On the Cover

Resplendent in his academic cap and gown of the Sorbonne in Paris, where he received a Doctor of Science degree in 1920, is Dr. W. Albert Noyes, Jr., Acting Dean of the College of Arts and Science. Dr. Noyes' robe is made of cerise silk, with black satin facing and cuffs. Over left shoulder is an ermine-trimmed scarf that symbolizes his degree. The costume was designed for the Sorbonne in the 17th century by Cardinal Richelieu. For story and photographs on academic regalia and centuries-old traditions, see pages 11-15.

Published five times per year in January, March, May, September and November at the Art Print Shop and mailed without charge to all alumni. ## Hopeman Chime Rings Out for Beloved Professor

This drawing of Dr. Slater by Elmer Messner was used in The Rochester Times-Union on March 16.

THE HOPEMAN CHIME in Rush Rhees Library tower rang out over the River Campus in a special program on March 14 in salute to Dr. John R. Slater, Professor Emeritus of English and great man of letters of the University, on his eighty-fifth birthday.

Naturally, the magnificent "Commencement Hymn," which he composed in 1907, one of the noblest of all college songs, was one of the numbers played, as well as some of his favorites among the 100 or more selections he arranged specially for the Hopeman Chime.

Dr. Slater, alert and keenly interested in everything in the University and the world about him, has lost none of his verve and his remarkable command of the written and spoken word, as readers of the Review, to which he is a frequent contributor, know. Shortly before his birthday he appeared on a Rochester television program, Court of Public Opinion (WROC-TV), along with James M.

DR. SLATER SALUTED ON 85th BIRTHDAY

Spinning, '13, retired superintendent of Rochester public schools, and Virginia Kirkus, noted critic, to give his opinions on new American books and authors with typically penetrating comments on the modern literary scene.

Although it is fifteen years since he retired, Dr. Slater has continued to be an important figure in the University. One of his finest contributions in the intervening years was the unforgettable "Centennial Ode," for which he provided the script and Dr. Howard Hanson the score, performed by the Eastman Symphony Orchestra and Chorus, with Leonard Treash as narrator, at the Eastman Theatre in celebration of the University's 100th anniversary in 1950. Another achievement since retirement was his splendid biography of the University's third President, Dr. Rush Rhees, entitled "Rhees of Rochester," published in 1946 by Harper's.

Richard L. Greene, '26, now chairman of the English Department at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., who studied under Dr. Slater and succeeded him as Chairman of the Rochester English Department, has provided us with a delightful sidelight:

"Professor Slater's class in English composition was unforgettable. One characteristic touch appeared each morning on the graying blackboard of the musty classroom in old Anderson Hall. It was a short quotation or aphorism headed 'A Wise Word for Today.' Some student should have had the sense to collect these brevities in a little pamphlet. Those who might have thought of Professor Slater as only a scholar were surprised and pleased to find that for the last class of the football season the 'wise word' appeared in capitals: 'BEAT HOBART!'

"His 'Freshman Rhetoric,' which has mitigated the barbarism of the writing of many generations of college students, is regarded by many as one of the really great American textbooks. Among the hundreds of freshman English textbooks poured from the presses, none has been more useful and sensible and humane than this one.

"Many a student, perhaps unable to find words for the experience, has yet realized that in Professor Slater he has made contact with a mind and spirit that in their turn have made contact with the universe and with universals to a degree denied to most men, including many who bear professionally the title of philosopher.

"A wise word for today from William Wordsworth:

'Great men have been among us;
hands that penned
And tongues that uttered wisdom . . .'
"John Rothwell Slater is one of these."

Thomas E. Dewey Chosen Commencement Speaker

THOMAS E. DEWEY, Governor of New York State for twelve years until he stepped down on January 1, 1955, and twice (1944 and 1948) the Republican nominee for President, will be the principal speaker at the University's 107th annual Commencement on June 9. He also will be awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

After his retirement from political life, Mr. Dewey turned over to the University of Rochester one million of his personal and official papers covering his administration of New York State, campaign files, speech and research data and convention files covering his two bids for the presidency, and scrap books and press clippings relating to his service as special prosecutor in Manhattan and district attorney during his racket-busting activities from 1933-37. (For report on the Dewey Papers by Dr. Glyndon G. Van Deusen, see pages 16-17.)

For the past two years, Mr. Dewey has been engaged in private law practice as the new senior partner of the firm of Dewey, Valentine, Bushby, Palmer and Wood, one of the largest in New York City. A graduate of the University of Michigan in 1923, he received his law degree at Columbia Law School in 1925. The following year he was named chief assistant to George Z. Medalie, then U. S. Attorney General, in the prosecution of such notorious gangsters as Jack "Legs" Diamond and Waxey Gordon, and at the age of twenty-nine was appointed U. S. Attorney General. He returned to private practice for a time until Governor Lehman named him special prosecutor in the effort to break up the alliance between politics and crime racketeers in 1935 involving, among others, Charles "Lucky" Luciano, who was convicted along with most of his vice associates.

In 1937, Mr. Dewey was elected district attorney on the Republican-Fusion ticket, and in that position broke every record for convictions of criminals and racketeers. He first ran for Governor in 1938 but lost to Governor Lehman, and was successful when he campaigned in the gubernatorial election of 1942.

Young Medical Instructor Awarded $30,000 Grant

FOR THE fourth time in ten years, a young member of the School of Medicine and Dentistry faculty has been given a John and Mary R. Markle Foundation grant of $30,000 as a potential leader in medical education and designated as a Markle Scholar in Medical Science.

The 1957 award was made to Dr. Arthur H. Schmale, Jr., instructor in psychiatry and medicine in the Medical School and assistant psychiatrist and physician in Strong Memorial Hospital. It is payable at the rate of $6,000 a year for five years. Competition for the grants is keen, and Dr. Schmale is one of twenty-five Markle Scholars chosen from fifty-seven candidates nominated by medical school deans in the United States and Canada. Each presented a five-year program for advancing the Scholar "up the academic ladder," and five lay committees helped to select the candidate through extended interviews over a period of three days.

Dr. Richard C. Fowler, '44M, now a resident in medicine at George Washington University, was the first member of the Rochester medical faculty to be named a Markle Scholar when the program was initiated in 1948. Dr. Howard A. Joos, then assistant professor of pediatrics at Rochester and now associate professor of pediatrics at the University of Southern California, was chosen in 1951, and Dr. S. Marsh Tenney, assistant professor of physiology and medicine, in 1954. Dr. Tenney is now professor of physiology, chairman of the department of physiological science and associate dean in charge of research and planning at Dartmouth Medical School.

The purpose of the Markle program is to aid young medical school faculty members seeking careers in teaching and research, "to relieve the shortage of teachers in medical schools and to strengthen their faculties by encouraging young scientists to remain in academic medicine." In the past ten years, the foundation has awarded grants totaling $6,070,000 to 206 doctors in seventy-four medical schools in the U. S. and Canada.

Rhodes Scholar Appointed Professor of Economics

AS A RESULT of the University's long and painstaking search to find a man of outstanding qualifications, Dr. Lionel McKenzie, a member of the Duke University faculty since 1948, will come to the University on September 1 as Professor of Economics. Thirty-eight years old and a leading research scholar and teacher, Dr. McKenzie is a former Rhodes Scholar and has the reputation of being one of the half dozen most able young economists in the country. His appointment is in line with the University's effort to build up its graduate program in economics.

Dr. McKenzie will be Chairman of the new Department of Economics created by action of the faculty of the College of Arts and Science and approved by the Board of Trustees early this year. This move divided the former Department of Economics and Business Administration into separate departments.

Eric C. Vance, '25, has been promoted to full Professor of Business Administration effective September 1 and is acting chairman of the new Department of Business Administration. Dr. Donald W. Gilbert, '21, Professor of Economics, who has been acting chairman of the combined departments since last September, is acting chairman of economics for the remainder of the current academic year. Dr. William E. Dunkman, former chairman of the combined departments, who is in Japan this year as visiting professor of economics at Tohoku University under a Fulbright professorship, had asked to be relieved of his administrative duties and will devote his full time to research and teaching on his return to the River Campus in September.

An honor graduate of Duke University in 1939, Dr. McKenzie received his master's and Ph.D. degrees at Princeton University, and served in the U. S. Naval Reserve from 1943-1945 following a year as junior economist with the War Production Board. He taught for a year at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and from 1946-1948 studied as a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University, England, where he received a Bachelor of Letters degree.

He returned to Duke University in 1948 as an assistant professor, and later was promoted to associate professor, and he was on a year's leave from Duke in 1950 and again for seven months last year to work with the Cowles Foundation for Research in Economics. He also was a student at the University of Chicago in 1950. Dr. McKenzie is the author of many articles on international trade, welfare economics and mathematical economics in The Economic Journal, Econometrics, and The Review of Economic Studies, and also contributed to the Second Symposium on Linear Programming, Bureau of Standards, in 1955. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the Econometric Society, the American Economic Association, and the Royal Economic Society of Great Britain.

Dr. McKenzie is a native of Montezuma, Ga., and is married to the former Blanche Veron of Brooklyn, N. Y. They have three children, Fred, ten, Gwendolyn, six, and David, three.

Medical School Recipient of $3,100,000 Ford Grants

THANKS TO THE generosity and wisdom of the Ford Foundation, the School of Medicine and Dentistry will now be in a much better position to achieve its goals of a strong faculty, a modern curriculum, and a teaching program that will produce students with vigorous habits of independent study."

This was the statement of Dr. Donald G. Anderson, Dean of the Medical School, when the Ford Foundation announced on March 28 that it had made grants totaling $3,100,000 to the School, including $500,000 announced last September.

The grants are to be held as invested endowment for at least ten years, during which income from the endowment may be used for instructional purposes. Construction and research needs are excluded from the purposes of the grant. After ten years, the School is free to use the principal sum as well as endowment income.

Henry T. Heald, Ford Foundation president, expressed the hope that the grants will help focus public attention on the increasing financial needs of medical education. The exceptional advances in medical research and discoveries, rising public interest in health matters, and our rapidly expanding population all serve, he said, to underscore the necessity of continued financial assistance if our present high standards of medical training are to be maintained.

The gift, Dean Anderson said, "comes at a critical time in the development of the University of Rochester Medical School. Like all educational institutions, Rochester is faced with a serious problem of offering salaries that will make it possible for able men and women to pursue careers in teaching and research without calling on their families to make unreasonable and unhealthy sacrifices. The income from this new endowment will enable the School to make definite progress toward achieving certain salary goals that were worked out by the University to ensure a strong faculty following the announcement a year ago that the Ford Foundation was planning to make this generous distribution to medical schools.

"The gift also will help us to achieve some of the expansion and strengthening urgently needed in a number of the School's teaching areas if its educational program is to keep abreast of the continuing advances in medical science."

New Honor for Dean Noyes: Willard Gibbs Medal

RECIPIENT OF many honors at home and abroad for his contributions to science, national defense and international relations, Dr. W. Albert Noyes, Jr., Professor of Chemistry and Acting Dean of the College of Arts and Science, has added new luster to his distinguished record.

On February 1 he was chosen by his fellow scientists for one of the highest honors in American chemistry, the coveted Willard Gibbs Medal conferred annually by the Chicago Section of the American Chemical Society on a man selected by a national jury "who, because of his eminent work in, and original contributions to, pure and applied science is deemed worthy of special recognition."

"As scientific adviser and statesman, he has held many important posts as adviser to various government agencies and the military department," the citation stated.

As the forty-sixth winner of the Gibbs Medal, Dr. Noyes emulates his father, the late Prof. W. A. Noyes, Sr., who received the prize in 1919, and joins a notable list of scientists which includes nine Nobel Prize winners.

An authority on photochemistry, which deals with chemical reactions promoted by light, Dr. Noyes has made science both his profession and his avocation. In the past fifteen years he has visited Europe more than twenty-five times, in addition to four trips to Panama and one to Australia and New Guinea, in most cases on matters having to do with the international aspects of science.

In recognition of his services during World War II, he has been made an Officer of the French Legion of Honor, and received the U. S. Medal for Merit and the King's Medal of Great Britain for Service in the Cause of Freedom. He was a member of the National Defense Research Committee, chief of the Technical Division, Chemical Warfare Service, a member of the Naval Research Advisory Committee and a consultant to the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission. He has been treasurer of the International Council of Scientific Unions since 1951.

In 1941 he participated in the drafting of plans for a scientific program for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as an adviser to the U. S. State Department. That fall he was adviser to the U. S. delegation at the first UNESCO general conference in Paris, and he attended the UNESCO meeting in Beirut in 1948. He has been a member of the U. S. National Commission for six years.

Both Dr. Noyes and his late father also won the Priestley Medal, top award in American chemistry, and served as presidents of the American Chemical Society and as editors of the Journal of the A.C.S. In the latter part of February Dr. Noyes was in the British Isles where he was invited to lecture on photochemistry at the Universities of Leeds and Sheffield in England and St. Andrew's University in Scotland. Following that he attended an executive meeting of the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry in Zurich, Switzerland.

Dr. Hanson in Spotlight on Many Concert Stages

AS COMPOSER and guest conductor, Dr. Howard Hanson, Director of the Eastman School of Music, was in the spotlight on concert stages in many parts of the country during February and March.

On February 10 and 11 he conducted the University of Miami Symphony Orchestra in two concerts presenting identical programs which included his own Third Symphony and "Elegie in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," the latter commissioned by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Foundation to mark the orchestra's seventy-fifth anniversary last year. Premiered by the Boston Symphony in January, 1956, it drew enthusiastic reviews from music critics.

In Carnegie Hall, New York City, on March 1, Dr. Hanson conducted a performance of his "Lament for Beowulf" by the New York Oratorio Society. The next day he and Mrs. Hanson were honor guests of the New York Alumni chapter of the Eastman School at a reception at the Kosciusko Foundation.

At the Carnegie Hall concert, the National Federation of Music Clubs awarded Dr. Hanson the following citation:

"The citation of merit of the National Federation of Music Clubs is presented to Dr. Howard Hanson in recognition of his great contributions in the field of American music, not only through his own distinguished compositions which have been heard in many countries, but also because of the great number of young American composers whose careers he has launched through the Eastman School of Music, who have lent virility and stimulus to American musical life from coast to coast."

In Atlanta, Ga., on March 25, he addressed the National Association of the Women's Committees for Symphony Orchestras, and the following day he conducted the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra in a performance of his "Cherubic Hymn."

The National Education Association paid high tribute to Dr. Hanson on April 10 and 11 when his new work, "Song for Democracy," based on the Walt Whitman text and commissioned by the NEA to celebrate its centennial this year, was performed twice in Washington, D. C., by the National Symphony Orchestra and the Howard University Chorus. The composition includes a song suitable for groups throughout the nation to sing, and copies will be made available for local performances, particularly in schools, during 1957.

Another busy Eastman School conductor is Frederick Fennell, '37E, of the School's conducting faculty, who was guest conductor for two of the Southwest's most important high school music festival events. On successive weekends in February he was guest conductor for the Texas and Oklahoma All-State High School Bands composed of about 150 carefully auditioned high school wind and percussion players in those states. At both events, sponsored respectively by the Texas and Oklahoma Music Educators Associations, Fennell conducted the festival bands in the final concert of a week of musical activities that highlighted the annual statewide meetings of the two associations.

Fennell is the new president of the College Band Directors National Association, which he addressed at its biennial meeting in Chicago in December on "The American Musical Heritage." He is a former vice president of the association and has been a member since it was founded in 1942.

Substantial Grants Aid Dental and Eye Research

IMPETUS HAS been given to expanded programs of dental and eye research in the School of Medicine and Dentistry under two grants totaling more than $200,000.

The largest, $175,000, payable $35,000 a year for five years, was given to the Department of Dentistry and Dental Research by the national Department of Health, Education and Welfare under a new U. S. Public Health Service plan to help meet the national need for dental teachers and investigators, it was announced by Dr. Erling Johansen, Chairman of the Department of Dentistry.

The second was a $27,000 grant from the Rochester Eye-Bank and Research Society to make possible the addition of an investigator and a technician to the eye research staff under the direction of Dr. John F. Gipner, Associate Professor of Ophthalmology. The Rochester group raised the money in a "Lights on for the Blind" fund drive last fall in a house-to-house canvass in Rochester and towns of Monroe County. A major objective of the solicitation was to provide funds to initiate a full-time eye research program at the Medical School. The balance of the amount obtained in the drive, about $23,000, will be used by the society for its corneal transplantation project to restore sight to blind persons.

Another substantial grant of $33,135 came in February from the National Fund for Medical Education. The grant is unrestricted but is designed primarily to enable the School "to retain valuable personnel, fill faculty vacancies and to open new courses in the areas of recent scientific advances." The grant was one of seventy-six given to four-year schools totaling $3,066,450 contributed to the Fund by business corporations and individuals with a matching grant by the Ford Foundation.

The Department of Dentistry also received a $4,500 fellowship for dental research from the Colgate-Palmolive Company, whose dental director is Dr. John W. Hein, former senior dental research fellow and Chairman of the department from 1952-55. Dr. Hein said that the grant is expected to be a continuing one. In the last three years the company has contributed $30,000 to support basic research in the Department of Dentistry on the causes of tooth decay.

The $175,000 U. S. Public Health grant will permit the addition of at least three more research fellows and the purchase of new teaching and research equipment, and also provide funds for research costs. The School of Medicine and Dentistry's unique dental training program, which concentrates on training teachers and researchers, has produced more dental school deans, department heads, research directors and teachers than any comparable program anywhere. It does not train candidates for the D.D.S. degree but offers postgraduate training in the basic sciences for promising young men who already have taken that degree at other institutions and who are given research fellowships at the University of Rochester. Of the sixty graduates of the program, 85 per cent have remained in dental teaching and research.

Wichita Lures Dr. Habein; Dean Wantman Resigns

TO THE GREAT regret of Rochester students, faculty and administration, Dr. Margaret Habein, Dean of Instruction and Student Services in the College of Arts and Science, has been lured away from the University by the irresistible attraction of her appointment as Dean of Fairmount College of Arts and Science of the University of Wichita, Kansas, effective September 1.

As far as can be learned, she will be the first woman to become academic Dean of a coeducational college, a position which, as President de Kiewiet said, "will give her responsibilities which are very attractive to her and offer her wider scope for her talents. It is an unusual honor to her."

"We are extremely sorry to see her go," he added, "but recognize that our good people will inevitably receive attractive offers from other institutions that we cannot always match."

The Trustees adopted a resolution expressing "regret that educational advancement and new and greater challenges will take Margaret Habein from Rochester to another institution," and recording its "gratitude and appreciation for her great contribution to this University."

Another member of the Office of Instruction and Student Services who will be leaving August 31 is Morey J. Wantman, Associate Dean. Mr. Wantman, who at this writing had not yet announced his future plans, submitted his resignation a year ago to take effect this summer. He has been associated with the University for sixteen years, beginning in 1941 as assistant director of research, Committee for the Selection and Training of Aircraft Pilots, National Research Council. The following year he was made director, and also supervised the National Testing Service of the Civil Aeronautics Association with its headquarters at Rochester during World War II, and was appointed Assistant Professor of Education. From 1943-46 he was chief of the Division of Statistics of the Manhattan Project at the Medical School, wartime center of medical research on the atomic bomb project, and later was assistant Project director.

In 1946 he was promoted to Associate Professor of Education and named director of the University's Bureau of Educational Statistics, serving in that capacity until the student welfare office was created in 1954 in the College of Arts and Science.

The successful accomplishment of the merger of the Men's and Women's Colleges in 1955 with the transfer of the women students to the River Campus and the inauguration of the coeducational College with a minimum of disruption and a maximum of acceptance and enthusiasm on the part of students and all others involved in that very complex move was in no small part due to Dean Habein's planning with her staff, students, faculty and administration to provide the new buildings, curriculum, services and atmosphere to make the coeducational College outstandingly successful.

She and Associate Dean Wantman also have been the guiding hands in the reorganization of the undergraduate educational program at Rochester during the past two years and the establishing of their unusual office as the center of student welfare efforts, integrating the academic aspects of student life with the social, religious, counseling, health and other services.

It has been a stimulating and challenging experience, says Dean Habein, and she leaves Rochester with deep regret. Kansas is familiar territory to her, however, for she earned her master's and doctorate degrees from the University of Kansas, and was dean of women there for six years before joining the University of Rochester in a similar capacity in 1952.

*Reservations Required

Rooms will be available in the River Campus Residence Halls for all three days for alumni, alumnae, and their families, at nominal cost.

At Wichita, a municipal university, she will succeed Dr. Emory K. Lindquist as Dean of the College of Arts and Science, the largest of the university's five colleges with an undergraduate enrollment of about 1,400. The university is in a period of rapid growth and is receiving strong financial support for its ten-year program of expansion.

Cosmic Ray Physicist Space Operetta Composer

AS A NOTED cosmic ray physicist with impressive talents as a musician and composer, it is appropriate that Dr. Arthur Roberts, Professor of Physics, has written a "space operetta" that is probably the first attempt to adapt science fiction to the musical theatre—what might be called "music of the spheres."

The distinction of being the first to perform music from his new work, "A Lunar Requiem," was given to the All-University Symphony Orchestra at its concert on March 15 in Strong Auditorium, when it played a symphonic concert arrangement of excerpts from the score. The arrangement was composed by Dr. Roberts at the request of Dr. Ward Woodbury, '45 and '54GE, Director of Music in the College of Arts and Science, who conducted the premiere of the scientist's composition.

The style of "A Lunar Requiem," not yet performed in its entirety, lies between opera and musical comedy, and is based on a short story, "Requiem," by Robert Heinlein. The story concerns the last few weeks in the life of a business tycoon in the year 1900 whose whole career has been devoted to achieving space travel. Although he directs arrangements for the first trip to the moon, founding the first city there and companies to develop its resources, legal and medical regulations and other complications frustrate his own plans to make the space journey. How he finally achieves his desire is the theme of the musical work.

For his symphonic arrangement, Dr. Roberts put together for concert performance selections from the opening scene, a county fair; a rocket take-off (which, the program notes explained, gets rather loud), a "plaintive waltz tune" sung by a rocket mechanic homesick for Lunar City, and a patter trio. The last section is a funeral march and requiem.

Five years ago, the music world was excited by Dr. Roberts' "Overture to the Dedication of a Nuclear Reactor," first performed by the Oak Ridge Symphony in 1952, and later by the Rochester Philharmonic. He also did the score for the musical farce, "Turn About Is Fair Pay" or "The Benefit with the Fringe on Top," presented by the Rochester faculty with great success in several repeat performances by popular request.

In addition to his Ph.D. degree in physics from New York University, Dr. Roberts has a diploma in piano from the Manhattan School of Music and has studied composition with Quincy Porter and Hugh Ross. While engaged in scientific work at Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Radiation Laboratory during the war, he also taught a course in the physics of music at the New England Conservatory of Music.

Dr. Colin M. Turbayne Joins Philosophy Faculty

AN AUTHORITY on the eighteenth century English school of philosophy, Australia-born Dr. Colin M. Turbayne, now on the faculty of the University of California at Berkeley, will come to the River Campus in September as Associate Professor of Philosophy.

Other changes in the Department of Philosophy include the promotion of Dr. Murray J. Stolnitz to Associate Professor and the appointment of John P. Stewart, a graduate of Penn State University in 1952, who is completing his thesis for his Ph.D. degree at the University of Pennsylvania, as instructor. Both are effective September 1. Dr. Stolnitz, a graduate of the City College of New York in 1944 with a Ph.D. degree from Harvard in 1948, came to the University of Rochester as Assistant Professor in 1952 after teaching at Colgate University for four years, and has published many papers in technical philosophical journals.

Dr. Turbayne was graduated from the University of Queensland, Australia, in 1940, and after receiving his master's degree there in 1947, came to this country and obtained his Ph.D. degree at the University of Pennsylvania in 1950. Before going to the University of California in 1955 as an assistant professor, he taught for five years at the University of Washington in Seattle. He has published many papers and two editions, one during the past year, on the works of Bishop George Berkeley, English philosopher and founder of modern idealism.

In other faculty changes in the College of Arts and Science, Drs. Dorothy Bernstein and Walter Rudin have been promoted to Professor of Mathematics, Dr. Virgil C. Boekelheide to Professor of Chemistry, and Dr. Frank P. Buff to Associate Professor of Chemistry, all effective September 1.

In the administrative ranks, Frank J. Dowd, '48, director of men's residence halls at the River Campus for the past four years, and formerly a counselor on admission, has been appointed to the newly-created position of executive assistant to the Dean of the College of Arts and Science beginning in September. He will deal with problems relating to office and classroom space, non-academic personnel and business matters in the College including budgets other than faculty salaries. As director of men's residence halls he has organized a strong student government and social program within the dormitories.

Joseph A. Dutton, Jr., '51, formerly assistant business manager of the University, is the new manager of the University Book Stores, succeeding Rosemary Cherry Carlson, '38, who resigned March 1 after fourteen years of service. Myron J. Biggar, formerly assistant manager of a Rochester finance company, replaces Dutton as assistant to Kurt M. Hertzfeld, business manager of the University. Biggar is a graduate of Rochester Business Institute and is taking further studies in University School.

Dr. John A. Perkins, Assistant Professor of Government at Rochester from 1943-1945, and more recently president of the University of Delaware, has been appointed U. S. Undersecretary of Health, Education and Welfare, serving under Marion B. Folsom of Rochester, Secretary of that department who has for many years been a Trustee of the University.

Campus Events Attract Notables of Many Nations

VISITS TO THE campus of hundreds of leaders and students in many fields from some thirty nations since last August is convincing proof that the University is a world community of scholars and a center for the cross-fertilization of ideas.

From the third annual Canada-U. S. Conference at the River Campus last August, to the seventh annual international Rochester Conference on High Energy Physics April 15-19, the University has been a meeting place for noted poets, educators, sociologists, physiologists, medical scientists, biologists, historians, artists, musicians, writers, theologians, mathematicians and scholars of every description, not to mention athletic coaches, high school and college scholastic editors, and intercollegiate debaters.

The April Conference brought about 300 of the top nuclear physicists from twenty-five foreign countries and the United States, among them two Nobel Prize winners and the brilliant young Chinese-born physicists, Dr. C. N. Yang of the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, N. J., and Dr. Tsung Dao Lee of Columbia University, whose challenge of a basic law of physical theory led recently to revolutionary discoveries about the properties of elementary particles of matter.

This year's sessions drew the largest international assemblage of nuclear physicists ever held anywhere. Invitations were sent with the full approval of the U. S. State Department and sponsoring groups to eighty-five of the leading men in the most important laboratories throughout the world, including the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia, the last three named receiving invitations for the first time.

The 1957 conference was sponsored by the National Science Foundation, the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission, the Office of Naval Research, the Air Research Development Command, International Union of Pure and Applied Physics, and the University of Rochester, as well as industrial firms providing financial support—General Motors, General Dynamics, the Rand Corporation, Hughes Aircraft, Ramo-Wooldrige Corporation, the Rochester Gas & Electric Corporation and several other Rochester concerns.

Following the Rochester sessions, a two-week tour of the leading high energy research installations in the United States was arranged for the foreign delegates on invitations of Cornell, Harvard, Brookhaven National Laboratory, M.I.T., Columbia, Princeton, the University of California, Stanford, California Institute of Technology, and the Universities of Chicago, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

The purpose of the Rochester conference is to promote the interests of fundamental research in high energy nuclear physics by open, informal discussion and exchange of information among members of the world community of science, as it was pointed out by Dr. Robert E. Marshak, Chairman of the UR Physics Department and of the conference. All of the discussions deal with non-secret research.

Individual visiting lecturers and speakers at the University during the current academic year, to name only a few, have included Stephen Spender, noted British poet, critic and editor, Dr. Shigeto Tsuru, Japanese economist, John Dos Passos, author, E. E. Cummings, poet, Prof. Jan Tinbergen, economist to the Netherlands Government and visiting professor of economics at Harvard, Dr. Donald Menzel, Paine Professor of Astronomy at Harvard and director of the Harvard College Observatory, and three eminent medical authorities who came as visiting lecturers under the new lectureships endowed by Dr. George H. Whipple, Emeritus Dean of the School of Medicine and Dentistry—the Samuel W. Clausen, John R. Murlin and Walter R. Bloor Lectures. Under this program, Dr. Arild E. Hansen, professor of pediatrics at the University of Texas School of Medicine, Dr. C. N. H. Long, Sterling Professor of Physiology at Yale University Medical School, and Dr. Wendell M. Stanley, professor of biochemistry and director of the Virus Laboratory at the University of California, came to the Medical School to give papers. Dr. Lester R. Dragstedt, Thomas D. Jones Distinguished Service Professor of Surgery at the University of Chicago, spent a week at the Medical School in conferences and clinical sessions with students and staff.

In November five representatives of the city of Rennes, France, visited the University as participants in the International Educational Exchange Service of the U. S. State Department, to promote good will between the two countries and the Universities of Rochester and Rennes. At a special convocation, President de Kiewiet conferred an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on Dr. Paul Henry, Rector of the University of Rennes.

In February, Suskil K. Dutt and Ramesh Mohan of Lucknow University arrived for a two-month stay at the University under the International Educational Exchange program, combining special studies at the University and travel to various parts of the country to observe American education, life and institutions in general. Dr. Willson H. Coates, UR Professor of History, will spend four months at Lucknow University this fall under the reciprocal arrangement as a consultant in establishing a program of general education.

Four officials of the Turkish Ministry of Education were other guests of the University, coming in October to spend a day at the campuses.

Conferences that brought hundreds of people from institutions all over the United States and Canada in the past eight months were the U. S.-Canada Conference in August, the American Physiological Society (about 700) in September, the second annual six-week Institute on Group Relations at which lectures were given for members of the University and the public on methods for reducing inter-group tensions by nationally-prominent authorities on the problems of minority groups.

The annual New York State Coaching School brought some 200 coaches of secondary schools and colleges in August for four days of clinics on football, soccer, basketball and other sports. In October and November, the University was host to 400 high school students at two University Days to give them a preview of college life, and student Catholic leaders of fifty-five Newman Clubs at colleges in New York State took part in the first annual leadership conference of the Empire State Province of the national Newman Club Federation.

The New York State Federation of Foreign Language Teachers held its annual meeting at the River Campus in October, and in the same month about 300 high school and college student editors and faculty advisers held a day-long conference there.

Annual meetings of the Mathematical Association of America, the American Mathematical Society and the Association for Symbolic Logic drew over 700 mathematicians to the River Campus during the Christmas recess.

About 150 debaters from thirty colleges and universities in the United States and Canada held a two-day tournament November 30 and December 1 discussing the proposition that the U. S. should discontinue all direct economic aid to foreign countries. Selected high school students of foreign languages were guests at the third annual "Language Day" at the River Campus.

Another event of wide interest was a public lecture series growing out of the University's undergraduate program on non-Western civilization. The general subject of the talks given on six consecutive Monday evenings in Strong Auditorium February 25—April 1 was "The New Era in the Non-Western World." Speakers were members of the faculty and administration who have taken a prominent part in the establishing of the program, President de Kiewiet, who originally conceived the project, Dr. Vera M. Dean, its director, and Profs. Harry J. Benda, Warren S. Hunsberger, John B. Christopher, and Joseph B. Gittler, and Dr. W. Albert Noyes, Professor of Chemistry and Acting Dean of the College of Arts and Science.

Fiber Optics Research Opens New Vistas for Scientists

A PIONEER in a new branch of optics, which he calls "fiber optics," Dr. Narinder Singh Kapany, a research associate in the University's unique Institute of Optics, has captured national headlines by his work in that field.

Dr. Kapany, a graduate of Agra University in India, with a Ph.D. degree from the Imperial College of Science in London, is working on instruments using bundles of hair-thin optical glass strands that can be tied in knots and still transmit images. He began his fiber optics research in London and has been continuing it at the River Campus for the past two years.

His devices may hold many advantages in the design of instruments for medicine, astronomy, photography and even cryptography. One of the most promising is a new type of gastroscope that will enable doctors to see and take color pictures of the whole interior of a patient's stomach, something that is not possible with the standard gastroscopes now used which are too rigid to permit a view of the entire stomach and lack image clarity sharp enough for good color photography.

Other possibilities of fiber optics are a method of coding and decoding secret messages which makes them virtually impossible to decipher without the decoding "key"; a device that could produce great improvement in the efficiency of astronomical spectrography by funnelling all of the round spot of light a telescope receives from a star into the narrow rectangle-shaped spectroscopy slit, and more efficient periscopes and more effective high speed photography.

The basis for these applications is the use of threads of high quality optical glass with diameters as small as one-thousandth of an inch. A bundle with a half-inch square cross-section may sometimes contain as many as 250,000 individual strands. The bundle can be made flexible enough to tie in a simple knot and still transmit images. To overcome the big technological problem of keeping in order the individual strands in the bundles, which can be as long as forty inches, Dr. Kapany has developed a special aligning machine which is now in experimental use at the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company. The optical firm and Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore are cooperating in Dr. Kapany's work on the flexible gastroscope.

Dr. Wiltsey to Teach at English University

DR. GLENN G. WILTSEY, Professor of Government and Chairman of the department, will conduct courses for English students on American political institutions and constitutional developments as visiting professor at the University of Hull, England, during the 1957-1958 academic year.

He will join the Hull faculty from October through the spring of 1958 under the exchange professorships between that institution and the University of Rochester begun in 1953 with financial support from the R. T. French Company of Rochester and its associate in England, Reckitt and Colman, Ltd.

This year Prof. Richard M. Hoggart of Hull is Visiting Professor of English in the UR College of Arts and Science, specializing in the field of modern English literature.

Last December the two firms sponsoring the unusual educational exchange project announced that they had made arrangements with the universities to continue the plan for another five years. Previously it had been on a year-to-year commitment, and the companies decided that it should be placed on a more permanent basis.

During the 1955-1956 year, Dr. Wilbur D. Dunkel, Professor of English at the University of Rochester, was visiting professor at Hull. In the two preceding years, Prof. A. Geoffrey Dickens, Dean of Hull University's Faculty of Fine Arts and professor of history, and Dr. Herbert King, Dean of Hull's Faculty of Science and professor of geography, taught at Rochester.

While in Europe, Dr. and Mrs. Wiltsey will visit their son, Lieut. Robert Wiltsey, '55, who is stationed with the Air Force as photo intelligence officer in Weisbaden, Germany.

The Pageantry of Commencement

JUST AS YOU can't tell the players without a program, you can't fully appreciate the rich pageantry of university commencements, rooted in eight centuries of tradition, without knowing something of the symbolism and history of the ancient ceremonies.

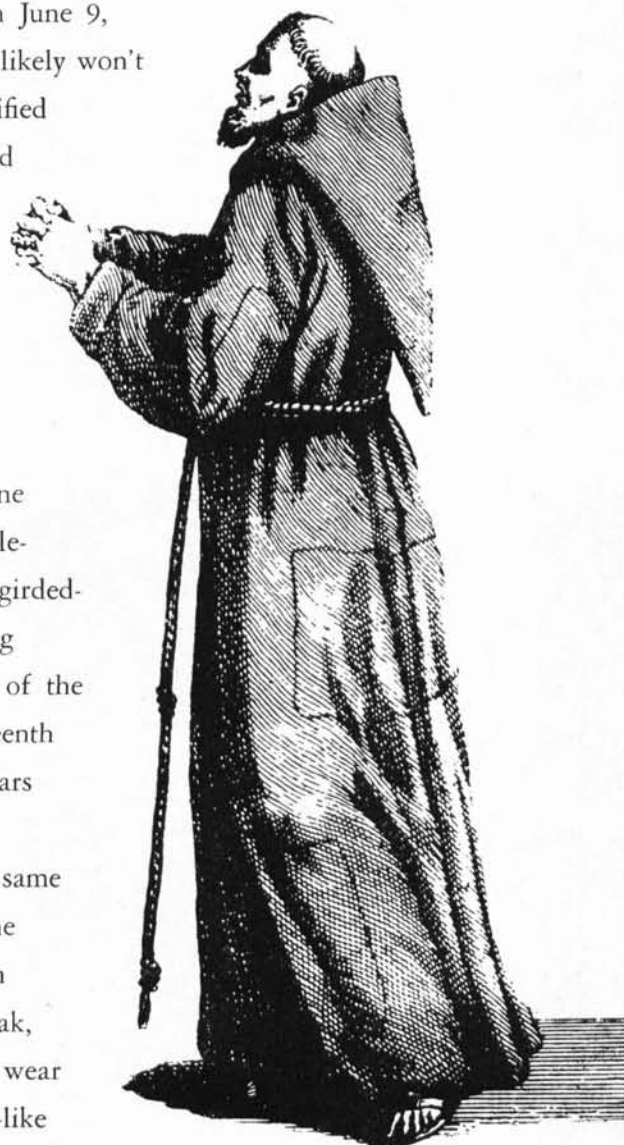

When the 1957 graduates don their gowns, caps and hoods at the University's 107th Commencement on June 9, perspiring in the usual hot June sunshine, it likely won't occur to most of them that the garb is a modified version of that worn by medieval scholars and monks for warmth in damp, drafty universities, monasteries and castles.

We've been delving into the lore of academic costumes and commencement rites and found it a fascinating field of exploration. We learned, for example, that in the twelfth century everyone wore gowns for every day dress, varying in elegance from the rough homespun and short, girded-up attire of the workman to the long, flowing brocades trimmed with velvet and rich fur of the rich and noble. It was the style until the sixteenth century. During the early years of the medieval universities, then, the scholar wore the same type of clothing as everyone else. Another generally worn article of dress was the cloak, worn over the gown as we wear a coat. It usually had a cowl-like

The mace, centuries-old symbol of academic authority, originally was a weapon of defense. The Rochester mace was first used in 1935 at the inauguration of Alan Valentine as the University's fourth President. It is a four-foot rod of teakwood, ringed with ornate bands of silver carved in the dandelion motif, the University flower.

The head of the mace contains the Seal of the University. The names of all the University's Presidents and of Chancellor Ira Harris, who served from 1850-53, are engraved on a silver plate near the head.

The cap and gown—universal badge of the scholar—derive from the cassock and hood required by monks and students of the middle ages who wore them for warmth in damp and drafty monasteries and halls. Today's academic hood traces back to the cowl that monks and others once pulled up over their heads to protect their tonsured pates, as illustrated in the garments of the friar in this ancient print.

appendage attached to the back, called a hood, to be pulled up for covering and protecting the head.

Gradually, however, the gown became limited to professional men, and in the sixteenth century the hood ceased to be worn at all except by legal, official, and academic personages. After that hats began to predominate in male attire and caps of particular forms were worn by professional and ecclesiastical persons to indicate their profession and rank. After the English universities had been in existence for a time, details of the scholar's apparel were prescribed by university statutes. While the use of academic gowns and hoods has been continuous in England and Scotland since the founding of the universities (they are worn daily at Oxford and Cambridge), it has become universal in the United States only since about 1895 when an Intercollegiate Commission was called to draft standard academic costume regulations. The Intercollegiate Bureau of Academic Costume is now the regulatory body.

At the University of Rochester only the President wore cap and gown until 1910. That year, members of the faculty broke out in academic regalia for the first time at the baccalaureate sermon preached by President Rhees, and subsequently all members of the graduating classes were privileged to wear caps and gowns. The heavy black silk robe and mortarboard fashioned of silk over wood, worn by Rochester's first President, Martin B. Anderson, is still preserved and is in excellent condition. It was found with an identifying note under the rafters in old Anderson Hall more than thirty years ago.

Although many European universities still use brilliant colors, gold brocade, and fur trimming on their academic costumes, and soft-crowned berets instead of the square mortarboards, the predominant color of robes in this country is black. It is the hood, once a comfort for tonsured heads, that lends color and significant meaning to academic regalia. The larger part of the medieval hood, once a kind of cape worn over the shoulders and reaching nearly to the elbows, has disappeared in the master's and doctor's costume, and of course it can no longer be pulled up over the head.

The oldest degree, the master's, dates to the time of the first medieval universities in which master, doctor and professor meant about the same thing. A university originally was a guild of masters of arts; the degree was the step by which the distinction of becoming a full member of the guild was obtained and was originally a license to teach.

There is incomplete agreement on the derivation of the term "bachelor." Dr. Richard L. Greene, '26, now head of the English Department at Wesleyan University, who has furnished a good deal of this information, finds that the most interesting explanation takes the word back to the Low Latin bacca, cow, making the original meaning of bachelor "cowboy" or herdsman in the employ of a farmer, later transferred to other callings to indicate one who is still in apprenticeship. He offers some other interesting and also humorous comments:

On baccalaureate sermons—"Not much available on their history. Some colleges have 'em, some don't. Some seniors listen to them. Rain almost invariable."

On the multiplicity of recognized degrees in the U. S. resulting from the growth of specialized and vocational training—"A large university now may award as many as forty different combinations of letters and words at one commencement. Some of them sound odd to those who aren't taking them (like Ph.D. in Mass Communication) but they all carry the privilege of having your snapshot taken by other members of the family in cap and gown right after the ceremony. Don't worry about your expres-

THE University Orator, Dr. Bernard N. Schilling, right, and the University Marshal, Dr. Arthur J. May, holding the mace, are dressed in the ceremonial robes specially designed and made for the University by the venerable London firm of Ede & Ravenscroft, Ltd., makers of coronation robes and scholars' gowns since 1689.

Trimmed with gold brocade and tassels, they were made to specifications prepared by President de Kiewiet, and were worn for the first time at the 1954 Commencement. Special robes also were made for the President and the Chairman of the University's Board of Trustees, with gold brocade facings on the gowns, and gold stripes on the sleeves. In general style, the robes resemble the master's gown, with long, closed sleeves having slits for the arms to go through. The President's gown is dark red, and the others are black. The glittering gold ornamentation and tassels on the cap add a rich and festive note to academic processions.

The same year, 1954, the post of University Orator was created. It is a modification of the important office of public orator established at Cambridge University in 1522, who was rated as a high administrative officer, wrote Latin letters on behalf of the university to secure the favor of influential persons, sought privileges for the institution or defended its rights, and in general was a key figure in every important public occasion demanding some official utterance from the university, as Dr. Schilling has noted in an article on the subject.

In modern American academic life there is nothing to correspond to the office of public orator, since most of the duties have been absorbed in the president's function. As University Orator Dr. Schilling presents candidates for honorary degrees and prepares the formal citations.

sion; the mortarboard always casts a deep shadow across your face anyway."

On hoods (which generally are silk-lined with the color or colors of the institution conferring the degree and bordered with velvet of the proper width to indicate the degree and of a color signifying the department to which the degree pertains)—"An exception is Harvard, which appears to lack faith in the ability of the public to tell its product on sight and accentuates the matter by having its own style of hood with a crimson silk trimming as well as lining and by small braided crows' feet on the facings of the gown. Yale consoles itself for not having thought of that by permitting the use of a gown of dark blue instead of the universal black. This avoids the long chance of confusion with Princeton men, and is regarded as well worth any slight extra expense."

On honorary degrees, which began in Elizabethan England—"These are given in the British Isles but it took the United States to go into mass production on them. A tendency to make a sharper distinction than formerly between the degree given for study and honorary degrees began some years ago and is continuing. The giving of honorary Ph.D.'s, for example, is much less frequent. Some institutions give no honorary degrees. Cornell and Wells, to cite two, have in their charters prohibitions of such degrees."

President de Kiewiet wearing his claret-colored gown of the University of London, where he received his Ph.D. degree in 1927. He is wearing the soft-crowned medieval cap known as the "beef-eater's cap" favored by some English universities. The colorful hood is faced with salmon-colored satin, emblematic of his London degree. In the academic procession at the top of page, he is clad in his official Rochester robe of red silk with gold brocade facing and stripes.

BACHELOR

THE BACHELOR'S GOWN, modeled here by Richard Zuegel of Oak Park, Ill., and Barbara Blake, of Erie, Pa., who will be graduated this June, is made of black worsted material and has long, pointed sleeves, similar to the Oxford scholar's gown. It is closed only at the top. It has become the custom for women to wear a white collar. The cap is the traditional mortarboard, the origin of which is somewhat vague. One authority says that it was made "square" in order to be "like scholars and their books," another that it stems from the master workman's mortar board.

Early universities were essentially like trade guilds in their organization, and in medieval institutions the term bachelor was used for a student, who although still an "apprentice" under the direction of a magister or master, was permitted to teach younger students, something like today's "graduate assistant."

Incidentally, "bachelor" is only a temporary designation for Zuegel. He's engaged to Miss Blake.

MASTER

ROBERT L. NEESE, an instructor in the Foreign Language Department, who will receive his Master of Arts degree in Spanish this June, gives a preview of the regalia he will wear at Commencement.

The master's robe may be either of black silk or black wool, although there is a trend toward gowns of lighter weight material made of the new synthetic fabrics. It is worn open, with the same yoke effect as the bachelor's gown, and has long, closed sleeves reaching well below the knees, with an arc of a circle at the bottom and a slit for the arm.

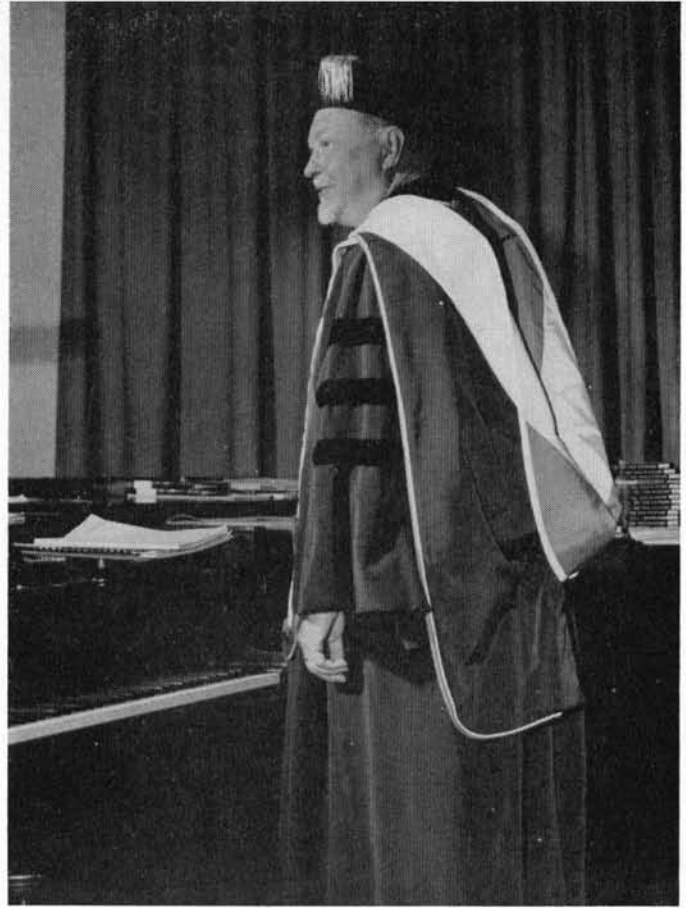

The master's hood, modeled by Neese, is three and one-half feet long, made of black silk and lined with the official color or colors of the institution granting the degree, in this case dandelion yellow. It is bordered with white velvet indicating that the degree is in arts. The master's hood is shorter and narrower than the doctor's and ends in a curved tail.

The degree has ancient origins in the early guilds, and indicates that the recipient has served his apprenticeship and is admitted by his superiors to begin, that is, to teach, and from this terminology comes the word "commencement" for describing the ceremonies at the end of the academic year.

1957 Academic Regalia

Derives from Medieval Customs

DOCTORATE

ORIGIN OF THE title of "Doctor" as a degree superior to that of master is somewhat obscure, but it was conferred in law in the twelfth century at the University of Bologna, and the University of Paris gave the doctor's degree in divinity at about the same time. At Oxford in the year 1184 there is mention of the "doctors of the different faculties," so that the term was evidently used as a title for those possessing the highest degree of learning soon after the first universities were established.

The doctor's gown, displayed by John C. Crandall, Jr., an American History Fellow who will receive his Ph.D. degree from the University of Rochester in June, is of black silk with a full, round, open sleeve. It is faced with velvet and has three velvet bars on each sleeve, which may be black, or the same color as the velvet, indicative of the faculty, which edges the hood. Only doctor's degree recipients may wear the gold tassel on their caps.

The doctor's hood, which Miss Olive M. Schrader, Registrar for the College of Arts and Science, who for many years has helped robe the honorary and advanced degree candidates, is adjusting, is four feet long and made with a wide panel. As can be seen, it is considerably fuller than the master's hood.

Colors for the department to which the degree pertains, on the velvet edging of the hood, include white for arts and letters, blue for philosophy, golden yellow for science, green for medicine, pink for music, brown for fine arts, copper for economics, orange for engineering, purple for law.

HONORARY

DR. HOWARD HANSON, Director of the Eastman School of Music, posed for the Review in one of his seventeen honorary degree hoods that have been conferred on him by colleges and universities. This one, with Columbia University's blue and white chevrons on the hood, is for an honorary Doctor of Music degree.

The front view shows an unusual decoration worn by Dr. Hanson. It is a scarf of russet brown and cream-colored velvet, trimmed with bars of brown fur, to which is pinned the Prix de Rome, awarded to him when he was a fellow of the American Academy of Rome. He was the first to receive the award, one of the most highly prized in the whole field of music.

The beginnings of honorary degrees go back to early England, and the practice appears to have been laid down formally in the Elizabethan code, which authorized conferring degrees "upon privy councillors, bishops, peers, and the sons of peers without requiring them to fulfill any of the conditions of time, exercise or examinations imposed upon other candidates . . ."

Harvard's first honorary degree was given to Benjamin Franklin, an M.A. in 1753. In time the gift of special degrees became a regular feature of American commencements, with the result that in many cases the standard of recipients was lowered and their number greatly increased. There has been severe criticism of universities for the proliferation and cheapening of an honor that it is felt should be reserved for only very exceptional individuals, and some institutions have abolished all degrees except for those earned in course.

The Dewey Papers: an appreciation

By Glyndon G. Van Deusen, '25
Watson Professor of History

Largely through the foresight of Professor Van Deusen, the University of Rochester Library has acquired the papers of former Governor Dewey, an invaluable collection that contains much of the political, social and economic history of the past twenty years. It represents a landmark in the development of the Library's program for providing research material for faculty and graduate students, and together with the papers of William H. Seward, President Lincoln's Secretary of State, bequeathed to the University in 1951 by his grandson, William H. Seward 3rd, provide a rich trove of original source material on the history of American politics.

Professor Van Deusen first approached Governor Dewey about giving the papers to the University in 1950, and found him greatly interested. However, the matter was held in abeyance when the Governor decided to run for reelection, but four years later, when he announced his decision not to run again, the conversations were resumed and the Governor approved the transfer of the documents to the University.

THE Thomas E. Dewey Papers, all thirteen tons of them, have now been in Rush Rhees Library for some two years. During this time, the archival staff, capably directed by Miss Margaret Butterfield, '26, has begun the task of organizing them for scholarly use. The task is progressing in satisfactory fashion, but it is enormous, for the papers occupy one whole library stack and consist of over one million items.

I have been over these materials in considerable detail, and as a result of this investigation have gained some impression of their historical value.

The cases of documents, legal size, that belong to the period before 1943 house much evidence as to the political aims and ideas of nationally prominent Republicans in the 1930's. They also contain a great deal of information about the 1942 New York State gubernatorial campaign. In addition, they reflect the reactions of both great and small to the social conditions that characterized the period of the depression and the beginning of the return to prosperity. Of particular interest to the historian is a file of letters from Prof. H. E. Babcock of Cornell University on the agricultural problems of the depression period.

Of much greater bulk, and correspondingly greater importance, are the papers relating to Governor Dewey's official position as Governor of New York State from 1943 to 1954. This collection, intensively studied, will give a wealth of information about Republican tactics, plans, and policies during twelve very important years in our state and national history.

The "Personal Correspondence" from 1943 to 1954 includes letters of significance from such public figures as Bernard Baruch, Henry R. Luce, Frederic H. Bontecue, W. Kingsland Macy, and many other leaders from different parts of the nation.

Of particular interest are the letters which convey the prejudices and the predilections of a considerable variety of newspaper editors and publishers. There are also thousands of letters from the little people, letters of praise, blame, advice, and grievance. This collection is especially rich in the campaign years, but the material covers the whole period. It also includes many copies of the Governor's replies to his correspondents.

Even more important than the "Personal Correspondence" files of this gubernatorial period are the files marked "General Correspondence." These contain much information about affairs of state (local and national); discussion and analysis of the virtues and defects of various pieces of legislation, or party policies; descriptions of a wide variety of local situations which involved or demanded legislative, gubernatorial, or judicial action. Here, as in the "Personal Correspondence" files, is to be found the correspondence which thousands of people directed to the Governor's office, and copies of the replies that went back to the people, replies signed by appropriate members of the Governor's staff and, in many instances, by the Governor himself. These files are essential for any study of the state legislation of this period. They are also essential for any study that may hereafter be made of the appointing power in New York State. They give vital evidence for investigators interested in a wide variety of topics, from veterans, affairs to pari-mutuel harness racing and capital cases. The reports on capital cases include descriptions of crime that are hair-raising in their sordid drama.

Of special interest is that part of the collection containing the Governor's speeches, press releases, and itineraries. Here is a collection of the Governor's thoughts on public questions made all the more important because many of the speeches have first, second, and third drafts, together with final and presumably last-minute corrections. These drafts show the evolution of the Governor's thinking on matters of policy as he was making ready for a public pronouncement.

Over thirty cardboard cases, legal size, are needed to house the materials which relate to Governor Dewey's 1948 campaign for the Presidency. These cases house an official record of the campaign, carbons (arranged by states) of letters sent out from campaign headquarters, twelve cases of incoming mail, lists of contacts, news releases, photographs, and much besides.

The Dewey Papers include, in addition to the materials already mentioned, a vast amount of other memorabilia. One case of materials consists solely of articles by

The Dewey Papers constitute an extraordinary collection of historical evidence concerning one of the outstanding public figures in twentieth century America. They are also an indispensable source of information concerning the part played by New York State in the political, social, and economic movements of one of the great periods in American and world history. They constitute a mosaic pattern in which the trained eye of the historian can discern the pattern of American democracy, its shortcomings, its faults, its achievements, its virtues. Taken in conjunction with official materials housed at Albany and Washington, the personal papers of other outstanding leaders, the Four New York State Governors: Thomas E. Dewey with Herbert H. Lehman (1932-42) Governor Averell Harriman, and Charles Poletti, who was Governor for 29 days in 1942.

and about the Governor. There is a voluminous scrapbook collection, consisting of over 250 folio volumes of newspaper clippings extending from November 21, 1933, to December 31, 1954. These New York State news items present a congeries of information about the Governor's activities, together with a host of editors' and columnists' opinions of the Governor and of the policies with which his name was connected. There are additional files which consist simply of the Governor's messages and proclamations. There is a collection of phonograph records, films, kinescope and tape recordings, diplomas, photograph albums of special events, plaques, medals, badges, and keys in profusion. The collection probably houses a key for every city in the state.

written memoirs, and the unwritten recollections of the Governor's contemporaries and friends in public life, the Dewey Papers will furnish the material from which much of the story of our time will be written.

In giving his papers to the University of Rochester, the Governor has conferred upon us a very real privilege and a very great responsibility—the privilege of possessing valuable historical material so that Americans may increase their knowledge of the processes of democratic government, and in so doing smooth a little the rough road that man travels on this earth.

A FLIGHT of an hour and a half carries you from Athens to Crete. The plane ascends sharply, tilts along the mainland beaches, and moves out over the Aegean. Soon the Cyclades lie scattered below—fragments of land with fresh April green against the blue water, edged with white foam. Then the plane moves down, rushing toward the seaward field of the Herákleion airport, while sheep scatter from the runway. To your left rises Mount Ida, almost invisible in clouds. Brilliant sunlight pours onto the field.

I had come to Crete to see the reconstruction that had been done on the ruined palace of the Minoan kings at Knossos—the dynasty whose legends tell of Pasiphae and the Minotaur, of Daedalus and Icarus, of Theseus and Ariadne. Knossos is not far from Herákleion, where my hotel was, and I made the trip every day by taxi. Few tourists visit Knossos in early April. Day after day I found myself the only person there, and I could wander as I chose. The buildings of the palace, which were partially restored by the late Sir Arthur Evans, the English archeologist, rest in a circle of stony, barren hills, cut from south to north by a valley in which there was long ago a broad river. Then the hills around were dark with the green of cedar and cypress, from which the subjects of King Minos made the ships that were the kingdom's strength. Four thousand years ago, the sea power of Knossos wrung tribute from Egypt and from the mainland of Greece, as well as from the Aegean Islands. Its sailors may have voyaged as far as the British Isles. Then suddenly Knossos and its power were destroyed. No one knows what the catastrophe was—perhaps the hands of the gods bringing earthquake and fire, or the hands of men in violent invasion. Now the labyrinthine sprawl of the palace is invaded by clusters of bushes, of nettles, of olives. In the great court outside the king's audience chamber, on the edges of the terraces, between the paving stones of the dancing floor, grow the wild flowers of an Aegean spring—red and blue and yellow, mauve and purple, pink and white. The incessant hum of bees is everywhere.

Knossos is peopled only by ghosts. But in Herákleion real life proceeds busily. Like most other Greek cities, Herákleion smells of new plaster, and, like Knossos, it has known invaders. First came the Greeks from the mainland, then the Venetians, then the Turks. Most recently, in World War II, German planes flew overhead and dropped their bombs; then the earth shook, the buildings fell, and fire destroyed most of what remained. The scars of the Stuka raids still show on the surface of the town, but new buildings go up, all in beige stucco, it seems, and the noise of construction—crashing slides of stone, whang of hammers, slap of plaster—continues into the night. This restoration is not so beautiful as that of Knossos, but it vibrates with energy and purpose.

Herákleion is small, and a stranger—especially, perhaps, if one is a woman—is inspected by long, inquiring, courteous stares. People are friendly and deal gently with a visitor's inability to speak

Greek. Children follow you down the street.

I have no idea whether the restaurateurs of Herákleion ever take inventory, but if they do they must have a time of it, because their table furnishings have a way of wandering about. If you want coffee—the strong, thick, sweet Turkish coffee—you ask the café waiter for it and then you tell him where you will be to receive it: perhaps at your table, perhaps in the courtyard of the town's elegant museum, perhaps back at the hotel. Let's say you go to the museum, as I did. Soon the waiter will come down the street—past men from the hills in their ballooning trousers and shining boots, past donkeys pulling wagons, past American cars—carrying the tray with your coffee and the glass of water that always accompanies it. I suppose he comes back later for the tray; you, at any rate, are not responsible for it. Once, at a restaurant beside a fountain built by the Venetian invaders, where I took most of my meals, I asked for baklava, the dessert made of pastry, nuts, and honey. There was none on hand, but the staff was not dismayed. One waiter dashed out to a pastry shop and returned in triumph with plate, knife, fork, baklava, and pastry, under whose eyes, as well as those of the staff and the other patrons, I had to approve and then eat the pastry.

Early on my last morning in Herákleion—I was to leave at noon by plane for Athens—I started down to the breakwater to inspect the Venetian customs house there. At the foot of the precipitous street to the harbor, cargo and fishing boats unload, and rust-colored nets dry on the wharves and the sea wall. I picked my way around the nets and went out on the breakwater to the customs building, which is old and fortlike, and has a lion of St. Mark staring out to sea. After a while, I walked on.

It was an in-and-out morning, with clouds scudding steadily past the sun. The waves slapped hard at the rocks of the breakwater. Then I heard another slap, not quite like that of the waves, from the water's edge. I turned and looked down. A woman and a boy, she perhaps twenty-three or four, he perhaps ten, were washing clothes—soaking them in the water, then rolling them up and hurling them onto a flat rock. We smiled at each other, and then, as I started on, they waved and began clambering up the rocks toward me. When they reached me, I saw that the woman was not pretty but that she had a live face—bright, animated, and warm. The boy's face was harder to see; whenever I caught his eye, he ducked his head and then looked sideways at me, with a half smile.

We tried conversation, but there was the language barrier, which we all accepted as a great joke. Presently, however, the woman did manage to ask a one-word question: "English?"

I shook my head. "American," I said.

They understood, and for some reason my answer seemed very right and important. The woman spoke rapidly to the boy, who at once ran back toward the town as fast as he could move his thin bare legs. I was made to understand, largely by signs, that, please, I must wait until he returned. It would not take long.

It didn't. The boy came back with another boy, who was about the same age, a bit thinner, a little longer in arms and legs. His hair was cropped close, and his brown eyes shone in his tan face. He was barefooted, as were the other boy and the woman, and his T shirt and shorts were clean and sun-bleached. He handed me a letter.

It was an old letter, and it bore a California postmark. Taking it, I looked at them questioningly. They all three indicated impatiently that I should read it aloud. I drew from the envelope, first, a Christmas card showing a number of small photographs, with English captions underneath. A comfortable, plain woman in her thirties, wearing glasses, sewing: "Mother always works." A man with thinning hair, a bow tie, smiling over a pile of papers: "Twenty years on the job." A plump little girl in a bathing suit, holding to the edge of a pool: "In the swim." Another little girl, in a very evident party dress: "All dressed up." And a sturdy boy, with a pile of elaborately wrapped packages: "Ready for the Season. Merry Christmas from All of Us." There was also in the envelope a handwritten sheet, with a California dateline. I took it out and read: "We had your letter and think you write very nicely now. . . . We cannot read it but we had it translated. . . . We are pleased you are doing so well in school. . . . Will you let us know if there is anything else you would like, so that we can send it to you. . . . Your loving American family."

I knew then. There was another—a third—restoration on Crete. This restoration was being done with material from halfway around the world, from the far side of America; and because I was American, like the family that had obviously "adopted" this Greek boy, I was being given some of the credit. After I finished the letter, there was a sudden babbling in Greek. I was thanked. We shook hands, we smiled, we shook hands again.

At last I turned and started back toward town. I had just reached the wharves when the sound of bare feet on the run came up behind me, and there were the boys. We smiled and chattered incoherently, and then they were off, pelting down a side street. I was up the hill and almost at my hotel when they caught up with me again. This time there was something more than chatter—an earnest, almost desperate attempt to communicate.

"Speet," they both said, "Speet." They said it politely but also insistently. As they spoke, they pointed down the side street from which they'd come.

What did they mean? I tried hard to understand. But they could do no more than say "Speet" again. Then I remembered it was almost time for the taxi that would take me to the airport; I shrugged helplessly and walked on to the hotel. Looking dejected, they stood and watched me go.

The taxi was waiting, with my suitcase already in the back seat. Beside the driver—the same one who had driven me on my trips to Knossos—sat a little girl, dressed in starched pink gingham. She was unsmiling, staring straight ahead. The driver, who spoke a bit of English, said proudly, "My little girl. I told her she could ride to the airport, if you did not mind. Her mama dressed her up to come." I said I was very glad to have her, and as we drove over the bumpy road to the airport, with the driver honking his horn constantly from sheer delight in its sound, I tried vainly to induce the child to turn around and relax. Once she looked at me unsmilingly, but that was all.

It occurred to me then to describe to the driver my encounter with the two boys. I did, and ended up asking, "What does 'speet' mean? What did they want?"

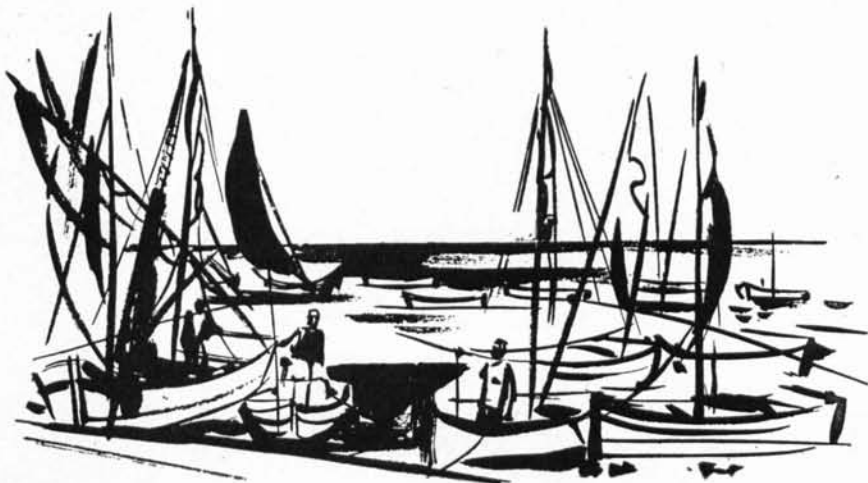

"'House,'" he said, swinging the car in beside the airport office. "It means 'house.' They were asking you to come to their house." I got out of the taxi, with a sense of failure. I had been completely inadequate. And much as I wanted to, I could not now go back to find them, accept their kindness, and thank them.

The plane stood ready, and I turned to pick up my bag and go. The little girl in the front seat, still serious and unsmiling, now put her arm through the open window and held out something to me. She spoke quietly, shyly. I looked at her father.

"She has candy," he said. "She would like to give you some."

I took the candy—there were several sticky pieces—and she smiled at last. I thanked her. Then I boarded my plane and flew out of Herakleion, holding the candy like a talisman of forgiveness.

'Rapture of the Deep' Poses a Puzzle for Physiologists

By Harry Schmeck

Harvard Nieman Fellow, 1954

THE SCENE might be almost anywhere along the coast a mile or so offshore. A boat is at anchor on the choppy blue-green water. On its deck are the air pumps, lines and other equipment that go with deep sea diving.

Nearly 200 feet below the boat an experienced diver is moving slowly across the bottom with his air and communication lines trailing slightly behind him and a stream of bubbles curving upward from his heavy helmet.

Though an experienced man in his dangerous field this diver seems to be fumbling with his tools. His steps are more uncertain than they should be even in the heavy diving dress. Over the phone system the men in the boat can hear snatches of garbled talk or even song. The diver may ignore their questions or even answer with nonsense.

For no reason at all he may leave what he is doing and wander off dangerously at random across the uncharted bottom. The diver is in the grip of something called "rapture of the deep." He acts as though he hasn't a care in the world—as though he has had one too many drinks. Coming over him unexpectedly almost 200 feet below the surface this "rapture" could cost him his life.

What caused it? It seemed likely that breathing air at pressures more than four times higher than normal was somehow producing the effect. Thorough investigation showed that this was the case and put the largest share of the blame on high nitrogen pressure. The limiting depth for deep sea divers was extended considerably when helium was mixed with their oxygen to replace most of the nitrogen normally in the air. Nitrogen at high pressure was exerting a narcotic effect.

At this point "rapture of the deep" became a serious puzzle to the science of physiology as well as a hazard to deep sea divers. Nitrogen is an inert gas. It makes up 79 per cent by volume of the air we breathe in and an equal amount is breathed out. The body, in other words, seems to ignore the nitrogen in our atmosphere. Yet at high pressure this inert, non-poisonous, colorless, odorless and tasteless gas has a narcotic effect. How does it act?

The Physiology Department of the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry has been exploring this problem for a decade under the leadership of Dr. Wallace O. Fenn, Department Chairman. A paper published this spring in the Journal of General Physiology brings them closer to a solution. Dr. Fenn, who has been much interested in gases, respiration and diving problems, is now chairman of a panel on underwater swimmers' technology of the National Research Council's committee on undersea warfare.

The first thing the UR research scientists had to do, Dr. Fenn said, was produce nitrogen narcosis—the equivalent of "rapture of the deep"—in an animal in a way that could be measured objectively.

A graduate student, Dr. Jean Marshall, did this by measuring the brain waves of a frog exposed to high pressures of nitrogen in an enclosed vessel. The nitrogen pressure was raised without changing the partial pressure of oxygen. As the nitrogen pressure rose the brain waves got fainter and fainter and finally disappeared completely. As the pressure dropped again they reappeared.

Nitrogen narcosis did exist measurably then, but the puzzle of its cause was still untouched.

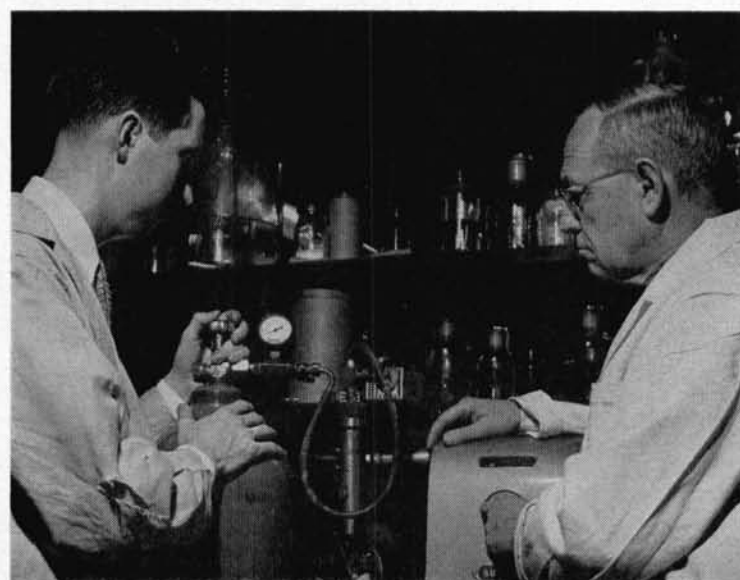

In a later project, Dr. Frank Carpenter found that nitrogen would also prevent the convulsions that electric shock produced in mice. He found exactly the minimum or "threshold" at which the inert gas would protect against those convulsions. The next step was to compare this with the effects of other inert gases such as argon and helium. The "threshold" pressure for argon was considerably higher than that for nitrogen. The "threshold" for helium just couldn't be reached.

Curiously the differences in "threshold" followed roughly the same graph curve as the solubilities of these gases in the fatty, lipid materials of the body. But this was more than curious, because the nerve cells of animals and humans are believed to be coated with a very thin lipid membrane.

The puzzle seemed to be narrowing rapidly to this question: what does nitrogen at high pressure do to fatty organic substance?

The UR physiologists decided to try an experiment on a simple non-living model. They put a mixture of olive oil and water in their pressure chamber and shook it to produce an emulsion—a suspension of fine drops of oil in water. They subjected this to a huge pressure of nitrogen a hundred times as high as normal atmospheric pressure.

Dr. Fenn (right) and Dewey Sears, research fellow, demonstrate effect of high pressure of nitrogen and argon in producing a reversal of oil and water emulsions using a shaking machine and a high pressure meter which registers whether or not the emulsion has changed.

Then they looked at the result. They had started with drops of oil in water. Now they had drops of water in oil. The emulsion had literally been turned inside out. It is this experimental evidence that was reported recently in the physiology journal. It may well be the clue leading to an explanation of "rapture of the deep."

The basic aim of physiology, of course, is not that of solving safety problems for divers or for the applied science of high altitude medicine, another field of research in which the UR department has done pioneering work.

Physiology's basic role is in fundamental research. It is the science which seeks to understand the function, behavior, and essential processes of all the complex organs and integrated systems that together are a living body. In answering these basic questions it does tell other scientists many things of value to medicine, health and even the regrettably important art of war.

UR physiology research on oxygen, for instance, touches importantly on many fields. This indispensable gas makes up a fifth of the air we breathe, half of the earth's crust, all but 10 per cent of water and more than half of the human body. If the oxygen in our air disappeared suddenly every warm-blooded animal on earth would die in a matter of minutes.

But oxygen seems to have a malevolent side too. Small animals, such as rats and mice, die in a matter of hours if they are put in a high pressure atmosphere of pure oxygen. Breathing the pure gas at high pressure for less than an hour has been known to send deep sea divers into convulsions. Excessive use of oxygen for premature babies stands convicted as the principal cause of the blinding disease retrolental fibroplasia. The disorder, unknown twenty years ago, only hits premature babies. It had become the leading cause of blindness in premature infants before the role of excessive oxygen in this disorder was discovered.

The University of Rochester Medical Center was one of the first institutions in the nation to observe that symptoms just like retrolental fibroplasia could be induced in newborn mice simply by letting them breathe 70 per cent of 1 atmosphere of oxygen.

This important work was done principally here by Dr. Rebeca Gerschman, Assistant Professor of Physiology. She has also been following other aspects of oxygen's "bad side" and has even found ways of turning it to good use for research.

Dr. Gerschman and her colleagues have noticed striking similarities between some of the bad effects produced by oxygen and the harm done by x-ray radiation. Things that protect against x-rays sometimes protect against too much oxygen. Adding oxygen to x-ray treatment seems to increase the effect of the radiation under some circumstances. Several investigators are now considering using oxygen in the x-ray treatment of tumors.

Recently Dr. Gerschman and her co-workers have studied the effects of oxygen at the cellular level by experiments with a common variety of "one-celled animal," paramecium caudatum.

The UR research workers have demonstrated not only that an atmosphere of pure oxygen can kill those protozoa in about two hours, but also that higher pressures (6-10 atmospheres) can cause mutations in certain bacteria which are strikingly similar to the mutations caused by x-rays.

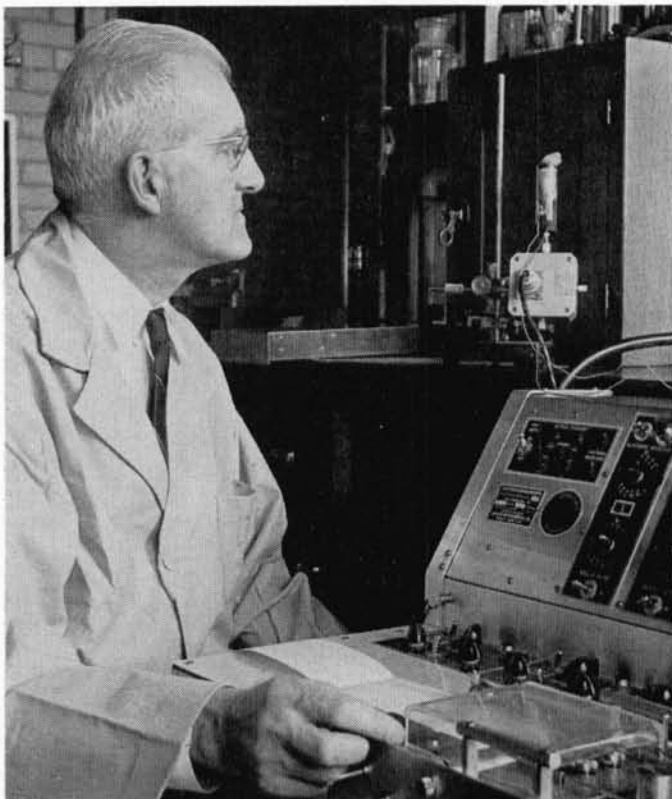

Oxygen is essential to life, but it also has a malevolent aspect. Here Dr. Gerschman and Justin Frost, research assistant, are studying the effects of moderately increased oxygen on a rat in an oxygen chamber that has an air lock so the animal can be fed, injected with chemicals and weighed without being removed from the chamber.

Recently Dr. Gerschman and her associates have made motion pictures showing the effects of pure oxygen on the paramecium. The pictures have shown remarkable similarity to others showing the appearance of the same type of organism under x-ray bombardment.

The fact that two separate and distinct agents produce virtually the same effect on a given form of life is valuable knowledge to a research scientist. It provides an opportunity for cross-reference and comparison. This paves the way for fuller understanding of the basic action by which both of the agents achieve their effects. When full understanding is achieved scientists are in a position to answer that always fundamental question: "What can be done to alter these effects for the good of humanity?"

For many years the body's important inorganic substances have been a major interest of Dr. Fenn's department. The research has concentrated on the active roles in the body of sodium, calcium, potassium and chloride. Not counting that calcium which is present as the major constituent of bones, all four of these inorganic materials make up less than half of one per cent of the materials in the body. But these traces are vitally important. They move back and forth between the tissue cells and the blood in accordance with laws that are of life and death importance and yet are only partially understood by science.

The UR research workers are trying to determine specifically what the basic laws are. It is known for example that there is an important relationship between the movement of potassium and the acid-base balance of the body. In some cases, however, it is not known whether the change in acidity is designed to preserve the right potassium concentration or vice versa. Knowing which of the two possibilities is correct can be important in clinical medicine because it may mean the difference between treating the true cause of a disorder or just nullifying the symptoms. In some cases it is worse than useless to treat only the symptoms if the basic cause of those symptoms is left uncorrected.

Dr. Adolph is investigating the effect of low oxygen concentration on an infant rat in glass cylinder at right above instrument panel, from which electrocardiograms and the breathing are being measured.

Another study of inorganic materials concerns the effect of calcium on the beating heart. For this work the hearts of turtles and frogs are kept alive outside the body for days. During this time the organs are subjected to varying environments and the effects of abnormal environment are noted. Since the frog and turtle hearts operate in accordance with the same fundamental principles that govern the mammalian heart the research has important implications for human physiology.

Months before Pearl Harbor the UR Physiology Department was already working on a project of great importance to U. S. military capabilities. This was aviation medicine, concerned particularly with the effects of high altitude on the body.

The oxygen pressure in the air drops gradually with increasing altitude until the point is reached at which there is not enough pressure to drive the oxygen in the lungs into the blood. Under these circumstances a flier can lose consciousness and die in a matter of a few minutes. The critical altitude varies greatly from individual to individual, but most people will lose consciousness at 25,000 feet. Army Air Force regulations called for use of oxygen masks above 10,000 feet.

The UR work began with studies of pressure breathing—pushing added oxygen into the lungs at high enough pressure to overcome the deficiencies of high altitude air.

"It turned out that the problem of increased pressure in the lungs involved a great deal of general physiology and had many unexpected ramifications," Dr. Fenn recalls. "It presented problems of very general interest, it seemed to us."

Out of the department budget, the UR physiologists built a small pressure chamber capable of holding two men. It could be filled either with water—hot or cold—or air and was adaptable for both high pressure and low pressure study. The tank, in which some of the senior members of the department have "passed out" more than once in the interests of science, is still in use.

The UR work in respiration physiology has spread out over a broad field of endeavor including gas equilibrium in the lungs, what goes into the blood and what comes out and why, and the general mechanics of the related twin pumping systems for air and blood that keep us alive.

Some of the statistics involved are fascinating even to the layman. The exchange of oxygen from the air into the blood's hemoglobin takes place in 750 million microscopic sacs in the lungs called alveoli, according to a UR physiologist. Each red blood cell has only seven-tenths of a second to take on its life-giving cargo. About six liters of blood are pumped through the lungs in a minute. The alveoli have to provide a total of about 100 square meters of surface area—an area of about thirty by thirty feet—for the exchange of oxygen.

The engineering problem represented by the lungs is equivalent to putting about 900 square feet of surface inside a gallon jug.

The UR studies of chest physiology problems have contributed to a greatly increased general awareness among scientists of what goes on in the human chest. Many medical centers today are making use of the general principles and theoretical conclusions worked out in Rochester.

Another line of basic research is that of Dr. Edward F. Adolph, Professor of Physiology. Dr. Adolph's fields of in-

William H. Newman, medical student, breathes into a rubber bag in experiment conducted by Dr. John Knowles to determine the tensions of pressures of carbon dioxide in mixed venous blood by rebreathing techniques. The ultimate objective is to develop a simple method to determine cardiac output without the necessity of cardiac catheterization commonly used in working with heart or lung patients.

THE ANATOMY OF SOUTH AFRICAN MISERY

A new book by

Cornelis W. de Kiewiet

Published by Oxford University Press, reviewed by William E. Diez, Professor of Government.

In 1954 the Whidden Lectures were endowed at McMaster University in Hamilton, Canada, in honor of the late Rev. Howard P. Whidden, Chancellor of that university from 1923 to 1941. President de Kiewiet was invited to be the inaugural lecturer and in January, 1956, delivered three lectures under the title "The Anatomy of South African Misery."

These lectures deal with the policy of the government of the Union of South Africa known as apartheid. Although the word means "apartness," in the context of present day problems in South Africa it is more appropriately translated as "segregation." In its absolute form apartheid is a policy aimed at complete racial separation even to the extent of separate economies, and in any case is dedicated to the continued political and economic domination of approximately ten million Africans, Indians, and colored people by a European white community of some two and a half million people. The problems it raises are many and complex and the way they are settled will have a profound meaning for the rest of Africa, itself in a state of flux, and for the world outside, especially the West.

In his first lecture, "Nationalism and Racialism," Dr. de Kiewiet provides an historical background, pointing out the importance of the Boer War as a key to an understanding of contemporary South Africa and showing how Afrikaner nationalism, of which apartheid is a concrete expression, has become "an instrument of cultural defense against the English and of racial defence against the native."

The second lecture, "The Delusion of Apartheid," examines the rationale of this policy. For its proponents, apartheid is the logical secular translation of a religious conviction that God did not create all men equal, and many of its advocates not only say but sincerely believe that separation will bring to the African native the security and well-being neither urban slums nor the rural poverty of tribalism can provide. President de Kiewiet does not share this belief nor condone apartheid but characterizes it as "a mental toy, operating outside history and economics" and "a creed of despair and a flight from the fearfulness of the real problem."

"Time for Decision," the final lecture, shows how the white community's concept of itself as a beleaguered citadel has led to political orthodoxy, to an attack on representative government, and to economic and social policies at variance with the needs of an expanding industrial society and with the very benefits apartheid is calculated to bring to the native.

Dr. de Kiewiet does not predict that the integrative forces of investment, industrialism, and urbanization will overcome the separative forces of nationalism and racialism. But he suggests that they offer some cause for hope, and in a general prescription for dealing with African problems he urges upon the West the need for white cooperation with responsible emergent African leadership as well as the need for the avoidance of well-meant but nonetheless ill-considered actions.

The reader of "The Anatomy of South African Misery" will be continually aware of the sober and fair-minded analysis the author's scholarship provides and appreciative of the felicity of expression and the incisive observations characteristic of these excellent lectures. He will agree also that the honor accorded Dr. de Kiewiet by inviting him to be the first Whidden Lecturer is indeed fully deserved.

terest include physiological adjustments to heat, cold and thirst. He also studies the development in newborn animals of control over such vital functions as breathing, circulation of blood, body temperature and water content of the body.

In many respects the newborn mammal (Dr. Adolph and his associates use rats in most of their work) is physiologically helpless, but develops by schedule a series of properties that each add to its capacity to "get along." On the other hand, the infant can stand extremes of temperature and low air pressure that are too much for the adult. The tolerated circumstances vary considerably from species to species. Studies of the differences between species and between infant and adult shed much light on the general physiological principles involved in "getting along."

Dr. Adolph's work on cold has contributed to the surgeon's use of hypothermia, a valuable technique involving lowering the patient's temperature abnormally during an operation. It also has contributed to understanding of injuries caused by extreme cold. The work on thirst turned up the important fact that the body has certain minimum water requirements without which it cannot keep going.

Dr. Edmund S. Nasset, Professor of Physiology, is among the nation's outstanding investigators in gastrointestinal physiology and important related subjects such as amino acids and protein metabolism. The UR work under his leadership has covered a wide variety of projects in the physiological aspects of digestion, and, hence, of nutrition.

Last summer he reported to the twentieth International Physiological Congress in Brussels, Belgium, on a previously little-known action of the thyroid gland in controlling gastric secretion.

Dr. Nasset and his co-workers now are completing a project to assess the effect of atomic radiation on the digestibility of fats and protein. This study is part of a nationwide effort sponsored by the Army Surgeon General's Office to assess the safety of radiation as a food preservative.

Associate Professor John P. Lambooy is making a study of synthetic compounds closely related to the vitamin riboflavin and the amino acid phenylalanine. The process involves making the "analogues" of riboflavin and phenylalanine and then testing their properties and effects on living systems. The research helps determine how variations in chemical structure can change the action of these materials which are indispensable for life. There is the hope, of course, that such modified "molecules" will be handled by different animal tissues or lower forms of life in different ways. One substance may offer too much of the wrong molecule for cancer cells; another, too much of a foreign compound for harmful bacteria.

Research in the Department of Physiology covers scientific interests as far apart as the bottom of the sea and the top of our atmosphere, the effects of extreme cold and the digestion of food. It is all unified, however, in one common aim: to give mankind more knowledge of the basic principles that give life.

Dr. Bowerman Recalls College of '90's

RECOLLECTIONS of his Quaker upbringing as a farm boy in the town of Farmington near Canandaigua, N. Y., his college days at the University of Rochester, and his career as a librarian, including thirty-six years as the distinguished chief librarian of the District of Columbia, are chronicled by Dr. George F. Bowerman, '92, in his recently published memoirs.

Although the men of his college generation were "almost defiantly opposed to coeducation," Dr. Bowerman wrote in a letter to the Review at the time of the merger of the Men's and Women's Colleges, he was converted by two highly successful marriages of graduates of coeducational colleges.

In his booklet, "Some Memories," he recalls his acquaintance with Susan B. Anthony, who was the greatest single force in getting women students admitted to the University.

"Partly, I suppose, because of my Quaker origin and partly because I had throughout my residence in Washington always been without a vote, I have long been an admirer of the late Susan B. Anthony," he wrote. "I knew her when my pew in the Unitarian Church in Rochester was directly behind hers. I have attended woman suffrage meetings in Rochester and in Washington when she was a speaker. I last saw her in 1905 in Portland, Ore., where the annual conference of the American Library Association followed immediately after the annual meeting of the National American Woman Suffrage Association. She expressed great disappointment at the slow progress of the movement for votes for women."

Even with the low tuition fees and cheap board of the 1890's, financing his college education was difficult, he recounts. The summer before he entered the University, he worked as a farm hand, earning $25 to $30 a month. For this he took care of the horses, milked the cows, and worked all day in the fields from 7 a. m. until sunset. Lack of funds forced him to drop out of college for one term in his freshman year, but he later made it up and passed the examinations.

"Partly because I so often had to earn money during my college course," he continues, "I finished about the middle of the class and was not on graduation chosen to Phi Beta Kappa, but several years later was elected to honorary membership."

"While I was in college the entire student body numbered in my final year only 153—all males. My class of 1892 entered, I think, about forty-eight; with recruits from those who dropped back, we graduated forty-three, of whom I am one of four known survivors. (The others, according to Alumni Office records, are Charles H. Maxson, Charles Sarver, and Dr. John M. Taylor.)

"The course for the Bachelor of Arts degree was then pretty definitely prescribed; or rather we were at the beginning of the transition period, when there were a few electives. My favorite

Major Symphonies Enlist

THE Eastman School of Music, take it on the word of Alfred Wallenstein, distinguished conductor of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, "is producing what is most needed" by the nation's symphony orchestras—"thoroughly trained musicians."

"I don't have to ask an Eastman graduate what school he's from," said Maestro Wallenstein when he was in Rochester in late February as guest conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. "I can always tell by the way he auditions."

He should know whereof he speaks, because fourteen Eastman graduates are members of the Los Angeles Orchestra, including George Drexler, '27E, solo flutist, and Sanford Schonbach, '38E, first violinist.

They are among hundreds of Eastman-trained musicians who play in some thirty major orchestras in this country from the Boston Symphony to San Francisco's, and others around the world, many of them holding first desk positions. Harvey Southgate, music critic of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, recently set out to write an article on Eastman School graduates who have gone on to important posts in symphony orchestras, planning to name all of them, the orchestras in which they are playing and their positions. He enlisted the help of Dr. Howard Hanson, the School's Director, and members of the music faculty, all of whom submitted names on individual cards of graduates of their departments in the various orchestras. The pile of cards reached such proportions that Southgate decided his newspaper could not provide the necessary space to list all of the names. When it got up to nearly 250, he gave up.

"Name any orchestra in this country and there is a virtual certainty that former Eastman students will be well represented in the membership," he wrote.

"There is a better than even chance that one or more of the first desk positions in each orchestra will be filled by an Eastman-trained musician."

Faced with similar space limitations, the Review also can name only some of the representative Eastman musicians in the symphony orchestras, recording ensembles, and service bands of the Air Force, Army, Marine Corps, and Navy.

One of them, Thomas Redcay, '51E, piano soloist with the famed U. S. Marine Band and reputedly on call at the White House as the favorite pianist of President and Mrs. Eisenhower, appeared on the Arthur Godfrey Talent Scout television show on February 18 and won a week's engagement on Godfrey's morning show. Godfrey told his multi-millions of listeners that Redcay's was one of the finest talents ever heard on the program.

Another, Victor Alessandro, '37E, conductor and musical director of the San Antonio Symphony since 1952, made a triumphal return to Rochester last November as guest conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic. Last year he won the Alice M. Ditson Award for distinguished service to American music for his work in creating audiences and winning support for good music throughout the Southwest. The Oklahoma Symphony, which he took over in 1938 and built up to one of the nation's finest and which now is conducted by Guy Fraser Harrison, formerly of the Eastman School faculty, includes in its roster the following Eastman graduates holding first desks: Norman Paulu, '51E, '56GE, concertmaster, David Vanderkooi, '52E, '53GE, cellist, Albert Astle, '38E, percussion, Horace Apgar, '49E, bass, Harvey Garber, '48E, '49GE, French horn, and Catherine Dufford, '55E, oboist.

Among those in the Boston Symphony are Doriot Anthony Dwyer, '43E, first flutist, and Harold Meek, '41E, French horn; in the Chicago Symphony, Walfrid Kujala, '48E, '50GE, associate first flute and Clark Brody, '36E, its solo clarinetist since 1951 and for ten years soloist with the CBS Symphony; Detroit Symphony, William Preucil, '52E, '56GE, principal violist, whose wife, Doris, '54E, was in the first violin section of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington for the last two years.

Assistant first flutist in the New York Philharmonic is Paige Brook, '43E, and Gordon Pulis, '35E, is trombonist with that great orchestra. Waldemar Linder, '37E, plays French horn in the Minneapolis Symphony, Martin Heylman, '42E, second flute in the Cleveland Orchestra, Morris Krachmalnik, '47, is also violist with the Pittsburgh orchestra, and Daniel Hinger, '42E, is chief of the percussion section of the Pittsburgh Symphony.

Richard Bales

Richard Bales, '36E, is conductor of the National Gallery Orchestra of Washington. His cantata, "The Confederacy," which he also conducted as an album for Columbia Records, is one of Columbia's proudest achievements.

Other conductors are Capt. Albert Schoepper, director of the U. S. Marine Corps Band, Willis Page, '39E, assistant conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic, and Evan Whallon, '48E, '49GE, recently appointed conductor of the Columbus, Ohio, orchestra.

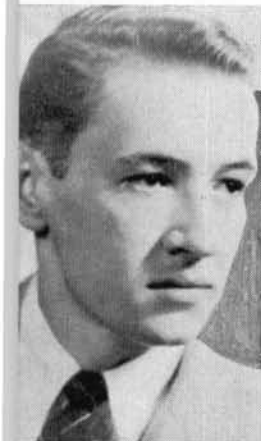

Twenty-three Eastman graduates serenaded President Eisenhower as members of the "President's Own"—the 100-piece Marine Band—in his second inaugural parade on January 21. Tech. Sgt. Donald Hunsberger, '54E, trombonist in the band and music arranger, had a special part in that occasion when Senator Styles Bridges, inaugural committee chairman, asked the band's director, Captain Schoepper, to play "America the Beautiful" as a special number. Coming just three days before the inaugural, this put the captain in a dilemma—the band had no arrangement of the music. Schoepper enlisted Hunsberger's aid and in two days Hunsberger had it ready for rehearsal.

A select musical class—harp players—includes Janet Remington, '43E, with the Pittsburgh Orchestra, Dorothy Spencer Remsen, '41E, formerly with the Buffalo and Minneapolis orchestras, now a performer and teacher at the University of Southern California, and half a dozen others in leading orchestras.

Running through the list at random we find Oliver Zinsmeister, '35E, first percussionist and soloist with the U. S. Marine Band; Edward Murphy, '28E, principal French horn, and Albert Tipton, '39E, first flutist, St. Louis Symphony; Geraldine Ball, '46E, first percussionist, Houston Symphony; Wayne Raper, '54E, first oboist, Baltimore Symphony; Albert Saurini, '50E, flute soloist, James Alexander, '53E, first oboist, Jerome Carrington, '50E, first cellist, in the Indianapolis Symphony; Wallace Mann, '43E, solo flutist, National Symphony; Richard Joiner, '40E, first clarinet, Denver Sym-

Enterprising Dave Muirhead, a senior at River Campus, does a brisk pizza business at dormitories and fraternity houses from this ancient hearse which he bought for $90. In it he installed a stove and bottled gas, where he cooks up hot tasty pizzas with the aid of his fiancée, Patricia Devine, a junior. Dave expects to clear about $1,500 by graduation.

Student Does Brisk Pizza Trade In Hearse Equipped With Stove

AS AT OTHER campuses around the country, the pizza pie has hit the River Campus and the rich Italian concoction of pastry, tomatoes, cheese and anchovies bids fair to replace the hot dog and hamburger as the most popular fare with students.

An enterprising and versatile senior in the College of Arts and Science, Dave Muirhead, is cashing in on the craze by parlaying an old hearse he bought for $90, a stove, bottled gas and a knack for turning piping hot, tasty pizzas into a lively campus business. He expects to clear about $1,500 by the time he graduates this June. His able partner is his pretty fiancée, Patricia Devine, a junior.

He parks his hearse near the fraternity houses and dormitories four hours a night two nights a week and sells from seventy-five to a hundred pizza pies a night. The vehicle, which he bought from a nurse at the Medical Center who was using it for a pleasure car, is a 1942 Packard, and still a snazzy-looking equipage. In it he installed an oven where the coffin rack used to be, and two bottled gas tanks, making a cozy and convenient place of business on icy winter nights.

Dave got into the pizza business a couple of years ago and at first contracted with a downtown restaurant to buy the pies ready baked. He transported them in his car, but by the time the customers gathered around, the pies had cooled. Next he installed a large oven in a trailer, using bottled gas, and business picked up appreciably when he was able to purvey piping hot pizzas. It was pretty rugged, though, standing outside on cold winter nights from 8 to 12 p.m. He solved that problem by acquiring the old hearse.

Dave is a letter man in football, basketball and track, is consistently on the Dean's List, active in the Student Christian Association and a member of the Air Force R.O.T.C.

Dave and Pat stand outside the hearse he purchased from a student nurse, ready to serve up their delectable pizzas to student customers. Pizzas threaten to replace hot dogs and hamburgers as a favorite dish on U. S. campuses.

Coming home to the Rochester Philharmonic, there are Millard Taylor, '35E, concertmaster, Raymond Gniewek, '53E, assistant concertmaster, Allison MacKown, '26E, first cellist, Robert Sprenkle, '36E, oboe, Eileen Malone, '28E, harp soloist, Sidney Mear, '41E, '49GE, and Edwin Betts, '46E, '51GE, trumpets, David Van Hoesen, '50E, bassoon, Robert Jones, '51E, and M. Dale Clark, '48E, trombones, Stanley Hasty, '41E, clarinet, Hugh Robertson, '36E, tympani, and numerous others.

Harmon Potter Sets Visit to West Coast

During June and July Harmon Potter, your new Director of Alumni Relations, will visit Rochester alumni and alumnae in the Denver, Los Angeles and San Francisco areas. He will be accompanied by at least one other University administrative officer. Receptions will be held in each locality at which they look forward to seeing large numbers of Rochester alumni and alumnae and giving them the latest news on exciting and significant developments at the University. Invitations will be sent out and details of time and place will be announced later.

After working as a librarian in the New York State Library in Albany, and Reynolds Library in Rochester for several years, he joined the editorial staff of the New York Tribune. In 1907 he joined the Wilmington, Del., Institute Free Library, and three years later took the position as librarian for Washington, D.C., from which he retired in 1940.

He was awarded an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree by George Washington University in 1913.
