

EMORY

The 2000–2001
Annual Donor Report of Emory University

With Sincere Thanks

From the Senior Vice President for Institutional Advancement

For the first time, we have combined the Donor Report and Emory Magazine with the hope that you will enjoy reading them in tandem. This year's Donor Report focuses on our past efforts to build Emory into a world-class university and on our plans to continue this tradition and bolster our status among the country's great institutions. Our physical campus, our student body, and our academic and research programs have grown significantly in recent years, and we proudly salute all of you who have contributed to these achievements.

We are grateful for your commitment to Emory's success and for your understanding of the importance of higher education in a world that has changed so tragically and dramatically in the past year. Through the continuing pursuit of knowledge, the myriad cultures of the world can reach a better understanding of, and perhaps show more respect for, each other.

It is with great pleasure that we recognize the many splendid donors who have contributed to Emory in the last year, making FY2000–2001 the second-best fund-raising year in our history. With the support of loyal alumni and friends such as you, we will continue the proud work of building Emory into an even more outstanding place of higher learning than it is today. Your unfailing generosity profoundly affects the life of this university and, indeed, the larger world as well. We are deeply grateful to each of you.

With my deep appreciation for your generous support,

“Craning” to See Emory’s Future

A building boom is under way at Emory. It is evident at the corner of North Decatur and Clifton roads, where the steel girders of the Donna and Marvin Schwartz Performing Arts Center have been fleshed out with an underbody of concrete, and on tiny Oxford Road, where the new science building continues to take shape. Further down Clifton Road, the Whitehead research facility is nearly complete. And at the University Apartments complex, now called Emory Clairmont Campus, the vestiges of a small city are rising on a hill that once held encampments of Union soldiers.

These buildings will bear the stamp of Emory’s architectural past, for all are being designed using the master-plan principles that honor Henry Hornbostel, Emory’s original architect. The first of these master-plan initiatives is the new Nell Hodgson Woodruff School of Nursing building. “Coming together in this facility are the best of our past, our dreams for the future, and our commitment to nursing and its very special place in the academy,” said Emory President William M. Chace at the building’s dedication.

At 100,000 square feet, the building is twice the size of the school’s original facility. Its façade boasts elegant pink and gray veined marble accents and a welcoming plaza that links the school physically and symbolically to its neighbors in the Woodruff Health Sciences Center’s medical-research complex off Clifton Road.

The new nursing school can accommodate nearly 700 students from nursing, public health, and medicine. Gifts from alumni and others have provided a warm and welcoming environment throughout the school, where the personal effects of Nell Hodgson Woodruff mingle easily with state-of-the-art classrooms and facilities. One notable gift is a second-story classroom named in honor of workers from the Holder Construction Company, the building's contractor, whose chair and CEO was so impressed by the generosity and spirit of the school that he made a donation himself.

In downtown Atlanta the new Crawford Long Hospital is taking shape. By summer 2002, the historic hospital campus will reintroduce itself as one of the region's premier medical facilities. The redevelopment—a five-year process—has been aided greatly by the largesse of its employees, physicians, patients, and other Atlanta residents, and especially by the kindness of donors J. Mack and Nita Robinson, who pledged $5 million to build a hospital conservatory.

Of course, physical structures are the visual elements that symbolize the growth of a university, but Emory continues to build in less visible ways, to the betterment of its students, faculty, alumni, and community.

The fourth floor of the Woodruff Library holds the Marian K. Heilbrun Music and Media Library, which merges the capabilities of multimedia technology with a traditional music collection. The library was made possible by a gift from Lynn Heilbrun Stahl '76C and Jack Stahl '75C and named in honor of her mother, a 1975 graduate of Emory's library school. With more than two miles of shelving, the library also shares its space with the eighteen-seat Emory College Language Center laboratory, two faculty-study rooms, two group-study rooms, a digitizing suite, and the control room for Emory Television.

"This brings everything related to music and media together—prints, scores, the audio and visual materials," said Joan Gotwals, vice provost and director of University Libraries. "I also think of it as a wonderful way to link the library and the Information Technology Division; the digitizing suite is a good focal point for collaboration.”

Physical structures are the visual elements that symbolize the growth of a university, but Emory continues to build in less visible ways, to the betterment of its students, faculty, alumni, and community.

Creating connections across disciplines and departments is also the goal of the Burke Nicholson Forum, which was established last year by its namesake, who is chair of the advisory council in the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. Three awards of up to $6,000 are made annually to the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences to sponsor events that explore timely intellectual issues from a multi- or interdisciplinary perspective.

The topics of last year’s Nicholson symposia included “Science and Religion: Perspectives on Death and Prolonging Life” and “The Public Intellectual: Scholars and Politics in America in the New Millennium.” The latter drew a standing-room-only crowd to the Atlanta History Center to hear scholars from Emory, Columbia University, the University of Chicago, and London’s Institute for Historical Research ponder why American intellectuals play a less-active and less-visible role in shaping politics and public debate than their European counterparts.

Donors to Oxford College, Emory College, the School of Law, and the Rollins School of Public Health have focused their philanthropy on building upon the already-rich experiences of students, faculty, and staff.

Hailing from a small town in North Georgia, Eugene Rackley entered Oxford College in 1953. Making a failing grade on one of his first papers, the despondent student was all set to pack up and go home when his professor, John Gregory, gave him the pat on the back he needed and a sense of community far from home. Almost fifty years later, Rackley gave a gift to establish the Oxford Career Development Fund, which will assist Oxford faculty and staff in their own professional development. Rackley and his wife, Cindy, hope that other alumni will follow suit by building on their initial donation and honoring those men and women who enhance the lives of students.

The Daniel DeSevo Scholarship Fund was begun by friends and classmates of DeSevo, who died of leukemia in 1999, less than two years after his graduation from Emory College. His classmate and friend, Jeremy Stoler ’97B, helped to raise funds, mostly online, for the scholarship, which will be given to an outstanding first-year student from the New York area. Dozens of DeSevo’s classmates, other alumni, parents, and friends from across the country have responded to Stoler’s call and many continue to send checks to the fund. A special event was held at the New York nightclub Session 73, which brought many more gifts into the fund’s coffers.

When Hugh F. MacMillan ’34L decided to make the lead gift in building the law school library, little did he realize how satisfying an experience it would be. From a law-school office, he watched and supervised every phase of the building construction and often could be found in Gambrell Hall deep in conversation with students or faculty members.

Although MacMillan died before his namesake library was dedicated, he lived to see the building completed and found great joy in watching staff move in and students and faculty begin to use the state-of-the-art facility. Said son Hugh F. MacMillan Jr., “Making the gift to Emory gave my father more pleasure than you can imagine; I am so glad that he did it during his lifetime.”

Ovid Hatcher Stephenson '30B remembered well how after his graduation from the business school, mere months after the start of the Great Depression, a professor called him and brother Bill Stephenson into his office to offer one graduate assistantship at the University of Kentucky. Given that the brothers were both equally qualified, the professor said, "I can't choose between two brothers" and allowed them to decide. "Ovid told the professor that since he was older and jobs were hard to come by, he could probably survive on the street more easily than Bill," says Robert Stephenson, their youngest brother. "So he sent Bill on to graduate school."

When the ninety-one-year-old Ovid Stephenson died in 2000, he left a sizable sum to Emory to establish a student scholarship fund, which Robert Stephenson designated to students in the Rollins School of Public Health to allow these future public servants a chance to attend graduate school—an opportunity that Ovid, a longtime statistician in the public sector, never had.

Emory continues to build links to the community in innovative and interesting ways. For example, Pitts Theology Library of the Candler School of Theology has created a web-based archive composed of artwork from its Kessler Reformation Collection. The website will provide "the church and the academy access to a wealth of printed images from the mid-fifteenth century onward, all taken from the nearly 100,000 volumes of the library's rare book collection," said Patrick Graham, director of Pitts Library.

At Goizueta Business School students are building ties with members of the Atlanta community whose present circumstances could not stand in sharper contrast to their own future aspirations. The Habitat Money Management Group, a BBA service organization, offers financial-planning support for Habitat for Humanity families. Meeting once a month, student volunteers create a financial plan for each family, helping them make a budget and cut spending so they have enough money to cover their mortgage and bills, even helping some to save a little each month. "The students give Habitat families a better chance of keeping their homes," said Nancy Gimbel, associate director of the BBA program and the group's adviser.

Emory is fortunate enough to have a strong base on which to build its programs and services—and donors who recognize and act on current and future needs.

Emory is fortunate enough to have a strong base on which to build its programs and services—and donors who recognize and act on current and future needs. The University's extensive organ-transplantation program took a giant step forward with the creation of the Andrew J. McKelvey Lung Transplantation Center. "Mr. McKelvey's understanding of the potential of the science now at hand, matched with his generosity, will enable us to provide increased emphasis to one of the most challenging transplant organs," said Dr. Michael M. E. Johns, executive vice president for health affairs.

McKelvey's gift also will fund the Augustus J. McKelvey Chair in Lung Transplantation Medicine in the School of Medicine—named in honor of his late father, a general medical practitioner—and provide research monies to recruit and support at least five new faculty in the basic and clinical sciences related to lung disease. In addition, the gift will bring to campus each year a distinguished leader in transplantation or pulmonary medicine.

The McKelvey Lung Transplantation Center is an example of the way in which large gifts significantly can impact programs and departments; but smaller gifts have the same transformative power, as the Michael C. Carlos Museum's 1999 acquisition of the Charlotte Lichirie Collection of Ancient Egyptian Art demonstrates.

The donations of Atlanta citizens, including school-children, allowed the museum to purchase the collection largely from a small museum in Niagara Falls, Canada, thereby adding to the Carlos's original holdings, which have existed since the 1920s. The acquisition has helped catapult Atlanta into the ranks of New York, Boston, and Chicago as a major center for the study and enjoyment of Egyptian art. The museum retained architect Michael Graves, who designed the current museum building, to assist with the design of its new Egyptian galleries, which opened in October 2001.

These examples represent only a fraction of the ways in which Emory builds on its well-established reputation for scholarship, service, and programs. It is the generosity of donors large and small that enables the University to continue successfully its efforts to enrich the lives of its varied constituencies.

Emory's most generous donors and friends constitute the following five groups. For the significant support these individuals provide, the University extends its grateful appreciation to the members of the President's Club, Leadership League, Quadrangle Society, Lullwater Circle, and Lamplighters.

Letter from Henry Hornbostel to Warren Candler, February 6, 1917:

"I . . . somehow cannot but help feeling that the energies expended so far on grounds and buildings have been wisely applied, and in the right direction. The joys of nature and the environment of beautiful things are an influence which is just as potent, and really more definitively certain in its effect, than the direct and sometimes uncertain influence of strong individuals or an efficient faculty."

From "What Is a University?," the first in a series of talks about higher education in the South:

"Calling a group of buildings a university doesn't make it a university. A university must have money, scholars, ideals and standards. Money for buildings . . . scholars for a faculty . . . ideals of character and conduct which tend to develop the higher and nobler side of the student's nature . . . standards of training which insure that its students will receive what a university purports to give: instruction of quality. . . . To be a university in every sense of this definition is Emory University's purpose."

Sesquicentennial Convocation address by James T. Laney, December 10, 1986:

“As we think back on the beginning of Emory, on the spirit of derring-do that marked those early pioneers, on their remarkable investment in the building of this institution, I would hope we can feel ourselves to be part of the institution that they founded. The great cloud of witnesses over the past 150 years would no doubt be impressed, maybe even awed, by what we are doing today, by the facilities and the various centers and programs.”

In January 1939 Samuel Candler Dobbs donated $1,000,000 to Emory University and stated:

"I wish to emphasize that I do not look upon my contribution to Emory's work as a gift, but as an investment which I am making in the boys and girls of this day and of the future. I am making this investment now instead of by will, because I want to see the money at work."

In 1979 Robert W. Woodruff and his brother George made philanthropic history by announcing that the net assets of the Emily and Ernest Woodruff Fund, valued in excess of $100,000,000, would be transferred to Emory University. Robert Woodruff began his "Hundred Million Dollar Letter" by saying, "Education is fundamental to the well-being of society."

Judson C. Ward, "Responsible Citizenship in a Democracy," June 6, 1982, in Walking the Road of Faith:

"The freedoms we enjoy are not secure forever. The struggle for freedom is not over because it was won 200 years ago. Freedom is won anew by every generation in a continuous fight, and there is no responsibility greater than that of living in a democracy."

Oxford College has a distinct place in American higher education. While its past is embodied in its graduates and in its monuments—Old Church, Senev Hall, Soldier’s Cemetery, the Chapel, and Phi Gamma and Few halls—its future is in its diverse student body, its dedicated and able faculty, and a curriculum that prepares students to enter a global and technological world.

Dana Greene, Oxford College dean and CEO, at the dedication of the Hugh and Gena Tarbutton Performing Arts Center, October 2001:

“Like the medieval cathedrals of thirteenth-century France, ours is the work of the many—of a community of architects and artists—of builders, of merchants, of donors, and of those who believe in the transformative potential of the arts to lift the spirit, challenge the mind, broaden the horizons, and deepen the inner life.”

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the federal agency dedicated to developing and applying disease-prevention and -control programs, provides more than one half of the Rollins School of Public Health's more than 200 adjunct faculty.

The Candler School of Theology was founded by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1914. The school became part of Emory when the University was chartered in 1915, occupying the first building on the Atlanta campus. Its mission is to educate—through scholarship, teaching, and service—faithful and creative leaders for the church’s ministries in the world.

Friends of the University include parents, faculty, staff, and others who have provided meaningful support to the University. Their gifts are a testament to the importance of our endeavors, and we cannot thank them enough. These friends, located all over the globe, demonstrate the spirit of giving that crosses all boundaries.

Inaugural address by William M. Chace, April 5, 1995:

“We have built well, and we have built generously; we have built handsomely where handsome building has been warranted. But, amid all the new and the old, we feel crowded. We know we must protect the green and open spaces we still are lucky to have; we must remember that building too must have its limits and that someday we must be able to say: ‘This is Emory. This is what we have wanted in buildings. Now let us teach and learn in them.’ Our building tasks are not quite finished. The cost of excellence is expansion; the price of quality is growth. But let us limit that cost; let us be frugal with that growth.”

Cannon Chapel—named for longtime trustee, former Candler dean, and Methodist bishop William R. Cannon—was consecrated in 1981. It was designed by Paul Rudolph, then one of America's renowned architects; the plaza outside was named for Rudolph's father, who studied at Candler School of Theology in its first years of existence.

When James G. Lester '18C '23G died in 1990, his association with the University had spanned more than sixty years. "Coach Lester . . . probably had the longest and most varied tenure in the history of the University," said Dean of Alumni Jake Ward. He rose from instructor of engineering to professor and chair of the Geology Department; was a campus surveyor and assistant superintendent of buildings and grounds on the new Druid Hills campus from 1919 to 1922; served as director of athletics for six years and firmly established the intramural program; and from 1971 to the early 1980s, he shared the directorship of the Emory Museum with colleague Woolford B. Baker.

Anil Menon, associate professor of marketing, Goizueta Business School, 1999:

“No one knows what jobs are going to be like two years from now because we don’t know what products we are going to be buying and selling two years from now. No one can tell you what your job will look like, but we do know you need one skill and one skill alone, and that is the capability to develop more capabilities. If you do not, in this new knowledge market, you’re gone.”

The Claus M. Halle Institute for Global Learning at Emory University aims to encourage research and teaching in international and comparative fields by fostering collaboration across disciplinary and divisional lines at the University and widening the range of contacts between the University and scholars and policymakers overseas. In each of the academic years from 1997 to 2001, it has sponsored a faculty seminar on contemporary institutional and cultural change in Europe.

From Ali P. Crown, director, Emory Women's Center:

"In the last few decades, women have gained access to nearly every arena. We have crashed through barriers to greater choices and summoned the courage to speak the truth to those in power. The road hasn't always been easy; every little forced turn has brought with it some pressure to return to the old ways. However, realizing that there is no turning back is not the same as knowing what we need to do to move forward."

Mr. Robert W. Woodruff (1889–1985) attended Emory College for one term when it was located in Oxford, Georgia. In 1979 his gift to Emory University of $109 million was the largest single benefaction ever made by an individual to higher education, a distinction that lasted for fifteen years. The largest gift Emory ever has received from a graduate is the $8 million recently committed by Donna Keesler Schwartz '62C P'97 and her husband Marvin Schwartz to the Performing Arts Center, which will be named in their honor.

*Gifts were made in honor or in memory of these individuals.
