die Auswahl von 100 Arbeiten jedes Jahr zugrunde legt, ist „Neuheit“. Zweifellos hat das die Juroren in den Stand gesetzt, ein breiteres Spektrum von Ideen und Konzepten zuzulassen, als es der Fall gewesen wäre, wenn sie die „hundert Besten“ ausgewählt hätten, und dieses Verfahren ermutigt junge Leute, ihre Fähigkeiten auszuprobieren. Ich habe mich der Wahrheit dessen während meiner Erfahrung als einer der Juroren in diesem Jahr rückversichern können.

Die Vor- und Nachteile beständig nach etwas „Neuem“ zu fragen, sind in der Vergangenheit wiederholt diskutiert worden. Dennoch entspricht die Verwendung dieses Kriteriums den kontinuierlichen Weiterentwicklungen der Möglichkeiten von zeitgenössischer Glaskunst. Nachdem der gesamte Vorgang der Jurierung beendet war, dachte ich erneut über den Schlüsselbegriff „neu“ nach und kam zu der Überzeugung, daß dieses Kriterium zweifellos für die Bestimmung der Charakteristika der New Glass Review signifikant ist.

Arbeiten, die lediglich eine kurzfristige Neuheit entfalten oder einen zufällig entstandenen Effekt, können den Ansprüchen der New Glass Review nicht gerecht werden. Wenn eine Arbeit diese besondere Qualität des Neuen aufweisen soll, nämlich hervorstechende Originalität, ist es erforderlich, daß sich der Schöpfer durch einen vollendeten Stil auszeichnet, ohne den die Arbeit nicht überzeugend genug sein kann, um akzeptiert zu werden.

Auf der anderen Seite kann sich eine Handschrift, die sich von anderen unterscheidet, in ihren Formulierungen wiederholen, nachdem ihr einzigartiger Wert offiziell anerkannt wurde und schnell langweilig werden.

Von den 888 Einsendungen kamen 152 aus Japan, wodurch es zum zweitgrößten Beitragsland wurde, gefolgt von Amerika mit 394 Einsendungen. Dies scheint auf den ersten Blick die Vitalität der japanischen Glaswelt widerzuspiegeln. Trotzdem gab es, und das ist enttäuschend genug, Dias von unausgereiften Arbeiten, nicht besser als Probestücke ohne Sinn für einen festen Stil.

Während ich jedes Dia betrachtete, hatte ich den Eindruck, daß aufgrund des Verfahrens der New Glass Review (lediglich Dias von den Arbeiten zu prüfen und dazu für „Neuheit“ in der Glaskunst zu plädieren) der Wettbewerb junge Künstler oder Kunststudenten anzieht, nicht nur aus Japan, sondern der ganzen Welt, die hier einen zufälligen Schauplatz sehen, wo sie ihre Ideen testen können. Tatsächlich ließen einige Dias die unbeschwerte Erwartung der Einsender erkennen, sie könnten ganz schlicht auf der Basis von Glück ausgewählt werden.

Es sollte auch erwähnt werden, daß die Arbeiten nicht weniger erfahrener Künstler ausgemustert worden sind — Arbeiten, die zweifellos unter die „hundert Besten“ gekommen wären, wenn das Kriterium von „Neuheit“ auf „Qualität“ umgestellt worden wäre. In diesem Fall sollten die Künstler anerkennen, daß ein bestimmter Grad an Kritik auch in die Richtung zielt, in die ihre Kunst geht.

Sich zu verändern bedeutet nicht zwangsläufig Fortschritte zu machen. Trotzdem könnte es wichtig sein zu fragen, ob ein dauerhaftes Festhalten am eigenen etablierten Stil auch immer hilft, den künstlerischen Ausdruck weiterzuentwickeln oder umgekehrt, ob das in die falsche Richtung führt, sogar hin zu einem Manierismus. Wenn etablierte Künstler ernsthaft ihre künstlerischen Talente entwickeln, auch wenn sie in der gleichen Art arbeiten, gilt es keineswegs, daß ihre Arbeiten einzig aus dem Grund abgelehnt werden, weil sie nicht „neu“ sind.

In jedem Jahr gibt es viele prominente Künstler, sowohl erfahrene als auch neue, deren Nichtteilnahme sehr zu bedauern ist.

Keine Fehler bei der Auswahl „neuer“ Arbeiten von 100 Künstlern aus 888 Einreichungen zu machen, bedarf natürlicherweise eines Verfahrens, das auf „Qualität“ basiert, und tatsächlich könnten die „hundert Neuen“ fast genauso gut die „hundert Besten“ sein. Die stattgefundene Auswahl, die auf der subjektiven Meinung der einzelnen Juroren basiert, kann nicht vollkommen objektiv sein; folglich stellen die 100 ausgewählten Arbeiten keine absolute Wahl dar, der alle zustimmen würden.

Ich hoffe, daß Künstler verschiedener Stufen der künstlerischen Entwicklung den Zweck und die Wichtigkeit der New Glass Review verstehen und tatsächlich an ihr so oft wie möglich teilnehmen, wenn nicht jedes Jahr, um ihre eigenen Arbeiten zu bewerten. Das wird es der New Glass Review ermöglichen, ein zuverlässiges Dokument zu sein, das wahrheitsgemäß das am meisten geschätzte „neue“ Glas in der Welt jedes Jahr dokumentiert.

(aus dem Japanischen übersetzt von Kimiko Steiner)

The submissions to New Glass Review 15 ran the gamut from sculptural and painterly fine-arts approaches to production design. There were experiments with the material, technical achievements and virtuosity, figurative work, conceptual juxtaposition, complexity, simplicity, ambition, and ambiguity. And then there is the criterion of "new." I think it's a given that there are no new ideas, and that developments in technology are interesting as an end in themselves only for a brief period. What defines "new" becomes original interpretations, novel treatments, and unexpected applications.

Each piece we saw demanded consideration on its own terms. In general, I was most intrigued by the objects that seemed, at least at first, easy to neglect. The most humble, unassuming pieces, the ones that made me wonder just what ever led to their creation, were, for that very reason, the ones I found most compelling.

I also find art and design peculiarly lovable when it is "esthetically challenged." Nothing is more persuasive and instructive to me than the ugly and proud!

Overall, what was most exciting was the vast range in the imagination of the artists who were inspired by a love of the material and a love of art. So many pieces that seemed so crucial and obvious — I can't remember a time without them.

Die Einsendungen zur New Glass Review 15 spannten sich über die gesamte Skala von skulpturalen und malerisch künstlerischen Herangehensweisen bis zum Produktionsdesign. Es gab Experimente mit dem Material, technische Leistung und Virtuosität, figurative Arbeiten, konzeptuelle Nebeneinanderstellungen, Kompliziertes, Einfaches, Ehrgeiziges und Doppeldeutiges. Und dann gibt es noch das Kriterium des „Neuen“. Ich denke, es ist eine feststehende Tatsache, daß es keine neuen Ideen gibt und das technische Weiterentwicklungen als Endpunkt in einer Reihe nur für eine kurze Zeit interessant sind. Was „neu“ definiert, erhält originelle Interpretationen, romanhafte Entwürfe und unerwartete Bedeutungen.

Jedes Stück, das wir sahen, erforderte eine Betrachtung innerhalb seiner eigenen Terminologie. Im allgemeinen war ich besonders von den Objekten angesprochen, die wenigstens auf den ersten Blick leicht zu vernachlässigen schienen. Die bescheidensten, am wenigsten anmaßenden Stücke, diejenigen, die mich fragen ließen, was überhaupt zu ihrer Entstehung geführt hatte, waren aus diesem besonderen Grund, diejenigen, die ich am herausforderndsten fand.

Ich finde Kunst und Design besonders liebenswert, wenn sie „ästhetisch herausfordernd“ sind. Nichts ist für mich mehr überzeugend und instruktiv als das Häßliche und Hervorstechende!

Insgesamt war die ungeheure Bandbreite in der Imagination bei den Künstlern am aufregendsten, die durch die Liebe zum Material und die Liebe zur Kunst inspiriert waren. So viele Arbeiten, die wichtig und einleuchtend schienen — ich kann mich nicht mehr in eine Zeit ohne sie zurückversetzen.
