RE: Agenda Items H.1, Pacific Sardine Distribution Workshop and H.3, Anchovy General Status Review

Dear Ms. Lowman and Council Members, Ms. Sobeck, and Mr. Stelle:

We the undersigned 36,820 residents of the United States (including 9,150 residents of California, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho) are greatly concerned that management of the commercial forage fish fisheries off California, Oregon and Washington is leaving ocean wildlife without enough fish to eat. Sea lions, whales, pelicans, and many other species rely on these same forage fish for a large part of their diet. Pacific sardine and Northern anchovy populations are at historically low levels and are some of the most important forage fish in the California Current ocean ecosystem. Immediate action is needed to prevent future overfishing and to help these forage fish populations rebuild to healthy and abundant levels.

This year, an unprecedented number of California sea lion pups were found stranded on beaches. Many died and many others were found underweight, dehydrated, and starving. Their mothers were not finding enough forage fish to eat. They were spending more time away from their pups foraging, farther from shore, and the nursing sea lion pups were in turn, starving to death.

Approximately three times as many sea lions washed ashore in 2015 compared to 2013, when the severity of strandings emerged as an issue of great concern. Similarly, California brown pelicans have been abandoning their nests due to the lack of forage fish. With about 90 percent of sea lion pups estimated to die this year before weaning age and complete range-wide reproductive failures in brown pelicans—only removed from the Endangered Species List a few years ago—more must be done to ensure there is adequate forage fish to support a healthy and abundant food web in the Pacific Ocean.

Never-before-seen ocean conditions combined with increasing and excessive fishing pressure have put these forage fish populations in a crisis situation. Further safeguards for these critical fish populations are needed to help these fish rebound, to provide abundant prey for dependent predators, and to ensure long-term, ecologically sustainable fisheries into the future.

While we commend your decision to give Pacific sardines a reprieve by closing the commercial fishery last April, we need a long-term solution so that coast-wide sardine overfishing does not occur in the future. Because the United States fishes the same population of sardines as Mexico and Canada, it is critical that the current calculation used to determine how many sardines can be fished is corrected to accurately account for the sardines Canada and Mexico remove from the ocean. This will ensure the United States is taking a responsible share and not contributing to coast-wide overfishing.

Additionally, available scientific information indicates that the central sub-population of Northern anchovy (found off California) may be alarmingly low. Immediately reducing catch levels for anchovy is critical, especially given the undeniable signs of a lack of forage fish in the ecosystem. The Council and NMFS should make it a top priority to obtain a new full assessment of the anchovy population. The Council should also ensure that the calculation for determining how many anchovies can be fished accounts for how many anchovies ocean predators need to eat.

In summary, we urge you to take immediate measures to fix the Pacific sardine management framework, prevent Northern anchovy overfishing, and ensure abundant forage fish populations for dependent predators. Ocean wildlife and coastal communities don't have time to wait.

Sincerely,

36,820 residents of the United States

Re: Agenda Item H.3 (Anchovy General Status Overview)

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

We write with respect to management of the federal fishery targeting the central and northern subpopulations of northern anchovy. As part of Agenda Items H.3, we reiterate our previous request that the Pacific Fishery Management Council (Council) task the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Fisheries Service (NOAA Fisheries) with initiating a full stock assessment for both subpopulations, with priority given to the central subpopulation for completion in 2016. More immediately, we ask that the Council provide a specific schedule for review by the Scientific and Statistical Committee (SSC) of all relevant scientific information on the stock status of the central subpopulation of northern anchovy, and that the Council consider interim management measures for this subpopulation based upon this SSC review as well as any and all information it has available at the time of Council discussion. We believe such interim measures are needed to prevent (or end) overfishing of this subpopulation of a critical prey species, which multiple lines of evidence show is in a collapsed condition. Finally, over the longer term we request that the Council utilize the completed stock assessment, along with information on California Current Ecosystem (CCE) predator/prey dynamics, to develop an ecosystem-based management framework for northern anchovy, including an updated harvest control rule.

Northern anchovy is a keystone forage species in the CCE and is preyed upon by a wide variety of marine wildlife, including commercially and recreationally valuable fish, as well as mammals and sea birds.¹ Anchovy is the single most important prey species for CCE seabirds² and first or second most important for the broader suite of marine predators, such as humpback whales, chinook salmon, dolphins, and pinnipeds.³

For several years, the undersigned organizations have expressed concerns to the Council about the status of anchovy and the lack of scientifically supported and legally required management measures for this stock, especially in light of increased fishing effort.⁴ More recently, our organizations as well as the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service (USFWS)⁵ have voiced concerns regarding recent indications of low biomass of anchovy in the CCE and the associated impact on pelicans and other predators. We reiterate those concerns and also make further recommendations on the basis that a substantial body of information currently exists on the status of the central subpopulation of anchovy, via acoustic trawl and egg and larval survey time series; more recent aerial/vessel surveys; and a new abundance estimate, MacCall et al. (in review),⁶ based on egg and larval survey time series. These multiple lines of evidence and analyses – coupled with documented impacts on dependent predators – strongly suggest the central subpopulation of northern anchovy (in central and southern California) is in a collapsed condition.

In light of the issues, questions, concerns, and requests raised by members of the public, USFWS, and the Council itself regarding the status of northern anchovy, we ask the Council to take the following actions at its November 2015 meeting:

- Provide a specific schedule for SSC review of all relevant scientific information on the status of the central subpopulation of northern anchovy, including but not limited to MacCall et al. (In review).
- Place on the Council's agenda consideration of new interim management measures for the central subpopulation of anchovy. Such interim measures may be needed to protect this critical prey species given the substantial body of evidence that the stock is in collapsed condition.
- Request that NOAA Fisheries immediately initiate a full stock assessment for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy and complete it by the end of 2016.
- State its intent, over the longer term, to utilize the information from this stock assessment, along with data on CCE predator/prey dynamics, to develop an ecosystem-based management framework for northern anchovy.

Below we discuss these recommendations in more detail.

During the Workload Planning agenda item at the September 2015 meeting, the Council engaged in a lengthy discussion regarding the importance and utility of an SSC review of currently available data pertaining to northern anchovy.⁷ During this discussion and associated public comment, multiple Council members and members of the public requested the Council consider the results of the MacCall et al. (in review) population estimate as well as other relevant data at the November 2015 meeting. An SSC review of these and other relevant data would provide the Council with an updated and more complete picture of the current status of northern anchovy pending completion of a stock assessment, thereby helping to inform any near-term actions the Council may take to prevent overfishing of this stock and ensure adequate forage for dependent predators. Existing lines of evidence include the following:

A. Egg and Larval Surveys

Survey cruises conducted by the Southwest Fishery Science Center have detected declining numbers of northern anchovy eggs in recent years. No anchovy eggs were seen in 2010, 2012, and 2013, and very low numbers were observed in 2011,^{8,9} suggesting a downward trend in abundance. In particular, one of the major findings for the Southern California Current in the 2013 Integrated Ecosystem Assessment, based on CalCOFI abundance surveys, was that “larval anchovy abundance continued a declining trend over the last thirty years to the lowest abundance since 1951.”¹⁰ This pattern of anchovy decline was also evident in rockfish recruitment surveys through 2014, as presented in the latest “State of the California Current” CalCOFI Report.¹¹

In June 2015, in response to a request from the Council for an update on the current status and management of northern anchovy, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW) presented the results of three years of coastal transect aerial and vessel surveys conducted in collaboration with the California Wetfish Producers Association. Aerial and vessel surveys conducted in 2012-2015 from Point Conception to the Mexico border showed only small schools of anchovy, as well as mixed anchovy/sardines, ranging from 490 - 5,000 tons (N=20).¹² (Please see Table 1 in Appendix.)

This new analysis (currently in review for publication in Fisheries Research) provides an estimate of stock abundance using an approach that accounts for seasonal variations in spawning, trends in the timing of spawning, and the tendency of anchovy to contract into nearshore areas at times of low abundance.¹⁴ This approach improves upon past analyses which do not account for the fact that CalCOFI sampling stations exist in higher densities in the nearshore region favored by anchovies at low population sizes, leading to a “hyperstability bias.” MacCall et al. (in review) found:

“The estimated spawning biomass decreased by over 99 percent from 2005 to 2009, and merits the term ‘collapse.’ ...The current anchovy biomass off southern California is estimated at less than 20,000 MT (CI < 100,000 MT), similar only to the inexplicably low biomasses seen in the early 1950s. Although current annual catch levels of a few thousand tons are small by historical standards, current exploitation rates could be high given the low stock abundance, and should be taken under consideration by fishery managers.... Anchovy spawning biomass was very low, 10,000-20,000 MT, in the early 1950s when CalCOFI sampling began. Abundance increased and fluctuated between 0.5 and 2 million MT from 1960 through 1990. After 1990, spawning biomass fluctuated around 200,000 tons, briefly increased in 2005-2006, then declined drastically over four years to below 20,000 tons from 2009-2011. CalCOFI ichthyoplankton data collected after 2011 are not yet available for analysis, but continuous underway egg sampling conducted during CalCOFI cruises indicates continued low abundance of anchovy through 2015 in both southern and central California.”

Also related to the hyperstability issue, MacCall et al. (in review) notes, “While there have been recent anecdotal reports of substantial nearshore anchovy abundance, we hypothesize that much of the remnant population is concentrated close to shore, making them unusually visible to the public and giving a mistaken impression of abundance.”

The area-weighted biomass estimates used in MacCall et al. (in review) show the dramatic decline and collapse of the anchovy stock, compared with previous estimates of egg production rates that do not use the area-weighted approach, in addition to other methodological differences (Figure 1):

¹⁴ MacCall, A. 1009. Dynamic geography of marine fish populations. University of Washington Press. Seattle, WA.

Figure 1 Comparison of time series of egg production rate (P0) estimates from Fissel et al. 550 (2011) with area-weighted biomass estimates, including additional values for 2010 and 2011. Logarithmic scale. (MacCall et al., in review)

In sum, MacCall et al. found that “anchovy biomasses estimated for 2009-2011 are the lowest seen in 60 years,” and that, based on egg surveys conducted since 2011, “there has been no substantial recovery of the anchovy population as of 2015.”

C. Predator Response and Impacts

Predators that rely on anchovy in the CCE are showing signs of stress. These include brown pelican, which have experienced adult mortality events, anomalous feeding behavior such as the predation of common murre chicks, and poor reproductive success in the U.S. and Mexico.¹⁵ Recently published analyses of seabird and forage fish distribution and abundance in the CCE show that a substantial decline in seabird abundance in the northern portion of the southern CCE (from around Point Conception, California, northward) – a rate of decline of 2.2% per year from 1987-2011 – is attributable to declines in anchovy abundance and availability.¹⁶ California sea lions have also undergone Unusual Mortality Events in 2013, 2014, and 2015, linked to low anchovy and sardine abundance.¹⁷

Add to the Council’s agenda consideration of interim management measures for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy

The collapse of the anchovy stock warrants immediate Council consideration of interim management measures. In particular, the adoption of an annual catch target (ACT) that is reduced from the central subpopulation’s current annual catch limit (ACL) of 25,000 metric tons (mt) may be needed to allow the Council to meet its basic obligations under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act, which are reflected in at least two key goals of its Coastal Pelagic Species (CPS) Fishery Management Plan (FMP): “to provide adequate forage for dependent predators” and to “prevent overfishing” in light of the stock potentially being at very low relative levels.¹⁸ Adopting an ACT for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy also comports with Council guidance, which states that, “Along with optimum yield (OY) considerations, an HG [Harvest Guideline] or ACT may be utilized below an ACL or sector-specific ACL to account for management uncertainty...”¹⁹ We note, for example, that the Council set an ACT below the ACL or Harvest Guideline for Pacific sardines in 2014 to take into account additional information highlighting concerns with the status of the stock.

Further, commercial landings of northern anchovy have increased over the past several years (Figure 1).²⁰ As of October 15, 2015, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife has reported 13,508 metric tons of anchovy landed. Over 11,800 metric tons of that were landed in the first half of the year. However, fishing effort has picked up recently and roughly 1,700 metric tons have been landed since late September.²¹ In light of recent information that indicates anchovy are at historically low levels, this current level of catch may exceed the maximum sustainable yield for this stock. Moreover, we note that northern anchovy, like many forage species, is especially vulnerable to fishing pressure at lower levels of abundance.^{22,23} Because northern anchovy travel in schools that can be more easily caught and may concentrate in nearshore waters at times of low abundance and/or warm water conditions such as those currently occurring in the CCE, landings could continue to increase despite low abundance, a dynamic that has the potential to both mask and exacerbate further population declines.²⁴

While the abovementioned SSC review of available information would help to inform the Council’s deliberations on this matter, the Council does not need to wait for such a review to take precautionary action in light of new information. Ample information currently exists for the Council to consider establishing interim management measures in the near term. We recommend that the Council include on its agenda as soon as possible consideration of an ACT that is reduced from the ACL, based on the best available information regarding the current status of the central subpopulation of northern anchovy.

Request that NOAA Fisheries initiate a stock assessment for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy, to be completed in 2016

In 2013, the Council's concerns over the status of northern anchovy, coupled with increased landings and the lack of a recent stock assessment, prompted the Council to recommend that NOAA Fisheries prioritize stock assessments for both the northern and central subpopulations within the following five years. NOAA Fisheries indicated in November 2013 that it intended to begin work on this effort during 2015 and 2016,²⁵ but as the end of 2015 approaches, no assessment work has yet been scheduled. We urge the Council to formally request that NOAA Fisheries immediately initiate a stock assessment for the central subpopulation of northern anchovy (which was last assessed in 1995), to be completed in 2016, and followed by an assessment of the northern subpopulation.

Having current and reliable information on northern anchovy will allow the Council to act with greater certainty in setting catch levels that provide for sustainable fishing activity as well as for the maintenance of adequate forage for marine wildlife, key aspects of achieving optimum yield as well as key objectives of the CPS FMP.²⁶ This information will also advance the transition to ecosystem-based fishery management by providing resource managers with a clearer picture on coastal pelagic species abundance, forage availability, food web dynamics, and ultimately how our West Coast fisheries impact and are impacted by marine ecosystems.

To this end, a full and updated stock assessment is a necessary first step toward focusing increased management and science attention on both subpopulations of northern anchovy that occur off the U.S. West Coast. Once completed, this assessment should be utilized – along with associated modeling data – to develop a long-term strategy for sustainably managing the northern anchovy fishery, including adoption of an ecosystem-based harvest control rule that reflects current biological conditions as well as relevant optimum yield factors. Newer and better information on northern anchovy will allow the Council to set biological reference points, status determination criteria, and catch levels for this stock with a much higher degree of certainty; prevent (or end) overfishing; better understand the cyclical nature of anchovy and its relationship to Pacific sardine; maintain the role of northern anchovy in the CCE; and achieve optimum yield. Such a framework would account for ecosystem needs as well as the social and economic factors consistent with achieving optimum yield, and include precautionary management measures.

In conclusion, we ask that the Council take action at its November 2015 meeting to establish a schedule for SSC review of existing information on anchovy status and abundance; add to the agenda consideration of interim management measures that may be necessary to prevent

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members,

Thank you for your leadership in protecting unmanaged forage fish in federal waters of the Pacific Ocean.

This landmark decision recognizes the ecological importance of forage fish to seabirds, marine mammals, and the bigger fish that many of us love to catch and eat. Conserving unmanaged forage fish species represents an on-the-water example of the Council's shift from traditional fisheries management to a more comprehensive, ecosystem-based approach. It reflects the principle that responsible management requires asking questions before a fishery begins, rather than after.

The Council's efforts to apply an ecosystem-based approach to fisheries management, built through adoption of a Fishery Ecosystem Plan in 2013, are critical for both unmanaged forage fish as well as managed species such as sardine and anchovy. The collapse of sardine populations and resulting fishery closure this year is a clear indication that we must do more to ensure that fishery managers receive and use the best available science to inform management decisions.

Given the current status of the Pacific sardine fishery, stock assessments of other managed species including northern anchovy are in need of comprehensive updates. Anchovy haven't been assessed in more than two decades. Such outdated information is no way to set catch limits and other management measures with the certainty needed to ensure current management is sustainable for both the anchovy and its predators. Please initiate a thorough assessment of anchovy abundance and adopt interim protections to limit catch until we have a better understanding of these populations.

Thank you again for your ongoing leadership to protect unmanaged forage fish. The Council has set an example for West Coast states to develop and fully implement their own forage fish management plans for state waters. I look forward to your continued work on both unmanaged and managed forage fish species.

Sincerely,

Amber Ford

We understand that the Council will be reviewing and considering recent information on the stock status of northern anchovy at your upcoming November 2015 meeting. Along with retired NOAA Fisheries scientist Alec MacCall, the Farallon Institute has co-authored a scientific paper that is currently in review in the journal Fisheries Research. Therefore, while the paper has not yet been officially accepted for publication, we are submitting the attached most recent version of this paper (revision no. 1) for inclusion in the Advanced Briefing Book Agenda Item H.3, so that this information can be reviewed and considered at the November 2015 meeting by the Council and its advisory bodies. Please let us know if you have any questions.

11 Abstract

13 New estimates of abundance of northern anchovy (Engraulis mordax) are developed
14 from California Cooperative Oceanic Fisheries Investigation (CalCOFI) data on egg and larval
15 densities for the period 1951-2011. Previous estimates utilizing mean density over the CalCOFI
16 area show a hyperstability bias because of the nearshore concentration of CalCOFI stations and 17 the anchovy population tendency to contract into this area when abundances are low. New 18 abundance estimates weight sample egg and larval densities to the local area represented by that 19 sample, and then sum contributions to obtain total abundance. We develop total egg and larval 20 abundance estimates for January and April, form a combined index, and calibrate it to the 21 absolute biomass estimates produced by the Daily Egg Production Method (DEPM) in the early 22 1980s. Anchovy spawning biomass was very low, 10,000-20,000 Metric Tons (MT), in the early
23 1950s when CalCOFI sampling began. Abundance increased and fluctuated between 0.5 and 2
24 million metric tons from 1960 through 1990. After 1990, spawning biomass fluctuated around 25 200,000 tons, briefly increased in 2005-2006, then declined drastically over four years to below
26 20,000 tons from 2009-2011. CalCOFI ichthyoplankton data collected after 2011 are not yet
27 available for analysis, but continuous underway egg sampling conducted during CalCOFI cruises 28 indicates continued low abundance and very limited spawning through 2015 in both southern and 29 central California. The recent collapse of anchovy abundance occurred in the absence of a 30 significant fishery. Present annual catches of a few thousand tons are small by historical 31 comparison, but the exploitation rate may now be relatively high given the low stock abundance.
32 The decline in anchovy abundance coincides with recent die-offs and reproductive failures of 33 anchovy-dependent predators in the ecosystem (e.g., sea lions and pelicans).

36 1. Introduction

37
38 The central population of northern anchovy (Engraulis mordax) extends from northern 39 Baja California to northern California, is an important prey resource providing forage to many 40 upper trophic level predators, and in the past (though not recently) supported substantial fisheries
41 in California and Mexico. The Historical Egg Production (HEP) method developed by Lo 42 (1985) uses egg and larval abundances at size to estimate the initial egg production rate of the 43 spawning adult population. Abundances estimated by the HEP approach have been used 44 extensively in previous anchovy stock assessments (MacCall, 1982; Methot, 1989; Jacobson et 45 al., 1994, 1995; Fissel et al. 2011). The last formal stock assessment was conducted in 1995
46 (Jacobson et al., 1994, 1995), but recent abundance estimates were published by Fissel et al.

47 (2011) who extended the abundance time series to 2009 for the southern California region (Pt.
48 Conception to Mexico). Fissel et al. (2011) showed a spike in egg production in 2005 and 2006
49 with estimated spawning biomass briefly exceeding a million metric tons (MT), then returning to 50 around 150,000 MT by 2008, a decline which they attributed to recent increases in egg mortality
51 rates. This lower level is also consistent with other analyses of anchovy productivity showing 52 declines since the 1980s presumably related to ocean conditions and climate (Koslow et al., 53 2013; Lindegren et al., 2013). Although the stock has been lightly fished in recent years, Fissel
54 et al. (2011) voiced concern about the declining stock size and urged further investigation but did 55 not consider the drop in abundance from 2005 to 2008 to be a significant conservation issue.

56 Other lines of evidence suggest that the anchovy stock off southern California may have 57 declined more precipitously since 2008. The relative abundance of anchovy eggs and larvae in 58 the California Cooperative Oceanic Fisheries Investigation (CalCOFI; Fig. 1) surveys declined 59 severely over the previous two decades, and especially in the most recent years (McClatchie et 60 al., 2011; Leising et al., 2014). In particular, findings from the January 2008 survey were 61 unprecedented in the history of CalCOFI, with very few anchovy eggs and no larvae at all! In 62 more recent April surveys, egg abundances remained low, and larval abundance fell below the 63 lowest historical levels, last observed in the early 1950s. Trawl survey catch rates of adult
64 anchovy off central California have also declined in recent years (Ralston et al., 2015), with a
65 major decline seen between 2005-2006 and 2008-2009. Other ecological indicators such as poor 66 breeding performance of brown pelicans off southern California (Henry, 2015), declines in 67 seabird abundance at sea (Sydeman et al., 2015; Santora and Sydeman, in press), unusual 68 mortality events for California sea lions (Melin et al., 2010), and reductions of anchovy in 69 seabird diets (e.g., Elliott et al., 2015) also suggest low availability of anchovy.

70 Here, we develop and calibrate a simple abundance index for the central anchovy stock, 71 focusing on the southern California region, that revises the entire CalCOFI-based time series of 72 anchovy abundance, as well as updating it to 2011. We also examine aspects of previous 73 methodologies and investigate whether those biomass estimates may have been compromised by 74 hyperstability biases (Hilborn and Walters, 1992).

75

76 2. Materials and Methods

77 Spawning (egg production) by the central subpopulation of northern anchovy typically 78 lasts from January to May each year, but within individual years, the monthly pattern of 79 spawning can be quite irregular (Methot, 1983). Generally, average egg abundances are much 80 higher in March/April than in January, with no trends in spawning phenology (Asch, 2015).
81 Failure to account for seasonality is a source of imprecision, and the aliasing resulting from a
82 systematic temporal mismatch of sampling may introduce bias at the decadal scale. Though 83 these sources of imprecision and bias are difficult to eliminate, they can be reduced by 84 disaggregating the data into monthly components. For these reasons, we used data from January
85 and April separately, and estimated separate biomass scaling factors (see below).

86

87 2.1. Sampling Issues

88 The habitat utilized by spawning anchovies expands into the offshore region in times of 89 high abundance and contracts into nearshore core areas when abundances are lower (MacCall, 90 1990, see Fig. 2). This pattern of redistribution has serious consequences for abundance
91 estimates. First, range expansion at high abundance and contraction at low abundance indicates 92 that samples from individual stations are not identically and independently distributed (iid).

93 Because we cannot assume iid, bootstrap resampling techniques for variance calculations cannot 94 be justified (e.g., Jacobson et al., 1994). Second, because the CalCOFI sampling pattern has a 95 higher density of stations in the nearshore region favored by anchovies at low population sizes, 96 the average density over all CalCOFI stations will not decline in proportion to the decline in 97 population size, leading to “hyperstability” bias (Hilborn and Walters, 1992). Third, nine very 98 nearshore stations were added to the CalCOFI grid by the Southern California Coastal Ocean
99 Observing System (SCCOOS), with larval and egg sampling beginning in fall 2004 (see Fig. 1).
100 These stations are in the area occupied by anchovies when at their lowest abundances (see Fig. 2)
101 and may exhibit higher densities than are observed at an average CalCOFI station, many of 102 which regularly have very low or zero densities. Thus, for this paper’s purpose of obtaining a 103 consistent long-term sampling frame, adding the nearshore SCCOOS stations to the dataset has 104 two potential detrimental effects: 1) it causes a systematic increase in the estimates of anchovy 105 production compared to years in which these stations were not sampled, and 2) it likely increases 106 the hyperstability bias.

107 To deal with these major sampling issues, we excluded the nine SCCOOS stations from 108 our analysis. A statistical solution to the hyperstability issue is to expand densities separately for 109 each CalCOFI station in order to obtain local population estimates, which are then summed to 110 estimate the overall abundance in the study region. This approach is not new. Historically, this 111 analytical technique was referred to as the “larva census” approach, described by Sette and 112 Ahlstrom (1948). However, this approach is computationally complex in that it requires
113 estimation of the area sampled by each standard station. To estimate the area sampled at each
114 station, we calculated station-specific Thiessen polygons (Okabe et al., 2000). Thiessen
115 polygons are a well-established technique for integrating abundance over irregularly-spaced 116 sampling locations, and this approach is robust to the systematic abundance-related changes in 117 spawning distribution described by MacCall (1990). Therefore, most geostatistical approaches
118 (e.g., stratification and weighting) are highly questionable due to time-varying anisotropic
119 properties of anchovy distribution. We also replaced the invalid bootstrapping approach 120 previously used by various authors with a jackknife resampling approach that preserves the 121 spatial structure of sampling (see below).

122

123 2.2. Abundance Indices

124 The most complete CalCOFI sampling for the 61-year period of 1951 to 2011 has been in 125 the southern California region, where we were able to develop population estimates for 51 of 126 those years. Central California has been sampled less consistently, and we were able to develop 127 population estimates for only 33 years, with substantial gaps in the middle of the time series; for 128 this reason, although we present ichthyoplankton indices that include central California we do 129 not use them to estimate biomass. Mexican waters have not been sampled by CalCOFI since the 130 1970s, and thus we did not attempt to estimate anchovy abundance there.

131 We considered two sets of CalCOFI cruises (data were obtained from 132 <http://www.calcofi.org/>), those surveys with any portion occurring in January, and those with any 133 portion occurring in April. For each cruise, as noted above, we constructed a set of Thiessen 134 polygons (also known as Voronoi diagrams or tessellations). Each Thiessen polygon defines an 135 area of influence around its sample point so that any location inside the polygon is closer to that 136 point than any of the other sample points (Fig. 3). The egg or larval population estimate (P_{ijk}) for 137 each year (i), ichthyoplankton type ($j =$ eggs or larvae) and season ($k =$ January or April) is the

138 sum of the products of station-specific (s) polygon areas (A_s) and sampled density (D_s) or mean 139 density if the station was sampled more than once:

$$I_{ijk} = \sum_s D_{ijks} A_{iks}$$

142 Note that the values of A_{iks} depend on which adjacent stations were sampled in a given year and 143 season. Samples obtained off-transect were omitted, and samples between standard stations were 144 assumed to represent the closest standard station. If multiple samples occurred at a station, their 145 mean density was used. We applied the tessellation approach to both the “core” 6-line southern 146 California region and to the “full” region including central California north to San Francisco
147 (Fig. 3 is an example of the latter). We consider egg and larval populations to be separate 148 indices, so a complete year produced four indices, two for January and two for April (Tables 1 149 and 2). In many years, only one of the two seasons (January or April) was sampled. Each of the 150 four indices was scaled to unit mean for the period 1951-1999, and a combined index was 151 produced by averaging the 2-4 indices for each year. However, we did not use larval data after 152 1999 due to an apparent increase in egg or larvae mortality rates that would bias the recent larval 153 index lower relative to the prior portions of the time series (see Results). We calculated 154 arithmetic means that allowed retention of cruises with zero estimates, i.e., where either no eggs
155 or larvae were sampled, which occurred in some of the earliest and most recent years. These 156 instances of zero values made the use of log transformations difficult, so we did not pursue that 157 possibility.

158 Precision of abundance estimates was calculated by a jackknife procedure, whereby each 159 sample was deleted one at a time and unless multiple samples were taken (which occurred only 160 rarely), the tessellation was recalculated so that regions of the deleted tile were reassigned to 161 values of A_{iks} for expanded tiles associated with adjacent samples; importantly, the total survey
162 area remains constant for all years and all jackknife re-samplings. A new abundance estimate
163 was obtained with each deletion, and results were combined to produce precision estimates
164 (Efron and Stein, 1981). The jackknife procedure provided variance estimates for each of our 165 indices: January eggs, January larvae, April eggs, and April larvae. In order to produce a 166 variance estimate for the combined index, we first considered the survey years in which all four 167 indices existed, and examined the matrix of correlations among the anomalies from the common 168 mean (Table 3). The largest correlation was -0.63 between January eggs and April eggs (Fig. 5), 169 and was driven by two outliers. We therefore ignored the covariances in calculating approximate
170 variances, simplifying calculation of the estimated variance:

$$Var(I_i) = \frac{1}{n^2} \sum_j Var(\Theta_{ij})$$

172
173 where I_i is the combined abundance index for year i , and Θ_{ij} are the two or four standardized 174 individual indices, i.e., $j = 1, \dots, n$ and n is either 2 or 4. This approximation tends to 175 overestimate the variance because the ignored negative covariances would be subtracted and 176 result in a smaller estimate. Precision estimates of the combined egg and larval abundance index 177 do not include additional uncertainty in the relationship between the combined index and the 178 actual spawning biomass (see next section; Tables 1 and 2).

2.3.2. Calibration of Abundance Indices to Biomass

The new area-weighted combined egg and larval abundance index extends from 1951 to 2011. We calibrated the new index by a least-squares fit to the Daily Egg Production Method (DEPM) biomass estimates produced from 1980 to 1985 (summarized in Jacobson et al., 1994). DEPM has been the basis of scaling for all subsequent anchovy assessments (Jacobson et al., 1994; Methot, 1989). The DEPM estimates provide the best basis for calibrating our area-weighted index, as they are not dependent on arbitrary model specifications or assumed parameter values typical of statistical population dynamics models. We have new index values for three of the DEPM years, 1981, 1982, and 1984 (Fig. 6); 1982 only has values for April, but the other two years include both January and April. The relationship between the three area-weighted indices and the DEPM values for these three years is shown in Figure 6. A calibration of 559,000 MT per index unit was provided by the mean of the three ratios of DEPM biomass to new index value. The CV of the three values was 0.15, and unlike previous abundance estimates, calibration variance is included in precision estimates of biomass derived from the new index.

3. Results

From the 1950s through the early 1990s, larvae tended to be more abundant than eggs in January, and about equally abundant in April. Over the entire time series, April egg abundances were threefold higher than those for January, and larval abundances were higher by a ratio of 1.6. Since the mid-late 1990s, the relative abundance of larvae relative to eggs has declined by about three logarithmic units (-95%; Fig. 4; see also Fissel et al., 2011). We applied the biomass calibration to the area-weighted combined egg and larval abundance index (excluding use of larvae after 1999) to derive an anchovy biomass index for the period 1951-2011. The estimated abundance in 2009-2011 is similar to the extremely low biomasses estimated for the early 1950s (Fig. 7). A logarithmic scale shows the magnitude of the recent decline in abundance. The new biomass estimates show higher values than those estimated by Jacobson et al. (1994) in 1957-1960, 1963-1966, 1969, and in 1986, but otherwise are in general agreement (Figs. 8 and 9). There are similar discrepancies with the time series estimated by Methot's (1989) age-structured model. The time series by Methot (1989) and by Jacobson et al. shared similar data inputs (including aerial spotter logbooks that were very sparse in the early 1960s), and are not independent of each other.

3.1. Hyperstability Bias

Scatterplots of egg production estimates (egg production index (EPI) and HEP) demonstrate hyperstability (Figs. 10 and 11). Power function exponents are 0.55 for EPI and 0.46 for HEP relative to area-weighted biomass estimates, thus EPI and HEP values vary approximately as the square root of stock biomass. Notably, these time series do not include low biomass years where hyperstability would be most apparent. The new area-weighted estimates have a very low correlation with egg production indices from Fissel et al. (2011; Fig. 11). There is evidence of hyperstability in Fissel et al. (2011), especially in the 2009 estimate that appears as an outlier on the left in Figure 11. When viewed as a time series (Fig. 12), the first half of the time series compares reasonably well, but an offset begins in the mid-2000s, corresponding with the change in egg-larvae ratios.

3.2. Abundance Estimates from Central California

Area-weighted abundance estimates of anchovy eggs and larvae for southern to central California (San Diego to San Francisco) are available in only 22 years, and very few estimates exist for the 1980s and 1990s (Table 4). Anchovy egg and larval abundances in central California are usually lower than in southern California. Relative abundance of eggs and larvae in central California tends to be somewhat higher in January than in April (Table 5). Statistical distributions are strongly skewed, with frequent near-zero abundances and rare large values in central California. Central California values were zero in 43% of the years, and contributed about 15% to the overall mean abundance estimate. Overall, the median abundance value for the full area was only 1% greater when including the central California region than that for southern California alone (Table 6). Notably, the abundance indices including central California have been low or zero since 2006, indicating that the decreased biomass off southern California is not explained by a redistribution of spawning adults to central California.

4. Discussion

The anchovy biomasses estimated from 2009-2011 using the area-weighted method developed here are the lowest seen in 60 years, and are matched only by similarly low values at the beginning of the CalCOFI sampling program in 1951-1953. Surveys of anchovy from mid-water trawls designed to survey juvenile rockfish (Sebastes spp.) from southern to central California corroborate this decline (Ralston et al., 2015). Although the most recent CalCOFI sample data are not yet available, the results from the Continuous Underway Fish Egg Sampler (CUFES) from recent sampling cruises have been reported by the NMFS Southwest Fisheries Science Center through 2015 (<https://swfsc.noaa.gov/textblock.aspx?Division=FRD&ParentMenuId=218&id=1340> and <https://swfsc.noaa.gov/textblock.aspx?Division=FRD&id=16135>). The published maps can be interpreted qualitatively: Although anchovy eggs are usually widespread and numerous, the last substantial abundance of anchovy eggs was seen in 2008. Only a small number of anchovy eggs were encountered in 2009. No anchovy eggs were seen in 2010, 2012, and 2013, and very low numbers were observed in 2011. A slight increase in egg abundance appeared in 2014, but only a trace appeared in 2015. We conclude that there has been no substantial recovery of the anchovy population as of 2015. The mean abundance estimated for the last three years (2009-2011) was three percent of the long-term average historical abundance estimated for 1951 through 2011 (mean = 550,000 MT), but this is very imprecise; the confidence intervals suggest that abundance was well below twenty percent of that mean.

When CalCOFI began sampling the California Current for anchovy eggs and larvae in 1951, the population was small. Estimated adult biomass subsequently increased to nearly one million tons in the 1960s (MacCall, 1982). A popular explanation of the initial scarcity was that competition with sardines had held anchovies at a low abundance, and that the increase during the 1950s was associated with “competitive release” due to the decline of sardines (Murphy, 1966). However, Smith (1972) analyzed egg and larval densities from CalCOFI-like surveys conducted in 1940-41, and concluded that anchovy abundance had been in the million-ton range then, which did not support the competition hypothesis. MacCall (1980) hypothesized that “the anchovy encountered a long series of poor recruitments during the late 1940s, and the subsequent CalCOFI records document the recovery to more normal levels of abundance.” Subsequent population modeling (MacCall, 1982), though, was unable to produce fluctuations consistent with the low levels of the early 1950s, confirming that whatever happened in the late 1940s and 271 early 1950s was not within the range of recent “normal” population dynamics. However, the 272 millennial-scale sedimentary deposition record from the Santa Barbara Basin clearly indicates 273 centennial-scale episodes of disappearance or near-disappearance of anchovy and sardine, 274 establishing that, at the longest time scales, occasional severe declines in abundance are a 275 characteristic feature of the population residing in southern California (Baumgartner et al., 276 1992). While there have been recent anecdotal reports of substantial nearshore anchovy

277 abundance (Herreria, 2014), we hypothesize that much of the remnant population is concentrated 278 close to shore, making them unusually visible to the public and giving a mistaken impression of 279 abundance (hyperstability bias).

280 Now, 60 years after the beginning of CalCOFI egg and larval sampling, we have well-281 documented evidence for a sudden decline in anchovies, with probable mechanisms similar to 282 MacCall’s (1980) hypothesis, though the explanatory details are still not clear. The anchovy
283 population declined from at least a million tons in 2005 to about 15,000 tons estimated for 2009-
284 2011. Remarkably, this decline occurred in the near-absence of fishing and therefore must be 285 considered a natural phenomenon. Support for this interpretation also comes from millennial-
286 scale records when anchovy collapses occurred in the absence of fishing. Alheit and Niquen 287 (2004) described a similar collapse in the Peruvian anchoveta population in the early 1970s, but 288 concluded that fisheries had undoubtedly contributed to the decline. In addition to apparent
289 near-zero recruitment, the natural mortality rate during 2005 to 2009 appears to be far above
290 normal for the central subpopulation. In an assumed absence of recruitment and negligible
291 fishing pressure, the four-year rate of decline in biomass gives an estimated natural mortality rate
292 (M) of approximately 1.2 yr^{-1} , about twice that assumed by Jacobson et al. (1994). If recruitment 293 was greater than zero, the observed decline in abundance would require the estimated M to be 294 higher yet. The severe decline in anchovies is a likely factor in recent reports of reproductive 295 failure, mortality, and declines of California’s marine mammals (Melin et al., 2010) and seabirds
296 (Henry, 2015; Sydeman et al., 2015). In previous historical experience, the return of viable
297 reproductive conditions during the mid-1950s allowed rapid recovery of the anchovy population.
298 It is reasonable to expect that abundance could recover quickly again if and when favorable
299 conditions return. However, other factors such as predation may be currently limiting population 300 growth. Major anchovy predators, such as California sea lions and humpback whales, have 301 recovered from very low abundances of the 1950s (Carretta et al., 2014; Calambokidis and 302 Barlow, 2004), and may now be consuming a larger fraction of the anchovy population, 303 especially under the presently low abundances and nearshore concentrations.

304 In addition to the ecological aspects of the anchovy decline, this study raises concerns
305 about previous anchovy assessment methodology. In particular, previous studies that used 306 equally-weighted average overall densities and bootstrap techniques are not appropriate for a 307 species that contracts its range into the most densely sampled region of a study grid. Spatially-
308 explicit methodology for area-weighting or expansion of CalCOFI samples is essential for 309 anchovy assessments. Because the use of space by anchovy is not even, inclusion of the partial 310 time series from SCCOOS stations is also problematic. Previous studies also used temperature 311 corrections to estimate anchovy egg production (e.g., Lo, 1985; Fissel et al., 2011); such 312 corrections should be retained, but need to be combined with the spatial approach we have 313 developed here. Last, since about 2000, there has been a decrease in January egg and larval
314 abundances relative to those seen in April. Whether this is a contraction of the spawning season
315 or an overall shift to a later spawning season cannot presently be determined. Hunter and Leong 316 (1981) showed that the number of spawnings during the reproductive season depends on adult

317 anchovy feeding conditions both before and during the spawning season, so this change in 318 spawning seasonality could be associated with poorer feeding conditions. Other changes in 319 spawning rates are also possible and may affect our abundance estimates. We used data from 320 January and April separately and estimated separate biomass scaling factors. In contrast, Fissel 321 et al. (2011) combined all samples from January through April without consideration for 322 seasonal variations in spawning nor trends in the timing of spawning.

323

324 5. Conclusion

325 Northern anchovy, an important component of the forage fish community of the 326 California Current ecosystem, has declined severely off southern California in the past decade.
327 The estimated spawning biomass decreased by over 99 percent from 2005 to 2009, and merits
328 the term “collapse”. An unknown but probably large portion of the remaining remnant 329 population now consists of conspicuous large nearshore shoals, which are prone to hyperstability 330 bias in interpretation, especially by members of the public. Given the limited fishing effort for 331 this species in recent years, natural phenomena unrelated to fishing are the primary explanation
332 for the precipitous decline. The current anchovy biomass off southern California is estimated at 333 less than 20,000 MT (CI < 100,000 MT), similar only to the inexplicably low biomasses seen in 334 the early 1950s. Although current annual catch levels of a few thousand tons are small by 335 historical standards, current exploitation rates could be high given the low stock abundance, and 336 should be taken under consideration by fishery managers.

337 Previous CalCOFI-based abundance estimates for anchovies have suffered from 338 hyperstability bias due to lack of an explicitly spatial estimation method. Future assessments
339 should include local area-expansion, seasonality, and standardization of stations included in time
340 series analysis. Specifically, addition of nearshore and other non-standard sampling stations may 341 exacerbate hyperstability problems, though this is easily rectified through careful data selection
342 procedures. The systemic causes of the recent decline in abundance are not clear, and should be 343 a subject of future research. However, one of the proximal causes of the decline is the decrease
344 in egg and larval survivorship during the past decade, as noted by Fissel et al. (2011). The cause 345 of that mortality is not presently known, but the consequence was a severe reduction in the 346 production of recruitment age fish. The decline in abundance happened faster than can be 347 explained by poor recruitment alone, indicating that the natural mortality rate of adults also 348 probably increased.

RE: Agenda Item H.3: Anchovy General Status Review

October 16, 2015

Dear Ms. Sobeck, Ms. Lowman and Mr. Stelle:

I am writing on behalf of the Monterey Bay Chapter of the American Cetacean Society, a 200-member whale conservation organization. We are greatly concerned about the anchovy fishery and its effects on the ecosystem of Monterey Bay.

Anchovies are a critical food source for many fish and marine mammals, including whales, dolphins and porpoise. The anchovy population has declined to historically low levels in recent years. According to the CA Dept. of Fish & Wildlife 2015 California Coastal Pelagic Species Fishery report, 11,815.28 metric tons of anchovy have been collected so far this season. It is unconscionable that this important food source for marine life is still being fished, even as its population is near collapse. Anchovy fishing has great costs to the environment, with very little benefit. While animals face starvation from the lack of anchovies and other forage fish, the anchovy currently brings in an average of just 5 cents per pound!

Most California anchovies are typically not fished for human consumption. They are primarily exported for use as fertilizer, livestock or aquaculture feed, or bait.

Other forage fish face decline, as well. Compounded with the collapse of the anchovy fishery, the elimination of important food sources for marine life is unsustainable. We have experienced great joy at the numbers of humpback whales that have visited Monterey Bay over the past several months, but that joy is turning to concern as the numbers of anchovy declines and the humpbacks search for food elsewhere.

Thank you for caring for the ocean environment and its inhabitants, and for your careful consideration of protecting the anchovies. These forage fish have a far more important purpose than selling for fertilizer at 5 cents per pound.

Respectfully,

RE: Agenda Item H.3: Anchovy General Status Review

Dear Chair Lowman, Ms. Sobeck, Mr. Stelle, and Members of the Council:

We at Monterey Bay Whale Watch are writing to you to express our concern about the potential collapse of the anchovy population in combination with the increased fishing effort in recent weeks here in Monterey Bay. As a company owned and operated by Marine Biologists, we are very passionate about collecting data about all the wildlife, particularly whales, in Monterey Bay. We have a 30-year record of detailed sightings of whales, dolphins, pinnipeds, sea otters, and birds. Based on our recent observations and the alarming decrease in biodiversity in the bay coinciding with the anchovy landings, we are asking for a re-evaluation of the fishery, a new stock assessment and updated fishing quotas for the California Coast. A quota based on a current assessment is essential, and if data indicates that the anchovy population is in fact crashing, then a closure should be required.

It has come to our attention that the observations we are making about high numbers of anchovies close to shore are due to a local anomaly of water temperature conditions and evidence that anchovy populations are drastically low overall. This has become a large concern now that the purse seine vessels in Monterey Bay have switched their focus to anchovy instead of squid. This increased pressure on the anchovy and the competition with the wildlife in Monterey Bay has dramatically decreased the biomass near shore in the last two weeks. Before the fishing effort resumed for anchovies in Monterey Bay, we were observing 60-80 Humpback Whales, 600-800 Common Dolphins and rafts of 300-400 California Sea Lions feeding over the canyon west of Moss Landing. Today on October 16, 2015 we observed less than 10 Humpback

Whales, no Common Dolphins and less than 5 scattered individual California Sea Lions feeding in the exact same area.

The past few years have been spectacular for whale watching and we have observed a large influx of Humpback Whales correlated with a surge of anchovies in the Monterey Submarine Canyon starting in September 2013. These anchovies have served as an abundant and predictable food source for endangered Humpback Whales, California Sea Lions and other marine predators. During Fall of 2013, we observed at least 200 Humpback Whales a day at the peak of the feeding season, as well as feeding groups numbering up to 2000 California Sea Lions. In 2013, the Humpback Whales stayed through mid-December to take advantage of the large abundance of food before migrating to Mexico and Central America. Upon their return in 2014, the same feeding behaviors from Humpback Whales and California Sea Lions were observed and anchovies were documented in thick layers that extended for over a mile into the Submarine Canyon. The anchovies were so abundant even in the winter months (late 2014-early 2015) that we had a small group of Humpback Whales (20-30 individuals) observed daily in Monterey Bay. This is the first time in 30 years that we have documented Humpback Whales over-wintering in Monterey Bay. The cooperative feeding between California Sea Lions and Humpback Whales the past few years has never before been documented so consistently in Monterey Bay. Additionally, the cooperative lunge feeding groups of Humpback Whales documented this summer numbered 10-12 individuals with some groups as large as 35 individual whales, is a first for Monterey Bay. The loss of anchovies in these near shore habitats is affecting these feeding groups and we may not get a chance to observe these behaviors for the next few years due to this adverse environmental change.

In addition to the immediate impacts in recent weeks, we have also noticed long term trends showing the bait-fish decline. California Sea Lions and Guadalupe Fur Seals have been stranding or found dead in high numbers for the past few years all along the California Coast. The California Brown Pelicans have been experiencing reproductive failures, and this year we had almost no individuals spend time at the Monterey Fisherman's Wharf. We have been observing a high number of dead Common Murres and Brandt's Cormorants out at sea and on the beaches. Scientists believe that these deaths are a result of a lack of sufficient fish in the ocean.

Our understanding is that when anchovy populations are low, they gather in near shore habitats such as the Monterey Submarine Canyon. We have potentially been observing the last portion of the population here in Monterey Bay where the whales have been feeding. It's very disheartening to think that now the fishery could be taking the very last of the fish, and the wildlife has no other location to forage.

Our biggest concern is that the current take of anchovy in Monterey Bay is so heavy that it will affect the food chain for years to come. If we don't plan for our future now, there won't be a future to protect. These fish are crucially important to a wide suite of marine predators, but even more so to the whales. If the Humpback Whales here in California do not forage successfully for even part of a season, it can have a big impact on their population during migration times for years to come. Humpback Whales feed on 1-2 tons of forage fish or krill per day. If these whales are hindered in their foraging efforts, it can negatively impact their reproductive health, ability to rear calves and ability to survive their annual fast during migration times. Humpbacks are just one of several endangered species in California that rely on anchovies. This growing population of Humpback Whales relies on the Monterey Submarine Canyon as a prime foraging habitat. It is crucial to protect this species during its recovery from near extinction after the whaling era. Our biologists in collaboration with Cascadia Research Collective have documented this population since the mid 1980's when there were only 400 Humpbacks along the California Coast. Last year's estimate was nearly 3000 individual Humpback Whales giving them a steady 6-7% annual growth rate.

Another concern we have is the use of "seal bombs" while fishing for anchovy, sardine and squid. This tactic is used to scare sea lions out of the fishing nets as it's brought on board for processing. This practice is very detrimental for any cetaceans in the area because it can effect their hearing and disrupt feeding behavior. The auditory system of any cetacean is part of their survival system, it's how they navigate, communicate and forage successfully. If their hearing is damaged they could potentially die from starvation or disorientation causing them to strand on shore. Even if their hearing is not adversely impacted, loud noise has been found to alter behavior. In this case, since the most common behavior observed is feeding/foraging, any alteration of this behavior is detrimental to the health of the whale population. This is particularly concerning for Odontocetes such as Common Dolphins, Harbor Porpoise and Killer Whales which have been sighted in the fishing grounds almost daily. These seal bombs are also likely displacing the humpback whales from their prime food source and preventing groups of whales from cooperatively foraging together. We ask federal authorities to evaluate the effects of allowing commercial fisheries to use "seal bombs" in marine mammal feeding and congregation areas such as Monterey Bay, particularly as several of these marine mammals are federally listed as Endangered Species.

Monterey Bay Whale Watch is very passionate about the conservation of marine mammals and highly invested in the health of the food web in Monterey Bay. As a predominant member of the ecotourism industry, we support any effort to keep the bay a healthy and thriving ecosystem and discourage any over exploitation or detriment of the environment and the multiple species dependent on a healthy, productive ecosystem. In a very short time, we have noticed a dramatic decrease in the abundance of humpback whales, California sea lions, dolphins and seabirds in correlation with the purse seine fishing boats coming into Monterey and Moss Landing harbors loaded with anchovy. This association is troublesome due to the rapid effect it's having on the bay. At the beginning of the month we were reaching peak numbers of whales, heavy feeding activity and observing very thick schools of anchovies at the head of the submarine canyon near Moss Landing. Now we are hard pressed to find anything remotely like that.

Monterey Bay has become a global whale watch destination with a large amount of media coverage the past few years. The New York Times, BBC, National Geographic and local news affiliates have all come to document the fantastic wildlife in Monterey as a result of the successful recovery of Monterey Bay's ecosystem. The BBC and PBS recently featured Monterey Bay in a TV series called Big Blue Live, bringing many new whale watchers to Monterey for years to come. Whale watching and ecotourism is a multi-million dollar industry for our communities in Monterey Bay. The economic impacts of this growing industry can be seen all across Monterey County. The Monterey County Visitor's Bureau has named Monterey "The Whale Watching Capital of the World". It would be a shame to lose the productivity of the bay to a fishery that makes just 5-6 cents a pound. The value of leaving the fish in the food chain far surpasses the value of turning them into fertilizer and feed for livestock and aquaculture fish. A healthy ecosystem leads to a healthy environment for the greater Monterey Bay community.

We have included some anecdotal evidence of the recent decline in wildlife sightings over the last two weeks.

- The anchovies were so thick at the beginning of the month they would give a false bottom reading on our equipment. We had groups of whales as large as 32 feeding together at the beginning of the month and some of the best vertical lunge feeding behaviors we have ever recorded in Monterey Bay. The multispecies feeding aggregations between humpback whales and California sea lions were just starting to form on a regular basis and now that interaction has collapsed. In a matter of 10 days we have lost most of that biomass and feeding activity.
- The numbers of whales sighted on a whale watch trip are a small fraction of what they were about two weeks ago and now they are scattered instead of concentrated over the rich feeding locales over the submarine canyon.
- Groups of dolphins are getting much harder to find in the bay, and they are in much smaller groups.
- We have to travel much further between sightings and there are next to zero whales within 2 miles of Moss Landing Harbor, where previous to fishing efforts there were 15 to 30 whales in each group near shore.
- Our equipment readings are showing the bait is very scattered and hard to come by.
- Two weeks ago the whales were so densely aggregated in the canyon that you couldn't travel at full speed for fear of colliding with one.
- When we do come across whales, they are in groups of 2-4 individuals as opposed to groups of 6-10 we had been seeing on a regular basis.
- There has been a 75% decrease in total bird abundance over the submarine canyon across all species.

We have included a few photos showing the differences between two weeks ago and what was observed today at the end of this letter. We will send further sighting data analysis in relation to anchovy landings to the Council before the meeting on November 13th 2015.

We are asking the Council to further investigate the impacts of this fishery on the health of the ecosystems along the California Coast. Our fear is that if this fishery isn't re-evaluated, the food web in Monterey will fall apart without the anchovies. At minimum, we are asking for further investigation and lower quotas for the anchovy species in the California Current, or a closure of the fishery if deemed necessary. We also ask for a continued closure of the sardine fishery until the population has recovered to healthy levels. The Pacific Fisheries Management Council already agreed upon banning new fisheries for other species of forage fish. We think anchovies and sardines deserve the same protection since they are just as vital to the food chain.

Given the lack of understanding of anchovies and sardines on the West Coast, it seems irresponsible to have fishing limits that allow industrial-scale fishery removals without further investigation.

Thank you for your prompt attention to these requests for immediate action.
Sincerely,

RE: Agenda Item H.3: Anchovy General Status Review

Dear Chair Lowman and Council Members:

I am a whale watching operator on Monterey Bay with eight years of daily observations that lead me to be very concerned about overfishing of the Central California northern anchovy population. Up to 2% of the California-Oregon humpback whale population has been feeding in Monterey Bay on anchovies since September 2013, boosting whale tourism enormously. The potential complete depletion of this whale food source could cause economic impacts to Monterey Bay's whale watching industry, as well as to marine predators themselves, that would far outweigh any economic benefit from the wetfish landings.

Humpback Whales, Anchovy, and Whale Watching in Monterey Bay

For the past two years we've been seeing 50-200 whales daily, for a longer feeding season than before, and performing phenomenal group feeding behaviors not seen elsewhere. In 2013 large numbers of humpbacks continued feeding into mid-December, and in 2014 into mid-November, instead of dispersing at the end of October. Last winter for the first time ever there was a continuous resident population of over a dozen humpbacks that never migrated. In 2013 and 2014 humpbacks and sea lions gathered in mutual feeding groups never seen before in living memory. This year the whales have been surface-feeding in large groups that look like Alaskan bubble-netters. It's not just the increasing population of humpbacks that's caused this, it's been the anchovy density in the canyon.

The whale activity has caused a boom in whale watching has attracted international attention. The recent August-September BBC/PBS special Big Blue Live, in which I was a featured whale commentator, immediately led to increased tourism bookings and further increase is expected next summer. The whale watching fleet has increased its capacity by over 30% with more boat purchases planned. The economic benefit of each whale watching ticket is multiplied to the hotels, restaurants, and associated businesses throughout the Monterey Bay area.

One Anchovy Ton = One Whale-day

One humpback whale eats up to a ton of anchovies in 24 hours. One ton of anchovy is therefore the equivalent of one whale-day. That ton of anchovies could be caught and sold for about $100. One humpback whale eating that ton of anchovy brings in $1000-$3000 per day in direct whale watching ticket revenue (2000 people per day, $40 per person, 30 whales in the Bay), not counting any associated tourism income. The socio-economic value of anchovy left in the water attracting whales is huge.

Whale Behavior Changes in Reaction to Anchovy Fishing

Earlier in the spring of 2015 and again in the past three weeks when purse seining on anchovies has occurred at night, I have observed marked changes in daytime humpback whale behavior, suggesting that fishing causes direct interference with humpbacks' night foraging activity. My dock neighbor is a commercial fisherman who told me in May 2015 that a purse seiner had told him they kept having to open the nets to let whales out. Once night fishing had begun, the dozen whales we'd been seeing each morning over the anchovy school were not there. They'd come back in the afternoon. This pattern continued for a couple weeks until the squid fishery picked up. Once the seiners stopped anchovy fishing, the whales were there like clockwork again from dawn to dusk.

Now in October 2015 there has been a sharp change in humpback behavior. This time there were daily over 60 whales feeding on the anchovy layer 300-500' down in the canyon close to shore, in packs of 8-30 (no kidding — none of us had ever seen 20-30 whales surface and dive together either). Once night fishing began again, the whales fractured into groups of 2-5 and spread out over a much larger area. There was even more fish showing up on our sonar than in Fall of 2014, so we expected they should still be feeding intensively into mid-November again.

Humpbacks are known to feed at night. They are the first baleen whales proven to use sonar clicks to locate prey in the dark. The anchovy school for two years now has been a dense layer located near the bottom of the narrow, steep-walled three miles of the Monterey Canyon closest to Moss Landing. During the day all one need do is park over that part of the canyon and whales will come up nearby. It would be impossible to fish those anchovies without being close to whales. Whether or not they've directly encountered the nets as reported, in daytime I have observed behavior changes around large diesel engines. It's not difficult to imagine that the commercial fishing affects them and could cause the distribution changes we've seen.

Conclusion

Recent estimates show that the dense anchovy schools in Monterey Bay are perhaps the majority of the population left on the West Coast, so it is critical that fishing on them be stopped to prevent population collapse. I support the fishermen in making a living, and realize they have few options when squid catches are low and the sardine fishery is closed. I am concerned that if they are allowed to remove the last of Central Coast northern anchovy population now, there will be little chance for the fishery to recover. In fact, don't market squid eat anchovies? All marine predators, including fishermen and whales, and the growing economy built on wildlife watching, deserve good science and fast decision making to protect the foundation resources. Please act quickly to prevent anchovy overfishing.

Subject: prevent future overfishing and help forage fish populations rebuild to healthy and abundant levels

Dear PFMC Chair Ms. Lowman and PFMC Members,

I am greatly concerned that management of the commercial forage fish fisheries off California, Oregon and Washington is leaving ocean wildlife without enough fish to eat. Sea lions, whales, pelicans, and many other species rely on these same forage fish for a large part of their diet. Pacific sardine and northern anchovy populations are at historically low levels and are some of the most important forage fish in the California Current ocean ecosystem. Immediate action is needed to prevent future overfishing and to help these forage fish populations rebuild to healthy and abundant levels.

“Our duty to the whole, including to the unborn generations, bids us to restrain an unprincipled present-day minority from wasting the heritage of these unborn generations. The movement for the conservation of wildlife and the larger movement for the conservation of all our natural resources are essentially democratic in spirit, purpose and method.”

-- Theodore Roosevelt

This year, an unprecedented number of California sea lion pups were found stranded on beaches. Many died and many others were found underweight, dehydrated, and starving. Their mothers were not finding enough forage fish to eat. They were spending more time away from their pups foraging, farther from shore, and the nursing sea lion pups were in turn, starving to death.

“Every form of life is unique, warranting respect regardless of its worth to man, and, to accord other organisms such recognition, man must be guided by a moral code of action.”

-- The World Charter of Nature, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1982

Approximately three times as many sea lions washed ashore in 2015 compared to 2013, when the severity of strandings emerged as an issue of great concern. Similarly, California brown pelicans have been abandoning their nests due to the lack of forage fish. With about 90 percent of sea lion pups estimated to die this year before weaning age and complete range-wide reproductive failures in brown pelicans—only removed from the Endangered Species List a few years ago—more must be done to ensure there is adequate forage fish to support a healthy and abundant food web in the Pacific Ocean.

“As we peer into society’s future, we—you and I, and our government—must avoid the impulse to live only for today, plundering for our own ease and convenience the precious resources of tomorrow. We cannot mortgage the material assets of our grandchildren without risking the loss also of their political and spiritual heritage. We want democracy to survive for all generations to come, not to become the insolvent phantom of tomorrow.”

-- Dwight D. Eisenhower

Never-before-seen ocean conditions combined with increasing and excessive fishing pressure have put these forage fish populations in a crisis situation. Further safeguards for these critical fish populations are needed to help these fish rebound, to provide abundant prey for dependent predators, and to ensure long-term, ecologically sustainable fisheries into the future.

“It is our task in our time and in our generation, to hand down undiminished to those who come after us, as was handed down to us by those who went before, the natural wealth and beauty which is ours.”

-- John F. Kennedy

While I commend your decision to give Pacific sardines a reprieve by closing the commercial fishery last April, we need a long-term solution so that coast-wide sardine overfishing does not occur in the future. Because the United States fishes the same population of sardines as Mexico and Canada, it is critical that the current calculation used to determine how many sardines can be fished is corrected to accurately account for the sardines Canada and Mexico remove from the ocean. This will ensure the United States is taking a responsible share and not contributing to coast-wide overfishing.

“Then I say the Earth belongs to each generation during its course, fully and in its own right, no generation can contract debts greater than may be paid during the course of its own existence.”

-- Thomas Jefferson

Additionally, available scientific information indicates that the central sub-population of northern anchovy (found off California) may be alarmingly low. Immediately reducing catch levels for anchovy is critical, especially given the undeniable signs of a lack of forage fish in the ecosystem. The Council and NMFS should make it a top priority to obtain a new full assessment of the anchovy population. The Council should also ensure that the calculation for determining how many anchovies can be fished accounts for how many anchovies ocean predators need to eat.

“Every man who appreciates the majesty and beauty of the wilderness and of wild life, should strike hands with the farsighted men who wish to preserve our material resources, in the effort to keep our forests and our game beasts, game-birds, and game-fish—indeed, all the living creatures of prairie and woodland and seashore—from wanton destruction. Above all, we should realize that the effort toward this end is essentially a democratic movement.”

-- Theodore Roosevelt

In summary, I urge you to take immediate measures to fix the Pacific sardine management framework, prevent northern anchovy overfishing, and ensure abundant forage fish populations for dependent predators. Ocean wildlife and coastal communities don't have time to wait.

“A thing is right when it tends to preserve the integrity, stability, and beauty of the biotic community. It is wrong when it tends otherwise.”

-- Aldo Leopold

Currently the anchovies are being over fished!!!..
The fisherman are displacing the whales and other sea life.
This has got to stop and be limited.
Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter.
