“Few things can bring back the warm memories evoked by homemade cookies and candy.”—Cookies and Candy Cookbook

Foreword

In March, 2014, I was browsing an outdoor flea market in Texas when I ran across The Southern Living Cookies and Candy Cookbook. I went home to San Diego and made the Oatmeal Butter Cookies on page 55. I was immediately hooked.

My first recipe from the Southern Living Cookbook Library

From then on, I slowly acquired the rest of the books in the collection. They were very inexpensive, and all of them were very useful. But with twenty-two books in the collection, it can sometimes be difficult to remember which book had which recipe. I decided to create one.

This is an index to the twenty-two known cookbooks in the Southern Living Cookbook Library, published from 1971 to 1979. It will be mostly useless unless you have those cookbooks. If you can find them, it is a phenomenal collection.

There are five parts to the index. The first indexes every recipe in the collection by recipe name. The second lists recipes according to the state the contributor lived in. The third lists recipes from the forty cities with the most recipes. The fourth lists recipes that you can use when you have extra egg whites, extra egg yolks, leftover buttermilk, or milk that's gone sour. And the fifth lists contributors, not recipes.

This is not an official index. It is independent of Southern Living, Progressive Farmer, or Oxmoor House. Indexing the cookbooks was purely a personal project of mine, and for my own use. I've made it public in case someone else finds it as useful as I do.

You can download a free PDF version at clubpadgett.com/slcl or buy the paperback version at clubpadgett.com/slep.

I personally typed the titles and authors from my copy of each book. There will inevitably be typos. If you notice any errors in the text, please contact me via the Padgett Sunday Supper Club.

The Books of the Southern Living Cookbook Library

Page numbers are preceded by a cookbook abbreviation. If there are multiple recipes by the same name (or contributor) in a book, only the first reference is preceded by the abbreviation.

v	Vegetables

For example, Sugared Nuts are on pages “cc154,188”. This means there’s a recipe for Sugared Nuts on page 154 of the Cookies and Candy book, and another on page 188 of the same book. Apricot Bread is on pages “b62,d176”. There is a recipe for Apricot Bread on page 62 of the Breads book, and another on page 176 of the Desserts book.

Neither the Soups and Stews nor the Party Snacks book appear in the author, city, or state indexes. Those books do not include contributors. Both were published in 1979, and were the only books in the collection published after 1977. They may have been late additions with different editorial policies. They differ slightly in other ways as well. They don’t have exactly 188 pages before the index, and have accented letters in the titles. The Poultry book made an attempt at an accent in Egalité Gumbo by putting an apostrophe after the word Egalite. The Meats book has two real diacriticals, in Poêlon and in Basilé, but that’s it outside of the 1979 books.

I don’t know how they decided to attribute a recipe. Many recipes aren’t attributed. I saw no recipes with both a photograph and a listed contributor. Did a photograph mean the contributor wasn’t mentioned? Or did they only take photographs of staff-created recipes?

The listing for special ingredients is mostly straightforward, although there’s some interpretation in whether or not the recipe uses more egg whites than egg yolks. In the Pies & Pastries book, some pies call for using egg yolks and then “1 recipe meringue”. The recipes for meringue range from one egg white to three, so if the recipe calls for one to three egg yolks I do not include the recipe in the list of either egg-yolk-using recipes or egg-white-using recipes. If the recipe uses no egg yolks, it will be in the list of egg-white-using recipes. If the recipe uses four or more egg yolks, it will be in the list of egg-yolk-using recipes.

“Nothing says ‘welcome’ to family members or guests more quickly than the appetite-arousing smell of chicken soup or stew.”—Poultry Cookbook

Favorite Recipes

Caramel Corn

One my favorite sweet snacks is caramel corn, has been ever since I discovered Cracker Jacks. The Cookies and Candy book has two great caramel corn recipes. One is the crunchy, dark, nutty Caramel Popcorn on page 158. The other is Peppy Young's Popcorn Confection, a creamy caramel corn that never fails to bring memories of the circus or summer fair.

There is a typo in Young's recipe, however. The second ingredient is "1 c. sugar" and the third ingredient is "3/4 c. sugar". The instructions are simply "Mix all ingredients except popcorn", so it can't be that they are for separate stages of the recipe.

I originally thought it might be $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon salt, but on reflection I'm nearly certain the clue is in the title. This is a confection; it must have dairy in it. There's already butter, so the $\frac{3}{4}$ cup must be milk, cream, or half-and-half. I've tried both milk and cream, and it's great with each.

These two recipes are infinitely variable. One of my favorite variations is to use macadamia nuts in place of the salted nuts and dried cranberries because I like them. When I add unsalted nuts to the Caramel Popcorn recipe, I add about a half-teaspoon of salt to make up for it.

Golden Mango Parfait

There is no recipe for mango parfait in the collection. But there is a great recipe for Golden Peach Parfait in the Desserts book. I've found that mango works great in peach recipes, and it certainly holds true with this one. The dish ends up being a very rich, golden, mango ice cream.

Incidentally, there are several ice cream recipes in the Quick and Easy book that require no cranking, just freezing in your refrigerator. The "old-fashioned" crank ice cream freezers were very popular in the seventies when I was growing up. But they seem to have gone out of fashion in the forties and fifties after freezer sections in refrigerators became commonplace. It's a lot easier to make ice cream in the refrigerator, you just put it in the freezer, let it set, and possibly take it out once to whip or stir it again. I have a strong suspicion that the crank became popular again in the seventies so that parents could keep their children busy during get-togethers.

Errata

While going through the book and typing this information in, I noticed surprisingly few typos. I've corrected most of them, mainly misspellings of cities. In the Casseroles book Mrs. Lonnie E. Hoeve is listed as from Bayrad, New Mexico. There doesn't appear to be such a place, so I've corrected it to Bayard, New Mexico. I did the same with Tuscon, Arizona in the Southwestern book, Fredricksburg, Texas in the Fondue and Buffet book, and Montgomery, Alabama in the Outdoor book.

In the Meats book, Mrs. J.A. Satterfield is listed as from Forth Worth, Texas. In other books, there is a contributor with the same name from Fort Worth, Texas. I've corrected that entry. Ditto for Kathryn Elwert of Witchita Falls, Texas, which I've corrected to Wichita Falls.

I rarely changed the spelling of recipe titles. I changed "picalilli" to "piccalilli" in the Breads book and I changed Lobster Newburg to Newberg in the Fondue and Buffet book. But I did not correct Strawberry Couer a la Creme in the Desserts book. This is probably a typo for Coeur (heart, in French), but if so it's gained a life of its own. The recipe is popular enough to have a few references across the net and they use that spelling, so I've left it as is.

There are, of course, likely many other typos that I did not recognize as typos, as well as many typos that I've introduced. If you see any, please write! Email me at slindex@clubpadgett.com.

It's more difficult to detect typos in people's names. Names can be similar, especially in the same town: relatives often have similar names, and names common to a particular area often sport slightly different spellings. There is, for example, both an Estell Shalla of Bay City Texas (four recipes) and an Estelle Shalla of Bay City Texas (three recipes). I did not "correct" these names. I can't know if they're the same person.

The final recipe of the "Legumes" section of the Vegetables book (page 56) has no title; I've titled it with the unimaginative but descriptive name "Baked Pinto Beans".

There are also sometimes abbreviated and unabbreviated versions of "Fort", "Mount", and "Saint" in city names. I've normalized each to the most common usage within the series: "Fort" for "Ft.", "Mt." for "Mount", and "St." for "Saint".
