Subject: No Gillnets

To: pfmc.comments@noaa.gov

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

Keep gillnets illegal. Gillnet will kill many fish that will not be eaten. Those will die for nothing. Enough use of gillnets might disrupt food webs alone. There will be fish who die from having too little to eat and too few resources to use.

Sincerely,

RE: TRANSITIONING THE CALIFORNIA DRIFT GILLNET FISHERY TO MORE SUSTAINABLE GEAR TYPES

Dear Mr. Stelle and Ms. Lowman:

California lawmakers have written letters in the past outlining our concerns regarding the use of drift gillnets in California. While progress has been made, the amount of bycatch caught in drift gillnets used to capture swordfish remains unacceptable.

Consequently, this letter is to express our continued concerns and to request that the Pacific Fishery Management Council and the National Marine Fisheries Service provide a written swordfish fishery transition plan. The plan should include a timeline for the eventual prohibition of drift gillnet gear, immediate implementation of hard caps, and a goal of 100% catch and bycatch monitoring.

Much of the bycatch is wasted. Additionally, large-mesh drift gillnets catch endangered and protected species that are of great significance to the people of California and are an important part of the ocean ecosystem. The California drift gillnet swordfish fishery kills more marine mammals than all other West Coast and Alaska fisheries combined. Due to the indiscriminate nature of drift gillnets, they are banned on the high seas, prohibited throughout the Mediterranean Sea, not permitted by Oregon or Washington states, and are prohibited by the National Marine Fisheries Service in the North Atlantic swordfish fishery off the U.S. East Coast.

In March 2014, the Pacific Fishery Management Council committed to the "goal of developing a comprehensive plan to transition the current drift gillnet fishery to a fishery utilizing more environmentally and economically sustainable gear that can effectively target the healthy West Coast swordfish stock." As we seek to achieve a sustainable fishery only alternatives with very little or no bycatch should be pursued. For example, in furtherance of that goal, recent experiments by the Pflieger Institute of Environmental Research and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (funded largely by the California Ocean Protection Council) with deep-set buoy gear have shown promising results as an alternative gear type with reduced bycatch.

We encourage efforts to develop and promote such alternatives to drift gillnets, and believe these experiments should continue as part of the swordfish fishery transition plan away from drift gillnets.

We look forward to working together on this important issue.

RE: TRANSITIONING THE CALIFORNIA DRIFT GILLNETS TO MORE SUSTAINABLE GEAR TYPES

Dear Mr. Levine, Mr. Stone, Mr. Williams, Mr. Bloom, and Senator Monning:

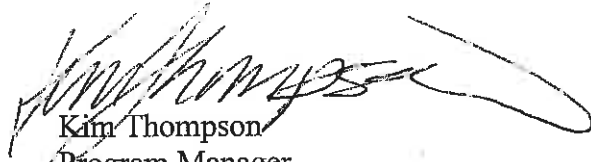

The Aquarium of the Pacific shares your concerns about the bycatch in the California swordfish drift gillnet fishery. We applaud your support of a transition plan that will support an environmentally and economically sustainable fishery. A successful transition plan that recognizes a suite of potential alternative gear types, including the deep-set buoy and the deep-set longline gear types, will allow local fisherman to continue to meet the consumer demand for swordfish on a local level rather than sending it to global sources, some of which are far more environmentally destructive. This can also serve as a blueprint for phasing out destructive drift gillnet fisheries around the world. It is essential that we seize this opportunity to lead the way toward global bycatch reduction by creating a transition plan that results in economic stability for the fishermen and coastal communities, as well as protection of the environment. Serving as an example of how this can be achieved will increase the likelihood of adoption in fisheries where bycatch is poorly regulated and highly destructive.

Thank you for recognizing the need for a transition plan that will reduce bycatch locally and globally.

Sincerely,

Jerry Schubel

Re: Drift Gillnets

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members,

I am aware that the drift gillnet fishery, which targets swordfish and thresher sharks, entangles and kills over a hundred protected marine mammals per year. I am also aware that it entangles endangered sea turtles and sperm whales, and kills unacceptably high numbers of non-target species such as blue sharks, bigeye thresher sharks, striped marlin, and ocean sunfish.

In preparation for your meeting in March, please know that I want you to move away from drift gillnets and implement more sustainable methods of fishing. And while fishermen transition toward less-wasteful fishing methods, I want you to adopt enforceable limits on the catch of vulnerable and endangered species.

In order to maintain ocean health and biodiversity of the California Current marine ecosystem, drift gillnets must be eliminated and replaced with fishing methods that are proven to be clean. Ultimately, management resources must focus upon promoting and developing gear types that demonstrably minimize by-catch. It is your responsibility to identify and promote such methods. Please move away from drift gillnets! Thank you.

With utmost conviction and sincerity,

Linn D. Barrett

Dear Ms. Lowman and Council Members,

PFMC

I urge you to establish a definitive phase-out plan for the use of drift gillnets off the U.S. west coast, and in the interim implement the strongest possible hard caps for the 2015/2016 fishing season and beyond.

Hard caps should be implemented for endangered fin, humpback and sperm whales, short-finned pilot whales, dolphins, pinnipeds, and endangered leatherback, loggerhead, olive ridley and green sea turtles, all of which are at risk of entanglement, injury and death in the California-based swordfish drift gillnet fishery.

How can you allow this fishery to continue to kill dolphins, sea lions, marlins, and large numbers of sharks without consequence? I would like you to require 100 percent observer coverage and/or electronic monitoring. The by-catch in drift gillnets is sickening.

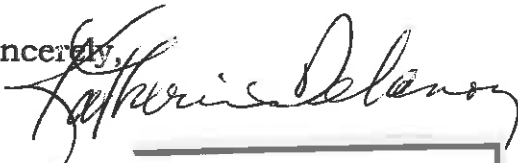

You know what these mile-long drift gillnets do. These nets entangle and kill roughly 100 protected marine mammals per year, continue to take endangered sea turtles and whales.

Hard caps should be an interim measure to provide critical marine life with additional safeguards while a full transition plan to clean gear types is developed and implemented. Longlines should not be considered as an acceptable transition gear; this gear has been banned off California for 30 years.

The Pacific Fishery Management Council has a responsibility to protect marine life.

Please vote to safeguard our ocean wildlife; establish a transition plan that phases out and prohibits drift gillnets, with meaningful hard caps and 100 percent monitoring designed to reduce and control by-catch in this fishery as an interim measure.

Sincerely,

Ms. Katherine Delaney

RE: Highly Migratory Species, Drift Gillnets

Dear Ms. Lowman and Council Members, Ms. Sobeck and Mr. Stelle:

We the undersigned 22,819 individuals (including 4,362 California residents, 625 Oregon residents, 863 Washington residents, and 109 Idaho residents), urge you to establish a definitive phase-out plan for the use of drift gillnets off the U.S. West Coast, and in the interim implement the strongest possible hard caps for the 2015/2016 fishing season and beyond. Hard caps should be implemented for endangered fin, humpback and sperm whales, short-finned pilot whales, dolphins, pinnipeds, and endangered leatherback, loggerhead, olive ridley and green sea turtles, all of which are at risk of entanglement, injury and death in the California-based swordfish drift gillnet fishery. It is not acceptable to allow this fishery to continue to kill dolphins, sea lions, marlins, and large numbers of sharks without consequence. To effectively implement hard caps, we ask the Council to immediately require 100 percent observer coverage and/or electronic monitoring. Despite current regulations, the bycatch in drift gillnets is simply deplorable.

Mile-long drift gillnets, meant for swordfish and thresher sharks, form dangerous underwater walls of death that drown or critically injure an appalling number of other animals. These nets entangle and kill roughly 100 protected marine mammals per year, continue to take endangered sea turtles and whales, and kill unacceptably high numbers of non-target species such as blue sharks, bigeye thresher sharks, striped marlin, ocean sunfish and others.

Hard caps should be an interim measure to provide critical marine life with additional safeguards while a full transition plan to clean gear types, such as deep set buoy gear, is developed and implemented. Longlines should not be considered as an acceptable transition gear, as this gear has been banned off California for 30 years due to an equally concerning array of bycatch of sensitive, vulnerable species.

The Pacific Fishery Management Council and the National Marine Fisheries Service have a responsibility to protect marine life. Please vote to safeguard our ocean wildlife; establish a transition plan that phases out and prohibits drift gillnets, with meaningful hard caps and 100 percent monitoring designed to reduce and control bycatch in this fishery as an interim measure.

Sincerely,

The undersigned 22,819 individuals.

RE: H.4. Drift Gillnets

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

We write to express serious concern with the continued management and authorization of drift gillnets used to target swordfish in the California Current ecosystem. We urge you to immediately develop a transition plan that ends the use of drift gillnets and promotes clean gear alternatives. During the transition period to a sustainable swordfish fishery, we request that the Pacific Fishery Management Council (PFMC) and National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) immediately implement meaningful annual hard caps that limit and reduce the bycatch of whales, dolphins, pinnipeds, sea turtles and fish species taken in this fishery, enforced with 100% observer coverage and/or electronic monitoring.

Drift gillnets – approximately one mile in length – are set at night in ocean waters off California to target swordfish and thresher sharks, but instead catch nearly 60 different species of marine life including many types of whales, dolphins, seals, sea lions, sea turtles, sharks, tunas, marlins, and other fishes.¹ On average approximately 64% of the catch is discarded. Approximately one quarter of these discards are already dead upon release, and the post-release survivorship of the remaining discards is unknown for most bycatch species.

The use of drift gillnets is also harming recreational fishing, depleting the ocean of fishing opportunities that support outdoor tourism and local jobs. Importantly, other gear types like harpoon and deep-set buoy gear can be used to target swordfish in a clean and responsible manner. Swordfish caught with these gears earn substantially higher prices in the marketplace relative to drift gillnet-caught swordfish. We urge the PFMC and NMFS to promote these gear types as part of the transition away from drift gillnets. However, we strongly oppose the consideration of pelagic longlines as a potential alternative gear type, as this method has been prohibited off the West Coast for decades due to equally problematic bycatch concerns that have yet to be solved.

When implementing interim management measures to reduce bycatch in this fishery, annual hard caps should be set so that if reached or exceeded, the fishery will be closed for the remainder of the year. These caps must be set at low levels so that they act as a strong incentive to reduce and avoid bycatch from current unacceptable levels. We support 100% monitoring so that the bycatch caps can be quickly enforced when reached.

In this time of ecosystem-based fishery management it would be irresponsible to continue to allow drift gillnets to catch and kill our nation's ocean wildlife and recklessly discard unwanted catch. This drift gillnet swordfish fishery – making up less than one-half of one percent of the value of California's fisheries – has failed to meet the bar of sustainable management despite over 30 years of attempts to address bycatch concerns. Please act now to implement hard bycatch caps for the 2015/16 season and beyond and establish a swordfish fishery transition plan that ends the use of this gear type.

RE: Agenda Item H.4 Drift Gillnet Management and Monitoring Plan Including Final Action on Hard Caps

Dear Chair Lowman,

The Pew Charitable Trusts has collected 15,103 comments encouraging the Council to set enforceable limits on the catch of vulnerable and endangered species while fishermen make the transition to less-wasteful fishing methods. Please include the attached petition as an electronic submission on the web site for the supplemental briefing book.

The petition itself is included along with the names and cities of individual signers that were gathered as of Feb. 9. The Council may continue to receive additional comments in the days ahead.

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

At your March meeting, the Council will make important decisions on how to manage the West Coast swordfish fishery. I encourage the council to move this fishery away from drift gillnets to more sustainable methods of fishing. In the meantime, the council should adopt enforceable limits on the catch of vulnerable and endangered species to protect the ocean ecosystem while fishermen make the transition to less-wasteful fishing methods. Vessels using drift gillnets are outlawed on the high seas and in the Mediterranean Sea and are no longer allowed to land their catch in Oregon and Washington.

Animals unintentionally caught in drift gillnets are an important part of the ocean ecosystem and are of great national significance. They provide aesthetic and recreational value and enhance the economies of coastal communities through whale watching tours, dive trips, and other tourism activities. It is simply not acceptable to indefinitely permit the killing of dolphins and other marine life by the drift gillnet fishery. The Council should protect these species by ensuring that fishing is conducted in the least harmful way.

At your upcoming meeting, I encourage you to set enforceable limits on the killing of nontarget marine life and increase monitoring of drift gillnets. However, I do not believe this is a long-term solution. Every year that is spent making incremental changes to the drift gillnet fishery will delay the necessary transition to cleaner and more sustainable fishing methods.

Thank you for your work to protect our marine ecosystem.

			Drift gillnets have to be banned. Just because you catch your precious swordfish doesn't give you the right to use them to kill endangered species of shark, dolphin, whale, and sea turtles. I live in California and I go to the beach constantly and when I was younger there were so many dolphins you would swim with them many graceful and beautiful, harmless sharks swimming and a whale would pass by in the sunset but now you don't see that any more. On top of all that you're not just killing endangered specimen but also non-endangered specimen and destroying whole reefs and polluting and cluttering up the ocean with broken nets. Did you know that when you kill the sharks in an area the coral reefs all die, I didn't think so. Did you know every time you kill a group of whales the plankton in the waters gets excessive and the oxygen in the water is depleted and a bunch of fish and coral reefs die. did you know every time you catch and kill any of these animal YOUR BREAKING THE LAW it's illegal to do anything your doing except using the drift gill nets please im begging you please STOP using the drift gillnets for the sake of our oceans, and to conclude you destroy many habitats and marine plants which give the whole earth 70% of all the oxgen comes

LISA ALGEE	Aptos	CA	I personally do not eat swordfish because of the unsustainable way it is caught. If the fisheries changed their method to a more sustainable one, then I would start eating swordfish again. Swordfish is on the red list of the Monterey Bay Aquarium SeaFood Watch and a lot of people are aware about how this fishery is unsustainable, so change your ways and make more money, in addition to not changing incidental animals, such as whales, dolphins, turtles, etc...

DR. DERRELL CHAMBERS	Kensington	CA	There is a very large environmental cost to killing unintended animals through by-catch. Those costs are the long-term loss in marine productivity derived from a healthy marine ecosystem. That long-term environmental cost is not measured in the market price of swordfish. Eliminating drift nets will help to reduce those external costs, and to the extent that the market price of swordfish increases that increase begins to reflect the true cost of consuming the product. Please eliminate all drift nets and support creating a true market cost for swordfish that is not implicitly subsidized by ignoring the huge cost of environmental externalities that are paid by everyone in future generations.

			I personally fish swordfish in so California im a commercial fisherman using a hand held har-poon 0 by catch, there a new style of deap water bouy gear being experimented with that shows lots of promise at the depth fished there is no by catch and the fish come up alive so if it's too small it can be released,this type of fishing should be made legal for commercial sword-fishermen to deploy in 2015

That being said, I know that it is imperative to maintain a fishery that is sustainable for the long run and to help keep a fishery sustainable, we need to limit and reduce bycatch. It is my hope that you help keep all fisheries as sustainable as possible with little to no bycatch for many years to come. Please stand with us to keep this fishery open and environmentally conscious. I also know that the observer pro-gram for the west coast differs from Alaska's program but we need more monitoring on these boats to help get accurate information regarding bycatch and limiting incidental take of marine mammals.

HILARY LORRAINE	Kensington	CA	There is a very large environmental cost to killing unintended animals through by-catch. Those costs are the long-term loss in marine productivity derived from a healthy marine ecosystem. That long-term environmental cost is not measured in the market price of swordfish. Eliminating drift nets will help to reduce those external costs, and to the extent that the market price of swordfish increases that increase begins to reflect the true cost of consuming the product. Please eliminate all drift nets and support creating a true market cost for swordfish that is not implicitly subsidized by ignoring the huge cost of environmental externalities that are paid by everyone in future generations.

In the age when oceans are struggling with warming and acidifying we don't need to add to these problems with which our ocean creatures have to contend. Washington and Oregon have prohibited their fishermen from using destructive drift gillnets. Uphold your reputation as leaders in responsible fisheries management and make drift gillnets a thing of the past.

Gillnet fishing is a bit like hand grenade fishing, you toss in your net and everything in its path is entangled. Let's protect our seas and natural resources and help fishermen to fish. By banning the use of gillnets, it allows fishermen to utilize minimal bycatch fishing methods, methods we no longer employ because they cannot compete with the gillnet fishery. Thank you for supporting our oceans and the way of life of the fisherman for future generations. Earl Richmond

RUDY STEFENEL	Milpitas	CA	We need a way to provide the world energy needs that won't contribute to climate change. It is called MSRs (Molten Salt Reactors). As a bonus, they run hot enough to make vehicle fuels from CO2 and water and hot enough to desalinate water too. They are a totally different than light-water nuclear reactors. They can't blow up because they don't use super-heated water, don't produce loose hydrogen when things go wrong, and they run at atmospheric pressure. They can't melt down because they use a liquid salt solution instead of solid fuel rods. This concept was proven at Oak Ridge National Labs in the 1960s with the MSRE (Molten Salt Reactor Experiment). They can run on any nuclear fuel except U238, but they can be specially designed to run on it. Most important, they can run on thorium. The world has about 400 times as much thorium in the earth's crust as the uranium-235 that is used now in nuclear reactors. MSRs can be designed to run on nuclear waste too, so we can get rid of it. Clean, safe, electric power, cheaper than coal,

ROBERT ASKEY	Newberg	OR	Gillnetting on the Columbia River will be illegal as of 2017. Reason Native and endangered salmon and Steelhead are being killed. Other animals that get into the gillnets are also killed. Gillnets kill everything that gets in them. There have been efforts to get gillnets off the Columbia River for a good 50 years. Gillnetters are still trying to over turn the direction their method of fishing is going. In 2017 they will have to use methods that allow sorting and releasing wild salmon and Steelhead unharmed.

I currently work at Marco Global, a major equipment supplier to the West Coast fishing fleets. Suffice it to say that I know fishing on the Pacific, and my economic livelihood depends on selling gear to fishermen. With that being said, it makes no sense to use fishing methods that catch everything, instead of just the target species. Sure, banning outdated fishing methods will upset some people, but I would rather lose my job because fisherman can't afford to buy equipment from me than destroy the web of life in the ocean so that my children and their children have no food to eat.

			It's a scientific fact that ocean fisheries are in danger and, in some cases, are at risk of complete economic collapse. Use of drift gill nets are a significant contributor to the problem. Clearly, if there is any hope of salvaging these critical resources, gill nets must be eliminated. Consider also the fact that escaped and abandoned gill nets continue to constitute a marine hazard for decades. Their use cannot be justified from either an ecological nor a commercial basis: please act decisively and ban use of these devices immediately.

I have seen them in rehab facilities. Whales caught in nets, if fortunate enough to be seen by people at sea, have needed challenging rescues. 			Do we really need to eat swordfish at all? The vast majority of informed people are quick to condemn the ignorance of the Chinese for bringing rhinos and tigers to the brink of extinction because of their ill-founded believe in the sexual potency embodied in the horns and bile of rhinos and tigers. What's the real difference here? Is it the need to prove one can afford to eat swordfish? To paraphrase Mark Twain, when earth is no longer fit for human habitation at least we can say we did it to ourselves.

ELENA RUMIANTSEVA	Seattle	WA
BARBARA RUSSELL	mount vernon	WA
DAN RYEN	Winthrop	WA	Maintaining a healthy ocean ecosystem and providing target specific fishing methods for fisheries is critical for ensuring long term sustainable fishing. Words like sustainable and environment often raise hackles within industry circles, leading to a disregard of the information it pertains to. In reality a sustainable harvest is one that will allow the economic continuity of the fishing industry and a healthy marine ecosystem is one that will produce more biomass, allowing for larger takes to still be sustainable. Drift netting is not the way to ensure either of these. Any harvest method that takes indiscriminately, ultimately reduces the ability of the ecosystem to maintain at a healthy level. Whereas most ecosystems on land are plant based, almost all ocean ecosystems are dependent on animal life, and removing individuals from that ecosystem does affect it's resiliency. I am not arguing this from an emotional perspective. The ethical do's and don't's of commercial fishing are not as relevant as the objective values of taking more than is being produced. There have been many notable fishery collapses that ruined multi-generational fishing communities. Coupled with growing pollution, ocean acidification and increased worldwide demand for seafood, it is critical that we do whatever it takes to maintain healthy fisheries, even if that means limiting catches. Ultimately for the fishing industry to survive, the methods and mindsets of how to fish need to adapt. Gillnetting and other non-specific fishing strategies are outdated and wastefully destructive. We can't control what is happening in other parts of the world, but we can ensure that our coasts and territorial waters are maintained for the long term. Please keep at the forefront of management decisions the long-term outlook of ocean health and maintainable harvests. Not just 5-10 years in the future but 50-100. Generations from now people will be affected by the decisions we make today. Choose wisely.

			Dear Council Members, Please enforce the removal of gill-net fishing to decrease the deaths of non-target (and sometimes endangered or vulnerable) species. 			How dare we, as a society, decide that the 1% who own major companies including fisheries operations that impact our the worlds fisheries, nutrition for millions can get richer, and that they donâ€™t have to abide by regulations to protect the rest of society? GREED is the only answer to why we even have this dilema in our country. I would hope that the administration would start using the word GREED to describe what is actually going on here. Our society is being ruined for the sack of the 1% to make and take it all! Greed is taking over our responsibilities to our overall society, because the 1% feels it is the country's responsibilities to ensure their wealth, which of course is their GREED.

			Drift Gillnets kill everything, anything it comes into contact with. They are a lazy, careless, inhumane, cruel and barbaric way to fish.. Totally unnecessary but only for the people and companies that are not compassionate to suffering and only care about profits. Ban them from the Earth, all species in our Oceans deserve better than this.

Sharks are not our friends, and are elegant predator machines....and evolutionarily quite old. Sea lions, seals, otters ...these are adorable furry mammals , trainable, and appealing to our human nature...Sea otters and sea lions playing in the waves...one of my indelible memories of the Crescent City area coast of Northern CA...Let's not waste this sweetness and history...Let's cut the drift gillnet and let these creatures be. Out of respect and out of our

VIRGINIA DWYER	Clark Mills	NY	It is unacceptable to harm iconic and endangered species to catch a luxury seafood item such as swordfish. We want dolphin-safe swordfish.
			I'm a certified SCUBA diver and I respect all kinds of ocean life. I have encountered dolphins, sea turtles, seals and sea lions, sharks, large groupers and numerous species of fish while diving in the Pacific and the Caribbean. Gillnets are indiscriminate in the way they catch fish since they capture any creature that gets in the way. This sort of fishing needs to stop now. We must protect vulnerable and endangered sea animals from gillnets. They should be banned in all fisheries so that we can protect our ocean ecosystems everywhere.

Ignorance is usually bliss, but in our information overload world, this does not ring true, and is unacceptable for people in position such as your self to allow these activities to operate. Our marine life serves a function, and the more we interfere the more we upset the balance, therefore making more problems. Nature should not be managed, only cared for. BONNIE HYLTON	Longmont	CO	It's time to stop the drift gillnets from catching all kinds of species of fish! Many species are beginning to fight for their very lives and to remain a viable presence in the oceans. Please help stop the drift gillnets and put a strict limit in place!!! OUR very lives may eventually depend on things done (or NOT done) N-O-W!!! Thank you for doing the right thing for people, fish, other marine life, and the ocean!

MARION W. HYLTON	Gainesville	FL	Drift gillnets must be banned off our California coast. They are taking far too high a toll on too many species.
DONNA HYNDMAN	New Orleans	LA	Gill nets are a crime against respect for the environment and for life itself, including marine mammals. They should be TOTALLY outlawed. NO one has the right to such indiscriminate and wholesale destruction. Certainly profit and money canNOT justify such a practice. And yes, enforcement must be built into what is decided.

TIM LEIGHTON	charlotte	NC	People have and the fisheries management foundations have done an extremely poor job respecting sea life, as though we're unappreciative of the value they provide to mankind. We're recklessly killing animals through selfishly lazy, destructive, and hopefully someday banned, practices. Bigger, faster, cheaper will be the ruination of our society if we continue to apply these philosophies to fishing. If we must catch fish, then we should employ the most humane methods possible that avoid by catch, and the price of such fish should reflect this. That means higher price for less fish. Americans could certainly stand to eat less, and paying more for something is about the only way to get through to Americans when it comes to reducing eating.

MICHAEL MACPHERSON	Milbridge	ME	I have been on various fishing boats both Gillnetters and Lobster boats with friends in the fishing industry, that work on and or own the boats. I spoke with them in length about fishing and conservation and they all say the same thing, they have a hard enough time catching enough fish to pay for their boats and making enough money to pay the bills, they have no time to worry about whether other sea creatures die caught in their nets. If other sea creatures do die in their nets that are too big to remove, they will just cut the nets loose and replace the nets. The reason we must have regulations with laws to back them up is fishermen and refineries are only interested in profits, making a living for themselves and their families. The last thing on their minds is whether other sea creatures are dying in their nets, if a whale, Dolphin, Shark or Sea Turtle dies in their nets, the net is cut lose and the nets and the lives lost is just the cost of doing business.

TERRI MELLOWAY	Gold Coast,	Queen sland	Revision must be made regarding the methods of Drift Gill Nets because they indiscriminately catch all kinds of marine life, including whales, dolphins, sharks, sea lions, sea turtles, and many other species of fish. A drift gill net fishery targeting Swordfisk still operates off the coast of California. More selective gear must be imply implemented, and strict control must be enforced to reduce the number of vulnerable animals and fish incidentally killed by drift gill nets.

CHERIE MILBURN	Spring Hill	FL	Drift gillnets are in an indiscriminate killer of all marine life. They are illegal in other parts of the ocean and should be here as well. The bottom line is this fishery continues to use this form of fishing regardless of its casualties, all for profit. Man never ceases to disappoint me in their destructive indifference towards other species. Companies like these should not only be held accountable but to higher standards of sustainable fishing. It is time for fisheries like this one to give back what it has for so long taken for granted and change their methods of fishing to a more eco-friendly system, otherwise continued decimation of all marine life will continue until there is none left.

			I urge you to support sustainable fishing methods that don't endanger other species; it's time to change the way swordfish are caught. You have a reputation as responsible fishery management, and I hope you will continue to earn this reputation by making wise, long-term decisions to protect important sea creatures. Humans can live well eating less swordfish, but sea creatures cannot continue to thrive if gillnets continue to be used.

Where will these companies be when no animals are to be found and the oceans die? They like everyone else will move on, if we can survive without the oceans... doubt it! We cannot survive it's destruction, and not because we need fish to eat; we don't. Mankind will simply stop eating fish and actually within less than a year forget they ever ate seafood. However, all life on earth depends on oceans being robust, our souls depend on us changing our behavior and attitudes and to stop acting like gods with baby brains! Tsk!

STEPHEN ROBARDS	Kiama	New South Wales	I might live on the east coast of Australia however the west coast of the US is the same ocean that laps the shores of both countries. Disappearing at a rapid rate are the actions and laws that were created at a time when as human beings our thinking was in an Industrial Era. We now live in an era that appreciates and understands how we are interconnected and because of this boundary lines drawn on maps are holding less and less meaning. I would greatly encourage the council to seize this opportunity to have their name remembered as a body who contributed to this new era by banning drift gillnets. Your children and grandchildren will love you for this decision.

LIZ S	Henrico	VA	The United States should be leaders in proactively supporting a ban on using these nets anywhere along our coastlines for any reason. We should be promoting this ban to other countries, as well as refusing to allow the landing of or selling of fish from vessels that use these nets. We should be developing and putting into use ecosystem friendly alternatives that do not trap and kill indiscriminately.
LIZ S.	Henrico	VA	It is ridiculous and shameful that more advanced methods and equipment have not been developed and put into permanent required use. The US should be innovative, proactive, and ahead of the game in all areas of conservation, safety, and humanity, but we aren't. Swallowing a vast realm of the pelagic ecosystem within inescapable netting and drowning countless intelligent, sentient creatures, whose only crime is swimming amidst lucrative swordfish and thresher sharks, is morally profane and offensive to our dignity. DANIEL WELLS	Manchester		Without sustainable fishing methods your fisheries will collapse, denying fishermen their livelihoods and people a source of food. Ensuring non-target species are not killed will help create healthy marine systems. According to scientists at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) 2012, dolphins should be treated as non-human persons, with their rights to life and liberty respected. This is based on years of research that has shown dolphins and whales have large, complex brains and a human-like level of self-awareness. This makes the indiscriminant killing of dolphins and whales in drift gillnets an even greater tragedy. http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-17116882

RE: Comments on Council Agenda Item H.4 Drift Gillnet Management and Monitoring Plan Including Final Action on Hard Caps

Dear Chairman Lowman, Council Members and Administrator Stelle,

Turtle Island Restoration Network, on behalf of our more than 65,000 members, strongly urges the Pacific Fishery Management Council to end the use of drift gillnet gear in all waters under its jurisdiction as soon as possible in order to develop a fishery utilizing a suite of more environmentally sustainable gear types. During any such transition period, we urge the implementation of strict hard caps for each species protected under U.S. law, international treaty, listed on the IUCN redlist, or species that are so rare that the impacts of take cannot be evaluated with currently available data.

TIRN's position is informed by the reality of declining populations of a wide suite of fish, marine mammal, and marine reptile species globally, which is the ultimate standard of whether existing regulatory approaches are adequate. Current science suggests strongly that industrial fishing is contributing to ongoing declines across a wide range of species^{1,2,3,4}. So long as these trends continue, use of the world's most indiscriminate and harmful gear must be discontinued, especially where, as here, less destructive gear types are readily available. Despite some three decades of attempts to provide technological or regulatory solutions to the problems of high bycatch of threatened species, the California drift gill net fishery remains among the most destructive gears used in U.S. waters.

TIRN would be remiss not to acknowledge and applaud the past efforts the Council has made to resist expansion of this fishery into the Pacific Leatherback Conservation Area. As is noted below, the twenty boats employing this gear have a vastly disproportionate impact on marine wildlife, making drift gill net gear an obvious candidate for elimination in the national effort to bring our fisheries on to a truly sustainable basis (that is, one that does not deplete non target species or impede their recovery from past practices). Indeed, the Council has previously reached the inevitable conclusion that drift gill net gear must be abandoned as fundamentally incompatible with maintenance of intact marine ecosystems. We strongly urge the Council to return to that approach.

Overall Bycatch

Fundamentally, there is essentially no way for a net the size of the Golden Gate Bridge to catch everything in its path without having substantial impacts on marine ecosystems, short of reducing or eliminating their use. The failure of past regulatory efforts to markedly reduce the overall bycatch strongly suggests that additional efforts to reduce the overall ecological impacts of this fishery are unlikely to meet with greater success, given the large number of species threatened by this gear.

From an ecosystem perspective, the sheer inefficiency at catching target marketable species makes the drift gill net exceptionally poorly suited for an economy grappling with the impacts of past wasteful practices. As the council is well aware, the NOAA observer program shows that over the last 10 years, approximate 64% of all individual animals caught by this gear are ultimately discarded. To place this in a global perspective, the discard rate of the California drift gill net fishery places it in the top 20% of the highest bycatch fisheries in the world.⁵ Three decades of regulatory efforts have failed to significantly improve the efficiency of this gear and reduce overall bycatch to even a globally average performance.⁶

Approximately a quarter of all discarded animals are already dead upon discard, while the overwhelming bulk of the remainder is of species for which no post-release mortality data are available. Any assumption that these animals survive at a high rate is unwarranted and decisions based on such assumptions would clearly be arbitrary and capricious.

As a result of the indiscriminate approach, drift gill nets virtually invariably result in an exceptionally high level of bycatch. Although the composition and age structure of the bycatch can be manipulated to a certain extent through changes in the timing and location of net placement, the past three decades of regulatory experience suggests that adjustments merely swap one kind of bycatch for another. As a result, the Food and Agriculture Organization classifies large-scale pelagic driftnets generally as an “inadequate practice” and destructive.⁷

As the Council has also been reminded repeatedly, these characteristics of the gear have led to a ban of large-scale pelagic driftnets on the high seas by the U.N.⁸ as implemented by the U.S.⁹, and a ban by the state of Washington.¹⁰

Critically, overall the California drift gill net fishery has a disproportionate impact on endangered or IUCN red listed species.¹¹ In part as the result of the indiscriminate nature of the fishery, between 2004 and 2014, fully 21% of the catch consisted of IUCN Red List species (9% was Near Threatened, 12% Vulnerable or Critically Endangered), including endangered leatherback sea turtles, sperm whales, short fin mako sharks, blue fin tuna and smooth hammerheads. Red Listed Vulnerable thresher and mako sharks together make up 10% of the catch and are targeted, retained and sold, despite concern about the sustainability of their harvest. Vulnerable blue sharks make up 5% of the catch, but are discarded directly overboard.

While efforts to address individual species such as leatherback turtles or sperm whales may be successful with respect to these species, the drift gill net fishery has proven unable to avoid the remaining vulnerable and threatened species.

Cetaceans

Although significant efforts have been made to reduce the take of cetaceans by this fishery, nevertheless the fewer than fifty boats have managed to take nearly twenty times more cetaceans all other fisheries along the US Pacific coast and Alaska combined. In the last ten years, an estimated 885 marine mammals have been killed. Observed takes of marine mammals include two Endangered sperm whales, which died after becoming entangled in driftnets in 2010 alone.¹² (Based on the observer coverage rate, this gives rise to an estimate of 15.5 sperm whale entanglements for the entire fishery.) Over the period from 2007-2010, this fishery caught an annual average of 67.8 cetaceans.¹³ The second most damaging fishery averaged 1.4 individuals per year. The fishery also remains one of the top two worst fisheries on the west coast in terms of marine mammals overall, taking more than Oregon, Washington and Alaska fisheries combined.¹⁴ Again, despite the strong regulatory efforts to reduce cetacean take, the fact remains that on current data the Council could reduce cetacean take from these fisheries by approximately 95% simply by transitioning twenty boats away from drift gill net gear.

Sharks

Globally, shark species are facing steep declines in many populations globally. Indeed, one of the two target species of this fishery, the common thresher shark (Alopias vulpinus) is IUCN redlisted as vulnerable and was extended international protection through listing on Appendix II of the Convention for the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals at the 11th Conference of the Parties in November 2014. The Bigeye thresher shark (Alopias superciliosus) has a similar status, yet this fishery takes nearly a thousand individuals in the period 2004-2014, with over half of all individuals discarded, and virtually all dead. Indeed, it was concerns of profound depletion of thresher shark populations that prompted Washington State to ban drift gill nets in its waters.¹⁵ In addition, this fishery takes significant numbers of IUCN threatened mako, blue and hammerhead sharks. By any reasonable definition of the word, a fishery that targets a threatened species and takes significant numbers of internationally protected species facing severe population declines cannot be deemed sustainable.

Megamouth Sharks

The exceptional impact of this fishery on the megamouth shark deserves special mention. The megamouth shark was only discovered in 1976, and since then fewer than 70 specimens have ever been reported. Despite an apparent range from California to the Philippines to Senegal, of all the known sightings of this extremely rare species, almost 10% were entangled in driftnets of a very small number of boats in California out of the entire global fishing fleet. This species is in fact so rare that there is not adequate data to evaluate the population or conservation impacts of this take. Although the megamouth shark is of virtually no regulatory significance to the Council under U.S. law, biologically the implications of this fact are unavoidable. To our knowledge, no measures have been taken to reduce bycatch of this species.

Sea Turtles

Sea turtles represent a significant element of the bycatch of this fishery, albeit as only one chapter in the overall picture of this fishery. The leatherback in particular is critically endangered, and on current trends may be extinct by 2030, absent serious efforts to reverse current practices.¹⁶¹⁷¹⁸¹⁹

As has been noted, the bycatch of the critically endangered leatherback sea turtle in particular has been dramatically reduced almost entirely by reducing fishing effort and by prohibiting drift gill nets within the Pacific Leatherback Conservation Area. As noted below, the take of leatherback and loggerhead sea turtles declined as a result of the exclusion by over 90%.

Table 1. Turtle Bycatch in the California Driftnet Fishery before and since the creation of the Pacific Leatherback Conservation Area (PLCA). Data compiled from Shore 2013.

Species	Estimated Deaths Before PLCA 1990-2000 (15% Avg. Observer Coverage)	Estimated Deaths After PLCA 2001-2010 (20% Avg. Observer Coverage)
Leatherback Turtle	112	6
Loggerhead Turtle	25	3
Turtle Unidentified	15	*
Green Turtle	7

Remarkably, given that this PLCA is quite possibly the most effective regulatory measure in reducing bycatch from this fishery, there are perennial proposals to open this area and undo one of the few measures that have worked dramatically. Not surprisingly, TIRN strongly urges the Council not to open this area to expanded indiscriminate fishing, whether with drift gill nets or longlines. There is scant evidence that an expansion of effort in this area would result in anything other than a commensurate increase in the take of leatherbacks comparable to the levels prior to the creation of the PLCA.

Estimation of ecological impacts

As has been noted throughout, drift gill net gear has a particular impact on a wide number of rare species, not all of which are currently proposed to be subject to hard caps. However, even the use of hard caps suffers from persistent methodological issues arising from the fact that population data on highly migratory rare species is sparse. As a consequence, estimates of potential biological replacement for each species are subject both to instability of parameter estimates, resulting in significant error, and to some sensitivity in these estimates to methodological approach. In fact, NOAA's efforts to base quotas on such estimates have received significant criticism. For example, in the case of upward revisions of sperm whale populations based on Bayesian analyses by Moore and Barlow²⁰, the parameter estimates in the model are fairly unstable, as noted by the authors themselves.

As a practical matter, the uncertainty inherently places an unreasonable risk on the populations of rare species, while it may be likely that takes of a particular species are below replacement, it is also quite probable that the takes actually exceed replacement rate. Since the downside risk of being wrong would be the extinction of the species, while the upside benefit is merely to allow additional fishing, failure to adjust hard caps sharply downward to account for the disproportionate consequences is not consistent with sustainable fisheries management. In addition, for many of the species affected by this fishery, there are no reliable population estimates, most dramatically, for the megamouth shark. As a result, hard caps for each of the IUCN threatened or data deficient species are each potentially unstable, representing an extinction risk from error for each species. However, given the particularly large number of threatened species taken by this particular fishery, the odds that one or more of these species is in fact driven extinction becomes particularly large. Again, the highly indiscriminate nature of this gear essentially makes it impossible to render actually sustainable.

Beyond the cumulative risk of driving threatened species to extinction, the impacts of take of a large number of even common species, such as the common mola, may have substantial ecological impacts, even if the species is not driven to the brink of extinction, if the population is reduced to where the population can no longer perform its ecological function.²¹

Transfer effects

Finally, TIRN urges the Council to turn a skeptical eye on claims that discontinuing the use of drift gill net gear would lead to an increase in takes through any transfer effect. First, instances of a documented transfer effect are rare and often modest, these effects are only likely where there is a cessation or marked reduction of harvesting. However, with the potential availability of more selective gear (especially harpoon gear, but potentially also including particularly well-controlled buoy gear), with steeply declining demand for swordfish as health concerns mount, and perhaps limited capacity of foreign fisheries to increase fishing effort for swordfish, the magnitude of any transfer effect should be expected to be modest at best.

To the contrary, maintaining this fishery would reduce the ability of the United States to act as a leader in sustainable fisheries management in order to induce improvements in foreign fisheries. So long as the Council maintains an indiscriminate fishery among the worst 20% globally, any diplomatic argument is markedly weakened. Furthermore, U.S. law has provision (e.g., the Pelly Amendment) that authorizes action against foreign competing fisheries but only to the extent that they do not conform to U.S. standards. Thus, the maintenance of an indiscriminate fishery with significant impacts (despite substantial regulation) weakens the scope of such laws in addressing foreign fisheries that may not be as well regulated but that nevertheless can meet the rather poor performance standard set by the California drift gill net fishery. Thus, there is strong reason to believe that failure to phase out this destructive gear is likely to enable poor foreign fishing practices rather than supplant them.

Economic impacts

Finally, as alluded to previously, the California drift gill net fleet is vanishingly small in the national context, and given the tremendous expense of regulating this fishery, on balance it appears that this fishery is a net drain on the American economy for an activity that has exceptional environmental impacts. (We again strongly urge the Council to increase the observer coverage to better enforce regulations and restrictions in light of past violations, including 100% observer coverage and elimination of exemptions for nonobservable vessels.). Not only to maintenance of this gear fail to meet any reasonable standard of sustainability, but it likely imposes a cost on the American economy at a time when we simply cannot afford it.

Conclusion

We have great respect for those who have tried to reduce the environmental impacts of this particular gear over the past three decades. However, we fully believe for the above reasons that it is appropriate for the Council to take action to transition away from this gear and any other high bycatch, indiscriminate gear and strongly urge you to take appropriate measures to end the use of this gear.

February 12, 2015

Dear Governor Brown, Senator de León, Assemblymember Atkins, Mr. Stelle, and Ms Lowman:

The world's oceans and marine ecosystems are facing a grave crisis due to impacts of industrial fishing activity.^{i iii iii iv} Not only does industrial fishing have substantial impacts on both target species and bycatch species populations, but the effects on these populations can have serious repercussions for the communities and ecosystems of which they are a part.

Drift nets and other gill nets are among the most potentially damaging industrial fishing methods, since they are massive nets that indiscriminately capture a wide range of target and non-target marine species and have some of the highest bycatch rates of any fishery in the world.^{vii}

Large-scale pelagic driftnets were outlawed in 1993 on the High Seas by the United Nation General Assembly,^{vii} which the US has implemented as a matter of policy.^{viii} On the US West Coast, the State of Washington State banned drift gill nets in 2001^{ix}, and Oregon abandoned its drift gill net fishery program in 2009.^x

The myriad reasons for phasing out this fishery include:

- Despite decades of increased regulations and decreasing effort and demand for swordfish, the California Driftnet Fishery remains one of the highest bycatch fisheries in the United States.^{xi}
- The California drift gill net fishery entangles more cetaceans than any other fishery along the US Pacific coast.^{xii} In the last ten years, an estimated 885 marine mammals have been killed. Observed takes of marine mammals include two Endangered sperm whales, which died after becoming entangled in driftnets in 2010 alone.^{xiii} (Based on the observer coverage rate, this gives rise to an estimate of 15.5 sperm whale entanglements for the entire fishery.) Over the period from 2007-2010, this fishery caught an annual average of 67.8 cetaceans. The second most damaging fishery averaged 1.4 individuals per year.^{xiv}
- Swordfish, the primary target species, make up only 12 % of the catch, while 65% of the catch is discarded directly overboard.^{xv}
- Between 2004 and 2014, 21% of the catch consisted of IUCN Red List species (9% was Near Threatened, 12% Vulnerable or Critically Endangered), including endangered leatherback sea turtles, sperm whales, shortfin mako sharks, blue fin tuna and smooth hammerheads.^{xvi}
- Red Listed Vulnerable thresher and mako sharks together make up 10% of the catch and are targeted, retained and sold, despite concern about the sustainability of their harvest.^{xvii} Vulnerable blue sharks make up 5% of the catch, but are discarded directly overboard.^{xviii}
- The megamouth shark was only discovered in 1976, and since then fewer than 70 specimens have ever been reported. Nearly 10% of all megamouth sharks ever reported globally were entangled in California's driftnets.^{xix}
- Although the creation of the Pacific Leatherback Conservation Area reduced mortality of leatherback turtles from 112 in the period 1990-2000, 12 leatherback turtles (and an estimated 5.76 loggerheads) are estimated to have been killed by California driftnets in the period 2004-2014. In particular, the Loggerhead and leatherback populations have declined by 80 - 95% in the last twenty years.^{xx} Recent studies suggest that even low fishing mortality may have a significant impact on the extinction risk for this population.^{xxi xxixxxii}

Beyond the impacts on threatened species, the fishery also captures significant numbers of relatively common species that threaten to have ecological impacts. For example, almost 50% of the catch is made up of ocean sunfish – the primary consumers of jellyfish in the region. Although mostly released alive, there is little available information on post-release mortality or population and impacts of the catch of an estimated 85,000 individuals in the last decade.

A growing body of scientific research shows us the fragile nature of the oceans, and the defaunation processes that currently threaten marine ecosystems. In this context, it is imperative to consider that the ecological impact of a marginal fishery that threatens species spanning the entire food web of the California coastal ecosystem along with several migratory species. The time is right to phase out the fishery in California as it has been ended worldwide.

WE THE UNDERSIGNED, CALL ON GOVERNOR BROWN, THE CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE AND THE PACIFIC FISHERIES MANAGEMENT COUNCIL TO ACT PROMPTLY TO PROTECT THE ECOLOGICAL INTEGRITY OF CALIFORNIA'S COASTAL WATERS AND TO PHASE OUT THE USE OF DRIFT GILL NETS AND OTHER INDISCRIMINATE FISHING METHODS IN CALIFORNIA AND U.S. WATERS.

To this end, we also call on you to maintain the prohibition on the use of the similarly indiscriminate longline gear, and other gear with similar ecological impacts.
