IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 84-60: FAILURE OF AIR-PURIFYING RESPIRATOR FILTERS TO MEET EFFICIENCY REQUIREMENT

Addressees:

All nuclear power reactor facilities holding an operating license (OL) or construction permit (CP), research and test reactors, and fuel facilities.

Purpose:

This information notice provides notification of the failure of a small percentage of Mine Safety Appliances (MSA) Company's Ultra Filters used in negative-pressure respirators and filters used in positive-pressure air-purifying respirators (PAPRs), part numbers 464807 and 463284, respectively. This small percentage (overall less than 5%) failed to meet the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health/Mine Safety and Health Administration (NIOSH/MSHA) certification requirement in 30 CFR 11 that high efficiency filters be at least 99.97% efficient against a thermally generated, monodisperse 0.3 micron aerosol of dioctyl phthalate. The MSA has taken steps that NIOSH considers adequate to resolve this problem. It is expected that addressees will review the information provided for applicability to their respiratory programs. Guidance and suggestions contained in this notice do not constitute NRC requirements and, therefore, no specific action or written response is required.

Description of Circumstances:

As part of initiation of a program to test filters before reuse in accordance with the NRC's requirement in Appendix A to 10 CFR 20, footnote d-2(b), in July 1983, Three Mile Island (TMI) personnel tested new, unused MSA Company's Ultra and PAPR filters. After testing at 85 liters per minute flowrate and rejecting filters in excess of 0.025% leakage, TMI saw an overall failure rate of less than 5% averaged over several cases (36 filters per case). Filter failures tended to come in clusters, i.e., no failures for several cases followed by a case with half failing. Most failures were marginal or only slightly in excess of the NIOSH leakage requirement. Subsequent confirmatory testing, performed by Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) and others, of TMI's filters and testing by NIOSH of filters supplied to them from NRC's regions confirmed that an excessive rate of filters were failing. (See Attachment 1, Table 1 for results of NIOSH testing.)

At NIOSH's request in October 1983, MSA switched to more restrictive quality control criteria on an interim basis (rejection at greater than 0.02% leakage versus rejection at greater than 0.03% leakage and performing quality control testing at the generally more restrictive airflow rate of 85 versus 32 liters per minute). A comparison study undertaken among NIOSH, MSA Company, and TMI on 144 new unused filters that had undergone quality control testing under the interim, more restrictive quality control criteria revealed no failures. (See Attachment I, Table 2 for results of comparison testing.)

To ensure adequate resolution of this problem and to prevent recurrence, MSA Company has committed to the following actions to correct the excessive filter failure rate problem:

1. All production and quality control testing of both types of filters will be done at 85 liters per minute and accepted at not more than 0.02% leakage.
2. All filters with leakage readings in excess of 0.02% leakage will be discarded.
3. All filters will be individually marked with week and year of manufacture to facilitate the timely identification and resolution of any future problems.
4. Tightened inspection procedures will be implemented and the need for any new or additional tests or test equipment will be evaluated.
5. Manufacturing processes have been examined resulting in more stringent process controls.

Guidance:

Quality Assurance (QA) inspection and testing conducted before the use of new respiratory equipment helps ensure respirators will provide workers adequate protection. In NUREG-0041, "Manual of Respiratory Protection Against Airborne Radioactive Material," Section 10, "Quality Assurance," definitive guidance is provided for establishing a QA program for respirator equipment. Obviously, the degree of QA effort will vary depending on the type of respirator. Complex equipment such as the self-contained breathing apparatus (SCBA) should receive priority QA effort, since SCBA's are used to protect workers in areas immediately hazardous to life and health (IDLH). While the immediate worker safety consequences of respirator malfunction are much less severe for a negative pressure device, reasonable QA efforts can be justified to help ensure adequate worker protection against airborne radioactive materials. Even with the simplest design many things can go wrong. For instance, if a hair or other obstruction is lodged between a negative-pressure respirator's exhalation valve and valve seat, leakage rates as high as 10 percent have been observed. Likewise, filter leakage can in the extreme case, degrade protection for negative-pressure devices (allowed a protection factor up to 50) and in the case where filter leakage is not great for PAPR devices (allowed a protection factor of 1000).

As part of their QA program, LANL has tested a very large number of new, unused filters over a period of many years for their in-house respirator program and has observed a failure rate of about 2%; i.e., about 2% of the filters stamped by the manufacturer as having a leakage rate of less than 0.03% were found to be leaking more than that. Because LANL data showed the majority of these filters that failed had a leakage rate only marginally greater than 0.03% and because the protection factors (see Attachment 2) authorized by 10 CFR 20 are believed to be conservative, the NRC staff has considered this situation to be generally acceptable. (Note that especially for negative-pressure types of respirators, face-to-facepiece leakage is usually the limiting factor -- the sealing area around the wearer's face is typically the greatest source of leakage.)

Concentrations of airborne particulate radioactive materials at nuclear power plants and other licensed facilities are generally sufficiently low and worker exposure times typically sufficiently brief so that the protection factors necessary to achieve compliance with the 10 CFR 20 quarterly radioactive material intake limit are generally well below the protection factors allotted for filter respirators. Thus, the NRC staff has no reason to believe measurable increases in exposures of workers to airborne radioactive material resulted from the MSA filter problem.

NIOSH and the NRC staff believe that MSA Company's product improvement commitments will suffice to correct the problem. NIOSH is relying on their routine field audit program and information supplied to them from users in the field to corroborate this belief (see Attachment 3). Licensees that have remnants of orders purchased before the date that the manufacturer instituted the more restrictive quality control rejection criteria (October 15, 1983) may want to do representative sampling of cases of new, unused filters as recommended in NUREG-0041 (page 10-3).

Recipients should review the information discussed in this notice for possible applicability to the respiratory protection program at their facility. No written response to this information notice is required. If you desire additional information regarding this matter, contact the Regional Administrator of the appropriate NRC regional office or this office.

GUIDELINES FOR REPORTING RESPIRATOR PROBLEMS

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) recognizes that a respirator user may occasionally find a problem which is identified as a defect in the design and/or performance of a MSHA/NIOSH-approved respirator. NIOSH encourages users to report such a defect to the manufacturer of the respirator and to NIOSH. To assist the manufacturer and NIOSH in their investigations, the user should report the following information:

- Name, address, and telephone number of reporter;
- Name of respirator manufacturer;
- Model number of respirator;
- Approval number of respirator;
- Name and part number (if known) of defective part;
- Lot number and/or serial number of respirator and/or defective part;
- Brief description of how respirator was used during discovery of defect;
- Description of defect; and
- Description of how defect adversely affects performance of respirator.

The respirator user should report the defect to the manufacturer, with a copy or supplemental telephone call to NIOSH. The report to NIOSH should be addressed to NIOSH Division of Safety Research, Testing and Certification Branch, 944 Chestnut Ridge Road, Morgantown, WV 26505 (304-291-4361/FTS 923-4361).
