Our year was full of achievements with tremendous potential to benefit patients and families. Look for special sections with this symbol sharing the progress we're driving together.

A Note from Michael

Dear Friend,

Our Foundation is working urgently to identify and support the research that will make a Parkinson's cure inevitable. We're fortunate that our friends and supporters are just as energetic. Your commitment allows us to keep taking the smartest risks and bringing the right players to the table to move the dial.

We are in the midst of incredible advances — some of the most promising ever seen in neuroscience. While work remains to be done, we've never been more optimistic. Throughout this report you'll find evidence of both the power of our progress and the tremendous potential of our future.

Thank you for being part of it.

A Letter from the CEO and the Co-Founder

Dear Friend,

Parkinson's research is in the midst of a renaissance. The field has been invigorated by multiple scientific breakthroughs and promising new leads. In confluence with seminal advances in biology, powerful new computing technologies and an increasingly engaged patient community have combined to set the stage for a new era of discovery.

And thanks to your support, The Michael J. Fox Foundation is leading the charge toward a world without Parkinson's disease (PD). Due in no small part to our focus on high-priority therapeutic targets, PD research in 2014 continued making tangible progress toward clinic and market.

In these pages, it is our privilege to update you on key advances in Parkinson's drug development over the past year and report back to you on the ongoing impact of your philanthropy.

Speeding the next generation of treatments

Alpha-synuclein (the protein that clumps in brain and body cells of people with PD, giving rise to the toxicity and cell death that mark the disease process) remains the focus of intense investigation as a potential drug target. In 2014 AFFiRiS, an Austrian biotechnology company, announced positive Phase I results from its Foundation-supported study targeting alpha-synuclein. A second, similar approach led by biotech and Foundation collaborator Prothena also recently moved forward in testing, as have several other synuclein strategies we funded in early, high-risk stages. We also are working to develop an imaging agent that could visualize synuclein in the living brain in order to help scientists determine whether a drug is working — similar work has been instrumental in recent groundbreaking findings in the Alzheimer's field.

Our holistic strategy targeting LRRK2, the most common Parkinson's genetic risk factor discovered to date, also marches forward. When a pre-clinical finding by pharmaceutical firm Genentech signaled that LRRK2 drugs might bring about changes in lung tissue, the Foundation spearheaded a highly unconventional collaboration of three companies who set aside their status as competitors to work side-by-side assessing the seriousness of these results. It would be impossible to overstate the rarity of such cooperation. It is no exaggeration to say that this consortium, made possible by each company's trust in our Foundation, averted a setback to the LRRK2 field that would have cost years of progress. (Learn more on page 28.)

Todd Sherer, PhD

Deborah W. Brooks

Because alpha-synuclein and LRRK2 hold potential to serve not just as drug targets but as biomarkers of Parkinson's disease, our landmark Parkinson's Progression Markers Initiative expanded in 2014 to build and follow genetic cohorts of people who carry mutations in these genes. Study leaders also presented baseline findings at the 18th International Congress of Parkinson's Disease and Movement Disorders in Stockholm.

Alongside our primary goal of speeding a cure for Parkinson's, our Foundation has always worked to highlight the vital need for improved symptomatic treatments for those living with Parkinson's disease today. The past year has seen great progress in this area as well, with two new formulations of levodopa receiving FDA approval early in 2015, and several Foundation-funded novel delivery strategies advancing in clinical trials.

One under-addressed symptom of Parkinson's disease is dystonia, severe and painful muscle cramping that also can occur outside of Parkinson's. In September, we announced a collaborative research alliance with The Bachmann-Strauss Dystonia & Parkinson Foundation. Such partnerships do much to extend our mission and bring needed funds and awareness to related disorders and disabling symptoms experienced by people with PD. This report honors significant supporters of The Bachmann-Strauss Foundation in 2014 (see page 47).

Research in the 21st century

As personal computing continues to revolutionize healthcare, a dizzying array of websites, mobile apps, software platforms and wearable computing devices have emerged to track and measure health. The Foundation is committed to developing these technologies to speed Parkinson's drug development. Patients today have an unprecedented opportunity to effortlessly contribute immense volumes of objective data on the lived experience of Parkinson's disease, complementing traditional modes of research and furnishing scientists with a more holistic understanding of PD.

We've partnered with Intel Corporation to collect and analyze data from people with Parkinson's (and control volunteers) on measurable aspects of the disease, such as slowness of movement, tremor and sleep quality, through wearable computing and big data analytics. (Learn more on page 23.) Additionally, we're collaborating with researchers at Sage Biosciences and the University of Rochester on the evolution of mPower, a Parkinson's mobile app developed in concert with Apple Computer and built on the Research Kit platform announced by Apple early in 2015.

We also have launched Fox Insight, a new online destination for patients interested in technology-enabled research opportunities. Fox Insight is both a virtual clinical trial in itself and a portal to other digital opportunities in Parkinson's research, including mobile apps crowdsourcing data directly from patients for ongoing study.

Mobilizing patients and families

Rallying Parkinson's patients and families to greater participation in traditional "brick-and-mortar" studies remains critical. Fox Trial Finder, our online smart-match tool connecting people with well-matched clinical trials, reached 40,000 registered users in 2014.

Yet increasing the flow of volunteers into trials requires contextualizing research participation within a broader set of choices and tools to combat isolation and engage more broadly in the life of the greater Parkinson's community. In particular, it has become increasingly evident that people who see the right doctor for their Parkinson's disease not only obtain better individual outcomes for their own health, but are more likely to take greater steps toward holistic engagement, including research engagement.

In an effort to help more individuals connect with high-quality Parkinson's resources in their local community, in 2014 we partnered with AbbVie to launch Partners in Parkinson's. This nationwide strategic health initiative represents a robust new opportunity for an initiation into the world of Parkinson's research, alongside extensive resources for finding the right doctor (often a movement disorder specialist trained neurologist) and connecting with others in the Parkinson's community. Through free, day-long conferences held in communities across the country, supported by virtual and multimedia tools such as an online movement disorder specialist finder, Partners in Parkinson's in 2014 connected with more than 10,000 people with Parkinson's and their loved ones, many of whom reported the program to be one of the best they had experienced.

Clearly, Parkinson's research is experiencing unprecedented momentum. To share every promising activity in our portfolio would require far more space than we have in this report. Critical Foundation investments made possible by your support are building on each other, as every victory tees up the next important question. This is what "powering progress" looks like. Together we are making tangible strides toward our goal of curing PD and transforming the lives of five million patients and families worldwide. Thank you.

With gratitude,

Todd Sherer Debi Brooks

PROGRESS IN DEVELOPING A TREATMENT TO SLOW OR STOP PD

In July, the first drug against alpha-synuclein to reach clinical testing announced positive Phase I safety trial results. Austrian biotech AFFiRiS AG developed an immunotherapy, or "vaccine," approach that induces antibodies against accumulation of alpha-synuclein — the protein that clumps in the brain and body cells of everyone with Parkinson's disease. With early-stage, high-risk support from MJFF starting in 2011, AFFiRiS demonstrated promising results and secured more than $42 million in follow-on funding from venture capital and the EU government for the next stages of research. Clinical studies are ongoing, including an MJFF-funded boost study to test the safety and effect of a different vaccination dosage.

Below them, a petri dish is visible, containing a grid of circular wells, some of which also contain purple liquid. The background is slightly blurred, showing more laboratory equipment. Three large, semi-transparent circles are overlaid on the image: two orange ones at the top and one blue one at the bottom right.

HONORING A GIANT OF PARKINSON'S RESEARCH

In April 2014, Todd Sherer and Michael J. Fox presented Heiko Braak, MD, with the Robert A. Pritzker Prize for Leadership in Parkinson's Research. The award saluted his extraordinary scientific contributions, which have transformed how the field thinks about the cause of Parkinson's and how we go after the cure. Braak — now senior professor at Ulm University in Germany — outlined a Parkinson's staging system, which describes the regional distribution and progression of alpha-synuclein clumps in the brain. The same year, Braak theorized that the biological process of Parkinson's may begin in the peripheral nervous system before migrating to the brain. The prize is made possible by Karen Pritzker and her husband, investor Michael Vlock, and is named in honor of her late father, Robert A. Pritzker, an industrialist, entrepreneur and philanthropist. The Pritzker Prize was designed by renowned artist and Parkinson's patient Tom Shannon, and includes a $100,000 grant to advance the winner's research in neurodegenerative diseases.

The Legacy Circle

The Legacy Circle honors friends who support the Foundation's work through bequests or other planned gifts. While our mission has always been to speed a cure and go out of business, planned gifts provide a major, long-term funding source that we can both plan around and leverage immediately to accelerate high-impact research. If you have made estate plans that include MJFF or to learn more, please contact Sarah Chatham at (212) 509-0995, ext. 285 or schatham@michaeljfox.org.

IMPROVING PARKINSON'S DISEASE MONITORING AND TREATMENT THROUGH ADVANCED TECHNOLOGIES

For nearly two decades, researchers have been refining advanced genomics and proteomics techniques to create increasingly sophisticated cellular profiles of Parkinson's disease pathology. Advances in data collection and analysis now provide the opportunity to expand the value of this wealth of molecular data by correlating it with objective clinical characterization of the disease for use in drug development. In 2014 The Michael J. Fox Foundation and Intel Corporation announced a collaboration to develop big data analytics and wearable technologies to collect and analyze data from thousands of individuals on measurable features of Parkinson's, such as slowness of movement, tremor and sleep quality. The goal is to enable researchers to assemble a better picture of the clinical progression of Parkinson's and track its relationship to molecular changes, better measure progression of the disease and to speed progress toward breakthroughs in drug development.

MJFF SPEARHEADS A RARE CONSORTIUM OF COMPETITORS

In 2013, biotechnology company Genentech observed changes in the lung tissue of pre-clinical models after introducing a LRRK2 inhibitor. While it was unclear whether such changes would translate to safety issues for Parkinson's patients, any such modification requires a strategy to reassess the safety of the therapy for use in human treatments. In light of the concerns around LRRK2 inhibitors, MJFF held a meeting with field leaders in January 2014. In an extremely rare example of collaboration among competitors, three major pharmaceutical firms with LRRK2 inhibitors in their development pipelines — Genentech, Merck and Pfizer — signed on to partner with MJFF on a LRRK2 Safety Initiative. Each member submitted a different LRRK2 inhibitor compound to an MJFF-chosen neutral site for independent testing, and data was shared across the consortium. Earlier this spring, the safety initiative resulted in promising data for the continued development of LRRK2. As a result, Merck and Pfizer announced plans to continue their LRRK2 development.

PROGRESS THROUGH EDUCATION AND CONNECTION

The Michael J. Fox Foundation has long been aware of the clear link between seeking specialty care and participating in clinical research. In 2014 we continued to launch and grow a consolidated program of activities that provides indispensable resources for optimizing care and living well with Parkinson's disease. In addition to our Partners in Parkinson's program in conjunction with AbbVie, MJFF expanded its online resources, including monthly webinars and podcasts on Parkinson's research, social media Q&As with MJFF experts and clinician outreach to connect more patients with movement disorder specialists and clinical trials. Naturally, our greatest asset remains our team of education and engagement specialists who travel the country and world sharing our message of optimism and roll-up-your-sleeves involvement.

Team Fox

In 2014, Team Fox had more than 1,800 members who rallied their communities to speed a cure for Parkinson's. Together, they raised over $7 million last year and a collective $35 million to date. Thanks to a generous donation from an anonymous donor, 100 percent of Team Fox proceeds went straight to research program efforts.

ANNUAL REPORT 2014

Bachmann- Strauss

In September, The Michael J. Fox Foundation announced a collaborative research alliance with The Bachmann-Strauss Dystonia and Parkinson Foundation (BSDPF). We thankfully acknowledge 2014 BSDPF supporters for their incredible dedication to funding critical research that propels new treatments to benefit those living with Parkinson's or dystonia.

In May 2015, The Michael J. Fox Foundation conferred the first Bachmann-Strauss Prize for Excellence in Dystonia Research to broaden public awareness and recognize key scientific discoveries in dystonia. Learn more at michaeljfox.org/bachmann-strauss-prize.

2014 Financial Highlights

At The Michael J. Fox Foundation, we take our responsibility to our donors seriously and we thank you for choosing to get involved with our mission to cure Parkinson's.

Where Your Money Goes

SINCE INCEPTION

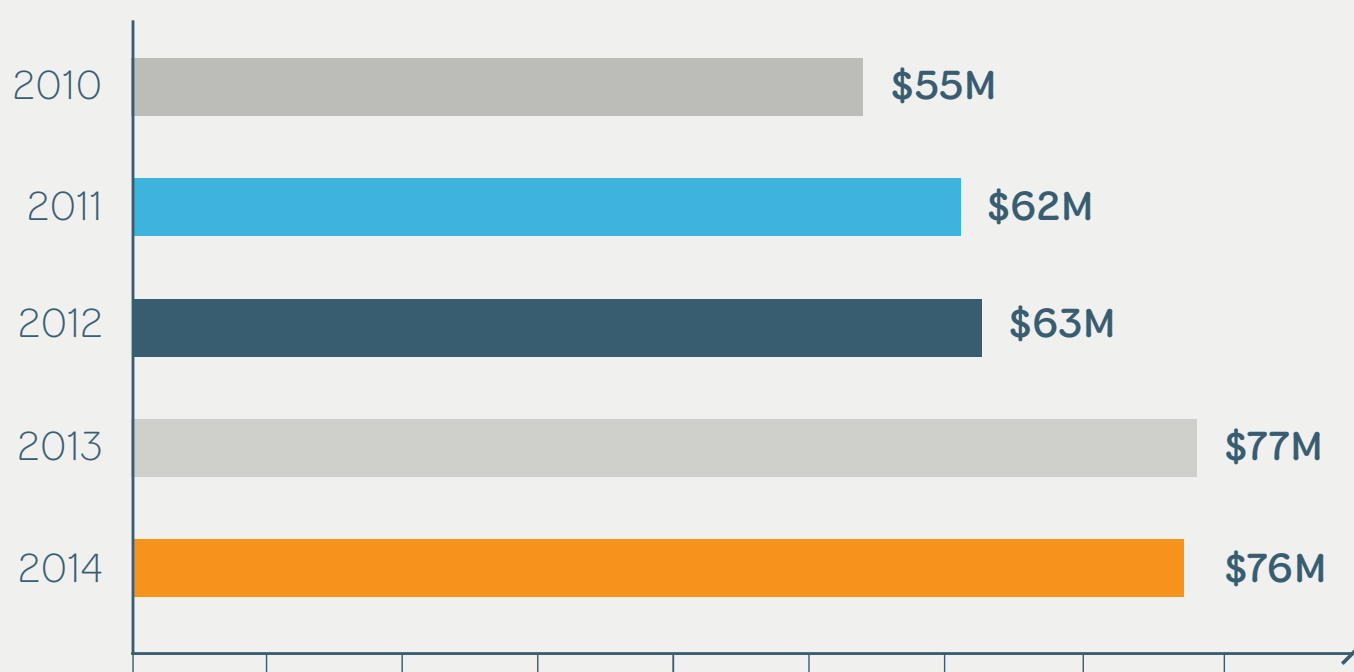

Since opening our doors in 2000, MJFF has held efficiency and accountability as core values of our work; 89 cents of every dollar we spend goes directly to research programs to speed a cure for Parkinson's disease.

MJFF has funded more than $525 million in research, but we don't measure our success in dollars spent. We define progress through scientific solutions patients and families can feel in their everyday lives.

We focus on results and are working to cure PD and close our doors. As our longstanding friends and supporters, you make our work possible. Thank you for all you do. The 2014 financial highlights follow. Full audited financials and our most recent IRS Form 990s are available at www.michaeljfox.org.

2014 Financial Highlights Canada

Since our launch in 2000, The Michael J. Fox Foundation has received a steady outpouring of Canadian support. Canadian researchers have been actively involved in our scientific agenda since the earliest days and individuals from all over the country have taken action to promote Parkinson's awareness by investing in our research or joining Team Fox. MJFF officially registered as a Canadian charity in 2009.
