Rain-making ritual ground monument

Rain-making ritual ground monument

If you climb the path at the north side of the Ushida area westward, you will arrive on top of a hill where hiryu azalea are beautiful during spring. The rain-making ritual ground monument stands at the top of the hill. According to the inscription, it has been used as a ritual ground form long ago. The last time the ritual was done was around 1947.

Dankiiri area

If you climb the path along the waterway at the south side of the Ushida area westward, you will arrive at the Dankiiri Plaza during Spring. If you climb the street hill from the plaza, you will arrive at Yamazakura hill (observation deck).

The surrounding area is close to mountains than a hill.
