to our readers

KUTZTOWN UNIVERSITY IS A DYNAMIC INSTITUTION. From the many contributors presented in the 2004-2005 Annual Fund section, to the faculty, administrators and students, we are all working to move KU into the future.

The university is growing both demographically and physically. Our enrollment is up, and in order to serve those new students, we have a number of building projects underway including the Academic Forum classroom building that will become a campus center piece. There are also upgrades planned for Schaeffer Auditorium, and expansion and improvements to the Sharadin building, which is home to our College of Visual and Performing Arts.

Not only is the campus landscape changing, but the faces of Kutztown students are changing as well. By offering new career advancement courses in Allentown and Reading and providing numerous outreach programs to our neighboring school districts, KU has become a force for change in the region.

But for many families a college education stills seems to be a far-off dream. I want you to know your contributions are working to make a difference. Our parent education programs, presented in low-income neighborhoods, help show how a college degree can become a reality. When combined with the many scholarships made possible by your continued contributions, that dream is becoming a reality.

In the end, it all comes down to our wonderful supporters. I would like to thank everyone who has given their time and resources this year and throughout the years. Quite frankly, we couldn't do it without you.

F. Javier Cevallos

Kutztown University of Pennsylvania will serve the Commonwealth as a dynamic, technologically advanced, collaborative, learning-centered public university. Kutztown University will be accessible to Pennsylvanians and others, sensitive to the need for diverse backgrounds in its faculty, staff, students and community, accountable to its many constituencies, and actively engaged in the continuous improvement of its programs and services. Above all, Kutztown University will prepare graduates to succeed in a global economy, to contribute to the economic and social well being of the state and nation, to assume active roles in their communities, and to lead productive and meaningful lives.

President's Teachnology Program Moves KU into the Digital Future

ARTICLES BY CRAIG WILLIAMS • FACULTY PHOTOS BY CRAIG WILLIAMS

Believe it or not, KU professors still get chalk dust all over their clothes as they scrawl lessons on the blackboard; a centuries' old technology that has only been modified by the use of squeaky ink markers. But a new program on campus may change all that, as more blackboards are becoming virtual spaces, accessed through the Internet, both at home and in the classroom. It seems the days of the chalk holder are numbered.

It is doubtful any of the classrooms in KU will ever eliminate the traditional chalk or marker boards at the front of the room. But through the Teachnology program, started by President E Javier Cevallos in 2002, the faculty is learning new methods to incorporate technology into the classroom. And the inventiveness of the faculty projects is helping to move KU into the digital future.

The Teachnology Program gives teachers the resources and computer applications needed to develop their own computer-aided project. Most of the software used is readily available at any computer store. But it is the creative ways KU teachers use technology to solve problems and stimulate learning that has resulted in some projects becoming a viable stand-alone application for use in business as well as academia.

Enterprising KU faculty are now combining entire suites of software using multiple applications, from desktop publishing to digital photography, with the help of the Learning Technologies Center on campus.

One by one, faculty members are signing on to design their own Teachnology project, and in the process are joining the wired generation with leading innovative designs.

Future projects on the drawing table include the use of computer gaming to stimulate classroom interaction, the creation of a virtual homepage for each student, and entire classes taught using distance learning.

Vera Brancato, director of the Center for the Enhancement of Teaching, said the variety and innovation resulting from the program is stimuli for teachers and students alike.

"Our new generation of students is different than previous generations," Brancato said of the computer savvy student body. "And as educators, we know there are many different modes of learning, as well as teaching. The Teachnology Program provides the training necessary to generate new ideas for teaching through technology."

Dr. Claire Van Ens, assistant professor of speech communication and theatre, is working to tap into students' fascination with video games to model real-world social theories.

Simulated Relationships

Wouldn't it be interesting if you could put your mothers-in-law together in the same room and observe the results? How do you simulate the emotional and social factors that lead to the breakup of a family? Can anyone document all the stresses a new baby puts on family resources?

These intriguing questions are all part of a new class in family communication. But in the real world, it wouldn't be ethical to create the kind of pressure cooker needed in a nuclear family laboratory.

Such is the quandary of Dr. Claire Van Ens, assistant professor of speech communications and theatre. She is seeking a way to let students understand the real-life stressors of parents, children and the extended family without stressing anyone out.

Then she found a computer game called "The Sims" by Will Wright. The game is open-ended and there is no winner or loser, only a group of simulated humans with computerized emotion counters. When things get too hot in the kitchen, the emotion counters trigger a reaction in the computer model – like crying.

Based on theories of social behavior, the game allows players to control everything in their "sims" life from eating, to purchasing appliances, emotional well-being and overall financial success.

The creator of the game says most people model themselves first and then explore alternative lifestyles. Because of its universal appeal, the game quickly became a best seller.

Van Ens is working on a project that will tap into this fascination with computer-modeled social interactions as a way to get students to be more observant of real-life situations.

"I was thinking about a new class I wanted to develop and teach called family communication, and I came across an article about a computer game that allowed you to replicate people in your life," she said. "In 'The Sims,' you could recreate yourself, your lover, your parents – anyone that you wanted. You could create whole households."

The game is based on three different theoretical stances: Maslow's theory of needs, from physical to emotional; economist David Freidman's theory that life is an ongoing series of economic choices [in the game, the "sims" are allowed to buy things including a home]; and Christopher Alexander's theories that people innately know how environments affect them.

"The light bulb went off in my head. A game founded in theoretical constructs. It may be a game, but it's a smart game," she said.

In the works is a plan to use a Teachnology grant to find a way to use the game in a classroom setting so that students can model complex relationships and then place them under the microscope.

Though the project is in the development phase, it may not be long before students studying sociology will log on and play "The Sims" for credit.

And because family communication can sometimes include conflict, students will be working to model high-tension situations without hurting anyone's feelings – except maybe "The Sims."

Portable Portfolios

Gone are the days when students need to lug around a two-inch thick portfolio to a job interview. With an innovative combination of software, Dr. Eloise Long, chair of Library Science and Instructional Technology, is teaching students how to put all that information on a compact disc, ready to be popped in the mail along with a cover letter and resume.

As a former newspaper editor, Long knows the value of having clippings of her work neatly arranged along with references and client testimonies. In fact, she was offered a job solely on the completeness of a notebook-sized portfolio she used during one interview.

Dr. Eloise Long, chair of the Library Science and Instructional Technology Department, spent many long hours at the computer to help her students develop an electronic portfolio and put it on a compact disc. Now employers only need to open a jewel case to find a diamond in the rough.

But that was 15 years ago, and today few employers or human resource officers have the time to go through hundreds of portfolios. Still, the power of a professional presentation cannot be denied.

A bit of a computer buff herself, Long decided to use several programs that would allow anyone to easily open and view the various documents, pictures and work samples the students accumulate during their four years at KU and through job experiences they gain along the way.

The result can be slipped into a jewel case and affordably handed out to every employer looking for a diamond in the rough.

"The idea came to me when I was a librarian in a local school district. We were looking to hire someone, and one applicant had their resume online. I wanted to send my students out with something with that much impact," she said.

The forward thinking that went into the creation of the compact discs is already beginning to pay big dividends for library science students looking for jobs with school districts across the country.

"I just got an e-mail from a student who said his electronic portfolio led to him getting the job of his choice. Electronic portfolios show employers that our students are not only familiar with technology but can use it."

Students are trained in digital photography, image scanning, digital video, layout and design, desktop publishing, to create a neat package. Often, the CD includes a personal photo, work samples, educational philosophy, teacher references, grades, and a short video of a student teaching experience.

So far, students have taken the lead to putting their own portfolios on-line. Long said she is working on another package which will include a personal webpage.

"I dabbled in technology before I got involved with my Teachnology project. Learning how to combine the various applications was a real educational experience for both me and the students. In the end, the project is yielding tangible benefits for the university and our students."

Long-Distance Internships

Internships for students have become an important part of getting that first job. Often the relationships formed at the company, business or office during those vital months of "real world" experience can translate into references, a portfolio or even a solid job offer.

Choice placements are hard to find and highly competitive. Though many students prefer to stay close to home, others are seeking careers in the city. With KU's prime location on the eastern seaboard, internships can be as close as Philadelphia and New York City, or as far as Washington, D.C.

Dr. Elaine Reed, professor of English, said she was looking for a way to allow students to get those high profile internships while satisfying course requirements. She turned to the Teachnology Program and found applications ideally suited to the Internet. As a result, her professional writing students were able to accept choice assignments at major firms, often several states away.

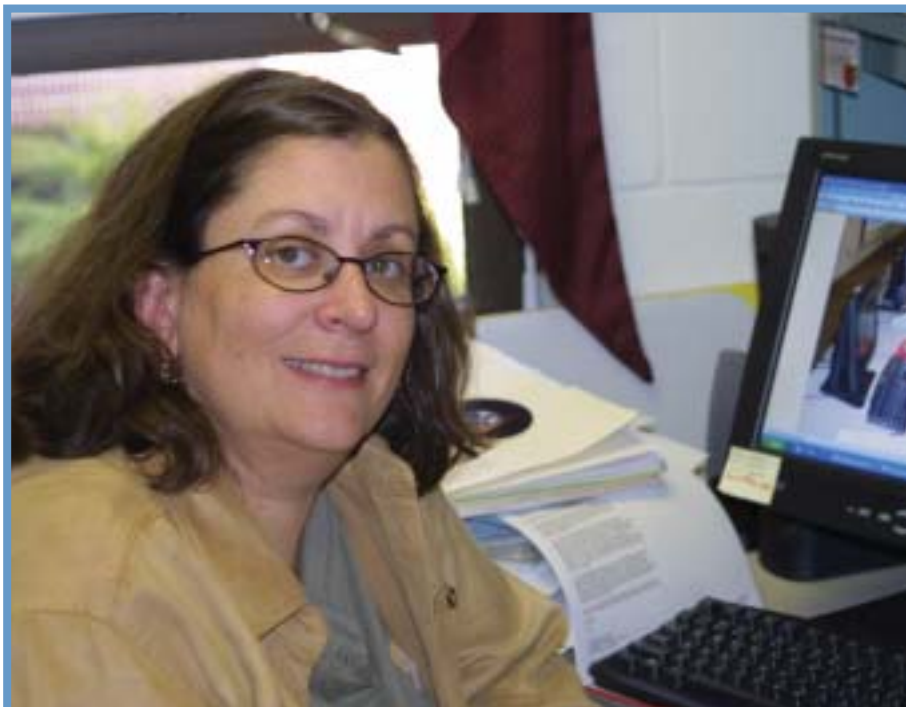

"I took the senior seminar class in professional writing from the conventional to a hybrid course. The students are required to return to campus only five times during the semester on Saturdays. The rest of the time, I use web-based programs that allow the students to keep in touch with me at all times."

Last spring, 20 budding writers learned the tricks of the trade by interning full-time at newspapers, public relations agencies, radio stations and design houses as far away as New York City and Pittsburgh. By coordinating through dedicated chat rooms, interactive electronic classrooms, and simple e-mail, the seminar provided guidance while the technology allowed the students to work full-time.

"The tools I use allow one-on-one interaction with the professor over the Internet, and through a chat-room set up for the course, students can share their experiences and keep in touch with each other."

Saving time by using common resources is now part of the wired-age and integral to modern publishing techniques, she said. The trick is to unify the resources into a cohesive package.

"I have not made the transition to a totally web-based teaching strategy yet, but by using the technology available, my students have been allowed to look for internships farther away than just the companies and industries within the commuting distance of KU," Reed said.

Dr. Elaine Reed, professor of English, created a virtual classroom giving professional writing students the freedom to take internships in major cities while completing coursework.

The lazy days of summer now require a little work for incoming freshmen to the four undergraduate colleges of Kutztown University. Of course there is still time to go to the pool, play sports, visit the beach, and read a good book. But bulging out of backpacks and beach bags is not your average romance or action novel – but required reading for the Freshmen Text Program.

The idea of getting students started on their course work long before September was introduced in the 2000-2001 year. By assigning one book for the entire class, each college within the university could indoctrinate the students into its unique field of study. Plus the shared reading experience created an immediate bond with the other students and faculty. Sometimes the colleges are able to invite the author to speak to the class.

Most of the books selected over the years are not really text books at all, and many have qualified for the best-seller list.

The College of Liberal Arts and Sciences selection for this year's Freshmen Text Program was "My Own Country: A Doctor's Story" by Abraham Verghese for its gripping story of immigration, Appalachia, and the onset of AIDS in a rural community which was not prepared when the national epidemic hit home. The College of Performing and Visual Arts delved into the philosophical musings of Alan Lightman, whose critically acclaimed book "Einstein's Dreams" explores alternative realities set in the fourth dimension of time.

The College of Business, through their freshmen seminar, introduced students to the world of business in "The Emperors of Chocolate," a detailed account of the two largest candy manufacturers in the world. And the College of Education presented "Samuel: In Search of the American Dream" by Dr. Samuel Murray, whose journey toward a better way of life led him from the fields of a farm in the rural south to New York where he became a firefighter, college educator, author, publisher, and motivational speaker.

According to Walter Nott, instructor of English, when the program first began several years ago he would "run around campus like Johnny Apple Seed with a big bag of books handing them out."

Today the books are available almost anywhere, and the program has met with acclaim from professors and students alike, presenting unique authors and topics relevant to today's issues.

"The sooner you begin to integrate the students into academic life, the longer they persist in their studies," Nott said.

College of Education

This year the College of Education chose for their freshmen text “Samuel: In Search of the American Dream” by Dr. Samuel Murray, an auto-biographical account of one man’s extraordinary determination to be the best that he can be, and whose perseverance took him from poverty to the pinnacle of academic achievement.

At age eight, Murray collected and returned deposit bottles in order to buy a pair of shoes to wear to school. When he couldn’t find enough bottles, he picked potatoes. And still there was not enough money. But his keen desire to learn couldn’t be diminished, and he made up his mind he would walk to school barefoot.

Murray’s inspirational life is outlined in his successful autobiography which details the struggles, disappointments, and ultimately his success against social discrimination and financial hardship. But his strong-willed determination and a philosophy that education is worth any struggle carried him through many lean years and is the very definition of human perseverance.

This summer, incoming education majors were asked to read about this remarkable life. Murray’s many careers include New York City firefighter, educator, publisher, and author. His determination, hard work and faith, helped him to earn his Doctor of Education.

Adding impact to the words was a personal appearance by the author at the beginning of the academic year. To many freshmen, it seemed inconceivable there ever was a time when poverty was so pervasive that some in society couldn’t even afford a simple pair of shoes.

“Dr. Murray’s book and presentation brought an understanding of the power of having goals,” said Dr. Regis Bernhardt, dean of the College of Education, of the author’s tremendous impact on this year’s class of future teachers.

College of Business

The College of Business takes the Freshmen Text Program one step further, requiring all freshmen to participate in a common seminar designed to get students thinking about the nature of commerce, industry, economy and the role of consumers.

The reading requirements for the seminar introduce the class to the world of high finance, marketing, and the intense competition among companies with a national brand.

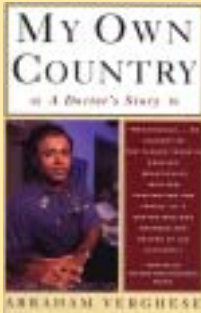

This year the College of Business used candy as the motivator – literally. Dr. Dan S. Benson, chair of the Management Department, said he hands out samples of Hershey’s Chocolate as the students discuss “The Emperors of Chocolate: Inside the Secret World of Hershey and Mars,” by Joel Glenn Brenner.

Chronicling the 100-year battle between Milton Hershey and Forrest Mars to be the ruler of America’s chocolate empire, the book details the personalities of the founders, the secrets and deceptions used to position the companies at the top of the chocolate food chain, and insider anecdotes and stories that appeal to business students and chocolate buffs alike.

The book is only one of the several assignments students are given during the semester-long course. Business freshmen are also asked to start a reading habit of Forbes Magazine and are directed to read the book “Forbes Greatest Business Stories” as well.

“One of things that I have found with the program is that students will stop in and see me during their four years here as a result of the connections they made in the freshmen business seminars,” Benson said. “Different than the typical freshmen courses, it gets students thinking about business right away.”

College of Liberal Arts and Sciences

Encompassing studies in both the humanities and the sciences, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences selected a book heralded for its real-life depiction of a doctor's struggles in the battle against AIDS. An autobiography, the book is also a touching story of an immigrant's first exposure to rural America and the heartwarming relationships that were formed and broken as the disease took its toll on a small town in Tennessee in the early 1980s.

"My Own Country" by Abraham Verghese introduced the students to the changing face of America's medical profession, and the need to secure top-flight surgeons and doctors from around the world.

It is also a story of a journey, from India to Boston and eventually the Smokey Mountains of eastern Tennessee, and chronicles the down-home friendliness and acceptance Verghese found far from the big cities where he trained as a doctor.

Critics acclaimed Verghese's pointed realism, his sensitive handling of a delicate subject, and the overall polish of his prose.

For students contemplating the medical profession, budding writers, and future anthropologists, "My Own Country" is both a valued resource and an eye opener, said Dr. Kurt Frieauf of the Department of Physical Sciences.

"We want our students to be able to adapt to new worlds and be able to live and work with diverse people," Frieauf said. "And I hope that our students learn the value of listening to others without pre-conceptions, that communities in America are much more closely interconnected than may be apparent at first glance, and that every one of us in our community is a person with value and dignity."

College of Visual and Performing Arts

Imagine a town where time stands still. The citizens repeat the same actions every day. Or imagine a reality where all actions are either dictated by the internal needs of the body, or by the cold hard mechanics of the clock, depending upon one's outlook. Such is the mental stimulus presented in this summer's required reading for the College of Visual and Performing Arts: "Einstein's Dreams," by Alan Lightman.

"It deals with how one defines one's identity, which new college students will be doing," said Dr. William Mowder, dean of the college. "The book challenges our students to think about their assumptions and presents them with different ways of looking at reality."

The mind games presented in Lightman's essays are based on his interpretation of what Einstein might have been thinking when he published his five seminal papers in 1905 that ultimately lead to the theory of relativity.

Imagine a world where time runs backwards. Instead of getting older, one gets younger, rust disappears, and hair grows back. The book is appealing to artists, composers, and authors and is designed to provoke discussions and spark creativity among its readers, Mowder said.

"This book was well-received in our discussion groups. Overall, the Freshmen Text Program is a great program. It gets the students talking about something they read in common. And not just in the discussion groups, but also in residence halls and cafes across campus," Mowder said. "And it helps the students to start thinking about how to read a book closely and critically."

Class of 2008 Student Profile

BY CRAIG WILLIAMS

A recent survey has revealed the fresh faces enrolling at Kutztown are very different than the freshmen class just four years ago. As the university continues to experience unprecedented growth, with nearly 10,000 students, diversity on campus remains a critical factor in choice of school. And the information gleaned from 2004 data reveals the typical KU freshmen is anything but typical.

Each year many incoming students pull out their pens and pencils to fill out the Cooperative Institutional Research Program form. This little bit of extra paperwork isn't about student loans, a grant or even a chance to get a room in a residence hall.

The survey takes a demographic picture of what the incoming freshmen class looks like. And though many of the responses are strikingly similar to recent KU freshman classes, the overall trend is a slow evolution toward changing values and life goals.

For example, five years ago, 1.6 percent of the students said they were of African American descent. Four years later, around 7.6 percent made that distinction. Other groups making KU their university of choice include a 4.8 percent cohort reporting a Latino background. Notably, these changes occurred during a period when admissions standards rose.

The 2008 class is not only representative of the larger community surrounding the campus, but also shows that Kutztown University is very successful at attracting the top students from the area. Nearly a quarter of the freshmen had an A average in high school. And those with a B average or higher made up 65 percent of the new students coming on campus in 2004.

The survey asked the students to rank themselves on a variety of skills and values. The new freshmen said they felt well-prepared for university life, with personal strengths that included cooperative-

ness, an understanding of others, and a strong drive to achieve. The survey also found KU was the first choice of higher education institutions for two-thirds of the class of 2008. The university's good academic reputation and reasonable cost were the leading factors in their decision to select KU as their future alma mater.

The students also liked the real-world opportunities for self-discovery that the university's many internships and other academic programs offer. And the freshmen welcomed the university's sound career guidance and solid educational planning program to help them map out careers goals and future objectives.

But this class has aspirations that transcend the Bachelor's degree, with almost half indicating they plan to go on for a master's degree.

The future leaders seem to be more involved in the community as well. Nearly three quarters of the respondents said they performed some form of volunteer work the year prior to starting at KU.

Geographically, most of the incoming KU freshmen say they come from the surrounding area. Thirty-nine percent report their hometown is just 51 to 100 miles from the university.

The next largest group comes from just next door, less than 50 miles away. And better than 18 percent say they traveled more than 100 miles to attend KU. Only 1 percent report home is more than 500 miles away.

The results show that while the demographics may change, the trials and tribulations of freshmen life remain the same. Our incoming students realize the many the challenges they will face include staying on top of their grades, managing their time wisely, and keeping their checkbooks balanced.

But some things never change. The 2008 class anticipated their biggest challenge during the freshman year will be finding out just how much they miss family and friends.

New Golden Bear Mascot Unveiled

BY JOSH LEIBOFF, SPORTS INFORMATION COORDINATOR

Kutztown University has a new Golden Bear mascot called Avalanche which was unveiled Oct. 1 at halftime during the football game vs. West Chester.

Still golden and still a bear, Avalanche is an updated take on the modern sports mascot. Child-friendly and ready for any type of shenanigans, Avalanche was welcomed by President F. Javier Cevallos, who presented the happy-go-lucky mascot a special welcoming gift, the "Avalauncher," which shoots streamers, confetti and t-shirts into the stands at KU events.

Avalanche is named in honor of the nickname for Kutztown's sports teams from the mid 1930s to the early 1960s. In 1961, Golden Bears replaced Golden Avalanche as the nickname for Kutztown's sports teams, and Golden Bear mascots soon followed. Most recently, Goldie and Grizz served as KU's mascots. With their "graduation," however, a new mascot was sought.

Raymond Entertainment Group, out of Newark, Del., designed the already beloved new mascot for KU. They are also the creators of the Phillie Phanatic for the Philadelphia Phillies, and have made mascots for the University of Delaware, the Cincinnati Reds, and Millersville University, among many others.

"This will be a new era for our mascot program and the university's marketing effort as we increase appearances and activities both on and off campus," said Matt Santos, director of Athletic Advancement.

Letters TO THE EDITOR

Hindsight Revealed August 2005

Bob Pawling '69 said he can solve the mystery of last month's Hindsight photo featuring children pointing to an airplane at Kutztown Airport.

"My father, Dr. J. Allen Pawling, also a Kutztown graduate [Class of 1934], was an art professor and advisor for the 'Keystonia Yearbook' during the time when the picture was taken," Pawling writes. "At that time, I was attending first grade in the Kutztown State Teacher's College Laboratory School, as the learning center used to be called.

"My family lived across the street from the Kutztown Airport. As a result, my father knew Dickey Heffner, owner of the little, two-seat Air Coupe, and he arranged the photo opportunity. The school year was 1952-53. I am the boy sitting in the airplane with Sharon Heffner, daughter of the plane's owner. I am not sure about the other participants, except that they were some of my classmates from Ms. O'Niell's first-grade class.

"The picture appeared in Dr. Italo L. deFrancesco's book 'Art Education,' published in 1958. deFrancesco, who later became college president, was at that time the director of the Art Department.

I remember that it was a rather cold day for a field trip walk to the airport, and I was sort of disappointed we weren't going to get a ride in the plane after all that posing was done."

Reader corrects May Hindsight

According to Linda Abby Fein '64, the photo featuring the cheerleader reunion shows Judith Romanisko who graduated in 1964 in the second row on the far right.

STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY ADDRESS presented August 29, 2005 [abridged]

BY PRESIDENT F. JAVIER CEVALLOS • PHOTOS BY JEFF UNGER, PHILIP R. BREEZE, CRAIG WILLIAMS

A Better Model for Success

Welcome to what promises to be an exciting academic year. Last year at this time, I said we were bigger and better than ever before. I am pleased to tell you the same is true this year. Our student population continues to grow, not just in first-time freshmen, but in graduate enrollment and transfer students as well. We have added new degree programs in the past 12 months, and increased the number of collaborative agreements we have with universities across the globe.

The Class of 2009 is one of the largest in our history. We continue to see double-digit annual increases in the number of applications. Our residence halls are full, and nearby off-campus housing is scarce.

We have shifted our marketing efforts, and once again, we have seen double-digit increases in summer school enrollment, transfer enrollment, graduate enrollment, and participation in both credit and non-credit-bearing offerings through our office of Lifelong Learning and Professional Development.

Also, for the first time this past summer, we began to offer Educators' Workshops to meet the continuing education requirements of Pennsylvania's public school K-12 teachers.

But we're not just getting bigger, we're also getting better.

We are admitting better, brighter students from a broader background than ever before. Diversity among the staff and student body mirrors that of the communities we serve, while the average SAT score of our incoming students continues to rise as well.

We will work to attract more and better students, as we are able to provide more and larger scholarships. Toward that end, last year we held our second scholarship ball, and it was a great success, bringing the two-year scholarship total to more than $110,000. Last year's ball also featured the surprise announcement of a $1 million gift from Bill Ribble '73 and his wife, Joanne '74.

New Goals – New Directions

The Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education has an accountability plan that assesses the performance of the universities according to a series of specific measures. Based on past performance data, we are evaluated against specific targets for each measure. We are also evaluated against a nationwide group of peer institutions that provide us with a benchmark. Of 64 measures, we met or exceeded our goals in 56.

Last year, I was happy to report that one of the goals we had set for ourselves, and which we accomplished, was an increase in our six-year graduation rate. Well, I am delighted to tell you this year that we met our improvement goals in the four-year graduation rate.

The pursuit of a university degree is a marathon for many of our students who have to juggle one or two jobs and family obligations with their studies. It is always such a disappointment when, for whatever reason, a student quits the race before the finish line is in sight. Due to the many programs targeted to early and ongoing guidance and assistance, our students suffer that disappointment less and less from year to year.

ACADEMIC HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE PAST 12 MONTHS

The development and launch of new programs, tracks, concentrations and minors in:

- German Studies
- Biochemistry
- Music Education
- Religious Studies in the Philosophy Department
- Globalization in the Geography Department
- Instructional Technology in Library Science
- Coaching Education in Elementary Education
- Digital Classroom Technology in the Instructional Technology master's program
- A degree designation of Bachelor of Science in Library Science as an addition to the Bachelor of Science in Education with a major in Library Science degree
- The addition of minors in Biochemistry, Musical Theatre, and Pennsylvania German Studies

In summer 2005, KU's new professional development program was very well received by working teachers.

Our Connections (orientation) program goes to great lengths to minimize the personal challenges many freshmen experience living away from mom and dad for the first time with people who may not look and sound just like they do. The success of the program is reflected in our ever-growing retention rates.

Another contributor to our retention rates is the President's Roundtable on Alcohol and Other Drugs.

Other forms of service come from our future teachers in the education program who fan out to schools throughout Berks and Lehigh counties as part of the America Reads program to help young people gain a love of reading.

The Lauer's Park Elementary School program, which is in a low-income area of Reading, sends representatives from KU Student Services on visits throughout the year with students and parents to help them realize attending college is a realistic aspiration for them, not a forlorn dream.

We have reached the point that traditional recruiting methods have matured; so we have also focused our marketing efforts on community college transfer students, summer school, graduate school, continuing education for K-12 teachers, and distance learning. We have seen double-digit increases in every one of those areas.

New Dimensions

This summer Kutztown University broke ground on the Academic Forum. This facility will provide seven classrooms ranging in capacity from 85 to 200 students. The central architectural feature is a two-story atrium which will match the beauty of Alumni Plaza and will be a wonderful addition to the artistic elegance of the campus.

Also, we are moving along with the construction of the new student recreation facility. When it opens next year, we will truly have the very best facilities in the State System to create sound minds in sound bodies.

At University Field, we installed synthetic turf that will allow for greater use of the facility and reduce maintenance costs. We resurfaced the track and lights will be installed in the near future.

Our university and athletic logos are now licensed by more than 50 national vendors, and the licensing program is beginning to generate a profit that will be used to fund scholarships.

Other upcoming projects include construction of a new heating plant, and removal of the current power plant in the center of south campus, to begin in March. Currently the university is in the design phase for renovations to the Sharadin fine arts building, with renovations to Schaeffer Auditorium immediately following.

Information Technology and the Academic Technology Committee completed a long-range strategic plan which was adopted by the University Senate in May 2005.

Working with the Academic Technology Committee and Academic Affairs, Information Technology created more than 30 additional smart classrooms bringing the total to more than 110 technologically advanced classrooms.

Stepping up to the plate

Last year our freshmen athletes had a GPA that was 12 percent higher than the class as a whole. The research has shown, and our experience has borne out, that involvement in activities outside the classroom actually improves performance in the classroom. In 2005, KU athletes contributed hundreds of hours to community service projects.

That is a commendable number, and it is right in line with the overall number for the entire student body, who contributed 39,000 hours of community service last year. That is equivalent to more than 20 full-time employees.

A Community Reaching Out

As our mission and vision statements proclaim, Kutztown University is not simply a community of scholars, we are also scholars in the communities whose lives we touch.

The Office of Public Engagement laid the groundwork for our expanded presence at The Donley Center in downtown Allentown. This past year our junior college transfer enrollments from Lehigh and Carbon counties jumped 58 percent from their four-year average, while the rate of transfers from Berks, Northampton and Montgomery Counties remained level.

It has been said that no nation is so wealthy that it can afford to squander the promise of its youth. Helping under-prepared young people master the skills they will need to succeed in college is not just the right thing to do at the individual level, it's the only smart thing to do at the societal level.

With that in mind, the Office of Public Engagement has worked to create the Kutztown University Preparatory Academy, through which KU partners with public school districts, independent day schools, private boarding schools and community organizations to develop custom preparatory programs. We do this at all levels starting as early as fifth grade. There are a dozen or more such partnerships with schools and organizations stretching from Philadelphia to Harrisburg.

Other ongoing outreach activities include the Upward Bound program, the Allentown Academic Alliance, the Robert Clemente Academic Alliance, and the Frederick Douglass Leadership Day Camp, all of which help students get a head start on school and life.

The Office of Human Diversity continues to encourage and enable the development of a healthy perception of diversity within the university community. Our improved retention and graduation rates are very much the result of the services this

In addition, we have moved to college-based development. Alumni tend to be more closely tied to their college than to the university as a whole, so we have assigned a development officer to each of the four undergraduate colleges.

In the past 12 months, private support of KU has increased 15 percent, exceeding the State System performance measure. And our endowment grew at an annual rate of more than 22 percent, again exceeding System measures.

It is so abundantly obvious that KU is a family of talented, hardworking professionals. The campus looks great; our students are learning, persisting and graduating at higher rates; our alumni are increasingly involved and financially supportive; and our image continues to grow and expand.

office provides in compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The Office of Human Diversity also hosts open discussions on race relations for students, faculty and staff. And they create special programs and luncheons on campus featuring cultures from Southeast Asian to Caribbean.

Information Technology joined with the Office of Human Diversity to implement software solutions which will allow differently-abled people to visit the KU website.

As you can imagine, someone with a limited ability to discern colors might have a hard time with some web pages, other people need software that will read the pages to them, or translate them onto a Braille reading pad.

In February we opened the doors of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgendered and Questioning Resource Center to serve all those interested in this area. We are truly leading the State System in this effort.

In collaboration with Housing and Residential Services, the Women's Center distributes fliers and posters to create awareness of safety and healthy lifestyle habits freshmen need to know, and of which upper class members need to be reminded.

And of Course – New Alumni

As more and more of our students graduate and join the ranks of their fellow alumni, it has become necessary to enlist the help of a few more people in the Advancement Division to keep all alumni connected to their alma mater.

To help with these duties, the Alumni Relations office has created and launched an attractive e-newsletter that is generating a good deal of positive feedback from our alumni.

The following pages list names of alumni, parents, friends, faculty/staff, emeriti, corporations, and volunteers who gave a total of $3,172,010.00 to Kutztown University during 2004-2005.

As always, KU thanks you for your support!

Another Airplane Mystery

Does anyone know where this well-dressed group departing Philadelphia airport in June 1966 is going? Don't be fooled. Apparently three passengers are Shippensburg students tagging along. Can you guess which ones? If you can identify the alumni of the event, please contact Craig Williams, Tower editor, Kutztown University, P.O. Box 730, Kutztown, PA 19530 or cwilliam@kutztown.edu. The answers will appear in the next issue of the Tower. Submissions for Hindsight are always welcome. Send photos and corresponding details to the Tower editor. For the answer to last month's Hindsight, please turn to page 17.
