Survey: No to home businesses

Most respondents don't want them in neighborhood

BY CASSIE SHANER The Dominion Post

Nearly two-thirds of the respondents to a citywide survey on zoning oppose home businesses in their neighborhoods.

From June 14-July 1, The Dominion Post and the Neighborhood Zoning Committee, an offshoot of two neighborhood associations, collected surveys to gauge residents' views on proposed zoning changes for home businesses in Morgantown's residential-zoned neighborhoods.

Of 263 surveys returned, 168 respondents (64 percent) are opposed to any home-business hours in their neighborhoods; 169 respondents (64 percent) are against any customers on foot, and 171 (65 percent) are opposed to any customers arriving by vehicle.

About 79 percent of those who filled out the survey are against any employees working in home businesses in their neighborhoods.

Kathleen Sutter, a member of the Neighborhood Zoning Committee, said she was surprised — both by the number of responses and the responses themselves.

"I'm thrilled that so many people responded," she said. "That speaks well to our city."

Sutter asked the city Planning Commission to postpone a vote on proposed home-business zoning changes pending the survey results. The proposed changes included a list of approved types of homes businesses, business hours from 9 a.m.-8 p.m., and limiting customers to no more than 10 per day.

Commission members opted not to go with those recommendations at their June 28 meeting and recommended two changes to the current code. The number of deliveries permitted each day was increased from two to four, and retail sales were altered to also include businesses that provide services.

Morgantown City Council is likely to consider the proposals in August.

Sutter plans to present the survey results — and the surveys themselves — to council members before then. Sutter and her husband have

Adoption goal of animal shelter workers

Employees kept busy taking care of dogs, cats

BY GARY GRAY The Dominion Post

Dana Johnson's typical day consists of eating lunch on the run; wielding a mop in one hand and a cell phone in the other; reluctantly facing off with angry folks whose playmates have been temporarily incarcerated; and, of course, lots of cuddling the homeless — dogs and cats, that is.

She says she works from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Not a chance.

Welcome to the Monongalia County Canine Adoption Center.

"Adoption" is the key word here. That's the end goal. But getting stray or discarded canines and felines from the center's entry point to "adoption row" takes a lot of patience, elbow grease and some tough decision-making.

Come on in. Take a look around.

This is an environment that swings daily, from necessary harshness to delicate tenderness, and from embraces that can be either delightful or downright gut-wrenching.

"It will burn you out pretty fast if you don't have hope," says Johnson, the center's facilities manager.

Man in court on car-bomb charge in London

Marks anniversary of July 7 attacks

Associated Press

LONDON — Impassive and staring straight ahead, an Iraqi doctor was led into court by plainclothes security officers Saturday, the first suspect to appear on charges of plotting to bomb London's entertainment district and Scotland's busiest airport.

Police stepped up security across the British capital, where Prime Minister Gordon Brown laid flowers outside one of the train stations hit two years ago in suicide bombings that killed 52 commuters in the first militant Islamic strike on the United Kingdom.

Bilal Abdullah, a 27-year-old doctor born in Britain and raised in Iraq, was the only person in City of Westminster Magistrates Court to remain seated when the judge entered the room to the customary cry of "All rise!"

Abdullah was asked to stand, and did, as the charge of conspiring to cause explosions was read out. The charge against Abdullah refers to a plot taking place between Jan. 1 and July 1, suggesting prosecutors believe the attacks were planned well in advance.

Stocky, unshaven and wearing a white sweatshirt, he sat expres-

Bomb kills 100 in Iraq

8 U.S. soldiers slain

Associated Press

TUZ KHORMATO, Iraq — A suicide truck bomber blasted a Shiite town north of Baghdad on Saturday, killing more than 100 people, police said, in a sign Sunni insurgents are pulling away from a U.S. offensive around the capital to attack where security is thinner.

The marketplace devastation underlined a hard reality in Iraq: There are not enough forces to protect everywhere. U.S. troops, already increased by 28,000 this year, are focused on bringing calm to Baghdad, while the Iraqi military and police remain overstretched and undertrained.

The top U.S. commander in Iraq, Gen. David Petraeus, told The Associated Press he expected Sunni extremists to try to "pull off a variety of sensational attacks and grab the headlines to create a 'mini-Tet.'"

He was referring to the 1968 Viet Cong and North Vietnamese Tet offensive that undermined public support for the Vietnam War in the United States.

The U.S. military on Saturday also reported that eight American service members were killed in fighting in Baghdad and western Anbar province over two days, reflecting the increased U.S. casualties that have come with the new offensives. ## Sixth-grader suspended for 'love' graffiti

Associated Press

KATY, Texas — Writing "I love Alex" on a school gymnasium wall brought a 12-year-old the same punishment as if she had made terrorist threats.

The Katy Independent School District rated the message, written with a baby blue marker by sixth-grader Shelby Sendelbach, as a Level 4 infraction — the same as for threats, drug possession and assault.

Only murder, gun possession, sexual assault and arson are considered more severe by the suburban Houston district.

For her punishment, Shelby was assigned to an alternative school from Aug. 27 through Dec. 21.

School district spokesman Steve Stanford said the district was just following a state law, saying it requires assignment to an alternative school for graffiti.

Her parents have appealed and a hearing is set for this month. Lisa and Stu Sendelbach said they don't condone what Shelby did but think the punishment is overly harsh.

SURVEY

invited city planner Chris Fletcher and each councilmember to join them at the Morgantown Public Library on Friday to read and tabulate the complete survey results. "What city council decides, that's up to them, but I hope, at least, that they'll listen," Sutter said. Connie Caravaso, 73, of Laurel Street, in Suncrest, hopes they'll listen, too. She said small home businesses will eventually lead to larger ones. "Before you realize it, you get a whole mess of businesses in here and you don't know who's coming and going in your neighborhood." Caravaso said she does craftwork in her home. Though she doesn't sell her work, she would have no problem with a neighbor who did craftwork at home, so long as customers weren't coming to the house. Caravaso said her primary concern was "strange cars in the neighborhood and the extra traffic it causes." But Elsa Nadler, 63, of Oakview Drive, in Suncrest, said a family of three with three vehicles can create as much, if not more, of a problem as a home business on her narrow street. "That to me is more of an obstruction than someone who runs a contracting business out of his house," Nadler said. "It doesn't bother me that people have home businesses, as long as it doesn't interfere with normal traffic. I don't see a terrible problem with it." John Atkins, 66, of Grandview Street, in South Park, said home businesses should not affect the surrounding neighbors. "That they don't have people coming through their door — no impact on the neighborhood — that's the impact that needs to be established," he said. Atkins' wife, Margaret, said the city's proposed changes are too vague and contain no provisions for monitoring home businesses. "This has been very poorly thought out," she said. "They have forgotten about the homeowners who've sunk everything they own into their property."

overnight in the southern city of Basra. In Saturday's attack — among the deadliest this year in Iraq — the truck detonation ripped through the market in the farming town of Armili at around 8:30 a.m., as crowds had gathered for morning shopping. It demolished several dozen old mud-brick homes and shops, burying dozens of people under the rubble, and set cars on fire, survivors said.

While residents and police dug through the wreckage for hours, victims were ferried in farmers' pickup trucks 30 miles to the nearest hospital, in Tuz Khormato. Weeping and screaming relatives searched Tuz Khormato's hospital frantically for word of loved ones. Ali Hussein read the names of victims being moved further north to Kirkuk for treatment. "My cousin died in the explosion, but I don't know the fate of my brother," he said in tears. Abdullah Jabara, deputy governor of Salahuddin province, where the town is located, told Iraqi state television that 115 died — nearly three-quarters of them women, children and elderly — and blamed al-Qaida. Police gave a similar death toll, along with more than 200 wounded, though Tuz Khormato's police chief, Col. Abbas Mohammed Amin, put the toll at 150 dead. The attack's location suggested it was carried out by Sunni extremists fleeing the 3-week-old U.S. offensive centered at the city of Baqouba, 60 miles to the south, on Baghdad's northern doorstep. The sweep aims to uproot al-Qaida militants and Sunni insurgents using the area to stage car-bomb attacks in the capital. But U.S. commanders acknowledge that many insurgents fled Baqouba before the assault, and they may have found easier ground for attacks further north. "Because of the recent American military operations, terrorists found a good hideout in Salahuddin province, especially in the outskirts areas in which there isn't enough number of military forces there," said Ahmed al-Jubouri, an aide of the provincial governor.

Japanese firm developing AIDS vaccine

McClatchy-Tribune

TOKYO — Dनावेc Corp., a venture firm based in Tsukuba, Japan, has begun developing a new AIDS vaccine in cooperation with the International AIDS Vaccine Initiative (IAVI), the world's largest institution for AIDS study and prevention, sources said Saturday. The company's prototype vaccine has been highly effective in animal experiments. Dनावेc plans to improve the product to start clinical tests on humans in about three years. Though medical institutions worldwide are working on a vaccine for AIDS, none has been developed for practical use. If Dनावेc starts clinical trials, its vaccine will be the first Japanese-made product to enter that stage. Dनावेc's predecessor was a company jointly established by an affiliated corporation of the Health, Labor and Welfare Ministry and pharmaceutical firms. Dनावेc owns the patent for a technology that produces vaccines by inserting part of genes of disease-causing microbes into the Sendai virus, which was discovered in Japan. Dनावेc's AIDS vaccine can be sprayed into the nose, stimulating several types of immune cells through the mucous membranes in the nasal passages. Another advantage of the vaccine is that it does not adversely affect normal cells in the body, as the vaccine components do not affect human DNA. When Dनावेc and the National Institute of Infectious Diseases jointly tested the vaccine on monkeys, they discovered that the vaccine not only prevented AIDS infections, but also slowed the reproduction of the virus in monkeys that were already infected. IAVI, Dनावेc's partner in the project, is a New York-based institution that receives major financial aid from donors that include Microsoft Corp. Chairman Bill Gates. IAVI will provide billions of yen for development costs from the stages of designing the vaccine to the application for government approval. IAVI has conducted clinical tests of six types of AIDS vaccines in other countries, including Thailand. However, Dनावेc's vaccine is expected to provide a longer protection period than other vaccines, according to medical experts.

Thompson cooperated with White House during Watergate investigation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Fred Thompson gained an image as a tough-minded investigative counsel for the Senate Watergate committee. Yet President Nixon and his top aides viewed the fellow Republican as a willing, if not too bright, ally, according to White House tapes. Thompson, now preparing a bid for the 2008 GOP presidential nomination, won fame in 1973 for asking a committee witness the bombshell question that revealed Nixon had installed hidden listening devices and taping equipment in the Oval Office. Those tapes show Thompson played a behind-the-scenes role that was very different from his public image three decades ago.

He comes across as a partisan willing to cooperate with the Nixon White House's effort to discredit the committee's star witness. It was Thompson who tipped off the White House that the Senate committee knew about the tapes. They eventually cinched Nixon's downfall in the scandal resulting from the break-in at Democratic headquarters in the Watergate complex in Washington and the subsequent White House cover-up. Thompson, then 30, was appointed counsel by his political mentor, Tennessee Sen. Howard Baker, the top Republican on the Senate investigative committee. Thompson had been an assistant U.S. attorney in Nashville, Tenn., and had managed Baker's re-election campaign. Thompson later was a senator himself. Nixon was disappointed with the selection of Thompson, whom he called "dumb as hell." The president did not think Thompson was skilled enough to interrogate unfriendly witnesses and would be outsmarted by the committee's Democratic counsel. This assessment comes from audio tapes of White House conversations recently reviewed by The Associated Press at the National Archives, in College Park, Md., and transcripts of those discussions that are published in "Abuse of Power: The New Watergate Tapes," by historian Stanley Kutler. In a meeting in the Old Executive Office Building, Baker assured Nixon that Thompson was up to the task. "He's tough. He's 6 feet 5 inches, a big mean fella," the senator told Nixon.

Publicly, Baker and Thompson presented themselves as dedicated to uncovering the truth. But Baker had secret meetings and conversations with Nixon and his top aides, while Thompson worked cooperatively with the White House and accepted coaching from Nixon's lawyer, J. Fred Buzhardt, the tapes and transcripts show. "We've got a pretty good rapport with Fred Thompson," Buzhardt told Nixon in an Oval Office meeting on June 6, 1973. The meeting included a discussion of former White House counsel John Dean's upcoming testimony before the committee. Dean, the committee's star witness, had agreed to tell what he knew about the break-in and cover-up if he was granted immunity against anything incriminating he might say. Nixon expressed concern that Thompson was not "very smart." "Not extremely so," Buzhardt agreed.

sionless in the dock, speaking only to confirm his name and date of birth during the brief hearing. Seven other suspects have been detained over the foiled car-bomb attacks. His lawyers did not seek bail, and judge Anthony Evans ordered Abdullah held at a high-security prison until his next hearing, at London's Central Criminal Court, on July 27. Britain remains on "severe" terrorism alert — the second-highest level — in the wake of the attacks. Police added patrols around London as the city marked the anniversary of the July 7, 2005, bombings with a simple and somber ceremony outside King's Cross rail and subway station on one of the busiest tourist weekends of the summer, with the first leg of the Tour de France, the Wimbledon women's final and the Live Earth concert all under way.

Brown and other government ministers joined survivors and relatives of the dead in laying bouquets and wreaths of flowers at a memorial garden to the victims. More than 700 people were injured in the rush-hour attacks on three subway trains and a double-decker bus. London Mayor Ken Livingstone left flowers and a card reading: "The bombers tried to divide us and they failed." John Falding, who lost his partner Anat Rosenberg in the bus bomb, said terrorists would never win. "The more this goes on, the more they will realize how futile their efforts are," he said. "The more London shows its bravery, the more we show this is our victory." In Glasgow, several hundred people — from Muslims to Quakers, teenagers to trade unionists — demonstrated to voice their opposition to terrorism. "We want to send the message that this country is united," said organizer Osama Saeed, of the Muslim Association of Britain. "It won't be shaken by terrorism." The Glasgow area is home to about half of Scotland's 60,000 Muslims. There are 1.6 million Muslims in Britain.

SHELTER

Some "adopters" appear to be in a giddy, euphoric state. And above the mosaic, large letters spell out: "It's official, we've been adopted!"

But not all animals make it out of the center, and that's one of the harsh realities of how this deal works.

8:30 A.M. Johnson gives a quick tour of the place before getting to work.

First, she introduces Julie Miller, a part-timer who arrives at the center at 6 a.m. to clean cages and feeding dishes, and perform other duties.

"By the time I get here, she's cleaned the dog cages using a chlorinated liquid detergent," Johnson says. "She squeegees everything, and then she goes to the cat room and sterilizes it."

Miller, who has a degree from WVU in dental hygiene and worked as a dental hygienist for eight years, says "the difference in people and animals is that animals are always happy to see you."

"I'd like to work more," Miller says. "I just love animals. I already took one dog home, and I'm tempted to take another if I had a bigger place. People say to me, 'How can you work there; doesn't it break your heart?' And I say: It does my heart good."

Next, it's into a room where cats ready for adoption are kept.

"Today, we have eight cats, but about half are at the veterinarian getting spayed or neutered," Johnson says. "That's Momma, our house cat," she says, pointing to a plump ball of fur strolling by.

The cats are kept in cages stacked three or four high. They're well-provided for, with blankets and plenty of food and water.

Johnson reaches for the door to a particular cage and gently pulls out a feeble-looking, white and gray cat named Kate.

"She shakes and shows signs of some kind of neurological problem," she says. "It's going to need a home where someone has some extra patience."

It turns out someone with Animal Friends of North Central West Virginia is scheduled to come by later to take a look at Kate. The group generally doesn't take strays. But if they think that with special attention the animal might be adoptable, they try to help.

"I love this cat," she says while rubbing her nose on the trembling animal. "Little things like this — when someone comes and helps us — this is one of the things that helps us get through the tough times."

Signs are posted on each cat cage. Some say "keep," while others say "hold" or have dates on them for various treatments. Johnson notes how one cat is apprehensive while another is friendly.

10:00 A.M. Johnson's tour of the center continues at a point near the back of the building, where a new gas chamber is located. Next to that is the incinerator.

"We mainly use the gas chamber for feral cats," she says. "They are wild cats that usually have never socialized with humans, and can rarely be socialized. I don't have enough staff to put a needle in a vein. What you do is you put a noose around them."

side to side to indicate her disaffection for this part of the building.

Then, she makes her way through the part of the center that constitutes a path that begins as an uncertain future for the animals.

This trail begins with a row of cages in which the hounds are generally dirty, loud, unpredictable and on edge. It's the area where dogs are taken when they either are captured or confiscated by wardens, or dropped off by pet owners or by others.

It's the beginning of a tedious process Johnson must endure, in which she feeds the newcomers, washes their bowls and cages, eyes their behavior and tracks their progress.

Her decisions at various points along this trail will ultimately determine whether the animals live or die.

"We have a lot of dogs that come in here — they're so matted they can't even go to the bathroom," she says. "This is the section for the strays waiting to be vaccinated. We hold them for five days and hope their owner will pick them up. The only way we can withhold a pet from its owner is if we know that person has been convicted of cruelty to animals."

Monongalia County Dog Warden Jason Scoles helps Johnson by cleaning the kennels in the center.

Each of the incoming dogs is identified by breed and weighed. If the dog is not claimed after the five-day period, the dog becomes county property.

"After this, I have to make a decision which dogs are adoptable," she says while walking down a concrete floor in front of the cages. "So if we see no real aggression out of them and they stay healthy and friendly, we vaccinate them and hope and pray they don't get sick. We then wait another 10 days to see if they have a reaction to the vaccine. I monitor them the whole time."

However, cats, not dogs, arrive at the center in greater numbers.

"There's been sometimes during the summer when we take up to 50 cats a day," she says. "Come the end of March, it starts. Cats are probably the hardest part of the job. We probably put one down every day during the summer."

On the wall of one of the center's new treatment and grooming rooms, a poster reads, "Older dogs won't give you any crap," referring to a picture of an apparently well-adjusted, housebroken pooch, and the telephone number for the American Humane Society.

Johnson is cleaning this and scrubbing that, hustling in and out of a treatment room or supply room before readying food bowls for the barking dogs.

Huge stacks of bagged food and treats are kept in the supply room — much of it donated by Target. The dogs that "make it through" are, for practical purposes, now shown off in cages where they congregate with their brethren. These cages are set back about 20 feet from a huge glass wall and door through which they can be viewed from afar.

Visitors can walk in and get a closer look. They also can have the dog brought out of its cage to pet and play a bit.

The barking — though playful — isn't as loud and immediate from behind the glass, and potential owners have this spot as place to ponder.

Johnson gives these dogs names. The names aren't meant to be permanent, but doggone it if they don't

Farm bill will be battle over crop subsidies

WASHINGTON — Momentum is building in Congress for overhauling farm subsidies because of tight budgets and increasing enthusiasm for renewable fuels and conservation programs.

Major change will not come easily. The current farm bill, which expires in September, provides payments and other help to supplement farmers' incomes, support crop prices and manage supplies. Any cuts in subsidies will face resistance.

President Bush sought similar reductions upon taking office. But he made little headway in the latest farm bill, which Congress wrote in 2002.

Since then, Democrats have regained control of the House and energy prices have skyrocketed, leading to more calls for ethanol, which is derived from plants. Record prices for corn and other crops have some people questioning the need for subsidies.

The government paid out almost $17 billion in subsidies last year, a drop of more than $10 billion from 2000.

"It's a different dynamic, there's just no doubt about it," Agriculture Secretary Mike Johanns said.

Some lawmakers are rallying around a bipartisan proposal by Reps. Ron Kind, D-Wis., and Jeff Flake, R-Ariz., to wean farmers from government payments. Kind won 200 votes for a similar plan during the debate on the 2002 bill. At the time, one supporter was Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., now the House speaker.

Their proposal would replace subsidies with savings accounts that farmers could use to cover losses when crop prices are low or yields are poor.

Some subsidies would be diverted to biofuels, rural development and conservation programs that pay farmers for leaving land idle.

Rick Ostlie, a North Dakota farmer who is president of the American Soybean Association, said prices may be high now, but farmers will need a safety net if they drop. Kind's savings accounts "aren't going to help the average farmer who is having financial problems," he said.

Lawmakers from both parties who represent farm states expect some overhaul. They note that few extra dollars are available for conservation and energy programs and that Congress has much less money to work with this year. But there is little consensus on what changes are needed.

"There's a very strong but minority viewpoint that somehow you have to protect these largest commodity programs at all costs," Kind said.

President Bush accuses Congress of failing to meet its duties

WASHINGTON — President Bush accused Democratic lawmakers on Saturday of being unable to live up to their duties, citing Congress' inability to pass legislation to fund the federal government.

"Democrats are failing in their responsibility to make tough decisions and spend the people's money wisely," Bush said in his weekly radio address. "This moment is a test."

The White House has said the failure of a broad immigration overhaul was proof that Democratic-controlled Capitol Hill cannot take on major issues. "We saw this with immigration, and we're seeing it with some other issues where Congress is having an inability to take on major challenges," spokesman Tony Fratto said.

The main reason the immigration measure died, however, was staunch opposition from Bush's own base — conservatives. The president could not turn around members of his own party despite weeks of intense effort.

The immigration bill was the top item on Bush's domestic agenda. With its demise, Bush was left to focus on the annual appropriations process and reining in federal spending.

Twelve annual spending bills dole out approximately one-third of the federal budget. They must be passed each year by Congress, before the Oct. 1 start of the new fiscal year, but lawmakers began considering this year's batch just in mid-June. The House has passed half and the full Senate has not yet taken up any.

Afghan civilian deaths really info warfare?

KABUL, Afghanistan — Afghan elders on Saturday claimed that 108 civilians were killed in a bombing campaign in western Afghanistan, while villagers in the northeast said 25 Afghans died in airstrikes, including some killed while burying dead relatives.

U.S. and NATO leaders, however, said they have no information to substantiate the claims, and a U.S. official said Taliban fighters are forcing villagers to say civilians died in fighting — whether or not it is true.

Even the government officials who reported the deaths Saturday could not confirm the claims, which came from dangerous and remote regions inaccessible to journalists and other independent researchers.

DALLAS — The sky was mercifully clear over much of Texas on Saturday after three weeks of drenching rain, as search teams combed the swollen Trinity River for a missing rafter.

Pa. casinos go to court to stop possible shutdown

HARRISBURG, Pa. — Pennsylvania's slot-machine parlors Friday asked a court to prevent the state from closing them, as a budget impasse threatens to force a wider government shutdown.

The request for a temporary injunction to stop the casinos from being closed Monday was filed just before Commonwealth Court closed for the day, and an emergency hearing was hastily called before government lawyers had time to read the suit.

Senior Judge Keith B. Quigley listened to 90 minutes of arguments, and said he would make a decision on the injunction tonight.

seem to suit them.

“I come in and say good morning to these guys each day,” she says. “They know me pretty well by this time. There’s a reason they’re here. A lot of them are looked at as riffraff, but they can be trained. A lot of people just come in on a whim — they just jump up and decide they want a dog.”

Riffraff? Hardly! These guys and gals are the cream of the crop.

Let’s get up close and personal. Hey, there’s Larry, an 8-month-old Labrador retriever mix.

Oops. Larry!? Oh well, dogs will be dogs.

Meanwhile, Iris, a 1-year-old basset hound mix, seems content just kicking back on a nice, warm blanket. The very self-reliant-looking brown and black pooch chews on a toy and looks up from time to time as if to say, “So, what do you want?”

Just then, Clarissa, a 1-year-old Labrador/hound mix, spars for the toy, her tail wagging as she taunts the now disgruntled-looking Iris.

But whatever state they’re in, they all seem to have that longing in their eyes that tells the tale dogs just can’t hide — that “come on, let’s play” look.

And there’s Xena, a 1-year-old hound mix. She’s standing quietly, looking straight ahead with her nose nudging the front of the cage. She’s staring, with that look. But hers is one of quiet, noble stoicism.

They may come across differently and bark in distinctive tones, but they’re all looking for buddies.

Take Ace, for example. The 2-year-old Lab/Aussie mix chews on a rawhide stick as everyone looks on. It seems he’s unaware anyone is eyeing him. Then, there it is, that slow turn of the head, the look and a lunge toward the front of the cage.

“All right! Let’s go somewhere — anywhere!” Ace would say if dogs could talk.

It’s lunch time, but not for Johnson. Instead of eating, she’s scooting from room to room, opening and closing cages, feeding the animals, scrubbing this and cleaning that — all the while sending and receiving calls on her cell phone.

Cynthia Lucas, executive director of Animal Friends of North Central West Virginia, pets Kate while Dana Johnson holds the young cat.

“My hand got caught in a cage,” he explains. “I’ve been bitten and scratched by lots of cats. I’ve been lucky so far with dogs. When they’re in a trap, they can be the best cat in the world, but being caged up tends to freak them out.”

Scotes says Johnson and others who work at the center get a series of three shots that help build their immunity to rabies.

Scotes and Warden Chuck “Tiny” King not only pick up strays, they also take animals back and forth from veterinarians.

“Sometimes we have to go to court,” Scotes says. “I’ve got a civil case next week on a dog that killed some chickens. The owner of the dog refuses to pay for them.”

As Scotes finishes his meal, Johnson is still on the move, feeding dogs, arranging blankets, cleaning cages and talking on the phone to people with inquiries and concerns.

Scotes grins and begins a story. “It was a 220-pound Rottweiler,” he says. “I was at this house, and he broke down the front door, picked up a large pot roast and consumed it in two monstrous gulps.

“But I do think Rottweilers are stereotyped. They don’t get adopted as fast as other dogs. People will pass them by.”

Johnson fires up her computer to update the center’s Web page, where photos and information about adoptable animals are posted.

By this time, a handful of people have come by to look, but none has left with a new friend.

Bob Bell, Monongalia County Commission president, a regular at the center, comes through the front door, and the dogs ready for adoption react by jumping up and barking.

“She does a super job,” Bell says, pointing at Johnson. “I don’t think I could do this.”

Johnson starts taking pictures of animals that will be coming up for adoption after they’re spayed and neutered. She also fills out labels that hang from the cages, letting the wardens and others know if the animals are on special diets, if they should not be fed and if they require specific attention.

She still hasn’t stopped for lunch. Instead, she nibbles on something as she moves from place to place.

Meanwhile, two people have come in and begin pointing at certain dogs.

Cheryl Torsney, WVU’s associate provost for academic programs, has brought along her niece, Lucie Stambor, who is thinking about adopting a dog.

Something draws them to Larry. Johnson puts him on a leash and brings him out into the main room. Larry’s friendly enough, but not enough to spark Lucie.

Next, Lucie asks that Mable come out for a meet and greet.

Nope — not quite. “Probably not this time,” Torsney says. “We already have three, and they all were adopted from here.”

While Johnson takes a phone call, Torsney leans over and whispers, “She’s a community treasure.”

Johnson hangs up. “That was a call about a dog in student housing crying loudly on a porch,” she says. Scotes hits the road to check it out.

County Commissioner Bob Bell plays with one of the dogs up for adoption at the center. Bell is a frequent visitor to the center.

As soon as he’s out the door, the Morgantown Police Department calls to tell Johnson the boxer mix is chained, but is outside in very cold weather with no blanket for warmth. No one is at the residence.

Johnson heads back to her computer but stops to greet two people who have their eyes on Iris.

Johnson tells them about Iris’ characteristics, whether the dog does well with a group and that she is housebroken. No deal. The people decide to come back another day to make their choice.

Back to the computer goes Johnson to edit pictures that are posted each week online and in The Dominion Post.

“Small dogs go the fastest,” she says. “And people have come from as far away as Ohio to pick up a dog here. You know — I think a dog picks you; you don’t pick them.”

Just above her head on her office wall, a bone-shaped sign says, “A dog is just a kid with fur.”

Scotes and King return with the boxer mix that had been yelping on a porch. It appears friendly and glad to be warm.

Johnson looks at the tags and finds a number to call.

“I talked with the owner’s mother and told her we’d picked up the dog,” Johnson says. “I told her that her daughter was going to be cited, and the mother says someone will be down to get it.”

In this case, the owner will have to pay a $20 impound fee and show identification to reclaim the dog. But because a citation has been issued, the owner will have to go to municipal court and could be fined from $100-$500 for cruelty to animals, for leaving the pet in an unsafe environment.

In from the cold walks a family of five.

They step through the large glass door and the 20 feet that bring them to the front of the dog cages. They pet a few dogs, smile and laugh a little, but walk out of the building without adding a new member of the family.

Larry, Mable, Iris, Clarissa and the rest look a little disappointed and bark just a little louder when the family leaves.

Ace stands stiffly, looking straight ahead. The expression on his face is one of mild rejection. “Bummer,” he seems to be thinking.

Johnson stays on the move, updating the labels on cages, hosing down walkways and spraying cleaner on anything that doesn’t move.

She stops to greet the woman who owns the boxer. The woman is angry and says her dog should not have been taken. Johnson runs the rules past the woman, and she eventually pays the impound fee and leaves with her dog.

The somewhat tense situation is followed by a burst of positive energy from Jeremy Hansford, a WVU junior and a volunteer at the center. He’s hanging on to a leashed pooch that’s charging toward the door to go for a walk.

Hansford is one of six people who come to the center during the week to give the dogs a basic physical exam, clean them up and hang on as the dogs get in some outdoor activity.

Remember Kate, the trembling kitty Johnson had grown attached to?

Well, toward the end of Johnson’s day, help arrives for the fragile feline in the form of Cynthia Lucas, Animal Friends of North Central West Virginia executive director.

Johnson wraps Kate in her arms and walks into her office with Lucas. With the door partially closed, the two take turns cuddling the cat and discussing what can be done to find it a home.

After talking for about 20 minutes, Lucas and Johnson emerge from the room. Lucas decides she will take Kate and see if a veterinarian can help diagnose and treat her condition.

Johnson’s eyes water as Kate is loaded in Lucas’ vehicle.

The two women hug.

This must have been what Johnson meant earlier in the day when she talked about getting through the tough times.

Associated Press

PARKERSBURG — Twenty-year-old Army Pfc. Paul Hawkins watched as four Soviet planes forced down an Allied plane.

It wouldn't have happened if he hadn't been where he wasn't supposed to be, said Hawkins, now 78, of Parkersburg.

Hawkins said the pilot flew over a Soviet air force base.

Four fighters came up after him, two on top and two on bottom, he said. They escorted him home and forced him to the ground.

Now retired from the National Guard, Hawkins was part of the Berlin Airlift in 1948, after World War II ended.

The Berlin Airlift began because the Soviet government wanted to force Allied countries France, England and the United States out of Berlin. The Soviet Union controlled all the area around Berlin, so it cut off highways and trains into the city on June 24, 1948.

The Allied countries began flying supplies into the city.

It was the first battle of the Cold War, he said.

Hawkins said no planes were shot down but the weather caused several crashes. About 70 men died during the Airlift, including 31 Americans.

Lt. General William H. Tunner wanted to see it flow like an assembly line, Hawkins said.

Tunner set up a system to have three airplane lanes, two flowing into Berlin and one flowing out of the city. Planes flew three minutes apart at five different heights, Hawkins said.

Bad weather made it difficult for planes to fly sometimes, so Tunner decided to set up a new radar system that allowed the operators to track moving targets.

Hawkins was one of five men who had studied the system and were ready to move. He started setting up the radar system on Nov. 1 after spending 24 hours traveling from the U.S. to Berlin.

He arrived in Berlin on Oct. 31 and was told to start work the next day. Hawkins said a platform had been constructed on a seven-story building. The radar was built on the platform.

The crew wasn't allowed to talk to anyone about the radar, Hawkins said. They made it possible for the operator to pick up the planes as they entered West Germany and the Soviet controlled area.

After the two-month installation process, Hawkins and the four other men maintained the satellite, although they had a lot to learn: they didn't even have spare parts when they started.

He said the radar system he maintained was the first air traffic control system in the world.

The blockade continued until May 1949. The airlift continued until September.

The plan was to have enough supplies so that if the Soviets started the blockade again, there would be time to set it back up, Hawkins said.

Several times Hawkins saw things like the plane forced down.

Once, the satellite started spinning uncontrollably when Hawkins was working on it.

He unplugged it and burned his hand on an open flame, but he knew he had to disconnect the antenna or risk damaging the system.

Hawkins met his wife as a blind date on New Years Eve, 1948. They didn't speak much, since he only knew English and she only spoke German.

He said they both declared they had no plans to marry the other. Two years later, at the earliest possible date, they married and came to the U.S.

Hawkins attended college, then began teaching at West Virginia University at Parkersburg. He retired from that position in the 1990s.

Hawkins said he hopes the German government will have a celebration for the 60th anniversary of the Airlift next year.

Ham radio operators still going strong

Associated Press

FAIRMONT — You could call Chuck McClain a ham. But he'd prefer you call him an amateur.

As an amateur radio operator, McClain has been a licensed amateur radio operator since the mid-1950s, when he was still in high school. His wife, Dawn, is licensed. Their sons, Tom and Jon, have their licenses. His father was licensed, too.

The FCC created amateur radio to provide experts who could offer back up during emergencies. In addition, the FCC acknowledged the ability of the hobby to advance the communication and technical skills of radio, and to enhance international goodwill.

Amateurs are allocated 26 bands (specific groups of frequencies) spaced from 1.8 Megahertz, which is just above the broadcast radio frequencies, up to 275 Gigahertz. Depending on the band, hams can talk across town, around the world or out to satellites in space, and can even bounce signals off the moon.

McClain likes to work in Morse (or continuous wave) code. He doesn't have to; it's not required. He could communicate in packet, radio teletype or PSK.

"We get stuck in our ways," he said with a grin. "When I started out, my mentor brought this old Army surplus piece of equipment that had reel-to-reel tapes. He put them in my room and I listened to them for hours. Apparently they were playing at a high speed. I learned all the letters, 40-50 words a minute, so it came naturally to me."

"If there's horrible lightning static, you can still hear dots and dashes where you might lose a voice message."

He even met some friends as a freshman at Fairmont State College when he started whistling Morse code and somebody whistled it back at him.

After graduating from Fairmont State, he taught in Michigan from 1965-'70, then returned to Marion County.

Couple's plans to move spark family drama

DEAR ABBY: My husband, "Gregg," and I have been married seven years. We have two children. Gregg was recently laid off and we decided we'd like to move to Texas where my brother-in-law and his family live. There is more career opportunity for us there.

The problem is my father and stepmother are against us moving even two hours away, let alone halfway across the country. Even a casual mention of a long-distance move brought my father to anger and tears for fear that he won't see his only grandchildren and me. Abby, my parents have settled down and are happy with their small-town life. How can I get them to understand that this is what we need to do without them making us feel guilty? — CONFLICTED IN SOUTH DAKOTA

DEAR CONFLICTED: As long as you allow your father and stepmother to make you feel guilty, they'll use guilt to influence your decisions. A spouse who is having difficulty finding employment is a compelling reason to move.

My advice to you is to make a list — as long as possible — of the advantages your children will have in a larger community. Refer to it when your father and stepmother react as you know they will. Let them know they're welcome to visit as often as they like, then follow through with your plans.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have a problem.

I'm a bartender in a very upscale restaurant. A girl who works in my husband's office keeps insisting that she and my husband go on a "dinner date" to my restaurant. She thinks it would be cute for me to wait on them.

My husband has no interest in this girl other than professional. How can we let her know that this is really "trashy" and it's not going to happen? (She even offered to buy the dinner!) — APPALLED IN ASTORIA, ORE.

DEAR APPALLED: Your husband's co-worker is either completely lacking in common sense or she has a geranium in her cranium. Continually asking someone on a "date" is sexual harassment. Your husband should tell her that fact and if she doesn't get it, his employer should be informed so he/she can put a stop to a possible lawsuit.

BRIEFS

The Dominion Post

Preston tax office closed Tuesday, Wednesday to move

KINGWOOD — The Preston County Tax Office, in the courthouse, will be closed Tuesday and Wednesday to allow for the move across the street to the courthouse annex (the former WesBanco building).

The tax office will reopen at 9 a.m. Thursday, in the annex.

Sheriff Ron Crites said he is "pleased that this move will put the Tax Office and the Assessor's Office in one location once again, and that is great for our customers."

Morgantown library hosts summer classes

The Morgantown Public Library will host "Long Ago in Lands Far Away" on Wednesday as part of its special summer enrichment classes. Book a trip to the Land of Make Believe with folk tales and trickster tales from around the world.

Meet ogres like Shrek, leprechauns, Anasi the Spider, and Baba Yaga.

Make a fairy tale visor and sticker scene. Make masks, wind-socks and origami. Try your hand at rubber stamping and stenciling. Play games and much more.

This class is for children entering 2nd-5th grades.

There is a $10 charge for each child.

You must register to attend. Classes begin at 10 a.m. and end at 2:30 p.m.

Students must bring a bagged lunch.

Info: 291-7425 ext. 137.

MountainFest seeks entries for chili contest

Wild and Wonderful MountainFest is seeking local chili heads to enter the MountainFest Red Chili Challenge, on July 28, at Hazel Ruby McQuain Park.

The chili-cooking contest is part of this year's MountainFest Motorcycle Rally, taking place July 26-29, in Morgantown. The Red Chili Challenge is a sanctioned district cook-off by the International Chili Society and is open to ICS members only.

New cooks can become a member of the ICS when registering to enter the event. The entry fee is $25 for current ICS members, and $67 for new members.

The first-place winner of the Red Chili Challenge will receive $1,000, second place $500, and third place $250.

The winner qualifies for the 2007 Last Chance cook-off with the opportunity to advance to the World's Championship.

Interested cooks can pick up an application at the Greater Morgantown Convention and Visitors Bureau, 68 Donley St., in the Wharf District, or can download an application from wvmountainfest.com.

Info: Jay Redmond, 292-5081.

Antique tractor, machinery group to meet

The Preston County Antique Tractor and Machinery Association, an organization dedicated to preserving farm heritage, will hold its monthly meeting at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, at the Cow Palace on the Buckwheat Festival grounds.

Anyone interested in attending is welcome. Info: 292-1684.

MEETINGS

Monday
MONONGALIA COUNTY HISTORIC LANDMARK COMMISSION, 7 p.m., County Commission Office, second floor of the Courthouse in room 202.

PRESTON COUNTY COMMISSION, 9:30 a.m., second-floor courthouse offices that formerly housed the assessor. Agenda: 10 a.m., Preston County Health Department Director Denise Knoebel with county pandemic flu plan; 10:15 a.m., Craig Whitehair, Axa Advisors and Cornerstone Group, regarding county employees' health insurance; other business.

times having no closure, not knowing what's going on."

Slaughter keeps his mother's South Park house up, although no one's lived in it for a year. He hasn't changed a thing.

Police assume Rebecca Slaughter made it home from Petco on July 11. The bag of dog food she bought was in her house when police arrived to investigate her disappearance.

Drew Slaughter last talked to his mother July 9 and made dinner plans. Neighbors called him a couple days later after they noticed that his mother's dog, Sheba, had been tied out on her porch for awhile. They didn't notice anything suspicious immediately because Rebecca Slaughter often tied Sheba out on the porch to enjoy some fresh air while she ran to the store.

Drew had to give Sheba away after his mother didn't come back for

Riding for a good cause

Riders leave Triple S Harley-Davidson and hit the road at the start of the second annual Rock Forge Neighborhood House dice run Saturday.

Run proceeds benefit nonprofit

BY J. MILES LAYTON
The Dominion Post

John Smith is a big, burly man who likes to ride his motorcycle for a good cause. The bald gentle giant wears blue jeans, steel-tipped black boots and dark sunglasses and looks every bit like a man who would not need to use a pool stick to win a bar fight. The man is so tough, he was able ignore the pain of having the word "Wildman" tattooed at the base of his neck.

Saturday, Smith joined his fellow bikers to raise money in a dice run for the Rock Forge Neighborhood House.

"It's something to do today," said Smith, 37, of Morgantown, who rode with Beverly Webster, his girlfriend, as his passenger, on his Harley-Davidson Fatboy. "I've been on a couple poker runs before, so I thought I would try this. Seems like the right thing to do, and I like riding."

Alexis McMillen, executive director of Rock Forge Neighborhood House, said bikers roll dice at each stop. Everyone wins a prize, particularly those lucky riders with a high or low roll. The proceeds are used to benefit the food pantry, child care and senior citizens' programs at Rock Forge Neighborhood House.

"This is a way for businesses and local bikers to support our mission," McMillen said. "The bikers enjoy it because they can get out on a sunny day and do what they do best."

Before bikers could rev up their engines, more than $1,000 had been pledged for the second annual dice run. A number of area businesses helped to sponsor the ride. More than 31 riders and passengers participated.

"I went to Rock Forge Neighborhood House as a kid, and later, my kids went there. So, this is a way for me to give back," said Derek Porter, who rode a Harley-Davidson Dyna.

The ride began at the Triple S Harley-Davidson dealership in Morgantown at high noon. The sky was clear, the roads dry, the wind was minimal and the temperature was in the low 80s. Except for an occasional pokey motorist driving, West Virginia's roads were open for business.

Bikers passed barns, aging houses, a couple hillside cemeteries and a few places time for-

WVU Foundation president begins work

'Glad to be here,' Wayne King says

BY J. MILES LAYTON
The Dominion Post

WVU President-elect Michael Garrison is not the only president starting a new job.

Wayne King, president and CEO of the WVU Foundation, began work last week leading the university's main fundraising organization.

"I am glad to be here," King said. "We'll certainly work to become a strong partner with the university and that means President Garrison and I will forge a strong partnership as well."

King takes the reins from David Hamstead, who had been serving as interim president since Duke Perry retired, in January.

"Wayne King has strong fundraising credentials in both the educational and medical fields," Hamstead said. "He is a very congenial individual with great experience and talent. The board feels that he is the ideal choice to lead the foundation to even higher levels of accomplishment. We look forward to working with him."

King said that during his first couple days on the job, he met with staff, made a lot of phone calls to donors and held a breakfast with foundation team members early in the week, so that he could become more acquainted with them.

"I am very impressed with the people I've met," King said.

One of the first meetings King had was with Garrison and WVU President David C. Hardesty Jr., who will be retiring in September.

"I've met Hardesty and Garrison briefly, but I'm certain I can work effectively both during the transition and with president-elect Garrison going forward during his tenure," he said.

King said his vision in the days ahead is to spearhead a capital fundraising campaign that will be bigger than any before.

"It is much too early to tell, but there is a big campaign down the road in the future," he said. "I anticipate it will be larger than the last campaign, which had a $250 million goal last time around."

One person King is likely to miss is Craig Walker, vice president of finance and administration for the foundation. He will become Garrison's chief of staff. Walker has been respon-

Pride to be on display at festival

THE 66TH ANNUAL Preston County Buckwheat Festival will include something new, a chance for the estimated 100,000 festival visitors to take a broader look at Preston County, as presented by those who live here.

A display at the Kingwood Elementary multipurpose room will house the Buckwheat Pride display.

Schools and historic and cultural community-based organizations are invited to present displays about Preston's towns, schools and history, and social, civic, service and cultural groups. Combined projects are encouraged. Each year an area of the county will be in the spotlight.

Buckwheat Festival officials will schedule private presentations in one area, with seating for the public. A 10-foot-square display area will be provided for each exhibit. Costumes are encouraged; creativity is a given. Prizes of $200 will be awarded to the best of pride school display and best of pride non-school display.

Applications are due Aug. 1, and space is limited. Visit the Web site at buckwheatfest.com or call one of the Buckwheat Pride Committee co-chairmen, Susan Miller, 329-2292, or Don Post, 265-0907.

Festival livestock

Shows and weigh-ins are under way for Preston County Livestock Association members who plan to show and sell animals at the Buckwheat Festival. The hog weigh-in will be from 8-10 a.m. Saturday, at the Cow Palace, followed by the preview show. The jackpot steer and heifer show will be July 21.

Members must sign the attendance sheet after the show to be counted as present to fulfill the requirements for the market animal show and sale at the festival.

Soccer registration

Preston County Soccer Club will hold fall registration from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Saturday, at the Kingwood Shopping Plaza, beside Foodland, and at Valley Pharmacy in Reedsville, and from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. at Valley Pharmacy.

The fee is $35 for 4-7-year-olds and $40 for 8-13-year-olds, determined by the child's age July 31. Please bring a birth certificate and a photo, which will not be returned to you. The deadline to sign up is Aug. 1. Info: Bill Robertson, 329-2704; Beth Noss, 290-8435; Mary Smith, 864-6990.

End quote

"I hate seeing kids leaving Preston County Schools, and I think Preston County offers as good an education as any county around. I don't buy some of the arguments parents have, but some parents do have very good arguments. I'm torn in a situation like this. What's best for Preston County?" — Preston County Board of Education President Jack Keim, as the board discussed whether to approve transfers for Preston residents to attend school in other counties. The state board of education has advised Preston to take public comment before changing its transfer policy.

her. A woman from a rescue group in New Jersey loved the well-behaved dog and decided to adopt it herself.

Despite all the setbacks — very few sightings, very few clues — Drew still has hope that his mother, a retired nurse, is out there somewhere.

"I do. I have a strong feeling we'll be in touch again," Drew said. "I just don't know when or where."

Morgantown Police Sgt. H.W. Sperringer said detectives haven't received a tip in the Slaughter case in a long time.

"We haven't gotten anything," Sperringer said.

It frustrates detectives who want to find her.

"It's been a year now."

The only clue police have gotten in the case was received early on. Not long after she disappeared, Slaughter's red Subaru Forrester was found abandoned off a rural road in Garrett County, Md.

The car was in working order and had gas. No one saw Slaughter leave it there. There was no reason she should have been in that area.

"There are a lot of things that don't add up," Drew said. "If she decided to leave, why wouldn't she leave a note? If she did have amnesia, why would she drive and leave her car out there?"

It was a dead end.

Then, police received two tips from people who thought they spotted Slaughter in Pennsylvania — one at a Fashion Bug near Bedford, the other at a Sam's Club in Altoona.

Police couldn't verify either claim.

The reported sightings were a let-down for Drew.

"It raised my hopes, and I wanted to get in my car and drive there myself," he said.

Desperate for answers, Drew turned to a psychic. The woman told him she believes his mother is alive and will meet up with him again.

He hopes it is sooner rather than later.

Rebecca's father, Drew's grandfather, died in December. Drew is now helping take care of his grandmother. He stays busy with work and with his girlfriend and her kids, but it hasn't been easy.

"It's been exhausting, but I'm still hopeful," Drew said. "Something's going to pop up."

"It's got to."

sible for all financial management functions and general administrative needs of the $950 million independent corporation that provides support to WVU. During his 12-year tenure at the foundation, assets have risen by more than $775 million.

"We'll conduct a national search to find a replacement, but first we'll take a little time to evaluate job description and position," King said. "He'll be missed. Craig has served at least 12 years. He was a valuable part of the team."

King was president of the Mercy Foundation, in Des Moines, Iowa, which supports Mercy Medical Center. Before that, he was vice president for development at the Oklahoma State University Foundation. King said he is "very impressed with campus, very pretty — the campus at Oklahoma State University was flat and there were not a lot of trees."

King, 60, said he and his wife, Mary, are still looking for a house in Morgantown. King's daughter, Tammi, who works for ABC News in New York, is visiting with them this weekend. King's son, Michael, and his wife, Martha, have a 2-year-old boy, Simon and they are expecting twins in early October.

got. There was a "horses 4 sale" sign along U.S. 19, but there were no buyers in this caravan. In a few spots, the Monongahela River made an appearance. A tank of gas for a motorcycle can get a cyclist about 150 miles.

The ride twisted along curvy roads to each destination. Bikers sped up and down hills. There were yellow signs that advised what speed was best for navigating sharp turns, but there were few takers who would gear down from 50 mph on a flat or downhill to 25 mph around a turn.

Mark Boden and his girlfriend, Pixie Soberdash, rode together as members of a long column of riders speeding past sleepy valleys and around sharp curves in the mountains.

"We like the curvy roads," said Boden, 50, of Bobtown, Pa. "We cruise along at 40 or 50 mph. When you go downhill, you downshift to keep from using your brakes. Makes for a better ride."

The riders passed places like the Mason Jar Cafe and the Dakota Tavern, but the convoy did not stop for a cold beverage and a throw of the dice until it was deep into Marion County — the first of four stops on its five-county tour. Parked outside the Goal Post nightclub, was a row of choppers lined up close side-by-side like dominoes. Though to some the sight of so many bikes outside any bar is a warning sign, Melissa Veltri, who co-owns the Goal Post with husband Josh, welcomed the bikers and described their place as similar to "Cheers" where everybody knows your name when you come in here."

But, unlike the fictitious Cheers in Boston, the Goal Post had a bit more personality. In a large, cavernous room next to the bar, two inflatable palm trees decorated a stage where a bikini contest had been held the night before. Though there was a wide range of songs available, Ratt's "I Want a Woman" and Ozzy Osbourne's "Perry Mason" seemed to fit the mood perfectly as the bikers relaxed in the air conditioning.

"We've never done anything like a dice run or poker run before, so we thought we'd give it a shot," Melissa Veltri said.

Standing sentry against a wall of another room filled with pool tables, was a plastic sculpture of a life-size Italian chef chained to his wall. The man sported a handlebar mustache and Carolina blue ascot, and he was winking at somebody, who may not have liked the attention. For whatever reason, the chef's right middle finger was reattached to his hand with black electric tape.

Veltri said the bar purchased the chef earlier in the week to remind customers that the Goal Post served food, and maybe a little bit more — a hopeful symbol of things to come for a business that has been open about a year.

"I think he'll be good luck for us," Veltri said.

When the time felt right, the bikers left the bar together and headed down the road to Big Daddy's in Grafton, and later to Smokin' Jack's in Kingwood, before finishing the nearly 175-mile run at Classics 3 Restaurant and Lounge in Sabraton.

"Everyone had a real nice day, enjoyed the route — any fundraiser we do is valuable to us," McMillen said.

Battelle District Fair to hold 3 pageants

The Dominion Post

The Battelle District Fair — held annually in the western portion of Monongalia County — celebrates 80 years Tuesday through Saturday.

Festivities kick off with a parade at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, on W.Va. 7, west of Wadestown, followed by opening ceremonies at 7:30 p.m. The Grand Parade's theme is "Remember When."

W.Va. 7 will be closed at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday to allow parade units to line up. Anyone driving W.Va. 7 east should plan to be through Wadestown by 5:30 p.m. to avoid being delayed by the parade. Info, or to be part of the parade: 662-6412.

Three pageants will be held during the five-day fair. The 2007 Little Miss Battelle District will be crowned at 7 p.m. Wednesday, followed at 9 p.m. by the

Good facilities are essential to proper cattle care, handling

I KNOW I've said it before, but I'm going to say it again: Good handling facilities are absolutely essential for the proper care and handling of cattle. Some of the reasons we need to handle cattle are to spray for flies, de-worm, treat for injuries and administer vaccinations.

The first priority of a good handling facility is for the safety of the workers. Calves born just a few months ago now weigh about 300 pounds. That's quite a bit more than a 200-pound man or a 110-pound woman. An awkward or unexpected lunge by one of these young animals can injure even the most experienced cattle handlers.

The second priority is to provide a way to easily and efficiently maneuver calves and cows for treatment or examination. How many times have some of us, in frustration, used a shovel handle to whack a nicely rounded steer right on the steaks? Not only is this an unacceptable animal handling procedure, but the bruise left on high-dollar cuts of meat has a direct and negative impact on the owner's pocketbook.

Last week, Florita Montgomery, WVU communications specialist, summarized some excellent information from Kansas State University about cattle handling. "Pamper" may be too strong a word, but being "gentle" and "considerate" around your cattle could pay dividends.

Kerri Ebert, Kansas State University Research and Extension assistant for biological and agricultural engineering, says that people working with cattle can make themselves subject to injury if they fail to understand cattle and underestimate the power that cattle have.

Statistically, about 20 percent of reported farm injury accidents involve livestock. Those are just the injuries that are reported, many livestock-related injuries go unreported because they are treated on the farm.

Kansas State Extension agriculture specialists make the following recommendations:

- Use working facilities that are circular to aid in moving the livestock and to prevent animals from congregating in corners.
- Make sure chutes and ramps

have solid sidewalls to help limit animals' panoramic vision and prevent escape attempts.

■ Avoid flapping fabrics or moving objects, such as fans. The unexpected movement may cause an animal to balk.

■ Place rubber bumpers on gates to prevent loud, banging noises.

■ Be sure to securely latch gates and have "no slip" doors to avoid injury to both people and animals.

■ Paint facilities with the same color. Animals may become startled by a sudden change in texture or color.

■ Remove excess boards, wire or any other type of nonessential material from the working area.

Injuries from animals usually occur when animals are frightened. Cattle, for instance, are prey in their natural setting. Therefore, they may perceive humans as predators and sudden movements as predatory strikes.

Always use caution and understand animals' flight zones when handling animals. The flight zone refers to the area surrounding the animal. If something enters that area, the animal might move or flee. Flight zones differ for each species and change depending on how accustomed an animal is to humans.

The following research-based safety measures can help to increase the safety of both handlers and livestock:

■ Because livestock have blind spots, do not approach an animal directly from behind.

■ Avoid sudden movements that may startle and frighten livestock.

■ Avoid loud noises.

■ Remain calm; animals can sense fear or frustration and may act in response to a handler's behavior.

■ Use paddles or flags to guide animals in the right direction.

Dogs may cause injury to animals or themselves in a closed environment. Electric prods may be used on cattle as a last resort. Only use the prods on the rear of animals and only for a second.

■ Understand flight zones and how close — or far away — handlers must be to make animals move.

If you handle livestock, learn about, share and practice these safety steps. For more details about working with livestock and for other farm safety topics, check the National Ag Safety Database (www.cdc.gov/nasd/menu/topic/topic.html) or contact your local WVU Extension Service, County Extension Office.

Garden Tips

■ Black knot is a serious disease of plum and cherry trees. It is caused by a fungus and is characterized by ugly elongated swellings or knots on the limbs.

Spores are carried by wind and rain to the site of infection. Several months are required between infection and appearance of knots. Black knot is destructive and widespread in West Virginia.

All knots on small twigs and branches should be pruned out during the dormant season and burned. Cuts should be made 4 inches below the knots.

Knots on large limbs that can't be pruned can be removed by cutting into the swellings.

In addition to pruning, use of a fungicide is necessary to give good control of black knot. Cleary's 3336 WP made by Dragon, and copper captan, are two recommended fungicides. Always read the label before using any pesticide.

For information on black knot, contact your local extension agent.

■ If you have any houseplants sitting directly in the window, make sure the light is filtered or the plant is moved to a site out of direct sunlight. The window pane intensifies the heat, and you don't want to scorch your plants.

■ Snip off the old flower clusters from rambler roses to encourage them to bloom all summer.

■ If your celery is doing well, tie the stalks together to keep them from sprawling.

Obesity, arthritis tops list of W.Va. health woes

Monongalia probably healthiest county in state

Associated Press

CHARLESTON — More than a third of West Virginia's adults were diagnosed with some form of arthritis in 2005, the highest prevalence in the nation, a new state report says.

The Mountain State also continues to struggle with high rates of obesity, heart disease, diabetes and hypertension, according to the latest Behavioral Risk Factor Survey Report from the state Bureau for Public Health. The report is based on data collected from telephone surveys in 2004 and 2005.

Nearly one-fourth of adults considered their health to be either fair or poor — 23.5 percent in 2004 and 24.7 percent in 2005. That assessment was most common among seniors, those with the least education or those with the lowest household incomes, the report said.

West Virginia's obesity rate jumped from 27.6 percent in 2004 to 30.6 percent in 2005, and was the third-highest rate in the nation both years. Obesity has increased substantially since 1987, the report said.

"Men and women from a wide range of age, education, and income categories contributed to this unhealthy trend," the report said.

Poor nutrition and lack of exercise are prevalent in the state. Eighty percent of adults don't eat enough vegetables and fruits, ranking the state seventh in the nation for this risk factor. About one-fourth of adults — 24.5 percent in 2004 and 28.5 percent in 2005 — were not physically active during leisure time.

Tobacco use also persists in West Virginia. More than 26 percent of adults in both 2004 and 2005 smoked cigarettes, the second-highest rate in the nation in 2004 and the fourth-highest rate in 2005.

However, alcohol consumption is not a big problem. West Virginia ranked 50th in 2004 and 49th in 2005 for heavy drinking. Only 2.9 percent of West Virginia adults reported heavy drinking in 2004. That rate rose slightly to 3.1 percent in 2005, the report said.

More than 22 percent of residents ages 18 to 64 had no health insurance in both 2004 and 2005.

A report released in June by the New York-based Commonwealth Fund said West Virginia would rank

Unhealthy counties

Associated Press

The counties that report the highest percentage of residents in fair or poor health, according to the 2004-'05 Behavioral Risk Factor Survey Report by the state Bureau for Public Health.

1. McDowell County — 45 percent
2. Mingo County — 37.5 percent
3. Wyoming County — 37.4 percent
4. Logan County — 34 percent
5. Boone and Lincoln counties — 32.3 percent as one of the healthiest states in the country and could save millions a year if it reduced the number of adults without health insurance by about 50 percent.

McDowell County was the unhealthiest county in the state, ranking first in such risk factors as diabetes, asthma, high cholesterol, arthritis, obesity and lack of health insurance, the report said.

"The way of life here throughout the generations was to purchase less expensive foods, and fatty foods are cheaper foods," said Cheryl Mitchem, program development director at McDowell County's Tug Valley Health Association, which runs four clinics. "We've been looking at all these factors for years."

Health problems tend to be more severe in the southern counties. Mingo County is first in the state in hypertension rates and the lowest percentage of people who exercise. Wyoming County leads the state in the percentage of smokers, with 40 percent of adults. Wyoming County also has the highest percentage of residents who have suffered a heart attack or stroke.

The healthiest county overall is probably Monongalia, where 15 percent of residents reported being in fair or poor health. Monongalia also reported rates of obesity, cigarette smoking, diabetes and hypertension that were among the lowest in the state.

After progress threatened existence, black bear thriving

Associated Press

CHARLESTON — A half a century ago, schoolchildren across West Virginia helped select the black bear as the state animal, despite the fact there were only about 500 of the bruins statewide.

Now state officials say a change in attitude has helped the animal thrive in West Virginia and surrounding states. The rebound has been a boon to bear hunting enthusiasts as decades-old hunting restrictions put in place to protect the animal have recently been lifted.

The Division of Natural Resources says West Virginia's black bear population now numbers about 12,000 and there have been sightings in all 55 counties.

"In the past ... it was considered a varmint and shot on sight," said Paul Johansen, the DNR's assistant chief in charge of game management. "That perception and attitude has changed dramatically. People view it now as a valuable resource."

Not only is the black bear a symbol of West Virginia, after being officially named the state animal by the Legislature in 1973, it's also seen as an important part of the ecosystem and an important game species, Johansen said.

The black bear, the only bear species in the eastern United States, is actually brown and grows to an average maximum weight of 250 pounds and a height of 4 to 7 feet. It roams freely throughout at least 36 states and Canada.

In the late 1800s and early 1900s, the population started to dwindle as forests were cut for timber or for agricultural purposes. By the 1950s and '60s, there was concern for the bear's survival, and states started taking steps — such as imposing hunting restrictions and establishing protected parks and forests — to save the animals.

Several years ago, West Virginia pushed back its bear hunting season from November to December, which protected females because they were already in hibernation by then, Johansen said.

The black bear is doing so well

the DNR now receives a lot of nuisance complaints from residents whose garbage cans or pet food dishes get raided.

The agency keeps close tabs on the black bear and adjusts hunting restrictions accordingly, which is the best way to control the animal's population, Johansen said.

This fall, the Cranberry Closed Area in the Monongahela National Forest will reopen to hunters. Bear hunting in that area, which consists of 113,000 acres of the Cranberry Wilderness and Cranberry Backcountry, was banned in 1967, Johansen said. Wildlife officials thought resuming hunting would help restore the bear's natural instinct to fear people. There have been many incidents lately of bears wandering into campsites, Johansen said.

NOTICE TO LANDOWNERS

Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. plans to maintain a portion of its pipeline rights-of-way in Preston and Monongalia Counties, WV, by aerially spraying the herbicides Garlon 3A and Escort, which have been extensively tested, approved, and registered by the Environmental Protection Agency and the West Virginia Department of Agriculture. Spraying will begin on or around September 1, 2007.

Questions about the program or alerts about sensitive areas near the pipelines may be directed to the company by calling 1-800-835-7191.

Rights-of-way maintenance agreements between Columbia and landowners may be available in certain circumstances, including to those preferring to accept responsibility for clearing the right-of-way crossing their property, rather than for herbicides to be applied aerially.

Landowners wishing to discuss a maintenance agreement should call 1-800-835-7191. Maps showing the rights-of-way involved are available.

Rights-of-way spraying will be done at or near the following areas:

Line 1804: From Gans Header (above the Laurel Aggregates Quarry) to Bruceton Mill compressor station.

Any questions or comments may be directed to 1-800-835-7191, or by visiting the local office listed below. Comments may also be directed to the West Virginia Department of Agriculture at (304) 558-2209.

Kudos to the rec center for new treadmills

THE REC CENTER has finally eliminated my last excuse for not getting off the couch and onto a treadmill: They bought treadmills with televisions in them.

Now, I can jog and still watch "The Simpsons" at 6:30 p.m. I can go during the day and not miss the "People's Court" or "King of the Hill" reruns in the afternoon. In short, I love them.

And that's a real change. While I usually managed to drag myself onto the cardio equipment a few days a week, I always avoided the treadmills. It was more than the fear that I'd lose my step and fly off the back. I just hated jogging. I hated running. I always preferred the low-impact bikes or elliptical machines, but not anymore. Now, pedaling six miles on a bike while reading a magazine just seems boring compared to running while watching "Top Chef" reruns on Bravo.

Normally, I'm against any kind of excess or opulence — especially when it comes at the cost of our tax dollars. But really, these machines aren't super-expensive. And studies have shown that mixing entertainment with exercise makes people exercise more, or in research speak, "the presence of audiovisual equipment creates significantly improved usage rates by participants over similar equipment without audiovisual equipment."

I think overall, that's a good thing.

Parking rates rising

WVU increased parking costs this week — a lot. OK, it might not seem like raising the MountainLair garage from 50 cents an hour to 75 cents an hour is that big — but do some simple math and you see that the rates have gone up by 50 percent (the other paid lots have gone from 25 cents an hour to 50 cents).

I understand increases if they're needed to cover additional costs. The postal service does it all the time, but they're smart enough to do it in small increments through the years. WVU's increase is akin to the postal service deciding that next year, it needs to raise the cost of a stamp from 41 cents to 82 cents. Sound ridiculous? It is. Have WVU's parking costs gone up that much? Were officials caught off guard and suddenly need to drop a large increase on us? For some reason, the word "arbitrary" comes to mind when I think about this rate increase.

What's more, at least in the 'Lair garage, you no longer have the option of buying just a half-hour block of time — the minimum is now an hour. I was always willing to pay a quarter if I had to just make a quick stop on campus, but now, that quick stop will cost me three times as much.

I guess now I'll make the extra effort to park in the city lots, pay less and walk a little further.

Not everyone has the opportunity to travel overseas, but sharing images and experiences with people across the Jake Oyler, a graduate student in WVU's College of Business and Economics masters of business administration program, kept a blog about his travels throughout China in June.

"In the MBA program, each student is required to take an international trip," Oyler said. "You have a choice of different places, such as Italy, Germany, and Poland, but I chose China."

The motivation for blogging came from a need to let family members know daily events and spread the word about traveling.

"I wanted my own family to see what I was experiencing. I could easily share 10 to 15 pictures," Oyler said. "There was a list of people to e-mail home, and it just kept getting longer. This way we could e-mail, and people across the world could see."

As an MBA graduate, Oyler's international travel could be beneficial to any future career plans due to China's rapid increase in business.

"China is the center of the future business world and not a lot of people know it, Shanghai especially," he said. "No country is growing faster. On my resume, I make sure it's known that I'm comfortable with China and getting around in it because it has everything to do with my future career. My plans are pretty open, but I hope to interact with finance companies and do some sort of executive employee training."

Bonnie Anderson, associate director of graduate programs at the College of Business and Economics, said the international traveling program can be life-changing for graduates.

"For many students, this is the first time they've traveled out of the country. The faculty has so many connections, and the students tour sites most people wouldn't have access to," Anderson said. "The combination of tourism and business consumer behavior is a way for students to experience another culture's life business-wise, and let them see that traveling isn't as daunting to pursue."

Anderson's involvement in the program allows her to relay her travel knowledge to those leaving the country for the first time.

"Last year's director encouraged me to go to China and it was amazing," she said. "Now I know so much more in recruiting for the program, and counseling the students before they go. When they come back, you can see the positive impact the trip has made."

Alexander flying high this summer

PITTSBURGH

THOUGHTS AND OBSERVATIONS from a night of the Pittsburgh Basketball Club:

■ Joe Alexander's popularity is transcendent. He didn't attend Monday after tweaking an ankle in a workout earlier in the day and his absence disappointed people hoping to get a look.

One person asked where Alexander was and learned of the injury. "I would have guessed it was his elbow," the man said.

Apparently Alexander has been dunking. A lot.

"I call him 'Superman,'" freshman Will Thomas said. "It seems like he can fly."

■ Alexander needs a nickname. We need to get moving on this.

■ WVU will be able to press next season, in part because of depth, but also because of Jacob Green.

Green is a 6-foot-9 (at least) center who redshirted as a freshman last year. In his game Monday, he blocked seven shots, including four in transition, which is a necessity in a press. A shot-blocking center who can run the floor and erase and alter shots allows his teammates to take more chances and, in turn, get more steals. "He gives them a different look," Pitt guard Ronald Ramon said.

■ It's really odd to see Pitt and WVU players as teammates.

"It's weird being all buddy-buddy with them," said Jamie Smalligan, who teams with Pitt's Keith Benjamin. "It's not like you dislike them, but you don't particularly like them, especially after they beat you twice this year."

■ WVU will go ... eight deep early next season. Not five starters plus three reserves. Five starters plus eight reserves. At least until the head coach, Bob Huggins, figures out who he has and what they can do.

Yes, it sounds odd, but consider this. A starting lineup contains, say, Darris Nichols at point guard, Alex Ruoff at shooting guard, Da'Sean Butler at small forward, Alexander at power forward and Smalligan at center.

Well, somehow Wellington Smith isn't a starter, which is a good sign, if nothing else. Joe Mazzulla would be Nichols' backup and Green is the only other true center on the roster. Thomas and fellow freshman John Flowers are going to play. Because they can. "They're exciting," Jonnie West said.

That leaves two redshirt freshmen, West and Cam Thoroughman, who demand an audition, plus shooter Devan Bahwinkel.

■ It's entirely possible WVU could use this lineup next season: Thomas, Ruoff, Butler, Alexander and Smalligan. That would be 6-foot-5, 6-6, 6-7, 6-8 and 7-0.

Then again, it could be Mazzulla, Nichols, Butler, Smith and Alexander, too. That'd be 6-2, 6-2, 6-7, 6-8, 6-9.

With depth comes the luxury of versatile combinations that will allow the Mountaineers to play different ways and adapt to different opponents.

Remember, everyone but Flowers and Thomas learned the unique style of former coach John Beilein. Everyone will now learn the Huggins' style.

Of course, all that talk of 13 players will be chopped down because college teams go with eight or nine guys. In rare occasions, it's 10. Fortunately for the Mountaineers, many of their eight, nine or 10 can play multiple positions, which would still allow them to vary styles on offense and defense.

"The good thing about the players coach Beilein brought in is they're all versatile and can do different things," Smith said. "We can be really flexible next year because of that."

13 WVU players hone skills in Pittsburgh Basketball Club

PITTSBURGH — In the first 12 years the Pittsburgh Basketball Club existed, it did so as a small summer league with an exclusive membership of high school teams. It began in 1994 with eight teams, but carried on through the years while developing a reputation that allowed it to expand to 90 teams at eight sites this summer.

So respected was this institution that Pitt men's coach Jamie Dixon approached the club founder, John Giammarco, one day last year to ask a question.

"Why don't you do one of these for college players?" Dixon asked.

Giammarco had no answer. He began to explore the possibility.

"One thing quickly led to another and I started to put the process together," Giammarco said. "A week later, his sister passed away. I kind of dropped it. I figured this guy had more important things on his mind than a summer league."

About a week before the league was supposed to begin, Giammarco received a phone call.

"We ready to go here?" the caller asked.

It was Jamie Dixon.

Within days, the Pro Am division, a league open to Division I, II, III and junior college players, as well as players with ties to the area who completed their eligibility or played in Europe, debuted with great reviews.

"Last year was kind of a nice cookie cutter thing for us," Giammarco said.

"This year, we secured a better field and a more accessible venue and we think we'll have a better league than we did when we started this last year."

This year, the league has 13 players from West Virginia University — including every scholarship player other than Darris Nichols, who is in Taiwan playing for Athletes in Action in the William R. Jones Cup. There are 20 other Division I players in the six-team league, including 11 from Pitt.

"It's great competition," WVU point guard Joe Mazzulla said. "You get to go out and run up and down the floor and have fun. You're getting better just by playing. Every teammates with incoming freshman Will Thomas. Mazzulla and Cam Thoroughman are teammates with incoming freshmen John Flowers and Cameron Payne, a walk-on from Charleston's George Washington High.

Only three dates remain on the schedule. Games will be played at 7, 8 and 9 p.m. July 9, 11 and 16 at the Greentree Sportsplex.

"There's top-notch talent, but what you have to keep in mind is that this is summer basketball," Giammarco said.

"You're not going to see the fluid offense and the defensive complexities you'll see in March. But it's something different and it's something we think the players really like."

player knows his strengths and weaknesses. This is an opportunity to work on those things. If you make a mistake, who's going to yell at you? This is where you concentrate on your overall game."

The league has NCAA certification, which means it must obey a strict set of the NCAA's rules.

One says no summer league team can have more than two returning players from a Division I school on the roster.

For example, Jonnie West and Da'Sean Butler are teammates, as are Jamie Smalligan and Joe Alexander and Jacob Green and Alex Ruoff. All are returning WVU players.

However, the rule does not cover incoming freshmen, transfers and walk-ons.

Returning players Wellington Smith and Devan Bahwinkel are

'The best way to get better'

Tough competition leads to improvement

BY MICHAEL CASAZZA
The Dominion Post

PITTSBURGH — Jamie Smalligan is seated on the floor along the sideline, legs fully extended forward with both arms placed behind him. He's trying desperately to stretch his back after pulling a muscle a few days earlier.

He's still sweating, but breathing calmly, a few moments after finishing his game in the Pittsburgh Basketball Club's Pro Am summer league. As he arcs his back, he comes to grips with the fact he played against former University of Southern California All-American Sam Clancy, Jr. A 6-foot-7, 240-pound forward who played professionally in South Korea last year, Clancy Jr. challenged Smalligan from tip to buzzer.

"It was good," Smalligan said. "You get tired of playing against one another in open gym. Here, you get to mix it up against different players. You get to play against good guys you normally wouldn't get to."

Suddenly, Cam Thoroughman, a teammate on the West Virginia University men's team, drives hard to the basket and draws a foul.

"Good take, Cam!" Smalligan shouts.

Smalligan then points out that the game on the floor features Thoroughman, Joe Mazzulla, John Flowers and Cameron Payne on one team and Wellington Smith and Will Thomas on the other. Together, those five played 406 minutes for WVU last year — 269 for Mazzulla and 137 for Smith. Thoroughman is a redshirt freshman, Thomas and Flowers are incoming freshmen and Payne is a walk-on incoming freshman.

"Only two of those guys played last year, and they really didn't get to play that much," Smalligan said. "Now they're here and most of them are in the starting five. That gives them confidence to go in and see how they can play against this competition. They can work on stuff in the games and improve themselves individually."

And that's pretty much the pur-

WIMBLEDON, England — Improbable as this Wimbledon title might have seemed, Venus Williams knew it could happen.

Far away as that trophy might have appeared only last week, Williams knew she had the game and the grit to grab it.

Oh, how her serves and strokes sizzle on the grass of Centre Court.

With a dominant run through the latter rounds, Williams became the lowest-ranked woman to win Wimbledon, beating Marion Bartoli of France 6-4, 6-1 Saturday for her fourth championship at the All England Club.

"I was really motivated because no one picked me to win. They didn't even say, 'She can't win.' They weren't even talking about me," said Williams, who reached No. 1 in 2002 but entered Wimbledon ranked No. 31. "I never would doubt myself that way."

Even after missing time with a left wrist injury? Even after being two points from defeat against a teenager ranked 59th in the first round? Even after trailing 5-3 in the

Nemesis Nadal stands in way

WIMBLEDON, England — Roger Federer sneaked a peek at Bjorn Borg in the Centre Court stands, then carried on with the business at hand.

One eye on the past, one on the present.

Troubled little in a straight-set semifinal win Saturday, his 33rd consecutive victory at Wimbledon and record 53rd in a row on grass, Federer strolled into what amounts to a two-sided challenge in the final.

Today, Federer will try to beat his present-day nemesis Rafael Nadal, in order to equal past star Borg's mark of five straight Wimbledon championships.

"It is tricky when you see him sitting there, because he is a living legend," Federer said, sounding something like a teen who spotted his favorite rock star. "I have so much respect for him that it is great that he's here. I hope I can do the job (today)."

Because all the rain during the tournament jumbled the schedule, Federer's quick semifinal was followed by the women's final Saturday. Under a blue sky dotted with puffs of clouds, Venus Williams claimed her fourth Wimbledon title with a matter-of-fact 6-4, 6-1 victory over Marion Bartoli of France.

At No. 31, she's the lowest-ranked women's champion at Wimbledon, and Bartoli is ranked only No. 19. In contrast, just like last year at the All England Club, and the past two years at the French Open, the men's championship will be decided by No. 1 vs. No. 2, Federer vs. Nadal, Roger vs. Rafa. Each of those earlier Grand Slam finals went four sets, with Federer winning on the grass, and Nadal winning on the clay.

"Sure, he's the favorite. No one has any doubt about this," Nadal said, ignoring his 8-4 career record against Federer. "But I'm going to try my best, no?"

One would assume he also will have to be at his best to have a chance on this surface against Federer, someone so talented on the court and so universally well-liked off it that Borg said Saturday he wouldn't mind seeing the Swiss star equal his 1976-80 reign at Wimbledon.

Federer gave himself a chance by beating No. 12 Richard Gasquet of France 7-5, 6-3, 6-4 in a semifinal that was competitive for a set. Nadal advanced when No. 4 Novak Djokovic of Serbia quit because of an infected blister on his left little toe while trailing 3-6, 6-1, 4-1.

Here's how relaxed Federer was against Gasquet, a 21-year-old playing in his first Grand Slam semifinal. Federer glanced at the scoreboard during changeovers, keeping track of what was happening in Nadal-Djokovic.

Federer had noticed Djokovic was trying to deal with his foot problem in the locker room and later said he was surprised Nadal dropped the opening set. Federer, too, was in danger of losing his opening set against Gasquet, who knocked off No. 3 Andy Roddick in the quarterfinals after falling behind 2-0 in sets.

There were two key sequences in Federer-Gasquet, and the first came in the 11th game. With Federer serving at 5-5, Gasquet smacked a cross-court forehand winner to earn two break points at 15-40 — one point from serving for the set.

But Federer responded with all the skill of a 10-time major champion and the savvy of, at 25, a relative veteran. First came one of his 20 aces, on a corner at 127 mph, to erase one break point. Then came a forehand winner down the line to erase the other.

Swiss rider wins Tour prologue

BY JAMEY KEATEN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — Under a cloud of doping and suspicion that threatens all of cycling, Switzerland's Fabian Cancellara won the prologue of the Tour de France as the sport's premier event began Saturday with heavy security and a distinct British accent.

Cancellara, the world time-trial champion who also won the Tour prologue in 2004, completed the 4.9-mile race through downtown London in 8 minutes, 50 seconds. He is strictly a time-trial rider and is not expected to compete for the overall title in the three-week race.

"I am really happy, that's for sure," said Cancellara, who will wear the leader's yellow jersey for today's first stage from London to Canterbury. "I will do the maximum to defend it."

Andreas Kloeber of Germany was 13 seconds behind in second place, followed by George Hincapie of the United States, 23 seconds behind the leader. Britain's Bradley Wiggins, looking to bring the home fans a victory, was fourth.

With cyclists zooming past such landmarks as Parliament and Buckingham Palace and through Hyde Park, the 189 riders set off one by one in the race against the clock.

The race started two years to the day since suicide bombers killed 52 people on London's public transit network and as the country confronts a new wave of terrorism.

At least 4,500 officers from London's Metropolitan Police provided security, along with officers from other forces and a small unit of the French gendarmerie. The last time the Tour came to Britain was in 1994, when an estimated 2 million people crowded the route.

Saturday's ride took place on a cloudy day with patches of sunlight, beginning a 2,120-mile trek that will feature six mountain hikes, three summit finishes and two individual time trials.

Stuart O'Grady of Australia took a spill after hitting a straw barrier coming out of a turn, losing time as he hopped on a new bike that was delivered from a trailing support car.

final set against someone ranked 71st in the third?

There really wasn't a smidgen of surprise that she once more got to clutch the Venus Rosewater Dish, as the Wimbledon champion's plate happens to be known?

"For me? No," she said. "I just have to go out there and execute. I have the experience and everything to do it."

It was similar to the performance turned in by Williams' younger sister Serena in January, when she won the Australian Open while ranked 81st. Clearly, rankings mean nothing when it comes to the Williams siblings. Nor does recent form.

If they are in a tournament, they can win it.

"As long as we're fit," the 27-year-old Williams said, "we just have so much more to give on the court."

Bartoli, who hits two-fisted forehands and backhands, learned that lesson quickly.

She hadn't faced Williams anywhere, let alone on grass — where balls skid more than they bounce — and Bartoli quickly discovered it was like nothing she'd ever experienced on a tennis court.

By the end, she was flexing her wrists and shaking her hands, trying to alleviate the sting from Williams' serves at up to 125 mph.

"I'm not playing against girls every day hitting the balls like this," Bartoli said. "I mean, it's not possible to beat her. She's just too good."

Similar has been said about top-ranked Roger Federer, who will bid for a fifth consecutive Wimbledon title in the men's final Sunday against No. 2 Rafael Nadal. Federer beat Richard Gasquet in a straight-set semifinal Saturday, while Nadal advanced when Novak Djokovic stopped because of a toe injury.

Pitt player expects WVU to push ball

With Huggins in charge

BY MICHAEL CASAZZA

The Dominion Post

PITTSBURGH — For the past few seasons, no one has defended West Virginia's men's basketball team as well as Pitt. And perhaps no individual player has had as much success as guard Ronald Ramon, who has a knack for containing perimeter players.

Granted, some of the success came from familiarity. Ramon and the Panthers played WVU seven times the past three seasons. Over time, they familiarized themselves with WVU's faces and philosophies.

"You see some of the same plays and get used to what they're going to run," Ramon said. "We knew they were going to be a smart team coming in and they'd play hard and hustle and never quit. They could go out and compete with anybody even though they weren't as athletic or as powerful as other teams. Their mindset was to play smart and emphasize the fundamentals."

Ramon, entering his senior year at Pitt, is part of the Pittsburgh Basketball Club's Pro Am summer league. He's teammates with WVU's Da'Sean Butler and Jonnie West, but has also watched the other 11 Mountaineers in the first two weeks of the season.

Ramon anticipates changes when WVU plays for its new head coach, Bob Huggins, next season. The advantages of knowing the opponent so well will disappear.

"I think it's going to be a little different," he said. "They're probably going to push the ball more and the players will have more liberty to go 1-on-1."

Ramon noted an aggressiveness common to many of the WVU players, although it's common to all the better players in the league. It's what separates the players who are there to get better from the players who are there to simply be there. And while he repeated that WVU's past teams were always aggressive and, in many cases, fearless, he predicted those traits would come across differently with Huggins in charge.

"Next year, I'd think they'll have an opportunity to show a little more skill individually," he said. "Before it was more of a team thing. Now it might be more about what each individual brings to the table."

The summer league is a perfect place to showcase and sharpen those skills. Rosters are a mix of mostly Division I, II and III players. The skill level fluctuates and play typically funnels into individual displays.

The players who earn the loudest 'oohs' and draw the most 'aahs' do so with determined drives, streak shooting and fancy finishes.

"They're hungry, especially for a summer league," said Pittsburgh Basketball Club founder John Giammarco. "They play really hard, and if they continue to play hard for Huggins, they're going to be a nice team."

Todd Flint/The Dominion Post

John Flowers looks for a teammate as Will Thomas defends in a summer league game in Pittsburgh. Flowers and Thomas will be teammates at WVU this season.

It's all about respect for WVU rookies

Thomas, Flowers out to earn it

The Dominion Post

PITTSBURGH — The way the story is told by his high school coach, Leon Hines, it's been a long time since anyone has left a message on Will Thomas' cell phone.

By the time he had put the fantastic finishing touches on a junior season in which he averaged 19.2 points, 11.7 rebounds, 8.3 assists, 4.2 steals and 1.5 blocks per game for Cleveland's Shaw High, Thomas was almost disturbingly popular among reporters, recruiting analysts and college coaches.

So when Thomas got his latest cell phone, he addressed the problems he had with the crazy amount of voice-mail he was receiving.

"I never set it up," Thomas said. The phone rang and rang throughout the day. Thomas would answer when interested, but he never had to return any messages.

"During the height of recruiting, he pretty much said, 'Call coach Hines. I just want to have a normal senior season,'" Hines said.

That was the plan, but it wasn't the outcome. Thomas broke his right leg early in his senior season and didn't play again before signing with West Virginia University in April as the first recruit for new head coach Bob Huggins.

All of that makes his participation in the Pittsburgh Basketball Club's Pro Am summer league so intriguing. He and fellow incoming freshman John Flowers are two of the 13 Mountaineers in the league and they are doing what they can to take advantage of the opportunity.

"I'm trying to make a stand and let everyone know I'm here," Thomas said.

It's the first true test and showcase for the freshmen. They've played pickup games in open gym and have given their WVU teammates an idea of who they are and what they can do. The summer league is a different scenario.

"It gives them an opportunity to see what it's like because it's a big step between high school and college," center Jamie Smalligan said. "This is not as competitive as college, or as physical, but it's definitely a step up from what they were used to seeing the last few years."

“I'm trying to make a stand and let everyone know I'm here.”

Will Thomas
Incoming WVU freshman

Monday night, for example, Flowers squared off with Pitt's Sam Young, the player who has a hobby of tormenting WVU.

"He's a hell of a player, real strong and fast," Flowers said. "It's good for me just to get a feel for what the competition is like going against college players."

Thomas is a 6-foot-5 point guard with a flair for the flashy. He tries and often connects on passes that might normally be discouraged, but no one doubts his vision.

"I remember one time we played together in open gym when every pass he threw me was a dunk," Flowers said. "I love the way he plays."

Thomas said he is about 85-percent recovered from the broken leg and that he still lacks the explosion he once possessed. However, he doesn't lack any of the assertiveness he needs to play the position.

"You can tell he has a good game," point guard Joe Mazzulla said. "He's got talent. He's a good passer and can be a great point guard. He's going to help us a lot."

Flowers seems likely to make an immediate contribution. He can play anywhere on the wing and do just about anything required. A 6-7 forward, he averaged 17.8 points, 13.2 rebounds and 6.6 blocks and was named first-team All-Metro by The Washington Post this past season.

He can shoot from the perimeter and prefers to dunk when he gets to the basket. He uses a noticeably wide wingspan to rebound and block and alter shots.

"He's a great athlete," Smalligan said. "And he's long. He's probably the longest guy on our team. He blocks shots you didn't even know he could get to."

Appleby holds 2-shot lead

Associated Press

BETHESDA, Md. — A mammoth gallery watched tournament host Tiger Woods make par on 15 of 18 holes, a round that was inches away from being something spectacular.

A much thinner crowd — as in, "C'mon, there's plenty of space along the ropes" — followed the day's final group and witnessed an eventful round from Stuart Appleby, who roller-coasted his way to a two-stroke lead Saturday over K.J. Choi with one round to play at the AT&T National.

Woods, meanwhile, rued what could have been. Putt after putt missed by just inches — a 37-footer at No. 2, a 6-footer at No. 3, a 21-footer at No. 13, a 14-footer at No. 14. The result was a 69 that gave him a 208 total and tied for eighth — seven shots off the lead.

"I turned a 63 or 64 into a 69 very smoothly," Woods said.

That's no exaggeration. Woods had six birdie putts that stopped less than a foot from the hole, and two more that settled less than 2 feet away.

Appleby shot 2-under 68 on a hot and humid afternoon at Congressional Country Club. For every breathtaking iron shot — such as the approach to 5 feet at No. 3 — there was a hole such as No. 12, when the Aussie found the rough with his tee shot and three-putted for a bogey.

Appleby's round included five birdies, three bogeys and par saves such as the nervy 10-foot putt at the 18th.

"Running the treadmill gets boring. Running sprints gets boring," Smalligan said. "This is the best way to get better."

Thirteen Mountaineers are looking to make the most of the occasion. In fact, before the league even started, the players made a pact they would not guard one another in the games.

"It wouldn't do us any good," Smith said. "We play together all the time in open gym and we're kind of used to one another by now. One of the reasons we're here is to go against different players. It would defeat the purpose to go against one another here."

Sometimes it's inevitable, like when Mazzulla is in transition and Thomas slides in to take a charge. Of course, Mazzulla is the first to offer a hand to help his opponent — and teammate — to his feet. Other times, the players have no choice and Smith simply has to post up against Thoroughman. Yet they chuckle as they head the other way.

"One of the reasons we're so successful is because of the camaraderie and how close we are," Mazzulla said. "We just have a lot of fun together. That's one of the reasons we work so hard. We enjoy being together."

This league is no different as the Mountaineers progress toward what should be a very solid season. Everyone has a purpose. Smalligan gets chances to play against quality post players. Mazzulla and Smith get to be in charge for most of the game. Joe Alexander, Da'Sean Butler and Alex Ruoff emerge as key players on their teams.

Those scenarios will reappear during the season.

Flowers, Thomas and Payne experience the jump in competition. Devan Bawinkel finally gets a chance to play after missing 14 of the final 15 games this past season. Thoroughman, Jonnie West and Jacob Green get to play after sitting out all of their first seasons.

"I haven't had any competition in a year," Thoroughman said. "It's still weird to play against other people. The games we play in the rec center don't compare to this. You're so relaxed playing against your own guys. You don't have to worry about how you play. You just keep playing. This is the best way to get back into the game."

Cubs cool off Bucs, 7-1

Chicago records 14 hits in romp

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Ted Lilly pitched neatly into the eighth inning, Alfonso Soriano got three hits and the Chicago Cubs won for the 12th time in 15 games, beating the Pittsburgh Pirates 7-1 Saturday night.

Despite going their eighth straight game without hitting a home run — their longest such drought since 1999 — the Cubs scored plenty. Chicago finished with 14 hits, all in the first six innings.

Ronny Paulino had three hits for the Pirates, who had a four-game winning streak snapped.

Reds 5, Diamondbacks 4

CINCINNATI — Slumping Norris

Hopper singled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning, and the Cincinnati Reds overcame another bullpen meltdown to beat the Arizona Diamondbacks.

Eric Byrnes' three-run homer off Reds reliever Todd Coffey tied it in the top of the eighth and reminded the booing crowd of 34,410 why manager Jerry Narron was fired a week earlier. A rally started by the game's featured player helped pull it out.

Padres 8, Braves 5

SAN DIEGO — David Wells was ejected in the fourth inning for arguing balls and strikes, and Atlanta's Jo-Jo Reyes didn't last much longer in his big league debut.

The San Diego Padres beat the Braves behind home runs by Mike Cameron and Khalil Greene and some nice contributions from new left fielder Milton Bradley.

Angels 2, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Fill-in first baseman Miguel Cairo made two errors on one play in the 13th inning, allowing the Los Angeles Angels to edge the New York Yankees after a spirited pitchers' duel between Roger Clemens and All-Star John Lackey.

Cairo, subbing at first for ailing Andy Phillips, made three of New York's five errors, its most in nearly five years. Cairo singled in the bottom of the 13th and reached third with one out, but Francisco Rodriguez (2-2) struck out Melky Cabrera and retired Derek Jeter on a close force-out with runners at the corners.

Mariners 4, Athletics 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Felix Hernandez held Oakland scoreless for a second straight start and Adrian Beltré homered for the third time in two games for Seattle.

Coming off a 5-for-5, two homer night Friday, Beltré helped Seattle make short work of Rich Harden in his return to the Oakland rotation by hitting a three-run homer in the second inning. Harden (1-2) couldn't make it out of the third, leaving with a 4-0 deficit after intentionally walking Beltré.

Indians 9, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO — Casey Blake hit a three-run homer and Fausto Carmona won back-to-back starts for the first time in almost two months for Cleveland.

Blake's homer, his second in as many days, was one of four by the Indians, who also got solo shots from Victor Martinez, Grady Sizemore and Trot Nixon.

White Sox 3, Twins 1

CHICAGO — Mark Buehrle pitched eight shutout innings to cool off Minnesota's sizzling offense and Paul Konerko hit a two-run homer for Chicago.

The White Sox's victory came a day after they were pummeled in a day-night doubleheader by the Twins, losing 20-14 and 12-0.

O's release House from his contract

Was hitting .296 for Norfolk

Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — Nitro native J.R. House — a football standout in high school and a former backup quarterback at West Virginia University — has left a minor-league team affiliated with the Baltimore Orioles.

House, a catcher batting .296 with 48 RBIs on the team's Triple-A affiliate, was released from his contract, the Baltimore Sun newspaper reported Saturday.

His contract contained a provision allowing him to be released from the Norfolk Tides if he wasn't on the major league roster by July 1. He last played for the team on July 2.

The Sun cited unidentified team officials saying House was a good hitter but didn't have a strong enough arm to be a major-league catcher.

House played briefly in the major leagues for the Pittsburgh Pirates and the Houston Astros, but was hampered by repeated injuries.

One of the most accomplished quarterbacks in U.S. high school history, he once held the national record for career passing yards with 14,710.

Although drafted by the Pirates out of high school, he eventually played as a backup quarterback for WVU in 2005, behind starter Patrick White — who was himself drafted by the Anaheim Angels, but gave up baseball for football.

Saab's pitching, hitting lift Post 2

To 11-1 beating of Cumberland

BY RACHEL SMITH
The Dominion Post

It wasn't an easy win, but it wasn't a nail biter of a game either. For Morgantown American Legion Post 2 pitcher Andrew Saab, every game he starts is a test of both mental and physical strength. Saab does what many pitchers in this league don't. He starts as a pitcher and also hits — and does both very well.

Post 2 brought its record to 25-3 Friday after defeating Cumberland, Md., 11-1, in eight innings. Saab, Jedd Gyorko and Scott Dicken led the team with runs, with Saab and Dicken each scoring two runs and Gyorko racking up three. Ryan Watts, Zach Nair, Bryant Woods and Spence Fogarty each scored a run to round out Post 2's 11 runs.

"Andrew has hit for us the past two years and pitched, so he's kind of used to it," Post 2 head coach Ernie Galusky said.

"In the past, we've had a [designated hitter] for him just when he's pitched so he can concentrate on pitching, but he's showing this year that he can do both and not let one affect the other."

Saab, who got Morgantown on the board in the first inning, said his switch to the top of the order for Friday's game changed his approach at the plate.

"You are that guy who has to get on base and score runs," Saab said. "You're not always taking that huge swing or that huge cut even though you'd like to, but you're just trying to get on base and score runs."

Saab said Galusky stresses good defense when it comes to the pitcher and the rest of the players.

"Coach Galusky always says just pound the strike zone. You have to go out there and compete and make these hitters swing the bat, make your defense play on their toes because if you're walking people or you're not throwing that many strikes, they tend to kind of get back on their heels and get out of the game. I try to keep my team in the game," Saab said.

Saab didn't have to worry about making the defense work too much, striking out seven batters while allowing only four hits in seven innings. In terms of offense, Saab helped Post 2 to victory with two runs and three hits, scoring runs in both the first and second innings. He chalks up his success at the plate to his pitching knowledge.

Todd Flint/The Dominion Post

"Pitching definitely helps you when you're at the plate because you're thinking to yourself, 'Hey what would I throw in this situation?' and I'm in the batter's box thinking, 'He's got a 1-2 count on me, maybe he's got something off-speed or I'm behind in the count.' When I'm on the mound I set the tempo of the game, and I'm in control of the game," Saab said.

With Saab making quality contributions to the team as both a pitcher and as a hitter, Galusky says he plans to keep allowing him to hit.

"He's one of our better hitters; it's hard to take him out of the lineup just because he's on the mound," Galusky said.

A highlight of Friday's game was a 345-foot home run by Woods in the bottom of the first, which scored two of Post 2's runs, giving Morgantown a 4-0 lead at the end of the first inning.

Post 2 is back in action at 2 p.m. today, when it plays a doubleheader at Potomac Valley.

Few laws exist for controlling steroids in prep sports

Most states let local officials handle the issue

AP National Writer

They were thinking big in New Mexico. Encouraged by the Drug Enforcement Administration, state officials staged a national summit to discuss solutions for the growing problem of steroids in high school sports.

The governor pledged $330,000 to start a testing program. He created a steroid task force.

A few months later, the task force decided "that implementing a steroid testing program ... would be costly, would most likely result in legality issues and would have difficulty passing in the state legislature," Robert Zayas of the New Mexico Activities Association said.

Different versions of that story are being told around the nation.

An AP analysis of the 50 states found that Texas, Florida and New Jersey are the only three whose legislatures have mandated some kind of steroid testing for high school athletes.

California and Michigan also have passed steroids-in-schools laws, and a handful of others have statutes on the books that forbid performance-enhancing drugs, though none of those laws has the teeth to mandate testing.

Few other states have found traction for such legislation. Budgetary, logistical and political difficulties have left the burden of starting these programs with state athletic associations and local school districts, and those jurisdictions are dealing with the same problems.

"In some districts it would be very difficult to have a statewide plan or a uniform program for everyone," said Bob Baldrige of the Tennessee athletic association, responding to an AP questionnaire about steroid testing in the 50 states. "In Tennessee it would not be impossible to do, but, honestly, very difficult. Nashville is closer to Canada than Memphis is to Mt. City, Tenn."

Baldrige's response was common, as were responses from state athletic associations that have looked at comprehensive testing programs and found them too costly. Most steroids tests cost between $100 and $175 to administer, which may not sound like much. But multiply it by 100 or 1,000 and it's obvious that it's not an expense most school districts can afford.

"Steroid use is very serious and we don't condone it any way, but there's cost and legal issues," said Keith Amemiya, executive director of the Hawaii High School Athletic Association. "And there are a lot of other drugs we're concerned about as well."

Such conclusions are disappointing to Don Hooton, whose 17-year-old son, Taylor, committed suicide in 2003. Doctors believe Taylor Hooton became depressed after he stopped using steroids. Since Taylor's death, Hooton has been traveling the country trying to goad state legislatures into mandating steroid testing.

In pushing for the Texas bill, he became a believer that the problem must be solved through the law-making process.

"What we learned is if we had to rely on individual school districts or the state athletic association to do it, we might have done it, but it would've been a very hard road," Hooton said.

He said once the Texas legislature came to grips with the money issue, all the other roadblocks dissolved more easily.

The U.S. Olympic Committee, which is increasing its presence in the research and education side of the fight against steroids in sports, also is interested in seeing more done at the high school level.

"The high school athletic associations and the legislatures are absolutely doing the right thing by taking a serious look at this problem," USOC spokesman Darryl Seibel said. "The reported rates of steroid use at the high school level are not only alarming, they reveal the extent to which this is becoming a societal problem."

In one recent national survey, 1.8 percent of high school seniors admitted to having taken steroids at least once in the past year. In a survey in West Virginia, 3.4 percent of high school students said they had used steroids, while many surveys done over the last decade in Texas - where high school football is king - showed even higher numbers.

Governors in Florida and Texas recently signed their laws, which will take effect in the upcoming school year.

The Texas law will create the most expensive testing in the country, with about $3 million being allotted to test "a statistically significant sample" of students. The high school association will determine penalties for positive tests. Before the law, about 130 of Texas' 1,300 public high schools had their own steroid-testing programs.

The Florida law calls for a one-year pilot program in which 1 percent of athletes in football, baseball and weightlifting will take tests; the legislation included $100,000 for the testing. Violators will be suspended from their teams.

STATUS OF THE STATES

TESTING MANDATED BY LAW

FLORIDA: New law sets up pilot program that calls for 1 percent of athletes in football, baseball and weightlifting to be tested.

NEW JERSEY: First state with a steroid testing law. No positive tests reported yet.

TEXAS: Recently passed law calling for widespread testing.

LAWS EXIST BUT DON'T MANDATE TESTING

CALIFORNIA: Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger recently signed bill prohibiting high school athletes from taking ephedra and other supplements.

IOWA: 1990 rule calls for athlete suspensions for steroid use, but state law prohibits random drug testing.

LOUISIANA: Legislature has passed resolution to survey schools about extent of the steroid use.

MINNESOTA: Law passed last year requires school systems to address steroids in their drug and alcohol policies.

MICHIGAN: Law passed last year requires school boards to establish policy on steroids.

MINNESOTA: 2005 law calls for maximum 20-year prison sentence for sale of performance-enhancing drugs to minors.

PENNSYLVANIA: Decade-old law requires school boards to enforce rules prohibiting steroid use, but no testing program to back this up.

VIRGINIA: Athletics association rulebook has rule inconsistent with Code of Virginia calling for two-year ban if principal and superintendent determine athletes used steroids. No testing policy, though.

TESTING OR POLICY EXISTS ON STATE OR LOCAL LEVEL

ALASKA: Largest school district, in Anchorage, has policy banning steroid use.

COLORADO: Athletics association includes steroid mention in bulletins sent to member schools.

GEORGIA: Athletics association has policy statement denouncing use of steroids.

ILLINOIS: Steroid testing plan being hatched this summer, to be presented to athletics association board in September.

MASSACHUSETTS: Activities association has wellness program with regulations against steroid use.

MISSISSIPPI: A number of schools have mandatory testing programs.

MISSOURI: Francis Howell School District in suburban St. Louis began mandatory testing for drugs, including steroids, in 2006.

NEBRASKA: Educational programs established in state where Legislature killed random-testing measure.

NEVADA: Athletes sign contract saying they won't use alcohol or drugs, including steroids.

NEW MEXICO: Established steroids task force, which concluded statewide testing program would be too expensive and difficult to manage.

NORTH DAKOTA: Rules call for penalties for steroid use, but no testing.

OHIO: Activities association refers to department of education code that cautions about dangers of using steroids.

OKLAHOMA: Several districts have testing policies.

OREGON: Athletic association superintendent says state's extensive education program can reach 15 students for the cost of one steroid test.

RHODE ISLAND: Athletics association has policy statement denouncing use of steroids.

WISCONSIN: Athletics association provides schools DVDs and literature on steroids.

WEST VIRGINIA: Logan County schools test up to 2 percent of athletes each week.

WYOMING: Campbell County High School in Gillette tests for steroids.

Kyle Busch celebrates in victory lane after winning the Winn Dixie 250 auto race at the Daytona International Speedway in Daytona Beach, Fla., on Saturday.

Risky move results in victory for Busch

NASCAR decides not to penalize driver

BY MARK LONG
AP Sports Writer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Kyle Busch saw several cars clustered around the inside lane and another one crawling along in the outside lane.

He felt he had no choice but to swerve right, driving through the grass, passing several cars and taking the lead coming off pit road.

It turned out to be Busch's best move of the race.

The risky maneuver propelled Busch to the front and eventually to his first NASCAR victory at Daytona International Speedway — a win in the rain-delayed Busch Series race Saturday morning.

"It was either that or stop," Busch said. "Some of those guys were lost on pit road. I'm not sure what's going on with that. It was kind of a cluster. I wasn't sure if we were going to get busted."

NASCAR officials reviewed the move, but decided not to penalize Busch. They warned him, though, telling him not to do it again. Busch obliged and picked up his eighth career series win — his first since March 26, 2006, at Bristol.

NASCAR started reviewing another aspect of Busch's car after the race. Officials confiscated the front springs from his Chevrolet and were sending them to the research and development center in North Carolina for review.

The sanctioning body said the spring rates were "slightly under" the minimum allowed by rule. Officials said results would be released next week.

It's not likely NASCAR would strip Busch of his victory, but the inspection could lead to more sanctions for Hendrick Motorsports, which had two of its Nextel Cup

“It was definitely a good race. All we had to do was keep it out front and keep the mistakes to a minimum. Really there were none today.” teams fined and docked points two weeks ago. Crew chiefs for Jeff Gordon and Jimmie Johnson also were suspended.

Kyle Busch

"It was definitely a good race car," said Busch, whose only other win at Daytona came in a 2004 ARCA race. "All we had to do was keep it out front and keep the mistakes to a minimum. Really there were none today."

Daytona 500 winner Kevin Harvick came from the back of the field several times and finished second, followed by Dave Blaney, Tony Stewart and Clint Bowyer. Series points leader Carl Edwards crossed the finish line 11th, three spots ahead of defending race winner Dale Earnhardt Jr.

The top eight spots went to Nextel Cup regulars. None of them had enough to beat Busch.

Busch led four times for 65 laps and ended a string of bad luck at the sport's most famous track.

He celebrated the win with a burnout and a beer shower in Victory Lane, then joined 19 other drivers in retreating to their motorhomes to rest up for the Nextel Cup event scheduled about nine hours later — a rare day-night doubleheader created when rain washed out the Busch race Friday night.

The 20 Cup regulars were facing a long day of 650 miles of racing.

Busch dominated much of the 102-lap morning event, taking the lead on lap 24 following a round of pit stops.

He turned into the grass to avoid congestion around the pit road exit, passing Bowyer, Kyle Krisloff and others for the lead.

He then stayed out front pretty much the rest of the way, leading 61 of the final 64 laps.

Busch, who will lose his Nextel Cup ride with Hendrick Motorsports at the end of this season to make room for Earnhardt, has become NASCAR's top free agent, and his victory at Daytona could make him even more sought after.

He could have also won both races here in February.

Busch dominated the early part of the last Busch race at Daytona, leading 46 laps before a fuel pressure problem ended his day.

He was strong again in the Cup race the following day, but then caused a massive wreck on the final lap that helped Harvick edge Mark Martin at the finish line.

Several cars had a shot at Busch in the final laps Saturday, but no one had the speed to get by him.

Juan Pablo Montoya spun out with two laps remaining, bringing out the sixth caution, bunching up the field and setting up a green-white-checkered finish.

But Busch was perfect on the restart, holding off Harvick and Blaney and making the final two laps look easy.

now in its fifth season.

Those crazy flying fish are causing all sorts of problems

TWO WEEKS AGO there was a national news story on flying carp in the Mississippi River. Perhaps you saw it. When a motor boat goes up the river these big carp jump out of the water, and there are so many flying fish that some hit people in the boats. Many fish jump into the boats. It's all a bit humorous to watch, but from an ecological point of view, these flying fish are a disaster in the making.

The fish are Silver Carp, native to Asia, and brought to America by fish farmers in Arkansas. They were imported to eat phytoplankton growing in catfish ponds, and also as a possible food source. More on that in a minute.

They feed on phytoplankton, which is a common food for our native fish larvae, fish juveniles, and native mussels. But when farm ponds flooded in the early 1990's, this exotic fish was released into the Mississippi River and they've moved down to Louisiana and north into many tributaries in Illinois and North Dakota. They eat a ton and grow rapidly to as big as 80 pounds though 15-to-25 pounds is more common. A 40-pound fish will eat around 15 pounds of food per day. This obviously makes them a major competitor for native fish.

They also breed rapidly so numbers are growing by leaps and bounds where these carp are found. So much so that they have become the dominant fish in many parts of the Mississippi and its tributaries. State and federal wildlife agencies are working hard to keep this carp out of the Great Lakes. The U. S. Army Corps of Engineers constructed a temporary electronic barrier in 2002. A much bigger barrier has recently been completed on the Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal connecting the Illinois River (where Silver Carp reside) to Lake Michigan. So far, so good. But the concern for the natural food chain and native fish in Lake Michigan is very real.

I don't look for an electronic barrier to prevent this carp from eventually getting to the Great Lakes. Barges going through the barrier can suck some fish or eggs with them, even though the technology is supposed to prevent that. Others could be inadvertently dumped into such waters by fishermen using small Silver Carp as bait. Or they might be dumped into the Great Lakes on purpose by someone who has a grudge against a federal agency. Stranger things have happened. Silver Carp are a huge aquaculture fish in China and other parts of Asia. In fact, more pounds of Silver Carp are raised for food than any other fish in the world. Aha, using them for food might be a controlling factor, but the facts are that carp have never been a "food" species in our country. Even so, there are signs that this might change. Netting in the Illinois River can yield thousands of pounds of these carp per day, and some are being processed and sold to Asian-American communities in California, New York and other major cities. Some fish processors are even hoping to develop markets for these fish in Asian countries. However, right now, the demand comes nowhere close to the supply.

Some say that the name "carp" is the problem. Americans don't relate well to that name when it comes to eating fish. In fact, there are those who want to change it's name, and still others who want to try other approaches, such as smoking them, to create a "fish" market in the United States.

As to their jumping abilities. No one really knows what triggers this, but apparently motor boat sounds, when they reach a certain RPM, trigger this behavior and in certain parts of Midwestern rivers, even something as simple as water skiing can be a hazard to your health.

I've known about these flying fish for several years as friends have bowfished for them. Just hop in the back of a boat with bow fishing tackle and shoot the carp as they jump out of the water. Obviously, bow fishing will never be a threat to populations of this crazy, flying fish from the Orient. Hopefully researchers can come up with an answer, but my imagination isn't able to come up with any possible solution to this growing ecological problem.

Bald Eagles taken off Endangered Species List

LAST WEEK, INTERIOR SECRETARY

Dirk Kempthorne held a press conference to announce the Bald Eagle was being removed from the Endangered Species Act's list of threatened species. These birds will now be protected under the Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act. The US Fish and Wildlife Service supposedly issued new regulations to ensure their monitoring and protection, but I haven't been able to locate them.

The Bald Eagle was first protected in 1940 by the Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act. But by the time this was passed, the eagle population had already been decimated mostly by DDT poisoning. In 1962, there were only 417 nesting pairs in the lower 48 states. DDT was banned by Congress in 1972 and the eagle population began to rebound. This is also one of the primary reasons you now see so many Red Tailed Hawks.

It's now estimated there are slightly over 11,000 nesting pairs of Bald Eagles in the lower 48 states. Here in West Virginia, we had 17 nesting pairs in 2006 that produced 32 eaglets.

The DNR is still counting the nests this year to see what the population is. They do know there are some new nests. The heavy snowstorms in early April could have had a negative effect on the number of young born. They have a picture of an eagle on her nest with snow up to her beak. This nest is near the USFWS training center near Shepherdstown.

Eagles have been cited around Cheat Lake. These are more than likely the ones that nest just up across the border in Pennsylvania.

The first Bald Eagle nest in West Virginia was discovered in 1981 along the South Branch of the Potomac River. Breeding pairs are found in Grant, Hardy, Hampshire, Pendleton, Mineral, and Jefferson Counties. Non-breeding eagles have been seen in almost every area of the state.

Bald Eagles mate for life and usually have up to four eggs. Both the male and female incubate the eggs and share in the feeding of the young. They also use the same nest each year just adding a few sticks and lining it with fresh grasses and moss.

It takes up to 35 days for the eggs to hatch. When the eaglets are from 10-to-13 weeks old, they will fledge or leave the nest. They will weigh up to 12 pounds when they leave the nest.

These young eagles will not become sexually mature until they are four or five years old. It's also by this time they have developed the characteristic white head and tail feathers. Also, these young eagles will return to around 100 miles of where they were hatched to find a place to nest.

The Bald Eagle feeds mainly on fish. I've seen them swoop down and grab a fish many times when out west fishing. A few of my friends have told me about seeing them get fish out of the river near Smoke Hole. They will also eat small mammals, reptiles, and waterfowl.

NOTE: The above is an example of "good government." Hunters and shooters had better look out because here's an example of "bad government." It seems a proposed new OSHA regulation could potentially close nearly all ammunition manufacturers and force the cost of small arms

Jason DeProspero/The Dominion Post

This new rule (which is 55 pages long) would regulate the manufacture, transportation, and storage of small arms ammo, primers, and smokeless powder. One of the proposed requirements would be that manufacturers would have to shut down and evacuate a factory if a thunderstorm approached. Another is anyone within 50 feet of any ammunition would have to be searched for matches and lighters.

A friend of mine sent me an e-mail and said this was nothing more than some liberal, pencil-pushing do-gooder who believes the government will keep us all safe and sound if they can just sanitize our lives.

The National Shooting Sports Foundation is requesting concerned citizens fax a letter to OSHA requesting a 60-day extension of the public comment period. It should be faxed to (202) 693-1648. The fax must include the following heading:
RE: Docket No. OSHA-2007-

0032 Request to Extend Public Comment Period and Request for Hearing on "Significant Regulatory Action" as Defined in Executive Order 12866.

I'm sure that all of the cigar smokers at sporting clays shoots would just be tickled to death to have some OSHA inspector checking them every time they went shooting. This is just typical government nonsense and overkill and needs to be stopped.

GO FISH

MONONGAHELA RIVER — The water temperature is around 80 degrees. Low flow conditions cause fish to be attracted to the currents below the dams at Morgantown, Hildebrand, and Opekiska. The shoreline from Deckers Creek to the Morgantown Lock is one of the best areas on the river. Drum are common and there are lots of channel catfish along the shoreline. The mouth of Deckers Creek at the Riverfront Park always attracts fish and is an easy place to fish. Warm water discharges at the Rivesville and Morgantown power plants will continue to attract fish. A pier at the Morgantown plant makes fishing safe and convenient. Lots of carp are present just below the pier at the outlet of Falling Run. Shoreline anglers have several good areas to fish on the river; the mouths of Buffalo and Paw Paw creeks in Marion County, and the mouths of Whiteday and Deckers creek in Monongalia County. The shoreline on the Westover side of the river immediately below the lock gates is also a good area for all species.

CHEAT LAKE — The lake is at summer level. Several anglers reported good catches of channel catfish using nightcrawlers around sunken trees in 10-to-15 feet of water. Bass tournament success has been very good again this spring. Cheat Lake is usually one of the best lakes for tournaments. The easiest way to fish the lake is along the shoreline to a depth of 10 to 15 feet. Crankbaits and tube jigs are good artificial baits while a nightcrawlers or minnow on a hook with a couple of split shot are always productive. The fishing piers in the embayments at the West Penn Recreation Area are good spots for bank anglers. These areas will be warmer than the main lake and good for largemouth bass and bluegill all month. Use a small rooster-tail spinner for bluegill. Walleye, sauger and white bass can be caught from the tailwater fishing pier when flows are turned off. Jigs with minnows or three-inch power grubs are the best baits. White or chartrreuse are good colors. The pier is located entirely in West Virginia about 25 minutes from Morgantown, but you have to drive from, and park in, Pennsylvania to get there. Take US Rt. 119 from Morgantown to Point Marion, PA. Turn right after crossing the Cheat River and proceed four miles to Cheat Dam. The pier is lighted for night fishing and is handicapped accessible.

STONECOAL LAKE — The lake is five feet below summer pool, clear, and fishing has been good. Reports of trout being caught from boat and shore. All fish seem to be on the move. Bass have been caught in shallow water. Crappie and bluegill are hitting minnows around fish attractors.

STONEWALL JACKSON — The lake is at summer pool, clear and fishing has been good. Bass have moved off in deeper water. Crappie have been hitting minnows around beaver huts. A Few nice catfish have also been caught in the evenings. Bluegill are spawning throughout the lake and are being caught on worms. The tailwaters were stocked with trout on May 16, try power-bait and worms. Yellow perch and crappie are being caught on live bait. For more information contact Corps of Engineers at (304) 269-7463.

SUMMERSVILLE — The lake is at summer pool, clear and fishing is good for bass. Walleye have also been caught off of rock points in about 20 feet of water. Trout were stocked in the tailwaters June 12 by helicopter. If you are looking for a back country trout fishing experience hike down in and enjoy. For more information call Corps of Engineers at (304) 872-5809.

SUTTON — The lake is at summer pool and clear. Fishing is good. Bass are in about 10-to-15 feet of water. Crappie have been hitting minnows around beaver huts and blown down trees. The tailwaters are clear with a 67 degree outflow temperature. The tailwaters were stocked with trout on May 16. For daily information call Corps of Engineers at (304) 765-2705.

TYGART LAKE — The lake is at summer pool level. The water temperature is 75 degrees from 5 feet to 25 feet, 69 degrees at 35 feet, 63 degrees at 50 feet, and 60 degrees at 75 feet. Walleye can be caught on the bottom in 30 to 40 feet of water using nightcrawlers or minnows on jigs. Crappie were being caught on the fish shelters installed by the DNR. Crankbaits and tube jigs fished along the shoreline out to 10-to-20 feet depths will be effective throughout the month for largemouth and small-mouth bass. White bass are very abundant and travel in schools that can be seen feeding on the surface. Casting spoons into the schools is a good way to catch lots of white bass. The tailwater temperature is 60 degrees. There are lots of walleye in the tailwater and the trout stocking is completed. Walleye fishing is best during higher flows (1,500 to 5,000 cubic feet per second) and trout fishing is best at low flows (less than 1,000 cubic feet per second). Call the Corps of Engineers telephone hotline at (304) 265-5953 for daily lake and tailwater conditions.

Tragedy doesn't take summers off

State initiatives make school safety a critical concern throughout year

Usually, questions about schools are out of sight, out of mind during summertime. Not so this year.

Some of the credit for that goes to the state School Building Authority, which took a new kind of roll call this year. But the real reason for this editorial and this "roll call" is the heartbreaking name that gave rise to this subject last spring: Virginia Tech.

Although the SBA implemented a school safety audit of all 55 counties' facilities nearly two months before the massacre in Blacksburg, Va., those events rekindled the discussion and reaction to school violence.

Schools are like any community where, tragedy and terror remind us, safety and security cannot be taken for granted — or ever guaranteed.

As of late June, 52 of West Virginia's 55 counties had submitted school safety audits, the first statewide effort at an accurate accounting of our schools' security. The detailed, five-page questionnaire asks school administrators to list everything from doors that lock from the inside to noting that shrubbery should be trimmed to a maximum height of 24 inches.

Most of the time, our children are safe, and schools have always taken precautions to ensure security. Now, however, school safety has our attention — year around.

The safety audit also focuses on how well school administrators can communicate with classrooms and alarm systems already in service.

For instance: Does the school have a dedicated outside line to reach emergency responders during a crisis? Are public address systems equipped with back-up power supplies?

The SBA is asking schools to indicate the extent to which procedures and devices are already in place and breaks down the categories into planning, deterrence, detection, delay and communications.

The SBA will present a formal report to the Legislature during interim meetings in September. Although this audit won't erase all our fears, it will help everyone to know that when they part with their children at school, whether or not they will see them again is not just a leap of faith.

Most of the time, our children are safe, and schools have always taken precautions to ensure security. Now, however, school safety has our attention — year-around.

When violence happens at school — in Colorado's foothills, in Amish country, amid spring flurries in Virginia — it is especially devastating because it tears at true innocents — young people and children who are often not even aware of the risks around them.

We were also heartened to hear that the SBA began offering grants from a $10 million fund July 1 to schools to improve safety.

Although the money can be used for video surveillance or other high-tech devices, the initial focus is on the bare bones needs of schools across the state.

Locks, doors and school entryways are the targets in many school systems where basic locks are in disrepair, and numbering those doors on maps is important so they can be located by emergency personnel.

Schools can apply for this SBA money to improve school safety, but must pledge to match 25 percent of the grant they seek.

As always, many of us look for explanations for the violence in our schools, signs that were missed, places to ascribe blame when terror intrudes on a setting meant to prepare children for life, not for death.

The lessons we have learned as a result of the violence in our schools have been harsh and unexpected, but we are glad to see our state is attempting to find some answers.

Crisis we will live through

PRACTICALLY EVERYTHING else in American life has been dumbed down, so why not constitutional crises? The brawling over President Bush's commutation of Vice President Dick Cheney's former chief of staff Lewis "Scooter" Libby's prison sentence is that Bush has undermined the rule of law and the Constitution.

The Founders would be bemused at this, since they included the pardon power in the Constitution. There it is in Article II, Section 2: The president "shall have the power to grant reprieves and pardons." They didn't include a proviso that the power shall not extend to persons vilified by left-wing bloggers as the personification of "the case for war."

Bush can hardly create a constitutional crisis by exercising a plenary constitutional power, and doing it in a way that has become almost routine. The first President Bush pardoned former CIA official Clair George, former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger (indicted for perjury) and former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane. Like the current Bush's commutation, these Iran-Contra pardons violated the Justice department guidelines. And somehow, the republic survived.

President Clinton pardoned or commuted the sentences of former Arkansas operator Susan McDougal; former Housing and Urban Development Secretary Henry Cisneros; former CIA Director John Deutch; and eight people connected to the scandal around former Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy (all of whom had been convicted of or pleaded guilty to illegal acts).

This leaves aside Clinton's truly egregious pardons and commutations: 16 Puerto Rican terrorists over the opposition of the FBI and the Federal Bureau of Prisons; the international fugitive Marc Rich; and one man convicted of mail fraud and perjury and another convicted of cocaine trafficking, each of whom had paid $200,000 to Hillary Clinton's brother Hugh Rodman to represent them.

Bush's commutation is nothing like those outrageous acts of clemency. It is perfectly in the mainstream of pardons throughout the past 20 years in cases that are considered politicized prosecutions by the aggrieved administrations. The Founders created the pardon power to grant relief from a justice system that might, in the words of Alexander Hamilton, be "too sanguinary and cruel." It doesn't serve that function so much anymore, but has turned out to be a safety valve in an era when each party criminalizes political disputes when it suits its purposes.

This creates a perpetual argument over whose perjury is worse. Liberals say Libby's is more serious than Clinton's because Libby lied about the war and Clinton lied only about sex. Actually, Libby's case wasn't about the war, but about whether or not he had misremembered when and from whom he first had heard Joe Wilson's wife, Valerie Plame, worked at the CIA.

Regardless, except for the most blatant crimes, the political arena is the best forum for politically controversial charges of wrongdoing. Rather than commuting Libby's sentence on grounds it was excessive, Bush should have pardoned him altogether on grounds that the case had become a way to make one man pay for the alleged sins of the administration regarding the war. Our system of government provides a straightforward method to punish an administration without resorting to special prosecutors and criminal charges, which is to vote against the president or his party.

Just wait: The same people hyperventilating about Libby now will have the opposite attitude about the criminalization of politics when a Democrat is back in the White House. Then, they will grow fond of Article II, Section 2 all over again.

Bush could learn at library

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. PRESIDENT BUSH and his advisers have always been reluctant to follow the lead of his presidential predecessor, Bill Clinton.

But the people who will plan the presidential library expected to be built at Southern Methodist University can get some valuable pointers on how best to accentuate the positive from the William J. Clinton Presidential Center, on the banks of the Arkansas River.

Like most of these living memorials to past presidents, the Clinton library, which opened in November 2004, provides a positive interpretation of his presidency. It notes that his administration produced "unparalleled prosperity" and left the United States "more respected in the world than it had ever been."

Touring the aluminum structure designed to resemble the "Bridge to the 21st Century" theme of his 1996 re-election campaign, one almost gets the sense its planners deliberately sought to contrast the successes of his administration with the woes that developed under his successor.

The section on Bosnia and Kosovo, for example, notes that the Clinton White House "overthrew a brutal dictator [Slobodan Milosevic] without losing a single American life." Also highlighted in several places is the fact that Clinton inherited a massive budget deficit and bequeathed a large surplus.

The Bush planners could learn a lot about putting a positive spin on the war in Iraq from the way the Clinton library explains Clinton's failure to pass a massive restructuring of the health-care system and the 1998 effort to oust him from office over his misstatements in the Monica Lewinsky affair.

The failure of the health-care plan devised by first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, the library's version concludes, was caused by "negative advertising and charges of 'big government,'" accentuated by "partisan bickering."

There is nary a suggestion she may have mishandled the effort by devising her plan in secret and proposing a massive structure that proved an easy target for critics.

It contends that former Speaker Newt Gingrich precipitated impeachment as part of "The Fight for Power" and, "like every other politically motivated" probe of the Clintons, it "led nowhere."

As for Clinton's responsibility, it says that "President Clinton acknowledged he had not been forthcoming about the relationship" with Monica Lewinsky. She is not otherwise identified, nor is there any sign of the infamous blue dress.

Under such a model, the Iraq section in the Bush library might be titled "Bringing Democracy to the Middle East." One might expect it to stress the oft-recounted iniquities of Saddam Hussein more than pre-war warnings that Hussein had developed weapons of mass destruction.

And it will likely hail the heroism of U.S. forces and blame the post-war insurgency on al-Qaida's decision to make Iraq a base for global terror, rather than inadequate U.S. post-war planning.

None of this is surprising. Every presidential library — and I've seen all but one — reflects the tenor of the presidency it commemorates in highly subjective terms.

The Herbert Hoover library, in rural West Branch, Iowa, puts far more stress on Hoover's pre-presidential humanitarian efforts than on his disastrous presidency, in which it notes he encountered communications difficulties.

The Jimmy Carter library emphasizes the 1978 Camp David Accords and his human-rights work.

And the Ronald Reagan library, on a California hillside that invokes his oft-stated vision of a "shining city on the hill," is so oriented toward Reagan and wife Nancy that there's little sign anyone else mattered, though he relied heavily on top aides.

Clinton's library reflects him most clearly in stressing the minutiae of government, including detailed accounts of laws passed and global initiatives pursued.

The Bush folks may want to look at that, too, because it's a safe guess they will want to tout such achievements as tax cuts, the No Child Left Behind education bill and drug coverage for Medicare recipients as a counterpoint to Iraq and fiscal woes.

Presidential reprieve all part of job

Q: WHAT GIVES the president the right to commute I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby's sentence?

A: Last week, the big news was that President Bush "commuted" the sentence of one Lewis "Scooter" Libby, a former aide to the vice president. For those of you fresh from hiding under your rock for the last two years, here's a review of the facts.

Joe Wilson and Valerie Plame were husband and wife. Plame was the type of federal agent whose secret identity as a federal agent is not supposed to be revealed to anyone. She was the person whose identity they disavowed any knowledge of at Mission Impossible headquarters. At some point, Wilson got involved in some political stuff, took a trip overseas he probably should not have taken and, when he got back, said things that made the administration none too happy.

Somehow, his wife's name came up in the whole thing, a Washington Post journalist began sniffing around for a story, winding up at the desk of Libby. In the midst of that conversation Libby allegedly revealed Plame's secret identity.

Scooter was brought in front of a grand jury, asked to testify, and put under the gun by Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald, who managed to keep Scooter busy running through enough circles that he eventually contradicted himself and, intentionally or not, committed perjury.

Hence, he was brought up on charges of perjury and obstructing justice and some other counts.

Interestingly, Scooter was not convicted of revealing the identity of a covert agent, which was how this whole thing started. And, as of today, no one has been prosecuted for that crime, vis-a-vis Plame. Scooter was then convicted of perjury, obstruction and making false statements to a federal investigator.

Sidebar: If you told a federal investigator that his mullet was "a nice haircut," could you be charged with making false statements to a federal investigator? Sorry. Bad lawyer humor. End sidebar.

So, under federal sentencing guidelines, which allow for about as much spontaneity as Robert's Rules of Order, Scooter was sentenced to 30 months in prison. All appeals, thus far, have failed. But, on Monday, Bush "commuted" Scooter's sentence, leaving him with no jail time, but left alone his felony conviction, a $250,000 fine and years of probation. How so?

Well, according to Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution, the president has the power "to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment." A commutation, meaning literally "to change altogether," falls under the category of a "reprieve." Thus, POTUS (president of the United States) has the hyperbolic "get out of jail free card" that you thought only belonged to Milton Bradley. Still, Scooter has not passed go and will not collect $200.

He's still a felon, subject to the terms of probation, and has to pay a hefty fine.

Presidents throughout history have wielded the gracious sword of pardons and reprieves. President Clinton pardoned some 140 persons on his last day in office. The elder President Bush pardoned Reagan-era Iran-Contra officials, Carter granted amnesty to draft dodgers, and Washington pardoned the leaders of the Whiskey Rebellion.

Is it a political weapon or a tool for the equalization of social justice? Is it used for high-paying former guests of the Lincoln Bedroom, or notorious felons wrongly convicted? No one is really sure. But, what is certain is that it is a unique tool given only to the president. It is one of very few areas in which there are no checks and balances. Reprieves and pardons are, quite simply, the unique perks of presidential power.

For high school students, freedom of speech is not a joke

"Bong Hits 4 Jesus" doesn't have a hidden meaning. In fact, the phrase doesn't mean anything at all.

But when high school senior Joe Frederick held up a banner with those now-famous words in 2002, he triggered a chain of events that led to last week's 5-4 Supreme Court ruling drawing new lines around student free-expression rights in public schools.

Frederick unfurled his "Bong Hits 4 Jesus" message while students and faculty were gathered to watch the Olympic torch pass by his school in Juneau, Alaska.

"The phrase was not important," he recently explained. "I wasn't trying to say anything about religion. I wasn't trying to say anything about drugs. I was just trying to say something. I wanted to use my right to free speech, and I did it."

When the principal, Deborah Morse, asked him to take the banner down, Frederick refused. She confiscated it and later suspended him for 10 days. Frederick sued.

CHARLES C. HAYNES

Inside the First Amendment

What Frederick believed was a nonsensical joke that he had a First Amendment right to display, Morse saw as promotion of illegal drugs in violation of school policy. On June 25, a closely divided Supreme Court sided with the principal.

The court's decision in Morse v. Frederick carves out what might be called "an illegal drug use" exception to student free-speech rights as defined in the 1969 case Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School District. School officials may now censor student speech that a "reasonable observer" would interpret as advocating the use of illegal drugs.

In a concurring opinion, Justice Samuel Alito takes great pains to underscore the narrow scope of the decision. Nothing in the ruling, he claims, restricts the right of students to comment on political or social issues, including debates about drug laws.

But the dissent, written by Justice John Paul Stevens and joined by Justices David Souter and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, describes the decision as a "ham-handed, categorical approach" that is "deaf to the constitutional imperative to permit unfettered debate, even among high school students, about the wisdom of the war on drugs or of legalizing marijuana for medicinal use."

Where Alito sees a bright line, Stevens sees a slippery slope. What about speech that mentions alcohol — also a drug illegal for minors? "While I find it hard to believe," writes Stevens, "that the Court would support punishing Frederick for flying a 'Wine Sips 4 Jesus' banner — which could quite reasonably be construed either as a protected religious message or as a pro-alcohol message — the breathtaking sweep of its opinion suggests it would."

Narrow or sweeping? We won't know until we see how school districts apply the decision and how courts interpret it. But don't be surprised when many school officials and judges use it to find new grounds for censoring students. If an absurd reference to drug paraphernalia can be suppressed, what's the stopping point?

Given how messy the fallout from this decision is likely to be, school officials should focus less on how to use it and more on how to avoid future conflicts.

After all, Frederick didn't make that banner out of whole cloth. His protest came after a series of run-ins with the administration over what he believed was unfair treatment. He claims, for example, that previously he got into trouble for refusing to stand during the Pledge of Allegiance (which is his right).

From the conflicting accounts, I don't know what actually happened at Frederick's high school. But I do know that far too many schools mistakenly assume that the best way to maintain discipline is to control student expression. Draconian speech codes and censored school publications may create the appearance of order, but they breed alienation, distrust and rebellion.

It may seem counterintuitive, but students are far more likely to behave well in schools that take free speech seriously. Schools where students are given meaningful opportunities to express themselves — and to participate in decision-making about school rules — are schools where high school rebels like Joe Frederick have little or nothing to rebel against.

Americans must remain vigilant against betrayal

Not since the Compromise of 1850 during the heated debates over slavery and the fear of a civil war between the states was imminent has the nation faced a more stressful and acrimonious period. Guilty of allowing 20 million or more illegal aliens to invade our southern border, Congress scrambles to find the right words for the wrong reason, and finds itself immersed in a legislative quagmire.

The steadfast majority of American citizens watch with a feeling of dismay, shame and apprehension as they try to understand why our socio-political system, functioning under the name of democracy, is now imploding.

The situation becomes ever more explosive as they see compelling disciplines — statutes and mandatory proceedings — now in place throughout the land that work to preserve the fundamental order of prudence and public welfare attacked and too often succumb to ill-intentioned opponents. Civil misbehavior has turned into a series of daily horrors and a constant threat to the population at large. Not yet enraged by the abuse and the violence, millions remain composed and find solace within the opiate of good times and prosperity.

In a more sobering moment, some, acquainted with historical data, are curious about the related footnotes left behind by the philosopher Plato. Was he right to not trust democracy? Or did he correctly arrive at that tough-to-accept extraction after observing the endless failures encountered by mighty Athens to bring the Greek city-states under its command into alignment and weave them into a parliamentary unit? Or could his prophetic remark have been attributed to a form of government not yet ready to be embraced?

But the venerable seer's timely projection was not the result of any obscure or off-handed speculation, but rather, from a rare gift that German philosopher Emmanuel Kant called the third tier of engagement — "imagination." Just as Plato believed that war was inevitable, so he perceived that the innate nature of man is not compatible with peace and tranquility. Eager to obtain power and authority for himself and his own by aggressive and obsessive means, the end result would work tragically against the needed cohesion that would make democracy an untroubled alternative.

But Plato wasn't beyond fallibility, and although his basic restrictions on popular rule-democracy still apply, the broader implications of his hypothesis fail to show that a more precise and defined operation would not work: The United States, with its unparalleled tri-level components — the executive, the legislative and the judicial — sharing in the management of new and old ideas, and assuring the language of the Constitution is not defiled, and that fair and just treatment is not disregarded.

But even with all the truths supporting the eminence of democracy, the Plato doctrine of the "innate nature of man" persists and makes it imperative that the dedicated majority of Americans be extremely vigilant that political and social contradictions don't become the expletives for betrayal.

Reader concerned about condition of local road

I am writing to voice my concern of the upkeep and previous work done on Lower Aarons Creek Road in Morgantown. Our road was previously retarred and chipped approximately two years ago. The finished pavement was maybe a quarter of an inch thick. I'm not sure how long it was expected to last.

I have taken various pictures of the road, which I will be sending to Charleston. For as much taxes as we are required to pay for the upkeep of this road and other roads, I sincerely think a better job could have been done on maintaining this road. If it was not going to be maintained, it should have been left alone as a dirt road.

If there are not workers skilled enough or who need training to pave and maintain these roads, then they should receive on-the-job training or be replaced. For years this road has been used for on-the-job "naps" and a place to "just hide out" until quitting time.

For this reason, I feel my opinion can help get someone to look into this issue.

We are often forced off the road when passing other motorists (going in the opposite direction), who are in fact going too fast for road conditions, and they don't even live on this road.

There have been many times we have been run into the ditch just to avoid being hit because the pavement has deteriorated or no longer exists.

Our tires have also been punctured due to being forced to go off the side of the road by passing motorists. And replacing tires is not cheap!

So I and other residents would like to express our concern and now hope this matter is taken care of or at least brought to someone's attention.

Article helps understand another way of thought

I'd like to express my sincere appreciation for the article (DP-Wednesday) headlined "Camp lets atheists enjoy summer fun with other children." In today's world, where many religions seem to define themselves by who they hate and fear rather than by who they love, children who follow their intuition toward atheism or agnosticism may be made to feel ostracized and even demonized. Who could deny these children a place where they can truly feel they do not need to censor themselves for any purpose, much less a social purpose?

This is something I have considerable personal experience with, having considered myself variously an atheist or agnostic since my first true cognizance of the world around me. As I chose from an early age not to use the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance, I grew used to the sidelong glances, subtle expressions of disapproval and even vocal opposition I encountered. Indeed, I have become proud of using my right to freedom of religion in this way, pledging loyalty to my country but not to a God I do not believe in.

To figure out who you are and what you wish to stand for is an ongoing process, and it requires thought and discussion with other atheists and agnostics as well as with adherents to every major religion. Coexistence and understanding are vital to the survival of rational thought in this country. I applaud The Dominion Post on its fair and balanced treatment of the atheist way of thought, and I urge those who avoid acknowledging our opinions to reconsider.

We, as a minority, have already had to come to terms with encountering opposition and disagreement, and we are only stronger for it.

Class also to blame for our separate and unequal schools

NOW THAT THE Roberts Supreme Court has essentially taken race off the table in the public-schools debate, how will reformers go about addressing the inequities that persist in American education?

Despite all the glorious reforms sparked by Brown v. the Board of Education of Topeka in 1954, today many schools are still segregated by race and remain unequal. In fact, the very idea that the famous case hung on — that racially segregated schools are "inherently unequal" — remains, with a little tweaking, just as true today.

But today class trumps race. And the sooner America fully admits it, the better. Racial discrimination certainly still exists. But given the progress of middle-class blacks and Latinos, being left behind and mired in a lack of opportunity is due more often to a person's economic status, not his or her race.

Racially segregated schools are still inferior, but now it is due largely to the income levels of the families whose children attend.

True, no one is forcing those families to stay in isolated neighborhoods, not by law anyway.

MARY SANCHEZ

Nothing is stopping them from moving to new school districts with higher-achieving classrooms — except their inability to afford it.

But an inferior education is the next best thing to legal segregation for keeping people stuck where they are, unable to rise to a higher living standard and, therefore, a more integrated neighborhood if they choose to do so.

The Supreme Court's recent ruling on two school cases means that nearly all uses of race to achieve or maintain integration will not be allowed. The ruling was based on the idea that such measures violate the 14th Amendment's guarantee of equal protection.

The strong reactions that followed are understandable. Many saw the decision as a slap at the framers of Brown. But a more prudent approach would be to accept the ruling and set about the task at hand: offering all children an equal chance at success through a good education. The Roberts court is in place. The likelihood of gaining a reversal is nil.

Besides, courts have been slowly chipping away at race-based policies in education for years.

In modern capitalist nations like ours, the economy will continue to thrive only if opportunity continues to expand for all to join the solid middle class. We need our free public-education system to live up to its history as a well-spring of native talent and enterprise. We are slipping here.

The very terms "urban school district" and "city schools" evoke attitudes of inadequacy and substandard expectations. Oh sure, we make inspirational movies chronicling the lives of saintly teachers who manage to uplift children out of the dilemmas of poverty. But a larger truth is that standards are very different. A child who graduates from a "gifted" program in some urban school district might be merely on par with average graduates of suburban schools in the same metropolitan area. What a horrible way to set a child up for disappointment, especially given that many poor city children are capable of the highest standards of achievement, if only expectations were set higher for them.

There will always be differences. The children of wealthier and better-educated parents will travel more widely, have tutors, attend private schools, benefit from the larger vocabularies and professional work experiences of their families, and adopt similar attitudes of entitlement. But affluent children do not deserve to receive such a huge jump toward success they are gaining now simply by how our school systems are arranged.

Critics of affirmative action plans have argued, with justification, that poor white children often suffer from many of the same inequities as minority children. Would such critics accept class-based, rather than race-based, approaches to reform? Could Americans be sold on the idea of overhauling the disparate way that property tax levies fund public school districts? Clearly, addressing education disparities on the basis of class will be an uphill battle in its own way.

Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District No. 1 likely will never hold the cachet of Brown v. Board of Education.

But the court has changed the rules of the game, and the challenge is to find a way to reshape public education in a way that is just and equitable.

Brown was necessary because our public education system was morally wrong and not in the country's best interest.

In 2007, a vastly different Supreme Court ruling has shown that the dilemma persists, and we will need new ways to resolve it.

Antitrust officials seek further info about Alcoa's bid for Alcan

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Federal antitrust authorities have asked Alcoa Inc. for further information about its unsolicited offer to buy Canadian aluminum rival Alcan Inc. for $27.5 billion.

The Justice Department request was issued under the Hart-Scott-Rodino antitrust act and effectively extends a waiting period until 30 days after Alcoa fulfills the request. Pittsburgh-based Alcoa said Friday that it plans to comply "as soon as possible."

Alain J.P. Belda, Alcoa's chairman and chief executive, said the follow-up was expected.

"As we have said before, we have a well-developed, detailed roadmap to resolve regulatory issues through targeted divestitures in the appropriate industry segments," he said in a statement. "We remain confident that the transaction will be approved in each relevant jurisdiction."

The proposed deal also faces review by antitrust authorities in Canada, the European Union, Australia and Brazil, as well as foreign investment clearance in Canada, France and Australia. Alcoa hopes to complete the deal by the end of 2007.

Alcoa announced its cash-and-stock offer for the Montreal-based firm May 7, after nearly two years of private talks failed to produce a negotiated deal. The offer expires at 5 p.m. Tuesday, but may be extended.

Alcan's board unanimously rejected the bid, saying it undervalued the company's assets. It also said it had turned away two unsolicited offers from Alcoa in 2005. But Alcan has said it would consider a sweetened offer or even try to buy Alcoa.

Recently, Alcan's top executive, Richard B. Evans, ended an exchange of letters with Belda, who was seeking further talks on the proposed takeover, with an e-mail message that said Alcan saw no reason for further discussions or correspondence.

Belda had contacted Evans after reports that Alcan provided financial information to other potential buyers, indicating that Alcoa may want to increase its bid, according to regulatory filings.

"For Alcan, the situation hasn't changed," said Anik Michaud, an Alcan spokeswoman. "We feel that from the beginning, Alcoa has underestimated the impediments to achieving their regulatory clearances."

A Justice Department spokeswoman declined to comment.

Analysts have said Alcoa may be well positioned to tackle regulatory challenges as large competitors have emerged through global industry consolidation, particularly in Russia and China.

But Charles Bradford, an analyst with Bradford Research/Soliel Securities, said Alcoa probably will have to divest from certain aerospace and alumina operations to satisfy antitrust authorities. Alumina is used to make aluminum.

Morningstar analyst Scott Burns said he believes the deal will be approved, assuming some divestitures to appease authorities and Chicago-based Boeing Co., a major customer.

Alcoa founded Alcan in 1902 before establishing it as a separate company in 1928. The companies retained largely common ownership until 1951, when major shareholdings were divested for antitrust reasons under a U.S. court order.

The reunited company would have 188,000 employees in 67 countries, alumina capacity of about 21.5 million metric tons and aluminum capacity of approximately 7.8 million metric tons, according to Alcoa. A metric ton is about 2,204.6 pounds.

The companies were the world's top two aluminum makers until March, when Alcoa was surpassed as the top producer by the Moscow-based United Company Rusal, which was formed through a three-way merger.

Shares of Alcoa rose 31 cents to $41.66 Friday. Alcan shares climbed $1.38 to $86.48.

CNX's DeLuliis named 2007 entrepreneur of the year

Nicholas J. DeLuliis, president and chief executive officer of CNX Gas Corp., received the Ernst & Young Entrepreneur Of The Year 2007 Award in the Product Development & Business Services Category in Upstate New York, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, the company announced.

According to Ernst & Young, the award recognizes outstanding entrepreneurs who build and lead dynamic, growing businesses. An independent panel of judges selected DeLuliis. Ernst & Young presented him the award at an Entrepreneur Of The Year gala event at the Hilton Pittsburgh on June 29.

The Ernst & Young Entrepreneur Of The Year awards program celebrates its 21st anniversary this year and continues to honor entrepreneurs who demonstrate excellence in such areas as innovation, financial performance, and personal commitment to their businesses and communities.

As a regional award winner, he will be considered for the national Young Entrepreneur Of The Year 2007 title. Ernst & Young will announce the winner Nov. 17. The national Entrepreneur Of The Year award recipient qualifies for consideration for the world event, held in Monte Carlo.

CNX Gas Corp. is an independent natural gas exploration, development, production and gathering company operating in the Appalachian and Illinois basins of the United States.

The Entrepreneur Of The Year awards program was created and is produced by professional services firm Ernst & Young LLP to recognize outstanding entrepreneurs who are building and leading dynamic and growing businesses.

CNX Gas promotes Johnson to executive vice president

Submitted to The Dominion Post

CNX Gas Corp. announced that Stephen W. Johnson has been promoted to executive vice president.

"As General Counsel, Steve has been instrumental in providing timely and effective legal counsel since his arrival nearly two years ago," said Nicholas J. DeLuliis, president and chief executive officer. "He also established our human resources, land and business development functions to the point where we enjoy the superior strategic positioning that we have today. I have the utmost confidence in his ability."

Johnson has been general counsel of CNX Gas since Sept. 1, 2005. He was named senior vice president on Dec. 5, 2005. Prior to joining CNX Gas, he was a partner in the Business and Regulatory Group at Reed Smith LLP, an international law firm with about 1,000 lawyers.

He has served as corporate, securities and mergers and acquisitions counsel to both public and privately held companies for his entire professional career.

He is chairman of NEED, a non-profit organization that provides college scholarships to minority students, and a director of Concordia Lutheran Ministries, a nonprofit continuing care retirement community serving thousands of elderly people each year.

Johnson received a bachelor's degree in history from the University of Virginia and a Juris Doctor from the University of Pittsburgh School of Law.

Lawmakers return to work with furloughs looming

Associated Press

HARRISBURG, Pa. — Legislators trickled back into the Capitol on Saturday with less than two days left to agree on a state budget before a partial government shutdown that would furlough thousands of state workers and curtail some state services.

High-level negotiations between the Legislature and aides to Gov. Ed Rendell ended late Friday with no agreements reported. Early Saturday afternoon, negotiators said no new talks were scheduled, but that they expected to meet at some point in the day.

A stalemate between the Democratic governor and the narrowly divided Legislature over a $27 billion-plus budget and some of Rendell's top priorities has showed no sign of easing.

If today ends without a deal in place, more than 24,000 state workers whose jobs are not deemed to be essential to health and safety will be furloughed without pay.

The union that represents many of those workers filed a lawsuit overnight challenging the furlough policy, and Republican legislators who represent districts around Harrisburg gathered on the Capitol steps to register their protest.

Sen. Jeffrey Piccola, R-Dauphin, said Rendell is using the threat of furloughs to put pressure on legislators in negotiations. Piccola also said that federal labor law is ambiguous and furloughs are neither necessary nor mandatory.

"The governor is using all the tools in his arsenal, which are furloughs and layoffs," Piccola said.

A spokesman for Rendell, who was expected to address the budget situation in a news conference Saturday afternoon, disputed that assertion.

"It comes as somewhat of a surprise that the Republicans have waited until the 7th of July to realize that not having passed a budget has ramifications," spokesman Chuck Ardo said.

The dispute also has drawn in the state's five slot-machine casinos, which went to court Friday to try to prevent being closed when Revenue Department workers are furloughed.

In the casinos' defense, Republican senators have exercised the chamber's rarely used subpoena power to try to force top Rendell administration officials to answer questions from a Senate panel about how they drew up a government shutdown policy that affects the casinos.

Greer announces upgrades

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Greer Industries has announced several upgrade projects slated for the company's Greer Lime facility located near Riverton.

The most significant project is the installation of a new Bradley Hercules Aircswept Mill.

The mill, which will replace the current fine-grinding system, will allow Greer Lime to provide a greater range and higher volume of limestone products. Customers will have a source they can rely on not only for products that are perfectly matched to their applications but that can be delivered in the quantities needed, when needed.

Built by Bradley Pulvarizer Co., the mill has been designed to provide greater control over current product lines and will enhance the consistency and quality of Greer's pulverized limestone products.

GREER LIMESTONE Co. is a division of Greer Industries Inc. John Raese and David Raese co-own Greer Industries. They also co-own the West Virginia Newspaper Publishing Co., publisher of The Dominion Post, and the West Virginia Radio Corp.

Centra Bank opens Hagerstown bank

The Dominion Post

Washington County, Md., Commission President John Barr, Economic Development Director Deborah Everhart and other city, county and civic officials joined the Centra Bank board of directors and employees to officially open its first office at Kenley Square, Fredrick Street, Hagerstown, Md. More than 250 business, education and civic leaders attended the event.

Centra Bank Hagerstown Board Chairman Michael A. Murray, president and owner of Direct Mail Processors, introduced the Board of Directors that has been labeled a "Who's Who" of Washington County business leaders.

Murray said they had the good fortune of an existing banking facility at Kenley Square to move into, allowing them to begin operations rapidly. A search is under way for sites for other offices.

Murray announced the group has filed for a $20 million stock offering to be sold to investors in Washington County. The demand for the stock is extremely high, he added.

Tim Henry, chief executive officer of Centra Hagerstown, introduced the 15-member staff, which has 184 years of banking experience.

Bank officers said all dollars deposited in Centra Hagerstown will remain to become residential, commercial and consumer loans. Decisions will be made at the local level, they stressed.

1 C-note, 6 months and 2 gay cowboys

I'VE SPENT ALMOST $100 to not watch "Brokeback Mountain."

No, I didn't pay someone to keep the title out of my sight — I actually did want to see it. Which is why I ordered it from Netflix on Jan. 7.

Apparently, however, my tastes changed by about Jan. 9, because when the movie arrived at my house from Netflix, I didn't feel much like watching it. For the next six months.

And so it sat, right next to my TV, opened but never removed from the trademark red envelope in which it shipped.

Every day I would look at it and think, "I need to remember to send that back." And every day I would immediately think of something else, thus forgetting to put it in the mailbox yet again. So by the TV it stayed.

That is until, after seeing a Netflix commercial, Chris finally did what both of us had put off for months. He stood up, put the movie into its return slip, and took it out — right then and there — to be picked up the following day.

That was June 17. It's funny because when Netflix first started, I couldn't wait to sign up. I had pretty much picked the documentary section of Blockbuster clean, and was in desperate need of a new source. And at the beginning of my membership, I was pretty good about it — get a movie, watch it within a couple of days, send it back.

You know, the way you're supposed to do it. Fast-forward a couple of months and I guess the novelty wore off. Or I simply fell back into my old, lazy, lackadaisical habits, where everything can be done tomorrow.

It is precisely this personality trait that always cost me an arm and a leg when renting movies — a $2.99 rental would inevitably cost me more like $20.99 because of late fees (turns out movies don't return themselves while sitting in the front seat), which is another reason I switched to Netflix in the first place.

This is, incidentally, how I ended up owing 40-some dollars for "Chicago" when I returned it to a local rental house — and I should probably note I also never watched it either.

Actually, sitting here writing about my poor movie-borrowing history prompted me to see if I could, in fact, view a list of every film I've had delivered since I signed up. From the start of my membership in February 2006 until now, I've returned 30 movies, eight of which were Chris' picks. Of the 22 that were mine, I neglected to watch seven, leaving my actual usage at 23 movies in 18 months.

That means — WARNING: WRITER ATTEMPTING SIMPLE MATH (always ugly) — I've watched an average of 2.87 movies a month. Which in turn means each movie has cost me roughly $7.95.

So in all honesty, even with my embarrassingly bad usage of it, Netflix is likely still cheaper for me than renting from video stores usually was.

The recent C-note revelation, however — that was a bit of a shock.

I just hope those cute cowboys were worth it, though I guess I'll never know.

Because there's no way I'm risking renting it again.

Coaster fans meet at Kennywood July 15 for KennyKon XVIII

BY KATIE McDOWELL
The Dominion Post

When it comes to having fun, few folks know how to do it like roller-coaster enthusiasts.

And they'll be letting loose July 15 at Kennywood in West Mifflin, Pa., for the 18th annual KennyKon.

This year's gathering will mark the 80th anniversary of the Racer, one of Kennywood's signature wooden coasters.

Mary Lou Rosemeyer, marketing director for Kennywood, said she expects a couple of hundred American Coaster Enthusiasts members. Most will come from the western Pennsylvania region, but there will likely be attendees from all over the country.

While there, they'll ride (over and over again, probably) Kennywood's handful of coasters, from the old, wooden Jack Rabbit with its signature jump, the Racer with its dual cars, the Thunderbolt, Phantom's Revenge (built using part of Kennywood's famous coaster of yesteryear, the Steel Phantom) and the Exterminator, an underground coaster.

Rosemeyer said Kennywood's become a favorite of coaster enthusiasts because the park manages to keep up with what's new in amusement, while still embracing the traditional. "People love that," she said. "It's tricky to do, because when you have the acreage that we have, the only way to put in something new is to take something old out. I think people like all of our coasters, but the top two most people say are the Thunderbolt and Phantom's Revenge. But they all have a character of their own."

That philosophy of keeping the old with the new has long been in practice at Kennywood, Rosemeyer said. For example, when the coaster made it on the the National Register of Historic Landmarks back in 1989, park managers decided to make it look like it did when it opened in 1927. When they began tearing down the newer facade, they discovered — voila! — the original facade still underneath.

The only single-track coaster in the U.S. (there's one in Mexico and one in the U.K., Rosemeyer noted), the Racer was designed by John Miller, a prominent coaster designer of the era.

It's a favorite of ACE member Ed Blank, a 63-year-old retired journalist from Mount Lebanon, Pa.

"Although I have to admit the seats feel a little tighter every year," he said, patting his belly. "The Racer was KENNYKON XVIII will be July 15 at Kennywood in West Mifflin, Pa. About 200 members of American Coaster Enthusiasts are expected to attend, but the park is open to the public that day. Rates are $31 for a Kennywood Funday Pass, $19 for a Kennywood Junior Funday Pass (under 46 inches tall) and $15 for a Kennywood Senior Funday Pass (ages 55 and up). always my childhood favorite. I took to coasters immediately. I'm so glad it's still there."

The Jack Rabbit — which turned 85 last year — was also designed by Miller and features a unique double-dip.

According to Rosemeyer, a 73-year-old coaster fan loved the attraction so much he marked the coaster's birthday last year by riding it 85 times in a row.

Bill Linkenheimer, secretary and past president of ACE Western Pennsylvania said Kennywood's old, wooden coasters rank high on list.

"Kennywood is one of my favorite parks," he said. "I'm not using that term loosely. It's tough to choose a favorite, but it's surely among my five favorites and proba-

■ Take Interstate 79 North toward Washington, Pa. Just past Washington, continue on I-79 North.

■ Take Exit 59A to merge onto I-279 to Pittsburgh.

■ Once out of the Fort Pitt Tunnel, take I-376 East toward Monroeville.

■ Take the Squirrel Hill exit. Veer right off the exit and go straight.

■ Follow the yellow Kennywood arrow signs until you cross the river and turn left at the far end of the bridge. You will now be on Route 837.

■ Kennywood is 1 1/2 miles ahead; the parking lot is on the right.

Dave Matthews Band has strange chemistry

Success tied to lots of time on the road

Billboard

From the humble beginnings of drummer Carter Beauford's mother's basement and a crucial Tuesday-night residency at Trax in Charlottesville, Va., the Dave Matthews Band has become the biggest touring success story to emerge from the 1990s.

Riding and then surpassing a wave of success from a rejuvenated post-Grateful Dead jam band scene, DMB has become, quite simply, the top-drawing American band in the world. In fact, only one act — the Rolling Stones — sold more tickets than DMB did in the preceding decade. Band founder and namesake Dave Matthews was a reluctant frontman as he made the switch from Charlottesville bartender to leader of one of the tightest, hardest-working ensembles in rock 'n' roll history.

This is a band not dependent on radio airplay (though it has enjoyed some) or platinum record sales (and it has enjoyed that as well). DMB is a touring band, one of the most successful that has ever hit the highway, and its connection with its fans is via the live performance conduit from stage to audience. Billboard spoke with Matthews in the downtime just prior to a late-May show at the Point in Dublin, as the band hovered on the brink of yet another massive North American tour. Matthews was relaxed, thoughtful and ever humble as he discussed the past, present and future of DMB, and how important it is to "get it right."

Q: From the band's first rehearsals in the early 1990s in Charlottesville, could you sense a special chemistry?

A: Very early on it had a "life of its own" sort of quality. When we first got together, it was pretty strange. I think a couple of heads turned outside of Carter's mom's basement. But pretty soon after that, certainly by our first gig, when we played even we were surprised by how people lit up.

Our first couple of gigs we only had four songs and we stretched them out, and that became part of defining what was to evolve from us. It wasn't planned, and it sort of continued that way, and at its best it still continues that way.

Q: Was extensive touring always part of the game plan?

A: It was the only thing we could rely on in the beginning, and in a way it has been the only thing we have relied on since. We've had good fortune with CDs and we've had some good fortune with radio, but it never really took. It sort of always followed more than led, that side of it, the industry side of it.

There was a strange independence to the way we got here, to where we are now. I know some people would say we're pretty mainstream, but we certainly got here in a pretty unique way and have maintained it in a pretty unique way. If the record industry went belly up I certainly don't think it would kill us and, hey, it might even help us.

Q: It seems your recording career and your live career are sort of on parallel courses.

A: That's very true, and the one that's sort of more faithful, the live thing, seems thus far to be the place where things are worked out in a lot of different ways, whether it's music, relationships, songs. The evolution seems to happen there. One day we'll make our best record, but it hasn't happened yet. But they are two separate things. On the one side, the touring side, we're sort of formidable, and on the side of record sales, not so much.

COASTERS

bly one of my two favorites. Having lived in the Pittsburgh area for my entire life and growing up going to Kennywood as a young child, this may seem biased, but the fact is that Kennywood is a favorite of many ACE members from all over.

"The park is home to three wood coasters. There's only a handful of parks that have that number or more wood coasters, and Kennywood is the only park in the United States to have three wood coasters that are all 40 years old or older. Coaster enthusiasts also like the fact that all of Kennywood's coasters are unique and several of them utilize the park's hilly topography.

"ACE members tend to be partial to wood coasters," he explained. "With wood coasters, each one tends to be unique. Even when a park attempts to duplicate one, there are so many variables that it inevitably ends up feeling very different when ridden. Kennywood not only has three great wooden coasters, but they are among the most unique — with two having substantial drops before the train hits the lift hill [Thunderbolt and Jack Rabbit] and one being one of the world's only three continuous track racing coasters [the train arrives back on the opposite side from which it started], and the only one like it in the U.S.

"My favorite wooden coaster at the park is Thunderbolt, though Racer scores very high in the 'fun category' for me — an element that I weight very heavily when comparing rides. Many feel the same way about Jack Rabbit, including member Vic Kleman who has taken thousands of rides on it."

The Thunderbolt can reach up to 50 miles per hour and features two drops — the largest at the end of the ride.

It's a thrill 9-1/2-year-old David Hahner III tasted for the first time recently.

"I've ridden 145 coasters," he said while waiting his turn to ride the Thunderbolt again. "But today's my first time on the Thunderbolt because I just made the height requirement."

Hahner rode his first coaster at 18 months said his dad, ACE member Dave Hahner. Since then, the father/son duo have been regulars at Kennywood. But family trips to Kennywood were part of Dave Hahner's life long before his son was born. His grandfather used to work on Noah's Ark, which was built in 1936.

"He brought home free tickets all the time, so we went a lot," Dave, a Pittsburgh-area native, said. "My favorite coaster was always the Racer. Then I worked here in college. I know this place backward and forwards."

Dave isn't exaggerating, either. He's so familiar with — and so fond of — the park, he wrote a book on the subject, "Images of America: Kennywood," one of the Arcadia "Images of America" series.

"I've ridden over 300 coasters and been to 100 different parks and Kennywood's still my favorite," he said.

So how did the Thunderbolt stack up for his son David?

"The Phantom's Revenge is still my favorite," David decided right away. "Because it's fast."

Fast it is. Built using part of the original Steel Phantom track and chassis, the Phantom's Revenge reaches up to 85 miles per hour and features a drop of 230 feet.

But when asked to explain what it is about roller coasters in general that keeps him coming back, David wasn't so quick with an answer.

After thinking about it for a second, standing in the shadow of the Phantom, he finally fixed on one.

"We were just born to ride coasters," he said, looking at his dad.

"He's right," father Dave agreed. "He's said he's going to get a job here like I did when he turns 16. So I guess amusement parks are literally in our blood."

Actor Daniel Radcliffe arrives at the European premiere of his new film "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," at a cinema in London.

Actor is wild about 'Harry'

BY ANGELA DAWSON

Entertainment News Wire

LONDON — Having made headlines and raised eyebrows earlier this year with his daring, flesh-baring performance in the London stage production of "Equus," Daniel Radcliffe returns to Harry Potter, the family-friendly role that made him an international star.

Radcliffe, soon to be 18, has no regrets about his controversial stage appearance, though. Indeed, the young thespian insists that doing live theater every night for 16 weeks made him a better actor.

Dressed casually in torn jeans and a white T-shirt, Radcliffe is sitting in a suite at the historic Claridge's hotel. His thick brown hair is lightly mussed and his voice is deep and rich. He gestures for a guest to sit next to him on a couch and politely offers a glass of water.

He reports that he recently finished the equivalent of high school and plans to do independent study in lieu of going to college. Focused on acting, Radcliffe is certain that further schooling is unnecessary for now.

"It's not that I don't think I need it, it's just not the right thing for me to do," he says in a determined way. "If I were at university, I'd constantly be thinking, I want to be acting now."

Besides, he continues, the subjects he's interested in — creative writing and reading the classics, in particular — can be self-taught.

Not so for his famous on-screen character, who with "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," is entering his fifth year at the Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, with two more years to go.

Directed by British filmmaker David Yates, "Order of the Phoenix" finds Harry coping with pivotal changes and facing new threats to his life. Thankfully, he has his close pals, Ron (Rupert Grint) and Hermione (Emma Watson), as well as others to support and defend him.

HAVE A SUGGESTION for a Bar Buzz column? E-mail your ideas to lifestyles@dominionpost.com.

EACH WEEK, READERS hear about how cheap/fun/cool the entire collection of mainstream Morgantown bars and clubs are.

I am certainly guilty of this too but frankly, that type of column can become a bit boring. Therefore, I have taken it upon myself to sacrifice some of my precious nights to attend and review Morgantown area bars that most readers have never been in. I know what you're thinking: "Wow, she really puts herself on the line for the job." Well, I'll tell you, it's times like these when I realize what a difference I can make in the community and really appreciate the work that I do.

Onward, to the review!

I first heard of Buck's Corner Pub from a friend who certainly did not seem like the type of person who would want to be seen at a place with a name containing the word Buck. I listened to why he and his friends are regulars and decided to check the place out for myself.

I used to be a resident of South Park, so I knew exactly where Buck's was located. (For those of you who don't, you will find it on the right side of Brockway Avenue on the way to Sabraton coming from the South Park area.)

We walked in and, well, we were the only ones in the entire place. Oh wait, did I tell you it was a Monday night? Well, it was a Monday night so I can't imagine too many places would be hopping.

My first impression of the bar was that it was clean but quiet. The large room was filled with plenty of seating, big-screen televisions, a pool table, a jukebox, and much to my surprise — no hunting decor.

There were two men behind the bar. One was a new bartender and the other was Buck. After friendly introductions, we decided to order drinks. We found out about something called the "Tanker," a mug that holds 36 ounces (or three full beers). Well, for only $3.50, the Tanker was just too good to pass up.

After talking with Buck for awhile, he was eager to show us the upstairs, which was not open to the public on Monday nights. It was amazing to see the difference in atmosphere from downstairs to upstairs. This place was actually like a mini Bent Willey's — except much cleaner and generally better in every way.

There was a large dance floor with a raised stage for live bands to perform, a DJ booth and plenty of seating surrounding the dance floor.

Also upstairs was a room with another huge television entirely devoted to playing Xbox. This place was too good to be true. I was saddened that I couldn't have seen the dance floor on a better night but it was amazing nonetheless.

Back downstairs, it wasn't long before 10 more patrons came in and we decided that some sort of music had to be played. We made our way to the jukebox where we found touch-screen access to virtually any song we wanted via the Internet.

I needed to use the bathroom. I've had some bad bathroom experiences in bars, so I never really look forward to that moment.

But after entering maybe the cleanest bathroom at a bar in Morgantown, I had no problem making numerous trips thereafter.

My final test for this bar was complete.

I had made my decision. Let's see what we have here.

It's clean, cheap, has good music, big TVs, friendly employees, plenty of parking, an Xbox room and a dance floor that could stand up to any club.

(Oh yeah, and their spicy garlic wings are amazing.)

Is there anything wrong with this place?

Well, I guess that's a no.

NICK OF TIME

Chocolate — no longer a guilty pleasure?

I WAS AT CVS the other day for shampoo, low-dose aspirin, a few pharmaceuticals and — most importantly, of course — some chocolate.

Not for me, surprisingly. My husband Mike is the chocolate fiend in our house.

I like chocolate. And if it sits there looking pretty long enough, I'll eat it. But he's the one who orders Rocky Road at the custard stand and a chocolate milkshake with every restaurant meal except breakfast. Early breakfast, at least.

He's the one who likes a bag of M&Ms open beside him in the console when we're on a car trip. He loves chocolate-covered raisins. Chocolate-covered nuts of any kind. He'll even eat Altoid mints if they're covered in chocolate.

All while remaining annoyingly slender.

And so he's the one I had in mind when I slipped a coupon packet from CVS Pharmacy into my purse last week when it arrived in a flurry of junk mail.

Have you been chocolate shopping lately? They may as well stock it in the medicine aisles. What used to be described as a deliciously delicious piece of heaven in a candy wrapper is now nearly a vitamin.

The coupons in the flier were all for Hershey bars or Hershey truffles or compact little Hershey squares. The packaging on each variety at least hinted at health and were sprinkled with popular buzz words like antioxidant, whole and natural. One's called Hershey's Natural Flavanol ANTIOXIDANT Milk Chocolate. The information provided touts "more antioxidant capacity (ORAC — Oxygen Radical Absorbance Capacity) than the leading dark chocolate, or 3 cups of green tea!" And the All Natural EXTRA DARK assortment boasts that "each 40 g serving contains 480 mg of flavanol antioxidant power."

The Whole Bean variety tempts chocolate lovers with "a mildly sweet and smooth milk chocolate with 40percent less sugar than the leading milk chocolate — plus the benefits of 7 g of fiber from cocoa and inulin per 40 g serving and cocoa antioxidants."

Inulin? From Merriam-Webster's Online: Etymology: probably from German Inulin, from Latin inula elecampne: a white plant polysaccharide used especially to improve the flavor and texture of low-fat and low-sugar processed foods. Yum.

Of course, Hershey is not alone in emphasizing the health benefits over the taste benefits. It seems all the big chocolate makers have turned that corner, and I suppose with good cause.

Live Science, one of my favorite science sources, lists chocolate as No. 2 of its Top 10 Bad Things That Are Good For You. "Chocolate lovers rejoice," says the report. "Study after study lately has touted the magical benefits of the indulgent treat, which is packed with the antioxidant flavanols that prevent certain cancers and keep your arteries from clogging. The most recent news? These powerful chemicals may even increase blood flow to the brain, warding off dementia. Just stick to the highest cocoa content possible — the bars packed with sugar don't help your health one bit."

So maybe they will start stocking chocolate in the medicine aisles. If they do, though, they might lose Mike. He'd never look there.

I, however, could probably be persuaded to add the decadent antioxidant to my vitamin regiment, inulin or no inulin. And Mike can keep having it for snacks and dessert.

To wit: "OMG, I was JK!"

Translation: "Oh my god, I was just kidding!"

The computer and text messaging has spawned a shorthand language of its own, one that is pervasive among teenagers and sometimes baffling to their parents — the language of acronyms.

"I'm never able to use them when I talk to my parents," said 13-year-old Mariah Luckey, taking a break from swimming recently at Fairmont's wave pool and referring to acronyms such as LOL (laugh out loud) and IDK (I don't know). "They think they're weird, and they don't understand."

Luckey does use them frequently among her friends, especially on the computer. She says it makes the conversations quicker, which enables her to talk to more people.

Her friend Erika Satterfield agrees. "It's become our language," the 13-year-old East Fairmont Junior High student said. "It's a faster way to talk and sometimes when I don't know what to say, I'll just say LOL."

Frances Biemann and her friends have also been known to talk like this.

"We say 'IDK,' that's kind of like a word now, too," said Frances, a 12-year-old middle school student.

She can't even pinpoint when it started. "At first it was kind of weird, but now it just seems kind of normal," Frances said.

So what's with the alphabet soup, you ask?

Welcome to the age of acronyms. It dawned in the late 1990s as Internet users began flocking to message boards, and peaked a couple of years ago when everyone and their mother started sending text messages on their trusty little cell phones.

It has evolved into a spoken language among young teens and middle school students, who use acronyms to speak to their friends in shorthand, save a little time or tell off-color jokes in front of confused parents (WTF is usually involved ... take a guess what that stands for).

"It works well when you're in class and you just remembered something you have to tell your friends," said recent college graduate Lora Sodini, also spending a day at the Fairmont pool. "By using acronyms, you're less likely to get caught texting."

When asked, several teenagers at the pool said they used JK (just kidding) and LOL the most frequently, with BRB (be right back) and OMG (oh my god) coming in as close seconds.

While these shorter acronyms are easily carried over from text messages and computer screens to everyday slang, some don't make the cut.

"I've typed ROTFL [rolling on the floor laughing] on the computer, to get the point across that something is very funny," said Sodini. "But, I would never actually say that to someone because I would already be laughing too hard."

Knock Knock's Text Message pad has common acronyms, and their definitions, used when chatting online.

Sodini, 21, says there are very few phrases she would actually utter out loud, except JK and BRB, which she only uses jokingly with her close friends.

Some linguists and English enthusiasts have long rued the Internet's pernicious influence, but David Crystal has watched the acronym age with enthusiasm.

Crystal, a linguist who authored the Cambridge Encyclopedia of Language, said acronyms are nothing new.

The Roman and Hebrew cultures used them thousands of years ago. SOS dates to the days of Morse code. ASAP first appeared in the dictionary in 1955, and Crystal's own uncle said "TTFN" (ta-ta for now) when he went off to work in the 1940s.

As for today's acronyms, "some might end up with a permanent home in the language, but I doubt that most will," Crystal said. "It's too early to say. It feels like a fashion, which might disappear as quickly as it started."

Trend-watchers agree that acronyms are just that — a trend.

"A couple of years ago all the girls were more into the OMG talk," said Denise Restauri, founder of AllyKatz.com, a social networking site for girls ages 10-15. "But as they get older and the years go by, they're doing less of it in general."

High school kids agree: They are so over the acronyms.

"We might say LOL sarcastically, if something isn't funny," said Nikki Ro, a high school senior.

While high school kids still use acronyms when texting or chatting

Three-legged dogs generally do just fine

Q: My 12-year-old boxer has a tumor on his leg that gets bigger every day. It doesn't seem to bother him, however. Two different veterinarians suggested removing this large tumor, and they said it would mean removing the leg. I could never do that to my dog; he's family. Any advice? — S.L.K., Cyberspace

A: Your love for your dog is clear. However, please consider that dogs have twice as many legs as we do, and having three isn't so bad. Three-legged dogs (unless they're terribly overweight) generally adjust quickly after surgery, and get around nearly as well as they always did. They can fetch tennis balls and terrify squirrels as adeptly on three legs as four. The psychological trauma of being expected to feel sad because they've lost a limb just doesn't seem to occur. Instead, quite the reverse, they act overjoyed to be alive.

Perhaps the book "Grizz's Story: A Greater Courage," by Grizz and Jo Helms, would serve as inspiration. This is the story of a Siberian husky diagnosed with cancer. Following the amputation of a leg, Grizz joyfully continued his life for another year. You can buy the book online only at: grizz.20megsfree.com/.

But we're getting ahead of ourselves. Veterinary oncologist Dr. Philip Bergman, chief medical officer for BrightHeart Veterinary Centers, says it's important to determine exactly what type of tumor is growing on your dog, and the sooner the better. As in humans, early diagnosis of cancer can make the difference between life and death. Consider seeing a veterinary oncologist. From your description, there's real reason for concern. A fine needle aspirate (sampling of what's inside the tumor) will be read by a pathologist. From there, a diagnosis and prognosis may be made. Likely possibilities if the tumor is malignant: a sarcoma or mast cell cancer.

Q: I've been feeding a feral cat in front of my apartment for about 7 months. She appears at night to eat, then hides somewhere during the day. She won't allow me to pet her. I was able to trap this cat and have her spayed not long after I began to feed her. But the shelter said that it's unlikely I'll ever be able to trap her again. We're moving, and my husband and I want to take this cat with us. How can we do this? — C.S., Lighthouse Point, FL

A: Dusty Rainbolt, of Lewisville, Texas, has trapped more cats than she can count. She says, "Some individuals do learn never to wander into a trap again, but then others get trapped over and over again. Your odds will be in your favor if you put something really smelly in the trap, like sardines or tuna. Put the food inside pantyhose and tie it to the trap, so the cat can't stand just outside the trap and with a paw pull a can or dish out. Don't wait until a day before your move; start trying to trap her as soon as you can, just in case it does take a while. Be sure you choose days you can keep an eye out. In Texas, the fire ants would be attracted to the tuna or sardines, and the cat could be attacked. You need to be around so the cat isn't in the cage for long."

Visit a vet for any needed vaccinations, particularly rabies, and to have the cat examined. Checking for feline leukemia and the feline immunodeficiency virus is a good idea.

Acclimate the cat to indoor life by secluding her in one room. Never force her to be petted. Instead, attach a glove to a yardstick and reach out to her that way. If she bites you, don't scream in pain and run off, reinforcing the biting behavior. (Note: Don't try this "glove track" until you feel the cat is ready.)

"Feed the cat as often in the day as you have time for, so she associates you with food," says Rainbolt, author of "Cat Wrangling" (Lyons Press, 2007; $14.95). Sit in the middle of the room and read a children's book to the kitty. A soft, soothing voice seems to calm the savage beast, or at least the scardy cat. Leave the cat carrier inside the special room and periodically feed your cat there. When you do move, it'll be a lot easier to get your cat into the carrier if she accepts the carrier as a friendly place.

Q: I just took in a stray cat. She's tentative, though not terrified. Any advice? — S.G., Topeka, KS

A: A truly feral cat is very difficult to tame. However, either young kittens or cats previously owned make wonderful pets. Follow the advice given to the previous question. Also, plug in Feliway (a kind of aromatherapy to calm cats), available at many pet stores, vet offices and online.

Consider clicker training. Click a clicker (available at pet stores and online) and offer an extraordinary treat, so the cat knows a click is good. Once she seems to understand, click the clicker for friendly behaviors, and ignore those which aren't. Most importantly, be patient.

Quilting for the heart

WVU Hospitals to offer multiphasic, PSA screenings

WVU Hospitals has teamed up with the Rotary Club of Morgantown and HEALTHSOUTH Mountain View Regional Rehabilitation Hospital to offer multiphasic and PSA health screenings. The screenings will be offered from 6:30-11 a.m. Aug. 11 and Aug. 18, at HEALTHSOUTH, located at 1160 Van Voorhis Road. This is a new location and one that we hope will accommodate the growing number of participants. The screenings are being performed by WVU Hospitals' Clinical Laboratories.

The multiphasic screening will provide 15 baseline blood analyses, including cholesterol. Results can help identify current or potential health problems, such as coronary heart disease, anemia, diabetes and kidney disease.

Dr. David Deci, of the WVU department of family medicine, encourages participants to discuss test results with their health-care providers.

"Tests results that fall outside of the recommended ranges may or may not indicate a health problem," he said. "Your health-care provider can determine if abnormalities indicate the need for more testing or treatment."

For the most accurate results, multiphasic participants should not eat, drink or smoke for 12 hours prior to the screening. Medication may be taken with small sips of water.

The PSA test measures a substance called prostate-specific antigen made by the prostate — a small gland that sits at the base of the male bladder. It's normal to find small quantities of PSA in the blood, and levels tend to gradually rise in men over the age of 60. PSA may become elevated due to infection (prostatitis), enlargement of the prostate or cancer. Prostate cancer is the most common cancer, other than skin cancers, in American men. It is the second leading cause of cancer death in American men; lung cancer is the leading cause of death.

"The only way to determine if someone is suffering from prostate cancer is through a digital rectal exam and a PSA test," Deci said. "These should be performed annually in all men over the age of 50. Those who are at increased risk for developing the disease should begin testing at age 45."

African-American men and those with a father and/or brother diagnosed with the disease fall into this category.

The cost for the multiphasic screening is $35; PSA, $15. Payment can be made at the time of the screening(s).

WVUH will not bill participants' insurance companies for the screenings. While walk-ins will not be turned away, appointments are strongly encouraged.

To schedule an appointment, call the WVU HealthLine at 598-6100 or (800) 982-8242.

Call today and take an active approach to a healthy lifestyle.

Show raises awareness of congenital heart defects

BY MICHELLE WOLFORD
The Dominion Post

At a time in their lives when they have every right to put themselves first, Steve and Lya Stroupe are thinking of others.

The Morgantown couple lost their son just over a year ago to a congenital heart defect. But the Stroupes aren't thinking about themselves. They're using their time to let others know about the most common birth defect — the one that took the life of their 21-month-old son, Ian Patrick.

On July 14, the Stroupes will bring a unique quilt exhibit to Wesley United Methodist Church at 503 High St. Morgantown is the only city in the United States that will host the show this year.

The Congenital Heart Defect Awareness Quilt Project was, according to its Web site, "created to promote greater public awareness of congenital heart defects, while honoring the strength, courage, and commitment of all those born with a CHD and their families."

Quilt squares feature a heart for each victim of the disease. Those who've succumbed are honored with angel wings.

This year's exhibit — the one time this year all the quilts will be in one place — is in memory of Ian. The couple attended last year's show in Chicago, where a heart with their son's name first appeared.

"There aren't a lot of groups to spread awareness of congenital heart defects," Steve Stroupe said. "It's the No. 1 birth defect and the No. 1 cause of infant-related death, but there's not a lot of research money granted to heart defects. We're just trying to spread awareness in the hope that it will get some funding, some recognition."

Ian Patrick Stroupe was diagnosed with a congenital heart defect at just 7 weeks, his mother, Lya Cartwright-Stroupe, said. "His heart stopped and he stopped breathing at home," she recalled. "Four or five months later, we started looking for a support group in West Virginia. There wasn't one."

When the Stroupes found the Congenital Heart Defects Awareness Quilt Project, they realized how many others were going through what they were.

The exhibit features 50 quilts, each featuring 42 hearts — 42 people with congenital heart defects. "The squares represent people in 50 states and 17 countries," she said. Squares include the name and birthdate of each victim, and an abbreviation of the defect. Stroupe said there are 35 known digital heart defect diagnoses.

The CHD Awareness Quilt Show doesn't have the name recognition of, say, the Jerry Lewis Telethon — the quilts are the product of a grassroots movement. There's no celebrity pitchman to advance the cause. "It's just parents like us hosting it," Lya Stroupe said. But the show has the same goal: To educate the public and raise funds for research. The quilts are made by volunteers.

The quilt project is the brainchild of Gabrielle Schoeffield of Taneytown, Md. She said there were two events that fired her passion to raise awareness about congenital heart defects.

"First, my son was born [more than 30 years ago] with a heart murmur that was discovered during a well-baby checkup by his pediatrician," she said. "He was supposed to be a twin but I lost the baby early on in my pregnancy. For nearly nine months I worried but Bobby was born 'healthy' and nothing ever came of his 'murmur.' I felt lucky but I never forgot how I felt when the doctor told me he had a murmur.

"When I met Lacy, the son of a family friend, all those memories flooded back," Schoeffield said. "What his family went through after his CHD was found at 13 months was devastating. I experienced firsthand what it was like for families to face surgery alone and the near loss of their child during surgery as well as having to suddenly put their child on the transplant list."

"I decided the best way to call attention to the numbers of people [more than 1 million] and their families out there dealing with this was to create something visual to display. Thus the quilt project was born."

The Stroupes have arranged a silent auction and bake sale in conjunction with the exhibit. Silent auction items include a round of golf for four at Stonewall Jackson Resort, an autographed WVU football, Longaberger baskets, gift certificates from The Olive Garden, Barnes & Noble and the Blue Moose Cafe, quilted pillow covers and purses. Kids can bid on pizza and ice cream coupons, and an iPod. There will be a drawing for a quilt created by Bonnie Miltenberger, who made Ian's square for the Stroupes. Tickets for the drawing are $2 each, or three for $5; six for $10. All funds raised go to continue CHD awareness programs.

In addition to the exhibit, which runs from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. July 14, there will be a can-delighting and remembrance service at 2:30 p.m. for the 552 angels represented on the quilts. And the CHD Awareness Quilt Project will present an Automated External Defibrillator to Bob Pirner, director of Morgantown's SteppingStones, an agency that provides recreation opportunities to the disabled. The presentation is at 3:30 p.m. The project has so far donated five AEDs across the country to schools and other facilities, Schoeffield said. The event, part of Main Street Morgantown's Kids' Day, will also feature a kids' craft corner and other children's activities.

The CHD quilt exhibit isn't the only positive result of Ian's death: Lya, who has a Ph.D. in musical arts, has enrolled in nursing school. "If I can just help one person," she said, "it's worth it."

Chiropractic, massage therapies enter mainstream

Q: It seems there is a chiropractor or massage therapist on every Main Street in the country. Why have these alternative health-care providers become so popular?

A: A recent study published in the Annals of Internal Medicine defined the role of complementary and alternative medical therapies. Massage and chiropractic were included as the two most widely sought CAM treatments.

The most revealing statistic was the effectiveness of alternative forms of care on the 10 most commonly reported ailments. Alternative-care providers came out on top more often. CAM therapy was considered better for back conditions, arthritis, headaches and neck conditions. Conventional medical care was considered superior for hypertension.

The study, which questioned a sample group of 2,055 people, identified trends and consumer perceptions of health care. The reason you see chiropractors and massage therapists on every street corner is they make a substantial improvement in their patient's health and well-being.

The study's summary determined that consumers are increasingly using alternative care to address current ailments and improve overall health. It also stated consumers are spending their own money for chiropractic and other forms of alternative care and are becoming more responsible for choosing which care is most appropriate for them. The trend taking place in all parts of our society is growing, and younger people will be driving this trend well into the future.

Q: I have hip pain that bothers me daily, especially when I climb stairs. How can chiropractic help relieve this?

A: The general perception of chiropractic care is that it's a form of treatment for back pain, but it's much more than that. A chiropractic adjustment is done on the spine, but the beneficial effects can reach out into the body's joints and extremities. Problems in joints and extremities can stem from a misalignment in the spine or pelvis. An improperly aligned spine can put the body's limbs slightly out of balance.

Hip pain is often the result of tight muscles and tendons that attach to the pelvis and hip. So pain or dysfunction in the hip, as well as shoulders, elbows, knees, wrists and ankles, can be alleviated, in some cases, by adjusting the vertebrae while correcting those dysfunctional muscle groups.

A chiropractor examines the spine and where he detects a misalignment or restriction, also called a subluxation, he gently moves the bone back into its proper position. The chiropractor also may work directly on the joint or joints involved. The treatment may involve manipulation of the joint, physiotherapy techniques, and exercises designed specifically for a patient's condition. Nutrition and stress-reduction advice may also be part of the treatment. Talk with a chiropractor about the benefits of treatment.

DR. KEVIN TREMBUSH is the chiropractor and clinic director at Advantage Health & Wellness, in Morgantown. Dr. Steven Pollack contributed to this column.

Use car-time as quality time with children

MY DAUGHTER has always been an easy rider. Usually she sleeps, but I still pack diversions for road trips because it's as fun as it is practical.

If you know how I feel about television, you'll know that we don't have a portable DVD player in the car.

Buy or borrow audiobooks on CD or download them to an iPod. I figure the library has classics like "Charlotte's Web." All of the Harry Potter books on CD could probably get you to the Grand Canyon. Break out the headphones when Mom and Dad don't care about the storyline.

"Guess the animal" beats "I Spy" any day, and you can play it in the dark and on long stretches of nothing: Remember that scene in "Brother Bear"?

Play car-aoke. Sing along to the radio and, without warning, the driver or front-seat passenger turns down the radio. Passengers keep singing and see if they're on the mark when the volume comes up again.

On past trips, we have taken a Magna Doodle, puzzles and a singalong CD. But for our most recent 250-mile ride I wanted something different, in case familiarity breeds crankiness.

From Web sites, I printed coloring pages and bingo cards and got ideas for other games. I got inexpensive "prizes" for when she marked off every road sign, animal and vehicle on the bingo card: 25-cent pencils, sheets of stickers and barrettes.

I also got bribes: "If you can be quiet until Daddy gets us out of the city, you can have these Angelina Ballerina paper dolls."

Then there was the whole matter of food. I was deciding between the traditional mozzarella string cheese and a string of braided mozz and cheddar, when I saw Kraft Snackables To Go! Ritz crackers and cheddar cheese. Sealed in plastic, they survived floating in melted ice in the cooler. Those crackers you spread the cheese on with a plastic knife would be good, too, if slightly more messy.

Another potentially messy snack is smashed graham crackers with raisins or cranberries or fruit snack "bugs." Kids sift through the "sand" in the baggie to find the critters to eat. Just imagine if that spills. I think it would be a better idea to pack a couple of graham squares, a handful of mini marshmallows and another of chocolate-covered raisins. You want it to melt in the hot car. Then pop it in the cooler to firm up and you have a s'mores-like treat, peeling down the plastic bag that also keeps hands clean.

Other good tips I got from other moms and dads online included freezing juice boxes — they keep the cooler cold as well as bagged ice and thaw by the time you're ready for a drink.

Protecting baby's blues

Studies show sunglasses important for babies, children

BY CARLA K. JOHNSON
Associated Press

Once upon a time, a baby wearing sunglasses was merely a chance for a cute snapshot. Now, some eye doctors say parents should start putting sunglasses on babies as young as 9 months to protect their eyes. The cumulative effect of the sun's damaging ultraviolet rays can cause early cataracts, these experts say.

Other eye doctors are skeptical, saying no medical studies link childhood sun exposure to later eye disease.

But makers of sunglasses aren't waiting around for more research. Foster Grant, Julbo and Baby Banz have designed sunglasses ($15 to $30 per pair) with wraparound straps to keep them on a little one's head. The frames come in pink, blue and dozens of other colors and patterns.

Dr. Nathalie Azar, a pediatric ophthalmologist at University of Illinois Chicago, applauds the products and encourages parents to start sunglasses young.

"The sooner you do it, the better. If kids get into the habit, they can learn to keep sunglasses on," says Azar, who is working with the Lions Club International on a campaign to get kids to wear sunglasses.

Dr. Richard Lewis, professor of ophthalmology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, says there's only suggestive evidence of harm. For example, people who live at high altitudes and don't wear sunglasses are more prone to cataracts than people at lower altitudes. He doesn't push sunglasses for babies. He says, "Is it an OK idea? Sure. Is there good rational scientific proof? No."

Weighing the evidence, many parents will decide to err on the side of caution. Here are some tips from the American Academy of Ophthalmology for protecting babies' and children's eyes:

- Look for sunglasses that offer protection from UVA and UVB, two types of ultraviolet light that can injure the eye. Cheap sunglasses, without UV protection, actually do more harm than good because tinted lenses cause the pupils to dilate, letting in damaging UV rays.
- Choose frames made from polycarbonates, which are less likely to break. Look for acrylic or other scratch-resistant lens material.

- Let older children choose their sunglasses. Make sure they try them on to check for comfort.

- Select frames with a built-in saddle for the nose. They're more durable than ones with adjustable nose pads

- Be aware that light-colored eyes have less pigment and are more sensitive to the sun.

- Buy prescription sunglasses or clip-on sunglasses for children who wear prescription eyeglasses.

- Offer brimmed hats and baseball caps to children who just won't wear sunglasses.

- Be a good role model. Wear your own sunglasses and hats outdoors.

Tips to protect your kids from unsavory online content

MarketWatch

WASHINGTON — It's easy for your kids to chat online. And it's just as easy for predators to chat with your children. On top of concerns about criminal conduct and adult content, children can also be exposed to cyber bullying and trash talk.

But the Internet is here to stay. So experts say it's more important than ever for parents and other adults to take responsibility and make sure that youngsters are protected.

"Parents need to learn how to control the media. You can get anything you want on the Internet. It's got an amazing amount of content that most parents would find objectionable," said Dr. Victor Strasburger, chairman for the American Academy of Pediatrics communications and media council.

Here are five ways to keep things safe:

1. Get smart

Most parents are confident that they're keeping track of what their kids are doing on the Internet. Almost three-quarters of parents with children 9 or older using the Internet at home said they know "a lot" about their children's online activities, according to a June survey from the Kaiser Family Foundation.

Despite the Kaiser report, "most parents are pretty clueless about what their children are seeing," Strasburger contends.

As any kid with basic computer savvy can illustrate, it takes seconds to erase evidence that he or she has visited a forbidden site, or engaged in other banned activities.

Educating a generation of less-tech savvy parents will help them keep better track of their kids. It could also give them a feeling of comfort and expertise so they don't feel intimidated.

"Yes, your kids may have more

ClipArt.com illustration

Experts say it's more important than ever to take responsibility for what your children are doing online.

knowledge and experience of how to use these technologies, but you as parents have far more discernment and wisdom. We tell [parents] not to abdicate responsibility simply because you're not 100 percent certain about technology," said Stephen Balkam, founder and chief executive of the Family Online Safety Institute.

2. Chat in real life

The most important step a parent can take is to talk to their kids about sex, violence and abuse — hopefully before they are deluged with images and written content on the Internet, experts say.

"I think parents need to understand that they trump the media if they are willing to talk about the issues that they are concerned about," Strasburger said. "So parents need to have conversations with their kids at a young age."

MySpace.com, the online community, recommends that parents tell teens not to give personal information to e-strangers and to be careful about photos. After all, the Internet has a way of hanging onto information even after a user tries to delete it.

3. Take advantage of tools

A vast array of tools — many free — is available to control online use.

"There's never been a time in history where there have been so many tools available to tailor your children's online experience," Balkam said.

Some recommended sites that provide information are StaySafe.org, GetNetWise.org and iKeepSafe.org, according to Adam Thierer, who authored a recently released report on parental controls and online child protection.

Thierer also favors parents using a "layered approach" when it comes to protection. That is, a parent can combine content filters — through an Internet service provider or software — with "safe search" controls, such as Google's SafeSearch Filtering, and other tools.

Microsoft's new Vista operating system embeds family-safety tools and the latest generation of game consoles, such as Nintendo's Wii and Sony's PlayStation 3, has controls to restrict content and online play, and to limit playing to a list of approved friends.

"When it comes to video games we want to make sure that parents are aware that kids can play online, and they could be playing with strangers online," said Patricia Vance, president of the Entertainment Software Rating Board.

She added that monitoring your children's video game play is "very important" to make sure that they do not download anything that could significantly change the content of a game.

MySpace.com also enables users to set their profiles to private.

4. Location, location, location

Another powerful step parents can take is to keep the Internet connection out of their kids' bedroom. Consider keeping an online connection only in a study or public family room.

"If your teenage son has to deal with a lot of foot traffic, he's obviously not going to be spending hours looking at porno sites," Strasburger said.

5. Reach out to other parents

Don't assume that everyone shares your standards about what's not acceptable content for children. If your kid is spending the night at a friend's or an afternoon away from your supervision, consider checking in with an adult who will be present.

It's reasonable to ask whether other families have Internet filters, Balkam said. He added that sometimes sharing your concerns can inform other parents who are "blissfully unaware" of what their own kids are doing.

Communion rail is for communion

Q: Is it true that in the Roman Catholic Church a person of any age who is not entitled to receive the Sacrament of Holy Communion can still approach the altar with their arms crossed over their chest and receive a blessing from the priest? I have heard that crossing the arms over the chest dispels any confusion on the part of the priest.

— Anonymous, via e-mail

A: You are not correct. The crossing of the arms over one's chest is a sign of piety and many Catholics who are entitled to receive Communion approach the Communion rail in that pious posture. If a child who is obviously too young to have received his or her first Communion approaches the rail with arms crossed, the priest clearly understands that the child is not to be offered the Eucharist. It is highly inappropriate for people of other faiths to approach the Communion rail in a Catholic church just to receive a general blessing. If a person wants such a blessing, he or she should ask the priest in the sacristy for a blessing. The Communion rail is a place for Catholic communion with God and with their faith.

Q: When my mom and I were choosing the stone for my dad's grave, the assistant at the Catholic cemetery here in Aurora, Ill., told us that all the deceased are buried facing east. My mom told me that today, when she looked at the stone that was delivered, the assistant told her that everyone is buried facing east so as to be ready for the resurrection. I don't remember anything about this from catechism classes or anywhere else. Can you enlighten us? — C., via e-mail

A: In the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City, the statue of St. Gabriel faces east. The idea of "a light from the East" is an old belief but it has nothing to do with the placement of gravestones. There is no law requiring graves to face east. There is, however, a hope in both Judaism and Christianity to look to the east for the signs of a time when death will have no dominion.

Q: Is it forbidden for observant Jews to be cremated? If so, is this a biblical commandment or simply a matter of custom? I have heard that several Reform rabbis have been cremated. — T., via e-mail

A: Cremation is forbidden because it radically alters the return of the body to the earth through slow and natural decomposition. For this reason, metal caskets are also forbidden. Wooden coffins decompose at the same rate as human bodies and so they are used for Jewish burials. Additionally, cremation is forbidden because it often is done as a way to avoid burial.

Tunnelton man travels to Nashville for Vietnam reunion

Submitted to The Dominion Post

On May 17, Ray Moore, of Tunnelton, along with 21 veterans and their families, attended a reunion of the Big Red Ones 2nd, 16th and 18th Infantry Regiments in Nashville, Tenn.

Attendees enjoyed a walk through Brown County State Park to Strahl Lake for a picnic. Park naturalists were on hand to give a presentation about the history, wildlife and plants of the area. Moore brought his specialty to share — sausages and bell peppers.

After lunch, drawings were held for a variety of items, including a Big Red One token used at Bearcat and Di An, a Big Red One mug, South Vietnamese coins, glasses and a hand-painted wooden wine case, Vietnamese Ba-Mi-Ba beer, a replica of the Vietnam Memorial and a bag of coal donated by Moore from the coal mine he works in.

Following the drawings, reunion photos were taken.

At dinner, several vets and their wives pored over the scrapbooks, newspaper clippings and other memorabilia.

Mark Krofek collected signatures of attendees for his copy of the Charlie Company History. The next day, attendees gathered for the reunion banquet, after which sandstone paperweights and reunion certificates were presented. Dan Rogers was given a reunion poster signed by all the vets.

Moore's daughter, Alyssa, told attendees how special it was to meet the former soldiers her dad, Ray, often speaks of.

Riggleman starts year as Rotary governor

Submitted to The Dominion Post

On July 1, David L. Riggleman of Bridgeport begins his year as governor of Rotary International District 7530. This district covers the northern half of West Virginia and has 30 Rotary clubs.

Born in Grafton, Riggleman graduated with a BS degree in business administration from Fairmont State College in 1969. He was employed by Allegheny Energy for more than 36 years. During his tenure, he concentrated on customer service and public relations. He retired in 2005.

Riggleman served on the boards of directors of several organizations, including the West Virginia Chamber of Commerce, West Virginia Independent Colleges and Universities, and the Fairmont State University Foundation.

His service to Rotary has been extensive, beginning in 1982. Since then he has been a member of six different clubs, where he was the charter president of two: Braxton County in 1987 and Weirton Heights in 1993. Riggleman served as president of the Rotary Club of Bridgeport in 2005-'06 and assistant district governor during 2004-'05. He has received numerous perfect attendance awards and was Rotarian of the Year for the Bridgeport club in 1998. He received the prestigious District 7530 College of Governors Award in 1993.

Rotary International's president for 2007-'08 is Wilfrid J. Wilkinson from Trenton, Ontario, Canada. Theme for the Rotary year is "Rotary Shares."

As a challenge and guidelines for each of the district's 30 Rotary Clubs, Riggleman has developed the following six goals for the 2007-'08 year: Increase club membership, promote literacy, donate to an international project, support the Rotary Foundation, improve communications and have some fun.

Riggleman and his wife, Barbara, have two married daughters and three grandchildren. They both enjoy golfing and taking cruises.

Morgantown North Rotary inducts officers for 2007-'08

Submitted to The Dominion Post

The Morgantown North Rotary Club recently inducted a new group of officers for the 2007-2008 fiscal year. Outgoing president, Parviz Famouri, passed the leadership of the club to new president, Geri Ferrara, on June 27. The remainder of the new team includes: President-Elect Becky Hunn; Secretary Jon McCurdy; Treasurer Linda Hayes; Past President Parviz Famouri; and Sergeant at Arms Betsy Beall.

Morgantown North Rotary is a service club that meets weekly at 7 a.m. Wednesdays at the Erickson Alumni Center in Morgantown. The next scheduled program will be July 11 by Leora Leasure, an authority on Morgantown Glass Company glass, and Robert Tinnell, with a presentation titled "Feast of the Seven Fishes: The Reinvention of an Artist" on July 18. Anyone interested in attending a meeting or learning more should contact Jacki Englehardt, Morgantown North Rotary public relations director, at jax@labs.net or visit the Rotary Web site at rotary.org.

Morgantown North Rotary Club is part of Rotary International. The object of Rotary is to encourage and foster the ideal of service as a basis of worthy enterprise. Rotary is a volunteer organization with more than 32,000 clubs in

Mount Union CEOS

Eleven members of Mount Union CEOS met June 27.

Dorothy Casteel gave the lesson, "Mentor: Everyone Needs One!" and gave tips for building a mentoring relationship and the characteristics of a mentor.

Susie Phillips, reporting for the continuing education committee, said members volunteered at Energy Express at Mylan Park Elementary School. Several books from the Purposeful Reading List were discussed and members chose books they wanted to read. In the fall, the club will donate the books to local libraries. Phillips handed out guidelines for the poetry contest. Entries are due to the Extension Office by Aug. 15.

Mary Gribko for the family committee discussed the rules for the creative writing contest. Entries for this project must also be in to the Extension Office by Aug. 15. A sewing workshop is scheduled for 9 a.m. Aug. 7 at Canyon Community Presbyterian Church.

Carol Hungate said a marketing and membership committee meeting was held May 23 at the Extension Office and plans were discussed for the fall event Nov. 3 at the Clinton District Volunteer Fire Department, which will showcase Monongalia County's CEOS clubs. There are plans for a bake sale, a display of the ongoing community projects of each of the county's groups and demonstrations of quilting, basket weaving and other crafts. The committee will meet again in September.

The secretary read thank-you cards from the American Cancer Society for the ditty bags and from the rehabilitation department at Care Partners for the walker-mates the club donated. She then shared a letter from Delegate Barbara Evans Fleischauer (D-Mon) congratulating Mount Union for being selected recently as one of The Dominion Post's 100 Most Influential.

Gribko will be nominated for one of the scholarships to attend the Fall Conference at Jackson's Mill.

The next meeting will be the club's annual family picnic July 25 at the home of the club's president.

Members will assist with the purchase of a memorial stone to honor veterans from the Canyon area to replace the destroyed Honor Roll. Donations have been received from two other organizations and more will be solicited. To donate: kffeathers@comcast.net or contact any club member.

Delphia Adams reported next year's national project will be to assist displaced/foster children.

June's contribution to the Canyon Food Pantry totaled $133.81.

The Nintendo Wii.

Demand for Wiis far outpaces supply

BY BARBARA ORTUTAY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — By 9 a.m., the line outside Manhattan's Nintendo World store was snaking down the block.

More than 100 hopeful Wii owners came from as far as New Jersey — some as early as 6 a.m. with kids and grandparents in tow — to get their hands on the gaming console best known for its wireless, motion-sensitive controller.

It's been more than seven months since Nintendo launched the Wii, but the consoles are selling so well that supply still hasn't caught up with demand. You can get one, sure, but be prepared to call around and arrive promptly when the shipments do.

"I had to get permission from work," said Regina Iannuzzi, 23, in line since 6:20 a.m. on a recent morning. She'd been looking for a Wii, a 25th birthday present for her brother, for two weeks. Every place was sold out.

Like sleeping in? Wiis are also available online, but at a hefty premium to the console's $250 retail price. A slightly used one from an Amazon.com seller called "Hard-To-Find-Stuff" recently listed for $595 plus $3.99 shipping. Another cost $398 from a different seller.

"The PlayStation 1 was certainly a big introduction, but I don't recall any game system more than six months after its launch still having this kind of demand," said Chris Byrne, an independent toy analyst.

Back in April, Nintendo President Satoru Iwata acknowledged an "abnormal" Wii shortage. Since then, the company has increased production "substantially" to help meet worldwide demand, said spokeswoman Perrin Kaplan.

But Nintendo also has to manage its inventory, said Colin Sebastian, an analyst with Lazard Capital Markets.

"Unfortunately you can't ask a contract manufacturer to make a million a month, then 5 million," he said.

Sony's PS3, which launched within days of the Wii last fall, is readily available in stores and online, but sales have been lagging behind the Wii. Cost could be one reason for this: the PS3 retails for up to $600.

More than 2.8 million Wii consoles have sold in the U.S. since the November debut, according to the NPD Group, a market research company. That's more than double the number of PlayStation 3 consoles sold. And Nintendo plans to sell 14 million worldwide in the current fiscal year, which ends next March.

"You see it and you want it. Kind of like the iPhone," said Robert Marcus, waiting to buy a Wii with his wife and three young sons.

Nintendo's selling point for the Wii has been that it's for everyone:

High score

U.S. sales of the Nintendo Wii have outpaced Sony's PlayStation 3 since the game systems were launched last fall.

not just hardcore gamers or young men with impeccable hand-eye coordination. Its intuitive motion-sensitive wireless controller lets players mimic movements for bowling, tennis or sword-fighting instead of pushing complex combinations of buttons.

Twelve-year-old Gabriel Benitez, in town from Florida visiting his grandmother, stood in line outside Nintendo's flagship New York store.

"We finally got enough money for it," he said, glancing at his grandmother who was waiting with him. "The last two stores were sold out."

Gabriel likes the Wii's wireless controller and the mini-workout he gets while playing a game.

"I just hate what you have to do just to get one," he said.

It's not just kids who want it.

Rein Auh, 30, never owned a console, but he decided to buy a Wii so he and his wife could have some fun and get some exercise. He spent $350 at the Nintendo store on a Wii and some extras. Walking out of the store, he looked back at the crowd of people still waiting.

"It's kind of crazy," he said. "I mean, it's been 7 months."

For its part, Nintendo says demand for the consoles has absolutely exceeded expectations.

"We are trying to move them as fast as we can," Kaplan said.

Demand for video games usually soars around the holidays and tapers off for the rest of the year. Not with the Wii.

"People are looking at it as something they really want to have in their home," said Byrne, the toy analyst. This means people aren't just buying them as gifts, and the shopping frenzy usually reserved for the holiday season has stretched into the summer.

Toys "R" Us gets regular Wii shipments in all its stores around the country, but demand is so great they sell out immediately, said spokeswoman Kathleen Waugh.

Online features make racing game stand out

TO BE FAIR to "Forza Motorsport 2," I would like to preface this review by saying that I am not a fan of racing games. No, let me rephrase that, I HATE racing games.

At first they are full of potential, but after a few races, they spin out in the corner in a fiery crash of boredom and repetitiveness. But not Forza 2. I must admit that I'm addicted.

There are three gameplay options in Forza 2: arcade, career and multiplayer.

In arcade mode, you race time trials and exhibition races to unlock cars for online play. There is also a free run to test your cars, test-drive others and try and set online speed records.

Career mode allows you to play to unlock cars and earn credits to buy other cars and upgrades.

Don't think you are going to open up the game and be able to buy a Maserati — the more you race, the better the courses and cars get.

You can select from 48 different makes and hundreds of different models ranging from the Chevrolet Cobalt to the Koenigsegg CC8S. Cars are ranked into classes from D to R1. Each race has a different requirement, from racing with no more than 250 horsepower to Italian-made cars only.

The game's artificial intelligence has three difficulty levels, which can be switched from race to race. Don't be fooled. Even if you compete on the easy level, the AI drivers are vicious. If you are a lap up and you try to cut off a car in a corner, the AI driver will put you into the wall without missing a beat.

Be careful while racing, too. The real-time damage affects the number of credits you receive for winning a race. If you smash into the wall head-on, it is going to cost you to fix it. The number of credits you win also is determined by difficulty and how many assists (antilock brakes, traction control, etc.) you use.

One of the more addictive parts of the game is customization. I don't just mean parts, but also tweaking tire pressure, gear ratio and decoration. I have spent hours in the paint shop — painting cars and applying vinyl shapes — making my cars just perfect.

Once you have gained some credits, upgraded your car and painted a work of art that rivals Picasso, it is time to take your wheels on Xbox Live. The online play adds a nice touch. Up to eight players can compete at one time.

I highly recommend getting a group of friends together and racing. It is the most fun I have had on Xbox Live.

Keep an eye out for tournaments under the multiplayer tab. Qualifying for new tournaments takes place every day. Anyone can participate in the qualifier, but it is very difficult to make the actual competition.

The game boasts two innovative online features: the Auction House and Forza Motorsport TV. In the Auction House, you can bid on cars other drivers have put up for sale. There are some real works of art on here. I have seen pictures of everything from Marlon Brando to replicas of

Forza Motorsport 2 screen shots

JASON DePROSPERO

"FORZA MOTORSPORT 2" by Microsoft, for Xbox 360. $59.99. Rated E for Everyone.

NASCAR paint jobs. Be sure to have plenty of credits to spend, players have spent hours bending and shaping vinyl pieces into video game characters, logos and anything else you can imagine, and they are out to make a profit. Forza Motorsport TV allows you to watch featured races on both your Xbox 360 and online on forzamotorsport.net.

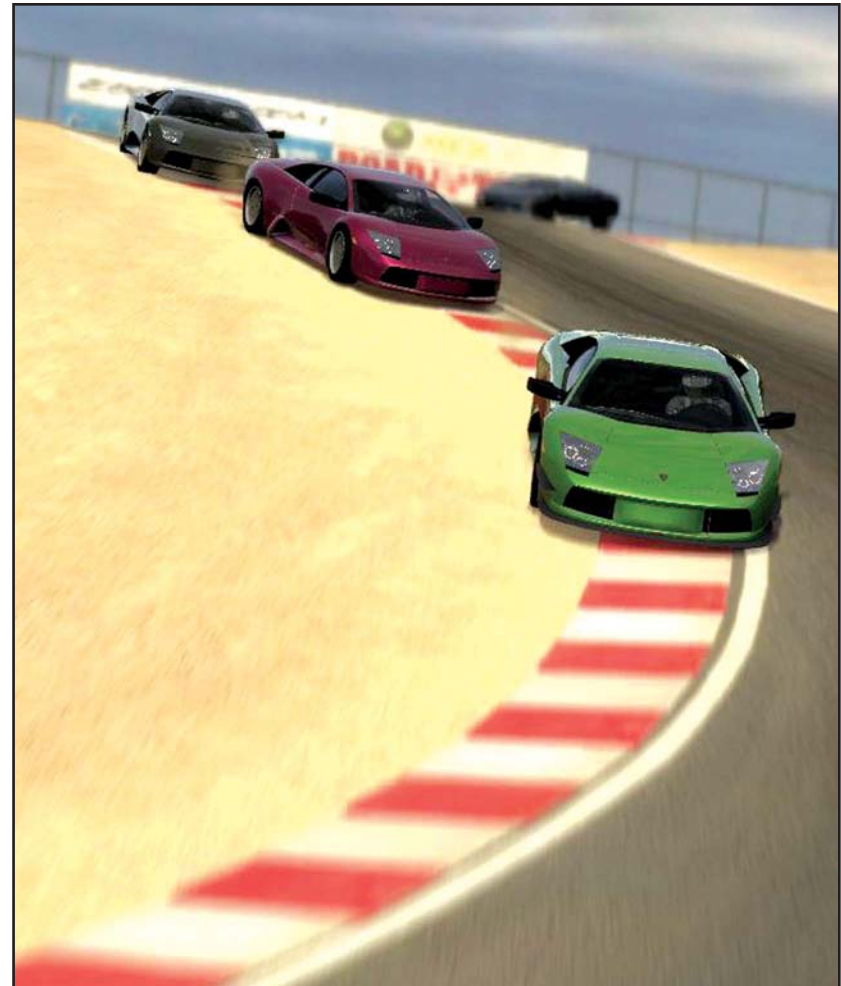

The Forza 2 graphics are fairly good. As you run down the Truguardo stretch of the Mugello Circuit in Italy, you see the clouds and signs over the road reflecting off the hood of your car. After you wreck, you can see the spider webs in the glass and dents and scratches on your bumper (if it is still attached.) The graphics are still a little cartoon-like compared to other racing games.

I wish the controls were a little more true to life. When turning at 75 mph, I want to feel the steering tighten up. With Forza 2, the controls seem oversimplified.

The difficulty levels are also pretty easy. With the difficulty set to hard, and a beefed-up car, you can blow away the competition. On easy level, you can easily win by a minute or more and lap all of your AI foes. The worst part for me is there is no real incentive to race at the hard level. Sure you get 10 percent boost in credits for a win, but that is nothing compared to the damage you could incur during the race and have to pay to fix.

"Forza Motorsport 2," even with its minor shortcomings, is really a gem. If you have been waiting for a good racer for the 360, this is the game.

Until next time, remember, peel yourself off of your leather recliner every couple of hours. With Forza 2, it will suck you in the grill and won't spit you out the

Keep TP where it belongs

Dear Tom and Ray:

While I was attending the University of Oklahoma in 1960, a study was done by the petroleum engineering department. The question was: Is draining oil from a vehicle necessary?

They worked with White Trucking Co. and tested their theory on long-haul trucks. Using only a "toilet paper" filter and only adding oil, they ran one set of trucks against ones that received oil and filter changes for 100,000 miles.

The results showed no significant wear differences between the two. They also concluded that the oil in the no-change vehicle was "stronger," because the weak molecules in the oil broke down and evaporated away.

This study was going on at about the time that the Conoco Oil company was working on biofuel and had developed a plant in Bartlesville, Okla. But then both the study and the plant were suddenly gone, and I never heard any more. What is your take on the oil-change theory? — Don

TOM: Ah, yes. I remember that study, Don. It was funded by Charmin.

RAY: Actually, while we don't know anything about that particular study, I'd take it with a grain of salt.

TOM: First of all, motor oil has improved dramatically in the past 50 years. So whatever was done then probably doesn't apply now.

RAY: Also, long-haul, diesel trucking engines are built to last much longer than automobile engines. So 100,000 miles might not have been enough to show the damage of forgoing oil changes.

TOM: We have heard about the toilet-paper filter, though. It's called a Frantz Filter, and it has had a small cult following throughout the years. As you might expect, you install the housing, and then you simply stick a roll of 1,000-sheet, two-ply, 100-grit toilet paper in the holder, and that does the filtering. When it's dirty, you remove it and insert another roll.

RAY: It's not a surprise to us that it never caught on in big numbers, because it requires men to change a roll of toilet paper.

TOM: Aside from that fatal flaw, we've had good reports about it from our customers during the years. But keep in mind that anyone who would go through the trouble of installing and using one of these things obviously is very interested in car care and maintenance. That kind of person probably tends to take particularly good care of his car in all kinds of other ways, which could skew the results.

RAY: In any case, Don, our personal experience at the garage suggests that changing the oil and filter regularly is good, and not changing the oil and filter regularly can be very bad — even catastrophic over the long haul.

TOM: And it's relatively cheap insurance. It's $20 or $30 a few times a year, for most people. So we still strongly believe in changing the oil in your car, and changing the toilet-paper roll in the bathroom. And not vice versa.

in Camargue, France

BY ANN LEVIN
Associated Press

In the weeks leading up to our first trip to Provence, we pored over guidebooks, reacquainting ourselves with images immortalized by Cezanne and popularized by the films "Jean de Florette" and "Manon Of The Spring."

We fully expected to see fields of lavender, Roman ruins and old men playing petanque, and to feast on hearty stews redolent of garlic, tomatoes and thyme.

No one told us about the pink flamingos. Much to our surprise — and delight — we encountered thousands of them, wading, feeding and flying in formation over the shallow lagoons of the Park of the Camargue, a half hour's drive south of Arles.

The Camargue, a wind-swept river delta bordering the Mediterranean Sea, is one of Europe's most important wetland sites, a nesting ground for pink flamingos and home to hundreds of other species of birds and other wildlife.

The park — an intricate patchwork of salt fields, rice farms, ranches and swamps — is protected by the French government, which has built a network of information centers, nature trails and observatories through the marshes and lagoons.

From the vantage point of comfortable blinds, we peered for hours at flocks of water fowl, marveling at the ability of the flamingos to retract one long, spindly leg beneath their bellies and balance on the other.

No matter how many of the exquisite creatures we saw, we only wanted to see more! You might say they blew a serious hole in our Provence itinerary.

When we were still planning our trip from home, we had planned on staying five nights in Arles, hoping to use it as a base to explore other towns and villages in the southern part of Provence.

A medium-size city rich in Roman ruins and history, Arles has no shortage of its own attractions: excellent museums, a vibrant outdoor market on Saturdays, an international photography festival in the summer.

Some of the ancient houses along the narrow, winding streets have been renovated and painted in delicate pastel hues. Just down the street from our lodging was an organic bakery, and not far from there, a shop selling locally produced olive oil.

We made a pilgrimage to a cafe terrace on the Place du Forum featured in a famous painting by Vincent Van Gogh, who lived in Arles for one short, extraordinarily productive year of his troubled life.

We inspected giant vats of paella and tables brimming with local cheeses at the farmers market on Saturday — but mostly we hung out in the Camargue.

The trip from Arles was easy: Cross over the Rhone and take the D36 south. At a certain point, the two-lane highway splits off onto a narrower road that leads past a visitor information center at La Capeliere.

There, and farther down the road at Salin de Badon, visitors can meander along well-groomed nature trails and observe egrets, herons, ducks and other water fowl from viewing platforms built over tall seas of reeds and other wild grasses.

Having come this far to the southeast corner of Provence, we decided it was crazy to leave the region without at least putting our feet in the Mediterranean, even though when we were there, it was November.

So we drove to a parking area at the southeast edge of the park's largest lagoon, the Etang du Vaccares, and hiked toward the Phare de la Gacholle. Just before the entrance to the lighthouse, we veered left and marched across the dunes to the sea.

Despite the intense heat of the midday sun, the air was cool. A stiff wind from the north ruffled the surface of the salt marshes. Off in the distance, kite-surfers danced over the sparkling green waves.

After reaching the water's edge, we retreated to the dunes, where we picnicked on our provisions from Arles — bread, cheese and sausage. As we huddled against the wind, fearful that the wind would carry off an unattended napkin or paper bag, several people galloped past on horseback.

With the sun now arcing toward the west, it was time to pack up our belongings and head back across the dunes. With the sun now arcing toward the west, it was time to pack up our belongings and head back across the dunes.

Freshly whitewashed and sporting bright blue shutters, the lighthouse also served as a visitor information center for this section of the park. Inside, there were simple displays of shells, feathers and wildflowers to illustrate the ecology of the nature preserve.

The seaside resort of Saintes-Maries-de-la-Mer, where some believe Mary Magdalene and other early Christians washed ashore in a boat from Jerusalem in 40 A.D., has attracted religious pilgrims for nearly two millennia.

Besides humans, the Camargue has long supported wild herds of black bulls and white horses, which have given rise to a French-style cowboy culture. French President Nicolas Sarkozy was photographed there on a white horse two days before the first round of the elections in France earlier this year.

Tourists can watch bullfights; explore the Camargue on horseback alongside the gardians, or French cowboys; and sample the distinctive flavors of bull meat and sausage in local shops and restaurants.

Whether you're a wannabe cowhand, a devoted birdwatcher or a devotee of Van Gogh, you're likely to find something in the park that strikes a chord.

I, for one, will never forget the flamingos we saw, which, by the way, are not the Pepto-Bismol pink of the lawn ornaments.

Their plumage comes in delicate hues of rosy pink and white, with dramatic black flight feathers visible when their wings are extended. The lawn ornament manufacturers who have turned these spectacular-looking birds into tropical kitsch have simply got it wrong.

A reproduction of Vincent Van Gogh's famous painting, "The Cafe Terrace on the Place du Forum, Arles, at Night," directs tourists in the old city of Arles, France, to the cafe in this city in the south of Provence.

EX-ETIQUETTE

Ex facing divorce looks to first wife

BY JANN BLACKSTONE-FORD AND SHARYL JUPE

Contra Costa Times

Q. My ex and I have been divorced 12 years. I am happily remarried. He has just filed for divorce again. This morning he called me, and after having a cordial conversation catching up on the kids and other family stuff, he asked me to attend a divorce family support group. He attended one this weekend and said he had a lot of revelations. I'm trying to keep an open mind, but the only reason I'd be going would be as a good, supportive ex-wife so we could better co-parent our children. For the record, I don't think I need a divorce breakthrough. I had a lot of counseling around the time of our divorce, and I'm in a very happy place in my life and so is our daughter. One more important observation — there was no mention of his current wife attending and that has me concerned. They have a child, too.

A. Your last observation is quite telling and we agree that there may be cause for concern. Many who face a crisis, of which divorce certainly counts, use the crisis as the catalyst for some soul-searching. This soul-searching might start with what went wrong in his current relationship, but end up with what went wrong in yours. Add a little "what could have been" and a pinch of loneliness and you have the recipe for some big problems. That's why you have to set clear boundaries when remaining cordial with an ex. Without clear boundaries you will find yourself constantly weighing how close is too close — and that can become extremely confusing for all concerned.

It sounds to us as if your ex-husband's previous weekend has given him some new insight into his contribution to your divorce and he would like to share this with you. This is understandable, but inappropriate at the same time. You are happily remarried and have stated that you have done the work and have no need to do the soul-searching your ex obviously feels is necessary at this point in his life. Based on that, this is his journey to walk.

Although we are all for support groups — as a matter of fact, the Bonus Families organization now has online moderated chat support groups so we can offer group support to people all over the world — we don't think you should join your ex at such a meeting. It might be more appropriate for him to tell you on the phone or write it down in a letter. The one he should be sharing this epiphany with is not you, but his wife. You have already moved on.

10 'fix-its' for relationships

BY JEFF HERRING
McClatchy Newspapers

RELATIONSHIPS NEED good quality maintenance all year long. Here are some "fix-it-up" tips for your relationship.

Tip 1 — Date your spouse — Just about every successful couple I know has a regular date night.

Whether weekly or monthly is not as important as having a regular time both of you can count on.

Tip 2 — Say I love you often — If you have been together a year or 20 years, these are always three magic words.

Tip 3 — And speaking of magic words, learn and speak your partner's love language. Does your partner most need to see it, hear it or feel it?

Tip 4 — Apologize when you need to — We all mess up sometimes. The quicker we clean it up so we can move on, the better.

Tip 5 — Chore charting — For one month, take over a chore your partner hates. Don't tell them what you are going to do, just do it.

Tip 6 — Use your database —

If you have been with someone for more than a month, you have a good database of information about them. What they like, don't like, how they like to be treated, etc. Use it.

Tip 7 — Ask questions — Just because you have a database of information on someone does not mean that you know everything about them. Ask questions. Be curious. Listen to their stories.

Tip 8 — Listen for the heart — So many times we listen only to the words being spoken to us. Listen instead to what the heart of your partner is saying.

Tip 9 — Appreciate what you want to see more of — Verbally, out loud, appreciate something about your partner each day.

Tip 10 — Good manners — It does not matter how long you have been together, good manners are still important. Saying "excuse me" when you need to get by someone is still much better than "move."

Compromise on heirlooms sprouts guilt

I'M HAVING A COMPOUND CASE of heirloom guilt. It has nothing to do with personal possessions. I'm sure the kids will be thrilled to inherit my collections of sterling cocktail forks, 1950s dinnerware and Occupied Japan figural egg cups when the time comes.

But in my backyard kitchen garden, I haven't followed through on my intention of growing only heirloom vegetables and flowers. First I weakened in choosing marigolds to line the path. Older varieties tend to be tall and sprawling. I feared they would look shaggy.

So I got a flat of Hero hybrids at Soil Service nursery; the plants are compact with loads of bi-colored blooms, reddish orange on the outside and gold inside. They look great, but I have a tinge of guilt that they aren't historical, like the sweet peas.

Each year I plant about a dozen old varieties of sweet peas. Unlike their perennial cousins with the bubblegum pink blossoms, annual sweet peas are wonderfully fragrant and come in many colors.

This year, for the first time, I'm keeping a garden journal — a practice I've always eschewed as being old-ladyish — to note which ones do better than others.

Cupani's original, more than 300 years old with deep purple and magenta blooms, is thriving, but Lady Grisel Hamilton apparently does not find her bed agreeable.

My heirloom Rattlesnake beans are a mixed success. With no bunnies getting past the wire mesh that lines the fence, the vines are thriving. But I feel guilty about not being a good steward of the seeds. I pick all the beans for eating until a hard frost kills the vines, rather than leaving some pods to mature and collecting the seeds.

Where I've really fallen down is with the tomatoes. In years past I've planted Brandywine, Hungarian Heart, Cherokee Purple and Nebraska Wedding plants. In my experience, these old varieties produce huge, rangy plants that take over the garden, succumb to disease and produce maybe four or five delicious tomatoes per plant.

This year I wanted tomatoes with as many consonants as possible on the label. "VFFNT" tells me my sturdy Celebrity is resistant to at least five common tomato diseases. Its leaves are unblemished, and the vines are loaded with yellow flowers. I also got a Beefmaster and a Patio cherry tomato that boast disease-resistance and high yields rather than exotic names and interesting stories.

I justify the absence of heirloom tomatoes in my garden by supporting them in other local growers' farms: At farmers' markets each week I load up on my beloved Brandywines and other old-fashioned tomatoes. Even though they require more care, their taste is truly beyond compare.

Estate features horse barn, 7.65 acres

Home on the market for $1.95 million

"Mommy, I caught a whopper!" exclaimed 3-year-old Kayla Turner to her mother, Anne Turner, as she felt a tug at the end of her fishing line.

Not far from the fully stocked pond lies the cedar-wall paneled, six-stall horse barn. Some distance beyond the barn, past the rolling hills, the other three Turner children, Nicholas, Jack and Regan, cool off from the summer heat in the all-season pool, taking turns on the diving board or swimming under the computerized waterfall. Meanwhile, dad Craig Turner relaxes in the pool spa, gazing through the floor-to-ceiling windows at the green vista before him.

The family puppy is not overlooked: She's being groomed in the dog grooming room, in the building adjacent to the pool.

It may sound like a pleasant country getaway, but the Turner family is actually at home in Morgantown. Their home is a western-influenced estate, with 7.65 acres of property located at 143 South Pierpont Road. The home is for sale for $1.95 million.

"We love this home because it's beautiful, and it's a great place to raise a family. The kids love it here and have their friends over all the time. It's also very close to town and to Cheat Lake," said Anne Turner.

With a security gate and a five-car garage, this 8,653-square-foot home

Bob Gay/The Dominion Post

This South Pierpont Road home has a family room, billiard room, exercise room, gourmet kitchen and study room.

features six bedrooms — each with its own bathroom — family room, billiard room, exercise room, gourmet kitchen and study room.

"When my mother first came to visit, we had to make a map for her," Anne Turner said, joking.

The estate not only boasts sheer square footage, it contains multiple special features. A koi fish pond can be observed from a small bridge that leads the viewers directly into the formal dining room. From the master bedroom, one can ascend the spiral staircase into the billiard room, which is lined with cherry wood shelves, and find a secret bookcase that opens into a generous storage area.

Additionally, a batting cage that can also be used as a target practice range and a pet grooming room with a special pet door that takes your pet directly into the yard are also part of this home. Child-friendly features include a playroom within one of the bedrooms for the younger children and two bedrooms each with lofts. Craig Turner is proud of his work on the basement.

"I stripped the basement and reinstated everything. I've added new dry walls, and the area is set up for entertaining with a wet bar and to accommodate a home movie theater," he said. "The basement is also easily accessible from the outside, so when guests come over they can flow from one area of the house to the next."

One of the most noticeable exterior features is the swimming pool. With radiant heat and a dehumidifying system, which prevents fog buildup around the window panes, the pool is used in the coldest of winters. With retractable ceiling panels, however, the pool invites sunbathers during the warmer weather. Along with fiber optic lights and a dance floor that could be put over the pool, there are limitless entertaining options. The previous two owners of the property also raised horses in the 1,500-square-foot barn, which can easily accommodate six horses and is complete with a tack room.

With four children and expansive exterior and interior footage, a computerized security system with 16 security monitors keeps the home under close scrutiny. The computer's hard drive keeps data for up to three weeks, so the Turners can review any suspicious incidents.

Although the Turners are enjoying their home, they are moving into a home with more acreage and decided to put the home up for sale.

"A property such as 143 Pierpont Road reflects the natural lure of the beautiful mountains of West Virginia and then realizes the need to make your home there," said Laura Walker, a Realtor with J.S. Walker Associates. "The home is in every way a true oasis and optimizes comfort, functionality and active living for family, friends and guests."

Vinyl windows are maintenance-free and more efficient

DEAR JIM: We are getting older and want to replace our wood windows with maintenance-free vinyl ones that are easy to clean. What style would be best for us and how can we compare the manufacturers' quality?

— Jan M.

Dear Jan: If you want replacement windows which are virtually maintenance-free, then ones with vinyl frames are an excellent choice. With the new durable weatherstripping used today, the only maintenance should be cleaning the glass panes and wiping down the vinyl frame occasionally.

Vinyl frames are available in several colors, so you should be able to find one which looks good with your house color. I installed light tan vinyl windows in my own home. Lighter frame colors stay cooler than dark ones, particularly on southern windows in the hot sun. Casement windows are generally the most energy efficient because they close with compression weatherstripping. Also they can be opened varying degrees to catch breezes for ventilation, but you will have to stretch to clean them.

Since you are concerned about easy cleaning, tilt-in double-hung windows are a good choice. Hidden latches on the top of each sash allow each one to tilt for cleaning. Consider getting special easy-clean exterior glass that stays cleaner when it rains. If they are normal-size windows, the weight will not be an issue. Very large double-hung windows, however, can get quite heavy, especially with multi-pane high-efficiency glass. In this case, a window with sliders on each side and a small fixed pane in the center might be a better choice.

There are hundreds of small and large vinyl window manufacturers across the country. Just because a local company is small does not mean its windows are not high-quality. Make sure to check its reputation and number of years in business. You can generally count on the large national manufacturers to stand behind their products. Their prices should be reasonable because they can afford to invest in more automated manufacturing procedures.

When comparing the quality of various manufacturers, the thickness of the vinyl material used is a good indicator. Look at a cross-section of the frame and measure the thickness of the exterior skin and interior webs. Heavier is better, but often more costly. For larger windows, metal reinforcing rods are inserted inside the frame to enhance rigidity.

The sash frame corners should be welded for strength. Welded main frame corners are not as important because the frame is supported by the wall opening. Whichever efficient glass option you select, it should have insulated spacers separating the panes. Foam injected inside the frame cavities improves insulation. If the window is Energy Star qualified, you can take the energy tax credit.

The following companies offer efficient vinyl windows: Certain-teed, (800) 782-8777, certainteed.com; Champion Windows, (800) 875-5575, championwindow.com; Kensington Windows, (800) 444-4972, kensingtonwindows.com; Thermal Industries, (800) 245-1540, thermalindustries.com; and Weathershield, (800) 222-2995, weathershield.com.

'Satsuma' vases are easy to identify because they have a crackle glaze

RALPH & TERRY KOVEL

SATSUMA, A CITY IN JAPAN, has a special meaning to collectors. An easy-to-identify, cream-colored pottery with a crackle glaze and intricate decoration is also called "Satsuma." The vases picture detailed Japanese landscapes and people and have brocadelike backgrounds and edges. Warriors and gods often are shown. The inside as well as the outside of bowls have similar overall decorations. Colors used were beige, green and other muted shades, often with added gold decoration.

Styles changed about 1918 to 1930, when art-nouveau and art-deco designs — especially pictures of irises — became popular. After 1930, pieces had fewer delicate decorations, larger figures, darker colors and added black accents. "Monumental" vases are especially popular today. These are vases more than 18 inches high. They're large enough to look as if they belong on the floor.

Q: I have a wooden chair with open arms. The seat and back are upholstered in black vinyl-coated fabric. A small plate on the back of the chair reads, "B.L. Marble Chair Co." Do you know anything about the company?

A: Barzilla L. Marble (1851-1932) was born into a chair-making family in Bedford, Ohio. He and A.L. Shattuck formed the Marble and Shattuck Chair Co. in 1885. In 1894, he left the partnership to open his own company, B.L. Marble Chair Co. (often called "Marble Chair" by local residents). The firm manufactured chairs for homes until 1910, when it switched to making office furniture. Your chair, with vinyl upholstery, was probably made for office use. It could date from any time between 1910 and 1965, when Marble Chair merged with the Dictaphone Corp. and became Marble Imperial Furniture Co. The factory closed in 1985, the building was torn down in 1991 and the Bedford post office sits on the site today.

Submitted photo

This Satsuma vase, made between 1850 and 1900, sold for $2,990 at a Cyr auction in Gray, Maine. It is 18 inches tall and pictures a group of Japanese warriors.

Q: Could you please tell me when an item is considered an antique? I always thought it was at 75 years, but someone told me it's 100.

A: The U.S. government's definition of an antique is that it must be at least 100 years old. The government uses the definition to determine the duty on imported items. There are different rules for firearms and cars. Many collectors use the word "antique" to refer to "old" things, no matter how old they are. Others say an antique is about 75 years old. The word "collectible" covers everything else.

Tip: Missing part of a jigsaw puzzle? Make a color photocopy of the picture of the puzzle on the box. Enlarge or shrink the copy to exactly the size of the puzzle. Then cut it to make the missing piece. It will be an almost perfect match.

Current prices

Current prices are recorded from antiques shows, flea markets, sales and auctions throughout the United States. Prices vary in different locations because of local economic conditions.

PALADIN "HAVE GUN WILL TRAVEL" FAN-CLUB MEMBER CARD, 1958, CBS copy-right, 2 x 3 1/2 inches, $45.

Employer breaks promise of severance

Q. When I was laid off a few months ago from an executive position, I was given assurances I would receive two weeks of severance pay plus four days of unused vacation pay.

I have received neither, and the company, with one notable exception, has refused to answer my queries.

That exception was an e-mail from the company's director of human resources, shortly after I left, which said I would be receiving two checks from the company within a couple of weeks.

I never saw those checks, and that was the last response I've received.

I understand that companies are not legally required to pay severance or unused vacation days to departing employees, but when a company has promised such pay, isn't it legally obligated to provide it?

A. Yes, it is, and a promise does not have to be in writing to be considered a binding contract, said Charles Scalise, a labor and employment lawyer with Morgan & Morgan in Orlando, Fla.

The problem, of course, is proving such a contract exists. The e-mail gives you some evidence, but it's no slam-dunk, as Scalise put it. You would have to show not only that the e-mail was genuine but that the HR director who sent it had the authority to make such a promise for the company.

You also may be able to show the company's contractual obligation to pay your unused vacation, if there was a written policy to that effect or if it has been a regular company practice to pay departing employees their unused vacation time.

If you won on either or both those points, Scalise said, the company would have to pay you what you are owed, as well as your legal fees and court costs.

First impressions
Job interviews last an average of 55 minutes for staff-level applicants and 86 minutes for management-level applicants, but the people conducting the interviews usually form their opinion — positive or negative — within the first 10 minutes, according to a recent survey of 150 high-level executives.

The survey, conducted by an independent research firm, was developed by the recruiting company, Robert Half Finance & Accounting.

The message, according to the company: Come well prepared to your interview and be sure to project enthusiasm and confidence from the start. But you knew that already.

PC Renewal refurbishes and disposes of computers, electronics 'The first stop in the recycling circle'

BY CARA FOLK
For The Dominion Post

With recent national emphasis on producing a healthier environment, businesses like PC Renewal are doing their part.

Carl and Susan Crosco are the owners of PC Renewal, a company that specializes in recycling or reusing computers and electronics brought in by their customers.

"We are basically the first stop in the recycling circle," Susan Crosco said. "We're the collection point."

At PC Renewal, they know that computers and electronics take up room in businesses and homes and that electronics are often disposed of improperly, thus causing a threat to the environment. Some electronics contain lead and other harmful substances that must be extracted before being taken for disposal.

Therefore, the Croscos take in what they are brought and determine what should be done with the product, whether it be sent away to be recycled, sent away to specific companies as parts or even refurbished and resold at the local office.

"About 10 percent of what comes in can be refurbished, remarketed or donated," Susan Crosco said.

And judging from the amount of product that is received, there is clearly a need for this sort of business in West Virginia.

"Last year we brought in 297 tons of electronics — of that, we recycled 242 tons," she said. "Just this year we've taken in 140 tons of electronics."

Receiving as many electronics as they do gives the Croscos something to feel good about. "To me, it does make you feel good to be able to keep contaminants out of the ecosystem and electronics out of the landfill," Susan Crosco said. "Sometimes you'll find a computer that has been tossed onto the side of the road. This is harmful to the environment and something that we're trying to change."

By simply looking at the hard drive, the Croscos can easily find out who the culprit of the disposal is. If this happens, the Solid Waste Authority has the ability to issue fines.

To avoid situations such as these, PC Renewal hosts "E-cycling" events, which are usually done through the Solid Waste Authority.

Dan Sanschagrin, project coordinator for the Monongalia County Solid Waste Authority, explained the agency's role in PC Renewal's company.

"When people call [The Solid Waste Authority], we refer them to different places for the disposal of different products. PC Renewal works with us doing electronic recycling. We also work with them to host E-cycling events," Sanschagrin said.

"E-cycling events are held periodically throughout the year," Crosco said. "They are free to the public and helpful in getting rid of unused electronics. In Mon County alone, we collected 23,462 pounds of electronic equipment including televisions, monitors, laptops, PCs."

These events not only benefit the customers, but PC Renewal as well, she said.

"Each person completes a survey asking questions such as, 'Have you ever recycled your electronics before?' or, 'What would you have done with the electronics if you had not brought them here?'" Crosco said.

After a customer completes the survey, PC Renewal unloads, weighs and removes asset tags from all of the equipment. Asset tags are one way to easily identify the owner of a specific computer or piece of electronic equipment.

However, PC Renewal realizes that security is a major issue for many people.

"Security is a big issue that concerns people when they hand over their computers to us. We work closely with the Environmental Protection Agency in Charleston, W.Va.," Crosco said.

"We feel comfortable supporting [PC Renewal]. Unlike many companies, they are competent and reliable and do what they say they will do," Sanschagrin said.

"We use special hardware to make sure everything is confidential. Electronics can even be shredded," Crosco said. "We have contracts with the Board of Education, lawyers and banks so we make sure that everything is secure."

iPhone filled with iCandy that users will gobble up

BY ERIC BENDEROFF
Chicago Tribune (MCT)

After spending a weekend with Apple Inc.'s new iPhone, here's what I think: iLike.

I'm compelled to touch the phone and watch as my collection of digital content, with nearly 500 photos and 1,000-plus songs loaded onto an 8-gigabyte version, scrolls by with the swipe of a finger.

It's a fun and fanciful device, combining a heaping dose of iCandy with a practicality I have yet to see from a smart phone.

I don't think it's enough to call this a smart phone. It's a personal phone that reflects your tastes — music, movies and photos — better than any mobile device on the market today.

If a BlackBerry identifies you as a busy, important person who needs access to e-mail at all times, the iPhone defines you as an individual with distinct cultural tastes in music, photography and video.

Everywhere I went with the iPhone, people wanted to touch it, to see if it was as cool as Apple's advertising made it seem. Nontechnies in particular wanted to play with the device; like me, they were amazed. There are a number of phones that can do much of what the iPhone can — and more, in some cases — yet none do so as simply or as well.

The most notable feature, and noticeable in every usage aspect, is how visual the iPhone is.

When receiving a call from someone in your contact list, that person's picture pops up alongside his or her name (in big, easy-to-read type) and a box to tap for answering the call or one to dismiss it. If you hit dismiss, it goes to voicemail.

The other visual treat is the phone's function as an iPod. Simply put, it's the best iPod I've ever used (and I've tried them all) and the first one where I realized that having album art on your iPod does make a difference.

When I first "synced" the iPhone, some of my songs had artwork but most did not. That made the visual scanning of the music boring, with only a few bits of album art scattered among many more blank pages. Then I downloaded the album art through an iTunes function and synced the iPhone again. Wow.

Using your finger to scroll through the album art is akin to skimming through a crate of old vinyl albums; it gives context to the music, something that is lacking in today's age of digital music files. There are downsides.

Call quality is mixed. At best, talking on the iPhone sounds pretty much like any other mobile phone. In one call to a colleague who also has an iPhone, I heard a distinct echo when I spoke. When I called him on his Verizon phone, there was no echo and the clarity was better.

In another quirk, people using a mobile phone on the Sprint network cannot get through to my iPhone. But when I call them, the call is completed.

I like to talk using the iPhone's iPod-like earbuds. Apple includes a mini microphone into the right side of the ear buds, and when a call comes in, I hear the caller in my ear, not the music, which is automatically paused. Likewise, when I make a call while using the iPod function in the iPhone, the music pauses when the connection is made.

But here's what I don't like about the iPhone earbuds: lack of choice. The iPhone has been designed so only Apple's earbuds fit, even though the phone uses a standard headphone jack. Philip Schiller, Apple's senior vice president of worldwide product marketing, told me that decision was made to make sure the iPhone remained sleek.

OK, but it also means that anyone who bought very expensive headphones to improve the sound of the iPod will be out of luck. One headphone maker, Niles, Ill.-based Shure Inc., is developing an adapter, but it is annoying that it and other companies will need to do this for a phone that costs at least $500.

Business-savvy people are everywhere

BY JACKIE FARWELL
Associated Press

If you want to improve customer service at your business, try watching reruns on television, chatting up an 8-year-old or visiting a fancy hotel.

Business savvy can crop up in the most unexpected places, according to Alan Gregerman, author of "Surrounded by Geniuses: Unlocking Brilliance in Yourself, Your Colleagues and Your Organization."

For example, plopping down in front of a few "Seinfeld" reruns can be more valuable than spending millions of dollars on market research, Gregerman said. Popular television shows are well-loved because they hit a chord with mainstream America. The characters' joys and frustrations can often reflect your customers' preferences, he said.

Your local Girl Scout troop offers a lesson in connecting with clients, Gregerman said. The annual cookie sale combines the nostalgia of a well-loved brand, an appealing salesperson and a quality product, he said. People feel like part of their community, not just a customer, when they buy a box of Thin Mints. "You get an amazing amount of what it means to be human for $3.50," Gregerman said.

Finally, almost any business can learn a thing or two from concierges at the world's finest hotels. They greet each request with a promise to make it their first priority, then rely on established networks to deliver on that promise, Gregerman said. A contact at the city's hottest restaurant can mean the difference between a disappointed guest and a last-minute reservation.

A generation's expectations

Today's graduates expect more than a steady paycheck from their employers. And don't ask them to work on weekends.

The top career goal college students wish to reach within three years of graduation is balancing their personal life with work, according to a new survey. Pursuing higher education ranked second, though students are in no rush to return to the books — that goal saw a 10 percent drop from last year to 36 percent.

This new generation has forced corporate America to adapt its workplace policies, said Claudia Tattaneli of Universitas USA, the branding company that conducted the nonscientific survey.

"It does not ask for work-life balance, it assumes it," she said.

Nearly 30 percent of students cited contributing to society as a priority, and high ethical standards trumped financial strength as the top characteristic students seek in an employer.

For this generation, work is more than just a place to earn a paycheck, it's an environment in which to learn, be mentored and make a difference, Tattaneli said.

Nearly 45,000 undergraduate students from 184 schools responded to the online survey.

Attached at the hand

Do you bring your cell phone everywhere? Do you sleep next to your Treo or bring your Blackberry to the bar? Has your mobile met your mom?

More than 60 percent of mobile phone users say they have a personal connection with their device, and 44 percent believe their phone has strengthened their relationships, a new survey reports.

Women are more prone than men to drop everything to answer a call, while men are more likely to report that their phone has made them too accessible, according to the unscientific survey conducted by Harris Interactive and Ingenio Inc.

Text messaging is more popular among women, but men send more e-mails on their wireless devices, the survey found.

The sexes agree on one thing, though: Nearly 20 percent of respondents named Oprah Winfrey as the celebrity from whom they would most like to receive a call.

The online survey was conducted March 29-April 2 among more than 4,100 adults in the U.S.

Workplaces are more dog-friendly

Many companies allow pets daily

BY ARLENE SATCHELL
South Florida Sun-Sentinel (MCT)

Si Charles prepared for his work debut at IC Systems with an herbal shampoo bath, haircut, beard-whitening facial and a "peticure." On Friday, he delivered faxes to co-workers and spent quality time with his owner Larry Weinstein, 77, at the computer.

When the 4-year-old Sealyham terrier strutted through the doors at the Boca Raton, Fla., company, he was among canines across the nation who accompanied their owners to the office in honor of the ninth annual Take Your Dog to Work Day.

The event "is a celebration of the great companions that dogs make," said John Long, manager of Pet Sitters International association in King, N.C., which expected 20,000 employers to participate this year, compared with 300 at the 1999 launch.

Companies have become more pet-friendly in recent years, and many are allowing pets to come to work daily, said Doug Poindexter, executive vice president of The World Wide Pet Industry Association, a California-based non-profit promoting responsible pet care.

This trend is growing as pets become more like family members and are treated more like children. A recent American Pet Products Manufacturer's Association survey reported that nearly one in five U.S. companies allowed pets at work. But given some of the daily workplace demands, the event has also raised concern.

"I think that every business has to make a decision for itself as to whether or not it's the best thing for their business," said Poindexter. Proper planning is important and employees should check with co-workers for allergies or pet phobias. According to the American Pets organization's survey, there are benefits for employers, as the majority of employees polled believed that having pets at work reduced stress and improved relationships and productivity.

"Just make sure you have a poop scoop," Frank Herhold, executive director of Fort Lauderdale-based Marine Industries Association of South Florida, told employees.

Dogs had visited before, but never five dogs of different breeds, temperaments and sizes. So dogfights were a concern, but employees had that under control.

"It's part of making the office environment a fun place to work," Herhold said.

The Marine Industries Association's special projects manager, Patience Cohn, 51, brought her two Mastiff dogs, Cassius and Ashley, to work. Both were adopted from shelters and rescued from possible euthanasia. Cohn also volunteers with the SOS Mastiff Rescue organization, which helps to find homes for abandoned Mastiffs. The 160-pound Cassius seemed hesitant to play with Bentley, a cocker spaniel pup dwarfed by the Mastiff.

This year's Take Your Dog to Work Day, tagged "It's the leash you can do," also provided a way for the corporate community to help homeless dogs. Pet Sitters International encouraged employers to partner with local animal shelters and humane societies to promote pet adoptions and stem pet overpopulation.

"It's so important that the community uses this event as a staging ground to raise awareness and put a positive spin on pet overpopulation," Long said.

June 22 was Take Your Dog To Work Day, and employees at Marine Industries Association, in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., took several dogs to work. Julianne Gordon works at her computer as her dog Bailey, a mixed-breed hound sits at her side. Bentley (below left), a cocker pup, walks past Bailey.

In lieu of college degree, seek promotional opportunities in current job

Q. I have more than 20 years of experience in a computer-related industry. I've been in management, owned a business, and consulted with large companies.

Three years ago, I decided to pursue a completely new profession. I enrolled in some college courses to increase my knowledge and didn't mind taking entry-level jobs to get started. However, now that I have three years of experience, I would like to advance my career.

Currently, there are no post openings for promotions in my company, so I decided to explore the job market. What I've found is that I need a four-year degree to even qualify for an interview.

I have a lot of ability and experience to offer, so why do I need some piece of paper that says I went to school for four years? I may not have a degree, but I do have a brain! Why is a college degree more important than professional experience?

MARIE G. MCINTYRE

— Not a Grad

A. After years of success, being a rookie in a new profession is tough.

Despite your long history of achievement, you now have to prove yourself all over again.

In this new field, you have only three years' experience, not 20. And your previous work history may be considered irrelevant.

In certain occupations, the degree requirement ensures that practitioners have an adequate knowledge base. For those professions, a college diploma is the entry ticket.

In fields where a degree is not mandatory, the need for one depends largely on the job market.

If many college-educated applicants are available, non-graduates may be at a disadvantage. But if there are numerous vacancies and few applicants, employers will be more flexible.

At this point, your best career bet is to seek promotional opportunities with your current company, where your track record outweighs any educational shortcomings. Once you have higher-level experience, opportunities may open elsewhere.

If circumstances allow, consider going back to school and getting that degree. You'll strengthen your resume, and you might even learn something.

Q. Because I am much older than my co-workers, the owner of our company has often referred to me as "mature" when talking to clients.

Even though this felt like an insult, I told myself that he was clumsily highlighting my years of experience. However, a recent incident left no doubt that he is referring to my age, not my professional background.

How can I let him know these comments are inappropriate?

— Offended

A. Instead of telling your boss

Exploring exports to Mexico

BY JAN NORMAN
The Orange County Register (MCT)

SANTA ANA, Calif. — When business owners consider exporting, their thoughts often travel halfway around the world.

Karen Zens, the U.S. Commerce Department's highest-ranking trade official in Mexico, wants companies to remember that our southern neighbor is one of the best markets for novice exporters.

It's close, has a growing economy, has the same time zones as the United States, honors intellectual property better than many nations, and receives most goods without tariffs, she said.

The Mexican economy is stable although slowing slightly from 2006, Zens said. Gross domestic product is expected to grow 3.5 percent in 2007, compared with 4.8 percent last year. Inflation is projected at 4.1 percent, up a tick from 4.05 percent last year.

Mexico is our second-largest export market behind Canada, buying $134 billion in U.S. products and services in 2006, Zens said. We also have huge investments in Mexico — $94 billion from 1994 to 2004 — six times greater than second-place Spain.

Some U.S. products are in greater demand than others, Zens said.

The best current opportunities are automotive parts and supplies, electronic components, energy, airport equipment, travel and tourism services, plastic materials and resins, telecommunications equipment, environmental products and services, low-income housing and prefabricated construction, safety and security equipment and services, hotel and restaurant equipment and education and training services.

The retail market, Zens said, is "very price sensitive. There is a very high-end segment, but they just hop a plane to shop in the U.S." On the other hand, services are booming, accounting for $30 billion in U.S. exports to Mexico.

Making the right business connections in a foreign country can be tricky.

One of the offerings of the U.S. Commercial Service is setting up meetings between U.S. exporters and qualified companies in a foreign country. "We can do partner searches and background checks on Mexican companies," Zens said.

"If you're really interested in exporting to Mexico, you should visit in person; they want to meet you in person," she said.

U.S. exporters must be aware of Mexican business customs that can cause problems, Zens added. "They push for easy credit terms, and you must be careful about agreeing to them. They have difficulty saying no, so they might be friendly in a meeting but never order from you.

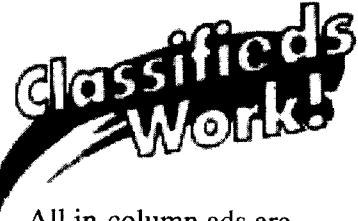

"Also, use a qualified interpreter. You want to make sure you are talking to the right person in a company, not just the person who speaks English," she said.

Mexico has the largest gap between its wealthiest and poorest residents, she said: "It's a developed country and undeveloped country at the same time. They have the newest buses and at the same time have old jitney buses that you have to close your eyes when you ride."

Police corruption has been a problem because police are underpaid and drug gangs are wealthy and violent, Zens acknowledged, "but I think the problems were worse in the past. The new [Calderon] government is concerned about it."

MKX is luxury cruiser in crossover package

BY FRANK A. AUKOER
Scripps Howard News Service

Okay, so it's a Ford. It's also a very nice Lincoln.
It's the 2007 MKX from the luxury division of Ford Motor Co.
Sure, the MKX is based on the Edge, Ford's new crossover sport utility vehicle. And you might wish for a bit more differentiation because the Lincoln MKX has virtually the same overall package and profile as the Edge. But it does have different styling and acquires itself well as a luxury cruiser.
Though they are increasing in popularity, crossovers still require some explanation. Unlike sport utility vehicles, which are truck-based, the crossovers are spun off from passenger cars. They are jacked-up station wagons, with a "command of the road" driving position, available four-wheel drive, and plenty of interior room for people and cargo.
The MKX has 32 cubic feet of stow space behind the back seat, which is about double what you get in a mid-size to large passenger sedan. Fold the rear seat and you get 69 cubic feet.
With unit-body construction like automobiles, crossovers weigh less, handle better and deliver better fuel economy than their truck-based siblings, which have bodies bolted on frames. But they are not as tough or capable off-road as SUVs.

The luxury MKX is the edge with extra styling.

In two-wheel drive versions, crossovers usually have front-wheel drive, while truck-based SUVs have rear-wheel drive. On the four-wheel drive models, the crossovers come with automatic all-wheel drive, where SUVs typically allow the driver to choose two-wheel drive, all-wheel drive, and part-time four-wheel drive in high and low ranges for off-road duty.

In the Lincoln lineup, the Navigator is a full-size SUV and the MKX is a mid-size CUV, or crossover utility vehicle, available with front-wheel drive or all-wheel drive.

As Ford extracted the Lincoln MKX from the Edge, almost every manufacturer spins off different models from the same basic vehicle. In the luxury crossover category, for example, the Lexus RX has the same basics as the Toyota Highlander. Ditto for the Buick Enclave and Saturn Outlook, and the Acura MDX and Honda Pilot.
But few people would connect the Highlander with the RX. Though they share the same platform, they bear little resemblance to each other. Ford didn't go that far when it decided to transform the Edge into an MKX.
Nevertheless, the MKX is credible. It showcases a classy interior — a recent imperative at all the Ford car and truck divisions — with quality materials and tasteful wood grain trim.
Instruments and controls are ergonomically organized, except for the fact that the windshield wiper controls are layered onto the turn signal lever. Moreover, the instruments lack daytime lighting, so they're hard to read on a bright day.

Diagnosis on front end might call for a second opinion

McClatchy-Tribune

QUESTION: I just got the shock of my life. The tire place where I bought new tires says I need a front-end overhaul to the tune of around $900! My '98 Accord has 101,000 miles and seems to drive, stop and turn great.

I told them they were nuts, paid for the tires and got out of there as fast as I could. My original tires made it to about 45,000 miles and were worn pretty evenly across the tread when I replaced them. This place recommended a front-end alignment to go with the tires and that's when the trouble began.

They said they "couldn't align it" because of everything being so worn out. I asked what the worst thing could be that could happen if I didn't fix it and they said I could lose control if I hit the wrong kind of bumps.

Where else should I go to get another opinion? What is done in a front-end overhaul? I know they were after my wallet, but they have me a little worried still.

Walter Garrison, Eureka, Calif.

Answer: Good move, Walter. I'd certainly get a second opinion in a situation like this. The symptoms of worn-out suspension or steering parts might be irregular and rapid tire wear, pulling to one side, the car following grooves in the pavement, noises, and/or a clunking felt in the steering wheel.

Since your old tires did so well and you have no complaints about the Accord's road manners, I think you did well getting out of there with just the tires.

A front-end overhaul could mean different things, but I'd interpret it as the mass replacement of ball joints, tie rod ends, suspension bushings and perhaps front struts or shocks. I can't imagine the need for such aggressive replacement tactics unless the car had several hundred thousand miles on the clock or the wheels were practically falling off.

It's not unreasonable to find a worn ball joint or tie rod end at 100,000 miles, and it's best to renew such a part before performing an alignment, but as solid a car as the Accord is, this should be about the worst one should expect.

Suspension and steering parts are somewhat like your hips, knees and ankles. While it might not be too difficult to align your feet while standing still, imagine how they might flop around as you ran across varying terrain with loose joints and mounts from the hips down.

When the tires/wheels are allowed to wander from the desired plane, tire tread is scrubbed away and the vehicle begins to track sloppily. Testing suspension and steering parts is fairly easy with the vehicle off the ground. The various joints and bushings can be flexed or compressed, checking for excessive looseness.

Some parts, such as ball joints, might have a visible wear indicator or looseness specification, while other parts require subjective evaluation. Any general repair shop should be capable of inspecting and replacing worn suspension components. I'm confident their opinion will differ from the tire-shop rascals, and that noticeable symptoms would occur prior to the car becoming dangerous to drive.

Ford giving Taurus new lease on life

McClatchy-Tribune

Bringing back the Taurus name might be as smart as dropping it was dumb.

Blame and credit Ford Motor for both of those decisions.

After 7 million sales over two decades, production of the Ford Taurus ended in 2006. In its place, Ford filled the family-sedan slot in its lineup with two offerings, the mid-size Fusion and the larger Five Hundred.

The Fusion was a critical and sales success. The Five Hundred was less successful.

Only four out of 10 potential buyers even knew the Five Hundred existed, said Kate Thompson, a Ford product marketing executive. "Eighty percent know the Taurus name. I think that brand awareness is invaluable," she said.

Jack Nerad, executive market analyst for Kelley Blue Book and kbb.com, said, "I asked them point blank, what is the Taurus name worth? It's a half a billion dollars with a B. That's what it would take to get that kind of name recognition. They walked away from half a billion dollars when they went with Five Hundred."

So, for the 2008 model year and on sale now, the Five Hundred is out and the Ford Taurus is back. In many ways, the new Taurus is the same as the 2007 Five Hundred it replaced, but Ford executives stressed that major and significant changes have been made.

Both the engine and transmission are new, said Jim Baumbick, a Ford chief vehicle engineer for cars and crossovers.

The '07 Five Hundred mated a 203-horsepower, 3.0-liter V-6 with either a six-speed automatic or a continuously variable transmission. The '08 Taurus pairs a 260-horsepower, 3.5-liter V-6 and a standard six-speed automatic. Both front and all-wheel-drive versions are available.

"We needed to increase the capability and the performance competitiveness of the product," Baumbick said. In all, he said, more than 600 parts are new in the transition from Five Hundred to Taurus.

The Taurus' exterior now features Ford's signature three-bar chrome grille, also found on the Fusion and Edge crossover. Chrome side vents, mirror caps and dual exhaust tips add a bit of sparkle to what had been a dowdy car.

On the inside, the emphasis was on noise reduction, Baumbick said, as sound-deadening material was added. Even the car's new climate control system is 50 percent quieter.

While the old Taurus was a mid-size sedan, and a direct competitor of the bestselling Toyota Camry and Honda Accord, the Five Hundred and now the 2008 Taurus are full-size cars. That means a big cabin — class-leading front and rear legroom, Ford says — and a huge trunk. At 21.2 cubic feet, it can hold eight golf bags.

A better Tribeca in Subaru lineup

McClatchy-Tribune

Let's start with the bottom line: If you dismissed the 2006 or 2007 Subaru B9 Tribeca as too pricey, too ugly or too powerless, I've got good news for you.

The 2008 Tribeca gets a radical makeover. It loses more than just half its name and gains more than just a pleasant face. A better engine and improved interior refinement make it seem like an all-new vehicle.

When Subaru brought out its B9 Tribeca crossover-utility two years ago, it seemed somewhat of a stretch for the Japanese maker of all-wheel-drive machines for independent thinkers.

After all, the Tribeca was named for a trendy New York City neighborhood, far from the quasi-rugged imagery of vehicles with names like Forester or Outback. (The B9 part was a tribute to the B9X, the original name for the Tribeca that everyone agreed was too close to the name of Saab's 9-7X.)

Available as a five- or seven-seater that could cost nearly $40,000, the B9 Tribeca moved Subaru to an upscale neighborhood, too. At this price range, you could get a Lexus or BMW or Cadillac SUV, for gosh sakes.

Sales targets for the B9 Tribeca were modest — 17,000 in the second half of 2005, and perhaps 30,000 to 36,000 in 2006. The 2005 number was right on, but the 2006 projection was badly off, as dealers sold only 18,614 B9 Tribecas last year.

The 2008 Tribeca gets a radical makeover.

(As an aside, I'd love to know how many Tahoes are sold near Lake Tahoe, how many Malibus are registered in Malibu and just how many Tribecas reside in TriBeCa.)

Most blamed the Tribeca's oddly styled front end, its high price (for a Subaru) and the ever-fiercer competition in the crossover segment for last year's disappointing sales.

So, in what would normally be a mid-life makeover, Subaru has opted for plastic surgery.

Knifed away first, for the 2008 model that just went on sale, is the B9 part of the name. The Tribeca now stands alone.

Gone, too, is the previously used 245-horsepower, 3.0-liter six-cylinder engine. In its place is a 3.6-liter six that makes 256 horsepower and, more important, 247 pound-feet of torque, up from 215. (Both are so-called boxer engines, where the pistons face each other and seem to be throwing punches.)

The five-speed automatic is retained, but improved, Subaru says. As in all vehicles from this brand, all-wheel-drive is standard.

Gas mileage suffers a bit. Blame both the bigger engine and the new EPA formula. It's listed as 16 mpg in the city and 21 mpg on the highway. (That would have been 18/23 using the 2007 formula, according to fueleconomy.gov. The '07 B9 Tribeca with the smaller engine, in fact, did have 18/23 on its label. Important to its owners, the old one needed premium fuel while the new motor does fine with the cheaper regular gas.)

Also left behind is the B9's problematic face. Now there's something more pleasant, if certainly less distinctive. Subaru designers also tweaked the Tribeca's grille, front fenders, hood, headlamps, rear windows and the entire rear end.

On the safety front, the previous version of this vehicle earned five stars for both front and side impacts in the government's crash tests. Enhanced anti-lock brakes are standard as are dual front, side and side-impact air bags, headrest for all seven seats, stability control and traction control.

On the road, the new Tribeca exhibits a solid feel with just the right combination of acceleration and road manners. This isn't a sports car, nor is it a Jeep-like off-roader. But it hugs the road as securely as it hugs the middle ground in its segment. Inside the cabin, there's an aura of upscale that wasn't there before.

Dimensionally, the Tribeca hasn't changed much: The wheelbase is unchanged, and the overall length grows less than two inches due to the body-panel changes. Despite the changes, Tribeca prices haven't moved much. The original 2006 model sold for $30,695 to $37,695. Two years later, the '08 Tribeca starts at $30,640. Our seven-passenger Limited version with navigation and a rear-seat DVD player was $38,440.

How a 'down to earth' lawyer won millions from Ford Motors

McClatchy-Tribune

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Flying from city to city in his private jet, Arkansas lawyer Tab Turner has won hundreds of millions of dollars suing automakers for clients injured in sport-utility vehicle rollover crashes.

His crusade for automotive safety has been featured in The New York Times Magazine, "60 Minutes II" and the PBS program "Frontline." Actor Michael Douglas has announced plans to play Turner in a movie.

During the past two decades, Turner's main foe, the Ford Motor Co., has settled hundreds of death and injury lawsuits involving its Bronco II and Explorer models rather than face him at trial.

"He has built a reputation as Ford wrecker," said Adam Penenberg, the New York journalist who wrote the book about Turner that Douglas is making into a movie. "Ford does not want to get in a courtroom with him."

Now, however, Ford has decided to take its chances with Turner in a landmark consumer-protection lawsuit being tried in Sacramento Superior Court.

Turner, 47, is the lead attorney in the case in which he and plaintiffs' other lawyers are seeking more than $2 billion in Ford profits. They represent nearly 415,000 California car buyers who owned Ford Explorers built in the 1990s.

The company marketed the Explorers as safe family cars when it knew that its high, narrow build made them likely to roll over in emergency maneuvers, especially when coupled with faulty Firestone tires, the lawsuit claims.

After a spate of rollover accidents and a massive recall of Firestone tires, the value of the Explorers dropped, cheating their owners out of resale and trade-in value in the range of $1,100 to $1,300 each, the lawsuit claims.

The plaintiffs are asking the judge to order Ford to set things right, not only by repaying the lost value but also by refunding its profits on the Explorers under California's unfair-business and false-advertising laws.

Tab Turner, a legendary lawyer from Arkansas, has waged a two-decade battle against Ford over the dangers of the Bronco II and the Explorer.

Ford's lawyers have called the consumer-protection lawsuit a case without merit.

Defective Firestone tires were the problem, while the 1991-2001 Explorers were safe vehicles that held their value well, they contend.

"Because these Explorers are safe, well-designed and honestly advertised vehicles that held their value well, plaintiffs have no legitimate claim to extract any money from Ford in this litigation," Ford defense attorney Malcolm Wheeler of Denver told Judge David DeAlba in his opening statement June 5.

In an interview, however, Turner insisted he is motivated to seek justice against Ford because it killed people through its "conscious misbehavior" in advertising the Ford Explorer as a safe substitute for the family station wagon.

"They marketed this thing to run up and down the highway at 70 mph when they knew it would flip over at 35," he said, sipping coffee from a takeout cup in the lobby of the Sheraton Grand hotel.

Turner, with his gray hair and glasses, doesn't seem like a plaintiffs' attorney who has made a fortune suing carmakers and is on friendly terms with the likes of former first couple Bill and Hillary Clinton.

He speaks in a polite, low-key way with an Arkansas accent and wears off-the-rack sports coats to court instead of hand-tailored suits.

Tracey Buck-Walsh, a Sacramento attorney who helped broker California's massive tobacco settlement, is one of the half-dozen lawyers suing Ford.

She said Turner is one of the sharpest lawyers she has ever met, yet he often drops by her Pocket-area house to have dinner with her family and wash his clothes in her laundry room.

Douglas has said he will play Turner in a movie based on Penenberg's book, and the actor's production company has signed on to make it.

Jon Furay, who is co-producing the movie, said Turner's story is about "corporate greed and human life."

"It's a story that needs to be told," he said.

Turner grew up in Arkadelphia, Ark., a town of 10,000 southwest of Little Rock.

His father, Otis Turner, was a prominent small-town lawyer who was later appointed to the Arkansas Supreme Court by then-Gov. Bill Clinton.

Turner attended Ouachita Baptist University in Arkadelphia, where he excelled in football.

His fierce competitive streak in sports carried over to his legal practice, and his success on the playing field gave him confidence, he said.

Turner attended the University of Arkansas School of Law. He had planned on going back to Arkadelphia to practice with his father but landed a job in Little Rock with Friday, Eldredge & Clark, the state's largest law firm.

While still in his mid-20s, he began trying dozens of cases for the firm, which mainly defended corporations and represented insurance companies.

His first big victory was in an insurance-fraud case against Wal-Mart, in which he won a $26.5 million verdict. A case against a labor union brought a $22 million verdict, Turner said.

Then, in the late 1980s, a former secretary of the firm asked for help. Her brother had been brain-damaged in a rollover involving a Ford Bronco II, an early SUV that had a rollover rate of one in 500 vehicles.

Turner obtained a large confidential settlement and gained a reputation as a lawyer who could take on Ford.

He said he never set out to be a lawyer who specialized in suing the auto industry, but after his initial success, the cases just snowballed.

"I looked up one day and I had 50 Bronco II cases," he said. Soon, he left the Friday firm and struck out on his own.

"My makeup was better for the plaintiffs' side" than corporate defense, he said. "I sided with the underdog and the victim."

Turner said he is flattered by the book, the movie and other publicity. But he hopes the public will give its attention to the harm done to the plaintiffs in his cases.

"The focus should be on them and not on me," he said.

In some new cars, trucks, premium gas really adds up

McClatchy-Tribune

DETROIT — After you check out the cupholders in the new car you're shopping for, take a look inside the fuel-filler door.

There may be a surprise there that will cost you $3 or more every time you fill the tank.

A surprising number of otherwise affordable new cars and trucks require or recommend premium gasoline, the fuel grade that often costs 20 cents a gallon more than regular.

It's a cost many shoppers may overlook until the first time they refuel their new car, when it's too late for second thoughts.

It's an easy mistake to make. Most of us assume only high-powered exotic cars require premium, but some mainstream models do, too.

Twenty cents a gallon may not mean much to the architect in the $250,509 Ferrari 612 Scaglietti or the lawyer in the $169,900 Bentley Continental GT, but it's a nasty shock to the college grad who stretched his or her budget to buy an $18,285 Chevrolet Cobalt SS, a $22,110 Toyota FJ Cruiser or a $24,000 Nissan Altima 3.5 SE, all of which require or recommend premium fuel.

The difference can add up to real money. Let's run some numbers.

Consider the Ford Edge and Mazda CX-7, two cool-looking five-passenger SUVs with similar power, size and fuel economy. The 265-horsepower Edge runs on regular; the 244-horsepower CX-7 requires premium.

Assuming 1.25 18-gallon refuels a week and a 20-cent-per-gallon hit for premium, the CX-7 will cost about $20 a month more to run than the Edge.

Over 52 weeks, the difference amounts to about $240. That's easily half a car payment, assuming you bought a base CX-7 with a $2,000 down payment. I used the payment calculator at Edmunds.com to estimate the monthly payment.

While some mainstream models like the CX-7 and FJ Cruiser require premium, you might be surprised by some of the upscale and performance cars that happily burn regular, including the turbocharged Saab 9-5 and the 300-horsepower Mustang GT convertible.

The Detroit-based automakers have caught their share of flak as fuel prices rose this year. They deserve credit, though, for generally avoiding the hidden cost hike of sneaking a "premium required" label onto apparently budget-minded models, and holding the line for regular fuel even where Cadillacs and Lincolns are concerned.

Chery's U.S. car likely to cost $10K

McClatchy-Tribune

Chrysler is unlikely to roll out a $7,000 car when it brings the first Chery-made American-brand small car to the U.S. market in 2009, U.S. industry analysts say.

Rather than hit the streets with an extremely cheap set of wheels, Chrysler and Chery will more likely beef up the Chery A1 to about $10,000 with features and content expected by American consumers.

Shortly after the Chinese government gave the OK to a deal between the two automakers, Chrysler CEO Tom LaSorda said his company would begin selling cars made by Chery Automobile Co. in South and Central America in 2008 and in North America by 2009.

Chery's president, however, indicated that a version of his company's new A1 car will be sold in the United States at a price of $7,000 — half the price of the cheapest Chrysler vehicle on the market today — and that it would be on the road by next year, according to reports by Bloomberg News.

Chrysler has not confirmed this and the statements appear to be at odds with what LaSorda said at the official event Wednesday.

The A1 goes for the equivalent of $7,100 to $7,900 in China, but no official export price has been set yet by Chrysler.

The automakers' messages are unified, however, on the most important matter of the week: Chrysler and Chery are raring to go with a partnership that will likely bring the first Chinese cars to U.S. dealerships.

"This is a significant deal," said George Magliano, Global Insight's director of automotive research for the Americas. "I don't think Chrysler can wait around on this thing. Everyone is scrambling to get these programs out there."

Magliano estimates the Chrysler-Chery vehicle will sell for around $10,000 in the U.S. market. "I don't think seven is going to work," he said. "First of all, what's going to sell is not a bare-bones vehicle. They can do what they want when they sell this thing in developing countries. ... In the U.S. this thing has got to be styled right, it's got to perform right, it's got to have quality, it's got to have safety. And you don't get that for $7,000."

Erich Merkle, director of forecasting for IRN Inc., agreed.

"If I were Chrysler I don't think I would sell it that cheap. I think you could sell it for more ... and make a profit off of it," he said. "Why create a price war if you don't have to?"

Merkle estimated the Chrysler-Chery vehicle will have lots of features, such as glowing cup holders, a powerful stereo and other features "younger people expect" and suggested it should sell for as much as $15,000.

"This vehicle probably will be targeted and marketed at the younger generation," he said.

BRIEFS

Beckley named Extended Learning Programs director

Tracey J. Beckley of Fairmont has been named director of Extended Learning Programs at WVU.

Beckley

Beckley will be responsible for strategic planning to increase enrollment and revenue in more than 25 degree programs offered online and off-campus, according to Sue Day-Perroots, dean of Extended Learning.

She will work with departments that offer programs via distance learning, manage the customer service center and develop a recruiting plan to build WVU's programs in new and expanding markets.

"My long-term goal was to return to public service, and I'm excited to be part of this dynamic organization," said Beckley, formerly the general manager of call operations at Allegheny Power. She has also worked with the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development Team and the West Virginia State Development Office.

Beckley has a master's in public management from Carnegie Mellon University and a bachelor's degree from Princeton University. She was also a Truman Scholar.

WVU names new director of undergraduate recruitment

WVU will have a new director of undergraduate recruitment effective Aug. 1. Jamie Ealy has been named to the position, and will be responsible for planning and coordinating undergraduate recruitment efforts, including supervision of regional recruiters throughout the nation.

"I am very pleased that someone with Jamie's experience, enthusiasm and leadership skills will be taking on such an important role for the university," said Brenda Thompson, assistant vice president for enrollment management. "Attracting top students to WVU is vital to our continued success — not only in meeting our enrollment goals, but in serving the citizens of this great state."

Ealy has 12 years of experience in college admissions and recruitment. He received a master's of education in educational leadership and policy studies from Virginia Tech.

He spent the past five years at Berea College, in Kentucky, and the last four as the school's director of admissions. He also served as enrollment services coordinator for Virginia Tech's master of business administration program and was an admissions and financial aid counselor at Concord University.

State fire school to be at WVU training center

More than 200 firefighters and other emergency response personnel from throughout West Virginia and surrounding states will receive hands-on, state-of-the-art fire training when they attend the 2007 West Virginia State Fire School from July 16-22.

The 76th annual state fire school will be held at the WVU Fire Service Extension State Fire Training Center in Morgantown. Staley Communication Inc., of Wheeling, is a general sponsor for the 2007 training event.

The West Virginia State Fire School, organized by the WVU Fire Service Extension (WVU-FSE), offers 14 national certification courses and another 16 courses that meet West Virginia or National Fire Academy standards. The training sessions are taught by WVU-FSE adjunct instructors as well as instructors from Bucks County Community College in Doylestown, Pa., Virginia Department of Fire Programs, the WVU Division of Forestry, West Virginia State Police and the West Virginia State Fire Marshall's office.

"WVU Fire Service Extension has a long history of training firefighters in the state," said Murrey Loflin, director of WVU-FSE. "Many rural communities are served by small volunteer fire departments that are often underfunded. We have been providing training to these firefighters since 1931."

Internship helps forensic student prepare for job

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Zena Urban is only 23 years old, but the WVU student is already well aware of her own mortality and just how fragile life can be, in general.

Taking part in 30 autopsies over the past few weeks will do that to you, the senior from Williamsburg, Va., says with a rueful chuckle.

Urban, who is studying forensic biology in WVU's acclaimed forensic and investigative sciences program, is completing a unique internship this summer — uniquely grisly, some might even say — at the Iowa Office of the State Medical Examiner.

The bustling lab just outside Des Moines is more often than not the first stop on the way to the final resting place for those befallen by fatal circumstances in the Hawkeye State.

Murder and drowning victims. Shotgun suicides. And people who thought they didn't need to wear a seatbelt — since they were just riding in the backseat.

"It makes me appreciate things more," Urban said, as she readied for another day's work in the lab. Urban is aiming for a career as a forensic pathologist. She's spending her days in Iowa drawing blood and fluids during the autopsies, and weighing the organs of the victims that so often figure into the investigations surrounding their demise.

"It's really everything that medical student does," she said, "except that you're doing it from the forensic angle. Once you get into it at this level, you learn pretty quickly whether you want to do it or not." You also learn something else, she said.

"You learn that tomorrow's not guaranteed," she said. "Death is just something that's going to happen, so you should celebrate every moment."

But in moderation, of course, she's quick to add — since she has seen her share of drunken driving fatalities this past summer.

One thing is guaranteed, though: Urban is earning a degree in a program that has given WVU an international reputation in law enforcement. The internships alone, from crime labs in Cleveland, Texas and Philadelphia, to the famed McCrone Institute, in Chicago, are a testament to that, said Dr. Keith Morris, interim director of the program.

Morris, too, has international connections. He's the former director of South Africa's national crime lab system, and he came to the States and WVU solely on the strength of the forensic program here.

Other top professionals have joined him. WVU's forensic efforts have been featured in outlets from The Chronicle of Higher Education to "True Hollywood Stories" on cable television's E! Entertainment Network.

The program in the Eberly College of Arts and Sciences boasts more than 500 majors from 35 states and five countries.

And students learn the trade in world-class facilities that include three "crime scene" houses, a forensic garage and "burial plots" area to cover all facets of crime investigation.

The internships, as Morris said, make it even better.

"They play a crucial role in the education of future scientists," Morris said. "The internships provide context for academics, because our students get to really apply the theories they have been taught. It's like a light gets snapped on."

Travis Warner says his internship at the McCrone Research Institute in Chicago will shine like a beacon on his resume. The 21-year-old junior from Charleston is a budding forensic examiner with a bent for geology.

McCrone is where studies were done on the famed Shroud of Turin, the cloth said to depict Christ's crucified body, and where groundbreaking research is done on sleuthing related to the ground.

"A lot of times soil is overlooked in police investigations," Warner said. "But you track in stuff on your shoes, and you pick it up in your tire treads and pants cuffs. You track carpet fibers into fields. You leave a trail whether you realize it or not."

Amy Richardson is happy the trail to her career as a forensic chemist is starting at WVU. The 22-year-old senior with a dual major in forensic chemistry and chemistry is spending the summer in her hometown of Philadelphia, doing chemical analysis in the crime lab of the city police department.

She appreciates the opportunity, she said, and she also appreciates her education at WVU. Like the dirt on the soles of the shoes Warner was talking about, she's picked up a lot of knowledge in her classes here, she said.

"From going to WVU, I already know a lot about the drug chemistry that other people can only learn on the job."

She's also learned, she said with a laugh, not to take the "CSI" shows on television too seriously — much to the consternation of her roommates back in Morgantown.

"No one will watch them with me," she said. "I'm always talking back to the screen. It's like, 'No, that's so fake. That's not how they really do it.'"

The reason Urban wants to do it, she said, is simple. She'll get to bring justice and comfort to the people left behind.

"Families just want to know what happened," she said. "It could be a homicide or an accident, or if someone took his life by his own hand. They just want to know, and I'll have the chance to help them know. Being at WVU and being in this internship makes me want to do this job that much more."

WVU hosts Governor's School for Math and Science

Submitted to The Dominion Post

WVU is getting kids excited about learning during the West Virginia Governor's School for Mathematics and Science this month.

Sixty students from nearly every county in the state are immersing themselves in classes and hands-on learning opportunities at WVU — all while experiencing dorm-style living on campus at Stalnaker Hall, going on field trips and joining in social and recreational activities.

The session for students who recently finished the seventh grade (often referred to by educators as "rising 8th graders") began Thursday (July 5) and will run through July 14.

Rising ninth graders will attend their own session at WVU July 15-27. Students in this age group also have the opportunity to attend a session at the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Green Bank July 29-Aug. 11.

A ceremony for parents and families was held for the first session. A similar ceremony will be at 3 p.m. in the auditorium of the Life Sciences Building on the opening day of the second session.

"It's very important for us to engage the youth of our state in exciting educational activities," said Keith Garbutt, dean of the Honors College. "They are the future, literally. Not having enough young people studying math and science is a national problem. We want to show them science is fun."

Six WVU resident advisers (RAs) will live and work side-by-side with the students, helping them adjust to their weeklong stay and aiding them on their projects.

When participants first arrive, the RAs and volunteers put on a ceremony and skit to help prevent possible homesickness.

Students engage themselves with new ideas and concepts during the West Virginia Governor's School for Mathematics and Science. playing games and working alongside a particular teacher and group of students throughout the week.

Central research themes are chosen each year for the school. Activities broaden students' understanding of the role of scientific research in society. "Journey to the Inner Space" is the theme for this year's program, which will include trips to the National Aquarium in Baltimore July 8 and 22.

This will be the first time the school has taken students to the aquarium, Garbutt noted. Students will design special projects, such as a fictional expedition to the bottom of the ocean, prior to their field trip.

During a typical day at the school, children learn by forming research groups in the morning with experiences related to the central theme. Students usually break for soccer, swimming and other outdoor games in the mid-afternoon.

"Everything they do feeds into the theme of the school," Garbutt said. "The theme this year is about what's going on at the bottom of the oceans. It's about dealing with engineering problems, how you would design something to withstand high pressures."

"They'll be learning a lot of math and science as they go along." Students will enjoy hands-on biology experiences, looking at different organisms and ocean currents, among many other areas.

The GSMS also provides an important role in getting students interested in higher education, Garbutt said.

"Students from the first group we had are coming to WVU this year," he noted. "Many will be honor students. It's good to see we're making a difference. Young students get a lot of encouragement through the Governor's School."

Other activities include science lectures by WVU faculty, Quiz Bowl and field trips.

WVU Gold & Blue Weekend slated for July 26-28 at Stonewall Resort

Submitted to The Dominion Post

Hundreds of alumni and friends will descend upon scenic Stonewall Resort July 26-28 as part of the WVU Alumni Association's 5th Annual Gold & Blue Weekend.

The Association hosts the event each year for WVU alumni and friends. The weekend will kick off with a reception on July 26, followed by the 65th Annual WVU Alumni Association Golf Tournament — the longest running golf tournament in the state — on July 27. The golf tournament is open to the first 120 golfers. Proceeds from the golf tournament benefit the Mar- maduke H. Dent Society, which provides funds for enhancement of alumni facilities and programming.

"Gold & Blue Weekend is a wonderful opportunity for alumni and friends to get together, reminisce and enjoy the beautiful sights and activities at Stonewall," said Steve Douglas, president and CEO, WVU Alumni Association. "We expect hundreds of alumni and their families to be on hand for this great event."

On July 28, alumni leaders from across the nation will gather for the 10th Annual Alumni Leaders' Institute. This unique program allows chapter leaders and other alumni to address issues facing their areas, catch up on university events, and share ideas on various alumni programs, including networking, scholarships and mentoring.

For the second year in a row, the Alumni Association will host the Gold and Blue online auction the month of July. Alumni and friends from can bid on numerous items, including a signed Brad Paisley cowboy hat, golf at the Greenbrier, a pin flag signed by Jack Nicklaus, and many other unique items.

Proceeds from the auction will benefit the Loyalty Permanent Endowment Fund of the WVU Alumni Association which provides more than 400 scholarships each year to deserving students. A presentation of the items up for bid can be found on the WVU Alumni Association's Web site — alumni.wvu.edu — and click on the "On-Line Auction" icon link located on the lower, left-hand side of the page. Bids will be accepted through Aug. 1.

For more information about the Gold & Blue Weekend, contact the WVU Alumni Association at 293-4731 or visit alumni.wvu.edu.

The WVU Alumni Association, chartered in 1873, represents more than 170,000 university graduates residing in every county in West Virginia, every state in the union and about 60 foreign nations. With nearly 100 registered chapters and constituent groups, the association's 28,000 dues-paying members support Homecoming Weekend, the WVU Academy of Distinguished Alumni and dozens of other social and philanthropic programs.

AMERICAN BODY SHOP

Sunday at 10:30 p.m. on (COM)

Just be thankful this place is fictional. An Arizona auto body and detailing establishment is the setting for this goofy new comedy. Peter Hulse ("Employee of the Month") stars as Sam, the shop's owner, who spends most of his time trying to keep his oddball, ethics-challenged employees in line. In the premiere, that becomes top priority as the shop is in danger of losing its insurance coverage. Nick Offerman, John DiResta and Jill Bartlett also star.

BUILD IT BIGGER

Tuesday at 10 p.m. on (DISC)

Move over, Bob the Builder. In this new series, architect Danny Forster gets up close and personal with an assortment of larger-than-life construction projects, showing viewers not only how the things are made but what the builders have to go through. In this episode, it's extreme height and cold, as workers toil through a Minnesota winter to complete a giant wooden roller coaster. Another segment features a metal coaster — the world's tallest — in Virginia.

SYNCHRONIZED SWIMMING: THE PURSUIT OF EXCELLENCE

Wednesday at 8 p.m. on (B 2)

GREY'S ANATOMY

Thursday at 9 p.m. on (4)

Fasten your seat belts — no, wait, make that life preservers. This is the big, scary episode that changes everything for the interns, when they're called to the scene of a deadly ferry crash. George (T.R. Knight) is frantic to find a patient's lost little boy, while Meredith (Ellen Pompeo) has someone's lost little girl following her around as she tries to care for the injured. And yes, this is the one where Meredith falls in the water.

GREEK

Monday at 9 p.m. on (FAM)

Think of this new drama series as a kinder, gentler "Revenge of the Nerds." It centers around a college freshman (Jacob Zachar) who's determined to shed his high-school geekiness and become a frat boy. Unfortunately, his older sister (Spencer Grammer, Kelsey's daughter) is a sorority queen who isn't thrilled about having her kid brother in "her" Greek system. Scott Michael Foster, Jake McDorman and Amber Stevens also star.

MONK

Friday at 9 p.m. on (USA)

More Monk! Hooray! Tony Shalhoub's obsessive-compulsive, multiphobic detective is back for more adventures guaranteed to take him out of his teeny-tiny comfort zone. Last season found him confronting his fears of dirt and germs as he solved crimes on a farm and in a hospital — and working under cover as a butler, which suited his fastidious nature much better. Traylor Howard also stars in the season premiere.

ONE FLEW OVER THE CUCKOO'S NEST

Saturday at 8 p.m. on (AMC)

Frontal lobotomies are bad. Evil nurses are bad. Fishing is good, as is throwing bathroom fixtures out the window and running for your life. This 1975 drama is a pretty faithful adaptation of Ken Kesey's book, and viewers are supposed to focus on main mental patient McMurphy (Jack Nicholson). But the sight of silent Chief (Will Sampson) breaking out to go back to nature will really stick in your head. Louise Fletcher stars as cranky Nurse Ratched.

Movie Psychics

"The Shining" (1980):

Young Danny Torrance (Danny Lloyd) has quite a stay at a snowbound hotel, since he has visions of a terrifying past and future while his caretaker father (Jack Nicholson) slowly goes bonkers in this Stephen King tale.

"The Gift" (2000):

Annie Wilson (Cate Blanchett) isn't necessarily thrilled about her clairvoyant capabilities when she's called in to assist police with a missing-persons case, making her the target of certain people who would prefer for her not to have any input.

"THE LAST MIMZY"

The discovery of a box of toys has quite an effect on young siblings (Chris O'Neil, Rhiannon Leigh Wryn) in this clever fantasy. The kids suddenly are able to do all sorts of amazing things, and their science teacher (Rainn Wilson, "The Office") considers the situation the fulfillment of an ancient prophecy. Others, such as the children's parents (Timothy Hutton, Joely Richardson), are merely baffled. Michael Clarke Duncan and Kathryn Hahn ("Crossing Jordan") also appear. ★★★ (PG: AS, P)

"BEAUTY AND THE BEAST: THE COMPLETE SECOND SEASON"

It took long enough for the first year of this fantasy-drama series to reach DVD, so devotees are sure to be pleased by the disc debut of the second round. This marked the last full year of the show in which Linda Hamilton played lawyer Catherine, who owed her life to the half-man, half-beast recluse Vincent (a heavily made-up Ron Perlman). Roy Dotrice also stars as the benevolent "Father." ★★★ (Not rated: AS, P, V)

"EXTRAS: THE COMPLETE SECOND SEASON"

Ricky Gervais ("The Office") continues to mine the world of background actors for humor in this collection from the HBO series. Here, he's on the verge of fame when a script he created is bought by a network, but his agent (longtime Gervais collaborator Stephen Merchant) could get in the way. Among the famous faces making guest appearances are Robert De Niro, David Bowie, Orlando Bloom, Ian McKellen, Coldplay lead singer Chris Martin and the screen's Harry Potter, Daniel Radcliffe. DVD extras: three "making-of" documentaries; outtakes. ★★★ (Not rated: AS, P)

"THE ASTRONAUT FARMER"

Billy Bob Thornton gives a nicely understated performance in Michael and Mark Polish's gentle drama about a former NASA pilot who never reached his goal of going into space. He's determined to make up for that by building his own rocket and lifting off, much to the concern of government officials. Virginia Madsen ("Sideways") plays Thornton's wife. Bruce Willis and Bruce Dern also have supporting roles. DVD extras: theatrical trailer; "making-of" documentary; audio commentary by astronaut David Scott; outtakes. ★★★ (PG: AS, P)

'Fore' seeks new golf gadgets

In one respect, Tiger Woods is no different from the weekend hacker who dreams of one day breaking 100: When all else fails, they'll both snap up the latest equipment in an effort to lower their score.

Maybe it's something simple like a different driver to cure that crooked tee shot or a new putter to help sink those pesky 4-footers. Or perhaps it's a product so ingenious, your initial reaction might be, "Why didn't I think of that?"

Well, it's probably because you're not an architect of golf ideas like the contestants featured on "Fore Inventors Only," an eight-episode reality series debuting Tuesday, July 10, on the Golf Channel.

Culled from a cast of thousands who auditioned are the 103 inventors who get to demonstrate their product in front of a panel consisting of Golf for Women senior editor Stina Sternberg, noted instructor Bill Harmon and PGA Tour pro Fulton Allen. Sports personalities and regular golf consumers will also field test each invention and provide feedback to the panelists, who will eliminate all but five of the contestants. Viewers then pick the winner, who receives shelf space for his invention at retailer Golfsmith for one year and media time on the Golf Channel, in a live interactive finale on Sept. 4.

Some of the auditioners went to great lengths to foster their creations, including risking their life savings.

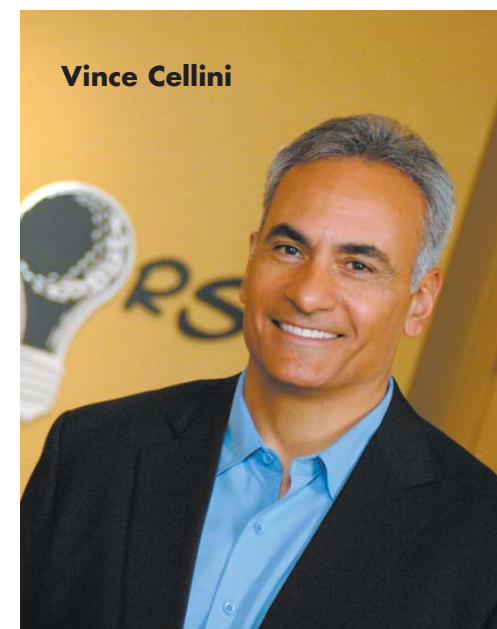

"The way they get to these inventions is so incredible," Golf Channel executive producer Jay Kossoff says, "you know, from having a parent with a disability that caused them to create one thing, or just finding a need within themselves to make something, or flat-out just finding a need to make anything. Some of these folks are just true inventors. So it was all very, very interesting to us, and there are emotional stories and funny stories, and it's happy and sad and it really follows the whole script of a dramatic series.

Guiding the entire process is host Vince Cellini, who admits he wasn't quite sold on the idea at first.

"I guess I went into it a little like, you know, ah, I rolled my eyes a little bit," he says, "but as I got into it, you know, not to sound Joe Patriotic, but I really think there's something inherently American about inventors and people who say they're going to build a better mousetrap."

Baring all of her talent on the court

Lauren Jackson

FULL NAME: Lauren Elizabeth Jackson
BIRTHPLACE: New South Wales, Australia
BIRTH DATE: May 11, 1981
POSITION: Forward-Center
HEIGHT: 6 feet 5 inches
WEIGHT: 187
ROAD TO STARDOM: Lauren early on followed in the footsteps of her parents, who represented Australia in basketball, by taking up the sport at age 4. By her teen years she was playing for the prestigious Australian Institute of Sport team, and as a 16-year-old, she became the youngest player ever selected to the Australian national team.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: 2003 WNBA MVP ... named to the WNBA All-Decade team in 2006 ... WNBA career-high in points is 35 and rebounds is 20 ... four-time champion in the Australian women's pro league.
PERSONAL: Wears No. 15 to honor her mother, who wore it playing for Australia's national team.

She once caused the winds of controversy to swirl with a nude photo spread. Now the only headlines Lauren Jackson earns are from being the center of the Storm.

Jackson is in her seventh season anchoring the middle for the WNBA's Seattle Storm, who selected her first overall in the 2001 draft. During that time she's crafted a career that ranks among the best ever in the women's league, and she's adding to it in the early part of this season by leading the WNBA in scoring, rebounding, blocks and player efficiency. (Player efficiency, or overall ability, is derived by assigning a number to each stat, then adding the positive ones and subtracting the negative ones. Jackson has led the league in that rating for three straight seasons.)

Despite dealing with an assortment of injuries last season, Jackson was named to the All-WNBA First Team for the fourth straight season, the only player in the league to hold that distinction. And in passing the 3,000-point mark in 2006, she became the youngest player (25 years, 33 days old) and the fastest (162 games) in history to reach that plateau.

Even before Jackson, who was born in New South Wales, Australia, took off her clothes for an Australian magazine in 2004, she was already famous in her native land, having led her country to a silver medal in the 2000 Olympics. She repeated the feat in '04, the same year she guided the Storm to the WNBA title.

"INSIDE THE ACTORS STUDIO"

It's a good idea to stick to your mission. We've chided this series on occasion when the guests haven't reflected the show's true purpose, but we're also willing to give credit where it's due. Host James Lipton's recent chat with Kyra Sedgwick ("The Closer") was a great example of what the program should be.

"JERICO"
It can pay to protest. Not only has this serialized drama earned renewed life thanks to an outcry by fans, it also has landed repeats of the show's first year on CBS' summer schedule. What a reversal of fortune, one that the network undoubtedly hopes will pay big dividends next season. (J.B.)

"THE SOPRANOS"

Please do not adjust your cable connection. While some viewers were frustrated by the lack of a conclusive ending to the series, others were just irritated by the way it ended visually, suddenly going to black in the middle of a scene. Here's hoping other networks and shows don't follow suit. (J.B.)

"BIOGRAPHY"

Twiggy's career was launched in 1966 when, at 17, she was chosen by a London hair salon to model a new boyish style. A leading fashion journalist saw the photo in the salon while getting a haircut and asked to meet the young model. (J.R.C.)

BY KATE O'HARE

since the end of season one of Showtime's "The Tudors," and I'm still amped up to defend the virtue of the unfortunate Catherine of Aragon.

Think about it, the poor woman had to come from sunny Spain to damp England to marry some teenage prince. He dies (before consummating the union, she says), then she's married off to his younger brother, Henry, by way of a papal dispensation, as the Bible apparently frowns on marrying one's brother's wife if the two had actually done the deed.

Then, after many years of marriage (faithful for her, wildly unfaithful for him) and several attempts to bear a surviving male heir, she finds herself shunted to the side because the now-King Henry VIII wants to marry some upstart tart from a social-climbing family besotted by visions of grandeur.

If this were today, Catherine would be summarily divorced in Mexico and forced to live a Renaissance-era version of "The Starter Wife."

As it is, she wrestled Henry to the mat, defending her honor and her legal rights to the bitter end. Of course, she lost, but at least she kept her head, which is more than we can say for the upstart tart.

What allowed me to get so into Catherine's story is that "The Tudors" took its first 10 episodes (and, I hear, also a few from next season) to tell it. In normal Henry VIII tales, she would have been gone by the end of the first hour, if not sooner.

HBO's series "Rome" took a similarly lusty and long-form look at the time of Caesar, but it chose to focus the center of its tale on two minor figures, a pair of Roman soldiers who always seemed to be on hand when the big history was happening.

That's a fine approach, and for its two seasons, "Rome" was a fine series. While "The Tudors" is not as high-minded as "Rome," it showed a lot of audacity in keeping its focus squarely on the movers and shakers of Henry VIII's court. It took a lot of liberties, but it never lost the thread of history.

Both shows also had the luxury of spinning out their stories over time, rather than forcing decades to be squashed into a movie or miniseries.

This approach of making a full-on series based on history is not new, but HBO and Showtime have demonstrated how it works for a modern audience.

I'd like to see an ongoing series about the Revolutionary War and the creation of the American nation. As we watch Iraq lurch along on its uncertain path to democracy, it might behoove us to remember that at the time, our beginnings were just as fraught with uncertainty, fear, discord and violence. (Yeah, HBO has "John Adams," but I'm talking about the "Rome" treatment.)

Maybe we could spend some time among the doomed folks of Pompeii, or in the radical court of monotheistic Egyptian pharaoh Akhenaten. (Just think whom we could cast as Queen Nefertiti!)

Or, how about the lives and loves of young Will Shakespeare and his traveling band of players? It worked for "Shakespeare in Love."

David Canary stars as Adam and Stuart Chandler on "All My Children" weekdays on ABC.

ALL MY CHILDREN Following Tad's advice, JR admitted to Adam that he staged his own kidnapping. A horrified and deeply hurt Adam initially rejected JR, but they later formed an uneasy alliance to fight back against Zach. Coming: Ryan finds himself caught in the middle of Annie and Greenlee's battle.

AS THE WORLD TURNS Jade was arrested after she confessed to bringing Cleo to town for the look-alike scheme. In Branson, Will was appalled when Cleo kissed him, then admitted she got Jade arrested by running Will off the road. Maddie and Noah's shared misery led to them making love. Coming: Carly refuses to give up on Jack.

THE BOLD AND THE BEAUTIFUL After refusing to spend the night with Brooke and the kids, Ridge told Ashley that it's over with Brooke and she's the woman he wants. Believing Brooke was pulling into the driveway, Donna, who was babysitting, left the kids alone. Coming: Brooke is involved in an unfortunate chain of events.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES With Stefano's condition deteriorating, Rolf said he needs the stem cells from Sami's unborn babies immediately. Roman admitted to Hope that he is still attracted to Anna, even though his ex-wife drives him crazy. A crying baby on the phone disconcerted Philip. Coming: Will Chelsea be able to mind her own business?

GENERAL HOSPITAL Jason and Amelia found Jake with Maureen, who let them know that Sam witnessed her taking the baby. After Jason returned Jake to an ecstatic Elizabeth, Amelia spitefully let Sam know that Jason is aware of what she did. Coming: Sam finds no sympathy for her actions.

GUIDING LIGHT Rick and Beth declared their love for each other and were married in defiance of Alan. Josh got hold of the DVD proving that Cassie switched the paternity test results and was furious. Mallet was thrilled when Dinah regained consciousness. Coming: Cassie's actions have serious consequences.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE After being paid off by Miles, Hunter deposited Todd, unconscious but still alive. Talia covered her growing feelings for Antonio as his and Jessica's divorce was made final. Much to Dorian's shock, Viki and David are becoming very good friends. Coming: Stress of the divorce puts Jessica at risk.

PASSIONS Faced with Sheridan threatening to call the police, the blackmailer was prepared to commit suicide rather than go to prison. Ethan later found the blackmailer, who pulled him into a kiss and confessed his/her love. Whitney turned down Chad's plea for another chance. Coming: Theresa's long-held secret is bubbling to the surface.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS Amber used the money she got from Kay for her music demo to bail out Daniel, who had been arrested at a strip club. Kevin risked his own life to find Jana, as Michael discovered a trail that may have led Kevin to Prague. William attempted to alert Maggie. Coming: Amber's lies return to haunt her.

celebrityquotes

"I have a relatively wry sense of humor, so I am one to just do random bits in my life. If an escalator's not working, I'll just step on the first step and just stand there. Someone says, 'It's not working,' and I go, 'Oh, yeah, right,' and step off." -Neil Patrick Harris of CBS' "How I Met Your Mother"

"At the end of the day, I'm doing this for the people at home who want to get the best newscast, want to know they can trust you and want to know you'll help them find things out to make their lives better." -Kiran Chetry, co-anchor of CNN's "American Morning"

"Sitcoms are the hardest format to act, because everything is compressed. I call it microwave acting. You have to get your brain hot and go into this thing without allowing your brain to ask questions. It's like a gymnasium for the theater." -Jerry Stiller of CBS' "The King of Queens"

Hugh Hefner of 'The Girls Next Door'

Career Objective: To obtain a challenging and satisfying position much like that currently held by Hugh Hefner.

There's no point in denying it – 90 percent of American men want to be Hugh Hefner, and the other 10 percent really enjoy his articles. But when we tune in to "The Girls Next Door" on E! Entertainment Television, we can't help but admire his taste in loungewear – of course, that's after we admire the many uses of silicone in today's plebeian society. Still, aside from bloggers and househusbands, who gets to wear pajamas all day, every day? If we've said it once we've said it almost three times a day since we turned 13 – God bless you, Hugh Hefner.

But just what makes a good pair of men's pajamas? Assuming we follow Hef's lead and go with the classics, you want a traditional two-piece set made of cotton or silk broadcloth with notched collar tops and drawstring-waist bottoms. Often they feature contrasting piping around the lapels and cuffs. Brooks Brothers (www.brooksbrothers.com) makes several beautiful styles that can give any man some Hefner flair.

If you want something a little more upscale from the Brothers, go with a cotton twill. It's pure luxury and gives your three girlfriends something to coo over. But for the ultimate in sleepwear luxury, you need to go Savile Row. The British may not know how to cook or drive on the right side of the road, but they know tailoring like a hooker knows a conventioner. British label Derek Rose (www.derek-rose.com) has a fantastic collection of men's "pyjamas" – that's British – that, while not cheap, will make you feel like a prince. The brand's Woburn 8 Silk Pyjamas are 100-percent woven silk and are particularly striking.

Of course, Hef is known for more than his PJs. He has a collection of smoking jackets that would make Alistair Cooke sit up and take notice. Hitting their prime during Victorian times, the jackets were designed to keep the smell of smoke off one's regular clothing. Today, with society's disapproval of smoking, the smoking jacket has been relegated to novelty wear or the vintage racks (www.funkandjunk.com). But that's not to say you can't find beautiful brand-new jackets that make the bunnies beam. Margita (www.margita.com) makes wonderful men's jackets in silk and velvet. Designed to literally last a lifetime, they feature silk crepe satin trim, silk charmeuse lining, pleated shawl collars, cuffed sleeves and deep pockets.

Other smoking jacket options can be found at www.hillesodesigns.com or by visiting www.shopthebunny.com – just in case you're looking for something with rabbit ears.

The Simpsons 8 p.m. on 45 53

Marge is dragged kicking and screaming into the 21st century and loving every minute of it. When she's humiliated by the PTA for not having an e-mail address, she decides to try the Internet. She's instantly hooked, especially on an online fantasy game in which Bart is one of the town's most powerful players. While she's on the computer, Homer is filling in for the referee at Lisa's soccer game in "Marge Gamer."

Desperate Housewives 9 p.m. on 4

You say you want a revelation? Bree (Marcia Cross) finds out that Andrew (Shawn Pyfrom) worked as a prostitute after she threw him out. Orson (Kyle MacLachlan) learns Mike (James Denton) is out of his coma. So does Susan (Teri Hatcher), but her reaction is a bit different. And Mike gets the skinny on Susan from Edie (Nicollette Sheridan); however, it's mostly false.

Mystery! 9 p.m. on 13 23

Detective Chief Superintendent Christopher Foyle (Michael Kitchen) has his hands full in the new episode "Foyle's War: Casualties of War." His goddaughter (Kate Fleetwood) pays a surprise visit then takes off, leaving her son, shell-shocked by the bombing of his school, in Foyle's care. On the job, Foyle is investigating a murder that leads him into the secretive worlds of wartime sabotage, gambling and military research. Honey-suckle Weeks also stars.

Without a Trace 10 p.m. on 2 5 7

It's a mini-"Star Trek" convention in "Fade-Away," which guest stars Connor Trinneer ("Star Trek: Enterprise") as a high-school basketball coach and Marina Sirtis ("Star Trek: The Next Generation") as the mother of the missing person du jour — a teen hoop star who disappears right after scoring the basket that puts his team in the championships. Tragedy strikes Jack and Anne's (Anthony LaPaglia, Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio) relationship.

Harry Potter: The Hidden Secrets 10 p.m. on (A&E)

Wild about Harry? With a new Harry Potter movie on its way to a theater near you, this new special takes a look back through the Potter universe to date, providing fans with the clues they need to accompany the young wizard on his own search for answers in the past. It reviews memorable villains and allies from the series, traces Harry's personal journey, and offers a sneak peek at what's up in the new film.

Medicare Preventive Services - Diabetes Screening, Supplies, and Self-Management Training - men and women

Diabetes Screening

Diabetes is a medical condition in which your body doesn't make enough insulin or has a reduced response to insulin. Diabetes causes your blood sugar to be too high because insulin is needed to use sugar properly. A high blood sugar level is not good for your health. For people with Medicare at risk for getting diabetes, Medicare covers a screening blood sugar test to check for diabetes. You are considered at risk if you have any of the following: high blood pressure, dyslipidemia (history of abnormal cholesterol and triglyceride levels), obesity, or a history of high blood sugar. Other risk factors may also qualify you for this test and based on the results, you may be eligible for up to two screenings each year. Medicare also covers certain supplies and self-management training to find and treat diabetes.

Diabetes Screening (Fasting Plasma Glucose Test) Beginning January 1, 2005

How often is it covered? You may be eligible for up to two screenings each year.

For whom? Individuals at increased risk for diabetes that have any of the following: high blood pressure, dyslipidemia (history of abnormal cholesterol and triglyceride levels), obesity, or a history of high blood sugar.

Your cost in the Original Medicare Plan? You pay nothing.

tonight's PICKS

NCIS
8 p.m. on 2 5 7

Those darn local lawmen! Gibbs (Mark Harmon) and company investigate the murder of a high-ranking Marine intelligence officer whose body is found in a motel in a small town. This could be big stuff, possibly even with a link to a terrorist cell, but unfortunately, the local authorities have already brought their own biases to bear on the case. Michael Weatherly and Pauley Perrette also star in "Suspicion."

Eureka
9 p.m. on (SCIFI)

You think your town has some oddballs? Have you seen this show? The titular town is populated entirely by geniuses who have been brought together to do top-secret research for the government. As everyone who's ever taken a science class knows, weird things can happen. But this is a Sci Fi Channel show, so expect some serious weirdness. Colin Ferguson, Salli Richardson-Whitfield and Joe Morton are among the cast members returning for season two.

Law & Order: Special Victims Unit
10 p.m. on 9 11 12

Joe Hackett is a preacher, married to Jill Brock, and they have 10 kids? For those who watched a lot of television in the 1990s, this could get weird. Tim Daly ("Wings") guest stars as a minister who is implicated in the murder of a male prostitute — until his wife (Kathy Baker, "Picket Fences") comes up with a taped conversation that turns Benson and Stabler's (Mariska Hargitay, Christopher Meloni) investigation in another direction in "Sin."

P.O.V.
10 p.m. on 13

It wasn't the first race riot of the turbulent 1960s, but the 1967 black urban rebellion in Newark, N.J., was one of the deadliest. Sparked by reports that a black cabdriver had been beaten to death by police, the six days of violence left 26 dead and 725 injured. The new documentary "Revolution '67" revisits the rioting with archival footage, commentary from activists, politicians and other witnesses, and an innovative jazz soundtrack.

The Black Dahlia
10 p.m. on (MAX)

Director Brian De Palma ("Scarface") applies his unique visual sense and a top-notch cast to James Ellroy's novel inspired by one of Hollywood's most famous unsolved crimes. A would-be starlet's (Mia Kirshner) murder in the late 1940s draws two detectives (Josh Hartnett, Aaron Eckhart), who also are rivals for the same woman (Scarlett Johansson), into the resulting probe. Hilary Swank plays a mystery woman with ties to the victim.

tonight's PICKS

Brooklyn Dodgers: The Ghosts of Flatbush 8 p.m. on (HBO)

In 1947 and 1957, a scrappy ballclub from Brooklyn, N.Y., took actions that changed the game forever. The first was signing Jackie Robinson. Ten years later, the Dodgers said bye-bye to Brooklyn, leaving their antiquated stadium for newer digs in Los Angeles. In this new two-part documentary, former players and others remember that 10-year period in the team's history — a period when the Dodgers also beat the Yankees in the World Series for the first time.

United 93 8 p.m. on (MAX)

Much debate about the timing of the release — almost five years after the actual tragedy — surrounded writer-director Paul Greengrass' undeniably powerful drama about the events aboard one of the passenger jets hijacked in the 9/11 terrorist attacks. The use of hand-held cameras emphasizes the uncertainty and fear of those aboard the plane, some of whom ultimately took matters into their own hands by mapping out a plan to storm the cockpit.

Barefoot in the Park 8 p.m. on (TCM)

Look, it's Barbarella and the Sundance Kid! This 1967 Neil Simon comedy stars Robert Redford and Jane Fonda as a straight-laced lawyer and his free-spirited bride, who find starting life together in a tiny New York, fifth-floor walk-up challenging, to say the least. It's dated, but when that sharp Simon dialogue comes out of their mouths, you won't care. Mildred Natwick and Charles Boyer give memorable supporting performances.

Hustle & Flow 9 p.m. on (SHOW)

Pimps. That's about all a lot of people know about this film and as such, are turned off. But that's a sad thing, because Terrence Howard does an excellent job in the starring role as Djay, a pimp who wants out of the business. He tries to become a rapper, but the road to that dream has many large obstacles. Anthony Anderson, Taryn Manning and Ludacris co-star in the 2005 drama.

Don't Forget the Lyrics! 9:30 p.m. on (43 63)

"I can name that tune in seven notes." Great, but can you remember the words? That's what you have to do in this new game show, a sort of cross between karaoke and musical chairs. Contestants start out singing a song with the house band, reading the lyrics off a screen. Then the music stops, and the lyrics disappear. If they keep singing and get the words right, they stay in the game; if not, they're out. Wayne Brady ("Whose Line Is It Anyway?") hosts.

Ugly Betty 8 p.m. on 4

The Halloween episode "The Lysin", the Watch and the Wardrobe" had a lot of fans going, "Boo!" The reason? Betty's (America Ferrera) love life, which looked as if it might take a promising turn away from whiny Walter (Kevin Sussman). But nooo! Romance isn't Betty's big concern right now anyway; she has to find out which of Daniel's (Eric Mabius) recent conquests has his missing watch and cut through more red tape for her dad (Tony Plana).

CSI: Crime Scene Investigation 9 p.m. on 2 5 7

Oh, what a tangled web we weave ... A prominent politician with a strong anti-drug agenda is murdered, and a major drug supplier is the prime suspect. When the evidence trail grows cold, Keppler (Liev Schreiber), Grisom's replacement, comes up with an unconventional plan to catch him. He lets Catherine (Marg Helgenberger) in on it, but she has to keep the rest of the team in the dark in "Redrum."

Grey's Anatomy 9 p.m. on 4

Fasten your seat belts — no, wait, make that life preservers. This is the big, scary episode that changes everything for the interns, when they're called to the scene of a deadly ferry crash. George (T.R. Knight) is frantic to find a patient's lost little boy, while Meredith (Ellen Pompeo) has someone's lost little girl following her around as she tries to care for the injured. And yes, this is the one where Meredith falls in the water.

Hard Shine 10 p.m. on TLC

It's "The Apprentice" with hot cars ... and without The Donald! Instead, we have Jimmy Shine, a custom-car builder in Southern California who's looking for a protegee. This new series follows him as he works with four handpicked candidates for a job at his shop. Only one will get hired, but Shine, once a troubled kid, hopes to do for all of them what his own mentor did for him: help them gain self-respect and fresh starts.

Men in Trees 10:01 p.m. on 4

Things heat up in Elmo in "Talk for Tat." As record high temperatures grip the town, Marin (Anne Heche) realizes the raccoon in her closet is getting sick from the energy bars she's been giving him. She seeks help from Jack (James Tupper), and romantic sparks fly. And they aren't the only ones. Ben and Sara (Abraham Benrubi, Suleka Mathew) are growing attracted to each other, and so are Patrick and Annie (Derek Richardson, Emily Bergl).

tonight's PICKS

Bones 8 p.m. on 43 53

Booth (David Boreanaz) literally throws himself into his work in this episode. While investigating the murder of a young woman involved with an underground fighting operation, he goes into the ring himself as a favor to an undercover agent. Fortunately, he has Brennan (Emily Deschanel) and her knowledge of anatomy to coach him in "The Woman in the Sand."

Jericho 9 p.m. on 2 5 7

Road trip! The town's windmill needs work, and Heather (Sprague Grayden) says she can fix it, but she needs supplies. She asks Jake and Johnston (Skeet Ulrich, Gerald McRaney) to accompany her to a trading post hours away. Dale (Erik Knudsen) wants to come along and trade some merchandise for more useful items, but Johnston isn't thrilled to have him join them in "Black Jack."

Standoff 9 p.m. on 43 53

Kids in juvie who don't want out? What a concept. In the new episode "Kids in the Hall," Matt and Emily (Ron Livingston, Rosemarie DeWitt) are on the case when the young inmates of a detention center take some of the guards hostage. Their goal is to keep the facility from being torn down so they won't end up in a more unpleasant institution. They want to speak to the senator behind the decision — who has some dirty little secrets.

Dogfights 9 p.m. on HIST

No pit bulls here. This series, back for a second season, is about aerial dogfights — those pulse-pounding confrontations between planes that have been part of modern warfare since World War I. The flying aces of that era are among those remembered this season, along with the jet fighters of the Korean conflict, the aerial gun battles of the Vietnam War and the subject of this episode: the kamikaze attacks of World War II.

Law & Order: Criminal Intent 10 p.m. on 9 11 12

They aren't always easy. A judge's son is murdered after his father charges a popular rapper. Sadly, the young man was a fan of the artist. Logan and Wheeler (Chris Noth, Julianne Nicholson) discover there may be more to the killing than simple revenge when they investigate the victim's personal life. On the personal front, Wheeler checks out reports of unscrupulous business dealings involving her estranged father in "Players."

tonight's PICKS

My Super Ex-Girlfriend 7:15 p.m. on (HBO)

Think twice before dumping someone who has superpowers. That's the lesson learned by the fellow (Luke Wilson) at the heart of this 2006 comedy from "Ghostbusters" director Ivan Reitman. Uma Thurman, in a smart sendup of her "Kill Bill" image, plays the woman in question — a supposed bookworm who turns out to be powerful G-Girl. As with many a jilted lady, hell hath no fury, which doesn't bode well for her ex and his new love (Anna Faris).

Freaky Friday 8 p.m. on (4)

Jodie Foster was cute as a bug in the 1976 version, but this 2003 remake more than holds its own by comparison. Jamie Lee Curtis copped a Golden Globe nomination for her hilarious performance as Tess, a 40-ish psychotherapist who switches bodies with her rebellious teenage daughter (Lindsay Lohan), thanks to a most inconvenient magic spell that hits the pair just a few days before Tess is to marry her handsome fiance (Mark Harmon).

Addams Family Values 8 p.m. on (BRAVO)

Novelist-playwright Paul Rudnick wrote this hilariously subversive 1993 sequel to the 1991 comedy about the oddball clan. Gomez and Morticia (Raul Julia, Anjelica Huston) take in a nanny, not realizing she's a serial killer with designs on Uncle Fester (Christopher Lloyd). Christina Ricci again steals all her scenes as young Wednesday. Joan Cusack also stars.

Without a Trace 9 p.m. on (2) (5) (7)

It's in the job description under "other duties as assigned." In "Candy," a stripper goes missing from a club that lost another dancer to murder. Jack (Anthony LaPaglia) has Elena (Roselyn Sanchez) go under cover as a stripper at the club in search of leads. She's not alone; Danny (Enrique Murciano) is posing as a customer. Back at the office, Jack and Anne (Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio) try to sort out the implications of her pregnancy.

America's Funniest Home Videos 10 p.m. on (4)

Here comes the bride ... oops! A wedding-themed episode showcases some moments that probably didn't make it onto the couples' keepsake videos but just might earn somebody some cash. One clip features two women who take that bouquet-catching thing far too seriously; another has a ring bearer who is equally serious about his job — in fact, he doesn't want to give the ring up. Tom Bergeron hosts.

The care you deserve.

Giving birth is one of the most miraculous moments in a woman's life. Here at Mon General, we offer a warm, caring atmosphere the whole family can appreciate. Our skilled team of nurses, support staff, obstetricians and certified nurse mid-wives give mom the personalized care she deserves. In fact, moms come from as far as 100 miles for the expertise and care at Mon General.

Our central monitoring system lets doctors monitor your baby's heartbeat from multiple locations and with our new state-of-the-art ultrasound machine, doctors can view a three-dimensional picture of your baby for better pre-natal care.

And, as your baby grows, our pediatricians can help your child stay healthy and happy - because at Mon General, we see you in everything we do.
