For Your Home or Office

This handsome chair bearing the Rochester seal will lend itself to either a traditional or modern setting. It is finished in satin black with polished light cherry arms and gold University seal and striping. The chair is a sturdy and comfortable product of New England craftsmen and is made of selected northern hardwood.

Atoms without Boundaries

THREE MILD-MANNERED, shy and friendly Russian scientists, plainly eager to exchange their knowledge with their counterparts in the free world, raised the Iron Curtain for the first time on the work of Soviet atomic physicists at the Sixth Annual Rochester Conference on High Energy Nuclear Physics at the River Campus April 3-7.

They were invited, with the approval and cooperation of the U. S. State Department, the Atomic Energy Commission and the National Science Foundation, as the first from the USSR to take part in a scientific meeting in this country. Their presence at the sessions, the most important annual gathering in the nuclear energy field, attended in record numbers (more than 200) by the foremost theoretical and experimental physicists in the United States and eighteen foreign nations, marked an epochal advance in the efforts of world scientists to promote a free flow of scientific information between all nations. All of the conference discussions dealt with non-secret research.

In the words of U. S. Senator Clinton P. Anderson, chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy who addressed the conferees at the final banquet, "the importance of international meetings of the kind held here in Rochester cannot be over-emphasized. Information exchanged between participants will hasten the day when science will understand the secrets of the nucleus and of fundamental particles and move man another step in his understanding of the universe about him . . . and promote a degree of mutual trust and understanding that might in the end help to halt the race for atomic arms and forestall a war that nobody wants. . . . As many of you have been saying again and again, science cannot flourish under secrecy . . ."

"We need to encourage by whatever means we can, the spirit of international cooperation and openness which will minimize the chances of a misunderstanding—an accidental spark that would lead to disaster."

Senator Anderson, in his major policy speech, made three proposals of great significance:

The establishment of international atomic laboratories where scientists of all nations could collaborate to harness the energy of the hydrogen bomb for useful power, conquer space and modify weather. The responsibility would have to be placed under some international agency, the most likely of which is the United Nations.

The establishment of a world passport, which would be granted annually to a select list of nominees from all over the world—for instance, Nobel Prize winners (of whom four attended the Rochester conference), outstanding artists, leaders in religion, government, science, education and business—that would permit its holder to travel freely in lands of all member nations.

For five straight days, the 200 conferees from the U. S. and 18 foreign nations met in intensive sessions like this to exchange information on the latest developments in their laboratories. At lectern is Dr. Gunnar Kallen of Copenhagen, analyzing complicated equations on blackboard. They devoted every waking moment to the discussions.

Research on the problem of controlling thermonuclear reactions in such a way as to produce useful power, a possibility, he said, that presents "a staggering picture of power availability to lift the yoke of labor from men's shoulders throughout the world."

The Russian visitors talked freely and answered all questions about their work in nuclear physics and their atomic machines, including a 10-billion-volt accelerator now under construction, which will be the highest energy machine of any type in the world when it goes into operation, probably by early 1957. Prof. V. I. Veksler, in charge of the project, was one of the Soviet trio who came to Rochester. The consensus of other conferees was that the USSR scientists made important contributions to the deliberations, are two or three years behind ours in the high energy field, and not as heavily engaged nor as far advanced. However, they appear to have a core of very capable experts well aware of the problems, and while we are ahead of them their rate of advance is rapid and they are likely to catch up with us in five years.

While the presence of the Soviet science representatives for the first time drew wide attention from public and press, they by no means overshadowed the fundamental work of the conference, which dealt with lively and searching discussion of the latest findings on such subjects as nuclear forces, mesons, the new anti-protons, and in reaction among the various types of particles.

Dr. Robert E. Marshak, who initiated the Rochester conferences, is one of a dozen prominent U. S. physicists invited by the USSR Academy of Sciences to a conference in Moscow May 14-20, which he plans to attend.

Dr. Arthur Roberts, Professor of Physics and director of the 1956 conference, described it as noteworthy for the larger amount of new and important information, the largest number of delegates from European countries, and as the first meeting of nuclear physicists in the United States attended by Soviet scientists, which he regards as "an important advance in the significant struggle for freedom in science."

New Administration Building Planned

IT SEEMS reasonably certain now that the new and urgently-needed administration building will be constructed on the Genesee River bank about opposite Library Road, the campus driveway nearest Genesee Valley Park. The attractive site on the sloping, wooded river bank provides opportunity for some especially creative and attractive architectural design that will make the building an impressive one. Landscaping and effective use of glass, brick and limestone construction, as contemplated in preliminary plans being made by Eggers and Higgins of New York and Waasdorp and Northrup of Rochester, associate architects, will, it is anticipated, make the structure and its setting outstanding. No date has been set for the start of construction, but the building is being planned for occupancy in August or September, 1957.

Development Fund Report

THE NECESSARY funds to carry out the three-year development program of the University of Rochester, as announced in the fall of 1952, have been fully subscribed, according to a report by Ernest A. Paviour, '10, co-chairman of the 1953 campaign, and Joseph C. Wilson, '31, chairman of the Trustees' Corporate Relations Committee.

Long range objectives requiring larger sums of money remain as a future development challenge, his report noted.

Immediate objectives called for $10,700,000 in cash funds and capitalized annual giving. It has been reported to the Trustees that this goal had been exceeded by a considerable margin on January 1, 1956, which was the end of the three-year period. Cash receipts will amount to approximately $4,683,000 and reasonably assured annual giving has risen to $330,000, equivalent to capital of $7,000,000.

At the close of the intensive campaign in 1953, hundreds of workers had raised $7,500,000 cash and capitalized annual giving from some 13,000 subscribers. Since that time gifts have continued as the development plans unfolded, and the committee of Trustees has interested many additional corporations in annual support of the University.

Paviour emphasized that every effort is being made to insure full payment of all pledges because the total amount pledged is needed to meet building program commitments.

The first phase of the development plan called for the merger of the men's and women's colleges, new professorships and faculty salary adjustments and the removal of University School to the River Campus. With the exception of a proposed administration building, the construction to accomplish these objectives has been completed, and the merger has been fully consummated. Even the abandoned buildings of the Prince Street Campus have been sold.

It was emphasized in the report to the Trustees that annual giving by corporations was inaugurated in the public campaign in 1953. About $138,000 of annual corporate support was assured at that time. That amount has since been increased to $330,000, and it is expected to build up over the years as corporations generally are recognizing an obligation to support colleges and universities, which supply the industries with trained personnel.

So that drive workers might have a single goal, the annual giving objective of $300,000 was expressed in terms of the capital endowment required to yield that amount of money annually—$6.7 millions.

This figure, added to the four millions cash needed for the building program, resulted in the overall drive goal of $10.7 millions.

Bequest pledges totaling about $140,000, which now have been paid, are not included in the above drive receipts, nor the $650,000 received from the city for the old University playing field in Culver Road or the sums received for the Prince Street buildings.

The initial fund planning was done by Dr. Donald W. Gilbert, '21, who at that time was Vice President for University Development. After he was incapacitated by illness in June, 1953, this phase of his duties and direction of the campaign was taken over by Andrew D. Wolfe as Director of the Office of University Development.

Paviour and the late Dr. Albert D. Kaiser, '09, were co-chairmen of the public campaign. Other leaders in the 1953 efforts and their divisions were corporations, Raymond N. Ball, '14, and Raymond L. Thompson, '17; special gifts, Mercer Brugler, '25, and Bernard E. Finucane; public and alumni, Thomas H. Hawks and E. Willard Dennis, '10; alumni, James W. Gray, '25, and Ruth Tuthill Hoffmeister, '25; business, Robert E. Ginna; commerce and industry, Frederick M. Tobin; executives, Carey H. Brown and Harry H. Wisner; professional, Harry B. Crowley; education and general, Miss Mary Sheehan, '28G, and William E. Hawley, '21G; general public, Mrs. Walter W. Post and Lucas S. Caple; education, William C. Wolgast, '13; publicity, Charles L. Rumrill, '22; and speakers, Sol M. Linowitz.

Paviour and Linowitz now are serving as vice chairmen of the Trustees' Corporate Relations Committee.

Cyclotron Rebuilding Studied

UNDER A $46,500 grant from the Atomic Energy Commission, the University's Physics Department is making a study of the feasibility of rebuilding the 240,000,000-volt cyclotron at the River Campus to obtain higher energies and much higher currents.

It is hoped that the preliminary study will be completed within a year without interruption of the present high energy research program, according to Dr. Robert E. Marshak, Chairman of the department. The conversion survey is being made by a committee headed by Professor Sidney W. Barnes and including Professors Arthur Roberts, Joseph B. Platt and Harry W. Fulbright.

The 130-inch cyclotron, known as a synchrocyclotron, is one of five in the United States which are of comparable size or larger. Its value as a research tool in nuclear and meson physics would be greatly increased if it can be modified to obtain higher energies and currents, Dr. Marshak says.

'French for Travel' Record

IN THE March issue we described the University's highly effective language laboratories techniques of teaching students to speak French, German and Spanish with native fluency. As a result of the astonishing success of the laboratory methods and of a series of TV demonstrations by Dr. Howard G. Harvey, Professor of French, members of his staff and students, Columbia Records has made a recording, "French for Travel," based on the TV programs. The record, now available in dealer stores throughout the United States, is one of the first undertakings of Columbia's new educational records division.

The uniqueness of the recording is in its ability to interest teachers and parents of prospective students. All other recordings are for linguists, or are out of date, and have none of the special features of "French for Travel," it is said. The scripts were written by Professor Harvey and the dialogue is spoken by Mlle. Marie-Andrée Drouvin, M. Leterme, Henri Dal, and Sauveur Choraqui, assistants in the University's French language laboratory. Methods used in the recording ensure fluent mastery by the average person; each phrase is built up from slow to fast, and each lesson increases in speed and general content by just the right amount. Material is all in the form of useful phrases, carefully selected as basic in the situation. Several voices are used so that the student becomes accustomed to individual yet characteristic French ways of speaking. Each practice ends in "acting out" with elementary stage props, which makes an enjoyable game, relieves tension and boredom, and produces effective practice painlessly. This, it is expected, will appeal not only to schools, but to institutions, clubs, families and neighborhood groups. A major premise of the technique is that the dialogue form is the only natural one.

The Columbia recording is the only one featuring a university language laboratory. It is based on ten years of constant experimentation, including the TV series.

Cooperating in promoting the records are the French National Railways, Lanvin's Arpege, the French Line, and other agencies.

Professor Harvey is in France on leave of absence for the spring term. On invitation of the French Ministère d'Éducation Nationale, he is giving demonstrations of the UR language laboratory methods to groups of prospective teacher candidates in French, using some of his former assistants who are now teaching in French schools. He also is setting up a language laboratory in one of the Paris plants of Kodak-Pathé similar to one he set up in Rochester for Eastman Kodak. The Paris laboratory is for the purpose of teaching to groups of French engineers and executives the English they need when they come to Rochester to study the latest techniques and processing of films. The Rochester men similarly were taught French for use in their visits to Eastman plants in France.

Professor Harvey also is continuing research on the life and works of Cyrano de Bergerac, including the writing of an article requested by the Revue de Littérature Comparée, a leading French academic organ.

Accelerated Music Program

BELIEVED TO BE the first of its kind in the country is an accelerated Bachelor of Music degree program to be introduced at the Eastman School of Music 1956 Summer Session which will enable talented young musicians to begin college level study at the end of their junior year in high school.

Under this plan, as announced by Dr. Allen I. McHose, Director of the summer session, students of demonstrated musical and scholastic ability may complete their work for the B.M. degree in two summer sessions of six weeks each and three regular academic years. The project has been approved by the New York State Board of Regents.

Those accepted in the program will take their first summer session at the close of their high school junior year, the second summer session at the end of their senior high school year, and three normal academic years at the Eastman School beginning with the regular college year immediately following.

Advantages of the plan, as pointed out by Dr. McHose, are several: It will save the students the time and expense of one full academic year as compared with the traditional four full college years for the degree. It will give them the benefit of instruction and guidance from the regular Eastman School artist-teacher faculty at an early age when good techniques are more readily acquired. It permits them to progress faster and begin sooner their careers in music education, or as performers or scholars. It allows superior students in music to become acquainted with the objectives of a college educational program at an earlier age so that youths eligible for military service will have reached a high level of advancement before entering the armed forces.

During the two summer sessions, all students in the accelerated program will take a core curriculum—applied music, theory of music, history of music, ensemble playing, and chorus. At the end of the second summer session the student will have acquired sixteen college credits toward his degree. He will concentrate in his major field with the first full academic year of instruction.

Leone Ivers Memorial Fund

A LEONE IVERS Memorial Fund, sponsored by the School of Nursing, has been established with an initial contribution of fifty dollars in recognition of Miss Ivers' devotion to the cause of nursing education during her twenty-five years of dedicated service at the University's Medical Center.

Miss Ivers, who retired in 1950 as Assistant Director of Nurses at Strong Memorial Hospital, died on February 5, 1956, at the home of her sister in Wausaw, Wis., where she moved soon after her retirement. One of the first leaders of the School of Nursing, she was held in deep affection and respect by members of every department of the hospital; her outstanding attributes were her patience, understanding and tact, and she became the friend and adviser of doctors, nurses and hospital personnel. A true humanitarian, she held the welfare of her patients uppermost and had an intense interest in each as an individual, typifying the title "nurse" in its full significance and tradition.

With the aid of the Strong Memorial Hospital administration, efforts are under way to locate a room in the hospital to be designated as the Leone Ivers Room, to be furnished by the memorial fund and to be used as a much-needed lounge for all nurses.

Co-chairmen of the fund are Mrs. Florence Monaghan Jacox, '35, and Mrs. William S. McCann. Contributions may be sent to Mrs. Vera Higham Sullivan, '28, River Campus Station, Rochester 20.

Visiting British Scholar

CONTINUATION of the unusual plan by which British scholars are brought to the University as visiting professors, initiated in 1953, is assured with the announcement that the R. T. French Company of Rochester and Reckitt & Colman, Ltd., of Hull, England, will make it possible for a third member of the faculty of the University of Hull to come here for the 1956-57 academic year. Dean J. Edward Hoffmeister is making arrangements with the Hull institution on the designation of the newest visiting professor.

Eastman Orchestra on NBC

STUDENTS AND FACULTY of the Eastman School of Music are combining their talents in orchestral programs being carried by the airwaves to all parts of this country and overseas.

On March 5, a new series of coast-to-coast broadcasts, Contrasts in Music, began over NBC, to continue Monday evenings for thirteen weeks. Dr. Howard Hanson, the School's Director, was narrator-conductor for the opening program, recorded February 22 in Kilbourn Hall, with the Eastman School Chamber Symphony, composed of the School's outstanding instrumentalists, playing Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D-Minor" and Dr. Hanson's own "Fantasy Variations on a Theme of Youth." David Burge, a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Musical Arts, was piano soloist.

The programs at 9:30 p. m., EST, follow the Telephone Hour as the network's coast-to-coast presentation, occupying a spot held for many years by the Band of America.

Programs of the "American Composers" radio series that were broadcast from Rochester last spring, and this winter won a Freedom Foundation award, will be broadcast in Europe. Tape recordings of all programs in the series of thirteen, which was designed and conducted by Dr. Hanson over WHAM in Rochester, have been shipped to Copenhagen, Denmark, for broadcast from that center, and additional distributions in other areas will be made, according to Harold Boxer, chief of the music service of the U. S. Information Agency at Washington.

"Do the post-college careers of scholarship holders justify the competition for superior students and the financial aid given them?"

That is the question, hitherto unanswered, which Harmon E. Potter, '38, '54G, sought to resolve in a study on the post-college activities of Rochester Prize and Genesee Scholarship holders at the University of Rochester between 1936 and 1953.

More than $30,000,000 is awarded to undergraduates in scholarship aid each year by American colleges and universities. College representatives tour the country seeking out students whose scholastic and all-around attainments and general promise make them ideal candidates for college scholarships. Quite often the colleges compete actively to induce students to accept such aid. Some colleges are in the indefensible position of appealing for financial support and at the same time awarding scholarship aid where no financial need exists.

Yet little is known by the colleges about the post-college achievements of their scholarship holders. Potter's careful search in preparation for his thesis on the subject for his master's degree failed to reveal a single previous study.

In 1943, Charles R. Dalton, '20, Director of Admissions, inventoried the in-college performance of the Prize-Genesee group of scholarship winners. His findings disclosed that their undergraduate achievements, both curricular and extra-curricular, were superior to those of the non-scholarship students.

Taken ten years later, Potter's inventory provides the data for the post-college portrait of a Rochester Scholar up to 1953. At the time of the study, the median age of these scholars was thirty-four. The Genesee Scholarships were created in 1932 and the program was expanded in 1936 by a second group of scholarships, the Rochester Prize awards. From 1932 to 1941, Rochester Prize or Genesee Scholarships were awarded to 318 men and women. Of this number, mailing addresses were available for 275. Questionnaires were returned by 225, including 145 men and eighty women, or 82 per cent of the group, a gratifying response.

Unique Study Traces Post-College Deeds of Scholarship Holders

By Harmon S. Potter

Associate Director of Admissions

THE EXISTENCE of the University's scholarship program cannot be justified solely on the basis of the achievements of scholarship holders while they are in college. If the post-college success and contribution to society of this favored segment of the college population are not such as to warrant their subsidization, then the whole matter of scholarship aid should be reviewed.

As a group, scholarship holders must acknowledge and accept the principle that such aid carries with it a special obligation not only to the college but to society as well. Recipients of scholarship aid must vindicate the granting of such aid.

On this premise, Rochester Prize and Genesee Scholarship holders have fully justified the substantial financial aid they were granted in college. Their deeds, and their comments in reply to questionnaires sent to them in a fairly detailed inventory of their post-college activities, bespeak a loyalty and sense of gratitude to the University.

Their demonstrated interest and participation in civic and political affairs, in public education, in military service in defense of their country, in research, in publications, and in graduate studies are symbolic of their recognition and acceptance of a responsibility to the University and to society. There is ample evidence of their success—financial, educational, and marital—and of their contributions to society. They constitute an outstanding segment of University of Rochester alumni.

Looked upon through the eyes of an alumni secretary, Rochester Scholars are likely to be judged on the basis of their contributions to the Alumni Fund. Accepting contributions to the Fund as a criterion, the inventory dramatically reveals that when compared with the alumni as a whole, the performance of Rochester Scholars is outstanding. Fifty-one per cent of the men and 42 per cent of the women in the scholarship group contribute regularly to the annual Fund. Comparable figures for the alumni as a whole are 33 per cent for the men and 38 per cent for the women. In terms of frequency of contribution to the Fund by the alumni as a whole, 48 per cent of the men and 43.6 per cent of the women have never contributed. For Rochester Scholars the comparable statistics are only 5 per cent and 10 per cent respectively.

The performance of the Rochester Scholars as alumni was also measured by another yardstick—participation in regional alumni clubs. It was found that for a third of the scholarship group, no regional organization was operating in their area. For the remainder of the group, approximately one-third take an active part in the programs of their regional club. Moreover, Rochester Scholars are either presidents or past presidents of seven of the eleven regional alumni clubs existing at the time of the survey. When judged by the criteria used by the Alumni Office, the performance of Rochester Scholars is indeed creditable.

What happens to scholarship winners after college? Do they continue their formal education? What positions do they hold? What salaries do they command? How many marry? How large are their families?

These and other pertinent questions were asked in the survey of the Rochester Scholars who cooperated in the inventory of their post-college achievements.

Scholar Richard Secrest, '43, at right, attends Alumni Association board meeting with Judge Clarence Henry, president, and Lowell Mac-Millan. Secrest is an alumni-selected UR Trustee, attorney, father of five children, and outstanding leader in alumni and civic activities.

Former Rhodes Scholar Robert Babcock, '37, has served two terms in Vermont Senate, now is special aide to Governor, shown signing papers.

After studying at Oxford and serving three years in Navy, Babcock joined University of Vermont faculty, teaches political science, holds Ph.D. degree.

Babcock family is larger than average size reported by scholarship graduates. Here he is with his wife, 2 sons and 3 daughters. They live on a small Vermont farm.

Rochester Scholars are hearteningly active in political affairs and leaders in civic enterprises. Six of this comparatively small group were candidates for or held an elective public office at the time of the survey, three of them lawyers. Seventy-five per cent of the men and 83 per cent of the women vote regularly in primary and local elections. An impressive number are alert participants in government by contributing or collecting money for political causes or groups, campaigning for or against local legislation, and in general showing reassuring comprehension of the grass roots of democracy.

Sixty-five per cent of the men and women Scholars aligned themselves with the Republican Party. Seventy-five per cent claim to vote for the man regardless of party lines. Seventeen per cent of the women and 24 per cent of the men habitually vote a straight ticket. Four men and one woman indicated they often fail to vote.

In the area of civic activities, 55 per cent have served as workers in local civic groups, with Community Chest and other Red Feather projects, young people's groups, Scouting, YMCA, YWCA, etc., and Parent-Teacher Associations leading their interests. Twenty per cent have carried petitions for local causes, and 14 per cent have written letters to local newspapers about community problems. By their activities Rochester Scholars have demonstrated a laudable concern for community welfare. In this area as in politics, it appears that the contribution of Rochester Scholars is beyond normal expectation.

That the term "Rochester Scholars" is an apt one is evidenced by the finding that 61 per cent of the men and 22 per cent of the women qualified for graduate degrees. Considering the depression in the 1930's and the war in the 1940's, these figures are even more impressive. Men Rochester Scholars are successful in the fields of medicine, dentistry, law, the ministry, industry, television, politics and many others. The statistics are unmistakably clear that for the women members of the group the major profession is homemaking.

A large majority of Rochester Scholars are married; specifically, only 8 per cent are not married. Moreover, there is abundant evidence that virtually all are happily married. The fact that 90 per cent of the men and 88 per cent of the women are once married suggests that the marriages are notably successful. As of 1953, the average number of children per married Rochester Scholar was 2.1. Because many of the Scholars are comparatively recent graduates, it is anticipated that this figure will rise during the next few years.

With respect to salaries, 85 per cent of the men reported annual earned incomes in excess of $5,000; 22 per cent had incomes of over $7,500, and 21 per cent listed earned incomes as above $10,000. All but six of the women Scholars had married; since they are essentially homemakers, their income statistics are not presented.

Replies to a question on the formal education of their spouses indicate that, for Rochester Scholars at least, education seeks education. Eighty-five per cent of the spouses have continued their formal education beyond the secondary school level. Seventy-five per cent of the spouses have qualified for bachelor's degrees, and at least 7 per cent hold graduate degrees.

The Scholars gave an overwhelming vote of confidence to the public school system. Eighty-seven per cent of the men and 89 per cent of the women signified that their children attended or will attend public schools. That the preference for public schools is genuine and not dictated by financial circumstances is given support by the annual earned income statistics.

With few exceptions, Rochester Scholars hold to the same religious faith in which they were raised. Changes in religious affiliations were reported by 9 per cent of the women and only 4 per cent of the men. Forty-two per cent of the men and 53 per cent of the women stated that as compared with their college life they now go to church more often. For both sexes their college years marked the low point of the frequency of church attendance.

The impact of World War II upon the men Rochester Scholars is clearly shown in the survey. Had the war not intervened, the inventory would have terminated with the scholarship winners in the class of 1945. Because of military service, however, one finds male members of the group listed with the graduating classes of 1946 through 1949. Rochester Scholars served in every branch of the armed forces. Seventy-nine per cent of the men, or 114, saw military service, 72 per cent of them as commissioned officers. Eighty-eight per cent of them devoted two or more years of their lives to the service of their country. Four made the supreme contribution. Three list themselves as career officers. Only one woman in the group served in the war.

Both Margaret Greene Kindig, '47, and husband Edwin, '44, held Rochester Prize Scholarships. Like most of the women who held scholarships, she is now a housewife, busy looking after their four children. Kindig is senior product design engineer at Eastman Kodak, active in alumni affairs, 1956 reunion chairman. Mrs. Kindig, who boasts a Phi Beta Kappa key, also is prominent in alumnae organizations.

Reading is the favorite relaxation for the Scholars group as a whole. For the men, sports participation (golf, tennis) nosed out reading for first place, while the women evinced little interest in sports either as participants or spectators. Regarding their favorite form of reading, "current affairs, economics" emerged as the male preference; among the distaff contingent this classification was tied with "general fiction" for first place. Both sexes eschewed books on travel and adventure and detective stories. Masters of Art prefer general fiction, medical doctors history and biography, and lawyers current affairs and economics. For the holders of other degrees, no distinct favorites were established. Asked to list in order their preference of three magazines, the Scholars put Time first by a comfortable margin, Life second, and The Saturday Evening Post third. It is worth noting that the order of preference was identical for both sexes.

In the area of radio and television, the group voted Edward R. Murrow as their favorite radio news commentator and John Cameron Swayze as their favorite television news commentator. The communion of the sexes was completely thrown awry, however, on the question of their favorite radio and TV programs. The responses of the women were so varied that no radio or TV program could properly be designated as the favorite. The men, on the other hand, established strong preferences. For radio it was the NBC Symphony (no longer on the air), and for TV, sports events were unchallenged for first place.

One significant finding of the survey on the performance of Rochester Scholars after graduation is that a far larger proportion contribute regularly to the Alumni Fund than do the alumni as a whole.

Many of the Scholars, in answer to the questionnaires sent to them, indicated also that they hope in the future to increase their contributions substantially. This was strikingly confirmed recently in a letter from a former scholarship holder to President de Kiewiet enclosing a check for $2,000.

"Back in 1933, I was the recipient of a scholarship in the amount of $500 for four years, making it possible for me to go to Rochester. There was never, of course, any suggestion that this scholarship was to be paid back in money, but I should like to help some other young person as much as I was helped," wrote this alumnus, who asked that his name be withheld.

"There was available to me at Rochester an astonishingly good education—not the best; Rochester was never sufficiently educationally daring in spite of having the means to be—but it was very good. What made it good (for me, at least) was some of the Professors: Perkins, May, Coates, Van de Walle, Curtis, Hoffmeister, Alexander and Larkins. If there is any way to do so, please convey my sense of gratitude.

"I can make this gift because of a recent generous inheritance. I should like it to go as nearly as possible to helping someone else the way I was helped. How that may best be accomplished you are a better judge than I, so this gift is unrestricted."

This is a condensation of Harmon Potter's revealing and significant "Study of the Post-College Activities of Prize and Genesee Scholarship Holders at the University of Rochester." The complete text, including charts and other data that could not be included in the REVIEW because of space limitations, is on file in Rush Rhees Library, River Campus, for those interested in obtaining further details.

Music Alumni on

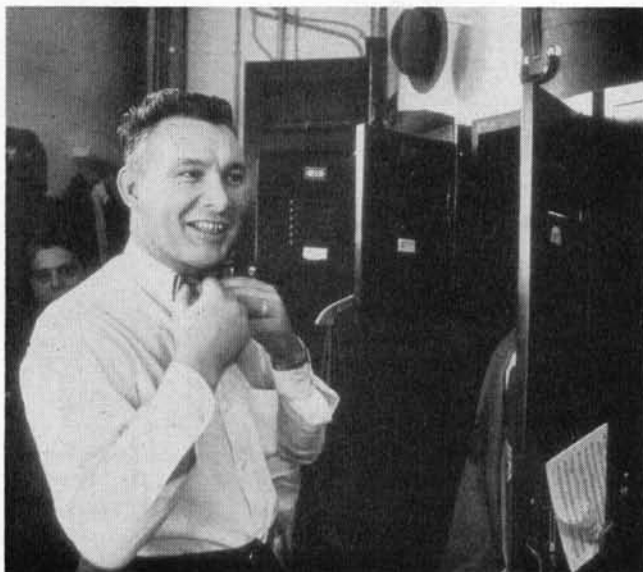

At historic Marine Barracks in Washington, D. C., an encampment of Eastman School of Music alumni is part of one of the nation's finest musical aggregations and proudest military traditions, the United States Marine Band. Twenty-five of the Band's complement of one hundred musicians have received musical training at Eastman School, the largest segment representing any single music school or conservatory.

While taking the accompanying pictures photographer Werner Wolff found a bandsman's life to be a curious combination of military and civilian life, of music and parade. None of the bandsmen live in the Marine Barracks. Consequently at least twice a day traditional Marine Corps formality at the main gate gives way before a stream of bandsmen commuting between their military occupation and their civilian homes. Arrival is in time to change into uniform before the regular morning rehearsal at 9 A. M. or whatever special occasion may be scheduled instead.

Inspections are a tradition of the Marines and a necessity for bandmen bound for a ceremonial appearance. As acting drum major this duty falls to Moeller. Marine Barracks in background were rebuilt after the British burned Washington during the war of 1812, only the Commandant's house at far end was unscathed.

Bass drum, tuba, and more manageable instruments are crowded into a government bus for the trip to Arlington as Moeller and bandmen take a break for a smoke. En route, younger members finger their instruments, discuss a new arrangement, or argue the merits of high-fi components. More seasoned veterans are more concerned with latest ball scores, mortgage payments, or a quiet nap.

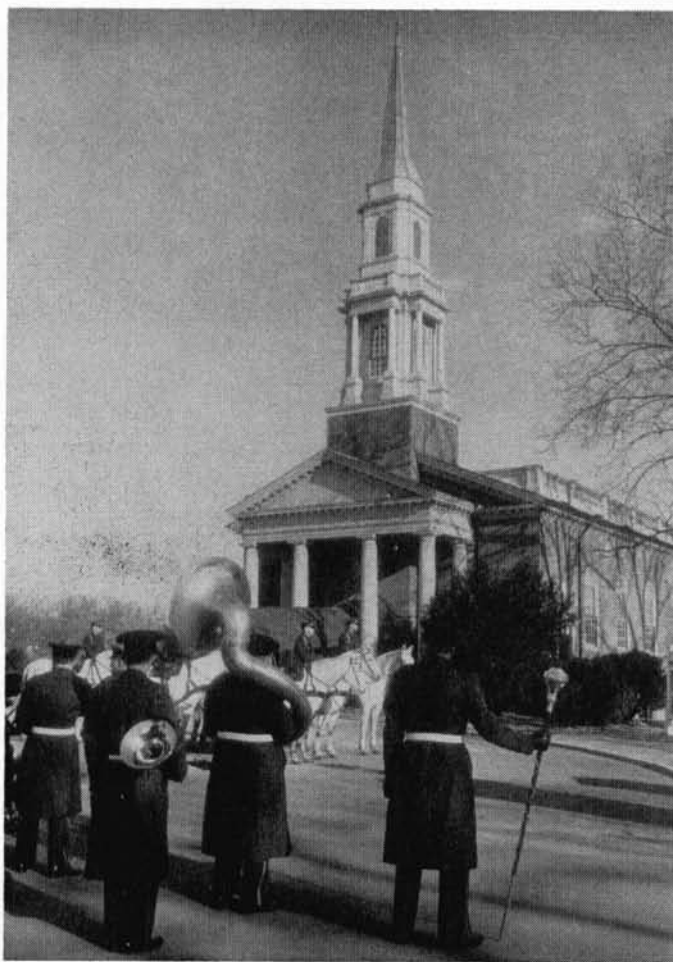

Always on Call for the White House

can be done before lunch. Consequently many bandmen lead a normal suburban life, which may include composing or arranging on the side, practicing at home, but always on call if the White House or Marine Headquarters demands. The role of the Band in military and diplomatic protocol is such that these calls are not infrequent and usually unpredictable.

Such was the fate of M/Sgt. Ralph Moeller, '42E, who originally played bass viol or tuba and was not part of the traveling group for the Band's annual nine-week nation-wide tour. Twenty-four hours before the tour began in 1946 a saxophone player who was scheduled to make the trip reported ill and a phone call from the leader, the late Lieut. Col. William F. Santelman, converted Moeller to the saxophone which he has played ever since.

These tours which, along with nationwide broadcasts, have made the Marine Band the "Nation's Band" as well as the "President's Own" are a gruelling experience. Travel is by bus and lodging is at the best hotels, all at the sponsoring organization's expense. Two concerts, each in different towns, are scheduled each day including Sunday for nine weeks. During these trips bandmen have occasion to reflect on the peculiarities of American law and custom, particularly "blue laws" in certain areas of the South where such hallowed Marine traditions as whistling at a pretty girl will bring out the local constable.

Until last summer the Band demanded of its musicians proficiency in two instruments, both string and brass, so it could perform as either band or orchestra. Now, with its complement raised, the orchestra is a separate group. As a band its outdoor ceremonial strength of eighty-five is usually cut to about fifty when performing indoors. The orchestra numbers sixteen of whom about two play also with the Band. Also on call is a seventeen-piece dance band, a combo of five or six pieces, and a tenor band of ten. The smallest unit consists solely of S/Sgt. Thomas Redcay, '51E, who is the favorite piano soloist of President and Mrs. Eisenhower and is on call for White House functions.

All bandmen have formal music training behind them. Many have played in leading philharmonic orchestras and return to them following their Band service. A sizeable percentage are "career" men sticking with the Band for twenty or thirty years before retirement. All are auditioned in Washington and if chosen join the Band directly without that sine qua non of other Marines, boot camp. In addition to the proud traditions of the Band, security and the opportunity to have compositions played and recorded are inducements to join. A married master sergeant with two children draws in excess of $5,000 per year including allowances. Upon retirement after thirty years a master sergeant retires on $267 per month with years of productive musical endeavor before him.

Sgt. Michael Hamilton, '55E, (right), listens as S/Sgt. Donald Hunsberger, '54E, discusses his arrangement of the "Marines' Hymn" with 2nd leader CWO Dale Harpham (center). Research Brings to Light Sage's Unpublished Journals

Ralph Waldo Emerson's terse, perceptive, and drily humorous style is strongly evident in his account of the University of Rochester in the days of its infancy, found by Professor Gilman in the hitherto unpublished journals of the sage of Concord. Emerson's description of the fledgling institution under date of "7 February 1851 Rochester," following one of his several speaking visits to Rochester, follows:

"Mr. J. A. Wilder (one of the University's founders) made me acquainted with the University of R. which was extemporising here like a picnic. They had bought a hotel, once a railroad terminus Depot for $8500, turned the dining room into a chapel by putting up a pulpit on one side, made the barroom into a Pythagorean Societys Hall, & the chambers into Recitation rooms, Libraries, & Professor's apartments, all for $700. a year. They had brought an Omnibus load of professors down from Madison bag & baggage Hebrew Greek Chaldee Latin Belles Lettres Mathematics & all Sciences called in a painter put him up a ladder to paint the title "University of Rochester" on the wall, and now they had runners on the road to catch students. One had come in yesterday; another, this morning; "tho't they should like it first rate," & now they thot themselves illused if they did not get a new student every day. And they are confident of graduating a class of ten by the time green peas are ripe."

Emerson: Fact and Myth

By William H. Gilman, Ph.D.
Associate Professor of English

ONE HUNDRED and five years ago Ralph Waldo Emerson stopped in Rochester on the first of those lecture tours to the West which were to make him almost as familiar a figure on the American scene as he was in Concord and Boston. Undoubtedly he was hailed in the local press as the champion of the new philosophy called "Transcendentalism," which had both electrified and puzzled audiences from Plymouth, Mass., to Utica, N. Y. People were fascinated with his doctrines of compensation and the Over-Soul, of nature as a symbol of spirit, of the divinity of man, of the one eternally manifesting itself in the many and the many perpetually returning to the one. A philosopher and a mystic, he seemed to have become an organ for the utterances of the divine mind, who could be trusted to speak the truth even if it was as mysterious as the Delphic oracles.

By and large it is this reputation for lofty, remote, and fuzzy speculation which has clung to Emerson. But there was another Emerson, hard-headed and practical, who said that "life is our dictionary" and "only so much do I know as I have lived." This Emerson deserved to be better known. One reason he is not is that when his journals first appeared some forty-five years ago the editors printed a disproportionate number of passages reflecting the myth of Emerson the transcendentalist, who conversed in cryptic language with the gods. They excluded some hundreds which would have deepened the picture of Emerson the man who saw and recorded the world around him with a keen eye for reality. A sample of the omissions (which has special interest for Rochester alumni) appears in an adjacent column.

Emerson's 160 manuscript journals contain scores of similar unpublished passages, the product not of transcendental vision but of shrewd powers of observation, sensitivity to the real speech and behavior of real people, amused tolerance, and dry, sub-surface humor. But if we are to have the full picture of the man once called "the wisest American," there is need for another edition of Emerson's journals in which the subject can, as it were, be permitted to paint a full-length portrait of himself. This, at least, is the conviction I came to share with three fellow-scholars in American literature two years ago. We are now preparing such an edition, to be published in fifteen volumes, and the project will take us approximately ten years.

What we are doing may stand as a sample of the kind of thing that goes on at this and other universities day after day, year in, year out, usually without notoriety or notice. One name for it is scholarship; but I would rather represent it to you as research, because it is just as much an investigation as the kind of work usually associated with our colleagues in the sciences—with one difference. Everyone thinks of universities as places where physicists, chemists, biologists and others labor at the discovery of new facts or the re-interpretation of old ones. Rarely do people associate this kind of labor with the humanistic disciplines. Furthermore, the products of scientific research in the universities come more quickly and speedily to the public, in the form of new kinds of cameras, or of methods of treating atomic burns or cancer, or of miracle fabrics. Fortunately not all scientific research is undertaken to produce immediately practical results.

Our scientific colleagues are also studying simply to know more about the universe we live in, to extend the boundaries of knowledge, without the slightest concern as to whether their work will be "useful" or not. Even here, however, the scholar in the humanities is generally kept off balance. Research in science, whether applied or pure, has for years attracted more financial support than humanistic study. The student who would find new facts or re-interpret old ones in literature, philosophy, or history characteristically does so with little or no subsidy. One needs only to survey the distribution of foundation money in the last twenty years to see how heavily weighted the scales are in favor of research which will produce a measurable contribution to technical progress or human welfare.

But with or without support scholars in the humanities go their way, trying to contribute to that part of the idea of a university which makes it a duty to seek out and publish the truth. In the last few years at the University, scholars have written and somehow got printed (often at considerable expense to themselves) these books: a study of the conservative mind in the eighteenth century (to which so many modern conservatives are returning for political orientation); a history of the Hapsburg Empire (the product, it might be added, of some twenty-five years of disciplined study and writing, much of it composed between the hours of five and eight in the morning); biographies of important American politicians and writers of the last century; a documented revelation of the influence of Moscow on the Communist party in India; an introduction to philosophy for college students; a history of civilization—not to mention scores of articles in learned magazines. At the present moment, research is being carried on in the life of a modern American writer, the nature of comedy, the long-lost art of dying, the countries of middle Europe, the economy of the American frontier, the life of Lincoln's Secretary of State, the changing ideas of the American hero and the American heroine, and numerous other fields. The impact of most of these works on American life and thought will be indirect, elusive, and long-range. But they are being undertaken in the belief that, as Emerson put it, "Each age must write its own books; or rather, each generation for the next succeeding."

Thus I am led back to the man whose observations of the University led into the subject of scholarship here. In 1837 Emerson aroused a Phi Beta Kappa audience at Harvard with a famous definition of the scholar as "Man Thinking." The image he created should never cease to inspire the American scholar. Self-trust, patience and industry, the courage to call a popgun a popgun when all the ancient and honorable of the earth swear it is the crack of doom, the duty of showing man facts amid appearances, ability to endure poverty and solitude, the habit of creative reading as well as creative writing—these are the marks of Emerson's ideal scholar. Doubtless few of us achieve all of these high virtues (and all of us are unable to see any necessary connection between poverty and the profession to which we belong). But in Emerson we find a fair statement of our intentions. The University has changed a good deal, to put it mildly, since he first saw it. It is no longer necessary, in his sense, to have "runners on the road to catch students"; the chapel has disappeared; the "Omnibus load of professors" would fill the Empire State Express. But the habit of keen observation which went into that journal entry and the ideal picture of the American scholar which he spelled out for his and later generations are still reflected, one believes, in the present humanistic scholarship at the University.

When Professor Gilman was at Harvard University in 1953 on sabbatical leave under a Ford Faculty Fellowship, he was working on an article on Ralph Waldo Emerson. In checking Emerson manuscripts in the Houghton Library he discovered that no one had ever edited all of the journals of the great writer, philosopher and lecturer who in his day was in the American avant garde. Professor Gilman and two other Ford Fellows, friends of his, submitted a proposal to the Emerson Memorial Association and the Harvard University Press for publication of Emerson's complete journals. As a result, the journals, of which there are 160, are to be published under the imprint of the Belknap Press and will be known as the Harvard Edition of Emerson's Journals. The complete work will comprise about fifteen volumes, the first two of which are expected to be off the press in two or three years. The monumental task of editing, expected to take about ten years, is being done by Professor Gilman, Dr. George Peirce Clark of Illinois State College, Dr. Merrell Rhee Davis of the University of Washington, and Dr. Alfred R. Ferguson of Ohio State University.

A graduate of Harvard in 1932, with a Ph.D. from Yale, Professor Gilman has been a member of the University of Rochester Faculty since 1947. He is the author of the first full-length book on the youth of Herman Melville, nineteenth century American writer, "Melville's Early Life and Redburn."

Dr. Giedt six days after his release from 21 months of solitary confinement in Red prison.

For thirty-three years the Rev. Emanuel H. Giedt, Ph.D., '15, was a missionary of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society in China. In the spring of 1951, while serving as mission secretary of the South China Mission and principal of the Swatow Baptist Theological Seminary, he was seized by the Chinese Reds and charged with hindering "the progressive church movement" and with espionage. After twenty-one months' imprisonment in solitary confinement, he was finally released early in 1953, Congressman Kenneth B. Keating, '19, working for six months through the U. S. State Department's Protective Service Division, was largely responsible for obtaining Dr. Giedt's freedom. In the accompanying article, which he wrote for the REVIEW, Dr. Giedt recounts some of his experiences as a Communist prisoner.

Dr. Giedt received his B.A. degree at the UR in 1915, and was graduated from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1927. Yale University awarded him his Ph.D. degree in 1936. During the past three years, though officially retired from the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, he has been speaking in many churches in all parts of the country. He and Mrs. Giedt now live in Rochester.

Wider Learning in Chinese Prison

By the Rev. Emanuel H. Giedt, '15

ON APRIL 9, 1951, three of my missionary colleagues and myself were arrested by the Communist government of Swatow, South China. I was Mission Secretary, and so all my mission files and also my personal correspondence were immediately confiscated. Then followed two weeks of grilling interrogation in relays, mornings, afternoons and late at night, and I had to sleep with a lamp at my bedside and a soldier patrolling my bedroom and other soldiers sleeping in the house.

The Communists employed a lawyer to cross-examine me, but I was not permitted to have a lawyer to defend me. They charged me with being a spy and a tool for the "imperialist" American government and tried in every way to wear me down physically and mentally to the point where I would confess to being a spy. Early in my "trial" the lawyer informed me that he had authority to impose one of three sentences upon me: if my offense proved to be of a light nature I would be banished from the country; if it proved to be of a graver category I would get at least three years of prison; but if I had committed a crime against the People's Government I would be executed.

When at the end of the first week in my own house I had not confessed that I was a spy, the lawyer left me late on a Sunday night, shaking his fist at me and shouting, "I will sentence you tomorrow!" He didn't come back the next day, but a lesser officer came and told me to get ready in twenty minutes to leave the house. Thinking that he was going to take me to prison in Swatow, I grabbed a few pieces of bedding and then reached for a suitcase full of clothing, but the officer said: "Don't take that; you won't need it; it will only be a few days; a couple of shirts and a change of underwear is all you will need." I thought that was a straw in the wind that they were going to execute me. Yet when the officer led the way he did not go in the direction of Swatow but almost in the opposite direction through the village. Then I thought, "Are they going to take me to the nearby hills and shoot me right away?" But on emerging from the village they turned in to the largest of our mission houses with four suites of rooms. The house was formerly occupied by four single women missionaries, but in recent months Miss Abbie Sanderson had been its only occupant. Now I was put into one of the vacant rooms and pretty soon I heard Miss Louise Giffin's voice upstairs, so I knew that at least the three of us were to be held for a time in that house. A few weeks later Mr. Loren E. Noren, another missionary, was brought from Swatow and placed in the remaining vacant room, and somewhat later a fifth room was improvised for a French Catholic priest by the name of Sylvester.

The thrice daily ordeal of interrogation in relays by officers and the lawyer was continued for another week, and various threats were made that on several nights kept me awake mentally facing the firing squad. No announcement of our sentence was ever made, but later, judging from the long duration of our incarceration, I concluded that they must have sentenced us to "at least three years of prison," but for some inscrutable reason they finally deported us after twenty-one months. We were always closely guarded by armed soldiers, so that we had no way of communication with one another. Even our meals were served to us separately. However, during the four months in our mission compound the officers condescended to bring us a few books from our own houses, but they took away all our Bibles (both English and Chinese) and told us to "stop reading that superstition."

Just before supper on August 5, we were suddenly told to get ready in twenty minutes to move across the bay to Swatow. When I began to gather up my few belongings I was told not to take much, only enough for the night, as our servants could go back next morning and get the rest of our things. I was not allowed to take any books at all. But that was a deliberate deception on the part of the officer in charge; for nearly a month we got nothing more of bedding, clothing or books.

When we left our mission house we did not know where they were taking us and we were somewhat surprised when we wound up in the French Catholic Mission. The Communists had simply taken over that mission for themselves. They had turned the second floor of a building in the rear into a prison for us. It was ideally built for a prison, of reinforced concrete throughout and with heavy iron bars on the windows. There were just five rooms around two sides of an open court, with a narrow veranda all around in front of the doors and windows, and the guards constantly patrolled that veranda and looked into our windows, hardly ever leaving us out of sight for more than a minute. Our "cells" were assigned to us in the order: Sanderson, Sylvester, Giedt, Giffin, Noren.

There was only a six-inch wall between us, but we were always watched so closely that for the remaining seventeen months (as during the first four) we could never speak a single word to one another. They even forbade us to look at each other, but they couldn't always prevent that when we individually made a daily trip around that veranda to empty our night pails in the common toilet used by the guards. This was always done with an armed guard at our heels! We never had more privacy than what we could improvise with a sheet or blanket.

All the reading matter I had during the first four weeks of life in our Swatow prison was a small pocket diary, which I happened to have in my pocket. That contained the usual statistical information, the distances between the largest cities in America, a list of weights and measures, and last but not least, a five-inch measure printed on the edge of one page. After I had studied the populations for a while and had figured out the averages per square mile in many of the states I had a bright idea. More than thirty years ago I had studied trigonometry at the University of Rochester. Never having used it since, I thought I had forgotten all about it, but by cudgeling my brains some of the principles of trigonometry came back to me. Now the five-inch measure suggested to me that with it I could draw right-angled triangles and then apply my resuscitated knowledge of trigonometry to them.

I remembered most of the terms used for the various "functions" of an angle, such as sine, cosine, tangent, cotangent, etc., and how each is derived from the relations or ratios between the lengths of the three sides of a right-angled triangle. I also remembered that these fractional ratios are known as logarithms and that by means of them difficult calculations can be made quickly, especially with the use of a slide-rule. But in prison I had neither a slide-rule nor a book of logarithmic tables, such as every trigonometry text-book provides. Hence I undertook to produce as many as possible of my own logarithms by going at it the hard way, that is, by innumerable operations in lengthy multiplication, division, and the extracting of square root. And while the printed logarithms are carried only to the fourth or fifth decimal place, I worked mine out to the seventh or eighth place! During the first four or five months in our Swatow prison the only paper I had for my calculations was the rather heavy and relatively smooth army toilet paper, with which our mission treasurer had supplied us all from Army Surplus Sales while we were still free. I was fortunate enough to have a pencil in my pocket. (It was months before we were permitted to have our cook buy writing paper, pen and ink for us, and it was a whole year before I was allowed to write a letter to my family.)

As I laboriously worked out those logarithms I wrote them neatly into my little pocket diary, whole pages of them. Later I went into plane and solid geometry and worked out a number of difficult problems, copying the results of my calculations and many geometrical diagrams into my little diary. But when the Communists finally deported us to Hongkong the last day of December, 1952, they went through our few belongings with a fine-tooth comb and they confiscated my little diary. I suspect that they thought all those figures and diagrams must have something to do with the atomic bomb!

The Communists tried to starve us mentally. They had the keys to my house, where I had hundreds of books, but with all my pleading and begging during the seventeen months in our Swatow prison and after months of waiting they only brought me a Bible, my Peake's one-volume "Bible Commentary," Conybeare and Howson's "Life and Epistles of the Apostle Paul," a volume of Shakespeare's fourteen Comedies, Thackeray's "History of Arthur Pendennis," Cable's "The Gobi Desert," and Ripley's big book, "Believe It or Not." Fortunately, most of these were long books of 700 to 1000 pages, and I made a thorough study of each one. I read the whole Bible alongside Peake's Commentary and made numerous marginal notes in both. During the spring months of 1952 our Communist masters loaned us copies of several bi-weekly papers published in flawless English in Peking and Moscow, with lurid stories of American germ warfare, confessions of the captured fliers Enoch and Quinn, an article by England's Red Dean of Canterbury, Johnson, and another by Madame Sun Yat-sen on "America, You Stand Condemned." We read all of these and by discounting everything sixty to seventy per cent we got a few grains of truth and some garbled news.

Was I happy when at Christmas time, 1951, an officer brought me my Westcott and Hort's Greek New Testament with a lexicon attached! I had fruitlessly asked for this a dozen times. Now I really had a man's size job, and in the remaining twelve months of my imprisonment I read the whole of the Greek New Testament, not superficially but translating every sentence and looking up every word I had forgotten or never knew before. And then I made a word by word study of Paul's Epistles to the Romans and I and II Corinthians with a view to ascertaining the range of Paul's Greek vocabulary and the quality of his grammar. I had no grammar, so I made up my own on the basis of my findings in the New Testament, building up the paradigms for the conjugation of the four classes of Greek verbs and the declensions of the four classes of Greek nouns and adjectives. By that time we were permitted to have our cook buy paper, composition books, pens and ink. Hence I made alphabetic lists of all the parts of speech and found that in those three Epistles Paul used a total of 646 different verbs, 758 different nouns, 240 different adjectives, 131 different adverbs, and about twenty each of pronouns, conjunctions, prepositions and particles. Of the 646 verbs Paul used ninety-nine in five to twenty-seven verb forms each (as affected by inflections for person, number, tense, voice and mood), thirty verbs in four verb forms each, and 321 (or half of his verbs) in only one form each.

The Communists did a lot of things without rhyme or reason. Only because they couldn't read Greek, my study was of no value to them, and to my surprise and delight they let me take all my Greek note books out with me! I shall always value those fruits of my toil, much of it done during the long evenings by a fifteen-watt light.

Hyam Plutzik is a successful poet whose work has been included in a number of anthologies, and has appeared in the Sewanee Review, Yale Review, Antioch Review, and elsewhere. He has been teaching modern poetry at the University of Rochester since 1945. His book of verse, "Aspects of Proteus," won the 1949 Poetry Society of America Award, and also the $1,000 award of the National Institute of Arts and Letters for creative work in the field of literature. In 1954-55 Professor Plutzik did research in the backgrounds of modern poetry at Yale under a fellowship from the Ford Foundation for the Advancement of Education. He is a graduate of Trinity College, and an army veteran of World War II.

If Grammatical Slip Shows, Don't Worry About It; English Profs are Human

By Hyam Plutzik

Assistant Professor of English

A SHATTERING problem has been tormenting me for some time now.

Let me put it in the form of a wish. I wish people would stop thinking awful thoughts about English teachers.

Not that anyone has said anything nasty to me personally; folks are quite proper and polite. But they drop clues; they give hints of their feelings; their eyes go offside at the wrong moments.

Only yesterday a symbolic incident took place. I was lying in a bed in Strong Memorial Hospital (not, let me hasten to add, as a result of brooding over this problem, but for a check-up on a few fugitive aches that the doctors are trying to catch). A boy came in selling newspapers. He is about thirteen years old and is called Mike, a pert young fellow wearing big eyeglasses.

"Are you a doctor?" he asked me, noticing the briefcase full of books near my bed.

"No, a teacher," I replied. "I teach at the University."

"What do you teach?"

"English," I said, quailing under the glare of his glasses.

"Uh-uh!" he said.

And that's what I mean. When a person learns that you teach English he either says "Uh-uh" or he thinks "Uh-uh." Why is this?

Another time, an interior decorator came to our house and seeing all the bookcases, asked the inevitable question and discovered that I teach English.

There was the usual heavy silence.

"You don't look like an English teacher," he said at last. "You look more like an engineer."

"And how," I asked, "does an engineer look that an English teacher doesn't?"

"You look too genial," he said.

Now, my friends and relations can vouch that I'm not genial at all—am, indeed, something of a sourpuss. I'm the sort of person who, in the army, was called "Doc"—as a sign of respect for his high seriousness. Usually I've got a glum look about me of what the deep thinkers call weltschmerz.

Actually, here at the University, I'm by far the least genial member of the English Department. Stand near a group of us talking and you'll soon hear that telltale peal or cackle or titter. Or, if you wish, cock an ear outside the door of one of our department meetings and count up the percentage of time we spend laughing at the world and ourselves. As a matter of fact, if anything, English teachers are more genial than other people, for in addition to laughing at the ordinary things people laugh at—the troubles in Dogpatch, the leer of Groucho Marx, etc.—we also have been known to burst out into laughter merely because a line of poetry sets up a funny little tinkle as we read it.

The reason I make such a fuss about the matter is that it sticks in my craw to hear someone say that English teachers are less genial than engineers. Some of my best friends are engineers, but frankly, engineers have always seemed to me to be very serious people, putting up bridges and pulling them down and doing all sorts of practical things.

The picture that people have of us is not a real one at all, but an imaginary one. That interior decorator, for instance, had a certain pre-conceived notion about English teachers which was shattered when he saw me in an old sweat-shirt, so he called me an engineer. Yes, people have made of us what psychologists call an archetype. Do you remember the caricatures that cartoonists used to draw of prohibitionists? Well, people have unjustly made something similar about us, picturing us as humorless characters in formal Puritan dress, who never relax but go around snooping to see if there are any loose prenominal antecedents or split infinitives around.

In brief, most people in this country have been frightened by an English teacher sometime in life and have never been the same since. That explains the "Uh-uh's," the remarks by interior decorators, and most common of all: the incidents in which people say "Oh!" when told that we're English teachers, and then pause and say apologetically: "Oh, I wasn't very good in English" (as if anyone was asking them about their personal affairs), and then, in the remainder of the conversation speak timidly, wetting their lips, wondering what terrible boners they're making. The average person talking to an English teacher acts like a sinner under the eye of a preacher, or a pickpocket who suddenly finds himself chatting with a detective. To most people talking to an English teacher is like having dinner with Emily Post. The words, like the asparagus, turn to ashes in one's mouth.

I wish people wouldn't think this way. We English teachers are not always on duty. We are not always judging and censuring, though of course we are both professionally and personally interested in language and its resources. Most people should not feel as guilty about their grammar as they do. Most people are not as bad as they think. Most people speak adequately to the circumstances. That's what correct English is. Many usages which are inappropriate or ineffectual in formal writing or speech are perfectly permissible in informal, everyday speech, which is the type of palaver most of us engage in nine-tenths of the time.

The bad language in this country is not the spoken language of the average man but the written language found in government reports, income tax forms, committee reports of various types; in the works of certain social scientists, particularly in education; and sometimes indeed (in another form) in the writings of certain English teachers on their own subject. This type of language, which we might call Formalese, and is sometimes called jargon or gobbledegook, is a heavyhanded, heartless, gutless speech, without nerves or blood vessels, delicate as a steamroller, but hardly as efficient as it moves to its destination.

In sum: like other people, we English teachers when we meet someone are not interested primarily in whether his pronouns are neatly arranged but whether his heart is in the right place.

President
Writes of Early
Frontier
Days

LAWLESSNESS and violence were the order of the day in the lusty San Francisco of the 1850's. The civil government was unable to control the teeming, gold-mad thousands who swarmed into the quiet village from all over the world with the result that it mushroomed in a few months into a roaring, sinful city of shacks, tents and gambling hells.

To bring some kind of law and order into the situation, groups of citizens formed vigilante committees, the first in 1851 and another in 1856, and took law enforcement into their own hands to protect the persons and property of decent citizens from the reckless bands of ruffians who roamed virtually unchecked through the streets.

In his new book, "Vigilante Justice," published January 6 by Reynal & Company, New York City, Alan Valentine, the University's President from 1935-1950, writes of those lusty, iniquitous times in California and presents a defense of the Vigilante movement in what the New Yorker reviewer called a "stimulating glimpse of the sort of ruddy-cheeked democracy that has operated from time to time in this country."

Discussing the book in The Saturday Review, Oscar Lewis, author of "California Heritage" and many other books on Americana, wrote:

"'Vigilante Justice' admirably tells the story of the drastic measures taken by early-day San Franciscans to purge their city of lawlessness and corruption. Alan Valentine has obviously examined with care the by no means inconsiderable literature on the subject, including not only contemporary accounts but the later recollections of participants or observers, among the latter being such well-known figures of Civil War days as William Tecumseh Sherman and David G. Farragut. It makes a highly readable chronicle, and one that demonstrates again the calibre of men who had a hand in bringing order out of the confusion and lawlessness of numerous outpost communities on our Western frontier."

Mr. Valentine and his wife returned in December from Europe, where they spent about two months, mostly in Greece and Italy, and are now back in their Washington, D. C., home at 3333 Reservoir Road, N. W. He is working on another book, expected to be published this summer. His second last volume, "The Age of Conformity," came out in October, 1954. It was a serious, provocative analysis of the effect of popular sovereignty on political and cultural values in American life.

Faith Wright Wins Foreign Study Award

FAITH WRIGHT, '54, will study in Geneva, Switzerland, at the Graduate Institute of Advanced International Studies during the coming academic year under a Rotary Foundation Fellowship for advanced study abroad.

Recommended for the $2,500 fellowship by the Pittsford, N. Y., Rotary Club, she was the only candidate from New York State to receive one of the awards given to 126 outstanding graduate students from thirty-two countries.

Since her graduation from the UR, Miss Wright has been working in the International Advertising Division of Eastman Kodak Company in Rochester. As an undergraduate she held the Alumnae Scholarship, was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, received the Gamma Phi Prize as the outstanding freshman, the James D. McGill Memorial Prize for superior work in government, the Bigelow Award as the most outstanding upperclass woman leader, and the Marsien senior honorary award. She received her B.A. in government with distinction. She also was president of her freshman class, vice president of her junior class, editor of Interpres, and was a delegate to three intercollegiate conferences on foreign affairs. As if that were not enough, she was in addition a member of the University Chapel cabinet, Y.W.C.A. cabinet, Women's Glee Club, Women's Athletic Association, and the Rochester Association for the United Nations, in which she is still active as a speaker and editor.

Miss Wright is the daughter of Cynthia Gay Wright, '28, and John W. Wright of Pittsford.

REUNION WEEKEND

JUNE 8, 9, 10

Fun for everyone

LIGHT ON DARKEST AFRICA

Africa and the impact of western civilization was the subject of the most recent student conference in the annual series dealing with various areas of the world. In this photo, Dr. William Diez, Professor of Government, is talking with an undergraduate group at one of the coffee hour discussions on foreign policies of the three major powers in relation to Africa. Experts from other universities, the United Nations and colonial service took part in sessions.

Flanked by Judge Clarence Henry, at left, and Raymond Ball, UR Trustee, Coach Alexander is in festive humor at Alumni tribute on his quarter century of service to University. New permanent award named in his honor to be given to outstanding senior is on table. Ball holds tray given to the coach.

leges. We are proud of the record of our athletic teams but we are even more proud of the athletes themselves. They are not only good athletes but they are well-rounded and intelligent men. Lou Alexander has, I believe, personified this athletic tradition for twenty-five years.

"There have been times, I suppose, when some have been rather irked by the jealous way in which he has guarded our policy. This makes the honor you are bestowing on him tonight even more significant . . . He wants to win more than any man I know. But he insists that we win or lose under the standards and the code of ethics which we have established. In doing this he has built for himself and for the University an enviable reputation for integrity, sincerity, and good sportsmanship."

County Judge Clarence J. Henry, '25, president of the Alumni Association, presented the trophy on behalf of his well-wishers. It bore this inscription: "To Lou Alexander, Coach . . . Director . . . Sportsman . . . Friend—In recognition of your twenty-five years of loyal service to administration, faculty, student body and alumni of the University of Rochester."

Mort Nusbaum, '35, did a masterly job as M. C. at the dinner, especially in a "This Is Your Life" skit in which photos of Lou and three cousins from Sweden figured prominently. Nelson W. (Bud) Spies, '38, was chairman of the hard-working and imaginative committee.

Tribute to Lou Alexander

MANY OF HIS former players as well as members of the 1955-56 court team, alumni, faculty, fellow coaches from other colleges, officials, press and radio joined in a warm tribute to Louis A. Alexander on March 5 in celebration of his twenty-five years' service as basketball coach. In that quarter century, his basketball teams won 241 games and lost 128, including nine wins and seven losses this season. His baseball team chalked up a record of 103 games won and 71 lost.

At a dinner in Todd Union, he received several handsome tokens of the esteem in which he is held, but undoubtedly the most significant was the Alumni Association presentation to the College of a permanent "Louis A. Alexander Award" to be given annually "to a male member of the senior class who has made an outstanding contribution to the life of the College through his significant achievements in athletics and general student activities; and whose character and leadership qualities have been a wholesome influence on his fellow students."

In accepting the impressive trophy on behalf of the College, Dean J. Edward Hoffmeister said:

"The University of Rochester is fortunate in having established and maintained a sane and healthy athletic policy—one which is the envy of many col-

ALUMNI CAMPAIGN
REPORT

JOSEPH L. NOBLE, '34
Chairman, 1955 Alumni Campaign

THE UNIVERSITY OF ROCHESTER FUND

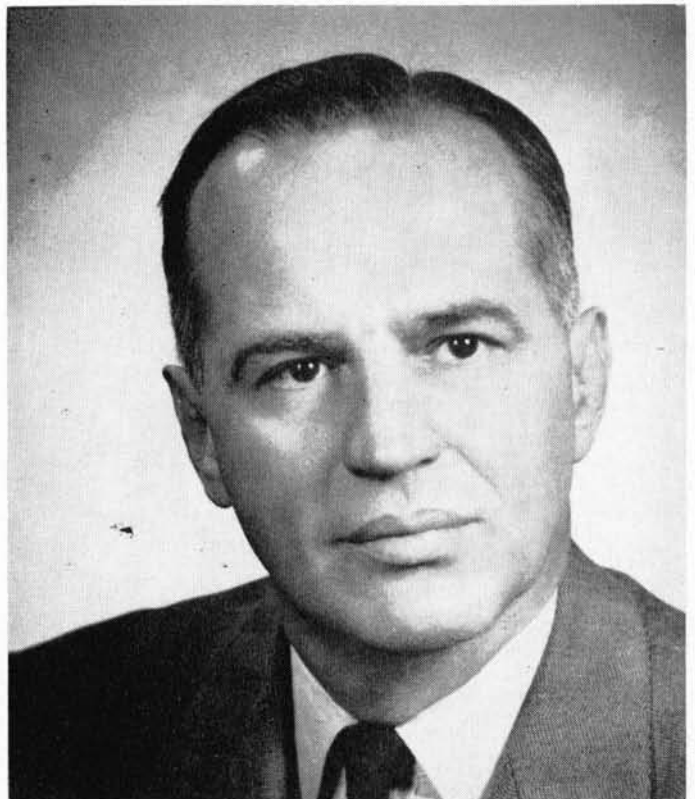

To the Alumni:

My heartiest congratulations to the alumni for making the 1955 Alumni Fund Campaign the most successful ever. It is most encouraging to see the increase, not only in the amount contributed, but in the number of alumni participating.

I am especially grateful to all who gave their time to the 1955 Fund program—to Campaign Chairman Joe Noble, to all division and decade chairmen, and to the hard-working class agents and their assistants.

As a University trustee, I am acutely aware of how much the University of Rochester, like other universities, needs the support and encouragement of its alumni.

POSTMASTER: Return postage guaranteed by University of Rochester Alumni Federation, Rochester 3, New York.

Church is important in life of most Rochester Scholars. It's regular part of Sunday schedule for Lucille Butter Carroll, '44, her physician husband and three children. (See Scholars story inside).
