

The Animal Defense League - Long Island received the following message from an undefined source detailing confirmed emails for the top officials of GlaxoSmithKline:

Here is a list of over 200 Glaxo emails all pre-tested. The first block of addresses are the top decision-makers in the company. The second set is random employee emails, add these to the first block and you have a nice and even 50. The rest are also general employee emails and are set up in convenient blocks of 50. All are <@gsk.com> except the last ten.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

As a conscientious consumer, I write to express my concern about Glaxosmithkline's alliance with a contract laboratory cited for multiple violations of the U.S. Animal Welfare Act. I question the integrity of any high-profile corporation that employs Huntingdon Life Sciences (HLS) to conduct animal tests.

Why would GSK risk its credibility to retain a laboratory with violations of Good Laboratory Practice in England, the arrest of workers on animal cruelty charges, and verified animal abuse/scientific fraud in five investigations?

Inept research and falsified records may be the norm for this financially unstable lab, but illegal animal cruelty is inexcusable. As you may know, numerous customers, suppliers and financiers have abandoned HLS. I hope GSK will make the ethically responsible decision to terminate business with HLS.

In a $50,000 settlement with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, HLS was charged with failure to provide sufficient veterinary care; failure to administer painkillers and anesthetics to animals used in excruciating toxicology tests; failure to justify the absence of pain relief for dogs used in invasive procedures; and failure to construct cages that safeguard animals from injury.

Investigations in 1997 exposed lab technicians punching beagle puppies and flinging them against walls. Workers were observed slicing open the chest of a live monkey during a presumably post-mortem dissection. Two more investigations after 2000 uncovered the same reckless mistreatment of animals.

I urge you to replace non-predictive animal tests with validated non-animal research modes that have proven more applicable to humans. At the very least, please reevaluate your affiliation with HLS, a lab that habitually violates animal welfare laws. Thank you for your valuable time and consideration in this serious matter.

Sincerely,
