It's about time

It takes four years for most, but it may take three or five too.

In ways it seems like it takes years to get through a semester, and sometimes you can't believe more than minutes have passed by.

The memories aren't divided into semesters though. You remember the moments and segments that made up times you had. Thinking back can flood you with good memories as well as bad. But when you reflect you realize that your grasp of the concept of time is far from complete.

It's about where you started and where you are when you finish.

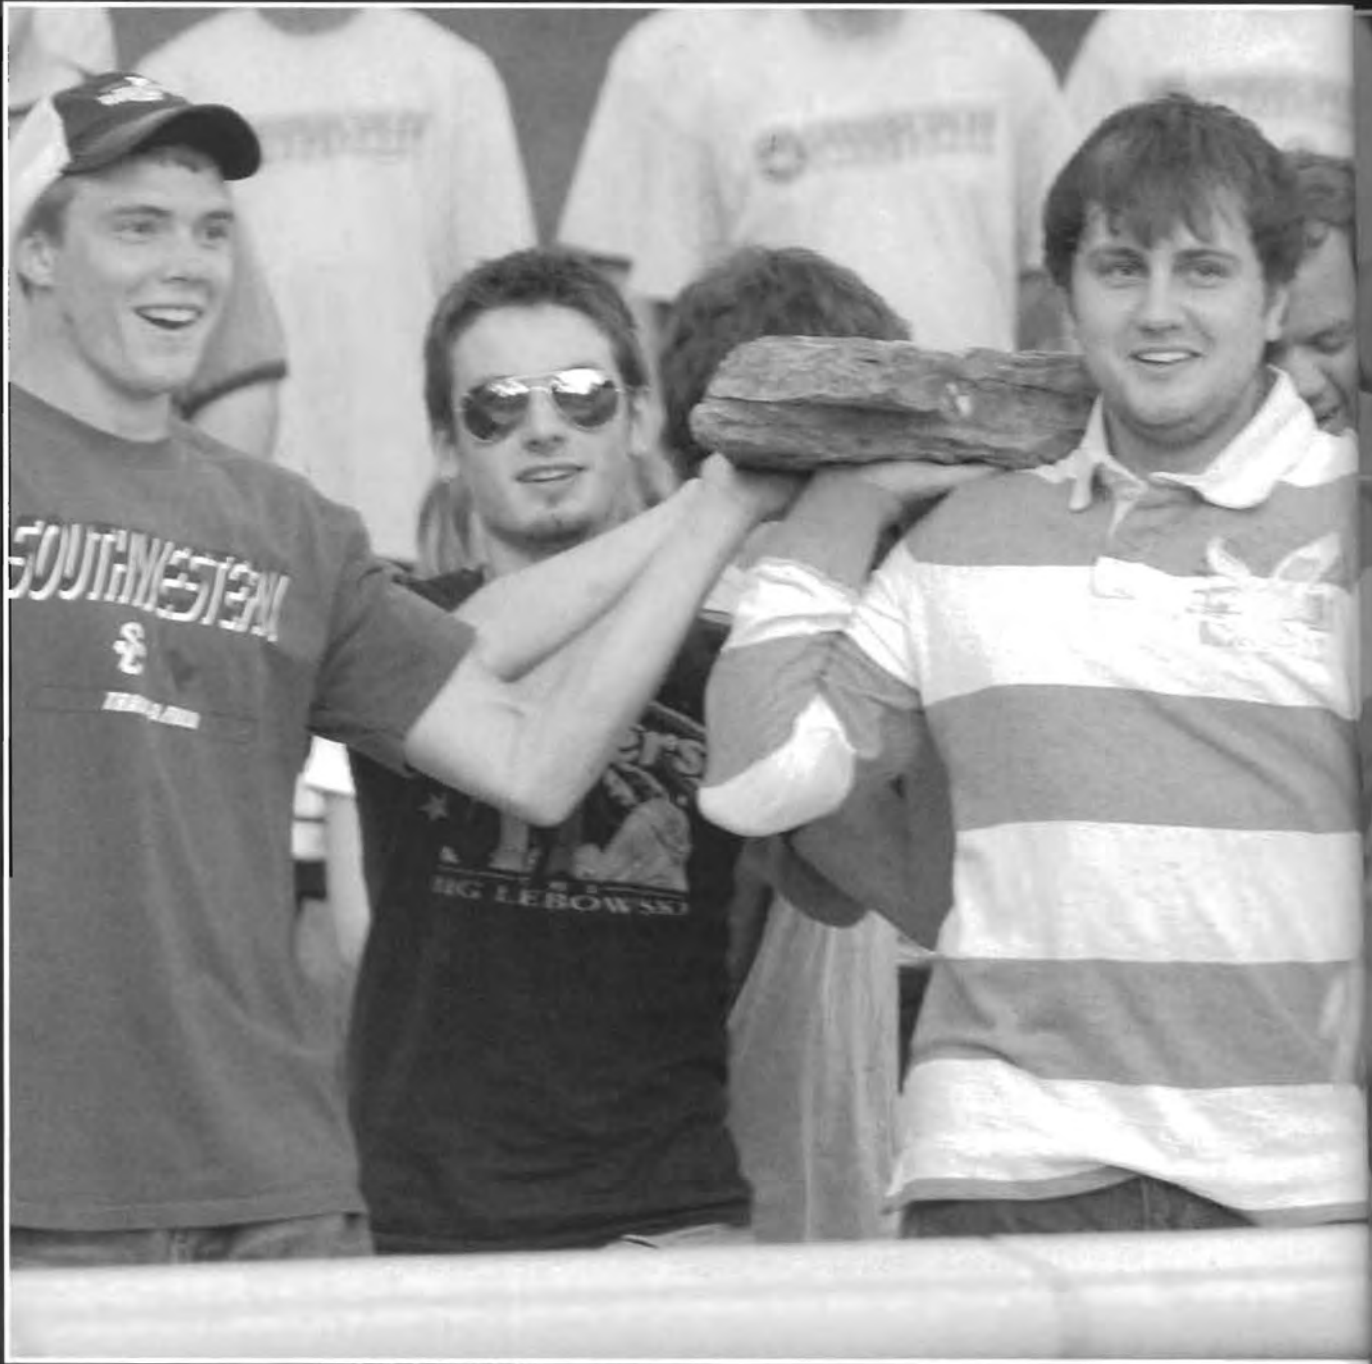

It's about time.

At the Homecoming game, fans line up to cheer on the football team. Festivities include a parade, pancake feed, tailgate party and coronation.

It's about time

Just because you've moved your belongings doesn't make it home. You don't call somebody you just met a friend. You don't know the streets of town like the back of your hand.

It is part of the life of a student when our trays are stolen away from us for a week.

Or when we meet with the Dean about that incident at the party.

Or when we pack the house at Stewart Field House for a big game.

Or sneak into the library well past closing to finish a group project we should have finished weeks before.

It is all part of life that makes us what we become. We don't become that way because we are stuck in Winfield.

It's about time.

Individuals

It's about time

We have friends by our side. But we don't have to think like them or even enjoy all the same activities.

We start to consider who we are and what makes us tick inside. What used to sound appealing may not seem so satisfying anymore. As we grow older our interests and hobbies and needs and values evolve as well.

That doesn't happen overnight.

It's about time.

For many, choosing a college might have been a last-minute decision.

For Gage Cranmer, psychology sophomore, it's a decision that was five years in the making.

When Cranmer was in eighth grade his sister spent a week at a biology camp at Southwestern. Although she chose another college, the things that she said about this one affected Gage. He knew from the way she talked about it, it was a place he would like to be.

His chance to see the school first-hand came before his senior year when his mother suggested Leadership Camp. Cranmer said, "She thought it would really help me develop my leadership skills. Thus I went to Leadership Camp and I found my place. I was put in awe by the program. Next thing I knew I was on my way to Boulder Camp."

Leadership has become something that has enriched his life. "These individuals are helping me to grow as a person and as a leader. They are an amazing support group to have. Sometimes when we are doing a service project I get to feeling so empowered by everyone's efforts that I lose myself in the project," said Cranmer.

Cranmer is originally from Wyoming, but he has lived in Fredonia for most of his life. It's about an hour and a half trip for him to travel home. Cranmer has kept a close relationship with his family there while starting a new one here.

"There is my direct family that is my entire world, I could not survive or be where I am today without them here. Then you have my close friends. They spend a lot of time with me at school. I would do just about anything to help them in their times of need no matter what," said Cranmer.

Cranmer has a packed slate. He keeps busy with Leadership, the psychology program, and keeping up with his friends. When he does find the time for some relaxation he prefers to take a simple approach to life. Cranmer said, "If I didn't have an agenda then, my boys and I would probably spend the day playing Madden, flirting with girls and enjoying the great outdoors with a game of touch football or basketball."

As a sophomore, he's in a transition to his next step in life. Although his plans might have changed, he remains positive he'll figure it all out.

Cranmer says, "Throughout high school I had the dream to become a criminal profiler for the FBI and hunt serial murderers. Now that dream did lead me to begin studying psychology here at SC but I think I'm slowly going in another direction. What that direction is I'm not real sure yet, but I'm sure it will hit me one day soon."

He may not be well-known on campus but he is definitely well-known on the golf course.

During his four years as a member of the Moundbuilder golf team, Tyler Lytton, business graduate, was a three-time conference medalist, two-time NAIA Region IV medalist, two-time NAIA All-American and two-time Golf Coaches Association of America All-American.

He won six tournaments individually, and helped the team win three conference championships. Lytton was also featured in Sports Illustrated's "Faces in the Crowd" his sophomore year.

But the success didn't come easy. During his college career, Lytton practiced every single day. As soon as he was done with classes, he was on the golf course until sundown.

But like all good things, his time as a collegiate athlete came to an end. After four years of hard work and determination, Lytton's eligibility ran out. But he wasn't ready to leave yet. Lytton is now the graduate assistant for the golf team. While he has a lot of responsibilities, he has learned to balance golf, school and friends. "It's really not bad because I only have three classes a week, but I'm constantly doing something in the office for the golf team so I'm always busy."

Now that he's on the other side, he's starting to understand how different the game is. He said the hardest thing about being a coach is not having any control over the players. "I just have to sit there and watch them make mistakes. I can't do anything for them, especially during tournaments."

Since his role has changed from player to coach, he isn't required to practice every day. Instead he spends a lot of his time in the office. Time off doesn't happen often, so in his spare time he's usually out on the course improving his game for his next professional tournament.

But there's more to him than just golf and he always makes time for other things.

Lytton has been dating his girlfriend, Amy Kellner, business graduate, since their sophomore year. With their relationship, it has proven that opposites do attract. While Kellner is loud and outgoing, Lytton is more quiet and reserved. Lytton said, "She complements me. I bring a little calm to her and she brings a little hell to me."

Lytton said he has never been the kind of person to do things on a whim. "I always think too much about what I'm going to do. I would never just go get a tattoo or drive to Wichita on a Tuesday afternoon to go bowling. That's just not me."

"If KU sports are on, I always watch them. I used to make time for the Chiefs but not anymore 'cause they're not very good."

First appearances don't always determine who the person is.

Many of his friends would agree that it wasn't the easiest task to break through to the fun guy who they know now.

Westin Weeast, business senior, was Lytton's roommate for one year. Weeast said, "It did take a while before we became friends because he never really said anything but he eventually warms up to people. Once he gets to know you, he loosens up and is a pretty fun guy."

She was born and raised an hour and a half away. Chelsea Fort, biology freshman, is an Okie straight out of Stillwater with 'Builder Pride' running through her veins.

"I came to Southwestern because it's a family tradition. They have a great science program, and I get to continue playing softball," said Fort.

When she says family tradition, it's serious business. Both of her parents went here. Two of her aunts, two of her uncles and one former uncle all graduated from Southwestern College.

"My mother came here in the centennial class. She came here because a man and his wife from her home town, Hunter, Okla., Beth and Darwin Wells, paid for her schooling," said Fort. Beth and Darwin Wells are the people who Darbeth Fine Arts Center building is named after.

"My father came here on a tennis and academic scholarship," said Fort.

Fort is on a sports scholarship as well. She has been playing softball since she was in first grade. This year makes 13 years playing first base.

Along with softball, Fort has talent in other areas as well. She is part of the Southwestern College Orchestra.

Her instrument of choice is the viola.

"I have been playing the viola for six years. I like playing the viola because it's different. The violin is squeaky and the cello is too big to carry around. I chose the viola because it sounds pretty. I don't have time to practice but I try to practice an hour a week," said Fort.

Balancing a major like biology while playing softball is a challenge. Fort maintains having a life while she gets her work done. She studies 18 to 20 hours a week.

"I study, hang out with my friends and watch TV and that's pretty much it. During pressed time I listen to music and take my anger and stress out on other people," said Fort.

If given the opportunity to travel back in time, Fort would pick the 60s. "If I could go back in time I would go to Woodstock of '69."

Like most college students who are night owls, Fort finds her "focus and fun time" during the night. Nighttime is her favorite part of the day because she is more alert and she is not as busy as she is during the day.

It's not every day you hear about someone you know having heart surgery. However, that is exactly what happened to Melissa Borthwick, biology junior, this summer.

"In July I had my gallbladder removed," said Borthwick. "Then they found out I had a heart condition called Wolf Parkinson White Syndrome, so I had minor heart surgery."

Borthwick's dedication to athletics at Southwestern and her focused attention to her studies made heart surgery seem like a walk in the park. "It wasn't that big of a deal," she said.

For the past two years, Borthwick has been actively involved in softball and basketball. After her surgery this summer, she decided she should give up softball.

"I was under a lot of stress my first two years doing basketball and softball," said Borthwick.

"Stress causes a lot of medical problems. I figured the less stress I had the better for me. It was just too much for my schedule so I had to give softball up."

Borthwick's knowledge of medicine, matched with her studies in biology, will help her to become successful some day, although she's not completely sure in what way.

"I haven't completely decided yet," said Borthwick. "I'm kind of between pediatrician and occupation therapy. I want to do something in the medical field with children."

Borthwick's family inspires her. "It's kind of a toss-up between my parents and my grandparents," said Borthwick.

"My parents because they never went to school but they always pushed me and my brother to be the best we could be. My grandparents because kind of the same thing. My grandma has an unwavering faith in God, which helped me pick here because of the Christian atmosphere."

She knew she wanted to go to a Christian college and chose Southwestern because of previous influence.

She said, "One of my coaches from my high school came to school here and told me about it. I came to visit and fell in love. It's really pretty. The people are nice. And obviously the science program is really good."

Each day proves to be a new challenge, but Borthwick sticks with it. "I don't like to give up or quit on anything, almost to a fault. So I just try to prove people wrong. I'm really stubborn."

In her spare time, when she can find any, Borthwick enjoys hanging out with friends. "I love to read and sleep when I can," she said. "I also enjoy cooking because I like to eat."

Something that people might not know about Borthwick is a long-standing tradition in her hometown of Ulysses. "Me and my dad kind of have a tradition of driving tractors in my hometown parade."

Changing majors has required a lot of work in order for her to be able to graduate on time.

Anna Macy, biology senior, changed her major from pre-med before her senior year.

"It relieved a lot of stress that goes along with being a pre-med student. However switching my major so late in my academic career causes more stress in that I had to take extra classes and I had to start applying to graduate school within a couple months of my decision." Macy applied to Wichita State University where she hopes to earn a doctorate of physical therapy.

"As long as I can remember I have wanted to become a physician. The more I thought about my future, I decided that while I wanted to have a respectable career, I wanted a family as well," said Macy.

She was also looking for a career choice that required less time. "I was trying to look more to the future and I thought I would have more of a life and more time for family if I did a nine to five job," said Macy.

Macy finds it hard to fit in free time while trying to keep up with everything else. "I don't really have spare time. I study and I'm involved in a lot of clubs and organizations so that keeps me pretty busy," Macy said.

"I'm a planner so I like schedules and I try and stick to them," she said. "Post-it notes are my best friend."

She is involved with several organizations and has a top position in most of them. She is secretary of Tri Beta and president of College Republicans. Macy is also involved in Leadership and Big Brothers, Big Sisters.

On top of the hours spent with organizations, Macy also has a job in a nearby city.

She works almost an hour away from campus as a phlebotomist, which is a person who draws blood, at St. Joseph Hospital in Wichita. She has worked there since the summer of 2005.

Free time doesn't come often in Macy's life, so she has to spend it wisely.

When she does have spare time, she likes to run, swim, read and hang out with her friends. Macy, a KU basketball fan, is from Belle Plain.

She is committed to volunteering. "I love volunteering, and I frequently make trips back home to help out with various events."

Macy is a strong believer in God. "My strong Christian beliefs have shaped who I am, as well as the support of my family and friends."

Macy has many aspirations. She wants to earn a Ph.D., coach volleyball, write a novel, ski in the Swiss Alps and become the first female president of the United States of America.

Macy said, "In hopes of running for the presidential office in 2024, I decided I needed to start somewhere, so I recently ran and was elected for the position as committeewoman for my township back home."

She is from a different time zone that is one day ahead of Winfield. Joanna Woon, music sophomore, was born and raised in Malaysia. When she first came to Winfield a year ago, the flight halfway across the world took 24 hours.

"It felt like three days because of the different time zones," said Woon.

Growing up in another country, one would think you would learn your native language first. Woon's first word was in English. Woon said, "We mostly speak English at home."

Her mother is an English teacher in Malaysia. Woon speaks three different languages, English, Malay and Chinese. "My mom has been an English teacher for more than 20 years actually, and she is really amazing," said Woon.

Woon came to Southwestern College to major in music. People wonder why someone would travel across the world to attend a small college in a town very few people have heard of on the other side of the world.

"I wanted to come here because it's a Christian school. I didn't want to just major in music, but music and worship. Southwestern is a good school and the people here are really nice. Coming from a country far away, my parents wanted to know they could trust the school and that I was in good hands," said Woon.

Music is a major part of Woon's life. She plays the piano, violin, guitar and bass guitar. She also plays a Chinese traditional instrument called Gu Zh Eng. Woon has been playing the piano since she was six years old.

All the other instruments she picked up along the way. Like most of us, Woon finds that time slot to rest her eyes before the next day of classes after a long day in class and practice.

Most people don't know that not only does she play all those instruments, but she paints a lot and loves art. Her favorite time of the day is from 10 p.m. to 8 a.m. because she loves watching the stars and the sunrise.

"I don't get much sleep so I like to sleep during my spare time. I also like to write music and watch movies with my friends."

Times can get hard and time can become pressed. We all have our way of dealing with that. Woon's way out is music. "I like to write music and play my music when I am stressed," said Woon.

Woon is always on the run with her busy schedule. "Time holds the key to who we are today because it is the past that builds us and molds us. I never want to change anything from my past, because all the experiences, the ups and downs, were what made me who I am today," said Woon.

She looks forward to the future and what she can do today to make life more purposeful.

"I would never want to go back in time to change anything," she said.

"I love the feeling of a new day and a fresh start in the morning. I especially love rainy days. They inspire me spiritually and musically."

He is known for the old, ugly, faded blue hat he wears and for standing on the sidelines during football games.

Greg Jeffers, athletic training junior, said, "People ask me about my hat all the time. My best friend gave it to me in third grade and it's kind of grown with me. It's been sewn quite a few times. It's been washed and disinfected. It's something I won't be getting rid of any time soon."

Something Jeffers might also be known for is his friendliness toward anyone he might see. "I'm a very open person. It bugs me when I'm walking by someone if I don't say 'Hi' to them."

This characteristic is what sparked Jeffers' interest in athletic training. That and the influence of his high school athletic trainer Steve Freibus.

Before tearing his labrum playing football his junior year of high school, Jeffers wanted to be a Drug Enforcement Agency officer or work for the FBI. However, after a shoulder injury that required surgery, Jeffers realized that helping other people is what he really wanted to be doing.

"I got to work with my high school athletic trainer and it showed me how much I could help people. That's what I like doing, being there when people need help."

Jeffers spent 15 hours each week with Freibus. "He really inspired a lot of what I did. It was a major shoulder injury that year so we spent a lot of time together and got to talk."

Last January, Jeffers started taking classes for his paramedic degree at Tulsa Community College. "It should take three years but I'm on a six-year track," said Jeffers. "I'm taking a full load here and two classes at a time in other places. I'm chipping away at my paramedic degree."

Aside from taking a full load of classes, Jeffers also is involved in Phi Delta Theta, Student Government Association, Student Foundation and SC Republicans. He can be seen walking the halls of Wallingford as a resident assistant. Being able to be involved in so many activities is one of the many reasons Jeffers chose Southwestern.

"I absolutely love SC's atmosphere," said Jeffers. "Everyone pretty much knows everyone. Everyone says 'Hi' to everyone. It's a heck of a lot different than other schools."

After graduating in 2010, Jeffers plans on going to get his master's. "I want to go somewhere other than SC, branch out a little." Until he passes his board of certification test, Jeffers plans on working in a clinic. "After that I want to go work at a large high school or college setting."

With a busy time frame and a successful future on the horizon, Jeffers looks to his girlfriend Ann Weese, biology senior, for inspiration. "A lot of my encouragement comes from my girlfriend. She really encourages me a lot," said Jeffers.

Jeffers also has his fraternity brothers. "We just look at our final goal in life, what we want to do, and mine is to get out of college successfully and move on and become a certified athletic trainer and have a successful life."

Most people only know her as the person who sends the e-mail everyday. Put her in a room full of other administrators and most students wouldn't even know what she looks like. But there's more behind Sara Weinert, vice president for communications, than just the Jinx Tale.

Weinert has been responsible for the Jinx Tale since she began working at Southwestern College 12 years ago. Then, the Jinx Tale was a printed newsletter that was distributed weekly. When the internet began gaining popularity, Weinert made the suggestion to convert the Jinx Tale into electronic form. In 2000, the electronic newsletter we like to call the Jinx Tale was born.

During the first few years, the Jinx Tale was several e-mails that were sent to everyone on campus. With so many announcements, people's inboxes became full with information that didn't even pertain to them.

Weinert fixed that problem.

She organized all the information into one e-mail. And it didn't take long before rules were set in place to limit the number and repetition of announcements or events.

Weinert said that composing the Jinx Tale takes little time. The only work she really has to do is sort the information into categories and click the send button.

Although it's the tiniest piece of her job, she finds humor in the fact that she's only known by students for an e-mail. "I think it's funny. It becomes an identity even though it's the smallest part of my job," said Weinert.

Weinert's job has many other responsibilities. As the vice president of communications, she works with media relations, publications and marketing. She has also taught a public relations class and a Spanish class.

With so much work, she is efficient with her time. Weinert said, "I'm deadline-oriented so I work better when I'm pressed for time."

When her day ends, she likes to go home and spend time with her husband. She enjoys reading, knitting, and traveling to see her four sons.

Weinert also enjoys playing the piano. She accompanies the Musica Children's Choir and two adult groups and also participates in a women's Bible study in town.

She wouldn't mind having more time in her day. She'd spend it doing simple things. "I'd want to read a book or take a nap. I'd watch trashy reality TV too. I like 'Survivor' and 'The Amazing Race,'" said Weinert.

Looking back, she wouldn't change a thing. "I've had the most terrific life. Everything that I've been through has made me who I am," said Weinert.

Weinert said, "The thing I've learned over time is that everything that happens to you makes you the person you are. The things you experience, you have to see what you're being taught and enjoy the second that you're in. Capture the moment whether it's good or not so good."

He owns three guitars, two electric and one acoustic.

Curtis Housholder, biochemistry senior, said, "My Fender Strat is my favorite. I can get a wider range of tones out of it and it fits more music styles than the Ibanez. The Ibanez is built more for metal or hard rock."

Like most musicians, he has favorite songs. Housholder said, "As of right now it would probably be 'Afterlife' by Avenged Sevenfold and 'Say It Ain't So' by Weezer. The Boston version of the 'Star Spangled Banner' is fun to play."

Housholder is the son of Gary and Julie. He comes to Southwestern from Scandia. He has two sisters. One is a freshman in high school and the other a sophomore in college.

Housholder started playing the guitar during his freshman year.

He said, "I started playing because my sister was taking some lessons and I tried picking up what she had learned. Then when I retired from basketball, it filled the void and I really pursued it in my spare time."

Housholder played basketball for two years and was a part of the 2006 KCAC Championship team and conference tournament winning team. When they quit having a JV team, and other players transferred in, Housholder gave up basketball.

"I figured it was time to retire and have more time for school. I could always play in REC league and intramural to get my fill and have more spare time."

He enjoyed playing basketball. "It introduced me to a lot of people really quick. Getting to go to the Virgin Islands was awesome," said Housholder.

He took lessons in downtown Winfield at the music store for a semester, but other than that he taught himself to play. He said "One of the most rewarding parts is having someone recognize what I am playing. I can play all day thinking it sounds pretty good, but it feels awesome when someone else likes it, too. Just to be able to learn new stuff and doing things you never thought you'd be able to."

If he played music professionally he would play blues and rock. "If I were in a band it would be rock. If I were a solo artist it would be more blues," said Housholder.

Even when he is pressed for time music is still involved. He said, "I probably would go up to Deets Lobby to study to some relaxing music."

In his spare time he likes to play guitar and hang out with friends. Housholder said, "I really like being able to know your professors and being able to talk to them casually and to get the one-on-one help if you need it. It is nice to know everyone around campus since it's not huge."

"I chose biochemistry because I've always been interested in chemistry and biology. They are both topics that are advancing very rapidly so there is always something new and cool going on. I grew up on a farm so I would like to get involved with some of the chemical companies. I also pursued biochem because I want a job that will allow me to work outdoors."

The most rewarding part of being a professor for Hunter is getting students excited about science. "I think one of the things faculty members can do is open doors for students and give students opportunities and help them see opportunities," said Charles Hunter, professor of biology. He said students are usually receptive because they like to discover things on their own. "I enjoy seeing students get that learning spirit. It's fun to see the light bulbs go off in peoples' heads."

Something students might not know about him is his interest in music. Hunter comes from a musical family. He said, "My mother and sister were very musical. My mother was a pianist and was very good. My sister has a beautiful voice and did very well singing for quite a while."

Hunter has been playing the baritone and euphonium in the SC Concert Band for the past five years. "I played in the city band one year but I don't really have the time to devote to that like I should," said Hunter. "I don't practice a lot so I'm not getting real good, but I do okay."

For the past 15 years Hunter has spent his Sundays singing at Grace United Methodist Church. "I enjoy music," he said. "All three of our daughters play violin or viola and my wife plays piano."

Aside from spending time practicing and performing music, Hunter has to make time to prepare for classes. One strategy he uses to stay current with what is going on in the science world is to read Science News. "I don't subscribe to many journals. I come across things serendipitously in the library, listening to the news, NPR, charles hunter, professor of biology

"I played in the city band one year but I don't really have the time to devote to that like I should," said Hunter. "I don't practice a lot so I'm not getting real good but I do okay."

science Fridays and reading things," said Hunter. "You get exposed to things that way. It's always kind of fun to pick up new things. I think I continue to challenge myself to learn."

Hunter graduated from Southwestern College in 1967 with a bachelor's degree in biology. "I grew up in Kansas. My roots go pretty deep in this state just like the grasses on the tall grass prairie. I'm a prairie man number one I guess."

Hunter attended graduate school where he could study invertebrate animals. He attended the University of Oregon where he earned his master's in 1968 and his Ph.D. in 1973.

Hunter has been the recipient of the Fulbright Fellowship and has received three different National Science Foundation teaching grants and two small National Science Foundation summer research grants.

Hunter said it's been fun teaching. "Many of us have to make a choice at some point whether we are going to do teaching or research. It's possible to do both. We're all trying to think about how we can get students more involved with research."

In his free time, Hunter enjoys physical activity. "I think my wife would say what I do with my spare time is work," said Hunter. "I love to garden. I enjoy trying to landscape with native plants. I have always enjoyed learning about wildflowers. Recently I've gotten into kayaking. I'm always busy doing something."

Groups

It's about time

It's not about wearing a jersey and going to an event with six other people. It's not about a weekly trip to a favorite restaurant with others like you. It's not even about bake sales and homework sessions and road trips and meetings.

There are many groups at Southwestern. Some have specific ways to join them. Membership is based on talent or grade point average or major.

Others are more open to members. A group may not have an obvious reason they belong together.

But there's one reason that makes them band together and become more than just a group.

It's about time.

Jacob McGuire, business administration freshman, Laura Morgan, history senior, Chastity Osen, early childhood education freshman, Cassi Reimer, math and physics junior, Jeff Schaefer, sport management junior, Caitlin McCurdy, undecided freshman, and Anna Macy, biology senior, help make apple pies to earn money for the Leadership trip. The pies were sold throughout the month of October and November.

It's about time

Each May some will start a new time in their lives. Some will be back to try it out again. Wherever you end up, time will keep running along side you.

You may lose touch with some of the people you've met while here if given enough time. You may forget some lessons learned. But what you learn and value the most will stick with you over even the longest amount of time.

A lot is packed into these years. And you will take these experiences with you whatever the next day brings.

It's about time.

Kelsey Reynolds, communication senior, and Kelli Bryant, biology and chemistry senior, get ready to take a ride on the Ferris wheel. Many other rides were offered at SC After Dark which took place Aug. 25 at Keyhole Drive.

Solophon The 98th volume of the Southwestern College Moundbuilder was printed by Jostens in Topeka. The 104-page book had a press run of 400 and was electronically submitted.

The cover was designed by Diane Dixon. Moundbuilder was produced in Adobe InDesign CS3 using Windows computers. Photoshop CS3 was used to color-manage all photos.

The Moundbuilder is distributed free of charge to all full-time students.

Inquiries regarding the Moundbuilder should be sent to: Moundbuilder, Southwestern College, 100 College St., Winfield, KS 67156.
